William Hanson, M.D., chief medical information officer and vice president at the University of Pennsylvania Health System, discussed how genetic mapping will transform our understanding of disease: "A treatment that appears to be eminently sensible based on phenotypic appearance can look very wrong-headed when genotypic information becomes available," he said. "It has become increasingly clear that, as we gain more information about the genetics of illness...we'll find that we're going to need to re-label many diseases and rewrite a lot of textbooks."

William O'Leary, Microsoft's executive director of policy, health and human services, explained his company's investments in new technologies to get and keep consumers engaged in their health and health care and navigate the delivery system, as well as its investments in cloud, shared services, and emerging technologies to facilitate "connected health." Better information is the key to better health care and greater efficiency in the health sector, O'Leary said.

Imran Andrabi, M.D., chief physician executive officer and senior vice president at Mercy Health Partners, explained that reforming basic procedures also can have a transformative effect. He described his work in better understanding of what's happening – and not happening – at the patient's bedside and described changes that reduced infections and falls, dramatically improved patient satisfaction, and increased quality of care by such simple changes as getting lab results into doctors' hands earlier in the day as they were doing their rounds. The constellation of changes at Mercy lowered costs and helped improve the hospital's bottom line.

Challenges for the future

Alex Azar, president of Lilly USA, provided a visionary overview of the challenges and opportunities ahead. People are living more than 60% longer today than they did at the turn of the last century and "drugs, used properly, are part of the solution, not the problem," he said.

The U.S. remains the undisputed leader in bio pharmaceutical research, but our continued leadership in this industry sector is not guaranteed. "We are facing today an innovation crisis in the life sciences sector," Azar said. The cost of developing a new drug now exceeds $1.3 billion, and the number of new drugs winning approval during the last five years is lower than at any time since the 1970s. The rest of the world is gaining on us because of our outdated regulatory and tax burdens, while other countries are competing ferociously for biotech jobs.

Azar believes history demonstrates that consumers are best served by competition and innovation, not unaccountable boards like the Independent Payment Advisory Board created in the new health law. Policy must focus on three primary solutions: Open access to markets with market-based pricing policies, tax policies that encourage innovation, and regulatory polices with consistent standards.

"What seems unimaginable today will become a reality tomorrow," Azar said. "And we know that our success will continue to rely on keeping the doctor-patient relationship at the center" of decision-making.

Policy perspective

Three members of Congress who spoke at the Galen conference showed their understanding of the opportunities and challenges discussed at the conference: House Majority Whip Kevin McCarthy (R-CA) echoed a theme that was woven throughout the conference: The need for major tax reform to restore America's global competitiveness, the importance of FDA reform to modernize the approval process, and repealing the health law to "restore innovation and unshackle the economy."

Rep. Renee Ellmers (R-NC) is a registered nurse who was inflamed by a government takeover of health care. She ran for Congress, having never before held elective office, defeated a long-time incumbent in 2010, and is working tirelessly to repeal the law and restore control over decisions to doctors and patients.

Rep. Todd Rokita (R-IN) is a member of the House Medical Technology Caucus, and he described the devastating impact that the law is having on investment and jobs creation in the medical device companies in his district. This tax must go! he said.

Galen held the conference across the street from Capitol Hill. It was our reminder to government officials who don't get it that the real solutions in the health sector come, not from government, but from the millions of entrepreneurs who are working every day to improve care, find new treatments, and put new ideas into action. These are the people who will lead us to transformational change.

A webcast of the full conference is available at www.galen.org along with the full agenda, biographies of speakers, and PowerPoint presentations.

The Real Tragedy Of ObamaCare Has Yet To Be Felt By The Poor

Grace-Marie Turner
Forbes: Health Matters, August 21, 2012

One of the most tragic failings of ObamaCare is that it will make it harder for many of the most vulnerable citizens – patients with no option but Medicaid – to get care.

Medicaid is cumbersome, complex, and wasteful – already the worst health care program in the country. But rather than making changes to improve or modernize this program designed to finance care for the poor, the Obama administration is trying to convince states to add at least 16 million more people to Medicaid, including families making more than $30,000 a year.

That means the poorest and most vulnerable patients enrolled today will be competing with millions of new Medicaid patients for appointments to see a limited number of physicians. Those who have the greatest need and nowhere else to go are likely to have the hardest time getting care.

In its ruling in June, the Supreme Court made it optional for states to expand Medicaid to cover new enrollees. Even with generous federal funding, several states have said flatly they cannot afford the expansion, which would cost states at least $118 billion through 2023.

They are resisting not only because of budget concerns but also because this large Medicaid expansion could have catastrophic effects on those who provide society's health care safety net.

First, there simply aren't enough doctors to handle this influx of new patients. Given Medicaid's abysmally-low payment rates, private doctors won't be able to afford to take much more of the exploding caseload.

A recent article in Health Affairs found that nearly one-third (31%) of physicians are not accepting any new Medicaid patients. Sandra Decker, an economist with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, used a survey of 4,326 office-based physicians from across the country to find that just under 70 percent said they were accepting new Medicaid patients. That number was significantly lower than those accepting privately-insured subscribers (81 percent) or Medicare patients (83 percent).

The problem is particularly acute in states that have the lowest reimbursement rates for physicians.

Health policy analyst Avik Roy of the Manhattan Institute has produced a map showing the reimbursement rates for Medicaid relative to private insurance.

Many states that plan to expand Medicaid under ObamaCare are those with low Medicaid reimbursement rates. In California, for example, up to 1.6 million residents are expected to gain coverage under the state's Medicaid program, called Medi-Cal, but fewer than 60 percent of providers accept new patients in the program. That's largely because California reimburses doctors 38 cents for every dollar private insurance pays. New York, which is anxious to further expand its Medicaid rolls, pays doctors only 29 cents on the dollar.

Where would these newly “insured” Medicaid patients go for care with fewer doctors willing to accept new patients? A Medicaid card clearly will not guarantee access to a physician.

Longer waiting lines for emergency rooms are inevitable.

Safety-net hospitals that provide care to the poorest and most vulnerable in our society already are stretched to the limit financially. Adding millions more people to Medicaid will put crushing new demands on them.

In addition, at least 30 million people will remain uninsured after the law is fully in effect, based upon optimistic projections from the Congressional Budget Office. These uninsured will continue to need care, often without the ability to pay.

ObamaCare adds a further distortion: To help pay for its expanded coverage, the health law cuts existing payments to hospitals that provide care to a “disproportionate-share” of uninsured patients. So there will be less money to compensate hospitals for patients who will still show up needing care.

Studies consistently show that Medicaid patients have the worst health outcomes of any group in America, worse than those with private insurance and, in some cases, worse than those with no insurance.

A large study by the University of Virginia found that surgical patients on Medicaid are 13 percent more likely to die than those with no insurance at all and 97 percent more likely to die than those with private insurance.

The problem is particularly acute for Medicaid recipients who need to see specialists. One Florida doctor reported that, after a long battle with the state over payment for treating a patient with complex lung disease, he received a check from Medicaid for one penny.

Medicaid patients will find access to care restricted in other ways.

States already are restricting access to drug services for existing Medicaid beneficiaries. Kaiser Health News reports that “Illinois Medicaid recipients have been limited to four prescription drugs [per month] as the state becomes the latest to cap how many medicines it will cover in the state-federal health insurance program for the poor.” A total of 16 states impose monthly limits on prescription drugs for beneficiaries, “and seven states have either enacted such caps or tightened them in the past two years.”

Clearly, the huge expansion of Medicaid will make it even harder for the patients already on Medicaid to get the health care they need and will be little more than the paper promise it is today for those who receive a new Medicaid card.

Despite these many problems, many states are tempted and are seriously considering whether to accept the generous 100 percent federal matching money ObamaCare initially offers if they expand eligibility for Medicaid up to 138 percent of poverty (more than $32,000 for a family of four).

But states should be warned: It’s likely a loss leader. There are no assurances that Washington would be able to keep its promise to continue the generous funding.

There already is evidence that could be the administration's plan. President Obama proposed reducing federal Medicaid spending by \$100 billion over 10 years during last year's "supercommittee" budget negotiations. He proposed changing the traditional federal Medicaid matching rate in a way that would lead to a smaller overall federal contribution to the program — and a larger state-based one.

Given time, resources, and greater flexibility, hospitals could work with other medical facilities to create a system of care for the uninsured. But with millions more people added to an unreformed Medicaid program all at once, safety net providers will be overwhelmed.

There is a better way: Allow people on Medicaid the option of private insurance so they can get coverage through private competing plans. Florida has a successful model underway. These plans could provide much better access to physicians, coordinate care for patients with multiple health problems, and allow patients to be seen in doctors' offices rather than in expensive hospital emergency rooms.

Patients would have the dignity of private coverage, and safety-net hospitals will be able to keep their doors open so they can continue their mission of caring for the poorest and neediest in our society.

Speaking on Face the Nation yesterday, Center for American Progress CEO Neera Tanden claimed that Obamacare “is a massive tax cut for – in health care. It's a six-hundred-billion-dollar tax cut for health care. It's a tax cut to middle-class families.” Tanden’s claims to the contrary, the law and record are very clear about the fact that this massive new entitlement will go straight into the pockets of the insurance industry:

- Section 1412(c)(2)(A) of the law provides that “The Secretary of the Treasury shall make the advance payment under this section of any premium tax credit allowed under section 36B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to the issuer of a qualified health plan on a monthly basis.”
- Page 37 of the report on the Finance Committee bill states: “The Committee Bill provides a refundable tax credit for eligible individuals and families who purchase health insurance through the state exchanges. The premium tax credit, which is refundable and payable in advance directly to the insurer, subsidizes the purchase of certain health insurance plans through the state exchanges.”

Even liberal professor Jonathan Gruber – a paid Obamacare consultant – admitted in an interview that “Most households will never actually get their hands on the credits, so their existing tax liabilities won’t actually change. In most cases, credits will go straight to insurance companies, to pay for health benefits.” And according to CBO’s updated estimates, Obamacare will now provide over $1 trillion in spending on subsidies, which will go directly into the pockets of insurance companies.

Of course, candidate Obama opposed sending subsidies straight to insurance companies when he ran for President. An Obama campaign ad derided Senator McCain’s proposal to subsidize insurance through tax credits: “That tax credit? McCain’s own Web site said it goes straight to the insurance companies, not to you, leaving you on your own...” Likewise, in a campaign speech, candidate Obama vilified Senator McCain for this policy: “But the new tax credit [McCain’s] proposing? That wouldn’t go to you. It would go directly to your insurance company – not your bank account.”

In making her false claims that middle class families – as opposed to insurance companies – would actually receive these tax cuts, Tanden contradicted both the words of candidate Obama – on whose 2008 campaign she worked – and someone who has written multiple papers for the organization she leads. It’s unfortunate that Obamacare supporters feel the need to twist the facts in such a blatantly obvious manner to try to gin up support for their unpopular health care law.

Spending $716 Billion, Twice

National Review Online, August 17, 2012

The issue of $716 billion in spending cuts to Medicare has taken center stage, with accusations flying about who is raiding Medicare and pushing Granny off the cliff.

So here are the facts:

In 1997, the Republican Congress passed, and President Bill Clinton signed, the Balanced Budget Act (BBA), which gradually reduced payments to Medicare providers as part of a plan to reduce overall federal spending. The key to the policy is the Sustainable Growth Rate, which requires the government to adjust payments for physician services each year so that growth in Medicare spending does not exceed the growth of GDP.

But Medicare's fee-for-service model works at cross-purposes with this policy, and incentivizes doctors to bill for more and more services, driving up Medicare spending to higher levels year after year. Further, each time the payment cuts are about to be triggered, doctors swarm Capitol Hill to get Congress to postpone them. At first, the payment cuts would have been just 1 or 2 percent if doctors hadn't succeeded in killing them. But over time they have accumulated, and now doctors would be paid 27 percent less for treating Medicare patients if the originally intended cuts had gone into effect. And the cuts would continue in perpetuity.

Doctors say these payment reductions would cripple their practices and make it difficult for them to see Medicare patients, especially since Medicare already pays doctors less than private plans.

The American Medical Association wants a permanent "doc fix" that would end the threat of these cuts, and the fix was the main demand the AMA made when it was at the negotiating table over Obamacare. The White House promised the fix, but reneged at the last minute. The doc fix was yanked from the bill, largely because of its \$208 billion price tag. Astonishingly, and much to the dismay of doctors across the country, the AMA endorsed Obamacare anyway, giving the bill an important push over the finish line.

Last month, following the Supreme Court's disastrous decision about Obamacare, the Congressional Budget Office recalculated the ten-year cost of the health-overhaul law to determine what the court's decision would mean to the overall cost of the law. The CBO concluded that the cuts to Medicare now total \$716 billion over 10 years — chiefly because the ten-year window is moved three years into the future and, as health costs grow every year, so does Medicare spending. (The law contains other Medicare payment reductions as well.)

The president's plan to "save" Medicare relies primarily on paying doctors and hospitals less and less by keeping in place the 1997 trajectory for spending cuts. According to Medicare actuaries, this would mean that 40 percent of providers eventually will either go bankrupt or stop seeing Medicare patients altogether.

To make sure that these spending targets are met, Obamacare creates the dreaded Independent Payment Advisory Board to enforce the cuts — and even more if needed. The IPAB puts the thumb screws in the Obamacare strategy, because the law makes it nearly impossible for Congress to override the board's orders and shields the board's decisions from judicial review — and patient input.

So now we get to the crucial dispute. Obamacare counts the same Medicare savings twice — once to allegedly extend the solvency of Medicare, and again to pay for Obamacare's massive new subsidies for private health insurance through the exchanges.

Medicare actuaries have chastised the administration and its allies in Congress for this double-counting. Health and Human Services secretary Kathleen Sebelius was asked about the double-counting during a congressional hearing last year. "Are you using [the Medicare savings] to save Medicare or are you using it for health reform?" asked Representative John Shimkus (R., Ill.). "Both," Sebelius answered.

If Obamacare were repealed, we would be protecting taxpayers from this dishonest trick of counting the Medicare savings twice. (All of these numbers, by the way, represent reductions in the rate of growth of Medicare spending, not actual cuts. Medicare spent \$549 billion in 2011 and is projected to spend \$809 billion in 2018. In any family budget, that definitely is not a cut.)

So what about the claims that House Budget Committee chairman Paul Ryan also cuts Medicare by $716 billion? Ryan's budget follows current law. The BBA Medicare-payment reductions are federal law, and his budget necessarily uses federal law as a baseline.

Governor Mitt Romney says that if he is elected, he will eliminate the cuts. That's actually a realistic promise, because that is what Congress does every year anyway. But this promise also will provide added incentive for a "permanent doc fix," the Holy Grail of the AMA.

So here's the bottom line: President Obama leaves the $716 billion in Medicare reductions in place, and he spends the money again to create a vast new Obamacare entitlement program. Paul Ryan doesn't double-count this money. His budget leaves the BBA Medicare payment cuts in place, but also creates a plan to make the program more efficient by injecting market forces through competition and consumer choice. Ryan's premium-support model would require health plans to compete for the business of future seniors by offering better benefits at lower prices. Seniors would be guaranteed coverage because Medicare would fully cover the premium costs of the second-lowest-cost plan or the cost of traditional Medicare, whichever is lower. Those who are older or sicker, or have lower incomes, would get additional help.

The market model has been proven to work in the Medicare Advantage and prescription-drug programs. Three Harvard researchers published a study in The Journal of the American Medical Association (you can find it here, but it requires a subscription) examining how premium support would have worked if it had been in effect in 2009. They found that, nationally, the benchmark plan bid an average of 9 percent below traditional Medicare costs.

Further, the Part D prescription-drug program in Medicare is saving taxpayers money and giving seniors better benefits. Seniors can choose the drug plan that offers them the best benefits at the lowest prices, and these smart shoppers have brought the cost of the program 42 percent lower than expected when the drug benefit was created in 2003.

It's now a choice between the Romney-Ryan market-based model and Obamacare's double-counting and price controls enforced by an unelected, unaccountable board charged with paying doctors less and less, to the point that 40 percent of them drop out. Let's have an honest debate about which of the two visions actually would sustain Medicare, and has the best chance of getting the federal budget on a more sustainable track.

Not Reforming Medicare Is Not an Option

National Review Online: The Corner, August 14, 2012

To those who insist that they've "paid for" their Medicare benefits and dare politicians to change the program, consider this: A typical couple retiring last year, with both spouses having worked and paid taxes their whole careers, would have paid a total of $149,000 in Medicare taxes. But they are expected to consume an average of $351,000 in medical services in their retirement years (in constant dollars), according to a study from the Urban Institute.

That $202,000 gap would have to be financed by higher and higher taxes on fewer and fewer of tomorrow's workers or by more deficit spending that puts trillions of dollars in debt on the shoulders of our grandchildren.

Clearly, Medicare is not sustainable, especially with more than 70 million Baby Boomers starting to enter the program at the rate of 10,000 a day.

We do not have the option of ignoring this growing tsunami of red ink or of spewing false accusations about the serious reform plan offered by House Budget chairman Paul Ryan.

Under Obamacare, the president's plan to "save" Medicare relies primarily on paying doctors and hospitals less and less to the point that 40 percent of providers will either go bankrupt or stop seeing Medicare patients, according to Medicare actuaries. The dreaded Independent Payment Advisory Board will put the thumb screws on through a rationing strategy.

This is not a solution for a free people. Further, Obamacare doubles down on the fiction by spending the same dollars twice — once to extend the solvency of Medicare and again to pay for Obamacare's massive new entitlement spending. Medicare actuaries have chastised the administration and allies in Congress for this double-counting.

In contrast, Representative Ryan's plan guarantees that seniors would continue to receive a Medicare benefit, with the government's contribution equal to the cost of traditional Medicare in a given market or the cost of the second-least expensive plan, whichever is less. As Representative Ryan explains, this means the government would fully cover the premium costs of some plans or the cost of traditional Medicare. Those who are older, sicker, or with lower incomes would get additional help.

Nothing changes for those on Medicare today or for those who qualify for Medicare between now and 2022.

After that, seniors would have more choices of plans that are competing for their business, just as the popular Medicare Advantage plans and prescription drug plans provide today. These private Medicare plans would have to offer coverage that is equivalent to traditional Medicare. While the benefits and financing structure could vary, the value of the plans would have to be the same.

Experience has proven that consumers choosing from among competing plans can lower costs. Yuval Levin explains how this “premium support” model would work with the plan developed by Ryan and Senator Ron Wyden (D., Ore.):

On August 1, three Harvard researchers published a study in the Journal of the American Medical Association (you can find it here, but it requires a subscription) that used data from the Medicare Advantage program (a much more limited experiment in insurer competition in Medicare) to consider how the Wyden-Ryan reform would have worked if it had been in effect in 2009. They found that, “nationally, in 2009, the benchmark plan under the Ryan-Wyden framework (i.e., the second-lowest plan) bid an average of 9% below traditional Medicare costs (traditional Medicare was equivalent to approximately the tenth-lowest bid).

Further, the Part D prescription drug program in Medicare is costing taxpayers 46 percent less today than expected when the benefit was created in 2003.

The reason? Competition and consumer choice.

So the debate over Medicare is a microcosm of the larger debate over the role of government in our lives. Voters have a clear choice this election year between two very different visions. Should we entrust government to control and micromanage decisions that impact our lives or should we create new incentives and modernize programs so we can make decisions about our future as adults and free citizens?

Galen Institute Commentary Alert

Professor Chris Conover of the Center for Health Policy and Inequalities Research at Duke University brings new attention to the dangers of the health overhaul law with his review of Why ObamaCare Is Wrong for America [Broadside/HarperCollins, 2011]. Read Dr. Conover's op-ed below and purchase your copy of our book here.

How the Affordable Care Act Reduces Our Liberty

Chris Conover
Forbes.com, August 10, 2012

With one to two weeks left before most schools begin their fall semester, there's still time left to squeeze in a bit more summer reading. So if healthcare policy is your idea of a beach read, grab a copy of Why Obamacare is Wrong for America.

Authored by former OMB associate director Jim Capretta, American Enterprise Institute resident fellow Tom Miller, Heritage Foundation senior fellow Bob Moffit, and Galen Institute president Grace-Marie Turner, the book makes nuances of the debate over the Affordable Care Act (ACA) palatable to a lay audience by breaking down the law into eight pillars. This book nicely elaborates on the government takeover concerns I voiced in my earlier column.

The first two pillars are mandates on individuals (to obtain) and employers (to provide) health coverage. These are unprecedented. Most people can go without healthcare longer than they can make it without food. Yet, even for a necessity such as food, lawmakers do not impose any remotely equivalent restrictions on freedom of choice.

Even recognizing that free people sometimes may make very misguided choices about what they eat, with adverse consequences to both their health and to society, America has historically respected the rights of individuals to choose what, when and how they eat. But in the case of health care, ACA revokes those kinds of rights—saying government knows best and penalizing citizens and employers who disagree.

Expanded federal entitlements comprise the third pillar outlined by Capretta et al. These come in the form of Medicaid (which, after the Supreme Court decision in June, now is expected to account for slightly more than one third of the 30 million individuals who will be newly covered under the law) and subsidized coverage available through state-based health exchanges. The Supreme Court fortunately forestalled the law's efforts to coercively extort states into accepting a massive expansion in Medicaid coverage. Even so, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) still projects more than a one-third increase in non-elderly Medicaid eligible by the year 2022.

More worrisome still, over the next 75 years the CBO's latest long-term spending projections show even with ACA (which, remember, was supposed to "bend the cost curve"), the federal government will increase in size by 48 percent relative to the economy. Fully 100 percent of that increase can be attributed to growth in federally funded healthcare entitlements, i.e., Medicare, Medicaid and exchange subsidies.<sup>[1]</sup> There are very real and legitimate questions about the ability of the federal government to finance these entitlements over the long term.

As more than 100,000 Medicaid recipients who were suddenly tossed off of TennCare discovered a few years ago, things can turn ugly quickly when governments discover they no longer can afford their generous health promises.

The fourth pillar is "squeezing funds out of Medicare and choking off private plan choices." These funds include a combination of reductions in spending as well as new Medicare-related taxes. As Medicare's public trustee Charles Blahous has demonstrated, the half trillion in resources diverted from Medicare either can be used to shore up Medicare or they can be used to bankroll the new Medicaid and Exchange entitlements. They cannot be used to do both.

Because these "Medicare funds" instead will have been spent on the new entitlements, the government will have to borrow additional funds to keep Medicare afloat. An estimated $136 billion of those savings will come in the form of cuts to Medicare Advantage plans, resulting in half the seniors who would have joined such plans by 2017 being forced back into the inefficient and fragmented fee-for-service Medicare system. Instead of giving seniors genuine choices that would reward plans that provide coordinated and effective care (and produce sizable savings to Medicare to boot), ACA has stacked the decks in favor of a badly outdated fee-for-service model that decades of research has shown costs more than it should even while producing worse outcomes.

The fifth pillar detailed by the authors is the more than one half trillion in new federal taxes. (For the adverse consequences of these levies, see this earlier post.)

The exchanges make up pillar number six. Exchanges are a sensible idea advocated by free-market analysts, but unfortunately "Obamacare took these market-based ideas and twisted them beyond recognition into a bureaucratic knot. The exchanges are weighed down with rules, regulations, and government restrictions and crushed under a mountain of bureaucracy." The law gives extraordinary discretion to the Secretary of Health and Human Services to determine which plans are permitted to participate in the exchange. The federal government also will require exchanges to perform at least a dozen "minimum functions" such as checking (every month!) the incomes of people who qualify for subsidies.

The seventh pillar is federal government-sponsored health plans. At least two national plans created by the U.S. Office of Personnel Management must be offered in each state exchange even if the state has no interest in them. These plans will compete on a playing field stacked in their favor, since the OPM has the discretion to use less rigid rules than those faced by private insurers (e.g., how much to spend on administration).

Federal control over private health insurance makes up the eight and last pillar. Plans must take all comers even if they wait until they are sick to buy coverage (given the modest penalties for failing to obtain health insurance, the law actually will create perverse incentives for consumers to buy their coverage later than sooner). ACA imposes restrictions on pricing as well as extensive rules about benefits. As the recent dust-up about contraceptive coverage demonstrated, the government will require you to purchase certain benefits even if you have no interest in them or moral or religious objections to paying for them.

Once again, government experts are displacing the individual judgment of patients about what is best for them. This is unprecedented. The federal government does not do this in automobile, homeowners, or life insurance. But for some reason, in health insurance, the federal experts presume to know best.

Going back to food, which arguably is more of day-to-day “necessity” of life than medical care, the federal government does not tell you what you must purchase or tell grocery stores how to price what they sell (or how fast their prices can rise). The contrast between the extraordinary freedom of choice we allow for food and the greatly restricted choices ACA will impose in medical care could not be more stark.

America’s Founders fought for a limited government that presupposed free citizens capable of making responsible choices. It is unimaginable that they pledged their lives, fortunes and sacred honor to create a government as intrusive on the lives of ordinary citizens as the vision embodied in ACA.

Footnotes

[1] This is based on official CBO projections using the alternative fiscal scenario, which provides the most realistic projection of ACA revenues and expenditures. It only includes non-interest federal spending, which will rise from 22.0 percent of GDP in 2012 to 32.6 percent by 2087—an increase of 10.6 percentage points. During that same period, gross Medicare spending will grow from 3.7 to 13.3 percent of GDP and spending on Medicaid, CHIP and Exchange subsidies will grow from 1.7 to 5.0 percent of GDP, for a combined increase of 12.9 percentage points for health entitlements.

In a New York Times blog post last Friday, former Clinton Administration official Laura D’Andrea Tyson said that “when formulating public policy, evidence should be accorded more weight than ideology, and facts should matter more than shibboleths.” On that count, she’s right. But unfortunately for Tyson, the evidence shows that while liberal, top-down proposals to restructure Medicare – and the health care system – have failed, conservative proposals to introduce market forces into America’s failing entitlements could just succeed.

Tyson dismisses premium support proposals for Medicare, arguing that “the facts do not support” any conclusion that “competition would encourage more cost-sensitive behavior by beneficiaries, providers, and insurers.” Actually, a new study published in the Journal of the American Medical Association just this month found that private plans would “bid an average of 9% below traditional Medicare costs” under a premium support model. That’s a savings of tens of billions of dollars – coming directly from the positive effects of competition.

Conversely, Tyson claims that because competition won’t reduce health costs, “enforceable payment and cost-containment reforms like those in [Obamacare] are necessary.” Those are the same payment reforms that the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office, in a January report analyzing dozens of Medicare demonstration programs over decades, said haven’t worked to contain costs:

The evaluations show that most programs have not reduced Medicare spending: In nearly every program involving disease management and care coordination, spending was either unchanged or increased relative to the spending that would have occurred in the absence of the program, when the fees paid to the participating organizations were considered.... Demonstrations aimed at reducing spending and increasing quality of care face significant challenges in overcoming the incentives inherent in Medicare’s fee-for-service payment system, which rewards providers for delivering more care but does not pay them for coordinating with other providers, and in the nation’s decentralized health care delivery system, which does not facilitate communication or coordination among providers.

While the evidence is clear that Obamacare’s focus on payment reform has NOT worked to control costs, the signs for competition as a positive force slowing costs seem promising. Which means that if Tyson wants to be bound by evidence and not ideology, she has every reason to endorse premium support as opposed to an extension of the failed status quo.

Date: Monday, August 27, 2012 12:23:58 PM

Two articles in today's Wall Street Journal illustrate how President Obama is putting politics before policy – deliberately failing to lead on tough fiscal choices to score cheap political points. One news article notes that the White House has put together a secret deficit reduction plan, which it refuses to release to the American people:

President Barack Obama's most recent budget...[did not] detail how to slow the growth of spending on Medicare or Social Security. Nor has Mr. Obama made public the details of proposals he made in unsuccessful talks with House Speaker John Boehner (R., Ohio) last summer, such as raising the eligibility age for Medicare from 65 to 67, a notion both Mr. Romney and Mr. Ryan have endorsed.

Administration officials are preparing new deficit-reduction proposals to be released if Mr. Obama is re-elected, but see no political advantage in previewing them now, people familiar with the process said.

Likewise, an excellent editorial in this morning's Journal about the Administration's plans for top-down government health "reform" notes that the White House has refused to name individuals to Obamacare's Independent Payment Advisory Board "until after the election."

So we've gone from a world in which candidate Obama repeatedly promised that he would hold all the negotiations on C-SPAN to one in which tough choices are deliberately being withheld from the American people for political reasons, and a world in which the President's pledge that "we are implementing" Obamacare right now doesn't apply to the supposed centerpiece of its attempt to control costs – because of the backlash that exposing the law's coercive nature would generate. Hope and change indeed.

If ObamaCare Is Judged Unconstitutional, Here's How To Reform Healthcare

Forbes: Health Matters, June 13, 2012

If the U.S. Supreme Court declares ObamaCare's individual mandate unconstitutional and non-severable, the first reaction from a large majority of Americans will be a huge sigh of relief, gauging from opinion polls that show two-thirds want the law, or at least its individual mandate, struck down.

But then what? There is universal agreement that there are serious problems in the health sector that must be addressed, but there is absolutely no appetite among the American people or in Congress for another 2,800-page bill. House Speaker John Boehner says the American people want a "common-sense, step-by-step approach to health care reform."

A presidential election year is the ideal time to articulate the new vision based upon free enterprise, consumer choice, and costs that are reduced through competitive pressures, not ObamaCare's rationing and price controls. In recent speeches and articles, Republican Mitt Romney has emphasized his support for "a free market, federalist approach" that spurs competition, flexibility, and consumer choice. Voters will be watching closely.

Conservatives in Congress know they must move forward with reform lest they face yet another attempt at a single-payer government takeover of health care under a future president.

Dozens of Republicans in Congress already are working diligently on reform legislation, some offering overall reform plans and others targeting specific programs such as Medicare or Medicaid.

A key building block of free-market plans is the "defined contribution" model for financing care and coverage in both public and private sector plans. Instead of promising a long list of health benefits, employees or beneficiaries would receive allocations to support the purchase of the health plan or other arrangement that suit them best.

This moves away from the paternalistic model that blocks people from making their own decisions about their care and coverage. Defined contribution would engage consumers as partners in getting the best value in health spending. They would demand that providers and insurers reveal the full cost of their offerings, this would put downward pressure on costs, and that in turn would put insurance within the reach of millions more people. Consumers also would demand that health plans and employers provide more options and more flexibility in policies, networks, and financing arrangements.

Leaders in Congress already are building their reform plans on market-based principles organized around this defined-contribution model of financing, a concept that fits the three major insurance coverage platforms in the United States—Medicare, Medicaid, and private health insurance.

- Medicare: There has been bi-partisan agreement from commissions advising Presidents Clinton, Bush, and Obama on the imperative of moving toward a sliding-scale payment to give seniors choices of health coverage through competing private plans. Nearly 13 million seniors have voluntarily signed up for Medicare Advantage, which works on this model. And the Medicare prescription drug plan, where seniors choose from among private competing drug plans, shows the model can be structured to save money, with Part D costs coming in at 43% below original estimates.
- Medicaid: The states are desperate to get relief from Medicaid costs that threaten to envelop their budgets. Florida provides an example of demonstration plans that allow a segment of its Medicaid population to receive a risk-adjusted credit to get their health care from competing plans. This allows people to escape from the Medicaid ghetto by giving them health credits to obtain private coverage. Early evidence shows that costs are lower and the health of beneficiaries better compared to those in traditional Medicaid. Rhode Island and Indiana also have demonstrated success with other innovative Medicaid reform initiatives.
- Employer-based health insurance: With the threat of ObamaCare's expensive mandates, major employers are, for the first time, seriously considering getting out of the business of offering defined-benefit health insurance. A new study by Oliver Wyman on "Employer-Sponsored Healthcare" found that employers are desperate to find new solutions for the rising cost of employee health insurance and are anxiously searching for options. Overwhelmingly, employers want to continue to provide coverage to employees, but they know that if current cost trends continue, they won't be able to do so. A defined contribution model would quickly make the full cost of health insurance transparent to employees. They would force insurers and providers to compete on quality and value and to provide a wider range of choices and price points. If they chose, consumers could pick policies that would allow them to keep their young adult children on their policies or cover preventive care with no out-of-pocket costs. The policies would likely be more expensive, just as under ObamaCare; the difference is, people would be able to decide whether the features are worth the cost.
- Helping the uninsured: One of the top priorities of health reform was to help the uninsured. ObamaCare would have missed the mark by at least 25 million. Instead of a complete overhaul of our health sector, government support could be targeted to those who genuinely need help. It's time for Congress to put in place policy proposals that have been on the table for more than a decade and offer people a health credit to purchase coverage, either on their own, through an employer, or through other groups. The credit would provide greater flexibility so consumers have insurance that is portable and secure.

Other health insurance reforms at the top of the congressional list:

- Medical liability reform: States are best equipped to reform their medical malpractice laws to remove the distortions associated with arbitrary and unlimited jury awards. Today, lawyers shoot for the sky, and doctors over-prescribe to avoid lawsuits. The result is billions of dollars' worth of unnecessary medical treatments. Sensible tort reform would allow doctors to practice sound medicine and still protect patients from genuine malpractice. State experiments already are working in Texas and elsewhere to guide other states.
- A safety net for people with pre-existing conditions: When people enter the health insurance market with existing health conditions, they can face challenges in finding affordable coverage. This problem will be minimized if people own their own health insurance that is portable and that stays with them over time. But others will need a safety net, and states, not the federal government, are better able to handle the task. Congress would provide some financial help for states to set up or improve existing risk pools so those with pre-existing conditions can get health coverage.

There are key structural elements common to virtually all market-oriented health reform proposals to give consumers in both public and private plans more control and ownership over health care arrangements. There will be disagreements and a vigorous debate over how to shape these provisions, but that will be a refreshing change from the back-room deals, middle-of-the-night votes, and tortured parliamentary procedures that dragged ObamaCare over the finish line in 2010.

Before ObamaCare was enacted, the health sector was coiled for a 21st century transformation. But entrepreneurs moved to the sidelines, frightened by the huge hurdles from hundreds of new boards and commissions, thousands of regulators, and tens of thousands of pages of regulation spawned by ObamaCare. With the new financial incentives conservatives are proposing, the health sector would build on the core strength of our market economy, with consumers demanding better choices of more affordable health care and health coverage.

The bottom line: It's ObamaCare with its centralized, government control. Or a market economy in the health sector. This is the year of decision.

Obamacare: Wrong for Women

National Review Online, June 13, 2012

The White House is making a special push to win women's votes in November, among other things by proclaiming that Republicans are waging a "war on women." But President Obama's signature health-care overhaul is an assault on women's freedom. It will drive up their health-care costs, deprive them of choices, and make it harder for them to find doctors for their families.

Here are ten reasons why Obamacare is bad for women.

1. Higher cost of insurance. During the 2008 presidential campaign, Senator Obama promised that average premiums for a family would go down by $2,500 by 2012 as a result of his proposed reforms, but they actually have gone up by nearly that much — from \$12,680 in 2008 to \$15,073 in 2011, according to Kaiser Family Foundation data. And the Congressional Budget Office found that Obamacare's new insurance mandates will raise premiums in the individual market by an additional $2,100 per family. That's just the beginning. There are at least 20 new or higher taxes in Obamacare that will be passed along to consumers in the form of higher premiums, including taxes on medical devices and health-insurance premiums. This is bad news for women trying to keep coverage while managing a tight family budget.

2. Losing your current insurance. The administration itself estimates that 51 to 80 percent of Americans will lose their current health insurance because their policies won't qualify as acceptable under Obamacare rules. As many as 20 million people could lose the insurance they get at work as a result of Obamacare, according to the CBO. McKinsey and Co. says as many as 80 million people could be forced to change policies to comply with the law's requirements. Other studies have shown that at least a third of businesses are considering dropping coverage because of the costly Obamacare mandates. This is bad news for women who want stability and control over their health insurance.

3. Dependents losing coverage. One of the perverse risks of Obamacare is that it could cause families who are relying on employer insurance to lose their coverage. Under the law, employers must offer affordable insurance to their employees; Washington will deem a policy unaffordable if an employee's premium is more than 9.5 percent of his or her household income. This means that for a household income of $30,000, if the premium is more than $2,850, the coverage is considered unaffordable. Then the worker is eligible to go to the Exchanges for taxpayer-subsidized insurance. The only problem is that the subsidized insurance will be only for the worker and not for dependents. Families could lose coverage at work and be ineligible for subsidies in the Exchanges.

4. Unintended consequences. One of the first provisions of Obamacare to be implemented requires employers that offer dependent coverage to allow children to stay on their parents' policies up to age 26. But some families are finding that this has a dark side: Firms and other organizations are finding they can't afford the added cost and are dropping dependent coverage altogether. Soon after the law passed, the 1199SEIU local of the Service Employees International Union announced that it was dropping dependent coverage: ". . . new federal health-care reform legislation requires plans with dependent coverage to expand that coverage up to age 26," Mitra Behroozi, executive director of benefits and pension funds, wrote in a letter to members. "Our limited resources are already stretched as far as possible, and meeting this new requirement would be financially impossible."

5. Conscience and the mandate. The administration has forced a debate over reproductive issues by mandating that most employers must provide insurance coverage that gives free access to sterilization, contraception, and drugs that cause abortion. All women will have access to the mandated services at no extra charge, even if they work for a religious organization such as a Catholic hospital, university, or charity whose religious beliefs are violated by the mandate. Private employers, including women business owners, will be unable to exercise their own right of conscience with regard to services they consider to be morally offensive.

6. Vulnerable Americans hit hardest. The new health law could shred the Medicaid safety net because it does not increase capacity or make desperately needed structural reforms to Medicaid but simply drives more people into the program. Current Medicaid recipients, most of whom have few if any other options for coverage, will soon be forced to compete for care with the 16 to 25 million people being added to the program. Dr. Edward Miller, the dean of Johns Hopkins Medicine, argued in a 2009 Wall Street Journal article entitled "Health Reform Could Harm Medicaid Patients" that our system simply doesn't have the capacity to absorb so many more patients so quickly. It will become that much harder for a mother on Medicaid to find a doctor for an ill child.

7. Loss of control. One of the things that women want most is more control over decisions involving health care for their families. Under Obamacare, those decisions will be made, not by parents, but by bureaucrats at the 159 new agencies and boards in Washington that will control our health-care system. Already a government agency has recommended restricting access to mammograms. That is only the beginning of government rationing of care as boards such as the Independent Payment Advisory Board decide to cut payments for providers and procedures.

8. The doctor shortage. We need at least 160,000 more physicians just to meet the demands of a growing and aging population. A 2010 survey by athenahealth and Sermo found that 66 percent of doctors are seriously considering dropping out of Medicare and Medicaid, and 53 percent are considering opting out of all third-party insurance. A more recent survey said that as many as 46 percent of doctors are planning to leave medical practice when Obamacare fully kicks in. Meanwhile, there will be 30 million more people in the health-insurance market. Waiting times will grow, as they have in Massachusetts, where a forerunner of Obamacare is in effect; some patients there wait up to 100 days to get an appointment with a primary-care doctor. With many fewer physicians, women and their families will find it harder and harder to find a doctor to see them.

9. Losing full-time jobs. Many mothers must juggle a full-time job with full-time family responsibilities. But Obamacare's employer mandate means they could face an even bigger challenge: holding onto that full-time job. Here's why: The law forces employers with more than 50 employees to provide expensive health insurance to full-time workers or pay a big fine. Many employers are seriously considering cutting their full-time employees to 25 hours a week so they can avoid the costly mandate.

10. Child-only policies vanishing. Children are most commonly insured along with their parents, but child-only policies have been available for families where the parents' insurance doesn't cover dependents. Under a provision of Obamacare that went into effect in 2010, insurers can no longer refuse to sell such a policy because of a preexisting condition. This means that parents or guardians could wait to purchase policies until their children got sick. In at least 17 states, insurers have pulled out of the child-only market, saying they would face "adverse selection" because the new rule destroys the basis for shared insurance against risk.

A BETTER IDEA

Women would be better served by having a variety of policies available, so that they can choose one that offers the benefits they want and need. "Defined-contribution" health plans — in which the employer gives each employee a fixed amount of money with which to buy insurance, as opposed to providing the "defined benefit" of a group health plan — would allow working spouses to combine funds to buy the plan of their choice. Cross-state purchasing of health insurance would give them more options. And targeted tax credits would provide extra help with premiums for those with modest incomes.

Opinion polls show that Americans have made up their minds about Obamacare: 68 percent want the Supreme Court to strike down the whole law or at least the law's central pillar — the individual mandate. The best outcome would be for the Court to send Congress back to work drafting new legislation that gives women and families real control over their health care.

Date: Monday, August 13, 2012 9:55:56 AM

Speaking on ABC's This Week yesterday, Obama campaign adviser David Axelrod made a series of misleading statements about Obamacare and the House Republican budget. Take for instance the claims made in this doozy of a paragraph:

AXELROD: Well, first of all, they want to turn – let's talk about the $700 billion. Congressman Ryan, what he doesn't say is that he's incorporated that same $700 billion into his plan, so he's embraced exactly what the president's done. The difference is the president is trying to strengthen the Medicare program. Under the changes that the president made, seniors are getting more prescription coverage and preventive care. We extended the life of Medicare by eight years, according to the Congressional Budget Office. The Ryan-Romney plan would not do that. And in fact, by turning it into a voucher program, throwing seniors onto the tender mercies of the private insurance market and capping growth the way they do, ultimately they are going to shift thousands of dollars onto the backs of seniors, and Medicare itself will be in a death spiral because it will – it will be dissipated by seniors who – healthy seniors going into the private system, leaving sick seniors in the existing Medicare program.

Where to begin? Well, let's analyze the claims one by one:

“Congressman Ryan, what he doesn't say is that he's incorporated that same $700 billion into his plan, so he's embraced exactly what the president's done.” This is FALSE. While Democrats took savings from Medicare to pay for their costly new Obamacare entitlement, the House Republican budget would use that money to save Medicare first. And you don't even need to take my word for it. Because in November, Nancy Pelosi admitted that Democrats [“took a half a trillion dollars out of Medicare in \[Obamacare\], the health care bill”](#) to pay for more federal spending. (One related point worth thinking about: If Congressman Ryan actually HAD embraced the President's proposal, why would Axelrod criticize him...?)

“The difference is that the President is trying to strengthen the Medicare program.” There's one problem with this allegation: Medicare actuary Foster has written that the Medicare provisions in the law “cannot be simultaneously used to finance other Federal outlays (such as the coverage expansions under the PPACA) and to extend the [Medicare] trust fund, despite the appearance of this result from the respective accounting conventions.” Even President Obama himself admitted this irrefutable logic in a 2010 interview, when he stated that “You can't say that you are saving on Medicare and then spending the money twice.”

“Seniors are getting more prescription coverage...” That's an interesting claim to make, because more than 17 million seniors participating in Medicare Part D are facing higher premiums so that Big Pharma can benefit from its “rock-solid deal” struck behind closed doors with President Obama and Congressional Democrats. Of course, it's unsurprising for David Axelrod to make this claim, because he received a multimillion dollar severance package indirectly paid for by the pharmaceutical industry, thanks to Big Pharma's backroom Obamacare deal with the White House.

“We extended the life of Medicare by eight years, according to the Congressional Budget Office.”

That's not what the Congressional Budget Office said. The non-partisan CBO said that the Medicare reductions in Obamacare “will not enhance the ability of the government to pay for future Medicare benefits” – because those savings will be used to fund other unsustainable entitlements. If the President wants to use the Medicare savings provisions to extend the life of the Medicare trust fund – and not to fund the new entitlements created by the law – the Congressional Budget Office previously estimated what the fiscal impact would be: “A net increase in federal deficits of \$260 billion” through 2019.

“Capping the growth the way they [i.e., Republicans] do...” This is another interesting statement for Axelrod to make, because it was Obamacare that capped Medicare's growth rate for the first time ever. What's more, the House Republican budget caps the growth of Medicare spending at exactly the same growth rate as Obamacare. The difference is that Obamacare delegates the power to cut Medicare spending to a board of 15 unelected bureaucrats, whereas conservatives would empower patients to make their own choices – reducing costs through competition, NOT government fiat.

“[Under premium support,] Medicare itself will be in a death spiral...” I'll let Cokie Roberts – scion of two prominent Democrats – answer this one. Later in the ABC This Week program, here's what she said about Axelrod's claims that Obamacare would strengthen the Medicare program, while premium support proposals would undermine it:

It's also intellectually dishonest, because the truth is, as you know, they say they're taking it away from providers. And every year, Congress votes to do what's called the doc fix, to give the providers back the money that has been cut. So, you know, that $700 billion, I won't look for it to be gone anytime soon.

And because Obamacare takes those Medicare savings out of Medicare to pay for new spending, any attempt to reverse some or all of the $700 billion in reductions would increase the federal deficit. It's a perfect example of why Obamacare is so harmful both to seniors and the federal budget. And no amount of misleading statements by the Obama campaign can disguise that fact.

New Galen Institute paper exposes why health insurance exchanges defined in PPACA won't work

Exchanges create more bureaucracy and place more burdens on states already strapped for cash

Health insurance exchanges required in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) won't work, won't increase access to affordable health care, and won't improve health outcomes or increase value, according to a new Galen Institute study.

The paper by Rita E. Numerof, Ph.D., entitled "What's Wrong with Health Insurance Exchanges..." explains the problems states will face if they go down the path of creating PPACA health insurance exchanges. The exchange requirements will result in the creation of administrative behemoths that will limit individual choice and drive up costs, just the opposite of their intent.

Numerof describes in detail why the state insurance exchange requirements are unrealistic and burdensome. These include intensive data-gathering responsibilities that delve into an individual's private affairs, adding new costs for states and employers, as well as strict federal over-regulation of insurance choices.

"Rather than focusing on compliance with PPACA and assume its burdens, legislators should take inventory of the problems plaguing the health insurance markets in their states. Then they can confront the most critical issues of insurance coverage, care delivery, and payment reform to ensure that residents have access to affordable care and enjoy better health outcomes at lower cost," Numerof concludes. A subsequent paper will offer recommendations on a framework for finding the right solution for states' unique needs.

"Like most of the health law, state insurance exchanges will fail in meeting its goals of lowering costs and providing more choices," said Grace-Marie Turner, president of the Galen Institute. "The way to increase access to affordable health care is not through more complex and onerous bureaucratic rules, but rather by reducing barriers to competition and consumer choice and removing regulations that make coverage unaffordable today."

Action Officers and healthcare advisors:

Below are two emails from Chris Jacobs at JEC offering an analysis of the Center for American Progress's entitlement reform document, released yesterday, 11/14. Given some of the conversations we are resuming in our caucus re healthcare and entitlement reform, we thought you'd find these emails interesting. See email from today and then email from yesterday below.

As previously noted, yesterday the Center for American Progress released its platform for altering entitlements. In fairness, the paper does include some conservative ideas, most notably additional means-testing for Medicare beneficiaries. But mainly the report demonstrates the fundamental difference between conservatives and liberals: Not only do liberals not believe in markets, they don't understand (and/or don't want to understand) how markets actually work.

Take for instance the CAP proposals that will supposedly "enhance competition based on price and quality," such as the idea to "require health insurance exchanges to offer tiered insurance plans." On the face of it, the idea sounds reasonable enough – encourage plans to lower premiums by offering a variety of choices. But the catch here – as in the rest of the CAP proposals – is that "competition" is government-defined, government-mandated, and government-prescribed. For instance, if insurers want to offer, and patients want to purchase, less expensive insurance coverage that doesn't cover all of Obamacare's mandated benefits – and/or insurance purchased across state lines – both CAP and Obamacare would tax those who gain coverage through such means, because this "competition" is prohibited in liberals' new health care utopia.

Then there's the fact that the CAP report also includes numerous other proposals that involve expanding prescription drug price controls in various forms. One may find it ironic – and ever-so-slightly contradictory – that a report supposedly focused on “enhanc[ing] competition” simultaneously expands government-dictated price controls.

Finally, CAP’s proposals for “competitive bidding” seem little short of comical for their ideologically-based hypocrisy. The paper states that Congress should “use competitive bidding for Medicare Advantage” – but then just as quickly states that government-run Medicare itself should not compete. And why doesn’t CAP want government-run Medicare to compete against private plans? Because a paper co-authored by one of CAP’s own scholars released in September found that in many parts of the country, traditional Medicare can’t compete – it’s far too costly. The study, outlined in an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association, found that private plans would be 9% cheaper than traditional Medicare under a competitive bidding proposal.

Mind you, the Left has no problems forcing seniors to pay more for private Medicare Advantage coverage, or forcing them out of their plans entirely – Obamacare’s cuts to the program will ensure both outcomes. But when it comes to competitive bidding for government-run Medicare itself, CAP and others on the Left want nothing to do with such an idea, clinging instead to the shibboleth of government-run Medicare as a first step towards socialized medicine for all. And that hypocrisy – competition for thee, but not for me – explains in a nutshell why liberal ideas such as those in the CAP paper are both unrealistic and ideologically dangerous.

Speaking at an event this morning regarding the Center for American Progress’ new health and entitlement manifesto (about which more later), former Obama Administration official Zeke Emanuel claimed that controlling health costs by itself would cure America’s fiscal woes: “I think this is the legacy for the president because if he can get healthcare costs under control, everything changes....This really is the big kahuna for his legacy going forward.”

It’s a nice assertion – but it’s also flat wrong. The Congressional Budget Office’s long-term budget outlook includes a chart (attached below) demonstrating that, over the next 25 years, demographics count for at least half – and as much as three-quarters – of projected increases in spending on Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security, and Obamacare insurance subsidies:

What this analysis means is that, even if the growth of health costs does manage to slow (both CBO and the Medicare actuary think Obamacare’s cost reductions will not be sustainable in the long-term), slowing health costs alone won’t solve Medicare’s financial problems. Put another way, Medicare needs structural reform NOW – because nothing else can save the program. Emanuel’s incorrect comments notwithstanding, it’s a lesson policy-makers in both parties would be wise to heed.

Today, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) announced that the deadlines for states seeking to operate either a State-based or Partnership Exchange under the Affordable Care Act have been extended. According to the new guidance, which is attached, states electing to operate a State-based Exchange must still send a Declaration Letter by November 16th, but the Blueprint is not due until December 14, 2012. States electing to operate a State Partnership Exchange can submit their Declaration Letter and Blueprint on a rolling basis up to February 15, 2013.

NGA LAUNCHES VIRTUAL HEALTH RESOURCE CENTER

New Website Provides One-Stop Shop for Health Policy Information

WASHINGTON—The National Governors Association (NGA) today unveiled a new website, State Health Policy Options. The site, <http://statepolicyoptions.nga.org/>, is a virtual resource center developed by NGA that will make it easier to explore potential solutions to health policy problems that state policymakers face. The website also will provide policymakers with innovative approaches from expert analysis and the experience of states in their efforts to improve health care access, affordability and quality.

“With the always evolving health care system, this website is designed to give states a place to find information on a variety of health care problems they might be facing,” said NGA Executive Director Dan Crippen. “Our hope is that this virtual resource center will give states unlimited ideas on how to solve their individual health care problems, learn from other states, identify viable policy options and considerations and stay informed of the federal health policy landscape.”

The website focuses on various topics, including:

- Planning for 2014: Provides information and analysis relevant to health insurance exchanges, Medicaid and insurance subsidy and tax credit policies that increase health insurance coverage once the Affordable Care Act changes required by 2014 come into effect;
- Cost Containment: Examines state initiatives to reduce Medicaid costs and maintain access to quality care for beneficiaries;
- Improving System Performance: Explores ways to lower health care costs, improve the quality of care and provide access to many people as possible;
- Prevention and Health Promotion: Considers how states can use their various roles to promote better health among state residents;
- Workforce: Focuses on how states can develop effective workforce planning and development strategies to respond to the growing demand on health care; and
- Health Information Technology: Shares ways to improve system performance, support patient self-management, support widespread adoption of electronic health records and design effective health information exchanges.

Each of the topic areas includes policy options for states; case studies of state-led efforts; federal regulations, guidance and grant opportunities for states; and expert sources with subject matter expertise.

To view the new website, please visit: <http://statepolicyoptions.nga.org/>.

Regulatory Cost Impact by State

The American Action Forum is fortunate enough to have Sam Batkins as its Director of Regulation. Sam has compiled a database of every regulation issued by the Obama Administration broken down by total pages, total cost, and paperwork burden hours. He has also broken each regulation down by the type of agencies affected so there is a sub-database for just healthcare regulations.

To derive the attached spread sheet estimating regulatory costs by state, Sam took the largest regulations that impact states and broke down the federal government's estimates proportionately by state to come up with a reasonable estimate of how costly the Affordable Care Act's regulations have already been to the private sector and the public.

Interestingly, Sam has built such an advanced database that we are now able to use it to bracket President during every state visit he makes to talk about jobs. I hope you all check out the database and tell your colleagues because it's a tremendous resources explaining the effect of the Obama Administrations red tape fiasco.

Speaker of the House John Boehner

"All of the Above?" Speaker Boehner Tells Fox News POTUS' Rhetoric Doesn't Match His Actions on Gas Prices

March 8, 2012 | Posted by Don Seymour (@donseymour) | Permalink

"[T]he president says he's for an 'all-of-the-above' energy strategy," Speaker John Boehner told Fox News' Greta Van Susteren, "But his rhetoric does not match his actions." Boehner outlined several ways the Obama administration – which rejected the popular Keystone XL project and is now lobbying against it – has blocked energy production as gas prices have skyrocketed. Boehner also said Senate Democrats are blocking nearly 30 House-passed bills that will help create new jobs and address high gas prices, and that today the House will pass the bipartisan JOBS Act. Watch here and see below for several excerpts:

Boehner: Obama Administration is Blocking Energy Production as Gas Prices Skyrocket:

"Listen, the president's policies have not only not helped the economy, they've made it worse. When it comes to gas prices, the president says he's for an 'all-of-the-above' energy strategy but his rhetoric does not match his actions. And the facts are that they've closed down most of the gulf. They've closed down all the public lands in the inner mountain west. ...[I]f you look at what the EPA is doing, they are shutting down a lot of American made energy ...”

Boehner: An “All of the Above” Strategy that Removes Government Barriers to Energy Production Will Address High Gas Prices, Create Jobs:

“[I]f we’re going to bring gas prices down, we need to have ‘all-of-the-above.’ That means, we need more oil and gas production, we need renewables, we need nuclear energy. And until we do ‘all-of-the-above’ we are going to be subject to these big fluctuations. ... The president’s energy policies have led to a more than doubling of gas prices over the three years of his presidency. It’s time for the president to take real action and work with Congress in a bipartisan way to deal with this problem.”

Boehner: High Energy & Gas Prices Hurt Job Growth:

“It’s not just the price of gas; it’s the price of energy across the board. Whether you’re at a surface company, a manufacturing company, everybody plays more. And if you’re spending that much more on energy, you’re not buying the kinds of other goods and services that are available in our economy and it will in fact slow our economy down.”

Boehner: House Has Passed Nearly 30 Bills to Help Create Jobs & Address Gas Prices, Will Pass Bipartisan JOBS Act Today:

“Republicans have a Plan for America’s Job Creators. We’ve had it since last May. This plan, 30 bills, that we’ve passed and sent them over to the United States Senate. If the president wants to get the economy moving again, what he ought to be doing is calling Harry Reid and saying, ‘Hey, these are some really good bills.’ Tomorrow we’re going to pass the JOBS Act. The president has said nice things about it. It would help small companies have better access to capital, help them grow. And if the president, again, is serious about helping the economy, he ought to pick up the phone, call Harry Reid and say, ‘Hey Harry, it’s time to get moving on some of these.’”

Boehner: America Can’t Afford Four More Years of Obama Administration Policies:

“I think this is an incredibly important year for our country and I would hope our candidates continue to focus on the real issue here and that’s the president’s policies. They’ve not helped. They’ve made our economy worse. They’ve made it harder for job creators to create jobs. And because the president doesn’t want to talk about his economic policies, he’s turned to the politics of envy and divide. ... I don’t think America can sustain four more years of the policies that are coming out of this Administration.”

Boehner: ObamaCare Mandate Threatens Religious Freedom:

“This has nothing to do with contraception. For 220 years our government, here in Washington, has respected the rights of religious organizations to their own beliefs. There’s always been a conscious exception of religious organizations so that government isn’t in the position of coercing them to do things that they don’t believe in ... [R]emember how we got there, this is Obamacare. This is just another example of the federal government going to tell everyone in American that, ‘You’re going to do it our way.’ Remember when the president said, ‘If you like the health insurance policy that you have, then you can keep it.’? Not anymore. Because this policy will require everyone in America to have at least one, and this is the first step, one exception based on what the government in Washington wants.”

JOHN R. KASICH
GOVERNOR
STATE OF OHIO

November 16, 2012

Director Gary Cohen
Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services Center for Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight
200 Independence Avenue, SW, Suite 739H
Washington, D.C. 20201

Dear Director Cohen,

This letter is to inform you of Ohio's decisions regarding whether or not to implement the health benefits exchange mandated by the Affordable Care Act (ACA), and other issues. The law requires the Secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to certify states' plans by January 1, 2013 and, in order for the Secretary to carry out this task, HHS is requiring states to submit an Exchange Blueprint.

My administration is committed to improving health care for all Ohioans through forward-thinking, solutions-oriented strategies aligned with our state's ongoing efforts to create a jobs-friendly climate. Accordingly, we are modernizing Ohio's Medicaid program, streamlining outdated health and human service delivery systems, implementing insurance market reforms and changing how we pay for care to reward value and coordinated care rather than volume.

We continue to make great strides in these endeavors despite significant headwinds expected from the law—higher health insurance costs, significant uncertainty in our insurance market and major new costs to states. Additionally, HHS is asking states to make final decisions on fiscally and economically significant and pivotal issues without promised federal guidance and rules for issues such as essential health benefits, market reforms, multi-state health insurance plans and more specifics regarding the federally-facilitated exchange. At this point, based on the information we have, states do not have any flexibility to build and manage exchanges in ways that respond to unique needs of their citizens or markets. Regardless of who runs the exchange, the end product is the same.

In light of this significant uncertainty and the negative impacts the law will have on Ohio:

- Ohio will not operate a federally-mandated exchange but instead will exercise its right under the law to leave that to the federal government;
- Ohio will not relinquish to the federal government its right to regulate its insurance market but, as permitted under the law, will instead retain the right to regulate the state's insurance industry through the Ohio Department of Insurance as it has done very effectively for more than 60 years;

JOHN R. KASICH
GOVERNOR

- Ohio will not turn over to the federal government the right to determine Medicaid and Children's Health Insurance Plan (CHIP) eligibility for its citizens but, as permitted by the law, will retain that function as well and manage that work through Ohio's Medicaid director;
- Ohio has no plans to run a state reinsurance program at this time, and;
- The Director of the Ohio Department of Insurance is designated to work with HHS to finalize the Exchange Blueprint and work through other related issues.

Given that HHS has extended the deadline by which states must submit their blueprint applications, Ohio reserves the right to amend its intentions as stated in this letter, should HHS announce any changes or present states with new information, rules or interpretations of the law.

I am confident Ohio will meet federal standards to maintain its control of these responsibilities. In the meantime I urge you to promptly issue the guidance and rules Ohio needs to align plan management and Medicaid eligibility with an otherwise federally-facilitated health benefits exchange.

Sincerely,

John R. Kasich

Good evening, Action Officers:

Due to lots of moving parts at RGPPC as well as annual meeting around the corner, we are going to host a brief RGPPC policy call Monday 11/12 morning at 10:30 AM EST for those of you who are finalizing briefing materials. I will walk you through the policy portion of the annual meeting and answer any questions some of you might have. For those of you we miss, we wish you a happy Veterans day and a thanks to those who have served our country. Should you wish to follow up with us directly, RGPPC is working Monday and is happy to take your phone calls.

In addition, please join me in offering our condolences to Debbie Hohlt who lost her mother late last week. Debbie, we are thinking of you. Her obituary is found here.

Agenda and notes below:

Agenda:

Roll Call: Seth/ Dustin- RGPPC

- a) RGPPC Healthcare Working Group: RGPPC will be hosting a Healthcare Working Group meeting in Baton Rouge, LA on November 19th. We will pay for one healthcare expert from each state to attend. Please see the attached agenda and reply form to register.
- b) RGPPC Education and Workforce Report (Marie): Release is being postponed until after the election to improve and add data. Please continue to send us workforce and education examples.
- c) General Healthcare Update (Marie): Attached is Friday's letter to governors from Secretary Sebelius regarding the extension of the deadline to December 14, 2012 for states to submit the State-based Exchange Blueprint application.
NOTE: the November 16th deadline for a Declaration Letter for a State-based Exchange was not extended.

The deadline for the Declaration Letter and Blueprint Application for State Partnership Exchanges was extended to Friday, February 15, 2013.

- d) RGPPC Best Practices 2012 (Marie): Please find our 2012 Best Practices document attached. A copy of this draft will be available on our staff-only password protected website at RGPPC.com. As a reminder, this is meant to be a living document. We will update it continuously with changes/edits/additions from the states.
- e) RGPPC Master Contact List (Marie): We are working on compiling and updating our Master State Contact List. You should have received an email last week with the contacts we currently have on file for your state. We ask that you help us update and/or add to any areas where our list is inaccurate or incomplete (especially where we are missing personal email address).
- f) RGPPC Event Survey (Marie):
https://www.surveymonkey.com/s/RGPPC\_Event\_Survey . Thanks to those of you who have already responded- feedback is extremely helpful as we plan 2013.
- g) Virginia Open Source CRM (Virginia): Governor Bob McDonnell and the Virginia Information Technology Agency have shared the source code for the Virginia Boards and Commissions Appointments (OASYS) application on Microsoft's CodePlex. CodePlex is Microsoft's opensource software and project sharing-site. OASYS was intended to support State and Local Governments through the Gubernatorial office Job applications and supporting processes surrounding recommendations, vetting and appointments position management for the Governor's office operations. The CRM2011 based applications can be easily modified to support to support a Governor-elect's transition staff application and hiring process before taking office. The code can also be modified to continue supporting a Governor's office recruiting and hiring activities using CRM2011 and supporting web-based portals. States can access CodePlex and the Boards and Commission source code at:

STATE OF INDIANA
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR
State House, Second Floor
Indianapolis, Indiana 46204

Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.
Governor

November 10, 2011

Republican Governors

2012 Republican Governors Public Policy Committee

Our good friend, Haley Barbour, conceived the Republican Governors Public Policy Committee as an organization that would infect the Republican Party with good ideas. There's no replacing Haley, but Bob McDonnell has asked me to try my best to pursue the mission they have defined for the RGPPC, as the 2012 Chairman of the Republican Governors Public Policy Committee (RGPPC).

As Republican Governors, we have a firm belief in limited but effective government. Government has a responsibility to deliver core services in the most cost efficient way possible. Republican governors everywhere are proving that fiscal responsibility and improved government services go hand in hand. We seek to show our fellow citizens how much government they won't miss, but also how competent a job the remaining, necessary government can do.

Pursuant to Bob and Haley's charge, the RGPPC next year will undertake two projects:

1. To formulate and promote policy prescriptions for our most urgent national problems. Bob has already recruited subject matter leaders, a list of whom is attached.
2. To establish a matchmaking service for spreading innovation.

Our agency heads can attend conferences and attempt to monitor the best practices of other states, but in my experience nothing beats one-on-one coaching and mentoring. When we began transforming Indiana's highway department, by far the most useful step we took was to visit and host front-line leaders from Rick Perry's Texas Department of Transportation. Years later, we're still reaping the benefits.

Please use the enclosure to check off 2 – 3 departments or functions about which you believe you have something to teach others, and 2 – 3 areas where you'd like your administration to make improvements. (We've all got plenty of those; this is government, after all.) The RGPPC will play matchmaker, and cover expenses when a team from a partner state visits you, or vice versa.

More effective governors are more electable governors. Pitch in to help a colleague, and let some colleagues help you, too.

We'll talk more about all this in Orlando, but it will help if you'll send us back the forms ahead of the meeting.

See you down there.

| Section 1401 (PPACA)              | Imposes a 40% excise tax on Cadillac health insurance plans. Valued in excess of $10,200 for individuals and $27,500 for families.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| Section 1411 (PPACA)              | Imposes a new payroll tax on investments                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| Section 1513 (PPACA)              | Amends Internal Revenue Code of 1986 by adding "Section 4980H" The section imposes tax penalties on certain firms that fail to offer adequate health care coverage to their employees.                                                                                                                                                                                |
|                                   | The government will enforce the employer mandate by requiring businesses to submit additional information to the IRS. When tax returns are filed, it will be required to include the names of each full-time employee and pertinent information about health insurance plans offered.                                                                                 |
| Section 1321 (PPACA)              | Abolishes the States' traditional authority to regulate health insurance. Scope of the statutory provisions invite constitutional scrutiny because they commandeer state officials as agents of federal health policy and regulation. Under Constitution, Congress can hold no such authority over states. [Example Jay Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898 (1997)] |
|                                   | PPACA affords broad discretionary authority to unelected, federal officials. These officials are set to micromanage health insurance coverage, more so than any state legislature has ever granted to state insurance regulators                                                                                                                                      |
| Section 2001 (b) of PPACA         | PPACA requires the states to immediately enforce Maintenance of Effort requirements.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| Section 1202 (Reconciliation Act) | Raise primary care payments to the same level that PCP's were paid at the Medicare payment rate level for 2013 and 2014 (feds to pay through 2015)                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Section 1321 (PPACA)              | Secretary of HHS given broad authority to issue rules and set standards governing the creation and operation of an exchange.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Section 1302 (PPACA)              | Grants HHS the ability to set and periodically revise an "essential health benefits package" of minimum insurance coverage requirements. NOTE: HHS provided the first round of "guidance" in a 'bulletin' issued to states in December 2011. This periodic "revision" could cause significant flux in a traditionally heavy mandated benefit state like Virginia.     |

Projects/Goals:

1. Federalism Reports
Gov. Brownback hopes to see the Federalism Subcommittee make progress on issuing position statements and working on more cerebral products defining the role of government.
2. Spearheading the Federalism message at RGPPC
There is a void in the discussion on federalism at the NGA and that this provides a real opportunity for the RGPPC to discuss the role of government.

Schedule:

Meetings will be tentatively scheduled for every two weeks and as necessary when working in tandem with other subcommittees.

RGPPC Recommendations:

Federalism White Paper

Work with Governors and academics to produce a widely circulated white paper and press component about our vision of Federalism and the proper balance of power in our Republic.

By February 20, have parameters of the Federalism white paper to announce to Governors at the RGA/NGA Winter Meeting.

Assisting Other Subcommittees

Assist other subcommittees on areas such as federal regulation and unfunded mandates. The subcommittee can assist in producing research and analysis on unfunded mandates and their impact on state governments.

MEMORANDUM

To: Katie Altshuler, Office of Governor Mary Fallin
CC: Marie Sanderson, Seth Levey, Lindsay Russell
From: Dustin Huffman
Re: Unfunded Mandates
Date: April 18, 2012

According to CBO, during the last five years, Congress has enacted 11 unfunded mandates that have exceeded the statutory threshold of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1996 ($70 million in 2010). Seven of the 11 were enacted in 2010. In total, there have been 199 unfunded mandates during the last five years (86 in 2010).<sup>1</sup>

Healthcare (In bold are the 7 unfunded mandates from 2010 that exceeded the UMRA cost thresholds):

- Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act
  - Imposes notice and reporting requirements on health insurance plans (including selfinsured plans), employers, and other public and private entities.
  - Requires health insurance plans (including self-insured plans) to comply with new standards for extending coverage to beneficiaries and their dependents.
  - Requires public and private employers to pay an excise tax on employer-sponsored health insurance coverage defined as having high costs.
  - Requires health insurance plans (including self-insured plans) to pay an annual fee based on the average number of people covered by the policy.
  - Requires public and private entities that handle health information to comply with new regulations.
  - Requires states to adopt uniform rating standards for all health plans in each insurance market
  - Requires states to enact laws if they wish to prohibit coverage of abortion services in qualified health plans offered through a health exchange in their state
  - Requires states to ensure that health plans comply with requirements for segregating funds that cover abortion services
  - Requires states to participate in data-matching arrangements and to develop electronic interfaces that allow for the exchange of data for determining eligibility for states' health subsidy programs
  - Preempts state laws governing health insurance, risk pools, and payroll standards<sup>2</sup>
- Healthy, Hunger-Free Kids Act of 2010
  - Requires schools to provide meals that comply with new standards for menu planning and nutrition
  - Requires schools to comply with nutrition standards for all food sold in schools
  - Requires schools to comply with federal standards for pricing school meals that are provided to children who are not approved for federal benefits
  - Requires states to comply with new regulations for approving children for free meals and for overseeing schools that operate school meal programs<sup>3</sup>

Education:

- The conditional waivers from the NCLB law's accountability provisions, granted by the Department of Education, will not provide more flexibility to states and local school districts as touted by President Obama. This administration has only just exchanged the current NCLB accountability provisions for new federal education requirements demanding that states implement federally approved college and career ready standards by agreeing to the Common Core Curriculum standards or some other curriculum approved by the Department of Education.<sup>4</sup>

Energy and Environment:

- Utility MACT
- Cross-State Air Pollution Rule
- Obama's EPA issues an "Endangerment Finding for Greenhouse Gases" (GHG); finding allows EPA to regulate carbon emissions for the first time under the Clean Air Act.<sup>5</sup>
- EPA issues GHG emissions rule for heavy-duty trucks, imposing $8.1 billion in program costs and more than 58,000 burden hours.<sup>6</sup>
- EPA's December 2010 "SIP Call" rule finds 13 State Implementation Plans (SIPs) inadequate for not regulating GHGs from stationary sources, and directs those states to do so or face federalization of their permitting programs. On December 30, EPA issued an emergency follow-up rule that revokes its decadesold approval of Texas' SIP and imposes a federal permitting program in that state.<sup>7</sup> (EPA separately imposed federal permitting programs in seven other states that had not updated their SIPs to address stationary source GHG emissions: Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Idaho, Kansas, Oregon, and Wyoming).<sup>7</sup>

Transportation:

- Commercial Driver's License Testing
  - FMCSA amends the commercial driver's license (CDL) knowledge and skills testing standards and establishes new minimum Federal standards for States to issue the commercial learner's permit (CLP). The rule requires that a CLP holder meet virtually the same requirements as those for a CDL holder, meaning that a driver holding a CLP will be subject to the same driver disqualification penalties that apply to a CDL holder.<sup>8</sup>
- Federal Highway Administration (FHWA) requirement
  - All states must ensure that existing traffic signs meet minimum retroreflectivity standards. Signs not meeting federal standards are required to be replaced at the state's expense by the specified compliance dates - "stop" and "yield" signs would have to be replaced by 2015, and all others by 2018.<sup>9</sup>
- Pedestrian Safety Enhancement Act of 2010
  - Preempts state laws relating to safety standards for motor vehicles, specifically requirements that hybrid and electric vehicles generate sounds that alert pedestrians when such a vehicle is operating nearby<sup>10</sup>

PPACA Costs to the States:

Alabama

The implementation of Obamacare will increase the costs of state government immediately and in the near future.

The overall Medicaid budget alone is expected to increase from $6.3 Billion in 2012 to $13.2 Billion at the beginning of the 2020 fiscal year.

Medicaid Expansion Details

- By 2014, Alabama expects to add up to 534,000 new enrollees to Medicaid. This is due to mandated eligibility to anyone under age 65 who has an income of less than 133% of the federal poverty level.
- Alabama is also required to provide subsidies to adults earning between 134% and 400% and children with incomes between 301% and 400%. This expansion would increase Medicaid eligibility from the current 21% of the state's population to about 40% of the population.
- Nearly 1,000 new primary care physicians will be needed to care for this new population.
- This cost of services for the new eligibles would initially be borne by the federal government, but that support would fade to 90% of the cost by 2020.
- HCR legislation does not provide any additional funds to the state to certify enroll and manage the new recipients.
- Administrative costs alone will require an estimated $389 million in state funds. Eligibility system changes will be required to add new enrollees, to differentiate between those eligible under new vs. previous rules (each with different matching rates) and to allow information to flow back and forth between subsidy plans and Medicaid.

Alaska

Alaska continues to be hampered in its efforts to manage the costs of its Medicaid program and continues to see Medicaid population increases. For the first time in recent history the Budget of the Department of Health and Social Services (Medicaid Authority) has surpassed that of the Department of Education and is projected to continue to grow ahead of inflation.

For FY2013 it is projected that Alaska will need an additional $45 million in state general funds to cope with program growth and another $129 million in state general funds to offset the loss of enhanced federal Medicaid funding. Alaska continues to be faced with substantial growth in Medicaid caseloads and utilization and forecasts an over 20 percent increase in Medicaid state general fund expenditures.

The State of Alaska continues to narrow projections on estimating the total cost of the ACA over the long term. However, a June 2010 preliminary analysis of the Medicaid impacts reflects that cumulative state general fund spending will increase by $100M million, through 2020. While direct care spending in the early years is offset by increased federal match rates, spending in later years paints an even more concerning picture for Alaska's future and the ever increasing impact of Medicaid expansion on the State budget while oil throughput continues to decline.

Arizona, Gov Brewer

The mandatory Medicaid expansions in PPACA, and the woodwork created by these expansions, are expected to cost Arizona over $550 million in the next three fiscal years. Once fully implemented in the latter half of this decade, PPACA is anticipated to increase Arizona's annual Medicaid obligations by almost $500 million per year. Furthermore, because Arizona expanded to 100% of the Federal Poverty Level before the passage of the PPACA, it receives a lower matching rate for those populations than other states that did not expand (who will initially receive full federal financing).

Over the four year period of the recession, while overall state spending decreased, Medicaid spending soared by 63 percent, to the point where it accounted for nearly 30 percent of the state general fund in the recently-completed FY 2011. During the recession, Arizona's projected deficits spiked, which necessitated a series of aggressive, unprecedented steps in order to return the State to fiscal stability. An important element of this effort was the paring back of Arizona's Medicaid program in FY 2012, which will be undermined by the mandated increases in population due to the PPACA.

Florida, Gov Scott

According to Florida's Agency for Health Care Administration, ObamaCare's Medicaid expansion will force Florida to spend an additional $1.5 billion and force an additional 1.8 million Floridians to enroll in Medicaid in four years.

Georgia

The projected impact of the Medicaid expansion in Georgia is significant. In January 2014, an estimated 650,000 additional members will be added to our state Medicaid and CHIP programs. This federally mandated expansion will increase state spending by at least $2.4 billion between FY2010-FY2020 alone. That said, the cost could soar substantially higher because there are more federal regulations to come and initial spending could spike because of the pent-up demand of new members. The Georgia Department of Community Health is continually reassessing the impact of the Medicaid expansion mandate.

Idaho

Idaho estimates between 150,000 and 200,000 new eligibles could be added to the Medicaid caseload when new expansion rules are implemented which could mean an 40-percent increase in participation compared to Idaho's current caseloads. The overall Medicaid benefit cost attributed to PPACA Medicaid provisions in the State of Idaho is conservatively estimated to be $228 million in State funds by 2020. In preparation for the PPACA 2014 changes, Medicaid system readiness is estimated to cost $34.8 million, of which Idaho's share will be $3.48 million.

Idaho is purposely holding off on changes related to the Medicaid expansion requirement because of the uncertainty surrounding the Supreme Court's decision, 2012 elections and State legislative decisions which could drastically impact how Medicaid expansion is implemented and designed. The State anticipates the cost to meet the new Medicaid expansion requirement will be approximately $9 million. That does not include the cost of operational and personnel needs related to the expansion.

In addition, the limited nature of the federal timelines and lack of final rules has forced Idaho to design a phased approach to accommodate the uncertainty surrounding Medicaid. Idaho is working on modernization, expansion and connection phases – all of which depend on the Supreme Court decision and 2012 elections.

Indiana

The additional enrollees will cost between $2.5 and $3.1 billion to Indiana's Medicaid expenditures for the period 2014 to 2020.

A fully state-operated Exchange is expected to cost the State between $57.7-$83.4M, annually. This is in addition to the cost of the Medicaid expansion. Even if the State decides not to operate an Exchange, there will still be costs associated with eligibility for premium tax credits. Therefore, a fully federal Exchange is expected to cost the State between $10.4-$18.3M annually.

Iowa

As recently as eight years ago, Iowa spent less than $2.5 billion in total Medicaid expenditures. Total Medicaid spending in Iowa now approaches $4 billion and accounts for more than 15% of Iowa General Fund expenditures.

When we entered office in January 2011, we were faced with replacing $540 million in one-time money that was used to fund the on-going Medicaid entitlement. Medicaid remains a complex funding source for health care that we manage very carefully.

It is anticipated that the federal takeover of health care under the Affordable Care Act will increase Medicaid enrollment by at least 150,000 people in Iowa. In 2014, the first year of implementation, our Medicaid population will grow from 400,000 to more than 550,000 covered lives in a state where our population is just over 3 million people. The total cost of this expansion is estimated to be between $180 to $818 million (with mid-point estimate of $255 million) in the first year, with the state picking up an increasing share of this cost over time. The uncertainty surrounding the wide range of potential costs is alone cause for concern.

Despite the federally mandated expansion of the Medicaid program, Iowa and other states will have less flexibility than ever before to effectively and efficiently manage this entitlement that is vital for so many of our vulnerable citizens. Federal maintenance of effort (MOE) requirements continue to tie the hands of state policymakers, forcing a continual squeeze on health care providers and diverting benefits from those who need them most.

Kansas

Without flexibility to reform Medicaid to improve outcomes and reduce costs, Kansas will continue to see increases in Medicaid spending. Kansas' Medicaid budget has ballooned from $2.4 billion in 2008, at the onset of federally mandated maintenance of effort (MOE) requirements, to what will reach nearly $3 billion in 2013 without reforms. In the same period, enrollment will have increased from 293,000 to almost 400,000 -- all before the mandated PPACA expansion.

An example of the rigidity of the MOE requirements in the ARRA, and extended by PPACA, is the federal response to the Kansas Legislature's move in 2010 to adjust family premiums in the CHIP program by $40 a month. CMS did not approve it, citing MOE. Instead, HHS offered an option to raise premiums that would have amounted to about 50 cents per month on a typical premium.

Kansas has proposed to acquire the flexibility it needs to remake Medicaid in a two-track Section 1115 demonstration project. The first track will address authorities needed to implement KanCare, an integrated, person-centered care coordination model that will incorporate nearly all Medicaid and CHIP populations and services, including long term services and supports. The second track proposes a global waiver, more specifically an outcomes-based Medicaid and CHIP program under a per capita block grant, fundamentally redefining the federal-state relationship in Medicaid and providing a model for reform that honors the program's statutory goal of improving the health of Americans in the greatest need.

Louisiana

Pending

Maine

Maine's Medicaid program has experienced an increase in enrollment from 314,000 in June 2009 to 336,000 in June, 2010, and total spending in Maine's Medicaid program has increased by over one billion dollars since 2002. Over the last several years, Medicaid rates for healthcare providers have also been repeatedly cut to address the ongoing financial shortfalls in Medicaid as a result of increasing enrollment and utilization. As a result of these reductions, some Maine physicians have closed their practices to Medicaid patients significantly reducing access to primary care services for Medicaid beneficiaries. All of the above challenges will be exacerbated by ACA. As Maine struggles to confront a shortfall of more than $800 million in the next biennial budget and the requirement to adopt a balanced budget, it is imperative that the Governor and the Legislature have the necessary flexibility to comprehensively manage the Medicaid program and to make necessary changes to effectively reduce total spending in the program.

Mississippi

The overall cost to implement PPACA in Mississippi is estimated to be $1.7 billion over the next ten years, including an additional $443 million in year ten.

Nebraska

In addition, based upon preliminary professional consultant projections, the State of Nebraska estimates that it will cost anywhere from $61.4 million to $86.9 million to build a Health Insurance Exchange in Nebraska. Due to the changing nature of the health insurance exchange project and the instability of the federal government's promulgation of final rules and regulations, the State projects that a state exchange annual operating budget would be $17.5 million per year starting in 2016.

Nevada

In April of 2010, the Nevada Department of Health and Human Services estimated the General Fund impact of implementing the Affordable Care Act was $574 million from 2014 through 2019.

New Mexico

With the implementation of Obamacare, New Mexico is poised to add an additional 130,000 – 175,000 individuals to the Medicaid program with an additional cost of $300 million - $600 million between 2014 and 2019.

North Dakota

With the implementation of Obamacare, North Dakota's current estimate for additional Medicaid spending is $106 million over 10 years.

Ohio

The estimated cost to Ohio from the first year to 2019 is over $2.7 billion for Medicaid services. These estimates do not include the cost of increases in administration of the program. The long-term sustainability of the program is called into question, unless Ohio is given new options on how to manage the program.

Pennsylvania, Gov Corbett

Pending

South Carolina

Medicaid enrollment will increase by 54% or 510,000 individuals in 2015 as a result of the Affordable Care Act. 176,000 of these persons will drop private insurance to go on Medicaid. The additional costs to state taxpayers between State Fiscal Year 2014 and State Fiscal Year 2020 ranges from $1.15 billion to $2.5 billion dollars depending on assumptions of participation rate and increases in physician fees resulting from physician shortages created by the new law.

South Dakota

South Dakota estimates it will cost at least $99.7 million in state funds through 2019 to comply with the Medicaid requirements of the PPACA.

This burden coupled with the inability to change other parts of the Medicaid program due to the MOE requirements will result in rate cuts to providers.

Providers that cannot absorb these cuts may stop taking people eligible for Medicaid, or may stop providing services altogether.

This would have a hugely detrimental effect on a very rural state, including citizens that rely on Medicaid for their health care and communities that may see their health care providers leave or quit. These unintended consequences of the MOE provisions in the PPACA are counter-productive of its larger goal to help Americans get access to the health care they need.

Tennessee

Tennessee's Medicaid program is continuing to experience budgetary challenges in the coming fiscal year, as state revenues continue their slow climb back to pre-recession levels. Unfortunately, the MOE requirements limit the flexibility needed to make important changes to the program as we deal with such issues. For instance, TennCare could save $16 million alone just by modifying nursing facility level of care requirements that would bring Tennessee in line with the criteria of other states and rebalance its long-term care system in order to serve more people with lesser levels of need in more cost-effective home and community-based settings while targeting the more expensive long-term care services to persons with higher acuity of need. However, we have yet to receive approval to make such a change.

At a time when Tennessee is already facing budget difficulties and the ACA is expected to cost the state in excess of $1.5 billion over five years, we must have the flexibility necessary to make common sense adjustments to the program.

Texas

Medicaid is consistently one of the biggest expenses all states face. It accounts for a quarter of the state budget in Texas. The Affordable Care Act expands Medicaid without reforming the program.

ACA will increase Medicaid enrollment in Texas by nearly 2 million people and cost the state $27 billion over 10 years.

States have received little federal guidance on key ACA provisions, including the primary care rate increases which is required starting in 2013. Additionally, guidance is needed on Medicaid Benchmark Benefits, eligibility changes, FMAP methodology and numerous other provisions.

Lack of timely guidance makes it impossible for states to effectively plan for the mushrooming Medicaid caseloads that the law will create. HHSC needs final, detailed guidance from the federal government to determine the full impact of certain ACA provisions on the Texas Medicaid and CHIP programs, and to make federally-required changes.

ACA does not recognize states' unique needs and prevents each state from tailoring its Medicaid and CHIP programs in accordance with the intent of its elected and appointed representatives.

Utah

The Insurance Department has been tracking hours of work to account for the additional burdens imposed by the ACA. During FY11, we are able to account for over 5,700 hours, equating to approximately $182,000 in personnel costs. Included in the estimate is time spent on rate review which has been supported by a grant from HHS, reimbursing the department $112,757 in personnel costs. In addition to the above, numerous hours have been incurred by the Commissioner or our actuary

Virginia

The Commonwealth of Virginia has estimated the Medicaid cost of federal health reform to the State to be between $1.5 and $2.2 billion through 2022. These estimates have not been updated since August 2010, but because of the length of the recession and the current pace of economic growth, along with other developments in our understanding of the full impact of PPACA, the higher end of the cost range seems more realistic. For example, in a study completed for Medicaid Health Plans of America, Milliman, Inc. has estimated that the PPACA-mandated tax on health insurance companies, which did not exclude Medicaid health plans, will cost Virginia, a heavily managed Medicaid state, approximately $430 - $500 million through 2023; this was not included in Virginia's 2010 estimates of the PPACA cost, meaning this $430 - $500 million would be in addition to the $1.5 to $2.2 billion already estimated. Virginia is in the process of re-estimating impacts in preparation for the 2012 Medicaid forecast due in the fall of 2012. At that time, the estimates should better reflect the current economic environment in Virginia, and reflect a better understanding of the PPACA impact based on subsequent analysis and federal guidance that was not available for the 2010 estimates."

Wisconsin, Gov Walker

Wyoming

The costs of maintaining our Medicaid program are fast becoming a serious threat to our state general funds. The 2013-2014 biennial budget for Medicaid in Wyoming includes $560 million in state general fund dollars. This is just the cost to provide care to the current population of approximately 76,000 enrollees. A study of Wyoming impacts from PPACA conducted by The Lewin Group in 2010 estimates an additional 31,000 enrollees due to the Medicaid expansion in 2014 – an increase of over 40%. It is difficult to estimate what the fiscal impact of this huge bolus of new enrollees will be. The State legislature commissioned a Medicaid Cost Study in 2011 and we expect findings in mid-2012. We do know, however, that the cost of implementing a new eligibility and enrollment system for Medicaid will cost over $3.5 million in state general funds after the 90/10 federal match.

The larger and more detrimental impact of the implementation of PPACA is likely to be to our private health insurance markets. An actuarial study of our small group and individual markets conducted by Gorman Actuarial, LLC in 2011 indicates that we can expect premiums to go up an average of 30% to 40% in the individual market due solely to new insurance regulations effective in 2014. When you add the projected impact of higher morbidity of new entrants into the market and essential benefit mandates, we can expect overall 40% to 60% increases in premiums in the individual market.

Given that Wyoming already has a higher percentage of small employers that self-insure than other states, it's not unreasonable to expect a number of small employers to stop providing insured coverage and either move their employees to the individual market or to self-insure to avoid regulation. During recent town hall meetings, a number of small employers indicated that it would be cheaper for them to pay the PPACA penalties for not providing coverage than it will be to continue to provide coverage. The Lewin Group estimates a net loss of over 8,000 covered lives in the employer sponsored insurance market.

With all the changes in PPACA, Gorman Actuarial estimates over 41,000 people in Wyoming will remain uninsured by 2016. This represents about half of the 83,000 people currently uninsured in our state.

Alabama

The implementation of Obamacare will increase the costs of state government immediately and in the near future.

The overall Medicaid budget alone is expected to increase from $6.3 Billion in 2012 to $13.2 Billion at the beginning of the 2020 fiscal year.

Medicaid Expansion Details

- By 2014, Alabama expects to add up to 534,000 new enrollees to Medicaid. This is due to mandated eligibility to anyone under age 65 who has an income of less than 133% of the federal poverty level.
- Alabama is also required to provide subsidies to adults earning between 134% and 400% and children with incomes between 301% and 400%. This expansion would increase Medicaid eligibility from the current 21% of the state's population to about 40% of the population.
- Nearly 1,000 new primary care physicians will be needed to care for this new population.
- This cost of services for the new eligibles would initially be borne by the federal government, but that support would fade to 90% of the cost by 2020.
- HCR legislation does not provide any additional funds to the state to certify enroll and manage the new recipients.

Eligibility system changes will be required to add new enrollees, to differentiate between those eligible under new vs. previous rules (each with different matching rates) and to allow information to flow back and forth between subsidy plans and Medicaid.

Alaska

Alaska continues to be hampered in its efforts to manage the costs of its Medicaid program and continues to see Medicaid population increases. An important element of this effort was the paring back of Arizona's Medicaid program in FY 2012, which will be undermined by the mandated increases in population due to the PPACA.

Florida

According to Florida's Agency for Health Care Administration, ObamaCare's Medicaid expansion will force Florida to spend an additional $1.5 billion and force an additional 1.8 million Floridians to enroll in Medicaid in four years.

Georgia

Projections assume state implementation of Medicaid eligibility expansion.

Enrollment Growth

1. An additional 620,000 people will be enrolled in Medicaid in 2014 growing to almost 695,000 by 2023
  - These numbers include both children and adults currently eligible but not enrolled, newly eligible populations and enrollment due to employers dropping coverage
2. The addition of 620,000 new people in 2014 represents a 34% increase in Medicaid rolls
3. PPACA will increase the percent of Georgia's on Medicaid from 17.6% today to 24.2% in 2014.

Projected State Fiscal Impact related to Medicaid and PeachCare

- 2014 (6 months cost – effective January 1, 2014)
- State Funds Cost: $76.3 million
- Total Funds (State + Federal) Cost: $1.9 billion
- 2015
- State Funds Cost: $219.8 million
- Total Funds (State + Federal) Cost: $3.7 billion

10 Year total (2014 – 2023)

- State Funds Cost: $4.5 billion

- Total Funds (State + Federal) Cost: $40.8 billion

Key Assumptions

Generally assumes take-up rate of 35% among currently eligible but not enrolled and 66% take-up rate among newly eligible.

Assumes that the ACA's employer mandate will prevent firms >50 employees from dropping coverage.

Assumes CHIP FMAP applies to children transferred to Medicaid.

- Medicaid federal share of cost for New Categories of Coverage is 100% for CFY 2014-2016, 95% in CFY 2017, 94% in CFY 2018, 93% in CFY 2019, and , 90% in the outyears.
- Does not include DSH impact, start-up costs or potential savings in non-Medicaid budgets.
- Assumes eligible populations grow at 1.3% per year and expenses grow at 2.8% per year.
- Assumes CHIP is re-authorized in its current form after 2019

Idaho

Idaho estimates between 150,000 and 200,000 new eligibles could be added to the Medicaid caseload when new expansion rules are implemented which could mean an 40-percent increase in participation compared to Idaho's current caseloads. The overall Medicaid benefit cost attributed to PPACA Medicaid provisions in the State of Idaho is conservatively estimated to be $228 million in State funds by 2020. In preparation for the PPACA 2014 changes, Medicaid system readiness is estimated to cost $34.8 million, of which Idaho's share will be $3.48 million.

Idaho is purposely holding off on changes related to the Medicaid expansion requirement because of the uncertainty surrounding the Supreme Court's decision, 2012 elections and State legislative decisions which could drastically impact how Medicaid expansion is implemented and designed. The State anticipates the cost to meet the new Medicaid expansion requirement will be approximately $9 million. That does not include the cost of operational and personnel needs related to the expansion.

In addition, the limited nature of the federal timelines and lack of final rules has forced Idaho to design a phased approach to accommodate the uncertainty surrounding Medicaid. Idaho is working on modernization, expansion and connection phases – all of which depend on the Supreme Court decision and 2012 elections.

Indiana

The additional enrollees will cost between $2.5 and $3.1 billion to Indiana's Medicaid expenditures for the period 2014 to 2020.

A fully state-operated Exchange is expected to cost the State between $57.7-$83.4M annually. This is in addition to the cost of the Medicaid expansion. Even if the State decides not to operate an Exchange, there will still be costs associated with eligibility for premium tax credits. Therefore, a fully federal Exchange is expected to cost the State between $10.4-$18.3M annually.

Iowa

As recently as eight years ago, Iowa spent less than $2.5 billion in total Medicaid expenditures. Total Medicaid spending in Iowa now approaches $4 billion and accounts for more than 15% of Iowa General Fund expenditures.

When we entered office in January 2011, we were faced with replacing $540 million in one-time money that was used to fund the on-going Medicaid entitlement. Medicaid remains a complex funding source for health care that we manage very carefully.

It is anticipated that the federal takeover of health care under the Affordable Care Act will increase Medicaid enrollment by at least 150,000 people in Iowa. In 2014, the first year of implementation, our Medicaid population will grow from 400,000 to more than 550,000 covered lives in a state where our population is just over 3 million people. The total cost of this expansion is estimated to be between $180 to $818 million (with mid-point estimate of $255 million) in the first year, with the state picking up an increasing share of this cost over time. The uncertainty surrounding the wide range of potential costs is alone cause for concern.

Despite the federally mandated expansion of the Medicaid program, Iowa and other states will have less flexibility than ever before to effectively and efficiently manage this entitlement that is vital for so many of our vulnerable citizens. Federal maintenance of effort (MOE) requirements continue to tie the hands of state policymakers, forcing a continual squeeze on health care providers and diverting benefits from those who need them most.

Kansas

Without flexibility to reform Medicaid to improve outcomes and reduce costs, Kansas will continue to see increases in Medicaid spending. Kansas' Medicaid budget has ballooned from $2.4 billion in 2008, at the onset of federally mandated maintenance of effort (MOE) requirements, to what will reach nearly $3 billion in 2013 without reforms. In the same period, enrollment will have increased from 293,000 to almost 400,000 -- all before the mandated PPACA expansion.

An example of the rigidity of the MOE requirements in the ARRA, and extended by PPACA, is the federal response to the Kansas Legislature's move in 2010 to adjust family premiums in the CHIP program by $40 a month. CMS did not approve it, citing MOE. Instead, HHS offered an option to raise premiums that would have amounted to about 50 cents per month on a typical premium.

Kansas has proposed to acquire the flexibility it needs to remake Medicaid in a two-track Section 1115 demonstration project. The first track will address authorities needed to implement KanCare, an integrated, person-centered care coordination model that will incorporate nearly all Medicaid and CHIP populations and services, including long term services and supports. The second track proposes a global waiver, more specifically an outcomes-based Medicaid and CHIP program under a per capita block grant, fundamentally redefining the federal-state relationship in Medicaid and providing a model for reform that honors the program's statutory goal of improving the health of Americans in the greatest need.

Louisiana

Obamacare is expected to cost Louisiana a total of $7 billion in additional state general funds over the next 10 years.

Obamacare will increase Medicaid rolls by 645,843 over the next 10 years at a cost of $3.69 billion in state general funds.

High costs of the IT systems needed to implement the expansions and the link to the Exchange (whether state-run or federal) are estimated to cost $162 million in state general funds.

Increase payments to primary care providers, increased utilization for physicians and hospitals are estimated to cost $2.6 billion in state general funds.

Maine

Pending

Mississippi

The overall cost to implement PPACA in Mississippi is estimated to be $1.7 billion over the next ten years, including an additional $443 million in year ten.

Nebraska

Based upon an independent third-party actuarial analysis, the State of Nebraska faces an unfunded and unsustainable state funding obligation for the new and expanded Medicaid programs under the federal health care law ranging from $526.3 million to $765.9 million in just the first ten years (fiscal years 2011-2020).

In addition, based upon preliminary professional consultant projections, the State of Nebraska estimates that it will cost anywhere from $61.4 million to $86.9 million to build a Health Insurance Exchange in Nebraska. Due to the changing nature of the health insurance exchange project and the instability of the federal government's promulgation of final rules and regulations, the State projects that a state exchange annual operating budget would be $17.5 million per year starting in 2016.

Nevada

In April of 2010, the Nevada Department of Health and Human Services estimated the General Fund impact of implementing the Affordable Care Act was $574 million from 2014 through 2019.

New Mexico

With the implementation of Obamacare, New Mexico is poised to add an additional 130,000 – 175,000 individual to the Medicaid program with an additional cost of $300 million - $600 million between 2014 and 2019.

North Dakota

With the implementation of Obamacare, North Dakota's current estimate for additional Medicaid spending is $106 million over 10 years.

Ohio

The estimated cost to Ohio from the first year to 2019 is over $2.7 billion for Medicaid services. These estimates do not include the cost of increases in administration of the program. The long-term sustainability of the program is called into question, unless Ohio is given new options on how to manage the program.

Oklahoma

The Oklahoma Health Care Authority estimates that the Obamacare Medicaid expansion will cost an additional $4.6 billion in state and federal funding and will add 250,000 new Oklahoman's to the Medicaid rolls from 2014-2020.

Pennsylvania

Pennsylvania's Medicaid spending has doubled over the past ten years and it now comprises 31% of the state's budget. It has grown four times faster than K-12 spending, and nine times faster than transportation spending. Even before the healthcare bill passed, Medicaid has been on an unsustainable path. Under this law, these statistics will only get worse. Pennsylvania will see an additional 800,000 individuals on the Medicaid rolls adding a significant burden to the budget and taxpayers. As the Medicaid population continues to increase and state revenues continue to not keep pace, the mandates of the maintenance of effort requirement and the lack of any meaningful flexibility within the program will severely hamper virtually all other aspects of the state budget. States simply cannot afford Obamacare. Their budgets will be crushed by the Medicaid expansion that the federal establishment is forcing on them. Americans deserve a vibrant, robust, competitive and transparent health care system that puts patients and quality first, focuses on personal responsibility, not a large government takeover that shifts the costs from the federal government to state tax payers.

South Carolina

Medicaid enrollment will increase by 54% or 510,000 individuals in 2015 as a result of the Affordable Care Act. 176,000 of these persons will drop private insurance to go on Medicaid. The additional costs to state taxpayers between State Fiscal Year 2014 and State Fiscal Year 2020 ranges from $1.15 billion to $2.5 billion dollars depending on assumptions of participation rate and increases in physician fees resulting from physician shortages created by the new law.

South Dakota

South Dakota estimates it will cost at least $99.7 million in state funds through 2019 to comply with the Medicaid requirements of the PPACA.

This burden coupled with the inability to change other parts of the Medicaid program due to the MOE requirements will result in rate cuts to providers.

Providers that cannot absorb these cuts may stop taking people eligible for Medicaid, or may stop providing services altogether.

This would have a hugely detrimental effect on a very rural state, including citizens that rely on Medicaid for their health care and communities that may see their health care providers leave or quit. These unintended consequences of the MOE provisions in the PPACA are counter-productive of its larger goal to help Americans get access to the health care they need.

Tennessee

Tennessee's Medicaid program is continuing to experience budgetary challenges in the coming fiscal year, as state revenues continue their slow climb back to pre-recession levels. Unfortunately, the MOE requirements limit the flexibility needed to make important changes to the program as we deal with such issues. For instance, TennCare could save $16 million alone just by modifying nursing facility level of care requirements that would bring Tennessee in line with the criteria of other states and rebalance its long-term care system in order to serve more people with lesser levels of need in more cost-effective home and community-based settings while targeting the more expensive long-term care services to persons with higher acuity of need. However, we have yet to receive approval to make such a change.

At a time when Tennessee is already facing budget difficulties and the ACA is expected to cost the state in excess of $1.5 billion over five years, we must have the flexibility necessary to make common sense adjustments to the program.

Texas

Pending

Utah

The Insurance Department has been tracking hours of work to account for the additional burdens imposed by the ACA. During FY11, we are able to account for over 5,700 hours, equating to approximately $182,000 in personnel costs. Included in the estimate is time spent on rate review which has been supported by a grant from HHS, reimbursing the department $112,757 in personnel costs. In addition to the above, numerous hours have been incurred by the Commissioner or our actuary

Virginia

The Commonwealth of Virginia has estimated the Medicaid cost of federal health reform to the State to be between $1.5 and $2.2 billion through 2022. These estimates have not been updated since August 2010, but because of the length of the recession and the current pace of economic growth, along with other developments in our understanding of the full impact of PPACA, the higher end of the cost range seems more realistic. For example, in a study completed for Medicaid Health Plans of America, Milliman, Inc. has estimated that the PPACA-mandated tax on health insurance companies, which did not exclude Medicaid health plans, will cost Virginia, a heavily managed Medicaid state, approximately $430 - $500 million through 2023; this was not included in Virginia's 2010 estimates of the PPACA cost, meaning this $430 - $500 million would be in addition to the $1.5 to $2.2 billion already estimated. Virginia is in the process of re-estimating impacts in preparation for the 2012 Medicaid forecast due in the fall of 2012. At that time, the estimates should better reflect the current economic environment in Virginia, and reflect a better understanding of the PPACA impact based on subsequent analysis and federal guidance that was not available for the 2010 estimates.”

Wisconsin

If implemented, the PPACA will force a heavy financial burden upon the people of Wisconsin through increased health insurance premiums, the expansion of Medicaid, and a new entitlement that will create new inequities among working families. Moreover, much of the new spending will not be used to increase coverage in Wisconsin, which has already achieved the levels of insurance that is aspired to under PPACA. Public dollars will simply displace private dollars at a higher cost.

New estimates from the Obama Administration and the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office (CBO) demonstrate that Medicaid enrollment will be higher than previously estimated. The Wisconsin Department of Health Services (DHS) believes that increased enrollment among currently eligible individuals and retention of higher income children due to Maintenance of Effort (MOE) requirements will drive up the cost to the state. However, the direct burden on the state budget remains uncertain. New eligibility rules will result in some individuals migrating into and out of Medicaid. Rules on federal matching rates that are critical to our fiscal analysis have not been finalized.

More than 750,000 childless adults, parents, caretakers, and children are already enrolled in Wisconsin Medicaid programs. There will be no additional federal assistance for the vast majority of these individuals and future enrollees. Some additional federal assistance will apply only to a relatively small number of individuals. Whether the federal government will “buy out” the state share of some eligibility groups is unknown at this time. It will matter little to taxpayers whether the costs will count as federal or state expenditures. Increased federal control over the management of the Medicaid program is stifling innovation and threatens to unnecessarily drive up costs.

Wyoming

The costs of maintaining our Medicaid program are fast becoming a serious threat to our state general funds. The 2013-2014 biennial budget for Medicaid in Wyoming includes $560 million in state general fund dollars. This is just the cost to provide care to the current population of approximately 76,000 enrollees. A study of Wyoming impacts from PPACA conducted by The Lewin Group in 2010 estimates an additional 31,000 enrollees due to the Medicaid expansion in 2014 – an increase of over 40%. It is difficult to estimate what the fiscal impact of this huge bolus of new enrollees will be. The State legislature commissioned a Medicaid Cost Study in 2011 and we expect findings in mid-2012. We do know, however, that the cost of implementing a new eligibility and enrollment system for Medicaid will cost over $3.5 million in state general funds after the 90/10 federal match.

The larger and more detrimental impact of the implementation of PPACA is likely to be to our private health insurance markets. An actuarial study of our small group and individual markets conducted by Gorman Actuarial, LLC in 2011 indicates that we can expect premiums to go up an average of 30% to 40% in the individual market due solely to new insurance regulations effective in 2014. When you add the projected impact of higher morbidity of new entrants into the market and essential benefit mandates, we can expect overall 40% to 60% increases in premiums in the individual market.

Given that Wyoming already has a higher percentage of small employers that self-insure than other states, it's not unreasonable to expect a number of small employers to stop providing insured coverage and either moves their employees to the individual market or to self-insure to avoid regulation. During recent town hall meetings, a number of small employers indicated that it would be cheaper for them to pay the PPACA penalties for not providing coverage than it will be to continue to provide coverage. The Lewin Group estimates a net loss of over 8,000 covered lives in the employer sponsored insurance market.

With all the changes in PPACA, Gorman Actuarial estimates over 41,000 people in Wyoming will remain uninsured by 2016. This represents about half of the 83,000 people currently uninsured in our state.

November 14, 2012

The Honorable Barack Obama
President of the United States
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear President Obama:

Congratulations on your election victory. The American people have made their decision and Republican governors stand ready to work with your Administration on issues of critical importance to our states and the nation. Our American political system once again showed the world democracy in action, where policy differences are debated in the public arena and settled with one vote per person. We wish you well and are hopeful that you and the Congress will promptly address the crushing problems of debt, unemployment, and spending reform by the end of the year to create certainty for the states and businesses.

We write today on behalf of the 29 Republican governors and two governor-elects representing 60 percent of the states, with an urgent matter related to implementation of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA). It is clear that putting in place the new programs you championed will be an enormous strain on state governments and budgets, as well as the federal government. From the financial obligations and complex technicalities to ensuring the healthcare workforce and infrastructure will be in place to meet the new demand, the timeframe and many of the provisions in the PPACA are simply unworkable. With the pending deadline of November 16 for governors to make a decision on state based health insurance exchanges, we ask you to push back the date until your team has answered the numerous previous questions for governors and other groups, and promulgated the final regulations, so that all stakeholders have had the opportunity to comment, and those comments have been incorporated into a final rule. The guidance Friday from Secretary Sebelius extends the date only for the election of a partnership exchange, and subsequently for the federal exchange.

The PPACA, as written, requires many changes, but most immediate are the implementation deadlines for the health insurance exchange models. While the January deadline to certify if a state is prepared to implement a state based exchange is statutory, most other deadlines are written within the discretion of the United States Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). Other than the minor amendments made last Friday, to date, HHS has been unwilling to establish a more manageable timeline. The rulemaking process has been unduly condensed, and in some cases, important rules have not been promulgated at all. Rather, the administrative guidance that has been shared holds limited legal authority for states or the federal government.

States are struggling with many unanswered questions and are not able to make comprehensive far-reaching decisions prudently. In the past months, we have sent letters with many specific questions to help us make an informed choice, and our letters have been generally ignored. Many important questions remain unanswered as the deadlines loom. We include our previous letters as an attachment.

Also, the clear truth is that the PPACA does not contain much-needed Medicaid or Medicare reform designed to control costs. As you correctly told Senate Democrats, “[a]s we move forward on health reform, it is not sufficient for us to simply add more people to Medicare or Medicaid to increase the rolls, to increase coverage in the absence of cost controls and reform. And let us repeat this principle: If we don’t get control over costs, then it is going to be very difficult for us to expand coverage. These two things go hand in hand. Another way of putting it is we can’t simply put more people into a broken system that doesn’t work.” We governors, facing crushing Medicaid budget pressure from Medicaid before PPACA implementation, wholeheartedly agree with your statement. Expansion without reform is not responsible and would bust the state budgets. With the Supreme Court striking the punitive provisions of PPACA to penalize states that do not expand, we renew our pleas for an honest discussion on reform, flexibility, and waivers to allow governors to manage Medicaid costs better.

As has been stated many times, before making any final policy decisions, governors must carefully consider the short and long-term implications of an expanded entitlement program and the consequences of significantly increasing the size of government to manage these programs. In the near term, we need to better understand how the federal government will implement a federal exchange as it is clear most states will not be ready on their own. We also have concerns about future cost shifting to states, and need certainty as we prepare our budgets, many of which are biennial budgets. We also remain very apprehensive about the unsustainable deficits and national debt, and the reality that imprudent implementation of PPACA will contribute dramatically to an increase in both.

Lastly, we respectfully request that you meet as soon as possible with a group of concerned governors, Republicans and Democrats. We wish to discuss our specific proposals for Medicaid reform that we sent you in August 2011, as you work with the Congress to address the fiscal cliff the country faces. We hope you can appreciate the real challenges all states face in implementing the PPACA under compressed schedules with insufficient information to make good decisions.

Mr. President, again, congratulations on your team's impressive victory. We all look forward to working together.

Sincerely,

Governor Bob McDonnell
Commonwealth of Virginia

Governor Bobby Jindal
State of Louisiana

Healthcare Exchanges:

- 1) Please provide a complete list of regulations that will have to be reviewed, revised and re-opened for public comment prior to implementation as a result of the Supreme Court ruling (e.g., the Medicaid eligibility regulations, exchange regulations related to interface with Medicaid). What is the schedule for re-issuing these regulations?
- 2) When will final rules be issued on essential health benefits, actuarial value and rating areas?
- 3) The federal government has already extended deadlines for applying for Level 1 and Level 2 Exchange Establishment funding into 2014. Can we expect extensions of the deadlines for other areas of implementation given the uncertainty caused by the Supreme Court ruling and the linkage between Medicaid expansion and exchange eligibility and enrollment functions? In addition, will the deadlines change for states implementing a partnership exchange? Will the deadlines be extended for states implementing a federal exchange? Can you confirm that states will be able to switch from a federal model to a partnership or state model until 2019 and that funding will be available to enable that transition?
- 4) When will the details of the federal partnership options be available? These cannot be considered as an option without details including cost estimates and how state and federal systems are expected to link. How will the long term funding of the federally-facilitated healthcare exchanges be sustained?
- 5) States considering a state-based exchange need to know whether there will be a charge to use the federal data hub, advance premium tax credit/cost-sharing reduction service, risk adjustment and transitional reinsurance programs. Will there be a charge? And, if so, how much will it be?
- 6) When will states learn the details of the operational systems for a federal exchange? The procedural, technical, and architectural requirements for linking to the federal exchange have not been released. It is not feasible to know if a state-based exchange is better for our citizens until we know what the contents of a federal exchange will be. Taking grant money at this time for state exchange creation may be wasted if a federal exchange makes more sense for a particular state.
- 7) When will information from the establishment of a federal exchange be available for states to use if a state opts to build its own exchange? It is costly for each state to have to start from scratch and still not know how interfaces will work.

- 8) If states choose to build a state-based exchange, what dollars will the federal government contribute now and in the future? For the federal exchange states, when will the regulations regarding the imposition of taxes on a state's insurers be released?
- 9) It has been widely reported that Congressional leaders who have to appropriate money will seek to defund exchanges. Can you explain how the enactment provisions of the law allow the Executive Branch to continue to fund exchanges without Congressional action to appropriate money?
- 10) What happens to a state that has taken exchange planning and implementation grants if their exchange is not financially viable after 2015? Can a state refuse to increase taxes on either its residents or insurers, thus putting the financial underpinning of an exchange at risk? What penalties does the federal government envision in this case?
- 11) What happens if a state accepts grant money now to begin to build a state exchange, and subsequently determines that a federal exchange may be better? Will the federal government claw back these grant dollars from the states?
- 12) The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) has pointed out a provision in the law that reduces exchange subsidies after 2018, which means fewer and fewer people will qualify for subsidies, and the people who do qualify will get a smaller and smaller subsidy. Does the Administration support that change, and if so, how would you pay for it? If you do not, why do you think people should be forced to buy insurance if federal subsidies are shrinking?
- 13) Alongside the considerable challenge of greatly expanding the Medicaid program, states are charged by the PPACA with creating a single, seamless point of entry for all of the insurance affordability programs affected by the Act--Medicaid, the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP), the Basic Health Plan (where offered), advance tax credits for individual and Small Business Health Options Program (SHOP) exchange enrollees. This leaves another major question on the table. What about all of the other social service programs?
- 14) In order to minimize disruptions to a state's insurance market, The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) is required to certify multi-state plans that must be included in every exchange. When will the rules be released detailing the requirements and timeline for multi-state plans? How OPM structures these rules can be very disruptive to a state's insurance market.

- 15) Does the federal government intend to maintain high risk pools and how will they be financed? What actions will they take in a state that has opted not to operate a high risk pool or an exchange?
- 16) How do states with a federal exchange ensure that Web Based Entities (WBE) are an option in their state?
- 17) Will HHS and the United States Department of the Treasury offset the advance payments of premium assistance tax credits to issuers for an applicant's outstanding tax, alimony, and/or child support debts?
- 18) Will state-based exchanges have the flexibility to retroactively adjust past due premium amounts for interim changes in income?
- 19) How will the Center for Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight (CCIIO) handle Qualified Health Plans (QHP) to Medicare transitions to prevent enrollee confusion and the potential for unpaid QHP premiums due to the enrollee not terminating the QHP timely?
- 20) How will CCIIO minimize the adverse impact of its overly-broad employer notice requirement?

Medicaid:

- 1) When can we expect to receive updated guidance on Medicaid expansion and related topics?
- 2) Will states that expand Medicaid coverage up to a level below 138% of the federal poverty level (FPL), for example up to 100% of FPL, still receive the enhanced federal medical assistance percentage (FMAP) available for newly covered populations?
- 3) Will states be allowed to phase in Medicaid coverage up to 138% of FPL (or 100%FPL) years after 2013 and still receive the enhanced FMAP?
- 4) Does the MOE requirement apply to the expansion population or does it apply only to the current Medicaid population? If a state accepts the expansion, but the federal match goes away, can we drop out of the expansion program? Will you waive the MOE under your 1115 waiver authority? What will be the penalties for failure to comply with MOE requirements? Since the MOE was a direct result of the expansion funding, if a state chooses not to expand is the MOE no longer effective?

- 5) How will the federal exchanges utilize the state's criteria for eligibility that will be included in MAGI?
- 6) If a state expanded Medicaid through a waiver prior to enactment of the PPACA, but then chooses not to expand coverage further, are they still eligible for the 75% to 90% enhanced FMAP for the previously expanded population?
- 7) Will the federal government support options for the Medicaid expansion population that encourage personal responsibility cost sharing or accountability provisions, the use of high deductible plans such as Health Savings Accounts, and other options at the state's choice?
- 8) What specific plans and timeline do you have for enacting the reforms and flexibility options for Medicaid that you spoke of in 2009? When can states give further input on the needed reforms?
- 9) You have stated that you will not deport undocumented aliens who have not committed a crime. You have also said that these undocumented aliens will be exempt from the individual mandate. How will the state be reimbursed for medical services given to these individuals?
- 10) Will CMS approve global waivers with an aggregate allotment, state flexibility, and accountability if states are willing to initiate a portion of the expansion?
- 11) The Disproportionate Share allotments will be reduced every year with a methodology based in the reduction in the number of uninsured. One, when will HHS issue the regulations and methodology for this reduction? Two, for a state that does not see a decrease in its uninsured population, will the remaining states absorb the full reduction? In addition, can a state implement a new DSH Diversion program as part of the optional expansion? Can a state implement new DSH Diversion programs for services to the uninsured/uncompensated care services?
- 12) What assurance can states be provided the federal share will be 100 % for the first 3 years and 90% into perpetuity? If the 90% federal match for the expanded population is ever reduced, will states be able to repeal the expansion without penalty or clawbacks. Likewise, if the existing match for the current Medicaid population is reduced, will states be able to repeal the expansion without penalty or clawbacks?
- 13) How much nationwide will Medicaid expansion contribute to annual federal deficits and the national debt?

14) Will the Administration approve waivers that will allow states to use limited financial incentives to encourage appropriate utilization of services and reduce costs to both the state and the federal government?

July 10, 2012

The Honorable Barack Obama
President of the United States
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear President Obama:

On June 28 the United States Supreme Court ruled in National Federation of Independent Business vs. Sebelius that the Medicaid expansion provisions in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) were unconstitutionally coercive of state sovereignty.

Despite the ruling which upheld the individual mandate as a tax, we have written before and continue to maintain that the PPACA remains seriously flawed both conceptually and technically. It favors dependency over personal responsibility and will ultimately destroy the private insurance market. In its current form, the law will increase health care costs and likely lead to the disruption or discontinuation of millions of Americans' insurance plans. The new federal subsidies anticipated that enable exchanges are unaffordable given the crushing federal budget deficits and record national debt, and states cannot afford significant Medicaid expansions. For most governors, Medicaid growth even before PPACA, was exorbitant, and consuming an even larger share of state budgets.

Three years ago, you correctly told Senate Democrats, “[a]s we move forward on health reform, it is not sufficient for us to simply add more people to Medicare or Medicaid to increase the rolls, to increase coverage in the absence of cost controls and reform. And let me repeat this principle: If we don’t get control over costs, then it is going to be very difficult for us to expand coverage. These two things go hand in hand. Another way of putting it is we can't simply put more people into a broken system that doesn't work.”

Unfortunately, that is precisely what has been done—PPACA, if implemented by the states, would put more people, 16-20 million individuals, into a broken Medicaid system. Three years ago, you stated clearly that would be a mistake. We fully agree. Today, states have less flexibility over the administration of the program, even though some states pay a share of the cost equal to that of the federal government. Governors of both parties, who are the primary managers of Medicaid delivery in our states, were not invited to engage in meaningful dialogue with your administration in 2010 when the PPACA was drafted-- and ultimately passed--- on a party-line vote.

We are still waiting for the real tools and flexibility we need to reform Medicaid and lower costs as you promised. Last year, Republican governors stressed the need to reform Medicaid, and we put forward 31 specific policy ideas to achieve that goal. We sent you and the Congressional leadership the detailed plan documents to craft such reforms. Since we received virtually no response from you, we are enclosing another copy for your team to review. We now renew our call for Medicaid reform.

PPACA uses Medicaid as the vehicle for expansion because it would be cheaper for the federal government through cost-shifting to the states. Despite promises of higher federal matches for the expansion populations, we also cannot ignore the policies proposed by your Administration that would cut the enhanced match rate for newly eligibles.

While overall spending on health care has slowed, the cost of health care has not. Spending has slowed, but for the wrong reason—the lingering recession that has cost jobs and thus lost health coverage. According to the most recent federal government projections, the number of individuals without health insurance will have increased from 42.7 million in 2008 to 48.6 million in 2013.

While we continue to believe the best option is to fully repeal and replace the PPACA, states now confront numerous deadlines and face major policy decisions in the wake of the Supreme Court decision. Before making any final policy decisions, governors must carefully consider the short and long-term implications of an expanded entitlement program and the consequences of significantly increasing the size of government to manage these programs.

The states' burden of the expansion population as well as administrative costs remains significant. Increased spending on Medicaid crowds out resources available to states to spend on other meaningful priorities like education, the environment, public safety and infrastructure.

Moreover, even before increasing the Medicaid-eligible population as prescribed by PPACA, Medicaid has been on an unsustainable path, comprising a growing share of state budgets every year. It is difficult to see how expanding Medicaid without reform would do anything other than put more strain on state budgets and the taxpayers, especially when considering that many pernicious provisions that curtail state flexibility remain.

While the Supreme Court decision focused on the states' role in determining whether a Medicaid expansion is in the best interest of its citizens, states also face other PPACA-related decisions, like whether to establish a state based health-insurance exchange or accept the default of a federal exchange. As the exchange issue is currently interpreted, states are essentially being tasked with shouldering all the responsibility without any authority.

If states determine that a Medicaid expansion is not in the best interests of its citizens, it is likely that there will be a significant gap in coverage for low-income individuals who do not qualify for tax credits. We believe it is incumbent upon the authors of PPACA and your Administration to detail precisely how you intend to address this situation.

We also believe that it is unlikely that the federal government will have fully functional exchanges in place by the fall of 2013 in order for millions of Americans to be able to purchase coverage beginning January 2014. We respectfully request the Administration provide the detailed work plan that demonstrates these deadlines will be met. If they cannot be met, the responsible course would be for HHS to level with us and the American people. We also do not understand how the federal government can begin to afford to implement PPACA, with deficits already over $1 trillion in every year of your presidency, and the debt growing $5 trillion in the past 3 years to an outrageous record of nearly $16 trillion.

The consequences of governors' decisions will impact our states – and the nation – for decades to come, so we must have all the information needed to choose wisely. We have taken the liberty of compiling below just some of the critical questions that must have answers before states can determine best how to proceed in light of the Court's decision. We undertake this task with a sense of great responsibility, and resolve to only move forward when we have full and complete knowledge of all the implications of our decision.

Healthcare Exchanges:

- 1) Please provide a complete list of regulations that will have to be reviewed, revised and re-opened for public comment prior to implementation as a result of the Supreme Court ruling (e.g., the Medicaid eligibility regulations, exchange regulations related to interface with Medicaid)? What is the schedule for re-issuing these regulations?
- 2) When will either additional guidance or actual rules be issued on essential health benefits, actuarial value and rating areas be issued?

- 3) The federal government has already extended deadlines for applying for Level 1 and Level 2 Exchange Establishment funding into 2014. Can we expect extensions of the deadlines for implementation given the uncertainty caused by the Supreme Court ruling and the linkage between Medicaid expansion and exchange eligibility and enrollment functions? In addition, will the deadlines change for states implementing a partnership exchange? Will the deadlines be extended for states implementing a federal exchange?
- 4) When will the details of the federal partnership options be available? These cannot be considered as an option without details including cost estimates. How will the long term funding of the federally-facilitated healthcare exchanges be sustained?
- 5) States considering a state-based exchange need to know whether there will be a charge and by how much to use the federal data hub, advance premium tax credit/cost-sharing reduction service, risk adjustment and transitional reinsurance programs.
- 6) When will states learn the details of the operational systems for a federal exchange? The procedural, technical, and architectural requirements for linking to the federal exchange have not been released. It is not feasible to know if a state-based exchange is better for our citizens until we know what the contents of a federal exchange will be. Taking grant money at this time for state exchange creation may be wasted if a federal exchange makes more sense for a particular state.
- 7) When will information from the establishment of a federal exchange be available for states to use if a state opts to build its own exchange? It is costly for each state to have to start from scratch and still not know how interfaces will work.
- 8) If states choose to build a state-based exchange, what dollars will the federal government contribute now and in the future? For the federal exchange states, when will the regulations regarding the imposition of taxes on a state's insurers be released?
- 9) It has been widely reported that Congressional leaders who have to appropriate money will seek to defund exchanges. Please explain how the enactment provisions of the law allow the Executive Branch to continue to fund exchanges without Congressional action to appropriate money.
- 10) What happens to a state that has taken exchange planning and implementation grants if their exchange is not financially viable after 2015? Can a state refuse to increase - taxes on either its residents or insurers, thus putting the financial underpinning of an exchange at risk? What penalties does the federal government envision in this case?

- 11) What happens if a state accepts grant money now to begin to build a state exchange, and subsequently determines that a federal exchange may be better? Will the federal government claw back these grant dollars from the states?
  - 12) What impact will changes to the Medicaid expansion have on exchange implementation? The federal exchange is currently structured to provide Medicaid eligibility determination. How will this work if some states participate and others do not?
  - 13) Last month the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) pointed out a provision in the law that reduces exchange subsidies after 2018, which means fewer and fewer people will qualify for subsidies, and the people who do qualify will get a smaller and smaller subsidy. Does the Administration support that change, and if so, how would you pay for it? If you do not, why do you think people should be forced to buy insurance if federal subsidies are shrinking?
  - 14) CMS has released 90/10 funding under ARRA and HITECH in order for states to improve their eligibility systems for Medicaid and other social service programs. Will that funding continue?
  - 15) Alongside the considerable challenge of greatly expanding the Medicaid program, states are charged by the PPACA with creating a single, seamless point of entry for all of the insurance affordability programs affected by the Act--Medicaid, the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP), the Basic Health Plan (where offered), advance tax credits for individual and Small Business Health Options Program (SHOP) exchange enrollees. This leaves another major question on the table. What about all of the other social service programs? Will states still be able to create an eligibility system for all social service programs under the 90/10 funding mechanism?
  - 16) In order to minimize disruptions to a state's insurance market, The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) is required to certify multi-state plans that must be included in every exchange, when will the rules be released detailing the requirements and timeline for multi-state plans. How OPM structures these rules can be very disruptive to a state's insurance market.
  - 17) Does the federal government intend to maintain high risk pools and how will they be financed? What actions will they take in a state that has opted not to operate a high risk pool or an exchange?

Medicaid

- 1) When can we expect to receive updated guidance on Medicaid expansion and related topics?
- 2) Is there a deadline for letting the federal government know if a state will be participating in the Medicaid expansion? How does that relate to the exchange declaration deadline? The two programs are currently scheduled to be implemented simultaneously in January 2014.
- 3) Will states that expand Medicaid coverage up to a level below 138% of the federal poverty level (FPL), for example up to 100% of FPL, still receive the enhanced federal medical assistance percentage (FMAP) available for “newly covered” populations?
- 4) Will states be allowed to phase in Medicaid coverage up to 138% of FPL (or 100% FPL) years after 2013 and still receive the enhanced FMAP?
- 5) Does the MOE requirement apply to the expansion population or does it apply only to the current Medicaid population? If a state accepts the expansion, but the federal match goes away, can we drop out of the expansion program? Will you waive the MOE under your 1115 waiver authority? What will be the penalties for failure to comply with MOE requirements? Since the MOE was a direct result of the expansion funding, if a state chooses not to expand is the MOE no longer effective?
- 6) Regarding the two year increase in Medicaid reimbursement for primary care codes, are you going to extend it? If so, how are you going to pay for it? Congressional Republicans have expressed opposition to any funded for PPACA.
- 7) Will states still be required to convert their income counting methodology to MAGI for purposes of determining eligibility regardless of whether they expand to the optional adult group? If so, how do states link the categorical eligibility criteria to the MAGI? How will the federal exchanges utilize the state’s criteria?
- 8) If a state expanded Medicaid through a waiver prior to enactment of the PPACA, but then chooses not to expand coverage further, are they still eligible for the 75% to 90% enhanced FMAP for the previously expanded population?
- 9) Will the federal government support options for the Medicaid expansion population that encourage personal responsibility – cost sharing or accountability provisions, the use of high deductible plans such as Health Savings Accounts, and other options at the state's choice?

- 10) What specific plans and timeline do you have for enacting the reforms and flexibility options for Medicaid that you spoke of in 2009? When can states give further input on the needed reforms?
- 11) You have stated that you will not deport undocumented aliens who have not committed a crime. You have also said that these undocumented aliens will be exempt from the individual mandate. How will the state be reimbursed for medical services given to these individuals?
- 12) Will CMS approve global waivers with an aggregate allotment, state flexibility, and accountability if states are willing to initiate a portion of the expansion?
- 13) The Disproportionate Share allotments will be reduced every year with a methodology based in the reduction in the number of uninsured. One, when will HHS issue the regulations and methodology for this reduction? Two, for a state that does not see a decrease in its uninsured population will the remaining state absorb the full reduction? In addition, can a state implement a new DSH Diversion program as part of the optional expansion? Can a state implement new DSH Diversion programs for services to the uninsured/uncompensated care services?

There will inevitably be more questions that will arise as additional guidance flows from your Administration. With just 18 months until the anticipated implementation date of PPACA, we would appreciate prompt answers.

Thank you for your attention to this important matter facing states and the country. We look forward to learning from your responses.

Sincerely,

Governor Bob McDonnell, RGA Chairman
Commonwealth of Virginia

September 27, 2012

The Honorable Barack Obama
President of the United States
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear President Obama:

On July 10, 2012, I submitted to you a letter that detailed 30 questions from Republican governors regarding the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA). We continue to wait for answers to most of our questions, and while your administration responded to some of them, the answers were not substantial enough to take responsible action. Today, we write again, hoping that more information will be provided.

As stated several times before, we continue to maintain that the PPACA remains seriously flawed both conceptually and technically. Our explanation isn't new, we believe the law favors dependency over personal responsibility and will ultimately destroy the private insurance market. In its current form, the law will increase health care costs and likely lead to the disruption or discontinuation of millions of Americans' insurance plans. The new federal subsidies anticipated that enable exchanges are unaffordable given the crushing federal budget deficits and record national debt, and states cannot afford significant Medicaid expansions. For most governors, Medicaid growth even before PPACA was exorbitant and consuming a growing share of state budgets. While we strive to balance our budgets at the state level, we do not understand how the federal government can begin to afford to implement PPACA, with deficits already over $1 trillion in every year of your presidency, and the debt growing $5 trillion in the past 3 years to an outrageous record of nearly $16 trillion.

For emphasis, we will again repeat that we wish you would have stood by your statement three years ago when you correctly told Senate Democrats, —[a]s we move forward on health reform, it is not sufficient for us to simply add more people to Medicare or Medicaid to increase the rolls, to increase coverage in the absence of cost controls and reform. And let me repeat this principle: If we don't get control over costs, then it is going to be very difficult for us to expand coverage. These two things go hand in hand. Another way of putting it is we can't simply put more people into a broken system that doesn't work.

Unfortunately, that is precisely what has been done—PPACA, if implemented by the states, would put more people, 16-20 million individuals, into a broken Medicaid system. A system that lacks real tools and flexibility to afford states the opportunity to be creative and implement true Medicaid reforms. Twice now, we have sent you and Congressional leadership the detailed plan documents to craft such reforms. We continue to wait for a response and have enclosed yet another copy for your team to review.

While believe the best option is to fully repeal and replace the PPACA, states continue to confront numerous deadlines and face major policy decisions in the wake of the Supreme Court decision. Before making any final policy decisions, governors must carefully consider the short and long-term implications of an expanded entitlement program and the consequences of significantly increasing the size of government to manage these programs.

In addition to determining whether Medicaid expansion is in the best interest of its citizens, states face other PPACA-related decisions, like whether to establish a state-based health-insurance exchange, enter into a partnership exchange or accept the default of a federal exchange. As the exchange issue is currently interpreted, states are essentially being tasked with shouldering all the responsibility without any authority.

We respectfully request the Administration provide the detailed work plan that demonstrates how the aggressive deadlines for the creation of a federally-facilitated health insurance exchange deadlines will be met. If they cannot be met, the responsible course would be for HHS to level with us and the American people.

The consequences of governors' decisions will impact our states – and the nation – for decades to come, so we must have all the information needed to choose wisely. We have taken the liberty of listing below some of the critical questions that must have answers before states can determine best how to proceed. You will notice that of the 30 questions originally put forward in the July 10 letter, the vast majority remain unanswered.

Obamacare was 2700 pages long. In his State of the Union speech tonight, the President spent two sentences – a mere 44 words – talking about health care. And the first reference didn't come until 39 minutes into his speech.

When it comes to this supposedly "historic" and "majestic" law, the silence from this Administration is deafening.

We will have our RGPPC policy call Mon. 3/12, morning at 10:30 AM EST.

Agenda and notes below:

Access code: [REDACTED]

Agenda:

1. Roll Call: Marie - RGPPC
2. RGPPC Update: Marie- RGPPC
  - a) RGPPC Leadership 2012. Please complete Governor Daniels survey, attached, if you have not yet done so.
  - b) Obamacare Anniversary Meeting today. 5:30 EST. Needed: Updated state cost data, approval of health care principles (to be sent soon), and a list of governors wanting to message in support of block grants. Let us know if you are one of those states.
  - c) Website: Please visit the rgppc.com website to make sure the staff contact info from your state is up to date. You will have to log into the 'staff' page located at the top right corner of the screen. If you do not remember their username or password, you can contact dhuffman@rgppc.org to request a new password. (Note: you can also just click on the "forgot password" link but it will automatically assign you a random password.) We are updating our website and will put versions of our reports on this for staff to review.
  - d) Subcommittee updates:
    1. Energy and Environment: Principles finalized by steering committee. To be circulated this week for approval
    2. Healthcare: Principles finalized by steering committee. To be circulated this week for approval
    3. Education/Workforce: Steering committee to meet in April. Please let us know if your state would like to be on the education steering committee and who that contact should be in your state.

4. Jobs/Econ Dev/Infrastructure: Letter supporting Infrastructure bill will be crafted today. Goal is to send this letter Tuesday/tomorrow.
5. Federalism: reaching out to think tanks, to provide additional info in coming weeks
6. Budget/Finance/Regulatory: Preparing data on pension and tax reform

e) Please Complete Surveys

1. PPACA and healthcare; working with US Senate Finance and House Energy and Commerce to push back on a White House report indicating that some R states, which are moving forward with some form of a healthcare exchange, are endorsing Obamacare. Survey is meant for data collection.

f) Hearings: The hearing on March 22 re Infrastructure and the hearing on March 29 re Obamacare have BOTH been cancelled due to governors inability to testify with legislative sessions under way. We will re-circulate invitations when these are rescheduled.

g) Free File program: State Free File programs are a public--private partnership between the state Department of Revenue and electronic tax software companies that donate their online tax preparation and e-filing services to eligible taxpayers at no cost to the taxpayers or to the State government. It is based on the IRS Free File program. Eligible taxpayers are able to use the brand--name tax software products offered through Free File to prepare and electronically file their federal and state income tax returns online for free. There is NO cross--marketing, cross--selling and pop--up advertising are prohibited in products offered through Free File. Refund anticipation loans are banned. Only the very highest standards of performance and safety are acceptable when partnering with the government on behalf of taxpayers. This program offers the best technology and highest quality service to taxpayers. There are 22 Free File States and growing. Recent states that have created a new Free File program are Virginia and Indiana. Other states are Alabama, Arkansas, Arizona, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Mississippi, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Vermont, and West Virginia.

There is currently legislation in Congress HR 2569 (Roskam) and S 1769 (Isakson) that make the IRS Free File program permanent. Virginia is currently the only state where the program is in statute. Mississippi currently has legislation pending to make their FF program permanent. The Fed and State Free File programs goes up against the Obama Administration's plans to have the IRS become the tax preparer for every American. Obama's plan is called "simple return" and it would create a bill presentment model where the IRS would calculate and prepare your taxes and you accept what they have prepared for you. As you can imagine this is very unpopular but that doesn't seem to stop this Administration and they are moving forward.

If you'd like more information, please let RGPPC know.

3. House Update: Will (Speaker Boehner)
4. Senate Update: Lanier (Leader McConnell)
5. NGA Update: Lauren (NE)
6. Other business?

We will have a new Members Corner site with good info and ideas from our private sector partner. We'll provide a list each week of reports in that file for your to review.

This week: NEI letter to Republican Governors. On the anniversary of the nuclear accident in Japan, the President of RGA Governor's Cabinet member organization Nuclear Energy Institute would like to update you on important safety upgrades at U.S. nuclear plants and other key industry developments. Please find the letter on RGPPC's staff only website from NEI's Marv Fertel.

d) Subcommittee updates:

1. Energy and Environment: Principles have been circulated. Edits due this Friday, 3/23
2. Healthcare: Principles finalized by steering committee. To be circulated this week for approval
3. Education/Workforce: Steering committee to meet on April 9 or April 16. Please let us know if your state would like to be on the education steering committee, who that contact should be in your state, and which date is better for your state.
4. Jobs/Econ Dev/Infrastructure: Longer term efforts are being prepared by the committee.
5. Federalism: reaching out to think tanks, to provide additional info in coming weeks
6. Budget/Finance/Regulatory: Preparing data on pension and tax reform. Info to be available soon for download at rgppc.com

e) OIG Exchange: PPACA Surveys. States have received a survey from OIG titled "States Readiness to Implement Streamlined Eligibility and Enrollment Requirements for State Health Subsidy Programs, OEI-07-10-00530". How are states responding to this survey?

f) Campaign Finance Appointments: Governors receive appointments to boards and commissions that regulate elections and campaign finance laws in states. RGPPC/RGA would like to host a conference call with states to discuss some important issues related to these appointments. Such appointments are official governors' roles and thus are run out of governors offices, typically by your appointments or legal staff. Please identify the appropriate person on your staff and a conference call will be set next week. A separate email will go out notifying you and requesting you to identify your state's participant.

g) Please Complete Surveys

e) Attachments: With the media frenzy over the CMS denial of the Texas family planning waiver, the following documents are attached for your review. The first attachment is the letter that goes through the legislative, regulatory, and case law authority. The second is a pretty good CRS analysis of a state's legal authority. While CMS says they can't allow excluding certain providers, this memo makes it pretty clear that states can (or at the very least the statute is ambiguous).

WAYS AND MEANS LETTER TO NAIC

April 13, 2012

Dear (Title)(Last Name),

Millions of Americans and employers are struggling to afford the rising costs of health insurance. In many states, carriers in the non-group and small group health insurance markets are few. To understand the trends and current state of the non-group and small group health insurance offerings in your state please respond to each of the following information requests:

- 1) Provide the names of the carriers offering coverage in the non-group health insurance market in your state in each of the following years: 2009, 2010, 2011, and 2012;
- 2) Provide the number of plans offered by each carrier in the non-group market and the type of each plan offered by the carrier (e.g., HMO, PPO, high-deductible health plan, etc.) in your state in each of the following years: 2009, 2010, 2011, and 2012;
- 3) Provide the names of insurers offering coverage in the small group health insurance market in your state in each of the following years: 2009, 2010, 2011, and 2012.
- 4) Provide the number of plans offered by each carrier in the small group health insurance market and the type of each plan offered by the carrier in your state in each of the following years: 2009, 2010, 2011, and 2012.
- 5) Provide the number of covered lives enrolled in such plans for each answer derived from questions 1 through 4.

The requested information will provide the Committee with a better picture of these insurance markets in your state. Every state insurance commissioner will receive the same request. Please respond, in writing, no later than April 20, 2012. I thank you in advance for your assistance and if you have any questions or need clarification please contact Dan Elling on my staff at (202) 225-3943.

Sincerely,

IOWA Legislative Accomplishments

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR

Governor Terry E. Branstad ★ Lt. Governor Kim Reynolds

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: Wednesday, May 09, 2012

CONTACT: Governor's Office 515-725-3518

Governor Branstad's statement on close of the 2012 legislative session

(DES MOINES) – Gov. Branstad today released the following statement following the close of the 2012 legislative session:

In January, the lieutenant governor and I brought forward a bold agenda focused on the dual goals of job creation and transformational education reform. I want to thank the General Assembly for considering our priorities and for adopting a significant number of them to help move our state forward. [See list below.]

Legislation passed by this General Assembly will provide our Iowa Economic Development Authority with additional tools to help meet our administration's ambitious goal to create 200,000 new jobs. We have made significant progress on that goal during this first year and a half and the High Quality Jobs Incentive Fund and Employee Stock Option Plan legislation will help accelerate those efforts.

I am also pleased that this General Assembly took a first important step toward our goal of transformational education reform. While these initial steps may be considered by some as small, our new early childhood literacy initiative, in particular, will have lasting effects on the lives of thousands of Iowa children and significantly improve their chances of future academic and career success. We also enhance teacher accountability by requiring annual reviews.

However, the 2012 session may be remembered as much for what failed to be accomplished as for what actually was accomplished. Despite the best efforts of my office and a bipartisan majority in the Iowa House, the inability of Senate Democrats to adopt serious property tax reform has put Iowa taxpayers in jeopardy of seeing significant property tax increases in the coming year.

The Senate failed to support legislation based on the framework I believe was agreed to as a roadmap to finding a compromise between my office, the House, and the Senate. They failed to pass a meaningful step forward in our goal to make Iowa's tax system more competitive or assist with our critically needed job creation goals.

As a result, Iowa taxpayers face yet another year with property taxes that are scheduled to grow nearly $2 billion over the next eight years. This is absolutely unacceptable and Iowa voters will have an opportunity to resolve this impasse in November.

Lt. Governor Reynolds and I are proud to work with all members of the Iowa General Assembly and proud to serve our citizens each and every day. We will continue over the next seven and a half months of 2012 to travel the state, promote our ambitious agenda, and work aggressively toward the achievement of our four goals:

- 1. 200,000 new jobs for Iowans;*
- 2. 25% increase in personal incomes;*
- 3. Reduce the cost of government by 15%; and*
- 4. Provide our children with the nation's finest education.*

Governor Branstad / Lt. Governor Reynolds: Legislative Accomplishments

2012:

Economic Development and Jobs: two of the governor's jobs priorities received legislative approval this year and will provide our Iowa Economic Development Authority (IEDA) with additional tools to help meet the governor's ambitious job creation goals:

- High Quality Jobs Incentive Fund: $15 million fund IEDA will use to package job growth deals that will encourage new large employers to locate or expand in Iowa.
- Employee Stock Option Plans (ESOPs): this legislation requested by the governor will encourage those Iowa businesses looking for new owners with incentives to sell the business to their own employees. This will keep great jobs and careers in Iowa and give Iowa communities an additional tool to promote local economic development.

Education Reform: this year the Legislature took a small, but important, step toward answering the call of the Branstad/Reynolds administration to provide transformational education reform. This year's effort includes enhanced annual teacher evaluations, competency tests for applicants to teacher preparation programs, and a major new early childhood literacy initiative that includes possible retention for those not reading at grade level by the end of 3rd grade.

Transparency: after languishing in the Legislature for years, Governor Branstad spearheaded the passage of landmark transparency legislation to create a Public Information Board (with true enforcement powers) that will significantly improve the transparency of state and local government and ensure the enforcement of our open records / open meetings laws.

Mental Health Redesign: no longer will the quality of Iowans access to mental health care services be dependent on where they live. This governor-led initiative will transform the delivery of mental health services across Iowa and ensure all Iowans have access to a standard and consistent core of essential services.

Modernize Services for the Aging: the Legislature adopted the Branstad/Reynolds administration's plan for a new regional service delivery model for our Area Agencies on Aging. This new model will significantly modernize and simplify the provision of services for Iowa's aging population.

Higher Education Funding: the governor requested, and the Legislature provided, additional funding for our Regents institutions (at a level that should alleviate the need for tuition increases beyond those already set), additional resources for our community colleges (much of which will be used to support the critical role community colleges play in developing a skilled workforce), and an additional $2 million for the state's tuition grant program (to help make private college opportunities affordable for more Iowa students).

Budget Predictability and Stability: the general fund budget adopted by the Legislature is at the level requested by the governor in his initial budget. This adopted budget keeps ongoing spending lower than ongoing revenue and spends only 97% of available revenue--well below the 99% limit as set in state law. In addition, this budget is estimated to result in full funding of our cash reserve fund, economic emergency fund, the taxpayer trust fund, and with a healthy carryover balance to meet all of the state's cash flow needs.

Iowa Economic Development Authority: totally redesigned the state economic development service delivery model with the creation of the new Iowa Economic Development Authority, the Iowa Innovation Council, and the Iowa Partnership for Economic Progress. With unemployment declining in Iowa in every month since this new model was deployed, Iowans are already seeing the benefits of the Branstad/Reynolds administration's job creation efforts.

Complete Overhaul of the State Budget: the $900 million inherited budget gap wherein one-time revenue was used to fund 89 different ongoing state programs was eliminated, a first step toward biennial budgeting was adopted and 86% of FY 13 expenses were approved a year early to provide enhanced predictability and stability for all those receiving and providing state services, the state fully funded its commitment to local school districts and eliminated a $216 million shortfall that had fallen onto the backs of property taxpayers, and the state's reserve accounts are fully funded.

Taxpayers paying for roads — twice

By Jeff Bingaman, Published: May 4

In a matter of weeks, Congress is likely to be scrambling to meet another deadline: once again deciding how long to extend a law that funds the maintenance of our nation's highways. When Congress does take up that bill, I hope that we decide to correct a flaw in the law that allows states to fleece federal taxpayers.

Here's the problem: In 1991 Congress set up formulas that calculate how much highway money states receive, based on population, traffic levels and the number of miles of highway within each state. These formulas were intended to reflect each state's need for federal funds. They have remained unchanged, even though a few states have decided to lease their publicly financed highways to private companies that take responsibility for operating or maintaining those highways.

For example, in 2006 the state of Indiana leased 157 miles of its 55-year-old publicly financed toll road to a Spanish-Australian joint-venture firm called the Indiana Toll Road Concession Co. Under the deal, Indiana received $3.8 billion in cash, upfront, and the concession company got the right to collect tolls on the road for the next 75 years; some of the tolls go toward maintenance, and others go straight to the company's bottom line. The state uses the upfront cash for anything it wants.

What this means is that the nation's drivers paid for the road with 55 years' worth of their tolls, and now they essentially have to buy it back.

Today Indiana has 157 fewer miles of highway the public is responsible for operating. One might assume its share of federal highway maintenance dollars would have been reduced to reflect the change. Not so. This year, Indiana received nearly $900 million in highway maintenance funds — the same amount it would have received had it never made the deal with the Indiana Toll Road Concession Co.

And if the funding formulas remain unchanged, it's possible that Indiana could lease all 1,200 miles of its interstate highways to a private company and still receive nearly $900 million each year from the highway fund.

Does this make sense? I don't think so.

To be sure, Indiana has not put forth a proposal to privatize all of its highway system. But that it could do so without losing federal highway funds illustrates the problem Congress needs to fix.

Like all members of Congress, I appreciate the need for additional transportation improvements to alleviate congestion and promote economic development. We need to invest in our nation's roads and bridges, which is one of the main reasons to pass a long-term highway bill. The current primary source of federal funding, fixed taxes on gasoline and diesel fuels, is increasingly inadequate to maintain transportation infrastructure. The combination of declining fuel sales and rising construction costs is adding tens of billions of dollars to the funding backlog needed to sustain a safe and efficient transportation network.

I also understand that, during these difficult economic times, states are struggling financially to meet the needs of their residents, and “selling off” a public asset for billions of dollars might be tempting.

But I don’t believe that states should be allowed to use their existing publicly funded highways as a virtual ATM, leaving the rest of this country’s drivers to foot the bill. Among Congress’s responsibilities is to be a good steward of federal tax dollars. That means we should not encourage the kind of short-term political expediency Indiana has relied upon.

The Senate approved a highway bill in March that contains an amendment I wrote to correct the funding formulas. Under the revised version, states would receive highway funding without including public roads that have been essentially “sold off.” That would mean states such as Ohio, which is considering privatizing its 60-year-old, 240-mile turnpike, would lose federal funding it no longer merits. House and Senate negotiators are working to finalize a highway bill, and I hope they include my amendment.

States should explore new and creative ways to invest in public infrastructure. There’s no doubt that the private sector could play a major role in that. I support existing federal incentives that promote building new roads, tunnels or lanes, such as the high-occupancy toll lanes that Virginia and private partners are constructing on the Capital Beltway.

But I do not believe states that privatize existing public roads should be allowed to get more than their fair share from the highway fund, at the expense of federal taxpayers in other states. Congress should eliminate this perverse incentive for states to turn over operation of critical existing highways to private companies.

Taxpayers paying for roads — twice

By Jeff Bingaman, Published: May 4

In a matter of weeks, Congress is likely to be scrambling to meet another deadline: once again deciding how long to extend a law that funds the maintenance of our nation's highways. When Congress does take up that bill, I hope that we decide to correct a flaw in the law that allows states to fleece federal taxpayers.

Here's the problem: In 1991 Congress set up formulas that calculate how much highway money states receive, based on population, traffic levels and the number of miles of highway within each state. These formulas were intended to reflect each state's need for federal funds. They have remained unchanged, even though a few states have decided to lease their publicly financed highways to private companies that take responsibility for operating or maintaining those highways.

For example, in 2006 the state of Indiana leased 157 miles of its 55-year-old publicly financed toll road to a Spanish-Australian joint-venture firm called the Indiana Toll Road Concession Co. Under the deal, Indiana received $3.8 billion in cash, upfront, and the concession company got the right to collect tolls on the road for the next 75 years; some of the tolls go toward maintenance, and others go straight to the company's bottom line. The state uses the upfront cash for anything it wants.

What this means is that the nation's drivers paid for the road with 55 years' worth of their tolls, and now they essentially have to buy it back.

Today Indiana has 157 fewer miles of highway the public is responsible for operating. One might assume its share of federal highway maintenance dollars would have been reduced to reflect the change. Not so. This year, Indiana received nearly $900 million in highway maintenance funds — the same amount it would have received had it never made the deal with the Indiana Toll Road Concession Co.

And if the funding formulas remain unchanged, it's possible that Indiana could lease all 1,200 miles of its interstate highways to a private company and still receive nearly $900 million each year from the highway fund.

Does this make sense? I don't think so.

To be sure, Indiana has not put forth a proposal to privatize all of its highway system. But that it could do so without losing federal highway funds illustrates the problem Congress needs to fix.

Like all members of Congress, I appreciate the need for additional transportation improvements to alleviate congestion and promote economic development. We need to invest in our nation's roads and bridges, which is one of the main reasons to pass a long-term highway bill. The current primary source of federal funding, fixed taxes on gasoline and diesel fuels, is increasingly inadequate to maintain transportation infrastructure. The combination of declining fuel sales and rising construction costs is adding tens of billions of dollars to the funding backlog needed to sustain a safe and efficient transportation network.

I also understand that, during these difficult economic times, states are struggling financially to meet the needs of their residents, and "selling off" a public asset for billions of dollars might be tempting.

But I don't believe that states should be allowed to use their existing publicly funded highways as a virtual ATM, leaving the rest of this country's drivers to foot the bill. Among Congress's responsibilities is to be a good steward of federal tax dollars. That means we should not encourage the kind of short-term political expediency Indiana has relied upon.

The Senate approved a highway bill in March that contains an amendment I wrote to correct the funding formulas. Under the revised version, states would receive highway funding without including public roads that have been essentially "sold off." That would mean states such as Ohio, which is considering privatizing its 60-year-old, 240-mile turnpike, would lose federal funding it no longer merits. House and Senate negotiators are working to finalize a highway bill, and I hope they include my amendment.

States should explore new and creative ways to invest in public infrastructure. There's no doubt that the private sector could play a major role in that. I support existing federal incentives that promote building new roads, tunnels or lanes, such as the high-occupancy toll lanes that Virginia and private partners are constructing on the Capital Beltway.

But I do not believe states that privatize existing public roads should be allowed to get more than their fair share from the highway fund, at the expense of federal taxpayers in other states. Congress should eliminate this perverse incentive for states to turn over operation of critical existing highways to private companies.

Marie,

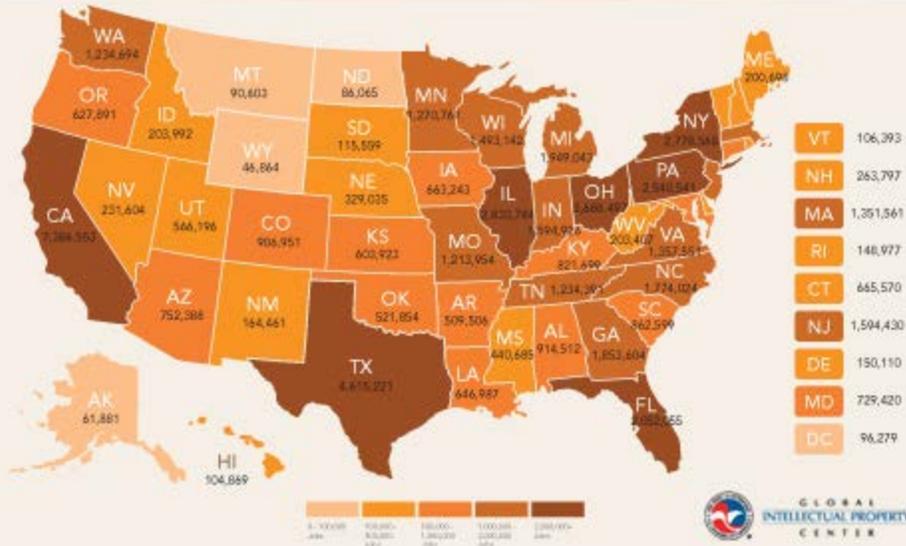

I am pleased to share with you a first-of-its-kind economic study, titled "IP Creates Jobs for America" from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Global Intellectual Property Center (GIPC). We have prepared this report to illustrate the widespread impact and importance of intellectual property as it relates to each state's jobs, economic growth and competitiveness. This study identifies the benefits of IP and the 55 million jobs directly and indirectly supported by IP-intensive industries as a significant driver of GDP, exports, and wages in every state of the Union.

To see the benefits of intellectual property in your specific state, please click HERE.

Would you be willing to push this out to Governors offices and their staff?

e) New EPA Legislation: Representative Ann Marie Buerkle will be introducing legislation which will empower states to resist EPA overreach onto our country's farms. In recent years, the EPA has been increasing its presence on American farms with an historic pace of rulemaking. Further regulations have been proposed and discussed stemming from the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, and the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act which are looming and could have disastrous impacts on our nation's agriculture industry. This legislation will allow states to opt-out its agriculture communities from compliance with these burdensome Federal mandates. The government needs to keep farmers in the business of farming, not busy achieving arbitrary compliances. See attachments. For more information or to offer support please contact: Matthew Satterley, 202-225-3701, Matthew.Satterley@mail.house.gov.

WHERE EACH STATE STANDS ON ACA'S MEDICAID EXPANSION

A roundup of what each state's leadership has said about their Medicaid plans

Last updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.

The Supreme Court's ruling on the Affordable Care Act (ACA) allows states to opt out of the law's Medicaid expansion, leaving each state's decision to participate in the hands of the nation's governors and state leaders.

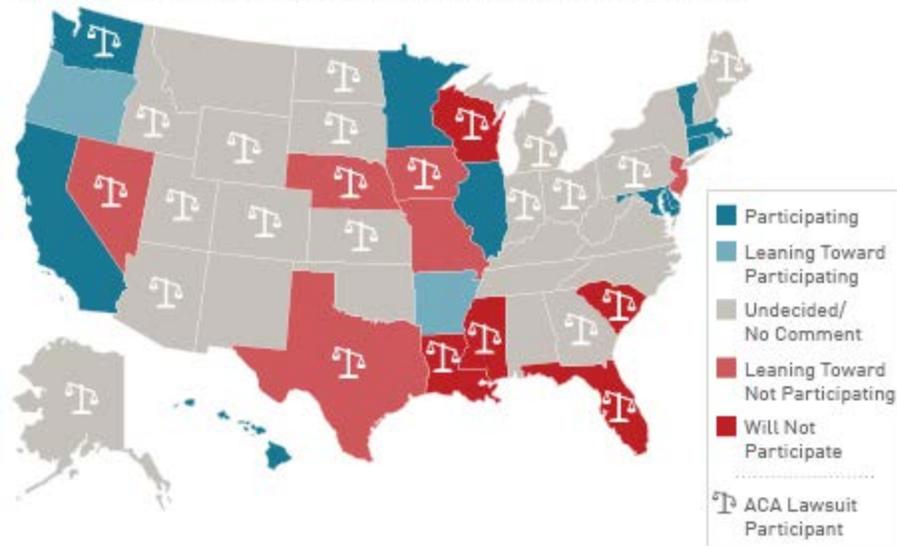

Based on lawmakers' statements, press releases, and media coverage, the Daily Briefing and American Health Line editorial teams have rounded up where each state currently stands on the expansion.

Learn more about the Court's ruling, discuss takeaways with our experts, and model the impact on your organization.

The following information was last updated on July 5 at 10:30 a.m. ET. We will continue to update this map and list as more information becomes available. Send us news, tips, and feedback by commenting below or emailing dailybriefing@advisory.com.

Will not participate (5 states)

- Florida: Gov. Rick Scott (R) said, “Florida will opt out of spending approximately $1.9 billion more taxpayer dollars required to implement a massive entitlement expansion of the Medicaid program.” In addition, the governor said the state will not establish an insurance exchange (Pear, New York Times, 7/2).
- Louisiana: In an interview on NBC’s “Meet the Press,” Gov. Bobby Jindal (R) said, “Every governor’s got two critical decisions to make. One is do we set up these exchanges. And, secondly, do we expand Medicaid. And, no, in Louisiana, we’re not doing either one of those things” (Barrow, New Orleans Times-Picayune, 7/2).
- Mississippi: Gov. Phil Bryant (R) does not plan to participate in the Medicaid expansion, according to Bryant spokesperson Mick Bullock, Bloomberg reports (Niquette/Wayne, Bloomberg, 7/5).
- South Carolina: Gov. Nikki Haley (R) on Sunday announced via Facebook that South Carolina “will NOT expand Medicaid, or participate in any health exchanges” (Hawkins, TheDigitalCharleston, 7/2; Dudley, Charleston Post and Courier, 6/29).

- Wisconsin: Gov. Scott Walker (R) issued a statement following Thursday's ruling saying that "Wisconsin will not take any action to implement ObamaCare" (Office of Gov. Walker release, 6/28; Radnofsky et al., Wall Street Journal, 7/2).

Leaning toward not participating (6 states)

- Iowa: Gov. Terry Branstad (R) announced at a Des Moines news conference that while his staff is still assessing the Supreme Court ruling on the ACA, he expects to forgo the federal funding that would allow an estimated 150,000 low-income Iowans to enroll in the state Medicaid program. Branstad said, "Here's the problem: The federal government has done this again and again: 'Buy into our program, and we're going to do all these things for you,' and then it doesn't happen, and then the taxpayers of the state get stuck with it," Branstad said on Monday (Totland, Washington Times, 7/2; Wiser, Waterloo Cedar Falls Courier, 7/3).
- Missouri: Moments after the ruling, Republican leaders in Missouri "closed the door... on expanding Medicaid eligibility," the Associated Press reports. Republican Lt. Gov. Peter Kinder said the Medicaid expansion would be "a break-the-bank provision for the state of Missouri." House Budget Committee Chair Ryan Silvey (R), said, "I just don't see any way we will be expanding Medicaid at the expense of things like education and public safety." By rejecting Medicaid expansion the state would be "turning down an estimated $8.4 billion windfall from the federal government" but could save up to "$431 million of its own" (Blank, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28; Crisp, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, 7/1).
- Nebraska: Gov. Dave Heineman (R) on June 28 pledged to block any effort to expanded Nebraska's Medicaid program, telling reporters that an expansion would remove money from other priorities or require a tax increase, AP/BloombergBusinessweek reports. In a statement on his website, Heineman said, "As I have said repeatedly, if this unfunded Medicaid expansion is implemented, state aid to education and funding for the University of Nebraska will be cut or taxes will be increased. If some state senators want to increase taxes or cut education funding, I will oppose them." However, the governor noted that the Supreme Court's decision on Medicaid was unexpected, adding, "Again, I want to emphasize that reviewing this decision in a detailed, thoughtful and responsible manner will take time before a complete determination can be made on what this ruling means for Nebraska” (Schulte, AP/BloombergBusinessWeek, 6/29; Heineman statement, 6/28).

- Nevada: After the Supreme Court ruling, Gov. Brian Sandoval (R) said the impact of the decision on was not immediately clear but indicated that he is leaning toward not expanding the state’s Medicaid program. Sandoval’s press secretary, Mary-Sarah Kinner, said in a statement, “The governor does not intend to automatically accept the Medicaid expansion” (Haynes et al., Las Vegas Review-Journal, 6/28).
- New Jersey: on Fox News’ “Fox and Friends” on July 3, Gov. Chris Christie (R) said he is leaning toward not accepting federal funding to expand the state’s Medicaid program. He noted, “Medicaid is pretty well expanded in our state already because of the legacy of previous Democratic governors. So I don’t know if there’s a lot more to do in New Jersey in that regard” (“Fox News Insider,” Fox News, 7/3; San Francisco Chronicle, 7/3; Friedman, Newark Star-Ledger, 7/3).
- Texas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Lucy Nashed—deputy press secretary for Gov. Rick Perry (R)—said Perry will be working with Attorney General Greg Abbott (R) “and appropriate state agencies to determine the impact of the Supreme Court decision on the state of Texas,” adding that “the governor has previously made clear, he has no interest in fast tracking any portion of this bankrupting and overreaching legislation. We will continue to call for the full repeal of the bill” (Nashed email, 7/5). [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]

Leaning toward participating (3 states)

- Arkansas: Gov. Mike Beebe (D) said he is inclined to proceed with Medicaid expansion for his state given the “opportunity to pay for it with taxes that are coming from ... the federal government,” he said at a news conference in Washington, D.C. “I don’t want to send [tax money] to Massachusetts or California and ignore our own people,” he added (Lyon, Arkansas News, 7/2).
- Oregon: Gov. John Kitzhaber (D) said he is confident that the Oregon legislature will approve a state Medicaid expansion, and State Sen. Alan Bates (D) has expressed similar confidence, the Associated Press reports. In an interview last week, Kitzhaber said, “We’ll make a decision on whether or not to expand the Medicaid program really based on, I think, the resources we have available in the general fund for that purpose going forward” (Budnick, The Oregonian, 7/3; Wong, Statesman Journal, 6/28; Cooper, AP/Real Clear Politics, 6/28).

- Rhode Island: In statement on his website, Gov. Lincoln Chaffee (I) said, “I have fully committed to ensuring Rhode Island is a national leader in implementing health reform whatever the Supreme Court decision, and this just reinforces that commitment.” According to Steven Costantino, the state’s secretary of health and human services, “The expansion is easy to do and makes sense” (Chaffee statement, 6/28; Radnofsky et al., Wall Street Journal, 7/2).

Participating (10 states and District of Columbia)

- California: California got a head start on expanding its Medicaid program in November 2010, shortly after Obama signed the Affordable Care Act into law. After the high court’s ruling, Gov. Jerry Brown (D) issued a statement, “Today’s dramatic Supreme Court ruling removes the last roadblock to fulfilling President Obama’s historic plan to bring health care to millions of uninsured citizens.” Duane Dauner, president of the California Hospital Association, said in separate statement that he expects “California will comply with the Medicaid expansion in the law, even though it will increase the state’s costs in future years” (Office of Gov. Brown release, 6/28; California Hospital Association release, 7/3).
- Connecticut: Gov. Dannel Malloy (D) was among the first to sign his state up for Medicaid expansion when Obama signed the law in 2010. Following the Supreme Court’s ruling preserving the legislation, he responded, “it’s great ... [and a] very important decision for the people of Connecticut. 500,000 people would have lost coverage if Republicans had their way” (Davis, WTNH, 7/28).
- Delaware: Gov. Jack Markell—chair of the Democratic Governors Association—said in a statement, “The Supreme Court’s ruling enables Delaware to continue to implement provisions of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to provide access to health care benefits for Delawareans,” adding, “On the Medicaid front, Delaware already voluntarily expanded the state’s Medicaid coverage program in 1996 to cover many Delawareans not previously covered” (Office of Gov. Markell release, 6/28).

- District of Columbia: “The District is not at risk of losing any Medicaid funding as a result of this ruling, because District officials have already begun implementation of the ACA’s Medicaid-expansion provisions and will continue to implement the expansion,” according to a statement from the office of D.C. Mayor Vincent Gray (D) (Executive Office of the Mayor release, 6/28).
- Hawaii: Gov. Neil Abercrombie (D) said in a statement after the ruling, “The Affordable Care Act is our ally” in the effort to “support a healthcare system that ensures high quality, safety and sustainable costs.” Pat McManaman, the state’s director of the Department of Human Services, said starting next month Hawaii’s Medicaid eligibility requirements will be in line with federal guidelines under the overhaul, meaning an additional 24,000 people will be eligible for the program by 2014 (Office of Gov. Abercrombie release, 6/28; Garcia, AP/CBS News, 6/29).
- Illinois: Gov. Pat Quinn (D) on Thursday praised the court’s decision and said he “will continue to work with President Obama to help working families get the healthcare coverage they need,” including expanding Medicaid (Office of the Governor release, 6/28; Thomason, Rock River Times, 7/3).
- Maryland: Gov. Martin O’Malley (D) in a statement said the Supreme Court’s decision “gives considerable momentum to our health care reform efforts here in Maryland,” adding that the state will move forward to implement the overhaul (Office of the Governor release, 6/28).
- Massachusetts: Gov. Deval Patrick (D) said Massachusetts is “an early expansion state as you know and we’re expecting further resources from federal government to sustain the experiment here in Massachusetts.” Patrick said the ruling is “good news for us” Patrick said (Walker, YNN, 6/28).
- Minnesota: “Today’s ruling will be met with relief by the Minnesotans whose lives have already been improved by this law,” Gov. Mark Dayton (D) said in a statement on Thursday. Dayton in 2011 used federal money to expand Medicaid early to 84,000 adults with annual incomes below $8,400 (Lohn, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).

- Vermont: Gov. Peter Shumlin (D) said Vermont's Medicaid program already meets the requirements under the health reform law's Medicaid expansion, WCAX reports (Steimle, WCAX, 7/1).
- Washington: Gov. Chris Gregoire (D) "supports the Medicaid expansion—and Washington will move forward," Karina Shagren—a deputy communications director in Gregoire's administration—said in an email to American Health Line (Shagren email, 7/5).
[updated on July 5 at 1:35 p.m.]

Undecided/no comment (26 states)

- Alabama: As of June 29, Gov. Robert Bentley (R) had not decided whether Alabama will opt out of the Medicaid expansion, according to Jennifer Ardis, Bentley's press secretary, AP/CBS News reports. In a statement on his website, Bentley said, "I am deeply disappointed by today's Supreme Court decision," but he did not address the court's ruling on the Medicaid expansion (AP/CBS News, 6/29; Bentley statement, 6/28).
- Alaska: As of Tuesday, Gov. Sean Parnell (R) has not made a statement regarding Alaska's intent to participate in the Medicaid expansion, only saying in a release that "now with no penalty we need to rethink what we're going to do with Medicaid" and the "expansion costs that are mandated" (Office of Gov. Parnell release, 6/28; Coyne, Alaska Dispatch, 7/1).
- Arizona: Gov. Jan Brewer (R) in a statement following the Supreme Court ruling repeated her call for the entire law to be repealed but did not directly address the expansion. House Speaker Andy Tobin (R), however, said budgetary issues in the state and a conservative political climate will make expanding Medicaid difficult. "We're going to have to sit down and weigh carefully what is reasonable to expect of our political leaders," he said. "I don't see us going along with the expansion if it's not mandated," Tobin added. "It's an ever-expanding cost, so it continues to put pressure on the state budget when we're barely recovering as it is" (Brewer statement, 6/28; Reinhart, Arizona Central, 6/28; Young, Huffington Post, 7/2).
- Colorado: Gov. John Hickenlooper (D) at a press conference on June 28 gave only a lukewarm nod to the Medicaid expansion. He said, "Well, we'll see. We're certainly looking at that. We're probably a little bit premature, but we're certainly looking at it and trying to figure out a way we can do that and still live within our means" (McCrimmon, Health Policy Solutions, 7/2; AP/CBS' "Moneywatch," 6/29).

- Georgia: As of July 2, Gov. Nathan Deal (R) had not yet decided whether Georgia would opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Chattanooga Times Free Press reports. Over 10 years, the expansion is projected to cost Georgia about $4.5 billion, "money we don't have," Deal spokesperson Brian Robinson said (Sher, Chattanooga Times Free Press, 7/2).
- Idaho: Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter (R) this week did not indicate his preference on whether Idaho would widen Medicaid coverage (AP/KTVB, 7/1; Messick, StateImpact Idaho, 6/29).
- Indiana: In a press release Gov. Mitch Daniels (R) said, "Any decision to expand Medicaid in 2014 is entirely the province of the next General Assembly and governor." On Thursday Daniels told reporters "If it's optional as I'm advised that it is, that'll be a decision for future legislators to make" (Office of Gov. Daniels release, 6/29; AP/Lafayette Journal and Courier, 7/2; "Moneywatch," AP/CBS News, 6/29; Wilson, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Kansas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Sherriene Jones-Sontag—communications director and press secretary for Gov. Sam Brownback (R)—said Brownback believes "this is now a political issue that will be resolved by the American people in the November elections" and "he will wait until after the November elections before making any decisions related to ObamaCare." [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]
- Kentucky: Gov. Steve Beshear (D) on June 28 said, "We continue to review the Supreme Court's opinion, particularly on the Medicaid portion of the Affordable Care Act to determine what our options may be." He also noted that he soon would issue an executive order to create a health insurance exchange (Office of Gov. Beshear release, 6/28; AP/Evansville Courier & Press, 6/28).
- Maine: Gov. Paul LePage (R) said in a statement on June 28, "It is a sad day, and it is now up to the American people to demand full repeal of Obamacare." The governor did not directly address the Medicaid expansion in his statement. The state Legislature and LePage approved reductions in Medicaid spending earlier this year, and Maine Department of Health and Human Services Commissioner Mary Mayhew said the state “will follow federal procedures and submit state plan amendments within the coming weeks that will outline the Medicaid reductions that were enacted by the Maine Legislature” (Office of Gov. LePage release, 6/28; Farwel, Bangor Daily News/Lewiston Sun Journal, 6/29).

- Michigan: As of July 1, Gov. Rick Snyder (R) had not decided to whether Michigan will opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Lansing State Journal reports. Snyder spokesperson Sara Wurfel said the administration wants to examine the cost of the expansion to assess the “best course of action” for the state. Meanwhile, Republican lawmakers, who control both chambers of the state legislature, have not committed to the expansion (Davis, Lansing State Journal, 7/1).
- Montana: Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer (D), through a spokeswoman, declined to comment on the court’s decision. Schweitzer expressed deep reservations about the Medicaid expansion and effect on Montana’s budget. “Here’s what I know,” Schweitzer in February 2011 said, “that unless we challenge the underlying costs of health care ... it will bankrupt the states because there’s no way of decreasing the cost of health care under the current system” (Dennison, Gazette State Bureau, 6/28; Drake, Montana Watchdog, 7/2).
- New Hampshire: As of July 1, Gov. John Lynch (D)—who in the past has voiced concern over how the government would pay for the Medicaid expansion—had made no statement on whether New Hampshire would opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Nashua Telegraph reports. In a June 28 statement on his website, Lynch noted that the state has “been preparing to implement the Affordable Care Act and will continue doing so in a way that best fits New Hampshire” (Landrigan, Nashua Telegraph, 7/1; Lynch statement, 6/28).
- New Mexico: Gov. Susana Martinez (R) has not decided whether the state will expand Medicaid, according to spokesperson Scott Darnell. He said, “The governor is reviewing today’s Supreme Court decision and will proceed in a manner that best protects the safety net for the most vulnerable New Mexicans in a responsible and sustainable manner” (Massey, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).

- New York: As of July 2, Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) had not made a statement on whether New York would participate in the Medicaid expansion. In a release last week, the governor said, “I am pleased the Supreme Court upheld this law,” adding that he looked forward to working with the “Obama administration to ensure accessible, quality care for all New Yorkers (Office of Gov. Cuomo release, 6/28; The Journal News, 6/29; Caruso, San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- North Carolina: As of July 3, Gov. Beverly Perdue (D) had not made any public statement about her state’s participation in the Medicaid expansion. However, in a statement responding to the Supreme Court’s decision, Perdue said she is “committed to continuing to move forward ... to ensure that all North Carolinians have affordable, reliable health coverage.” Meanwhile, a spokesperson for Perdue said the governor has been in contact with HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius about the Medicaid expansion and will review the Supreme Court’s ruling to determine how it might affect North Carolina (Office of Gov. Perdue release, 6/28; Dalesio, CBS News, 6/28; Jarvis/Bonner, Winston-Salem Journal, 6/29).
- North Dakota: As of Tuesday, Gov. Jack Dalrymple (R) had not made a statement about his state’s intent to participate in the Medicaid expansion. However, in a statement responding to the Supreme Court’s ruling, Dalrymple said the health reform law “is wrong for North Dakota,” adding that its “citizens want the freedom to make their own decisions about their health-care coverage.” Dalrymple has said that his staff is analyzing the court’s ruling, but it is unclear whether the state will participate in the Medicaid (Office of Gov. Dalrymple release, 6/28; MacPherson, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Ohio: Gov. John Kasich (R) on Monday said he has not decided whether his state will participate in the Medicaid expansion and he does not plan to set a “deadline” to make his decision. The head of the state’s Office of Health Transformation also said the state must first determine how to cover the additional Medicaid costs the state would incur even if the state does not participate in the expansion. In a statement on the Supreme Court’s ruling, Kasich said, “We are very concerned that a sudden, dramatic increase in Medicaid spending could threaten Ohio’s ability to pursue needed reforms in other areas” (Office of Gov. Kasich release, 6/28; Tribble, Cleveland Plain Dealer, 7/2; Columbus Business First, 7/3; Candisky, Columbus Dispatch, 7/3).

- Oklahoma: Gov. Mary Fallin (R) has not yet decided whether Oklahoma will opt of the Medicaid expansion, Tulsa World reports. Fallin said, “Certainly I am hoping that we’ll elect a new president and we’ll be able to change faces ... in the (Democratic-controlled) U.S. Senate that we can once and for all overturn the federal health care bill” (McNutt, The Oklahoman, 6/29; Greene, Tulsa World, 7/3; McGuigan, Tulsa Today, 7/2).
- Pennsylvania: Gov. Tom Corbett (R) has not yet announced whether Pennsylvania will opt out of the Medicaid expansion. He said in a statement, “I think we can all agree there are Pennsylvanians who need our help. However, expanding government bureaucracy, government programs and government spending is not the answer” (Office of the Gov. Corbett release, 6/28, LoBasso, PhillyNow,” Philadelphia Weekly, 7/3).
- South Dakota: South Dakota: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Joe Kafka—press secretary in Gov. Dennis Daugaard’s (R) administration—said Daugaard “has made no decision on [the] Medicaid expansion, which will be costly for South Dakota, and he won’t make any decision on it until after the election” (Kafka email, 7/5). [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]
- Tennessee: As of July 2, Gov. Bill Haslam (R) had not yet decided whether Tennessee would opt out of the Medicaid expansion. After the Supreme Court ruling, Haslam told reporters, “We don’t really know what we’re going to do ... but the cost impact to the state is very significant” (Sher, Chattanooga Times Free Press, 7/2).
- Utah: Gov. Gary Herbert (R) said is administration is conducting a thorough legal and policy review of the Supreme Court ruling, but he did not comment on whether the state would expand its Medicaid program (Stewart, Salt Lake Tribune, 6/29; AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Virginia: Gov. Bob McDonnell (R) has made statements indicating that he is against the Medicaid expansion, but has declined at this point to comment definitively on whether Virginia will opt out of it. McDonnell said he will review the state’s options in the upcoming weeks (Martz, Richmond Times-Dispatch, 7/1; Millman, Politico, 6/29).

- West Virginia: Gov. Earl Ray Tomblin (D) has not yet announced whether West Virginia will proceed with the Medicaid expansion. In a statement, Tomblin said, “We know what the law is but as I’ve said before, I will continue to do what is best for West Virginia... We’re going to review the Supreme Court’s ruling, and work with our federal delegation on how we move forward” (Smith, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28; Office of Gov. Tomblin statement, 6/28).
- Wyoming: Gov. Matt Mead (R) in a statement said he will study the Supreme Court’s ruling and the health reform law more carefully before making any implementation plans for Wyoming, but he believes “the ACA is not a good fit” for the state (Office of Gov. Mead release, 6/28; Wolfson, Billings Gazette, 6/28).

July 10, 2012

The Honorable Barack Obama
President of the United States
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear President Obama:

On June 28 the United States Supreme Court ruled in National Federation of Independent Business vs. Sebelius that the Medicaid expansion provisions in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) were unconstitutionally coercive of state sovereignty.

Despite the ruling which upheld the individual mandate as a tax, we have written before and continue to maintain that the PPACA remains seriously flawed both conceptually and technically. It favors dependency over personal responsibility and will ultimately destroy the private insurance market. In its current form, the law will increase health care costs and likely lead to the disruption or discontinuation of millions of Americans' insurance plans. The new federal subsidies anticipated that enable exchanges are unaffordable given the crushing federal budget deficits and record national debt, and states cannot afford significant Medicaid expansions. For most governors, Medicaid growth even before PPACA, was exorbitant, and consuming an even larger share of state budgets.

Three years ago, you correctly told Senate Democrats, "[a]s we move forward on health reform, it is not sufficient for us to simply add more people to Medicare or Medicaid to increase the rolls, to increase coverage in the absence of cost controls and reform. And let me repeat this principle: If we don't get control over costs, then it is going to be very difficult for us to expand coverage. These two things go hand in hand. Another way of putting it is we can't simply put more people into a broken system that doesn't work."

Unfortunately, that is precisely what has been done—PPACA, if implemented by the states, would put more people, 16-20 million individuals, into a broken Medicaid system. Three years ago, you stated clearly that would be a mistake. We fully agree. Today, states have less flexibility over the administration of the program, even though some states pay a share of the cost equal to that of the federal government. Governors of both parties, who are the primary managers of Medicaid delivery in our states, were not invited to engage in meaningful dialogue with your administration in 2010 when the PPACA was drafted-- and ultimately passed--- on a party-line vote.

We are still waiting for the real tools and flexibility we need to reform Medicaid and lower costs as you promised. Last year, Republican governors stressed the need to reform Medicaid, and we put forward 31 specific policy ideas to achieve that goal. We sent you and the Congressional leadership the detailed plan documents to craft such reforms. Since we received virtually no response from you, we are enclosing another copy for your team to review. We now renew our call for Medicaid reform.

PPACA uses Medicaid as the vehicle for expansion because it would be cheaper for the federal government through cost-shifting to the states. Despite promises of higher federal matches for the expansion populations, we also cannot ignore the policies proposed by your Administration that would cut the enhanced match rate for newly eligibles.

While overall spending on health care has slowed, the cost of health care has not. Spending has slowed, but for the wrong reason—the lingering recession that has cost jobs and thus lost health coverage. According to the most recent federal government projections, the number of individuals without health insurance will have increased from 42.7 million in 2008 to 48.6 million in 2013.

While we continue to believe the best option is to fully repeal and replace the PPACA, states now confront numerous deadlines and face major policy decisions in the wake of the Supreme Court decision. Before making any final policy decisions, governors must carefully consider the short and long-term implications of an expanded entitlement program and the consequences of significantly increasing the size of government to manage these programs.

The states' burden of the expansion population as well as administrative costs remains significant. Increased spending on Medicaid crowds out resources available to states to spend on other meaningful priorities like education, the environment, public safety and infrastructure.

Moreover, even before increasing the Medicaid-eligible population as prescribed by PPACA, Medicaid has been on an unsustainable path, comprising a growing share of state budgets every year. It is difficult to see how expanding Medicaid without reform would do anything other than put more strain on state budgets and the taxpayers, especially when considering that many pernicious provisions that curtail state flexibility remain.

While the Supreme Court decision focused on the states' role in determining whether a Medicaid expansion is in the best interest of its citizens, states also face other PPACA-related decisions, like whether to establish a state based health-insurance exchange or accept the default of a federal exchange. As the exchange issue is currently interpreted, states are essentially being tasked with shouldering all the responsibility without any authority.

If states determine that a Medicaid expansion is not in the best interests of its citizens, it is likely that there will be a significant gap in coverage for low-income individuals who do not qualify for tax credits. We believe it is incumbent upon the authors of PPACA and your Administration to detail precisely how you intend to address this situation.

We also believe that it is unlikely that the federal government will have fully functional exchanges in place by the fall of 2013 in order for millions of Americans to be able to purchase coverage beginning January 2014. We respectfully request the Administration provide the detailed work plan that demonstrates these deadlines will be met. If they cannot be met, the responsible course would be for HHS to level with us and the American people. We also do not understand how the federal government can begin to afford to implement PPACA, with deficits already over $1 trillion in every year of your presidency, and the debt growing $5 trillion in the past 3 years to an outrageous record of nearly $16 trillion.

The consequences of governors' decisions will impact our states – and the nation – for decades to come, so we must have all the information needed to choose wisely. We have taken the liberty of compiling below just some of the critical questions that must have answers before states can determine best how to proceed in light of the Court's decision. We undertake this task with a sense of great responsibility, and resolve to only move forward when we have full and complete knowledge of all the implications of our decision.

Healthcare Exchanges:

- 1) Please provide a complete list of regulations that will have to be reviewed, revised and re-opened for public comment prior to implementation as a result of the Supreme Court ruling (e.g., the Medicaid eligibility regulations, exchange regulations related to interface with Medicaid)? What is the schedule for re-issuing these regulations?

- 2) When will either additional guidance or actual rules be issued on essential health benefits, actuarial value and rating areas be issued?
- 3) The federal government has already extended deadlines for applying for Level 1 and Level 2 Exchange Establishment funding into 2014. Can we expect extensions of the deadlines for implementation given the uncertainty caused by the Supreme Court ruling and the linkage between Medicaid expansion and exchange eligibility and enrollment functions? In addition, will the deadlines change for states implementing a partnership exchange? Will the deadlines be extended for states implementing a federal exchange?
- 4) When will the details of the federal partnership options be available? These cannot be considered as an option without details including cost estimates. How will the long term funding of the federally-facilitated healthcare exchanges be sustained?
- 5) States considering a state-based exchange need to know whether there will be a charge and by how much to use the federal data hub, advance premium tax credit/cost-sharing reduction service, risk adjustment and transitional reinsurance programs.
- 6) When will states learn the details of the operational systems for a federal exchange? The procedural, technical, and architectural requirements for linking to the federal exchange have not been released. It is not feasible to know if a state-based exchange is better for our citizens until we know what the contents of a federal exchange will be. Taking grant money at this time for state exchange creation may be wasted if a federal exchange makes more sense for a particular state.
- 7) When will information from the establishment of a federal exchange be available for states to use if a state opts to build its own exchange? It is costly for each state to have to start from scratch and still not know how interfaces will work.
- 8) If states choose to build a state-based exchange, what dollars will the federal government contribute now and in the future? For the federal exchange states, when will the regulations regarding the imposition of taxes on a state's insurers be released?
- 9) It has been widely reported that Congressional leaders who have to appropriate money will seek to defund exchanges. Please explain how the enactment provisions of the law allow the Executive Branch to continue to fund exchanges without Congressional action to appropriate money.

- 10) What happens to a state that has taken exchange planning and implementation grants if their exchange is not financially viable after 2015? Can a state refuse to increase taxes on either its residents or insurers, thus putting the financial underpinning of an exchange at risk? What penalties does the federal government envision in this case?
- 11) What happens if a state accepts grant money now to begin to build a state exchange, and subsequently determines that a federal exchange may be better? Will the federal government claw back these grant dollars from the states?
- 12) What impact will changes to the Medicaid expansion have on exchange implementation? The federal exchange is currently structured to provide Medicaid eligibility determination. How will this work if some states participate and others do not?
- 13) Last month the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) pointed out a provision in the law that reduces exchange subsidies after 2018, which means fewer and fewer people will qualify for subsidies, and the people who do qualify will get a smaller and smaller subsidy. Does the Administration support that change, and if so, how would you pay for it? If you do not, why do you think people should be forced to buy insurance if federal subsidies are shrinking?
- 14) CMS has released 90/10 funding under ARRA and HITECH in order for states to improve their eligibility systems for Medicaid and other social service programs. Will that funding continue?
- 15) Alongside the considerable challenge of greatly expanding the Medicaid program, states are charged by the PPACA with creating a single, seamless point of entry for all of the insurance affordability programs affected by the Act--Medicaid, the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP), the Basic Health Plan (where offered), advance tax credits for individual and Small Business Health Options Program (SHOP) exchange enrollees. This leaves another major question on the table. What about all of the other social service programs? Will states still be able to create an eligibility system for all social service programs under the 90/10 funding mechanism?
- 16) In order to minimize disruptions to a state's insurance market, The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) is required to certify multi-state plans that must be included in every exchange, when will the rules be released detailing the requirements and timeline for multi-state plans. How OPM structures these rules can be very disruptive to a state's insurance market.

- 17) Does the federal government intend to maintain high risk pools and how will they be financed? What actions will they take in a state that has opted not to operate a high risk pool or an exchange?

Medicaid

- 1) When can we expect to receive updated guidance on Medicaid expansion and related topics?
- 2) Is there a deadline for letting the federal government know if a state will be participating in the Medicaid expansion? How does that relate to the exchange declaration deadline? The two programs are currently scheduled to be implemented simultaneously in January 2014.
- 3) Will states that expand Medicaid coverage up to a level below 138% of the federal poverty level (FPL), for example up to 100% of FPL, still receive the enhanced federal medical assistance percentage (FMAP) available for “newly covered” populations?
- 4) Will states be allowed to phase in Medicaid coverage up to 138% of FPL (or 100% FPL) years after 2013 and still receive the enhanced FMAP?
- 5) Does the MOE requirement apply to the expansion population or does it apply only to the current Medicaid population? If a state accepts the expansion, but the federal match goes away, can we drop out of the expansion program? Will you waive the MOE under your 1115 waiver authority? What will be the penalties for failure to comply with MOE requirements? Since the MOE was a direct result of the expansion funding, if a state chooses not to expand is the MOE no longer effective?
- 6) Regarding the two year increase in Medicaid reimbursement for primary care codes, are you going to extend it? If so, how are you going to pay for it? Congressional Republicans have expressed opposition to any funded for PPACA.
- 7) Will states still be required to convert their income counting methodology to MAGI for purposes of determining eligibility regardless of whether they expand to the optional adult group? If so, how do states link the categorical eligibility criteria to the MAGI? How will the federal exchanges utilize the state’s criteria?
- 8) If a state expanded Medicaid through a waiver prior to enactment of the PPACA, but then chooses not to expand coverage further, are they still eligible for the 75% to 90% enhanced FMAP for the previously expanded population?

- 9) Will the federal government support options for the Medicaid expansion population that encourage personal responsibility – cost sharing or accountability provisions, the use of high deductible plans such as Health Savings Accounts, and other options at the state’s choice?
- 10) What specific plans and timeline do you have for enacting the reforms and flexibility options for Medicaid that you spoke of in 2009? When can states give further input on the needed reforms?
- 11) You have stated that you will not deport undocumented aliens who have not committed a crime. You have also said that these undocumented aliens will be exempt from the individual mandate. How will the state be reimbursed for medical services given to these individuals?
- 12) Will CMS approve global waivers with an aggregate allotment, state flexibility, and accountability if states are willing to initiate a portion of the expansion?
- 13) The Disproportionate Share allotments will be reduced every year with a methodology based in the reduction in the number of uninsured. One, when will HHS issue the regulations and methodology for this reduction? Two, for a state that does not see a decrease in its uninsured population will the remaining state absorb the full reduction? In addition, can a state implement a new DSH Diversion program as part of the optional expansion? Can a state implement new DSH Diversion programs for services to the uninsured/uncompensated care services?

There will inevitably be more questions that will arise as additional guidance flows from your Administration. With just 18 months until the anticipated implementation date of PPACA, we would appreciate prompt answers.

Thank you for your attention to this important matter facing states and the country. We look forward to learning from your responses.

Sincerely,

Governor Bob McDonnell, RGA Chairman
Commonwealth of Virginia

Subject: A Fanciful, But Inaccurate, Premium Support Study
Date: Monday, October 15, 2012 1:23:08 PM

The Kaiser Family Foundation released a study today regarding premium support proposals, which Democrats have used to attack Medicare reform. However, the study is an academic exercise that, by the authors' own admission, bears little relation to reality. First and foremost, the study assumes full implementation of premium support in 2010. This assumption is particularly problematic, given the many changes that have taken place in Medicare Advantage since then:

- Obamacare enacted more than \$300 billion in cuts to Medicare Advantage – part of the law's \$716 billion in Medicare reductions overall;
- The Administration came up with a $8 billion demonstration program – one of questionable merit – to offset the impact of Obamacare's cuts until after the 2012 elections; and
- Private fee-for-service (PFFS) plans have all-but-disappeared from the marketplace, due to legislative changes; the study admits that “many PFFS plans have exited the market” since the data for the study were compiled in 2010, but doesn't attempt to model the impact of this significant change.

In other words, by using a 2010 implementation date, the Kaiser study ignores entirely the impact of the biggest changes to both Medicare and Medicare Advantage since the programs were created. Moreover, the study assumes a “Big Bang” model, whereby all the changes to Medicare would take place at once – even though it admits that most proposals being discussed “would gradually phase-in a premium support system in five to ten years,” allowing changes to be implemented in a way that prevents drastic adjustments.

Three other important things you need to know about the Kaiser study:

1. The study does not do a good job delineating two separate and distinct phenomena: costs due to disparities between traditional Medicare and Medicare Advantage, and costs due to disparities within traditional Medicare itself. To use one common example, traditional Medicare's spending is far greater in metropolitan Miami than in many areas in the upper Midwest (for instance, Wisconsin). Yet under current law, all enrollees in traditional Medicare pay the same Part B premium nationwide – meaning that right now, seniors in Wisconsin pay higher Part B premiums that subsidize higher levels of spending in Miami. The premium support proposal modeled by Kaiser would eliminate this disparity – meaning that under the study, premiums in traditional Medicare would rise substantially in Miami, to reflect that area's much higher spending. Critics would argue these higher premiums demonstrate the flaws of the premium support model. But in reality, that's not an argument against premium support – that's an argument against the status quo in traditional Medicare, under which high-cost areas have had their spending subsidized by low-cost regions for far too long.
2. The study does not fully model the ability of plan switching to reduce costs. The headline figure about the number of individuals who would pay more to maintain their current coverage presumes that beneficiaries would not switch plans at all – not a realistic assumption under most scenarios. And the study also assumes that low-income individuals would not automatically be assigned to a low-cost plan – current practice in Medicare Part D. In short, the Kaiser study under-estimates both the impact that beneficiary choices and structural design could be used to facilitate enrollment in lower-cost premium support plans.

3. At no point does the study even attempt to quantify potential budgetary savings from premium support. The study goes to great lengths to outline the higher costs, but doesn't make any estimate about the savings to the federal government from such a reform – or how it would improve Medicare's long-term solvency. In other words, the study focuses solely on pain to beneficiaries – without examining the gains to Medicare's sustainability.

The Obama campaign's response to the study – claiming that seniors “would have to give up their doctors or pay extra to maintain access to their choices” – is particularly rich. Mind you, this claim comes from an Administration that will force millions of seniors out of their Medicare Advantage plans – not to save Medicare, but to fund Obamacare instead. It's yet another example of why Medicare needs real reform – and why this Administration is both unwilling and unable to deliver on it.

The President will be speaking in Osawatomie, Kansas, tomorrow, and the White House claimed the President chose the location to commemorate a speech by Theodore Roosevelt at the same spot just over a century ago. Unfortunately for the current President, however, observers have noted that President Roosevelt's 1910 address in Osawatomie included the following lines:

A broken promise is bad enough in private life. It is worse in the field of politics. No man is worth his salt in public life who makes on the stump a pledge which he does not keep after election; and, if he makes such a pledge and does not keep it, hunt him out of public life.

It is with those comments by Teddy Roosevelt in mind that we deliver the following reminders about this President's recent history of breaking his campaign pledges on health care:

Promise Made, Promise Broken – “If You Like Your Plan, You Can Keep It:” The Obama campaign platform promised that “you will not have to change plans. For those who have insurance now, nothing will change under the Obama plan – except that you will pay less.” But the Administration's own estimates revealed that Obamacare's onerous regulations will force most firms – and up to 80 percent of small businesses – to give up their current plans, thus subjecting them to costly new mandates that will increase premiums. Millions more seniors will lose access to the Medicare Advantage plans they have and like.

Promise Made, Promise Broken – Cut Premiums by $2,500 per Family: Candidate Obama promised to cut insurance premiums by an average of \$2,500 per family, but in reality the legislation he signed into law will result in massive premium increases. The Congressional Budget Office projects that individual health insurance premiums will increase by \$2,100 per family as a result of Obamacare.

Promise Made, Promise Broken – No New Taxes on the Middle Class: After giving the squeezed middle class a “firm pledge” during his campaign that he would not raise “any of your taxes,” President Obama's health care law broke that promise no fewer than 12 separate times. These massive revenue increases will have a devastating effect over the coming years; destructive taxes on job creators will harm an economy struggling to grow.

Promise Made, Promise Broken – Federal Spending on Obamacare: Candidate Obama promised his health care plan would cost “$50-65 billion a year when fully phased in.” However, the Congressional Budget Office now projects that the REAL cost of the coverage expansions will be $229 billion in 2020 and $245 billion in 2021 – four times the levels of spending candidate Obama promised.

Promise Made, Promise Broken – Containing Health Care Costs: In June 2009, President Obama claimed that any health care legislation must control costs: “If any bill arrives from Congress that is not controlling costs, that's not a bill I can support. It's going to have to control costs." However, according to the Medicare actuary, national health spending will go up by $310,800,000,000, thanks to Obamacare.

Promise Made, Promise Broken – Taxing Health Benefits: Candidate Obama promised not to "tax health benefits." and derided his opponent's proposals to do so. But Obamacare FORCES people to buy insurance, so the federal government can tax it at a whopping 40 percent rate.

Promise Made, Promise Broken – Individual Mandate: In 2008, candidate Obama claimed that penalizing people for not buying health insurance was like "[solv\[ing\] homelessness by mandating everyone buy a house.](#)" Yet Obamacare created an unprecedented – and constitutionally dubious – federal requirement for all citizens to purchase a product merely because they exist.

Promise Made, Promise Broken – Health Care Negotiations on C-SPAN: Candidate Obama promised to [televis\[e\] all health care negotiations on C-SPAN](#), but the process leading up to Obamacare was plagued with notorious backroom deals. Worse yet, Obama adviser David Axelrod received a multimillion dollar severance package indirectly paid for by the pharmaceutical industry, as part of its "rock-solid deal" with Democrats in Congress and the Administration. This broken promise is particularly worth noting given Roosevelt's comments in his 1910 speech regarding "the sinister influence or control of special interests," which "too often control and corrupt the men and methods of government for their own profit."

Given all these empty promises on health care – not least the broken promise that the "stimulus" would keep unemployment below 8 percent – it's worth asking exactly why President Obama wants to channel Teddy Roosevelt, seeing as how the latter likely would have been a touch unforgiving when it comes to all the current President's broken pledges.

The Hill reports this afternoon that Obamacare's early retiree reinsurance program is shutting down at the end of the year. The program was scheduled to run through 2014, but ran out of money years ahead of schedule.

The program went broke because unions and state governments rushed to the federal government to receive subsidies. Data from HHS suggest that more than half of the money went to only 24 organizations – with the biggest recipient being the United Auto Workers union.

It's yet another telling sign of how the health law rewards Democrat political allies that the $5 billion program went broke because union-affiliated organizations rushed to the federal taxpayer to receive what amounts to an Obamacare bailout. Unfortunately, however, now even that bailout program needs its own bailout.

Re: Congressional Budget Office Revision to the Affordable Care Act Baseline

Executive Summary

The CBO will release its projection of the ACA budget baseline today in the aftermath of the Supreme Court decisions. The new baseline is unlikely to be dramatically different from prior budgetary outlooks because CBO doesn't yet have all the information needed to resolve the uncertainty.

However, based on information already available to CBO and others, Forum modeling found that the cost of the ACA could rise between $72 to $80 billion between 2014 and 2021 if the six already publicly announced states opt out of the Medicaid expansions. Alternatively, the maximum potential federal budgetary exposure – in the unlikely scenario all 50 states opted-out – would be an increase of $562 to $627 billion. Importantly, although the budget impact of the ACA may have changed, we do not expect CBO to change its projections significantly, as it does not yet have the information to resolve the potential swings in cost.

Background

Projected federal budgetary impact of 6 states opting-out

Potential federal
of a 50 state opt-out

On June 28, the Supreme Court delivered its opinion on the lawsuits challenging the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA). Notably, the Court found that:

- The Commerce Clause could not be used to compel the purchase of health insurance, but that a tax on the uninsured was within the taxing powers of the government. Thus, being uninsured is not illegal, but is a taxable event.
- The federal government could not withdraw all federal Medicaid funding from those states that do not undertake the ACA's Medicaid expansion. In effect, the Medicaid expansion is now voluntary.

In the aftermath of the decisions, speculation arose regarding the impact of the Supreme Court decision on the budgetary outlook of the ACA. The Congressional Budget Office announced it will release its analysis the week of July 23. The revisions are important because each August CBO releases its Budget and Economic Outlook: An Update, which summarizes changes to the March budget baseline as a result of changes in economic conditions, the passage of legislation, and other technical factors. The technical factors regularly include administrative decisions, rulemaking and other decisions that alter the budget costs of existing laws. The Supreme Court rulings fall into this category.

AMERICAN ACTION FORUM

Expectations

The release of the CBO revision to the ACA baseline is unlikely to report dramatic changes to the prior budgetary outlook. That does not mean that the ACA will not end up costing more, or even less. It does mean that the CBO does not yet have the information needed to resolve the considerable uncertainty regarding:

- Behavioral Responses to Applying the Mandate as a Tax – The individual mandate decision removes the stigma of illegality from not purchasing health insurance, while leaving the tax unchanged. Depending on the magnitude of this effect, there may be fewer insurance subsidies, more tax payments and a decrease in the net budgetary cost of the ACA.
- Likelihood of States Opting-Out of the Expansion – The Medicaid decision enables governors to opt-out of the expansion. Depending on which states opt-out and the policy flexibility afforded to those states, there could be a dramatic difference in the net budgetary cost of the ACA. To see this, consider the two following scenarios we have analyzed.

The ultimate impact will depend upon the particular states that opt out, the sizes of their populations above and below the poverty line, and the generosity of their Medicaid programs, among other things. We consider this in more detail below.

Projected Federal Budgetary Impact of States Opting-Out

To gauge the impact of several states opting out of the Medicaid expansion, we used a micro-simulation model with state-specific health insurance detail. The projected revision of the ACA budgetary outlook was projected assuming that six states opt out of the Medicaid expansion based on public statements by each state governor: Florida<sup>1</sup>, Louisiana<sup>2</sup>, Mississippi<sup>3</sup>, Nebraska<sup>4</sup>, South Carolina<sup>5</sup> and Texas<sup>6</sup>.

To estimate the federal budget impact of these states not expanding their Medicaid programs we assumed individuals who do not take Medicaid and are eligible for the insurance exchange subsidies (those above 100 percent of the federal poverty level (FPL)) will consider taking them even with a minimal premium required for enrollment. In addition, states that do not offer an exchange will have a federal exchange available to their citizens and the federal exchange will be able to provide subsidies to citizens in these States.

The result of these six states opting out is an increase in federal budget outlays of $72 to $80 billion dollars between 2014 and 2021. This reflects a drop in Medicaid coverage of 4.4 million individuals in 2014 compared to the mandatory Medicaid expansion prior to the Supreme Court ruling. At the same time, there will be a 3.2 million person increase in the number of people taking up private insurance coverage in 2014.

To analyze the maximum potential federal budgetary exposure of the Supreme Court decision, we modeled the impact of all 50 states opting-out of a Medicaid expansion. While this is unlikely, it illustrates the taxpayer exposure if federal resources that would finance the Medicaid expansion are instead provided through health insurance exchanges at commercial insurance pricing.

The result of all 50 states opting-out would be an increase in federal budgetary exposure of $562 to $627 billion between 2014 and 2021. In this scenario, the population remaining in Medicaid would likely be non-seniors with complex care needs, those living in states where single adults currently receive coverage (e.g., New York State).

Of course, it is possible (if not very likely) that only those states with very generous Medicaid spending per person and large populations below the federal poverty limit will choose to opt out of the Medicaid expansion. If so, the combination of the potentially higher federal taxes and Medicaid savings will reduce the overall budget cost.

Summary

The CBO will release its projection of the ACA budget baseline in the aftermath of the SCOTUS decisions. The federal cost could decrease or increase, and potentially increase substantially. However, we do not expect CBO to change its projections significantly because it does not yet have the information to resolve the potential swings in cost.

Summary Bullets

- The result of these six states opting out is an increase in federal budget outlays of $72 to $80 billion dollars between 2014 and 2021.
- Exchange enrollment and subsidy costs are expected to grow until 2018 as a result of an expansion in the individual insurance market. The individual insurance market expands because of further deterioration in employer-sponsored insurance and the exchange eligible Medicaid populations (100-133%) in the 6 states that opt-out of the expansion.
- Exchange enrollment and subsidy costs are expected to decline after 2018 because the amount of the exchange subsidies are unlikely to keep pace with medical cost inflation.
- This reflects a drop in Medicaid coverage of 4.4 million individuals in 2014 compared to the mandatory Medicaid expansion prior to the Supreme Court ruling. At the same time, there will be a 3.2 million person increase in the number of people taking up private insurance coverage in 2014.

This memorandum has been prepared for distribution to more than one congressional office.

This memorandum provides an analysis of the effect of the Supreme Court's decision in National Federation of Independent Business v. Sebelius on the Medicaid expansion in the Affordable Care Act (ACA). First, we provide a summary of the Court's decision regarding the constitutionality of the ACA Medicaid expansion. Then, using the framework of the Court's decision, which limited the ability of the federal government to withhold all federal Medicaid matching funds unless states comply with the ACA Medicaid expansion requirements, we address selected questions regarding implementation of the Medicaid expansion provision.

The Supreme Court's Holding in NFIB v. Sebelius on the Medicaid Expansion Issue

On June 28, 2012, the United States Supreme Court, in National Federation of Independent Business v. Sebelius (NFIB),<sup>1</sup> a case brought by 26 states and the National Federation of Independent Business, issued a highly anticipated decision largely affirming the constitutionality of the Affordable Care Act (ACA).<sup>2</sup> In a complex, fractured opinion, the Supreme Court upheld the 2014 ACA Medicaid expansion, but limited the ability of the federal government to withhold all federal Medicaid funding unless the states accept and comply with the ACA Medicaid expansion requirements.

The Court also upheld a requirement, beginning in 2014, that most individuals carry health insurance or pay a penalty for noncompliance as a valid exercise of Congress' authority to levy taxes.

The new expansion requirements, set forth in Section 2001 of Title II of ACA, provide that, beginning on January 1, 2014, nonelderly, non-pregnant individuals under the age of 65 with income below 133 percent of the federal poverty level (FPL) will be made newly eligible for Medicaid.<sup>3</sup> The Supreme Court found that compelling the states to participate in the ACA Medicaid expansion, which the Chief Justice found to be essentially a “new program,” or else face the possible loss of all federal funds under the current Medicaid program, was coercive and unconstitutional under the Spending Clause of the United States Constitution and the Tenth Amendment.<sup>4</sup> “Congress may use its spending power to create incentives for states to act in accordance with federal policies. But when ‘pressure turns into compulsion,’ . . . the legislation runs contrary to our system of federalism.”<sup>5</sup> The remedy for this unconstitutional violation was to limit enforcement of the ACA Medicaid expansion requirements to only withholding the federal matching funds offered for “newly eligible” individuals in the ACA Medicaid expansion.<sup>6</sup>

Divided and Complicated Decision

Three justices, Chief Justice Roberts and Justices Breyer and Kagan, would have held that the Medicaid expansion requirements are constitutional, but that the Constitution is violated by the threat to the states of the loss of existing federal Medicaid funding if they decline to comply with the ACA expansion. Two Justices, Justices Ginsburg and Sotomayor, would have held that the ACA Medicaid expansion is constitutional in its entirety. Four dissenting Justices, Justices Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, and Alito would have struck down the entire ACA expansion program. In the end, the dissenting Justices agreed with Chief Justice Roberts’ plurality that the threat to withhold all ACA Medicaid program funds from non-compliant states was unconstitutionally coercive, providing a majority of seven Justices on that point.<sup>7</sup> In an interesting twist, a different majority of five Justices agreed to the Chief Justice’s remedy to strike down only the provision withholding all ACA Medicaid federal matching funds for non-compliance with the ACA expansion provision.<sup>8</sup>

In addition, only Justices Breyer and Kagan were on board with Justice Roberts’ “new program – old program” analysis. Justices Ginsburg and Sotomayor only agreed to the remedy; otherwise they would have upheld the new conditions. The fractured nature of this decision, with its three opinions, adds to the complexity of determining its effect on future grant conditions, and on implementation of the ACA Medicaid expansion.

For more information on the Medicaid and CHIP provisions in ACA, see CRS Report R41210, Medicaid and the State Children’s Health Insurance Program (CHIP) Provisions in ACA: Summary and Timeline, by Evelyne P. Baumrucker et al.

<sup>7</sup> Justices Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, Alito, Breyer, Kagan, and Chief Justice Roberts. In an unusual move, the four Justices who would have struck down the entire expansion program agreed with the Chief Justice that conditioning the continued receipt of federal Medicaid funding on states’ compliance with the Medicaid expansion was coercive, and thus unconstitutional, but did not join the majority opinion. Only Justices Breyer and Kagan joined Chief Justice Roberts’ controlling opinion.

In the portion of Chief Justice Robert's opinion joined by Justices Breyer and Kagan, the Chief Justice opined that the Affordable Care Act's Medicaid expansion went too far for two reasons. First, the changes in the health care law were so broad that they essentially created a different program from the one the states originally signed up for, a mandate that the Chief Justice found to be so significant that a state could not have anticipated that Congress' reserved right to "alter" or "amend" the Medicaid program would include such drastic changes.<sup>9</sup> Second, the requirement that states either go along with the changes or possibly lose all their federal Medicaid dollars, which account for about 10 percent of state budgets, doesn't give the states a real choice about whether or not to participate. "In this case the financial 'inducement' Congress has chosen . . . is a gun to the head," Chief Justice Roberts wrote.<sup>10</sup>

In other words, Congress acted constitutionally in offering states ACA federal funds to expand Medicaid to the new coverage group. If a state decides to accept the new ACA Medicaid expansion funds, it must abide by the ACA expansion coverage rules. However, if a state chooses not to participate in the ACA expansion it cannot lose all of its federal matching funds under the current Medicaid program. The states must have a "genuine choice" to accept or reject the new ACA expansion funds and requirements that come with those funds.<sup>11</sup> While Justice Roberts' opinion is technically the majority opinion only with regard to the Court's remedy, his views are likely to guide the lower courts in the future for new spending power challenges to federal grant conditions.

Limited Remedy Fashioned by the Court

The Supreme Court fashioned a very limited remedy for the unconstitutional threat of the loss of all federal Medicaid funds as a condition of implementing the 2014 Medicaid expansion requirements: only federal funds offered to finance medical assistance for the new adult coverage group may be withheld if the states choose not to expand their Medicaid programs to include this new population.<sup>12</sup> As a corollary, if a state accepts the new ACA federal funds to expand its coverage to this new group, and the state becomes non-compliant with any conditions applicable to the ACA expansion group, again, only ACA Medicaid federal funds may be withheld because they are the only funds tied to this "new grant program."<sup>13</sup> The Court's decision only limited this new grant program's enforcement mechanism; it did not specifically affect, change or limit any other Medicaid or ACA provisions. This distinction will be important going forward.

Severability Analysis

Chief Justice Roberts' brief severability analysis reinforces the point that all Medicaid provisions, including pre-ACA and ACA amendments, remain fully intact and operative. First, he stated that the provision which gives the Secretary of HHS general authority to withhold all "further [Medicaid] payments...to the State"<sup>14</sup> if she determines the state is out of compliance with any Medicaid requirement, continues to be valid except as applied to the ACA Medicaid expansion program.<sup>15</sup> Then, the Court found that, even without a specific severability provision in ACA, Congress intended the rest of ACA to remain intact even if withholding all federal funds if states do not cover the new adult population in 2014 is unconstitutional. Chief Justice Roberts said the Court was “confident” that “Congress would have wanted the rest of the Act to stand, had it known that States would have a genuine choice whether to participate in the new Medicaid expansion.”<sup>16</sup>

This means that if a state declines to expand its Medicaid program to cover the new expansion group, the “new program,” the state will forgo only the federal funds (initially 100 percent federal matching payment rate) that would have paid for medical assistance for “newly eligible” individuals in that group. However, all other provisions of the Medicaid statute, both current and in ACA, are “severed” from this remedy, and so remain “fully operative” as provided in law, and should “function in a way consistent with Congress’ basic objectives in enacting the statute.”<sup>17</sup> New program or not, if a state participates in the ACA Medicaid expansion, that part of its program should essentially look the same as it would have before this Supreme Court decision.<sup>18</sup>

Issues Related to States’ “Genuine Choice” Regarding ACA Medicaid Expansion

As noted above, only three Justices joined with Chief Justice Roberts for his “new program” analysis. Nevertheless, this analysis is important for questions about Medicaid provisions in ACA that have some relation to, or effect upon, the ACA Medicaid expansion, but which arguably are not part of the expansion itself.

Medicaid Expansion as a “New Program”

As discussed above, a majority of the Justices agreed that Congress cannot compel states to expand Medicaid by threatening to withhold all federal money under the current Medicaid program. In the words of the Chief Justice, “[t]he threatened loss of over 10 percent of a State’s overall budget, in contrast, is economic dragooning that leaves the states with no real option but to acquiesce in the Medicaid expansion.”<sup>19</sup>

The Chief Justice, in his opinion, reached this conclusion in part by viewing the current Medicaid program as distinct from the ACA Medicaid expansion, which he found to be a “new program” under ACA. However, the Chief Justice did not state as precisely as some might wish what the ACA Medicaid expansion includes and does not include. A good argument may be made that his opinion, taken as a whole, provides sufficient guidance to determine what he meant by the term “Medicaid expansion” for purposes of his “new program” constitutional analysis under the Spending Clause. this part of his opinion, he cites Section 2001(a)(1) of ACA<sup>20</sup> which defines the new category of coverage under the Medicaid expansion as “all individuals under the age of 65 with incomes below 133% of the federal poverty line.”<sup>21</sup> The Chief Justice goes on to contrast this “expansion in coverage mandated by the Act” with the current Medicaid program, noting that “the manner in which the expansion is structured indicates that while Congress may have styled the ACA expansion a mere alteration of existing Medicaid, it recognized it was enlisting the States in a new health care program.”<sup>22</sup> This “structure” included “a separate funding provision to cover the costs of providing services to any person made newly eligible by the expansion,”<sup>23</sup> and the different benefits package for this new group, i.e., “a level of coverage that is less comprehensive than the traditional Medicaid benefit package.”<sup>24</sup> It seems clear that the ACA Medicaid expansion, which the Chief Justice determines to be a “new program,” is the extension of Medicaid coverage to the new ACA 133 percent expansion group for which the federal government will provide enhanced federal matching funds beginning January 1, 2014.

Having determined that the ACA Medicaid expansion and the current Medicaid programs are separate and distinct programs, the Chief Justice ruled that conditioning continued receipt of all federal Medicaid funds on agreeing to the new policy changes to Medicaid that would result from the ACA Medicaid expansion was unconstitutionally coercive: “When, for example, such conditions take the form of threats to terminate other significant independent grants, the conditions are properly viewed as a means of pressuring the States to accept policy changes.”<sup>25</sup>

Maintenance of Effort (MOE) and Modified Adjusted Gross Income (MAGI) Provisions

Following the Supreme Court’s decision in NFIB, some have argued that the states are no longer required to comply with the ACA maintenance of effort provision (MOE), and the modified adjusted gross income provision (MAGI) because these requirements should be considered part of the ACA Medicaid expansion which the Court determined was a “new program.” The states have a choice whether or not to accept the Medicaid expansion funds, so if these provisions are part of that “new program,” these requirements would be voluntary. A careful reading of the Court’s holding supports the conclusion that these two provisions are unaffected by the Supreme Court’s ruling, and are enforceable under the current Medicaid statute.

Section 2001(b) of ACA, entitled “Maintenance of Medicaid Income Eligibility,” amends Section 1902(a) of the Social Security Act,<sup>26</sup> to provide that states with Medicaid programs in effect on March 23, 2010, the date of enactment of the Affordable Care Act, must maintain their programs with the same eligibility standards, methodologies, and procedures until the Secretary of HHS determines that the state’s insurance exchange is operational. The Medicaid and State Children’s Health Insurance Program (CHIP) MOE for children up to age 19 continues until September 30, 2019. Failure to comply with the MOE requirements means a state risks losing all of its federal Medicaid matching funds. The MOE provision does not prohibit states from cutting Medicaid in other ways, such as by reducing provider reimbursement rates or by eliminating optional benefits. Neither are states prohibited from expanding Medicaid coverage during the MOE period.<sup>27</sup>

The Supreme Court in NFIB gave no indication it considered this provision to be part of the “new Medicaid expansion program” for which the states must have a “genuine choice.” Arguably, the MOE provision is not part of the “new program” because it is not a requirement that is attached to the new ACA expansion funds that a state has a choice to accept, or not; it is a requirement, already in effect, pertaining to a state’s current Medicaid population, attached to current Medicaid funds, not future ACA expansion funds. While one may argue that the MOE requirement is related to the Medicaid expansion, it would be difficult to view this requirement as an integral part of the ACA expansion program itself, particularly since the MOE requirement is linked to the date the state’s insurance exchange becomes fully operational, which is not necessarily the same date as the ACA Medicaid expansion begins.<sup>28</sup>

The Supreme Court’s decision does not make changes to the current Medicaid program. This point was made clear in the Court’s severability analysis when it said that “Congress would have wanted the rest of the Act to stand, had it known that States would have a genuine choice whether to participate in the new ACA Medicaid expansion.”<sup>29</sup> This supports the interpretation that the MOE requirement and its enforcement by the potential loss of all current federal Medicaid matching funds “stands,” remaining untouched by the Court’s ruling.<sup>30</sup>

On July 10, 2012, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, Kathleen Sebelius, sent a letter to the nation’s governors indicating that while the Supreme Court limited enforcement of the states’ rejection of the ACA Medicaid expansion provisions, the Court did not change any other ACA or Medicaid provisions. “The Supreme Court held that, if a state chooses not to participate in this expansion of Medicaid eligibility for low-income adults, the state may not, as a consequence, lose federal funding for its existing Medicaid program. The Court’s decision did not affect other provisions of the law.”<sup>31</sup>

A similar line of reasoning applies to the MAGI provision. Section 2002 of ACA, entitled “Income Eligibility for Nonelderly Determined Using Modified Gross Income,” amends Section 1902(e) of the Social Security Act<sup>32</sup> to provide that, starting January 1, 2014, eligibility for Medicaid for most

<sup>27</sup> Section 2001(b)(3) of ACA provides for an exemption to this MOE requirement for states that have, or are projected to have, a budget deficit, but only for non-pregnant, non-disabled adults who are eligible for medical assistance under a state plan or waiver of a state plan, and whose income exceeds 133 percent of the federal poverty level. For more information on the ACA MOE provision, see CRS Report R41835, Medicaid and CHIP Maintenance of Effort (MOE): Requirements and Responses, by Evelyne P. Baumrucker.

<sup>29</sup> NFIB at 57. Justice Roberts’ opinion does not take specific note of the many other provisions in ACA that either make structural changes to the Medicaid program or are related in some way to the Medicaid expansion coverage group. This may not be surprising since the Chief Justice made it clear that the Court’s limitation on “coercing” a state into covering the new Medicaid expansion population did not affect any other provisions of Medicaid or ACA.

<sup>30</sup> A completely different analysis would be required if the MOE provision were challenged as an unconstitutional condition under the precedent of NFIB. The narrow holding of NFIB suggests this provision might be found constitutional by the courts, particularly since states are required to maintain their current Medicaid programs, not expand them, and, arguably, the MOE requirement does not accomplish a “transformation” of the Medicaid program that states could not have anticipated. See CRS Report WSLG117, Conditioning Federal Grants after NFIB v. Sebelius: Carrots, Sticks, and New Programs, by Kathleen S. Swendiman.

individuals, as well as for CHIP, will be determined using methodologies that are based on modified adjusted gross income as defined in the Internal Revenue Code. Eligibility for advance payments of premium tax credits for the purchase of private insurance coverage through state insurance exchanges will also be based on MAGI.<sup>33</sup>

Following the Supreme Court's decision in NFIB, if states choose to participate in the ACA Medicaid expansion, it appears they will have to comply with all conditions that come with that choice, including compliance with MAGI standards for determining income eligibility for the ACA expansion population, as well as certain other existing Medicaid eligibility categories.<sup>34</sup> If a participating state does not comply with MAGI standards for the ACA expansion population, ACA expansion funds could be withheld. As Justice Roberts stated in NFIB, "Nor does [this holding] affect the Secretary's ability to withdraw funds provided under the Affordable Care Act if a State that has chosen to participate in the ACA expansion fails to comply with the requirements of that Act."<sup>35</sup>

If states choose not to participate in the Medicaid expansion, given the Court's severability analysis, the MAGI standards would still be applicable to other parts of the state's Medicaid program, CHIP program and for determining an individual's eligibility for federal subsidies toward the purchase of private health coverage through the state exchanges. As discussed above, all Medicaid and ACA provisions are "severed" from the remedy the Court fashioned to address the unconstitutional threat of the loss of all federal Medicaid funds if the states do not accept the ACA expansion funds and attached conditions.

Issues Related to ACA Medicaid Expansion Program Going Forward

The Supreme Court upheld ACA's Medicaid expansion provisions, limiting only the possible remedy for states that forgo accepting the new expansion funds and the requirements that come with those funds. "The Court today limits the financial pressure the Secretary may apply to induce the States to accept the terms of the ACA Medicaid expansion. As a practical matter, that means States may now choose to reject the expansion; that is the whole point."<sup>36</sup> The Court did not address any of a number of practical issues that may arise going forward.

States' Ability to Opt In or Out of the Medicaid Expansion

The states now have a "genuine choice whether to participate in the new ACA Medicaid expansion."<sup>37</sup> The Secretary cannot penalize states that refuse to comply with the expansion requirements by taking away their existing federal Medicaid funding, so a state may continue its Medicaid program without expanding its coverage to the ACA expansion group without any federal financial penalty.<sup>38</sup> The initial choice to opt in or opt out is clear under the Court's ruling in NFIB.

However, the Court did not address such matters as whether a state that chooses to expand its Medicaid coverage may later decide to "opt out" of that choice and of the expansion requirements; and, whether, now that a state has a "choice," it must exercise that choice by January 1, 2014, or opt in later if it wishes. First and foremost, these practical ramifications of the Court's ruling in NFIB, will need to be addressed by the Secretary of HHS, who has overall authority to implement the provisions of the Affordable Care Act, taking into consideration the Supreme Court's decision.

While the Court's holding did not specifically address these and other issues, one may find guidance in the Court's opinion for the question whether a state that chooses to "opt in" to the ACA Medicaid expansion may, at a later time, choose to "opt out." If a state stops providing medical services to the ACA Medicaid expansion population, it would no longer be in compliance with the conditions for receiving the new expansion funds, and those funds could be withheld or terminated by the Secretary. The Chief Justice stated that the Court's holding does not "affect the Secretary's ability to withdraw funds provided under the Affordable Care Act if a State that has chosen to participate in the ACA expansion fails to comply with the requirements of that Act."<sup>39</sup> It would appear that, under NFIB, the Secretary could not also withhold federal matching funds under the rest of a state's Medicaid program. Conceivably, then, a state may leave or "opt out" of the ACA Medicaid expansion by refusing the expansion funds, without also losing federal funds under the rest of a state's Medicaid program.

In general, states always have the ability to end their participation in federal grant programs by refusing the federal funds offered, thus ending their obligation to comply with the conditions attached to those federal funds. What is unique in this case is the fact that the Chief Justice, for purposes of deciding a constitutional issue, essentially separated the ACA Medicaid expansion from the current Medicaid program for enforcement purposes. As noted above, only a plurality of Justices agreed to this "new program" analysis, so it remains to be seen how much it will be used, or how far it will go, in future court decisions. However, there was a majority on board for the actual remedy to limit the Secretary's enforcement of the Medicaid expansion program requirements, and the Court's opinion set out clear parameters for application of that remedy.

In addition, the Secretary might take the position that, while the states have a choice whether to participate in the ACA expansion or not, compliance must begin January 1, 2014, as stated in the statute, and opting in at a later time is not an option. On the other hand, if a state does not participate in the ACA expansion by that date, and later amends its state plan to meet the ACA Medicaid expansion requirements, a state might argue that the Secretary must approve the state plan amendment at that time. In other words, does the language "beginning January 1, 2014" mean the state's choice must be made by that date, or that the new Medicaid expansion requirements begin on that date, and when the state chooses to amend its state plan to meet those requirements it is eligible for the federal funding? As the Chief Justice said, "[i]t is fair to say that Congress assumed that every State would participate in the ACA Medicaid expansion, given that States had no real choice but to do so."<sup>40</sup> These new questions arise because of the interaction

of the Supreme Court's decision with a provision Congress thought was simply a modification to the existing Medicaid program, not a "new program."

Authority of Secretary to Make Changes to the Medicaid Expansion Program

In general, whatever authorities the Secretary has under the Medicaid statute and other statutes, such as waiver authorities, are unaffected by the Court's decision in NFIB. The Secretary's broad authority under such provisions as "Section 1115"<sup>41</sup> continues and may be used by the Secretary in accordance with the authorizing statute and her discretion. It may be expected that the Secretary might use her administrative authority and possibly also waiver authorities to provide flexibility and appropriate guidance for implementing the Affordable Care Act in view of the Court's decision. Federal agencies have considerable discretion to interpret the authorizing statutes of federal programs directed to them for implementation. In appropriate cases, the courts will defer to a federal agency's interpretation of an authorizing statute, unless the interpretation is "arbitrary, capricious or manifestly contrary to the statute."<sup>42</sup> In the wake of the Supreme Court's decision in NFIB, the Secretary retains considerable discretion to interpret the Affordable Care Act.

For example, the Affordable Care Act includes a deadline for a state to decide whether or not to establish a state insurance exchange, but the law didn't contemplate states being allowed to opt out of the ACA Medicaid expansion without also opting out of their entire Medicaid program, so there is no deadline in the statute for that decision. The Secretary may provide guidance which might include "practical" deadlines, taking into consideration state legislative processes which may need to be involved in the decision to participate or not, and the time needed to meet the 2014 deadline if a state chooses to participate in the expansion.

It is unclear at this point whether states might be able to expand the new ACA expansion partially, for example only up to 100 percent of FPL.<sup>43</sup> On this point, it is noted that the Supreme Court's severability analysis clearly states that the Court's ruling does not change any Affordable Care Act provisions including those that describe the coverage group, funding levels, or timing for the ACA's Medicaid expansion. As currently written, those provisions appear to be mandatory; they do not, by their terms, contemplate a phased-in approach to expansion of the newly eligible population. Presumably, in exchange for the 100 percent matching rate, Congress wanted the entire ACA expansion group covered as of 2014. The statute provides: "A State plan for medical assistance must . . . provide . . . for making medical assistance available . . . to . . . all individuals . . . who are under 65 years of age, not pregnant, not entitled to, or enrolled for, benefits . . . , and whose income . . . does not exceed 133% of the poverty line." (emphasis added). Since the statute is very specific that "all individuals" meeting the statutory qualifications must be covered, it may be argued that coverage is an all-or-nothing proposition for the states.

Whether the Secretary might be able to use her waiver authority to provide some flexibility on this issue if a state does not opt into the Medicaid expansion, such as allowing a state to expand Medicaid coverage to adults only up to 100 percent of FPL, is an open question, and some possible legal and administrative issues come to mind that would have to be addressed. The Secretary may, under her Section 1115 demonstration authority, waive the requirements of specific sections of Social Security Act programs, including the Medicaid state plan requirements in Section 1902 of the Social Security Act,<sup>44</sup> for any “experimental, pilot or demonstration project which, in the judgment of the Secretary, is likely to assist in promoting the objectives of title... XIX of this chapter... in a state or states.”<sup>45</sup> The Secretary may waive the specified provisions “to the extent and for the period he finds necessary to enable such State or States to carry out such project.” The Secretary may also use the Section 1115 waiver authority to pay for costs that are not otherwise matchable under Section 1903 of the Social Security Act.

<sup>43</sup> These options might appeal to some states as a way to reduce the ACA expansion population for whom the state will eventually have partial financial obligations, and perhaps to avoid current or future state budget constraints.

Since the requirement that a state cover all individuals up to 133 percent of FPL is in Section 1902, that requirement is theoretically waivable, so long as the resulting demonstration project “is likely to assist in promoting the objectives” of the Medicaid program. However, it is not clear that a waiver for a partial Medicaid expansion could include continued access to the enhanced federal matching rate.<sup>46</sup> Section 1115(a)(2) stipulates that expenditures under a waiver are eligible for federal matching under Section 1903 of the Social Security Act, which describes the conditions under which federal financial participation is available. However, the enhanced payment rate is in a different provision, Section 1905.<sup>47</sup> In addition, longstanding administrative guidance that requires waiver costs to be budget neutral to the federal government over the life of the waiver program would need to be considered.<sup>48</sup>

Conclusion

The Supreme Court’s decision in NFIB v. Sebelius marks the first time the High Court has struck down conditions on federal grants to states that it determined “cross the line from enticement to coercion.”<sup>49</sup> In a divided and complex decision, the Court held that Congress cannot threaten the states with the loss of all federal Medicaid funding if the states decline to expand Medicaid coverage as mandated by the Affordable Care Act. For purposes of the ACA Medicaid expansion program going forward, the most important aspect of the Court’s holding beyond its limitation on the Secretary’s ability to withhold all federal Medicaid matching funds if a state does not participate in the ACA expansion, is that the Court left all the other provisions of ACA intact and fully operative. While this aspect of the Court’s ruling helps to clarify some issues regarding implementation of the ACA Medicaid expansion by the states, other complex legal and practical questions are not easily addressed this early on.

When drafting the Affordable Care Act, Congress did not envision that states would have a choice to refuse the ACA Medicaid expansion requirements without opting out of the entire Medicaid program. Consequently, the Administration is faced with unanticipated implementation challenges and unforeseen consequences stemming from the Court’s ruling less than three weeks ago. It is expected that the Secretary will use her statutory and administrative authorities to provide appropriate flexibility and interpretive guidance for implementing the Affordable Care Act in view of the Court’s decision. Congress,

Subject: Administration Report Reveals An Inconvenient Truth: Employers WILL Drop Coverage
Date: Friday, December 30, 2011 9:00:14 AM

On Wednesday, the Administration released a brief report claiming to take success for expanding access to coverage through SCHIP. The Administration's talking point regarding the report was that 1.2 million previously uninsured children gained coverage through the government-run program. However, a Washington Post story on the report included this interesting fact, which the official HHS report conveniently omitted:

In addition to the 1.2 million newly insured children, 3 million children who formerly had private insurance were picked up by [S]CHIP or Medicaid over the same period.

In other words, for every child who obtained new coverage through the SCHIP program, an additional 2.5 children DROPPED their private coverage to obtain subsidized insurance courtesy of federal taxpayers. This sky-high "crowd-out" effect – in which individuals drop private coverage to enroll in a government-funded plan – shows just how attractive Obamacare's lucrative insurance subsidies likely will be to both employees and employers beginning in 2014.

But the same Administration that just released a report showing that only two in seven of the newly enrolled in SCHIP were previously uninsured continues to assert that employers will not drop coverage en masse. They maintain this position despite the numerous studies, papers, briefs, reports, employer questionnaires, consultant presentations, surveys, op-eds, interviews, quotes, and comments from other prominent Democrats suggesting that employers will drop coverage in numbers far greater than the White House lets on. However, this week's report – or, more specifically, the crowd-out numbers that HHS decided to omit from the report – reveal the inconvenient truth this Administration has yet to admit: Employers WILL drop coverage, and the cost of Obamacare will explode as a result.

The Washington Post is reporting that the Administration “will allow religious organizations a one-year delay” before complying with a new Obamacare mandate to offer contraceptive coverage – “but the rule itself and the employers covered by it remain unchanged.” This rule requires organizations like religious schools and Catholic hospitals to offer contraceptive coverage to employees covered by their health plans – even if doing so violates the tenets of their faith.

The rule, and the Administration’s broader dealings with the Catholic church, have generated much controversy. Some have written that “a part of [the Obama] Administration is at war with Catholic leaders and Catholic belief.” Moreover, an Administration that claimed to end the “war on science” has on multiple occasions related to contraceptive issues manipulated the process, and/or overridden the recommendations of non-partisan experts, to achieve political victories for its liberal allies.

The bottom line: This decision looks suspiciously like yet another political stunt designed to delay the controversy by another year, until after the President’s re-election campaign. Make no mistake however – this ruling forces religious organizations to violate the fundamental tenets of their faith, or stop offering health insurance coverage to their employees. Time will tell whether those institutions choose the former or the latter course – but neither option should be necessary, if the Administration had not taken such an unbending approach to appease its liberal base.

Date: Tuesday, August 02, 2011 9:56:01 AM

Testifying before the HELP Committee, Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight Director Steve Larsen just claimed not to recall all the details of the CBO analysis of health insurance premium increases under Obamacare, but alleged that the impact on premiums would be "minimal." Seeing as how Director Larsen didn't know all the details, here's what CBO said on page 6 of its November 2009 analysis of Obamacare's impact on premiums:

Average premiums per policy in the nongroup market in 2016 would be roughly $5,800 for single policies and $15,200 for family policies under the proposal. compared with roughly $5,500 for single policies and $13,100 for family policies under current law.

That amounts to a $2,100 per year increase for a family buying individual insurance, thanks to Obamacare – and a $4,600 per family difference between the increases due to the law President Obama signed and the \$2,500 per-family premium reduction candidate Obama repeatedly promised. Given that the Administration's policy is costing a whopping $4,600 per family more than candidate Obama's political rhetoric, is it any wonder that the Administration would claim not to remember how much Obamacare will raise premiums on struggling American families?

Making Effective Connections: With or without Health Benefits Exchanges (draft)

By Tom Miller

American Enterprise Institute

The version of health benefits exchanges envisioned in the Affordable Care Act (ACA) is a classic example of a limited, but potentially good, idea mutating into a politically driven gateway to overregulation, income redistribution, and greater federal government control of health care decisions. The more benign concept of exchanges envisioned them as mechanisms to help coordinate a common marketplace in which willing insurance buyers and sellers might choose to reach private agreements. Exchanges could expand the range of limited choices available to most workers employed by smaller firms, as well as to individuals seeking coverage outside the workplace. They might serve as impartial clearinghouses for information comparing the features and performance of various health insurance plans in a particular market area. Finally, they could help connect individuals with taxpayer subsidies available for their insurance choices and even consolidate multiple sources of financial contributions for someone's coverage (multiple employers, public subsidies, personal funds) into a single payment platform.

The original case for establishing health insurance exchanges pointed to clear problems of affordability, access, and choice in current private insurance markets for individuals and small businesses. Although individual insurance markets could not possibly perform as badly as the health policy elites (who recoil from them like vampires avoid garlic) commonly believed, their customers have been burdened by high loading costs for marketing and administration by insurers. The limited role of individual insurance as a residual market product for customers lacking better options elsewhere in the pre-ACA insurance world also strained its ability to pool and manage risk consistently. The small-group insurance market was, and still is, whipsawed by counterproductive state-government regulation, a shrinking base of overburdened small-employer customers, and a shortage of competitive insurance choices.

Health insurance exchanges are not new ideas. Various types have been proposed for years as intermediaries to manage the relationship between insurers and their customers and perhaps to better organize insurance markets. However, finding consensus in identifying problems is not the same as agreeing on the actual terms of sustainable solutions. Exchanges can be dialed up or down the regulatory spectrum. At one end, they might simply provide some standardized comparative information on the benefits, premiums, and service quality offered by insurers in a particular market. A little further up the scale, they might distribute private payments and public subsidies, simplify insurance purchasing and enrollment, and reduce transaction costs. At the other end, they could become the exclusive engineers charged with redesigning and overseeing most, if not all, insurance sales and purchases.

The policy parameters involving the role and power of an insurance exchange include whether it is voluntary or mandatory. Does it have an exclusive franchise, or must it compete for customers? Over what geographic territory and for which market segments does it operate? Does it exercise substantial market power as a purchaser or even more political power as a regulator? Does it try to pool similar risks or cross-subsidize very different ones? Does it limit or expand choices of carriers, plans, and benefits? The more you want to try to do, the more regulatory complexity you have. You risk overloading each decision with another more sweeping one down the road until the exchange starts looking like a public utility commission.

The ACA designed its version of state exchanges to play a much greater, and more controversial, role. Their duties include

- Ensuring compliance with tighter federal regulation of health insurance;
- Expanding state Medicaid programs;
- Enforcing the individual coverage mandate;
- Administering the new health law's income-based subsidies;
- Policing insurers' premium prices; and
- Eventually controlling a much larger share of the private insurance market.

In just about every case under the ACA, the decision was made to go for more rather than less, under the assumption that state-run or federally run exchanges would not be able to adequately "reform" the insurance marketplace if they left too many stray sheep outside their fences. The ACA rules interpreted a level playing field and common rules regarding pricing and benefit design as requiring the rest of the private insurance market to conform to the exchange's politically designated operating rules, rather than the other way around. Competing against what is most commonly done in the rest of the marketplace and leaving consumers to choose what they prefer apparently would be too hard and fail to deliver the desired political outcome. Of course, whether any resulting selection by consumers is called "adverse" depends on whether the criterion used is political or personal.

The ACA's statutory text and subsequent regulatory guidance are full of limits and specifications for the range of the required "essential" and other permitted tiers of qualified benefits, along with tight restrictions on cost sharing. The main factor in setting some eligibility limits (individuals without offers of employer coverage or participating small firms with no more than 100 employees) was budgetary. The on-budget costs to taxpayers for moving even more millions of Americans into new, more heavily subsidized, exchange-based coverage on a faster timetable would be too transparently unaffordable, administratively daunting, and politically disruptive.<sup>1</sup> In any case, the ACA's rules for guaranteed-issue and not-so-adjusted community rating will be applied nationwide, even to fully insured (if not yet self-insured) private plans operating outside the ACA's exchanges.

The ACA exchanges initially were marketed as a means to provide new choices to those largely shut out of the traditional employer-sponsored group health insurance market, as well as to smaller businesses struggling to offer or maintain group coverage for their workers. But the law authorizes states to expand offers of exchange-based coverage to businesses with more than 100 employees, starting in 2017. Critics of the expanding role of federal regulation, mandates, and subsidies under the ACA regime would argue that this would open the door wider for Washington's dominant market share and more complete regulatory control in whatever remains of "private" insurance markets later this decade. When combined with narrow grandfathering and grace periods for many existing insurance benefits plans (temporarily protecting them from the newer ACA requirements for fully insured health plans)<sup>2</sup> that are biased toward an early expiration date, the real goal of the federally directed exchanges appears to be to construct a roach motel of centralized regulation, where private plans and their enrollees might check in but are not allowed to check out.

It turns out that to control one thing, and then another thing, and then more and more unanticipated things, many congressional legislators and their designated bureaucrats believe they will have to control almost everything.

Not surprisingly, many state officials balked at participating in the ACA's model for "state-run" exchanges, which appeared to be part of a top-down bureaucratic approach for taking control of state insurance markets under the guise of implementing the new health law, rather than offering a more decentralized, market-driven alternative. Several dozen state governors and state legislatures either opposed outright the creation of ACA-compliant exchanges or urged a cautious, go-slow approach to further implementation until more details were provided (or the Supreme Court decided to overturn the health law as unconstitutional).

At this point, it appears that a large majority of states will not meet the ACA's initial deadline of January 1, 2013, for federal certification that their state-based exchanges will be ready to operate one year later, when the law's expansion of exchange-based health insurance coverage is supposed to begin. HHS has proposed several alternative ways to establish health exchanges by that date, including state-federal partnerships (in which states perform at least some of the required exchange functions) and federally facilitated exchanges (mostly a new name for federally run exchanges).<sup>3</sup> However, any of those approaches to developing functional health benefits exchanges under the ACA faces major obstacles:

1. Most states will either refuse to set up their own exchanges or prove unable to do so for political or technical reasons.
2. The administrative challenges in orchestrating necessary data streams from multiple sources (to determine applicants' eligibility for federal subsidies), creating essentially "new" insurance markets, and handling a potential surge in demand for such coverage remain daunting and unprecedented.
3. Serious legal questions about the actual statutory authority of federally run exchanges to administer premium subsidies remain unresolved, and they are likely to dilute the power of any arguments that states must set up their own exchanges to avoid losing control over a federally run exchange in their state.<sup>4</sup>

What should states do? One option is to simply stand back and hope that federally run exchanges will be unsuccessful and collapse for a combination of political, legal, and administrative reasons. This is politically appealing in states where opposition to this part of the ACA runs strong, although it leaves unaddressed what other sorts of health insurance reforms may still be needed within states.

Another option is to approve initial versions of their own state-based exchanges that operate under very different and more market-friendly rules not likely to comply with current

Obama administration regulatory guidance.<sup>5</sup> 5 For example, such state-run exchanges would be likely to adopt an “any willing seller” approach to insurer eligibility, rather than operate as an active, exclusive purchaser that prescreens participating insurers to gain bargaining leverage and ensure their compliance with standardized coverage benefits and premium rate limits. They would operate more like a market facilitator of new coverage options (for state residents seeking individual coverage and for small businesses looking for alternatives to traditional group coverage), rather than as administrators of an expanded “public” insurance program similar to Medicaid. Flexibility, choice, and open competition would be more important than standardization, selective contracting, and compulsion.

Such exchange-like mechanisms would involve willing consumers, private providers, and employer sponsors as partners rather than as subjects. Administrators would focus on normal oversight to ensure compliance with existing state and federal laws, without trying to expand them further. Exchange rules would be adopted to mesh with current state rules for the rest of the state-regulated market, rather than the opposite. Health benefits guarantees would be kept to a minimum, with a broad interpretation of rough actuarial equivalence ensuring opportunities for innovation and preference-sensitive variation.

Such state exchanges would rely much more on developing and disseminating consumer-empowering, impartial information about coverage options, rather than on enacting and enforcing choice-limiting regulation. Once a state sets the very basic parameters for insurance plans, it would allow carriers to innovate and differentiate their products, as long as they adequately inform potential consumers at the point of purchase. State administrators would focus on enhancing consumer education, engagement, and empowerment with information tools. They would contractually outsource most of the technical operations to private vendors and maintain the difference between providing a single shopping point for convenience and requiring an exclusive destination for political control.

Nevertheless, political suspicion remains widespread in many states that the temptation for regulatory overreach in exchange-like mechanisms cannot be kept in check, given the ACA’s underlying plan to use them primarily as an enforcement arm for its insurance rules and a distribution channel for its income-based premium subsidies. Quite simply, any state officials involved in establishing a state-run exchange in jurisdictions opposed to most of the ACA’s mandates and regulations will be seen as aiding and abetting the latter, rather than vigorously resisting them.

Hence, many states wanting to improve their insurance markets for individuals and small firms will need to consider establishing a different type of mechanism. It would operate primarily to ensure that beneficiaries can be connected seamlessly with taxpayer subsidies for health insurance and useful information for making their coverage choices. To avoid the pitfalls of setting up an exclusive political franchise, states should provide these subsidy connectors only as a competitive option within the larger insurance marketplace. They may also encourage the further growth of nonexclusive private exchanges as either competitors or replacements for state-sponsored ones. If any such nonexchange exchanges serve a useful role and provide competitive advantages, consumers will choose voluntarily to purchase insurance through them. Their market share would be determined by the decisions of willing buyers, rather than the designs of political brokers. Consumers can redesign their local insurance markets by voting with their own money.

<sup>1</sup> As the Obama administration's principles for health reform were converted into legislative language, the White House had to master a difficult political balancing act. This involved reassuring many Americans anxious about disruptions to their current health coverage and care arrangements or about mounting federal budget deficits, while offering more generously subsidized health benefits to lower-income constituents. The reassurance component necessitated reaching an initial truce with employer-sponsored insurance plans. Keeping employers' "private" money on the table also helped limit the net budget cost of the first installment of insurance coverage growth. Relying on expanded Medicaid eligibility as a less expensive way to accomplish about half of the total targeted coverage expansion allowed federal dollars to be stretched further, given Medicaid's very low reimbursement rates for providers. The public-plan option was politically radioactive to highly energized grassroots opponents, who feared that the legislation would quickly lead to a single-payer system. Moreover, the combination of vastly expanded "public plan" Medicaid coverage and much tighter political regulation of "private" insurers in subsidized health insurance exchanges accomplished most of the larger political objective of increasing dependency on politically brokered health care, with fewer of the red lights signaling a more direct and expensive expansion of Medicare-like coverage to displace private insurance intermediaries. The final law relied on ambiguity, deferred decision making, and administrative complexity to dampen political concerns about a federal takeover of traditionally private spheres of health care decision making. However, gaining permanent regulatory authority over a vast expanse of health care operations and decisions—regardless of how many blanks needed to be filled in later—fulfilled a crucial political imperative for Democratic party leaders. It also facilitated the continued, less-threatening appearance of private operation of most current health care arrangements, albeit under tighter—and potentially expanding—political management. All:

Please find the updated Amicus Brief documents. A summary and initial draft is attached.

This will be discussed by Martin Kent, COS to Gov. McDonnell on today's Chief of Staff RGPPC COS call at 3 PM EDT.

To confirm on process, the goal is for RGPPC to be named as joining the amicus, as will Governor McDonnell individually. Duncan Getchell of the VA AG office will sign as a SCOTUS admitted attorney. The case will be styled as shown in the attached summary.

What we need from you:

1. Legal teams and General Counsels: Sign off that a majority of our governors are comfortable with RGPPC being named as joining the amicus. Questions or concerns regarding the legal brief should be directed to Martin Kent, COS to Gov Bob McDonnell, or Matt Conrad, Deputy COS to Gov McDonnell. Please respond to Marie at [REDACTED] once you are comfortable from your state.

All of us at the Galen Institute send you our best wishes for a Merry Christmas, a Happy Hanukkah, and all the blessings of this beautiful season. We will be back in the new year with more reports as we enter this hugely consequential and decisive year over the future of our health sector and our freedom.

And we commend to you this excellent review that we were delighted to find this morning in The American Spectator by David Hogberg, economics correspondent for Investor's Business Daily.

David's advice: "If you need a last minute gift for that health-care policy wonk on your Christmas list, you cannot go wrong with Why ObamaCare Is Wrong for America by Grace-Marie Turner, James C. Capretta, Thomas P. Miller, and Robert E. Moffit. The book is written in such a lucid, down-to-earth style that it makes an excellent gift even for the person who is only marginally interested in health care."

All blessings to you and your family.

The Gift That Keeps on Taking

The American Spectator

By David Hogberg

December 21, 2011

If you need a last minute gift for that health-care policy wonk on your Christmas list, you cannot go wrong with Why ObamaCare Is Wrong for America by Grace-Marie Turner, James C. Capretta, Thomas P. Miller, and Robert E. Moffit. The book is written in such a lucid, down-to-earth style that it makes an excellent gift even for the person who is only marginally interested in health care.

Turner, Capretta, Miller, and Moffit were vigorous participants in the debate over Obamacare, and had the powers that be listened to them we wouldn't be facing the burgeoning mess that we are. As Obamacare inevitably results in one disaster after another, having Why ObamaCare Is Wrong for America on your bookshelf will serve as an excellent reference for understanding why the disasters unfold the way they do.

While the whole book is well worth reading, two chapters stand out.

The first is "Impact on...Taxpayers," which recounts not only how Obamacare will burden taxpayers but also the accounting ruses used to give the appearance that it won't bust the budget. There are at least two cases in Obamacare of "bracket creep," where inflation pushes incomes into higher tax brackets. Starting in 2018, Obamacare levies a tax on "Cadillac" health plans costing over $18,000 annually. While the tax is adjusted each year for inflation, health insurance almost always rises at a rate higher than inflation, meaning that over time more and more families will see their health plans subject to the tax. The second is a surtax on annual incomes for individuals making over $200,000 annually and $250,000 for families. The surtax amounts to 0.9% on wages and 3.8% on non-wage income. Yet the tax rate is not adjusted for inflation, so each year more and more taxpayers will be ensnared by it.

But those are only the taxes that are actually in the law. As the authors note:

ObamaCare is going to push government spending up even more than [the] best-case scenario numbers show, and the result will be to force even higher taxes on future generations of Americans. That becomes clear only when all of the gimmicks and unlikely assumptions that are hiding ObamaCare's true costs are stripped away.

The first gimmick entailed keeping the "10-year cost" of Obamacare to about $1 trillion. To achieve this, the law contained 10 years of taxes with six-years of costs. That is, while the taxes for Obamacare began in 2010, the cost of supplying subsidies for insurance does not begin until 2014. It was this dishonesty that enabled supporters of the law to espouse the canard that it reduced the deficit by $118 billion. The truth is the first 10 years of supplying insurance subsidies, 2014-2023, will leave taxpayers with a $2.3 trillion bill.

Another gimmick is "double counting." Obamacare does this at least twice. It cuts Medicare benefits about $450 billion over a decade to help pay for the insurance subsidies. But the Obama administration and Democrats also claimed that the savings would replenish the Medicare trust fund. That proved too much even for a Congressional Budget Office that, at the time, was in a Congress still controlled by Democrats. In a December 2009 report, the CBO "let it be known that the Medicare cuts couldn't be double-counted. Either they will pay for a new entitlement, or they will short up Medicare. But not both."

Obamacare pulled the same trick with the Community Living Assistance Services and Supports program, aka the "CLASS Act." The CLASS Act was intended to be a program that provided long-term care insurance. It was supposed to collect $70 billion in premiums before any benefits were paid out. But "ObamaCare's authors could not resist the temptation to double dip. They set aside the premiums to pay for long-term care insurance claims, but they also counted the premiums to pay for ObamaCare's overall insurance expansion." In the end, there will be no $70 billion for either purpose. The CLASS Act proved to be such a Ponzi scheme that Obama's Department of Health and Human Services eventually admitted that there was no way to make the program work.

The chapter "What You Can Do to Put the Brakes on ObamaCare" provides citizens with useful tools to keep the debate going into the 2012 election. President Obama and the Democrats will hope that Obamacare drops off the political radar next year. The chapter offers ways that people who are not politicians or pundits can prevent that from happening, such as calling in to talk-radio programs, writing letters to the editor, or starting a Facebook page dedicated to discussing the problems of Obamacare. And for the very ambitious, the chapter urges you to consider running for office. Of course, you can't go into the debate unarmed, so the chapter offers ten basic facts about Obamacare that you can memorize.

And if you need more, well, that's what the rest of the book is for.

Date: Monday, February 07, 2011 7:54:38 AM

FYI- in WSJ. Daniels' op-ed on exchanges. Nice work, Debbie. An ObamaCare Appeal From the States Twenty-one governors representing more than 115 million Americans have written to Kathleen Sebelius asking for more flexibility on health-care reform. By MITCH DANIELS Unless you're in favor of a fully nationalized health-care system, the president's health-care reform law is a massive mistake. It will amplify all the big drivers of overconsumption and excessive pricing: "Why not, it's free?" reimbursement; "The more I do, the more I get" provider payment; and all the defensive medicine the trial bar's ingenuity can generate. All claims made for it were false. It will add trillions to the federal deficit. It will lead to a de facto government takeover of health care faster than most people realize, and as millions of Americans are added to the Medicaid rolls and millions more employees (including, watch for this, workers of bankrupt state governments) are dumped into the new exchanges. Many of us governors are hoping for either a judicial or legislative rescue from this impending disaster, and recent court decisions suggest there's a chance of that. But we can't count on a miracle—that's only permitted in Washington policy making. We have no choice but to prepare for the very real possibility that the law takes effect in 2014. For state governments, the bill presents huge new costs, as we are required to enroll 15 million to 20 million more people in our Medicaid systems. In Indiana, our independent actuaries have pegged the price to state taxpayers at $2.6 billion to $3 billion over the next 10 years. This is a huge burden for our state, and yet another incremental expenditure the law's authors declined to account for truthfully. Perhaps worse, the law expects to conscript the states as its agents in its takeover of health care. It assumes that we will set up and operate its new insurance "exchanges" for it, using our current welfare apparatuses to do the numbingly complex work of figuring out who is eligible for its subsidies, how much each person or family is eligible for, redetermining this eligibility regularly, and more. Then, we are supposed to oversee all the insurance plans in the exchanges for compliance with Washington's dictates about terms and prices. The default option if any state declines to participate is for the federal government to operate an exchange directly. Which got me thinking: If the new law is not repealed by 2013, what could be done to reshape it in the direction of freedom and genuine cost control?

I have written to Kathleen Sebelius, secretary of Health and Services (HHS), saying that if her department wants Indiana to run its program for it, we will do so under the following conditions:

- We are given the flexibility to decide which insurers are permitted to offer their products.
- All the law's expensive benefit mandates are waived, so that our citizens aren't forced to buy benefits they don't need and have a range of choice that includes more affordable plans.
- The law's provisions discriminating against consumer-driven plans, such as health savings accounts, are waived.
- We are given the freedom to move Medicaid beneficiaries into the exchange, or to utilize new approaches to the traditional program, instead of herding hundreds of thousands more people into today's broken Medicaid system.
- Our state is reimbursed the true, full cost of the administrative burden to be imposed upon us, based on the estimate of an auditor independent of HHS.
- A trustworthy projection is commissioned, by a research organization independent of the department, of how many people are likely to wind up in the exchange, given the large incentives for employers to save money by off-loading their workers.

Obviously, this is a very different system than the one the legislation intends. Health care would be much more affordable, minus all the mandates, and plus the consumer consciousness that comes with health savings accounts and their kin. Enhanced by the state's ability to allow more insurers to participate and offer consumer-driven plans. Through greater flexibility in the management of Medicaid, the state might be able to reduce substantially the hidden tax increase that forced expansion of the program will impose.

Most fundamentally, the system we are proposing requires Washington to abandon most of the command-and-control aspects of the law as written. It steers away from nanny-state paternalism by assuming, recognizing and reinforcing the dignity of all our citizens and their right to make health care's highly personal decisions for themselves.

So why would Ms. Sebelius and HHS agree to this de facto rewrite of their treasured accomplishment? A glance at the recent fiasco of high-risk pools provides the answer. When a majority of states, including Indiana, declined to participate in setting up these pools, which cover those with high-cost, existing conditions, the task fell to HHS. As widely reported, it went poorly, with costs far above predictions and only a tiny fraction of the expected population signing up.

If the feds can't manage this little project, what should we expect if they attempt it on a scale hundreds of times larger and more complex? If it were only Indiana asking, I have no doubt that HHS would ignore us. But Indiana is not alone. So far, 21 states—including Pennsylvania, Texas and Louisiana—have signed the same letter. We represent more than 115 million Americans. Washington's attempt to set up eligibility and exchange bureaucracies in all these places would invite a first-rate operational catastrophe.

If there's to be a train wreck, we governors would rather be spectators than conductors. But if the federal government is willing to reroute the train to a different, more productive track, we are here to help.

Mr. Daniels, a Republican, is the governor of Indiana.

Another Day, Another Doomed ObamaCare PR Blitz Paid For By You, The Taxpayer

March 18, 2011 | Posted by Michael Ricci | Permalink

“A multipronged assault led by Republicans” to repeal the job-crushing health care law has the Democrats who run Washington scrambling to try and repackage ObamaCare for its first anniversary.

“White House Seeks to Boost Public Support for Health Bill,” reads the headline in today's Wall Street Journal. *NOTE: Please do not confuse that headline with this one from January (“Democrats Seek Right Message to Boost Health Care Law,”) this one from June of last year (“White House Mounts PR Blitz for Health Care Reform,”) or this one from August ... of 2009 (“White House Rethinks How It Sells Health Overhaul.”)*

Sure enough, much like its predecessors, this re-packaging is off to a rocky start:

- According to a new national survey out today, barely one in four Americans think their families will be better off under ObamaCare – a record low. The survey also shows the share of Americans who say that both the cost and the quality of their health care will get worse under ObamaCare has reached new highs.
- Much like when the Obama Administration's top economist admitted in October 2009 that the ill-fated 'stimulus' had run its course, lawmakers admit many of the most “consumer-oriented changes” in the health care law have already kicked in. As a result, Administration officials will “fan out across the country” to try and sell things they admit have failed to win over the American people.

- “To help counter Republican criticism,” the Obama Administration is trying to signal “more flexibility” for states, yet the Health & Human Services Secretary “is showing no signs she will bend the rules when it comes to states’ biggest concerns.” Of course, more than 1,000 exceptions have been made for employers and unions, but who’s counting?
- Several House Democratic leaders didn’t even show up for a press conference yesterday marking the anniversary. (Perhaps they were off fretting over “losing the messaging battle over spending,” too.)

Whether it’s the spending binge in Washington or ObamaCare, Democrats’ core problem isn’t bad messaging: it’s continuing to support bad policies that ignore the will of the people and make it harder to them to find and create jobs.

Instead of spending taxpayer dollars trying to resell ObamaCare, why not save money \(and jobs\) by repealing the law and replacing it with common-sense reforms that lower costs and protect jobs? Since January, the new House majority has voted to fully repeal the \$2.6 trillion health care law; to defund the law as part of H.R. 1; and to repeal the job-destroying 1099 small business mandate. This week, Speaker Boehner announced the House will soon vote to eliminate mandatory spending slush funds in ObamaCare. What’s more, a majority of states are challenging the law in court.

While Democrats are still trying to hit the reset button on ObamaCare, Republicans are looking forward and setting the table for an honest dialogue about the need for action on the job-crushing spending binge in Washington. This dialogue will include the explosive growth of autopilot entitlement spending – which ObamaCare has only exacerbated.

Appendix: Questions

1. If a state assumes the responsibility of overseeing plan management and consumer enrollment assistance in the Partnership Exchange, to what degree will the Federal government revert a portion of the user fees back to that state?
2. What type of flexibility do states have when building and deploying IT infrastructure to support seamless information exchange between their Medicaid programs and Exchanges?
3. How can states find information on approved RFPs or bids from states that have completed steps toward building a State Exchange?
4. Will HHS/CMS be able to extend deadlines to accommodate additional time states are seeking to complete the IT procurement process?
5. To what degree should there be alignment between qualified health plans (QHPs) operating in the Exchange and those operating outside of the Exchange (e.g. network adequacy, coverage effective days, performance standards etc.)?
6. What would the governance structures for the Federally-facilitated Exchange and Partnership Exchange look like? To what extent will states have representation on the governance board?
7. What does the required MOU agreement look like and what is the timeline for creating that agreement with states that will be participating in a Federal Exchange?
8. What are the potential costs to states who participate in the Federal Exchange and how are they calculated?
9. Is there a list of services that HHS would be willing to subcontract to states (i.e. patient navigators) that participate in the Federal Exchange?
10. Will states that expand Medicaid coverage up to a level below 133 percent of the federal poverty limit (FPL), for example up to 100 percent FPL, still receive the enhanced federal medical assistance percentage (FMAP) available for “newly covered” populations?
11. Can states phase in expansion of newly covered populations over several years? If states do expand Medicaid coverage, can they scale back the expansion in the future as fiscal conditions change?
12. When will HHS issue the regulations and methodology for reductions in Disproportionate Share allotments? Two, for a state that does not see a decrease in its uninsured population, will the remaining state absorb the full reduction? In addition, can a state implement a new DSH Diversion program as part of the optional expansion? Can a state implement new DSH Diversion programs for services to the uninsured/uncompensated care services?
13. What are the effects of continuing uncompensated care if Medicaid not expanded
14. What will the increase in demand for health care do to prices for everyone?

15. What are the macro-economic effects on state economies by, for example, expanding employment?
16. What additional health care workers will be needed to create adequate access?
17. What incentives will employers have to move workers into expanded Medicaid
18. What incentives will states have to move beneficiaries into the exchanges?
19. Will states be able to pay exchange premiums for beneficiaries if they do not expand Medicaid?
20. What is the cost to the state of programs/services that would be paid under expanded Medicaid; e.g., community mental health?
21. Will states that previously expanded coverage to the childless adult group be eligible for enhanced FFP even if they decide not to proceed with further expansion to the optional adult group?
22. What is the formal process for exercising the option to expand? Is it a submission for approval to expand or a submission to opt of the expansion?

After a remarkable six hours of oral argument on ObamaCare before the Supreme Court, the stage is set for an historic ruling from the High Court on the future of the health law. The outcome will determine whether Washington continues to turn an infinite number of regulatory dials to try to control one sixth of our economy or whether innovation will be freed to allow transformative changes in medical technology, health care delivery, and financing.

We believe that freedom and the creative spirit will prevail.

Our fourth annual conference on the Value of Innovation in Health Care will showcase top experts from around the country and throughout the health sector who will tell us about the game-changing innovation to come. The Galen Institute never ceases in promoting policies that encourage innovation and patient-centered options for health care. Join us to learn about the exciting advances on the horizon.

December 29, 2011

Garth Splinter, MD
Medicaid Director
Oklahoma Health Care Authority
2401 NW 23rd Street
Suite 1A
Oklahoma City, OK 73107

Dear Dr. Splinter:

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), Office of the Inspector General (OIG) conducts evaluations to improve the integrity of HHS programs. OIG is conducting an evaluation to determine the extent to which States are prepared to implement the streamlined eligibility and enrollment requirements of Section 1413 (attached) of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA) by January 1, 2014. This evaluation will also determine the extent to which the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services' (CMS) guidance assists States in implementing the streamlined eligibility and enrollment requirements of the ACA.

In order to conduct this evaluation, we will request that each State complete a brief survey regarding the steps the State has taken or plans to take to implement Section 1413, the challenges the State anticipates with regard to implementing Section 1413, and the helpfulness of the CMS guidance the State has received regarding Section 1413. Please provide us with the name(s) of the staff who should respond to this survey for your State. The respondent(s) should be the staff who are most knowledgeable about the steps the State has taken or plans to take with regard to implementing the requirements of Section 1413, as well as the guidance received from CMS regarding streamlined eligibility and enrollment. There may be multiple respondents. The respondent(s) may be employed by the Medicaid agency or another agency in your State. If they are employed by the Medicaid agency, please provide their contact information, including name, address, telephone number, and email address. If they are employed by another agency in your State, please provide us with information for the appropriate point of contact at that agency. Please email the contact information to michala.walker@oig.hhs.gov by Friday, January 13, 2012.

One of the goals of this evaluation is to provide information to CMS on what information and guidance States still need to implement the requirements of Section 1413. Prompt responses to both the request for a contact person, and to the forthcoming online survey will ensure OIG provides timely information to CMS on this issue. The Inspector General Act [5 U.S.C. App 3, section 6(a)(1)] authorizes our access to this information. If you have questions or need additional information, please contact my office at 816-426-5959 and ask for a member of the State Readiness team.

Sincerely,

Brian T. Pattison
Regional Inspector General for Evaluation and Inspections

Attachment

Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act
Section 1413

Eligibility and Enrollment Systems

- The Secretary of HHS must establish a system in which residents of each State may apply for enrollment, receive a determination of eligibility, and participate in applicable State health subsidy programs.*
  - Eligibility and enrollment systems must ensure that individuals applying for any of these State health subsidy programs are enrolled in the correct program.
- * Section 2201 of ACA requires States to participate and comply with this requirement; we expect that most, if not all, States will establish their own eligibility and enrollment systems.

Application Forms

- Each State must use a single streamlined application form that may be:
  - used to apply for enrollment in all of its State health subsidy programs;
  - filed online, in person, or by mail, telephone, or facsimile;
  - filed with any of its State health subsidy programs; and
  - easily completed by applicants.

Data Sharing and Data Matching

- Each State must develop a secure electronic interface that allows sharing of eligibility data between all of its State health subsidy programs in order to coordinate and verify information regarding an applicant's eligibility.
- To the maximum extent practicable, each State health subsidy program shall establish, verify, and update eligibility using data matching arrangements, and determine applicant eligibility on the basis of reliable third party data.
- States must establish data sharing agreements with the Social Security Administration, the Internal Revenue Service, and the Department of Homeland Security.

Garth Splinter, MD
Medicaid Director
Oklahoma Health Care Authority
2401 NW 23rd Street
Oklahoma City, OK 73107

Dear Dr. Splinter:

The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA) requires many changes to Medicaid and other state health subsidy programs over the next few years. Both the Office of Inspector General (OIG) for the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and the U.S. Government Accountability Office (GAO) are conducting studies of changes to Medicaid eligibility required by ACA. The purpose of this letter is to inform you of two requests related to our respective studies that you and your staff will be receiving in the coming weeks. While OIG and GAO are coordinating our data collection activities for these two studies so as to avoid duplication to the greatest extent possible, they are separate projects and require separate responses. Please respond to each request as you receive them.

Within OIG, the Office of Evaluation and Inspections is conducting an evaluation to determine the extent to which states are prepared to implement the streamlined eligibility and enrollment requirements of Section 1413 of the ACA by January 1, 2014. This evaluation will also determine the extent to which the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services' (CMS) guidance assists states in implementing the streamlined eligibility and enrollment requirements of the ACA. For this evaluation, you will receive a request to identify a contact person knowledgeable about your state's preparations to implement Section 1413, and the guidance you have received regarding Section 1413. Then that contact person will receive a request to complete an online survey regarding those preparations and guidance.

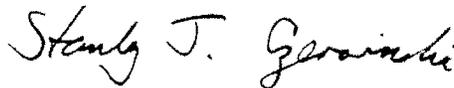

GAO is an independent, nonpartisan, federal agency that assists the U.S. Congress in evaluating federal programs. Congress has asked GAO to assess the status of states' efforts to implement Medicaid Expansion and establish American Health Benefit Exchanges by January 1, 2014. As part of this assessment, GAO will conduct a series of structured telephone interviews with Medicaid Directors in a number of selected states to discuss Medicaid expansion efforts. At the same time, GAO will administer an on-line survey to a designated budget representative in each of the 50 states to evaluate the implications of implementing Medicaid expansion and establishing health benefit exchanges on state budget planning efforts.

If you have questions regarding the OIG evaluation, please contact the office at 816-426-5959 and ask for a member of the state readiness team; if you have questions regarding the GAO study, please contact Brenda Rabinowitz, Assistant Director at 202-512-8706.

Sincerely,

Court holds that states have choice whether to join medicaid expansion

The Court's decision on the constitutionality of the Medicaid expansion is divided and complicated. The bottom line is that: (1) Congress acted constitutionally in offering states funds to expand coverage to millions of new individuals; (2) So states can agree to expand coverage in exchange for those new funds; (3) If the state accepts the expansion funds, it must obey by the new rules and expand coverage; (4) but a state can refuse to participate in the expansion without losing all of its Medicaid funds; instead the state will have the option of continue the its current, unexpanded plan as is.

The votes for this outcome are divided among several opinions. Three Justices – the Chief, Justice Kagan, and Justice Breyer – took the position that depriving a state of all of its Medicaid funding for refusing to agree to the new expansion would exceed Congress's power under the Spending Clause. Although Congress may attach conditions to federal funds, they concluded, it may not coerce states into accepting those conditions. And in this case, taking away all the states' funds for the entirety of its Medicaid program just because it disagreed with a piece of the program would be coercive. But the remedy for that constitutional violation is not to declare the expansion unconstitutional – such that even states that want to participate would not have the option. Instead, the plurality held that the provision of the statute that authorized the Government to cut off all funds for non-compliance with the expansion was unconstitutional. The result is that states can choose to participate in the expansion, must comply with the conditions attached to the new expansion funds if they take that new money, but states can also choose to continue to participate only in the unexpanded version of the program if they want.

Justices Ginsburg and Sotomayor would have held the entire expansion program constitutional, even the provision threatening to cut off all funding unless states agreed to the expansion. Their votes created a majority for the proposition that the overall expansion was constitutional, and that states could choose to participate in the expansion and would have to comply with the expansion conditions if they did.

But there was still no majority about what to do about the states that do not want to participate in the expansion – the Chief Justice's 3-Justice plurality voted to strike down the provision allowing the Government to withhold all funds from states that reject the expansion; Justices Ginsburg and Sotomayor voted to uphold it.

The deadlock was broken by the dissenters. Justice Scalia – writing on behalf of himself, and Justices Kennedy, Thomas, and Alito – agreed with the Chief's plurality that the threat to withhold all funds was unconstitutionally coercive. But they would have held that the consequence is that the entire expansion program should be stricken. The result would have been that even states that wanted to participate in the program could not. The plurality's approach of simply striking down the provision that allowed withholding all funds if the state refused the expansion was, in the dissenters' view, tantamount to rewriting the statute.

At this point, that meant that there were 2 votes to uphold the expansion in its entirety, 4 votes to strike the entire expansion down, and 3 votes to strike down only the provision withholding all funds for non-compliance with the expansion mandate. So where does that leave things?

Fortunately (for the sake of clarity at least), Justices Ginsburg and Sotomayor resolved the ambiguity by voting with the plurality on the remedy question. That is, these Justices voted that if the statute was unconstitutionally coercive, then the remedy would be only to strike down the all-or-nothing sanction.

The consequence was a bottom line of 7 Justices – the Chief, Breyer, Kagan and the four dissenters – finding the expansion unconstitutional. But a different majority – the Chief, Ginsburg, Breyer, Sotomayor and Kagan – held that the remedy for the violation was to strike down only the provision allowing the federal government to withhold all Medicaid funds unless a state agrees to the expansion.

All: Quick update on the Medicaid opinion.

1. CALL SCHEDULED FOR TODAY: We will host a call at 4:30 EST today to discuss moving parts with a team of experts. [REDACTED] access code [REDACTED]

2. PRESS: We realize many of you are torn with what to say regarding the Medicaid expansion piece in your public states. We request that you continue indicate that your state is studying the opinion. We will discuss this today on the call. We will discuss Medicaid expansion, MOEs, healthcare exchanges and a number of other questions you might have. While the expansion piece is voluntary, Medicaid is still a regulatory mess and other pieces of PPACA for states appear to be intact.

Thanks,

Court holds that states have choice whether to join medicaid expansion

The Court's decision on the constitutionality of the Medicaid expansion is divided and complicated. The bottom line is that: (1) Congress acted constitutionally in offering states funds to expand coverage to millions of new individuals; (2) So states can agree to expand coverage in exchange for those new funds; (3) If the state accepts the expansion funds, it must obey by the new rules and expand coverage; (4) but a state can refuse to participate in the expansion without losing all of its Medicaid funds; instead the state will have the option of continue the its current, unexpanded plan as is.

Oklahoma City is Quickly Becoming the Medical Tourism Destination for Oncology Treatment

Oklahoma City Market Overview Now Available from HealthLeaders-InterStudy

Press Release Source: HealthLeaders-InterStudy On Tuesday May 3, 2011, 10:00 am EDT

NASHVILLE, Tenn.--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- HealthLeaders-InterStudy, a leading provider of managed care market intelligence, reports that Oklahoma City is quickly becoming the medical tourism destination for oncology care in the United States. According to the recent Oklahoma City Market Overview, health systems in Oklahoma City are offering proton therapy treatments that are only available in a handful of locations nationwide, and the focus on this specialty radiation treatment in this area will generate additional research funding.

OU Medicine will open a cancer center offering proton therapy in late 2011, positioning itself to compete with market leaders INTEGRIS Health/ProCure Proton Therapy Center. Patients from 23 states, as well as international patients, have already sought treatment at INTEGRIS. While two proton therapy centers will make this location a hot spot, officials maintain that supply will continue to exceed demand. Other health systems in the area will need to amp up their cancer services in order to compete for market share, such as Mercy Health System of Oklahoma, which has already hired 11 oncologists to compete with the two largest system's cancer programs.

"Health systems in the Oklahoma City market are really carving out a name for themselves in cancer care, thanks to the focus on proton therapy oncology treatment," said HealthLeaders-InterStudy Market Analyst Jenny Kerr. "As the city becomes a destination for cancer care, the pharmaceutical industry may find more clinical trials and pharmacy opportunities across the entire state."

In addition to providing detailed analysis of oncology care expansion in the Oklahoma City market, the Oklahoma City Market Overview provides local-level insights about:

- The movement by providers toward programs such as medical homes
- Cities across the state that have become hot spots for facility expansions
- Proposed hospital fees and how it would affect the amount of federal matching funds the state receives to run its Medicaid program

"Need surgery? Try the heartland.

By Anne Kates Smith
Kiplinger's Personal Finance
Sunday, January 4, 2009; Page F03

You've heard of medical patients traveling abroad to save on everything from hip replacements to nose jobs. But how about heading to Wichita or Oklahoma City? More Americans are discovering medical tourism right here in the United States.

In 2007, Thomas Van Buskirk, 64, a chiropractor in Oakland, Calif., had a blocked carotid artery and no insurance. He'd have paid $70,000 to have surgery at a Bay Area hospital, and $12,000 plus travel expenses to do it in India. Then he found Oklahoma Heart Hospital, which did the surgery for just $15,000.

"The hospital was new, all-digital, with good food, and the doctor had done hundreds of these surgeries," he says.

Brokers such as Vancouver-based North American Surgery, which helped Van Buskirk, and traditional medical-tourism outfits, such as Healthbase, in Boston, are connecting patients with U.S. hospitals willing to compete on price with providers overseas and across town.

Galichia Heart Hospital, in Wichita, recently lowered its price for a coronary bypass to a flat $10,000. The hospital discounts a number of procedures for patients willing to pay cash upfront, including a hip replacement for $12,000 -- about one-third of the going U.S. rate. Discounts stem in part from a building boom that is now putting pressure on administrators to fill new facilities.

For now, many domestic medical tourists are uninsured. But Towers Perrin consultant Michael Taylor says interest has picked up among employers. And Healthplace America markets a travel-for-care benefit directly to health plans that promises discounts, including travel and lodging, on surgeries performed in 10 U.S. cities"

Travel Market Report

Tips & Trends

HUNGARY, TURKEY, OKLAHOMA SEE GAINS IN MEDICAL TRAVEL

by Nick Verrastro

May 19, 2011

Oklahoma City Attracting Oncology Patients

Oklahoma City is becoming a leading destination for oncology care in the U.S., according to HealthLeaders-InterStudy, which provides managed care market intelligence to the pharmaceutical industry. Health systems in Oklahoma City are offering proton therapy treatments that are only available in a handful of locations nationwide, HealthLeaders' recent Oklahoma City Market Overview reported.

OU Medicine will open a cancer center offering proton therapy later this year, positioning itself to compete with the Integris Health/ProCure Proton Therapy Center in Oklahoma City, according to the report. Patients from 23 states, as well as international patients, have already sought treatment at Integris. Other Oklahoma City health systems are likely to beef up their cancer services to compete for market share, according to HealthLeaders. Mercy Health System of Oklahoma has already hired 11 additional oncologists.

Regional Medical Tourism Will Drive Growth

Regional medical tourism will drive the industry's growth in the future, according to Ian Youngman, a writer and researcher specializing in insurance and health care issues. In a recent blogpost on the International Medical Travel Journal site, Youngman makes the case that rising travel costs due to increased gas prices, and the political/cultural influences shaping national health delivery systems, and other factors are changing the direction of medical travel. Europeans will stay in or near Europe, North Americans will travel for medical care to Central and South America, and Asian, African and Middle Eastern medical travelers will seek local treatment, he said. The U.K. based Youngman was a co-founder of The General Insurance Market Research Association in Britain.

Youngman sees an emerging opportunity for medical tourism in a shift of the costs of preventative medicine to individuals. "Doctors are now openly arguing something they would not have discussed a few years ago - whether people should be forced to pay for self-imposed health problems from obesity, smoking, failure to exercise etc. - and the state withdraw help," he wrote. "This is where medical tourism can take over from state healthcare, as individuals are forced/encouraged to look after their bodies. People service their cars regularly and pay for repairs and improvements, leaving insurance only to pay for accident damage. So the logic is that state healthcare should pay for the unexpected, but not for the annual service, running repairs, cosmetic improvements or damage brought on by areas that people can control (smoking, obesity, lack of exercise, children)."

Think of a trip out of town, with a package that includes air fare, a hotel stay for two — and a visit to a hospital.

Domestic medical tourism, or sending patients out of town for common procedures, is just starting to take hold in the United States. And one local insurance carrier already is on board.

Overland Park-based Allied National Inc. is one of 20 insurance carriers contracting with a nationwide network of hospitals that perform back surgeries, hip replacements and other common, nonemergency procedures.

The small-group benefits company started its contract with the 35-hospital BridgeHealth Medical Inc. network in January 2010. Since then, it has sent two members from Amarillo, Texas, for knee replacement surgery in Oklahoma City.

The insurance company saved about $11,000 on each procedure — even after travel, food and lodging costs. Average cost savings range from 20 to 45 percent, said Vic Lazzaro, CEO of BridgeHealth Medical.

Lazzaro said another benefit is that the hospitals in the network rate among the tops in their specialties, increasing the likelihood of a good outcome.

The network's hospitals offer higher discounts — reaching into the 65 percent range — to attract patients they otherwise wouldn't see, Allied CEO Bill Ashley said. Those savings, coupled with savings from better outcomes, more than offset the cost of travel for the patient and a caregiver and can help reduce premiums.

Allied is unique among its Kansas peers in offering the concept. Larger benefits companies say domestic medical tourism has yet to catch the eye of area employers, which deem it an aggressive cost-cutting tool that still has a short track record.

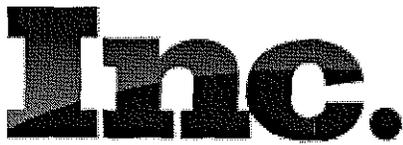

"Most of my clients here have a wait-and-see attitude toward medical tourism," said Mark Whiting, a principal in Mercer's Kansas City office. "A lot of people are looking at it and thinking about it for down the road, but for the time being, there's not a lot of activity."

But for smaller carriers, the concept presents a good opportunity, Ashley said.

"Part of how we compete against the major carriers out there is by being innovative and flexible," he said.

Domestic Medical Tourism

How one company is saving businesses big bucks on employee medical treatments

By Issie Lapowsky | May 31, 2011

What can be done about soaring health care costs? There's no single answer, of course. But BridgeHealth Medical seems to be providing at least one piece of the complex puzzle: domestic medical tourism.

Launched in 2007, the 20-employee company, based in Greenwood Village, Colorado, negotiates discounted rates with hospitals and extends those rates to businesses, which in turn encourage their employees to travel around the U.S. for treatment. BridgeHealth started as an international medical tourism company but turned to the domestic market in 2010. "The feedback we were getting from employers was, 'I'm not sure I want to send my employees on an airplane for 10 hours. But two hours, that's OK,'" says CEO Vic Lazzaro, a former UnitedHealthcare executive.

BridgeHealth won't discuss its revenue, but the company says sales are up 25 percent since it shifted its attention to the domestic market, and domestic sales now account for more than 80 percent of the company's business. BridgeHealth partners with about 20 insurance companies that administer health benefits for self-insured employers. Thanks to those partnerships, BridgeHealth has struck deals with 30 hospitals and medical centers around the country and sells its services to more than 200 businesses. "It's just a good benefit," says Cindy Meyers, benefits manager for Stephens Media, a Las Vegas-based company that saved $70,000 in its first year with BridgeHealth. "It was a benefit that could be a cost savings to our employees and our medical plan."

Domestic medical tourism is still a tiny market. BridgeHealth's largest competitor is an 11-employee company called Surgical Trip, based in Boca Raton, Florida. It works with 10 employers and three insurance carriers. Still, Paul Keckley, executive director of the Deloitte Center for Health Solutions, predicts that "this is where the health care industry is going to migrate." He says domestic medical tourism could easily surpass the $2.1 billion that Americans spend outside the U.S. on health care.

Propelling BridgeHealth's growth is a three-way agreement in which all sides seem to come out ahead. Companies with self-funded insurance plans benefit with, typically, 20 percent to 40 percent savings on such surgeries as knee replacements and heart bypasses. Patients willing to get on a plane benefit, too. Because employers save so much, they encourage their employees to use the BridgeHealth plan by waiving copayments and deductibles. And hospitals get access to patients they would otherwise not have, allowing them to fill empty beds.

Katharine Anderson, a network analyst at United Utilities, a telecommunications company in Anchorage, Alaska, chose a clinic in La Jolla, California, for surgery to fix a bone spur in her shoulder. BridgeHealth negotiated the terms and United paid for Anderson's surgery, hotel room, meals, and other costs and flew her back to Anchorage, first class, a week later.

Even with those expenses and BridgeHealth's 15 percent fee on United's savings, the company spent just $16,000, less than half the $39,000 it would have cost to do the procedure in a local hospital. Anderson saved as well. Had she had the surgery in Alaska, her plan would have required her to shell out $1,500 to cover her deductible and copayment. "I looked into the BridgeHealth plan, and I thought, That's the only way I'll be able to afford this," Anderson says.

Traveling to distant states for major surgery, though, can have downsides for patients, says Judy Dugan, a health care researcher at Consumer Watchdog. She worries about sending sick people on a plane, because flying increases the risk of blood clots, even in healthy people. She also notes that a procedure may require postoperative care in the patient's hometown, but many doctors are reluctant to see someone else's patient.

Those drawbacks aside, proponents argue that the practice of medical travel will ultimately make for a better health care system. "Competition is good, especially if you're competing on the basis of quality and price, not either-or," Keckley says. BridgeHealth works only with top-quartile providers, as rated by CareChex, a hospital-rating division of the Delta Group, and Keckley believes that will be the norm as the industry grows. "There's liability involved if you refer someone to a place with inferior quality," he says. "So these companies will have to say, 'We can offer a better outcome, and, oh, by the way, you can also save a lot of money.' That's a pretty great position to be in."

Barbour Testimony: Salt Lake City, Utah

Senator Hatch and Members of the Committee, thank you for the privilege of being a part of this important hearing on Medicaid. Governors have unique and valuable perspectives on this complex entitlement program, and we appreciate your taking the time to discuss this effort during the Senate recess.

As debt reduction talks continue in Washington, it is fiscally irresponsible to add hundreds of billions in new costs to a Medicaid program that is already overburdened and unsustainable. We must address meaningful health care reform. The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) has created widespread uncertainty.

Medicaid is strangling state budgets now and causing business owners to halt job creation and investment because they can't know their costs or obligations for PPACA employee health care. The job numbers last week emphasized it. The June unemployment rate stands at 9.2 percent, and the economy only created 18,000 jobs last month and 25,000 for the month before. Labor market recovery once again has not happened this summer, with job creation essentially flat for the second straight month.

States went into their budget seasons facing a combined shortfall of $86 billion, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures. The stimulus funding cliff and Medicaid mandates forced states to choose healthcare spending over other state priorities like education and public safety. On July 7, 2011, a chart in the Wall Street Journal indicated Medicaid comprises an average 22 percent of state budgets, followed by K-12 education (21 percent) and higher education (10 percent). A second chart demonstrated that K-12 and higher education each bore more than twice as many budget cuts as Medicaid during mid-year budget cuts in the last fiscal year, even though Medicaid comprises a larger share of the average state's budget.

Governors, in bipartisan fashion, have asked Congress for relief from onerous Maintenance of Effort requirements both in January and as recently this past Saturday. On July 9, Governors Gregoire and Heineman wrote on behalf of the nation's governors, "Budget challenges have driven many states to implement reductions in Medicaid programs and the severe limitations on further reductions posed by federal maintenance-of-effort requirements and the proposed access regulations, are causing state Medicaid spending to rise even faster without increased flexibility for governors to administer the program to best meet the needs of their individual states."

As Congress considers tightening its belt and reducing federal spending for Medicaid, remember to grant the flexibility states need to provide health care to the poor without overburdening taxpayers. Otherwise, states will be forced now to increase state taxes or reduce funding for education, transportation and public safety. If federal Medicaid spending is reduced — and flexibility from Washington's rules is not granted, the most likely, if not the only permissible, source of savings would be additional reductions in payments to doctors and hospitals. This option would force states to run afoul of the proposed PPACA requirements regarding physician access. Washington is setting states up for failure.

Exacerbating the problem, CMS has failed to provide reliable guidance and direction on just about all of the PPACA changes. The most recent proposed regulations on exchanges is full of holes. The Administration needs to be honest with states and the American people about the federal government's own readiness to meet the requirements of PPACA.

In addition, recent information from CMS about setting Medicaid rates and access will burden states. What states need is freedom from Washington to focus on patients – not new mandates from Washington to fill out more paperwork. In addition, the delays in guidance about Health Information Technology initiatives hinder states' ability to begin the program. In fact, states are required to implement some mandates within weeks after CMS issues final regulations. This is unrealistic.

On May 23, 2011, Senator Hatch and Chairman Upton wrote the nation's governors and requested our input to modernize the Medicaid program. Senator Hatch, you wrote — and I quote, “We are concerned that the program is failing patients; is a target for waste, fraud, and abuse; and is bankrupting both state and federal governments.” I agree. The program is broken and must be fixed.

Governors appreciate your reaching out to discuss needed health care reform. Such discussions never occurred during the debate of the PPACA despite multiple requests from governors to be included in discussions. In fact, as you might remember, governors from both parties were excluded from a White House-arranged meeting on February 25, 2010, at the Blair House to discuss health care reform. This meeting was pitched as a bipartisan, open and honest discussion about needed reform, yet governors, critical stakeholders in this infamous reform, were not present.

Unlike the bipartisan Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act, or welfare reform of the 1990s, where governors and states were part of the solution, PPACA was an exclusive, partisan effort that expanded a broken system while placing billions of taxpayer dollars at risk every year. Americans are no closer to affordable health care with the passage of PPACA than they were before the debate began.

You and your colleagues here today have taken a different approach. In May, you requested governors' feedback on our challenges and sought ideas to make Medicaid better. As you suggested, Republican governors representing 29 states and 55.4 percent of the population submitted written recommendations on June 13. I appreciate the opportunity to share with you the challenges states face in implementing this complex program. Each governor faces a unique set of problems regarding Medicaid, making a one-size-fits-all solution impossible.

To that end, I am here today to discuss the Republican governors' seven guiding principles included in our June 13 response to you and Chairman Upton. We continue to believe that Governors must have the flexibility to make program adjustments in a timely manner, given our ever-changing economy. Governors are ready to work with Congress and the Administration to develop a better path, one that gives states greater leeway in determining how to provide safety net health care while allowing states to be good stewards of taxpayer dollars.

First, states and territories are best able to make decisions about the design of their health care systems based on their respective needs, cultures and values.

PPACA will add $26 billion in new administrative costs alone to Medicaid over the next decade. The high price tag will be split almost evenly with $14 billion to be paid by the federal government and $12 billion to be paid by the states. By 2019, administration costs are expected to reach $30.5 billion and continue growing at an annual rate of 5.2 percent. Such expensive red tape is not only onerous but unnecessary. Through greater flexibility in the management of Medicaid, states might be able to reduce substantially the hidden tax increase that forced expansion of the program will impose.

More simply and directly put: what works in Vermont, may not work in Mississippi; and what works in Arizona, may not work in Florida. We are all very different, both culturally and demographically, and should have the flexibility to deal with the health of our people.

The federal government's efforts to tie our hands do not account for state-specific needs, nor does it improve care. It simply imposes extra expense on taxpayers.

Second, states and territories also should have the opportunity to innovate by using flexible, accountable financing mechanisms that are transparent and hold states accountable for efficiency and quality health care. Such mechanisms may include a block grant, a capped allotment outside of a waiver, or other accountable and transparent financing approaches.

The FY2012 House Budget proposal recommends a federal block grant. As a governor, I appreciate the House putting this concept on the table. As Congress works to get federal spending under control, I understand that cuts must be made. Governors would be willing to accept cuts to their Medicaid programs if Congress would give us the flexibility to run our programs efficiently. We believe that we can run a quality Medicaid program at a lesser cost-saving the federal and state government's money.

In 2009, Rhode Island entered into a historic agreement with the Bush Administration where the State agreed to cap Medicaid spending for a five-year period (thus giving the federal government budget certainty) in return for the federal government granting substantially greater flexibility than Medicaid rules traditionally allow.

Rhode Island collapsed 11 different waiver programs under a single Global Waiver. That empowered state policy makers to create a consumer-centered health care delivery system that assures beneficiaries have access to services and supports more appropriate and most needed care in the least restrictive and most cost-effective setting.

Contrary to what some in Washington think, state lawmakers and policy makers are capable of making informed decisions. Rhode Island used the flexibility to begin rebalancing its long-term care system by offering more home- and community-based options for seniors and the disabled, mandated care coordination management to achieve better health outcomes and integrate service, and institute value-based purchasing approaches program-wide to ensure quality and access at a price taxpayers can afford. And Rhode Island managed to accomplish all of this, save approximately $100 million in two fiscal years without changing eligibility guidelines.

In return for total flexibility in managing my Medicaid program, I would agree to a block grant-type funding mechanism of the FMAP to Mississippi capped at, say, two or three percent per annual increase, or at one half of the average national increase, saving the federal government more than $100 million a year compared to the average increase in federal Medicaid costs nationally. I emphasize "total flexibility" to run our program, but note, since my state is about one percent of the nation, that deal nationally would save about $10 billion a year in federal spending. Since every state is different, states will have different opinions regarding the implementation of block grants, but such flexibility is critical, and the conversation regarding block grants needs to occur between Congress and Governors. What worked in Rhode Island may not be the solution in Mississippi, but it should be left to state policy makers -- who balance budgets and actually manage the Medicaid program -- to decide.

The status quo must be changed. The current process, which states are required to follow in order to make changes to their programs (either via a state plan amendment or a waiver), is time consuming, costly and challenging to navigate. States should not have to kowtow to CMS to request permission to do what is right for their unique situations. From a bureaucratic standpoint, CMS's process moves at a snail's pace. A state may wait months or years for CMS to approve or deny program changes for immediate needs.

The renewal of the Healthier Mississippi Demonstration Waiver is a good example of CMS's lethargic response to states' seeking to tailor their programs to meet the needs of their people. The Healthier Mississippi Waiver provides coverage for a segment of the aged and disabled population with incomes at or below 135 percent of the Federal Poverty Level (FPL) who are not eligible for Medicare and do not otherwise qualify for Medicaid. Medicaid began submitting its renewal documents in July 2009 and did not receive final approval until October 2010, 15 months later. And this was for renewal of an already successful program providing care to the elderly and disabled that only required minor adjustments to the original waiver.

My colleagues in other states have experienced similar interaction with CMS.

Texas's 1115 concept paper was submitted in April 2008 and negotiations broke down more than a year ago because CMS wanted them to spend more money and expand eligibility. Texas wanted to provide care for more low-income individuals in the private market.

One of the most visible and humorous examples of this bureaucracy is from my friend, Governor Hebert. After working with CMS for 9 months on a waiver and hearing no response, Utah received an email denying their request. Governor Herbert did not receive resolution until he personally lobbied the President back in February when the governors visited the White House. Should states have to go through such hurdles to manage their programs?

The nation has lost the benefits of innovation in the past few years. Look back to the creation of the state Children's Health Insurance Program. No one knows its history better than you, Senator Hatch. And no one deserves more credit for its creation than you. But SCHIP at the federal level was preceded by innovation by states--Florida, New York, and Pennsylvania. SCHIP is an overwhelmingly bipartisan and popular endorsement of state flexibility and capped federal allotments. Some of us dare to call this model for what it is--a block grant.

After the creation of SCHIP, the creativity of states was unleashed during the Bush years. Call the roll across the country and you will find innovation in states as diverse as Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia, Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Indiana, Iowa, and Idaho. These were states led by Democrats and Republicans alike. Ask former governor, now Secretary of Agriculture, Tom Vilsack about his ideas on basic health insurance coverage. Ask Phil Bredeesen how important flexibility granted by the Bush Administration was to his Administration. Now try to name states that have been granted innovative, comprehensive waivers during the current Administration,

Look at the expansion of home and community-based services during the Bush years. States accelerated the shift from institutional care to community based care because they were allowed to do so in their own way at their own pace.

Third, Medicaid should be focused on quality, value-based and patient-centered programs that work in concert to improve the health of our states' citizens and drive value over volume, quality over quantity, and, at the same time contain costs.

The Medicaid Program is broken from both a budget and health outcomes perspective. The growth in federal Medicaid medical service spending is unsustainable, increasing almost 8 percent annually during the past 10 years. In Mississippi, the PPACA will result in a massive expansion of Medicaid, which is projected to cost Mississippi taxpayers up to an additional $1.7 billion over the next decade despite little spending during the first four of those years. This increase will add 390,000 to 400,000 new individuals to Mississippi's Medicaid rolls, a two-thirds increase, meaning one-in-three Mississippians will be on the state's Medicaid program. With full implementation by 2020, PPACA will cost Mississippi's taxpayers $443 million a year, increasing our state Medicaid cost by half and far outpacing the growth of our revenues. The cost will only rise in subsequent years and the collective impact to states will be $118 billion through 2023.

In Mississippi we offer every Medicaid beneficiary a free annual physical exam. Very few accept our offer, and federal law prohibits us from requiring them to do so. In my state, we have some of the highest incidences of obesity, heart disease, diabetes and cancer. If we could require Medicaid beneficiaries to have an annual exam, it would allow for early detection and proper treatment, improving the quality of life for thousands of Mississippians. We also believe it would save money within a year or two. Preventive care is obviously important, so we are currently partnering with the Mississippi Healthcare Alliance, a physician-led organization that is helping us promote screenings and physical exams through community outreach and meetings with physicians. However, Medicaid programs should have the flexibility to require beneficiaries to get an annual exam to ensure our goal of promoting the use of primary and preventive care. As it stands, we cannot provide incentives to Medicaid recipients to encourage healthier behaviors without going through the infamous waiver process. States want to focus on patients and improve their programs. The problem is that Washington gets in the way.

Fourth, states and territories must be allowed to streamline and simplify the eligibility process to ensure coverage for those most in need, and states must be able to enforce reasonable cost sharing for those able to pay.

States should invest in technology and improved capabilities to determine eligibility; however, states should set their own eligibility thresholds. The dramatic expansion of states' Medicaid populations in 2014 will greatly worsen an already costly challenge: Tracking individuals and families.

For example, after I became Governor, Mississippi began requiring face-to-face redetermination of eligibility for most Medicaid beneficiaries. The face-to-face meeting allows Medicaid a one-on-one interview to educate and assist eligible beneficiaries with enrollment in programs. During the in-person interview, discussions take place with other household members and if they qualify for Medicaid services, they are enrolled. For example, a beneficiary may be offered information on our Mississippi Cool Kids Program, or, as you might know it, the Early Periodic Screening, Diagnosis and Treatment Program, which provides a comprehensive array of medically necessary services.

The state allows exceptions to the face-to-face redetermination for nursing home residents, foster care children, disabled children living at home and anyone home bound, such as an elderly adult in a home- and-community based waiver program. As a whole, this process has proven very successful. Mississippi has a 0.1 percent eligibility error rate, the third lowest in the country, compared to the national average at 6.74 percent. Taxpayers are paying an average of more than $6,000 for each person on Medicaid in Mississippi for a plan that is more generous than most private plans. I believe an annual review to ensure those receiving Medicaid benefits are truly eligible is in the best interest of both beneficiaries and taxpayers. We think it is important to provide the right services to the people, but note that the Maintenance of Effort provisions get in the way of other states implementing this policy at this time. Allowing states to implement what Mississippi has done ensures that care gets to those who truly need it. If the eligibility error rate fell from 6.74 percent to 1.74 percent, far above Mississippi's .1 percent, federal and state governments would save a combined $20 billion a year.

Secretary Sebelius noted in a February 23, 2011, letter that Congress gave states additional flexibility to impose cost sharing in Medicaid in the form of co-payments, deductibles, coinsurance and other similar charges without requiring states to seek federal approval or a waiver. However, this option is available only for the population above 133 percent FPL, or the optional population, not the mandatory population. Further, these federal regulations do not allow a provider to deny services to an individual on the basis of the individual's ability to pay. No cost-sharing measures can be imposed on the bulk of Medicaid enrollees.

The federal government should give states the flexibility to increase enrollee cost sharing and permit cost sharing for all enrollees. For example, more than half of Mississippi Medicaid recipients are children. When the federal government ties states' hands by not allowing cost sharing for children's care and guarantees service regardless of payment, cost-sharing measures become pointless.

Enforceable co-pays and steeper tiers of co-pays for all enrollees are examples of how Medicaid could incentivize beneficiaries to choose an equivalent service at a lower cost. It is important for consumers to have some personal responsibility for their own health care. For example, if a Medicaid enrollee wants a certain drug advertised on television that costs 10 times as much as a generic brand, which is its molecular twin, a state should be able to charge a $20 or $50 co-pay for the brand name drug and $1 co-pay for the generic drug, unless a doctor gives a medically necessary reason why the generic is unacceptable. A patient or a parent will choose the $1 route almost every time, resulting in the same quality of health care but at much lower costs for the taxpayer. This is done for Americans with private insurance every day.

Other states are working to shift their programs to more a preventative care mode. Utah has submitted a waiver which would allow them to increase copays for beneficiaries and move providers away from fee-for-service payment model. Louisiana is working on one waiver to create a coordinated care system (Coordinated Care Networks) and another waiver to combine care for at-risk children that includes Medicaid, Juvenile Justice and Education. My other neighbor, Alabama, has a state-of-the-art Maternity Care program that coordinates care for pregnant women. This program has saved Alabama taxpayers money and improved care. Governors could do much more with improved flexibility and better tools in our toolbox.

Senator Hatch, please remind your colleagues that the majority of Medicaid spending occurs because states have expanded eligibility and services beyond the federal entitlement. In response to state pleas for flexibility as states were confronted with their funding crises, CMS basically told states they can cut certain optional eligibility groups and optional benefits. That is true from a legal perspective but far from helpful. Prescription drugs are an optional benefit under federal law. Home and community based services are optional. To tell states that we can entirely remove optional eligibility groups but we cannot re-determine eligibility more frequently or be trusted with figuring out how much of a co-payment to charge to encourage use of generics rather than brand name drugs is misguided and short-sighted. We applaud your efforts to secure relief from the MOE. The statutory provision is difficult enough but the CMS interpretation which is even more restrictive than the law undermines the Administration's credibility when federal officials talk about flexibility.

Fifth, states and territories can provide Medicaid recipients a choice in their health care coverage plans, just as many have in the private market, if they are able to leverage the existing insurance marketplace through innovative support mechanisms.

States should have the ability to reward individuals for participating in health promotion or disease prevention activities without having to go through a third-party contractor, and we should look for ways to provide easier access to private insurance for Medicaid clients who would prefer to access the commercial market in lieu of Medicaid. Policy makers could consider allowing vouchers for Medicaid recipients.

The federal government doesn't need to tell states how to leverage the existing marketplace; they need to give us the tools and allow us the flexibility to design systems to enhance the private market through innovative support mechanisms - which may look different in all 50 states.

In Mississippi, I have supported a conservative, market-based health insurance exchange that does not include subsidies or an individual mandate, much like that of Utah. We have more than 135,000 small businesses employees who could be served through such a mechanism, covering more people and providing a means for private coverage to follow the person, not the job.

Mississippi also has one of the most successful risk pools in the country, covering 3,600 individuals. Before PPACA passed, thirty-five states, including Mississippi, already operated high-risk pools covering more than 200,000 Americans. The federal government decided state risk pools weren't enough and through PPACA, allocated $5 billion and required new duplicated risk pools to be established. That subsidized program in theory would allow more people to switch to a less-expensive option. CBO predicted 200,000 people, who had been denied coverage because of pre-existing conditions, would be covered by the new federal risk pool between 2011 and 2013. They were wrong. As of April 30, 2011, there are a total of 21,454 individuals utilizing the federal high-risk pool and 75 of them are Mississippians.

Sixth, territories must be ensured full integration into the federal health care system so they can provide health care coverage to those in need with the flexibility afforded to the states.

Currently, Puerto Rico's federal share is only thirty five percent, putting a strain on the local budget that limits Puerto Rico's ability to offer the range of services States offer. Governor Fortuno tells me that Puerto Rico is also the only jurisdiction in the United States in which seniors are not automatically enrolled in Part B of Medicare, causing many seniors to opt into the program after the enrollment period ends, at which point they must also pay substantial late enrollment penalties. Puerto Ricans have a distinguished history of serving in the Armed Forces, but they are denied coverage in Tricare Premium, the best health policy for our men and women in uniform.

There is no justification for these disparities. The 3.8 million natural born US citizens in Puerto Rico deserve the right to have the same benefits of our national health care program, including having the flexibility to adequately implement a state health care program.

Seventh, states must have greater flexibility in eligibility, financing and service delivery in order to provide long-term services and support that keep pace with the people Medicaid serves. New federal requirements threaten to stifle state innovation and investment. In addition, since dual eligibles now constitute 39 percent of Medicaid spending, Medicare policies that shift costs to the states must be reversed and the innovative power of states should be rewarded by a shared-savings program that allows full flexibility to target and deliver services, which are cost effective for both state and federal taxpayers.

One way Mississippi wants to improve long-term care is a specialty-skilled nursing facility for children. There is a need in Mississippi for a specialty-skilled nursing facility for the care of medically complex and fragile children. The state wanted to use Civil Money Penalty Funds (CMP) as start-up money for the development of this specialty-skilled nursing facility for children. Prior to PPACA, states were not required to seek CMS approval to use CMP funds. With the passage of PPACA, the use of CMPs were expanded, but utilizing the funds now requires CMS approval. Mississippi petitioned CMS to use the CMP funds for the specialty-skilled facility and the request was denied.

We know what we need, and we have a plan to get children who require ventilation services out of a hospital into a more home-like setting, but CMS is preventing us from getting there even though the money is in the CMP account to pay for it . This is just another example of CMS not allowing states to be innovative or granting the necessary flexibility to make each Medicaid program meet individual states' needs.

Another example of how the cost of the Medicare program is being shifted to states is in the Medicare Part D 'clawback'. States must pay a share of this Medicare benefit in addition to being required to pay for some drugs not covered in this program for those dual eligibles. In addition, Medicare only covers nursing home services if skilled care, such as active therapy, is needed and only for 100 days, not if the person just simply needs 24/7 care. The burden of nursing home care after the 100 days is borne by the state's Medicaid program.

Secretary Sebelius has opined that flexibility is at the states' disposal to control costs. Although there are avenues states currently can utilize to try to make changes to their programs, making these changes is often lengthy, time consuming and burdensome to states. CMS continuously tells states to be creative and flexible in developing new programs and implementing changes to existing programs to provide smarter care choices. However, all of these things require CMS approval. They shouldn't.

On Friday, July 8, Secretary Sebelius announced a demonstration project with states to address the challenge of serving our citizens who are eligible for both Medicare and Medicaid, the so-called "dual eligibles." At the state level, we know a great deal about the dual eligibles, we know they are among the most medically complex and poorest among us. The costs to provide them with the health care they need are no doubt expensive because it is not unusual to find they have 5, 10, even 15 different medical conditions. But they are also costly because no one is managing their care. They are typically on their own and face difficulties in navigating through the health care complex by themselves. "FFS" typically means fee-for-service. But it also means "fend for self." These are the least capable to fend for self. In addition to complex medical needs, when you look at the characteristics of the dual eligibles, 54 percent have no high school diploma compared to 22 percent of non-duals.

Changes to Medicare policies impact Medicaid as well because Medicaid fills the gaps in Medicare coverage by paying for premiums, cost-sharing, and additional benefits, most especially long-term care that Medicare does not cover. When Medicare acts, there is a reaction within Medicaid. The so-called "doc fix" that seems to perpetually vex the Congress has a spill over effect onto Medicaid. The proposal to raise the age of Medicare eligibility will keep millions on full Medicaid for a longer period of time. Washington needs to stop masking the full costs of its decisions by passing costs onto states.

The demagoguery of proposals to reform Medicare must stop as well. We know that Medicare meets only about 60 percent of a beneficiary's health care expenses which is why more than 90 percent of Medicare beneficiaries have some type of supplemental coverage, either through retiree benefits, private medi-gap insurance, or, all too often, Medicaid.

States and the federal government need to start a serious discussion about how best to serve the dual eligibles at the best value to the taxpayers.

Although the new Medi-Medi project is intended to address fraud and abuse by sharing data between Medicare and Medicaid, having the duals lends itself to abuse for providers to bill both Medicare and Medicaid for services. The Government Accountability Office (GAO) just recently highlighted the missed opportunities to combat waste, fraud, and abuse because no one is looking at Medicare and Medicaid data simultaneously. Once payment is made and out the door, you will never fully recover the taxpayers' money. If Congress is at all serious about significantly lowering the loss of funds due to improper payments, give us the Medicare data for the dual eligibles on a real time basis.

As a condition of eligibility, individuals should be required to apply for all Medicare benefits. This is commonsense. Medicaid is supposed to be the payer of last resort so individuals should be expected to make use of all other resources before turning to Medicaid. Mississippi does this now; it is in our state plan. However, it would be easier if this did not require federal approval.

CONCLUSION:

There are three primary factors that drive Medicaid costs for states -- eligibility, provider rates and utilization of services. Recent federal actions, the MOE restrictions in PPACA and the proposed access regulations regarding provider rates, prohibit states from exercising any real ability to control two of the three factors. States have limited control over utilization through the prior authorization process, but I know every Governor here does not want to sacrifice an individual's health to ensure the solvency of the program. In addition, the Obama Administration is proposing a blended rate to fund the federal share and, in effect, the state share, of the Medicaid program. States will suffer under this plan because it simply shifts more costs to the states without giving states any flexibility to design their own programs. It is unrealistic and unfair to think that states can manage their Medicaid programs when the federal government permits the states no flexibility in designing and no flexibility in administering their programs while continuing to push the ever-growing costs for the program down to the states. At the end of the day, states will be saddled with a Medicaid program that is significantly different than the one states signed up for 40 years ago. States will be forced to pay higher rates to providers, states will be forced to enroll individuals who are significantly above the poverty thresholds, states will have less federal financial support and states will have no flexibility to control their own costs. In short, Mr. Chairman, the Administration's constraints regarding eligibility and provider rates at the expense of economy, efficiency and flexibility will lock states into an unaffordable and unsustainable health care system that is destined to fail.

Appeals Court Dismisses Virginia's Challenge to ObamaCare

FILE: In this Dec. 13, 2010 photo, Virginia Attorney General Kenneth Cuccinelli speaks about the ruling from U.S. District Judge Henry E. Hudson, who decided in favor of the attorney general's claim that the individual mandate in the health care law is unconstitutional.

A federal appeals court on Thursday rejected Virginia's challenge to President Obama's health care law, saying in a ruling that the state doesn't have a right to bring a lawsuit.

The unanimous decision from the three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals overturns a lower court's decision to declare the law unconstitutional and is the second appellate court ruling in favor of the government's right to require individuals to buy health insurance or pay a penalty.

But the court on Thursday stopped short of ruling whether the individual mandate in the health care law is constitutional; it strictly examined Virginia's right to sue.

The Supreme Court will likely have the final say on the health care law after more than 30 lawsuits were filed and contradictory rulings were issued from appellate courts in other parts of the country. Last month, an appeals court in Atlanta ruled against the law, saying the provision to buy health care insurance is unconstitutional. But an appeals court in Cincinnati has upheld the law.

Virginia filed its lawsuit in March 2010, the same day that Obama signed the legislation. The following day, the state passed its own law known as the Virginia Health Care Freedom Act (VHCFA), declaring that individuals cannot be forced to buy health insurance and sued on that basis.

But the court ruled Thursday that the VHCFA does not create the kind of conflict that allows for a challenge in federal court.

"The individual mandate in the health care law does not affect Virginia's ability to enforce VHCFA," the court opined. "Rather, the Constitution itself withholds from Virginia the power to enforce VHCFA against the federal government."

All three judges on the Virginia panel were appointed by Democratic presidents -- two by Obama and one by Bill Clinton.

Stephen Presser, a law professor at Northwestern University, called the ruling a "highly technical decision."

"This decision might well be questionable, but the court did not that important constitutional issues were involved, and even the court conceded that those issues should be resolved in an appropriate forum," he said.

"This is a further indication that the United States Supreme Court should soon resolve this issue, now that both the district courts and the court of appeals have issued contradictory decisions both on the standing and substantive issues," he said.

The Health and Human Services Department released long-awaited regulations on Monday to help states set up their own health insurance exchanges -- the marketplaces where people can buy insurance policies under the 2010 health care reform law.

HHS said states will have "substantial flexibility" in operating the exchanges and laid out their functions: Certifying "qualified health plans"; operating a website for comparing plans; running a toll-free hot line for consumer support; providing grants to "Navigators" for consumer assistance; determining eligibility of consumers for enrollment in qualified health plans; and helping them enroll.

Date: Monday, July 23, 2012 3:00:01 PM

Action Officers/Healthcare Advisors:

Per our conversation this morning on the Action Officer call:

CBO expects to release two reports related to the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) tomorrow, July 24th, around 2 pm EST.

- One report will present updated projections of the budgetary effects of the coverage provisions of the PPACA to reflect the Supreme Court's recent decision.
- The other report will present a cost estimate for the repeal of the PPACA that passed the House of Representatives on July 11th.

We will provide this material to you—and any analysis we receive- as soon as we can.

You may wish to notify your press teams.

According to news outlets: The health law update from the Congressional Budget Office on Tuesday found that costs would drop by $84 billion over 11 years because not all states would opt in to Medicaid expansion. About 6 million fewer people will be covered by Medicaid and the Children's Health Insurance Program, but about half of them would end up covered in the state-based health insurance exchanges, so about 3 million more people would be uninsured.

Attached is the American Action Forum's (AAF) modeling to show the impact of the SCOTUS Medicaid decision on the federal budget before the above announcement from CBO. The memos also are available on the Forum's website: <http://bit.ly/OtIpNA>.

We'll be providing you materials regarding the analysis of CBO's announcement as soon as we can.

Date: Monday, October 24, 2011 9:49:34 AM

Since the demise of CLASS, analysts on both sides of the political spectrum have weighed in on whether and how the fiscal disaster that is the CLASS Act has broader implications for Obamacare's sustainability. For instance, last week liberal blogger (and Obamacare apologist) Ezra Klein said the motto is "trust CBO," and that because CBO says the law will reduce the deficit, it will. (Of course, CBO also said last year that CLASS would reduce the deficit in its first ten years, so that may not mean much.)

Before looking at the granular details, it's first worth comparing CLASS to Obamacare at a macro level. The HHS report on CLASS contains the word "uncertain" no fewer than 16 times in a 50-page document – it discusses "inherently uncertain" CLASS modeling, the "great uncertainty around the existing estimates," and a "very high level of uncertainty around assumptions in the actuarial models." Likewise, CBO in its score of Obamacare said that "the range of uncertainty" surrounding estimates of the budgetary impact of the legislation "is quite wide." CBO's most extensive analysis of Obamacare's long-term projections – in last year's long-term budget outlook – included a whole section regarding uncertainty and sustainability, which I've pasted below my signature. The sum total of the passage would lead one to believe that the uncertainty surrounding implementation of the rest of the law is nearly as great as that surrounding CLASS.

To examine it more closely: The Administration now claims that since CLASS' demise, Obamacare will reduce the deficit by an estimated \$124 billion over the next ten years. What does that mean? If...

1. Medicare provider payment reductions that will take Medicare rates below Medicaid payment levels – and cause up to 40 percent of providers to become unprofitable – are implemented as scheduled; AND
2. Medicare Advantage cuts that the Administration already felt the need to mitigate in the short-term for political reasons can be implemented, causing millions of seniors to lose their current coverage; AND
3. Someone finds a spare \$370 billion to avert a 30 percent reduction in Medicare physician payment fees scheduled to take effect this coming January; AND
4. A future Administration is willing to implement a 40 percent tax on insurance policies so unpopular unions forced its delay until 2018, well after President Obama will have left office; AND
5. Democrats are willing to allow a new "high-income" tax not indexed to inflation to become the "new AMT," hitting more and more middle-class families until nearly 80 percent are being hit with this surcharge; AND
6. A scheduled reduction in insurance subsidies in 2019 goes through, despite liberal advocates already calling for the subsidies to be increased; AND
7. Employers do not drop coverage en masse, despite the numerous studies, papers, briefs, reports, employer questionnaires, consultant presentations, surveys, op-eds, interviews, and quotes suggesting that employers will drop coverage in much higher numbers than CBO first anticipated...

Then the Administration will have reduced the deficit by about $12 billion a year for the next decade – or less than 1% of the whopping $1.3 trillion deficit the federal government ran over the past 12 months. In other words, at best the law will “reduce” the deficit by an amount so small some may consider it microscopic. And, as illustrated above, the number of assumptions needed to arrive at that conclusion may be so great as to beggar belief – just as the Medicare actuary knew from Day One that CLASS wouldn’t work, despite all the Administration’s rhetoric. Their claims notwithstanding, I haven’t seen Ezra Klein or other Obamacare advocates willing to make actual wagers that the law will actually end up reducing the deficit – and given what’s needed to make that prediction come true, with good reason.

Questions About Sustainability

One challenge that arises in projecting federal outlays for health care over the long term is that the recent legislation either left in place or put into effect a number of procedures that may be difficult to sustain over a long period. For example, the legislation did not alter the sustainable growth rate mechanism used for determining updates to Medicare’s payment rates for physicians; under that mechanism, those rates are scheduled to be reduced by about 21 percent in 2010 and then decline further in subsequent years. Since that mechanism was enacted in 1997, its provisions have usually been modified to avoid scheduled reductions in payment rates, and legislation was just enacted to delay cuts in those payment rates until December 2010 (a development that is not reflected in the projections). At the same time, the legislation includes provisions that will constrain payment rates for other providers of Medicare’s services. In particular, increases in payment rates for many providers will be held below the rate of increase in the average cost of providers’ inputs.

Taking all the provisions of the legislation together, CBO expects that, adjusted for inflation, Medicare spending per beneficiary will increase at an average annual rate of less than 2 percent during the next two decades—compared with a roughly 4 percent annual growth rate during the past two decades (a calculation that excludes the effect of establishing the Medicare prescription drug benefit). It is unclear whether that lower rate of growth can be sustained and, if so, whether it will be accomplished through greater efficiencies in the delivery of health care or will instead reduce access to care or diminish the quality of care (relative to the situation under prior law).

Another provision that may be difficult to sustain will slow the growth of federal subsidies for health insurance purchased through the insurance exchanges. For enrollees who receive subsidies, the amount they will have to pay depends primarily on a formula that determines what share of their income they have to contribute to enroll in a relatively low-cost plan (with the subsidy covering the difference between that contribution and the total premium for that plan). Initially, the percentages of income that enrollees must pay are indexed so that the subsidies will cover roughly the same share of the total premium over time. After 2018, however, an additional indexing factor will probably apply; if so, the shares of income that enrollees have to pay will increase more rapidly, and the shares of the premium that the subsidies cover will decline.

Action Officers and Healthcare Advisors:

FYI: From House Energy and Commerce:

Regarding the discussion about the new exchange grants announced by CMS, the House passed Chairman Upton's bill, H.R. 1213, on May 3, 2011 to block the unlimited funding for this purpose. Several other bills to eliminate Obamacare slush funds were passed at about the same time. Unfortunately, these bills are still pending on Harry Reid's Senate Calendar.

Several documents that provide more details on Chairman Upton's state exchange bill are attached. They include:

- 1) A February 7th, 2011 letter from CRS confirming that Section 1311(a) gives the Secretary an unlimited amount of money to spend on state-based grants.
- 2) Our majority memo for the markup of Mr. Upton's Exchange bill. It explains the bill in brief at the end of the memo.
- 3) Some talkers regarding why repealing the fund is a good idea despite claims that exchanges in PPACA provide states flexibility.
- 4) A Kaiser Health News article detailing how this fund could be used for much broader purposes. Donald Berwick pointed to the availability of this fund when asked about the financial burdens of Medicaid imposed on states. Does CMS intend to use this unlimited fund to plug state budgets?

Re: Information request, clarification

We currently have 2 projects underway that require information from states: 1) a comparison of Medicaid waiver requests to see if there are common elements we can include in our continuing effort to get more flexibility to administer the program.; and, 2) a comparison of state comments filed on proposed regulations for health insurance exchanges that we can embellish with HHS.

For the former, we need your help in identifying the waiver requests pending at CMS and the concept papers that are under discussion.

For the second project, we expect to be able to pull comments from the CMS website when they finish posting them, and should not need to bother you.

Please feel free to call with any questions.

ObamaCare Starts to Unravel

The real story behind the Class program failure, and what to do now.

Now that one of ObamaCare's major new benefit programs has been scrapped, liberals are trying to make stone soup by claiming that the Obama Administration merely committed an act of "good government." They claim that when this long-term care insurance program proved to be unworkable, the Administration conceded as much, and now it's gone. So let's review the evidence, not least because it so perfectly illustrates the recklessness that produced the Affordable Care Act.

When Democrats were pasting it together in 2009 and 2010, the immediate attraction of the program known by the acronym Class was that its finances could be gamed to create the illusion that a new entitlement would reduce the deficit. Ending the complicated Class budget gimmick erases the better part of ObamaCare's purported "savings," but it's also worth focusing on the program's long-run political goals.

For decades Democrats have been trying to put government on the hook for middle-class

costs like home health services ($1,800 a month on average) and nursing homes ($70,000 to $80,000 per year). On paper, Class was supposed to be like normal insurance, funding benefits through premiums with no subsidy. But since the budget gimmick and the program's larger structure meant that premiums could never cover benefits, Democrats were trying to force a future Congress to prevent a Class bankruptcy using taxpayer dollars.

As the costs to the federal fisc continued to climb, the Democratic gambit was that Class would gradually morph into another part of Medicare. Insurance depends on younger, healthier people signing up to cross-subsidize the older and sicker, but under the Class program as written almost all of its enrollees would soon also be beneficiaries.

So to fix this "adverse selection," the plan was for Congress to eventually make participation mandatory, with the so-called premiums converted into another payroll tax and the benefits into another entitlement. Former White House budget director Peter Orszag has been writing that the long-term care insurance market can't function without a mandate, while HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius declined to rule one out at a Senate hearing in February. Now they tell us.

The only reason the Health and Human Services Department pre-emptively called off this scheme is that former New Hampshire Senator Judd Gregg succeeded in inserting a proviso that required the Class program's reality to match Democratic promises as a matter of law. If HHS couldn't provide "an actuarial analysis of the 75-year costs of the program that ensures solvency throughout such 75-year period," it couldn't be legally implemented.

In other words, HHS had to prove that the Class program wouldn't go broke the way it was designed to—and actuarial analysis is a matter of math, not politics. In a 48-page report that HHS submitted to Congress Friday, the department concedes that it is literally impossible to create any kind of long-term care program under the law's statutory text in which revenues match expenditures. Such a plan would cost as much as $3,000 per month, which no one would ever buy.

The HHS gnomes even considered "features deviating from or going beyond a plain reading of the statutory language" that its lawyers didn't think could pass legal muster, and they still couldn't avoid violating the known laws of mathematics despite 19 months of trying. HHS lawyers also said the government would have to warn enrollees that the promised benefits weren't contracts and could be abrogated to "dispel any claims that the Class program had misled the public or had encouraged reliance on its programs under false pretenses."

Those pretenses have been obvious all along, with outside analysts and internal Administration experts saying Class wasn't viable. President Obama was a mask of indifference with no response when Paul Ryan took Class apart at the 2010 White House health summit. Democrats included it anyway, but now that the Administration itself has vindicated its critics, Republicans have a new political opportunity to make real health-care legislative progress.

At a minimum the GOP could begin by repealing the Class program altogether, since its legal authority is still intact. "One should never leave a partly loaded gun on the table, even if most of the chambers are empty or just house blanks," writes the American Enterprise Institute's Tom Miller. He also suggests attaching a few of the more destructive provisions and forcing Democrats to defend them, such as Mr. Orszag's Independent Payment Advisory Board of 15 political appointees who have broad unaccountable powers to control health-care markets and health care.

Our suggestion is for a Gregg-like amendment that applies to the entire health law and not simply Class. If reality can't match the rhetoric that accompanied the bill—about fiscal responsibility, bending the cost curve, keeping your health care if you like your health care and all the other false promises—then, legally, it should be repealed like Class. Call it a truth-in-advertising clause. ObamaCare would collapse in a heartbeat.

As previously reported, HHS released their report outlining the reasons for shelving the CLASS Act Ponzi scheme late Friday (aka "Take Out the Trash Day.") The report and appendices have been put online and can be found here.

In reading through the report, there are NUMEROUS examples where HHS belatedly – and begrudgingly – admitted truths that others, including non-partisan career staff within HHS, had been asserting all along. A partial list of examples and quotes from the report is below. These developments however continue to raise obvious questions: Why did HHS waste two years, and millions of taxpayer dollars, to conclude what was obvious to the Medicare actuary on Day One – that the program was inherently unworkable? And who will be held to account for allowing this fiscal and bureaucratic disaster to happen in the first place?

And if you couldn't make it through underwriting, you could simply enroll in CLASS to cover some of your current or likely future [long-term care] costs. Seems like a recipe for disaster to me... " – HHS career official, in an October 22, 2009 internal e-mail | "In the current private long-term care insurance market, most buyers choose products that provide...daily benefit amounts that are significantly higher than the $50/day lifetime benefit....Moreover, premiums for products similar to the CLASS benefit, when they are sold to an underwritten population in the private market, would cost much less than the estimated premiums above." – Actuarial analysis, p. 22 |

Good morning,

The Wall Street Journal has an excellent analysis of the Class Program failure.

ObamaCare Starts to Unravel

The real story behind the Class program failure, and what to do now.

Now that one of ObamaCare's major new benefit programs has been scrapped, liberals are trying to make stone soup by claiming that the Obama Administration merely committed an act of "good government." They claim that when this long-term care insurance program proved to be unworkable, the Administration conceded as much, and now it's gone. So let's review the evidence, not least because it so perfectly illustrates the recklessness that produced the Affordable Care Act.

When Democrats were pasting it together in 2009 and 2010, the immediate attraction of the program known by the acronym Class was that its finances could be gamed to create the illusion that a new entitlement would reduce the deficit. Ending the complicated Class budget gimmick erases the better part of ObamaCare's purported "savings," but it's also worth focusing on the program's long-run political goals.

costs like home health services ($1,800 a month on average) and nursing homes ($70,000 to $80,000 per year). On paper, Class was supposed to be like normal insurance, funding benefits through premiums with no subsidy. But since the budget gimmick and the program's larger structure meant that premiums could never cover benefits, Democrats were trying to force a future Congress to prevent a Class bankruptcy using taxpayer dollars.

As the costs to the federal fisc continued to climb, the Democratic gambit was that Class would gradually morph into another part of Medicare. Insurance depends on younger, healthier people signing up to cross-subsidize the older and sicker, but under the Class program as written almost all of its enrollees would soon also be beneficiaries.

So to fix this "adverse selection," the plan was for Congress to eventually make participation mandatory, with the so-called premiums converted into another payroll tax and the benefits into another entitlement. Former White House budget director Peter Orszag has been writing that the long-term care insurance market can't function without a mandate, while HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius declined to rule one out at a Senate hearing in February. Now they tell us.

The only reason the Health and Human Services Department pre-emptively called off this scheme is that former New Hampshire Senator Judd Gregg succeeded in inserting a proviso that required the Class program's reality to match Democratic promises as a matter of law. If HHS couldn't provide "an actuarial analysis of the 75-year costs of the program that ensures solvency throughout such 75-year period," it couldn't be legally implemented.

In other words, HHS had to prove that the Class program wouldn't go broke the way it was designed to—and actuarial analysis is a matter of math, not politics. In a 48-page report that HHS submitted to Congress Friday, the department concedes that it is literally impossible to create any kind of long-term care program under the law's statutory text in which revenues match expenditures. Such a plan would cost as much as $3,000 per month, which no one would ever buy.

The HHS gnomes even considered "features deviating from or going beyond a plain reading of the statutory language" that its lawyers didn't think could pass legal muster, and they still couldn't avoid violating the known laws of mathematics despite 19 months of trying. HHS lawyers also said the government would have to warn enrollees that the promised benefits weren't contracts and could be abrogated to "dispel any claims that the Class program had misled the public or had encouraged reliance on its programs under false pretenses."

Those pretenses have been obvious all along, with outside analysts and internal Administration experts saying Class wasn't viable. President Obama was a mask of indifference with no response when Paul Ryan took Class apart at the 2010 White House health summit. Democrats included it anyway, but now that the Administration itself has vindicated its critics, Republicans have a new political opportunity to make real health-care legislative progress.

At a minimum the GOP could begin by repealing the Class program altogether, since its legal authority is still intact. "One should never leave a partly loaded gun on the table, even if most of the chambers are empty or just house blanks," writes the American Enterprise Institute's Tom Miller. He also suggests attaching a few of the more destructive provisions and forcing Democrats to defend them, such as Mr. Orszag's Independent Payment Advisory Board of 15 political appointees who have broad unaccountable powers to control health-care markets and health care.

Our suggestion is for a Gregg-like amendment that applies to the entire health law and not simply Class. If reality can't match the rhetoric that accompanied the bill—about fiscal responsibility, bending the cost curve, keeping your health care if you like your health care and all the other false promises—then, legally, it should be repealed like Class. Call it a truth-in-advertising clause. ObamaCare would collapse in a heartbeat.

Subject: CLASS Act Report Summary: We. Told. You. So.

As previously reported, HHS released their report outlining the reasons for shelving the CLASS Act Ponzi scheme late Friday (aka "Take Out the Trash Day.") The report and appendices have been put online and can be found here.

In reading through the report, there are NUMEROUS examples where HHS belatedly – and begrudgingly – admitted truths that others, including non-partisan career staff within HHS, had been asserting all along. A partial list of examples and quotes from the report is below. These developments however continue to raise obvious questions: Why did HHS waste two years, and millions of taxpayer dollars, to conclude what was obvious to the Medicare actuary on Day One – that the program was inherently unworkable? And who will be held to account for allowing this fiscal and bureaucratic disaster to happen in the first place?

CC: Action Officers

I wanted to make you aware of the following letter that is being drafted on Capitol Hill to governors asking them not to implement state exchanges. I've asked this group to provide rgppc with a copy as soon as it is ready so none of you- or your bosses- are blindsighted. Please see text below.

-MTS

Congresswoman Bachmann and Congressman Jordan will be sending a letter (found below) to the National Governors Association urging each governor not to implement the state exchanges found in ObamaCare. Senator DeMint is spearheading the exact same letter in the Senate and we will be sending the House and Senate version together today (current co-signers in the Senate: DeMint, Lee, Ron Johnson, Graham, Cornyn, Coburn, Sessions, Thune, Vitter, Paul).

June 29, 2012

National Governors Association
Hall of States
444 N. Capitol St., Ste. 267
Washington D.C. 20001-1512

Dear Governors:

The Supreme Court has ruled significant parts of the Medicaid expansion of the President's health care law unconstitutional as well as ruling that the individual mandate violated the Commerce Clause and will therefore be implemented as a punitive tax on the middle class. This presents us with a critical choice: Do we allow this reprehensible law to move forward or do we fully repeal it and start over with commonsense solutions? The American people have made it clear that they want us to throw this law out in its entirety.

As members of the U.S. Congress, we are dedicated to the full repeal of this government takeover of healthcare and we ask you to join us to oppose its implementation.

Most importantly, we encourage you to oppose any creation of a state health care exchange mandated under the President's discredited health care law.

These expensive, complex, and intrusive exchanges impose a threat to the financial stability of our already-fragile state economies with no certainty of a limit to total enrollment numbers. Resisting the implementation of exchanges is good for hiring and investment. The law's employer mandate assesses penalties - up to $3,000 per employee - only to businesses who don't satisfy federally-approved health insurance standards and whose employees receive "premium assistance" through the exchanges. The clear language of the statute only permits federal premium assistance to citizens of states who create a state-based exchange. However, the IRS recently finalized a regulation that contradicts the law by allowing the federal government to provide premium assistance to citizens in those states that have not created exchanges. The IRS had no authority to finalize such a regulation. By refusing to create an exchange, you will assist us in Congress to repeal this violation which will help lower the costs of doing business in your state, relative to other states that keep these financially draining exchanges in place.

State-run exchanges are subject to all of the same coverage mandates and rules as the federally-run exchange. Clearing the hurdles of crafting an exchange that complies with the 600 plus pages of federal exchange regulations will only result in wasted state resources and higher premiums for your constituents.

Implementation of this law is not inevitable and considering more than half of the American people oppose the law, it is improbable. Join us in resisting a centralized government approach to health care reform and instead focus on solutions that make health care more affordable and accessible for every American. Let's work to create a health care system of, for, and by the people, not government or special interests.

Sincerely,

Here's where things stand:

- Congress is set to act on a short-term CR that will avoid a government shutdown and cut $2 billion in spending over the next week. We expect the Senate to bring up HR 1363 (the troop funding bill), amend it accordingly, send it to the House for a vote, and then send the bill to the President for his signature.

- The short-term CR provides enough time for Congress to enact a long-term CR through the rest of the fiscal year that will cut $38.5B in federal spending – the largest spending cut in American history, just months after the President asked Congress for a “spending freeze” that would mean zero cuts.

- The agreement will also cut hundreds of billions of dollars from the Federal budget over the next decade - - and clears the way for congressional action on House Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan’s budget, The Path to Prosperity, which cuts trillions in spending and offers a long-term blueprint for American job creation.

- The agreement reached with Senate Democrats guarantees a Senate debate and vote on legislation that would repeal President Obama’s government takeover of health care in its entirety. The House passed such legislation in January as part of the Pledge to America. The agreement also will generate new tools for the fight to repeal Obamacare by requiring numerous studies that will force the Obama Administration to reveal the true impact of the law’s mandates, including a study of how individuals and families will see increased premiums as a result of certain Obamacare mandates; a full audit of the waivers that the Obama Administration has given to firms and organizations – including unions – who can't meet the new annual coverage limits; a full audit of what's happening with the comparative effectiveness research funding that was in Obamacare and the president's failed "stimulus" spending bill; and, a report on all of the contractors who have been hired to implement the law and the costs to taxpayers of such contracts.

- The agreement with Senate Democrats guarantees a Senate debate and vote on legislation that would end federal funding for Planned Parenthood.

- The agreement includes a complete ban on federal funding of abortion in the District of Columbia, applying the pro-life principles of the Hyde Amendment ("D.C. Hyde").

- The agreement subjects the so-called Consumer Financial Protection Bureau created by the job-destroying Dodd-Frank law to yearly audits by both the private sector and the Government Accountability Office (GAO) to monitor its impact on the economy, including its impact on jobs, by examining whether sound cost-benefit analyses are being used with rulemakings.

Action Officers and Healthcare Advisors:

Please see the attached memorandum from the Congressional Research Service (CRS), the independent research arm of Congress, published on Monday, which includes findings about the impact of the decision on the Medicaid provisions in the ACA, including the finding that both MOE and the MAGI eligibility requirements are not affected by the ruling and remain in effect.

I will note that many of you are doing work on the MOE in particular, which might differ from CRS's opinion, and we hope to host a call next week on several moving parts on PPACA to discuss. Please don't hesitate to contact Lindsay or me if you have questions, suggestions, or ideas you want to discuss. We are working on an agenda and time for next week.

Thanks,
Marie

GOVERNOR

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
84114-2220

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

July 18, 2011

Dear Governor,

The ongoing division among our nation's leaders concerning the debt ceiling reflects a tremendous need for individual states to assume a leadership role on this important issue. In an effort to promote fiscal responsibility and prudence at the federal level, I, along with Governors Perry, Scott, Haley and Parnell, recently signed the Cut, Cap and Balance pledge.

Washington, D.C., does not have a debt problem. It has a spending problem! The Cut, Cap and Balance pledge addresses core issues calling for three important measures: 1) Make substantial cuts in spending to reduce the deficit; 2) Design enforceable caps on federal spending; and 3) Congressional passage (not mere support) of a Balanced Budget Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, but only if it includes both a spending limitation and a super-majority for raising taxes, in addition to balancing revenues and expenses.

Utah is leading the nation out of the recession with steady economic growth and job creation because we have consistently made tough decisions, kept our taxes low, lived within our means and balanced the budget every year. Many other states are taking similar fiscally conservative actions. My message to Washington is to do the same.

Sincerely,

Gary R. Herbert

H.R. 1473, Department of Defense and Full Year Continuing Appropriations Act, 2011

Rep. Harold Rogers (R-KY)

HR 1473 provides appropriations for the Department of Defense and all other federal agencies through the remainder of fiscal year 2011. The bill implements the agreement between the House, Senate and the Administration for completing action on all FY 2011 appropriations.

Total non-emergency discretionary budget authority for Fiscal Year 2011, as scored by the Congressional Budget Office will be $1 050 trillion. This is $38 billion below the level provided in the continuing resolution enacted by the Democrats at the end of last year. It includes $13 billion in reductions already enacted into law since March 4, 2011, plus nearly $27 billion in additional new spending cuts. Total Budget Authority will be $78.5 billion below President Obama's discretionary budget request for Fiscal Year 2011. The Congressional Budget Office score for the bill is available here: <http://www.cbo.gov/ftpdocs/121xx/doc12140/hr1473.pdf>

HR 1473 turns around the trajectory of Washington's unsustainable spending binge best symbolized by the Democrats' failed stimulus bill of 2009. By demonstrating that our political system is capable of reining in uncontrolled spending, it sends a signal to job creators in the private sector that government will not continue to grow at a rate crowding out private investment and making tax increases inevitable. It also sets the table for reducing spending in the future. Removing nearly $40 billion in spending from the federal ledger in FY 2011 compounds to $315 billion in savings over the next decade compared to CBO's baseline projections for discretionary spending, according to the Republican staff of the Senate Budget Committee.

At the account level, the bill challenges the notion that government programs are immortal by terminating more than 55 of them, including 40 ineffective programs at the Department of Education. The bill cuts spending at the Environmental Protection Agency by 16 percent, and reduces spending on Congressional staff and office expenses in the House of Representatives by 5 percent. The bill cuts $2.9 billion from high-speed rail projects. Other cuts include $377 million from the U.S. contribution to the United Nations and other international organizations, and a $130 million cut to international banks and financial institutions. A list of all the cuts may be viewed here: <http://appropriations.house.gov/files/41211ProgramCutsListFinalFY2011CR.pdf>

In addition to these important savings, the bill also ensures that our troops will be paid. The bill provides base funding for the Department of Defense of $513 billion, a $5 billion increase over last year's level. The bill also provides $157.8 billion in emergency funding for the Global War on Terror, supporting our operations in Afghanistan, Iraq, and other places where American troops are facing hostile fire.

Important policy provisions will also be enacted under HR 1473. The Administration will be blocked from closing the detention facility at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and from bringing any of the detainees there to the Continental United States. The District of Columbia will be prevented from using any congressionally appropriated funds (no matter what the original source) to pay for abortions, and the Senate and House will hold separate votes on ending federal funding for Planned Parenthood and its affiliates.

The bill begins to repeal elements of Obamacare, rescinding $2.2 billion of the $6 billion in startup funds provided to the Consumer Operated and Oriented Plan (CO-OP) program that some observers have characterized as "a back door to a public plan flying under a different flag." The bill also repeals section 10108 "free choice" vouchers subsidizing insurance purchases on government-created health care exchanges for persons with incomes up to 400% of poverty. It also blocks increased hiring by the IRS requested by the President to enforce Obamacare's individual mandate and other revenue provisions. In addition, the House and Senate will also take a separate vote on defunding the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PL 111-148) and the health care provisions of the related reconciliation act, PL 111-152.

Adoption of HR 1473 will demonstrate that elections have consequences, and that our government is finally listening to the American people. Members are urged to support HR 1473.

Speaker Boehner Talks $315 Billion Spending Cut With Sean Hannity

April 14, 2011 | Posted by Don Seymour | Permalink

House Speaker John Boehner (R-OH) spoke with Sean Hannity about today's vote on legislation that cuts \$315 billion over the next ten years, eliminates dozens of federal programs, and undermines the job-crushing health care law. Boehner says the legislation isn't perfect, but it clears the way for action on Chairman Paul Ryan's budget – The Path to Prosperity – which cuts trillions of dollars in spending to create a better environment for private sector job growth. Below is a link to the full audio and several excerpts from the interview.

>> CLICK HERE FOR AUDIO <<

Boehner on Cutting \$315 Billion Over 10 Years & Taking the Next Step with the Path to Prosperity:

“Let’s start with the facts. This agreement will cut $78.5 billion from what the president wanted to spend this fiscal year. And if Republicans had not won the election in the House last November, I’ll guarantee you they would have spent $78.5 billion more. We cut $38.5 to $39 billion below last year fiscal 2010 numbers. And ... we’ll save $315 billion over the next decade. Now this also includes a $5 billion increase in spending on defense. And so when you look at the numbers, we actually cut $44 billion out of this. This is the largest cut to the federal government since World War II. Now you haven’t seen me out there celebrating this because frankly this is a small step in the right direction. But this was a worthwhile step because while we’re talking about billions this part of the week, at the end of the week we’ll be talking about trillions of dollars when we deal with Paul Ryan’s Path to Prosperity.”

Boehner on Changing the Debate from “No Cuts” to the Largest Cut Since WWII:

“Remember what the president said at the beginning of the year: no cuts. No cuts. And now he’s going to sign into law the largest [spending] cuts since WWII. I’ve got to tell you, these are real cuts. ... We eliminate funding for four of their czars. There are no earmarks in this bill. You know, a year ago when the president signed the omnibus appropriations bill there were 9,000 earmarks. There’s not one earmark in this bill. And there are hundreds of programs where the funding has either been eliminated or reduced.”

Boehner on Republicans Controlling Only One Half of One Branch of the Federal Government:

“I’m not jumping up and down, thrilled to death with this deal. But it’s the best we could get considering the Democrats control the Senate and the Democrats control the White House, and they don’t want to cut anything. ... The only way we succeed is if the president signs a bill passed by the House and Senate into law. And if it’s not signed into law, guess what: we get nothing. No cuts. What I’m trying to do here is do the responsible thing by keeping the government open and get the largest spending cuts that we can get. And getting $78.5 billion out of the $100 billion we wanted to save is a damn good first step.”

Change direction of federal spending

By Rep. John A. Boehner
POLITICO
April 13, 2011 11:47 PM EDT

Six months ago, shortly before the election, the Democrats who run Washington were preparing an “omnibus” spending bill loaded with earmarks and job-crushing tax hikes on small businesses. Today, the people’s House is due to vote on a bill that cuts $315 billion from the federal budget over the next 10 years — the largest non-defense spending cut in our history, earmark-free and with zero tax hikes. These are real cuts.

It isn’t cause for celebration or back-patting. It’s what happens when the American people speak out. It’s what government should be doing.

This agreement isn’t perfect. But it is exactly what we need to pave the way for the “Path to Prosperity” budget offered by Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan (R-Wis.), which moves the debate from cutting billions of dollars to cutting trillions. It also cleans up the budget mess left by the last Congress — sending a signal to job creators nationwide that we have begun to end Washington’s spending binge.

“This first step,” the Stanford economist John B. Taylor wrote, “helps establish the credibility needed for the budget strategy to increase economic growth and encourage private investment.”

Specifically, House Republicans – up against a Democratic-run Senate and Democratic-controlled White House – forced an agreement that cuts nearly $40 billion, compared to FY 2010 spending levels. This means the federal government will spend $78.5 billion less this year than President Barack Obama proposed.

The total spending cut would have been even higher – nearly $45 billion – had we not fought for and secured a $5 billion increase in defense spending. This ensures that our troops have the tools they need to accomplish their multiple missions.

The American people are concerned not just about how much we’re spending, but how we’re spending it. One Obamacare program is eliminated altogether in this agreement; a second is cut nearly in half.

Four of the Obama administration’s controversial “czars” are eliminated – and the president is prohibited from replacing them. These include the “czars” charged with overseeing his government takeover of health care and tasked with implementing the president’s job-crushing national energy tax. They’re gone. The administration is signaling it will challenge the constitutionality of these provisions. We say: Bring it on.

The agreement also secures Senate votes and debates on de-funding two of the president’s top priorities – his job-crushing health care law and Planned Parenthood. It saves the successful D.C. school choice program that Democrats have been trying to eliminate for years.

The Environmental Protection Agency, considered a prime source of government overregulation, is to have its budget cut by 16 percent. Students will no longer be able to draw two Pell Grant awards at the same time — saving taxpayers $35 billion over the next 10 years.

More than 40 other ineffective Department of Education programs will also be eliminated — including Educational Technology State Grants, Even Start, Advanced Credentialing, Mental Health Integration, Exchanges with Historic Whaling Partners, Women’s Educational Equity, Tech-Prep Education State Grants, Smaller Learning Communities, Legal Assistance Loan Repayment Program, Thurgood Marshall Legal Opportunity Scholarships and B.J. Stupak Olympic Scholarships.

This is all happening just months after the president and his Democratic allies called for zero cuts – and claimed spending cuts would hurt the economy.

Liberals like the economist Paul Krugman have slammed the president for the agreement — noting it means the White House has, in effect, admitted the “stimulus” spending binge is over.

They’re right. No matter how imperfect the agreement may be, we’re poised to make historic cuts to both discretionary and mandatory “autopilot” spending. For anyone who believes Washington should be spending more, taxing more and borrowing more — this is a defeat.

It's true that many of the cuts in the agreement were proposed in the president's budget — but those cuts were used by the president to offset additional or new spending elsewhere. Now those cuts are real cuts. We're chopping billions of dollars off the baseline rather than allowing the Obama administration simply to shift the savings toward other spending.

Think of it this way: You have $100 in your wallet that you were going to use to buy new clothes. You haven't spent it yet, because you haven't found shirts you like or decided you didn't need them. Then someone comes along and takes away your $100.

Now you can't spend it — not on clothes or anything else you were considering. The money's gone — your budget's been cut. We're taking away tens of billions of taxpayer dollars from the Obama administration.

The new Republican majority began this Congress armed with a pledge: to create a better environment for private sector job growth by cutting spending and removing barriers that make it harder for small businesses to hire new workers.

That's exactly what we're doing, one step at a time. The spending cut agreement to be voted on today isn't perfect — not by a long shot. But it's an important step toward getting Washington spending under control and eliminating some of the barriers that are hurting job growth. There are many more steps, more cuts, and more reforms to come.

Say Yes to the CR Mess

http://www.weeklystandard.com/blogs/say-yes-cr-mess\_557400.html

Let's assume for the purpose of argument that our friends at National Review <http://www.nationalreview.com/articles/264599/strike-one-editors> are at least partly right in their analysis of the deal on the continuing resolution (CR) that's to be voted on today in the House of Representatives (but see John McCormack's post http://www.weeklystandard.com/blogs/budget-confusion\_557395.html for some context). In their recommendation of a No vote, they seem to me misguided.

Even if the savings from the CR are a "pittance," and the deal is "shot through with gimmicks and one-time savings;" even if it's "a dog's breakfast of budgetary legerdemain" that was "oversold and dependent on classic Washington budget trickery" and that embodies "business as usual"--even so, NR is wrong, I think, to conclude, "We'd vote 'no,' even if we understand the impulse to move on to more important matters and to avoid a leap into the dark that might include a politically damaging shutdown."

I'd vote yes.

The CR may well be a mess. It's certainly a sideshow. Perhaps John Boehner could have gotten a better deal, but it wouldn't have made much difference in the big-picture budget fight anyway. That fight is now underway, and the 2011 CR will be little noted, nor long remembered--unless the squabble over the CR fractures Republicans, and unless it prevents them from being able to focus the nation on what NR admits are "more important matters." The fact is the only way the 2011 CR will end up making much difference is if the deal is defeated in the Republican House, and the rejection leads to NR's "politically damaging shutdown" which then endangers future conservative prospects this year, and next.

So don't let the CR make a difference. Pass it. Don't risk a shutdown for a trifle. Forget about sniping at John Boehner. Help defeat Barack Obama in the major struggle that's now been joined on the budget <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=AnNOX-fi5ds> --and the future. Focus on Obama's unbelievable irresponsibility, not Boehner's alleged negotiating deficiencies. Figure out what big things (Medicaid reform?) can be added to the upcoming debt limit vote. Educate the public so as to improve the current only slightly better than even split in public opinion <http://i2.cdn.turner.com/cnn/2011/images/04/12/rel6d.pdf> on the GOP budget.

Conservatives who seek to govern this country will have a better chance of success if we behave as adults working towards victory in an important cause, rather than reveling in our incorruptible purity over on stage right, while neglecting what's happening at center stage.

MYTH VS. FACT: The Bipartisan Agreement to Cut Spending to Support Job Creation

April 13, 2011 | Posted by Speaker Boehner Press Office | Permalink

MYTH: "Most of the cuts in the agreement aren't real cuts. Many are cuts that were already scheduled to happen, and were proposed in the president's budget."

The spending cuts in the legislation are real cuts that help to clear a path for Chairman Paul Ryan's landmark Path to Prosperity budget. The agreement includes a gross spending cut of nearly $45 billion – a net spending cut of nearly $40 billion, as a result of the $5 billion increase for the Defense Department that Speaker Boehner fought for and won. Democrats accurately note that some of the spending cuts in the agreement were proposed in the president's budget, but disingenuously fail to note that many of those cuts were used in the president's budget to offset additional or new spending elsewhere. In the context of the agreement, those cuts are now real cuts – chopping billions of dollars off the baseline, rather than being used to offset other Washington spending sought by the administration. As Chairman Ryan said Tuesday, the agreement "[secures] tens of billions of dollars in spending cuts, forcing the President and his party's leaders to retreat from their reckless spending spree. The historic spending cut turns the page from Washington's pervasive culture of spending, sending a welcome signal to job creators and cleaning up the unprecedented budget mess left by the last Congress."

MYTH: "President Obama got most of what he wanted."

The agreement is imperfect, but it's hardly a "win" for President Obama or the Democratic Party agenda of bigger government and increased spending. As a result of the agreement, the federal government will spend $78.5 billion less than President Obama proposed spending this year. The agreement eliminates one Obamacare program, cuts a second nearly in half, and eliminates four of the Obama Administration's controversial "czars" – including the president's health czar charged with overseeing his government takeover of health care, his auto czar responsible for managing the federal government's takeover of U.S. auto manufacturers, and his climate change czar tasked with implementing the president's job-crushing national energy tax. The agreement secures Senate votes and debate on de-funding of two presidential priorities – Obamacare and Planned Parenthood – while saving the successful D.C. school choice program Democrats have been trying to eliminate for years.

MYTH: "The cuts in the agreement will have no impact on the long-term trajectory of government spending."

The agreement will chop an estimated $315 billion out of the federal budget over the next 10 years, setting the table for Chairman Paul Ryan's Path to Prosperity budget, which cuts trillions. The notion that cuts in mandatory spending are not "real" cuts is a potentially lethal misconception for conservatives to accept. Dramatic reductions in both discretionary and mandatory ("autopilot") spending are essential to help reduce uncertainty in our economy and create a better environment for job growth, and the agreement makes historic cuts in both types of spending -- just months after President Obama and his Democratic allies in Congress called for zero cuts and claimed spending cuts would hurt the economy.

MYTH: "The agreement is just more of the same. It doesn't really signal any kind of shift in the direction of our government."

While imperfect, the agreement marks the beginning of a major shift in economic policy – a shift that defined clearly by the GOP budget for which it sets the table, Chairman Ryan's Path to Prosperity. As late as a few months ago, President Obama was calling for zero spending cuts, clinging to his trademark Keynesian arguments and insisting that spending cuts would hurt the economy. With the agreement, the White House has unceremoniously abandoned that "stimulus" argument. Liberals have slammed President Obama for the agreement, noting it means the White House has, in effect, admitted the "stimulus" spending binge is over. "Princeton University professor Paul Krugman noted that by agreeing to this level of budget cuts, Obama had accepted the premise that the economy has recovered enough to withstand the withdrawal of federal spending. Despite the fragile economic recovery, the economy is still not strong enough, Krugman argued," according to Politico. And it's notable that the agreement includes zero earmarks – a stark contrast to two years ago, when President Obama accommodated a Democratic House and Senate and signed into law a massive omnibus spending bill containing an estimated 9,000 earmarks.

MYTH: "The agreement really only cuts about $14 billion in spending. Most of the cuts are from non-discretionary spending, which doesn't change the baseline."

Discretionary spending cuts account for more than half of the nearly $45 billion in gross spending cuts that are made in the agreement. As previously noted, the agreement will chop an estimated $315 billion out of the federal budget over the next 10 years, setting the table for Chairman Paul Ryan's Path to Prosperity budget, which cuts trillions. The notion that cuts in mandatory spending are not "real" cuts is a potentially lethal misconception for anyone to accept. Dramatic reductions in both discretionary and mandatory ("autopilot") spending are essential to help reduce uncertainty in our economy and create a better environment for job growth, and the agreement makes historic cuts in both types of spending -- just months after President Obama and his Democratic allies in Congress called for zero cuts and claimed spending cuts would hurt the economy.

MYTH: "The provisions eliminating President Obama's 'czars' for health care, climate change and other topics are meaningless. The administration has already vacated these posts or scheduled them for elimination."

The agreement means these posts won't be coming back – good news for Americans discomfited by the Obama Administration's agenda of government takeovers and bailouts. And perhaps more importantly, the provisions establish a precedent that Congress can deny the president funding for such positions -- effectively challenging their constitutionality.

MYTH: "The agreement is a win for President Obama because it includes a mix of discretionary spending cuts and mandatory spending cuts, rather than just discretionary spending cuts."

The bill passed by the House in February, H.R. 1, also included mandatory spending cuts. Like H.R. 1, the agreement makes real cuts in discretionary spending and includes no tax increases. After initially opposing any spending cuts, the White House and Congressional Democrats abandoned that position during negotiations and tried to cut their losses by demanding tax increases and trying to prevent virtually any cuts to discretionary spending. Republican negotiators rebuffed this gambit and forced the White House to accept an agreement with a mix of cuts from both discretionary and mandatory spending programs, and zero tax hikes. As noted previously, dramatic reductions in both discretionary and mandatory spending are needed to help reduce uncertainty in our economy and create a better environment for job growth. The agreement makes historic cuts in both types of spending -- just months after President Obama and his Democratic allies in Congress called for zero cuts and claimed spending cuts would hurt the economy.

MYTH: "The agreement just nicks a few programs; it doesn't actually eliminate anything."

The agreement terminates more than 40 ineffective programs at the U.S. Department of Education alone, including Educational Technology State Grants, Even Start, Advanced Credentialing, Mental Health Integration, Exchanges with Historic Whaling Partners, Women's Educational Equity, Tech-Prep Education State Grants, Smaller Learning Communities, Legal Assistance Loan Repayment Program, Thurgood Marshall Legal Opportunity Scholarships, and B.J. Stupak Olympic Scholarships. For a full list of federal programs that are cut or eliminated by the agreement, go here. The bill also eliminates the ability of students to draw down two Pell Grant awards at the same time, saving an additional $35 billion over the next 10 years.

President Who Began 2011 Saying "No Cuts" Now Poised to Sign Largest Spending Cut Since WWII

White House spin merchants are in overdrive this week, contending that their boss – who just months ago called for a spending freeze that would result in no cuts to federal spending levels – will be getting most of what he asked for from Congress when he signs into law the largest non-defense spending cut in American history. The White House-spun yarn goes something like this: "Despite his January call for zero spending cuts, the president has actually always been in favor of spending cuts, as long as they are cuts in mandatory spending. And since the final agreement contains significant cuts in mandatory spending along with significant cuts in discretionary spending, it means the president won."

Here are the facts:

- * Republicans believe dramatic reductions in both discretionary and mandatory ("autopilot") spending are essential to help reduce uncertainty in our economy and create a better environment for job growth, and the agreement makes historic cuts in both types of spending -- just months after President Obama and his Democratic allies in Congress called for zero cuts and claimed spending cuts would hurt the economy.

- * Democrats note that some of the spending cuts in the agreement were proposed in the president's budget, but disingenuously fail to note that many of those cuts were used in the president's budget to offset additional or new spending elsewhere. In the context of the agreement, those cuts are now real cuts – chopping billions of dollars off the baseline, rather than being used to offset other Washington spending sought by the administration.

* The agreement cuts nearly $40 billion compared to FY 2010 spending levels (nearly $38 billion compared to the March 4 continuing resolution) – the largest non-defense spending cut in American history – and will cut $315 billion from the federal budget over the next decade, clearing a path for the landmark Path to Prosperity budget offered by Chairman Ryan, which cuts trillions more over the next decade. The bill also eliminates the ability of students to draw down two Pell Grant awards at the same time, saving an additional $35 billion over the next 10 years.

* The gross spending cut in the bill is nearly $45 billion. The total spending cut would be nearly $45 billion had the Speaker not fought for – and won – a $5 billion increase in defense spending, which is included in the agreement.

* As a result of the agreement, the federal government will spend $78.5 billion less than President Obama proposed spending this year.

* The agreement eliminates one Obamacare program, cuts a second nearly in half, and eliminates four of the Obama Administration's controversial "czars" – including the president's health czar charged with overseeing his government takeover of health care, his auto czar responsible for managing the federal government's takeover of U.S. auto manufacturers, and his climate change czar tasked with implementing the president's job-crushing national energy tax.

* The agreement secures Senate votes and debate on de-funding of two presidential priorities – Obamacare and Planned Parenthood – while saving the successful D.C. school choice program Democrats have been trying to eliminate for years.

* The agreement includes zero earmarks – a stark contrast to two years ago, when President Obama accommodated a Democratic House and Senate and signed into law a massive omnibus spending bill containing an estimated 9,000 earmarks.

* The agreement makes real cuts in discretionary spending and includes no tax increases. After initially opposing any spending cuts, the White House and Congressional Democrats abandoned that position during negotiations and tried to cut their losses by demanding tax increases and trying to prevent virtually any cuts to discretionary spending. Republican negotiators rebuffed this gambit and forced the White House to accept an agreement with a mix of cuts from both discretionary and mandatory spending programs, and zero tax hikes.

* The agreement terminates more than 40 ineffective programs at the U.S. Department of Education alone, including Educational Technology State Grants, Even Start, Advanced Credentialing, Mental Health Integration, Exchanges with Historic Whaling Partners, Women's Educational Equity, Tech-Prep Education State Grants, Smaller Learning Communities, Legal Assistance Loan Repayment Program, Thurgood Marshall Legal Opportunity Scholarships, and B.J. Stupak Olympic Scholarships.

Six Ways Spending Cut Agreement Undermines ObamaCare

April 12, 2011 | Posted by Michael Ricci | Permalink

The spending cut agreement announced last week undermines the job-crushing health care law in at least six ways as Republicans continue to fight for its full repeal:

1. The spending cut agreement forces the Democratic-led Senate to hold an up-or-down vote on repealing the job-crushing health care law. This vote, observers say, "forces Democrats to defend the massive government expansion of control yet again." The Senate vote is also being hailed as a "pro-life victory," along with other pro-life protections included in the agreement.
2. The agreement requires the Government Accountability Office, Congress's investigative watchdog, to conduct "a series of studies" regarding the job-crushing health care law's impact on the economy, starting with an audit of the controversial waivers the Obama Administration has provided to unions and businesses. That audit will be due within 60 days once the agreement becomes law. Other audits will examine: (1) the premium impacts for individuals and families as a result of certain ObamaCare mandates; (2) what's happening with the comparative effectiveness research funding in ObamaCare and the failed 'stimulus'; and (3) all of the contractors who have been hired to implement the law and the costs to taxpayers of such contracts.

3. The Internal Revenue Service will have its budget frozen under the agreement, severely hampering its ability to enforce the job-crushing health care law. Right before Congress forced ObamaCare through last year, it was discovered that the IRS would need to undergo its largest expansion since World War II - including the addition of 16,500 new agents – in order to enforce the law’s tax hikes and mandates.
4. The agreement restricts the use of a controversial ObamaCare slush fund, the “Prevention and Public Health Fund,” which the Energy & Commerce Committee set its sights on after discovering that taxpayer dollars were being used at the sole discretion of the Secretary of Health and Human Services.
5. The agreement eliminates ObamaCare’s “Free Choice Vouchers” program, which employers and job creators opposed, according to The Hill, “out of concern that it could lead young, healthy workers to opt out of the employer plan, driving up costs for everybody else.”
6. The agreement slashes start-up funding for ObamaCare’s “Consumer Operated and Oriented Plan” (CO-OP) program, which has been called a “stealth public plan.” The non-partisan Congressional Budget Office warned that the co-ops wouldn’t work, saying they had “very little effect on the estimates of total enrollment in the exchanges or federal costs.”

BONUS. The spending cut agreement paves the way for Chairman Paul Ryan’s (R-WI) FY 2012 budget, “The Path to Prosperity,” which repeals the entire job-crushing health care law so we can replace it with common-sense reforms that lower costs and protect jobs.

With public support for ObamaCare dropping to its lowest level yet, this would be the second time in as many weeks Congress has chipped away at the job-crushing law: last week, the Senate passed H.R. 4, Pledge to America legislation repealing its 1099 small business mandate. As Speaker Boehner has said, “if the Senate won’t join us in passing a bill that repeals ObamaCare all at once, we will work to repeal it step-by-step.” The spending cut agreement continues this work. Read the full text of the spending cut legislation online here and learn more about it here.

FFIS Weekly Update – December 4, 2012

LEGISLATIVE UPDATE

December 4, 2012: President and the House Release Deficit Reduction Proposals; Negotiations

Continue this Week Last Thursday, the administration began floating a $4 trillion deficit-reduction plan that calls for at least $1.6 trillion in additional tax revenues over 10 years through the year-end expiration of the 2001/2003 tax cuts on income over $250,000, taxing dividends as normal income, and raising the estate tax to 45% with a $3.5 million exemption. The rest of the tax increases and the entitlement savings would come next year, through congressional revisions to the tax code and retirement programs. The plan would postpone for one year the automatic spending cuts scheduled for January 2, 2013, under sequestration, cut $400 billion from federal health and entitlement programs, renew extended unemployment compensation, and extend the “patch” for the alternative minimum tax. The plan also includes $50 billion for a new infrastructure bank, home mortgage refinancing, and a permanent end to congressional control over statutory borrowing limits (e.g. giving the president discretionary authority to lift the debt ceiling, instead of requiring legislation).

Republicans have criticized the plan and stated that little progress has been made through recent “fiscal cliff” negotiations. On Monday, the speaker of the House released a $2.2 trillion deficit-reduction counter offer to the president that would raise tax revenues by $800 billion over 10 years through base broadening, cut $600 billion from federal health and entitlement programs, institute an additional $300 billion in mandatory savings and $300 billion in discretionary cuts, and save $200 billion by applying a less generous measure of inflation to all federal programs, including Social Security benefits.

Negotiations will continue this week, but White House officials and congressional leaders will probably need to at least agree on some basic principles of an eventual agreement if they hope to pass deficit-reduction legislation before the new year.

December 4, 2012: Some Appropriations Bills Could Advance Before Year’s End House and Senate appropriators have agreed on several spending bills for FY 2013, but there is no plan yet for advancing these bills through the lame duck session. However, the House appropriations chairman has said that “four or five” may be moved in a single package, while work continues on the remaining FY 2013 appropriations bills.

EDUCATION

December 3, 2012: ED Seeks Comments on Education Jobs Report The Department of Education (ED) is seeking comments from states on the annual Education Jobs Report. The report summarizes a state’s use of Education Jobs Fund allocations and the impact of those funds on education and other areas in the state. More details on the agency’s request can be found here: <http://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2012-12-03/pdf/2012-29108.pdf>

November 26, 2012: Education Releases Graduation Rate Statistics ED recently released data detailing state four-year high school graduation rates in school year (SY) 2010-2011. This is the first year for which all states used a common measure. Using the new metric, 26 states reported lower graduation rates than the previous school year, while 24 states reported no change or an increase in graduation rates. However, ED notes that some of the variation is due to the change in reporting metric. More details can be found in ED's press release: <http://www.ed.gov/news/press-releases/states-report-new-high-school-graduation-rates-using-more-accurate-common-measur>

HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

December 3, 2012: ACF Publishes Memorandums for Head Start Grantees The Administration for Children and Families (ACF) released guidance to Head Start grantees on the disposition of older modular units and payment options available to participants in the E-Rate program. To access the new guidance, go to: <http://eclkc.ohs.acf.hhs.gov/hslc/standards/IMs/2012>

November 30, 2012: HHS Publishes FY 2014 FMAPs The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) published the Federal Medicaid Assistance Percentages (FMAPs) and enhanced FMAPs for FY 2014. HHS determined that Louisiana qualified for the disaster-recovery FMAP adjustment in FY 2014. To view the notice click here: <http://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2012-11-30/pdf/2012-29035.pdf>

The final FMAPs match FFIS calculations in Issue Brief 12-36.

November 30, 2012: CMS Announces Provider Enrollment Fee The Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) published a notice in the Federal Register to announce a $532 calendar year (CY) 2013 application fee for institutional providers that are initially enrolling in the Medicare, Medicaid, or the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP): <http://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2012-11-30/pdf/2012-29003.pdf>

November 28, 2012: CMCS Issues Guidance on Inpatient Psychiatric Services for Individuals Under Age 21 The Center for Medicaid and CHIP Services (CMCS) released the following bulletin to clarify and describe flexibility available to states to ensure the provision of medically necessary Medicaid services to children in inpatient psychiatric facilities: <http://www.medicaid.gov/Federal-Policy-Guidance/downloads/CIB-11-28-12.pdf>

November 28, 2012: ACF Releases FAQ on Child Care Report ACF issued the following FAQ document on the recent changes, focused on quality-related information, made to the child care monthly data report (ACF-801): <http://www.acf.hhs.gov/programs/occ/resource/frequently-asked-questions-new-elements-in-the-acf-801-report>

HEALTH CARE REFORM

November 30, 2012: OPM Releases Proposed Regulations for Multi-State Plans The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) published a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking to implement the Multi-State Plan Program (MSPP). The rule outlines the process by which OPM will establish the MSPP to offer private insurance products on the exchanges, as well as to establish standards and requirements for MSPP issuers and Multi-State plans (MSPs). Under the proposed rule, health insurance issuers will offer at least two MSPs on each of the Affordable Insurance Exchanges through contract with OPM. OPM will administer the MSPP consistent with state insurance laws and in coordination and cooperation with states. Comments are due January 4, 2013. OPM intends to publish a final rule early in 2013. For more information, go to: <http://www.opm.gov/insure/mspp/index.asp>

November 30, 2012: CCIIO Announces Additional Application Date for Exchange Establishment Grants

The Center for Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight (CCIIO) announced an additional application deadline of December 28, 2012, for Level I and Level II grants for supporting the establishment of health insurance exchanges. More details can be found at:

HOUSING

November 30, 2012: HUD Grants Regulatory and Administrative Waivers for Public and Indian Housing Programs in Storm Disaster Areas

The Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) has advised the public of regulations and administrative requirements governing programs that have been waived as a result of Superstorm Sandy. Entities that administer certain programs and are located in a federal disaster area as a result of the storm may defer compliance with the regulations and other requirements listed in this notice for an initial period of 12 months. Those not located within a federal disaster area, but assisting with Superstorm Sandy recovery and relief, may request to defer compliance with these regulations and other requirements for the same period of time. Speaker of the House John Boehner

Dems Toast ObamaCare's Broken Promises, While Americans Live Them: Fewer Jobs, Higher Costs, and Reduced Coverage

House Democrats this morning will come together to toast the one-year anniversary of their job-crushing health care law, and all its fewer jobs, higher costs, and reduced coverage. According to tradition, the first anniversary is considered the 'paper anniversary.' With that in mind, here are some items we're happy to offer up for this morning's celebration:

- A letter signed by 200 economists and experts stating that ObamaCare's maze of mandates, tax hikes, and penalties "create major barriers to stronger job growth." The letter also highlights the devastating impact ObamaCare will have on the nation's already-precarious fiscal health, adding more than $500 billion to the deficit during the first ten years, and nearly $1.5 trillion in the following decade.
- A transcript of testimony from Congressional Budget Office director Douglas Elmendorf, who verified that the health care law will reduce the number of full-time jobs by 800,000. (There's video too.)
- This Associated Press article summing up the recent testimony of Richard Foster, Medicare's independent economic expert, who told Congress that "two central promises" of ObamaCare – lower costs and letting people keep their current coverage – “are unlikely to be fulfilled.” We’d staple to that an independent report showing that as many as 35 million Americans could lose their employer-based health insurance on account of the burdens ObamaCare places on businesses large and small alike.

- The results of a new national survey showing that support for repeal of the job-crushing law “has reached its highest level since May of last year.” It was the president’s pollster who said last March that ObamaCare would “win over public support” after becoming law.
- The full list of the more than 1,000 waivers the Obama Administration has granted to employers and unions seeking protection from the health care law’s job-crushing requirements. The waivers have been called a “liability for the White House” and yet another “rallying cry” for repeal.
- A joint congressional report released by House Energy & Commerce Chairman Fred Upton (R-MI) and Senate Finance Ranking Member Orrin Hatch (R-UT) that details how the massive Medicaid expansion in ObamaCare will cost $118 billion, roughly double what Congress’ independent budget score keeper, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO), originally estimated.
- This colorful chart put together by Joint Economic Committee Republicans detailing ObamaCare’s bewildering arrangement of new government agencies, regulations and mandates.

For good measure, we offer a printable copy of the Pledge to America, which lays out Republicans’ commitment to repealing ObamaCare and replacing it with common-sense reforms that lower costs and protect American jobs. Since January, the new House majority has voted to fully repeal the \$2.6 trillion health care law; to defund the law as part of H.R. 1; and to repeal the job-destroying 1099 small business mandate. This week, Speaker Boehner announced the House will soon vote to eliminate mandatory spending slush funds in ObamaCare. Hearings to uncover the full truth about ObamaCare continue as well.

*In case you’re wondering, the second anniversary is the ‘cotton anniversary.’ Of course, if the Democrats who run Washington finally listen to the American people, the job-crushing health care law won’t make it that far.

Exchange legislation overview

States that have passed legislation:

Republican governors: North Dakota (intent), Virginia (Intent)
Democratic governors: California, Colorado (split legislature), Connecticut, Hawaii, Maryland, Oregon (split legislature), Vermont (split legislature), Washington, West Virginia

No legislation introduced:

Republican governors: Florida, Idaho, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Ohio, South Dakota, Tennessee, Wisconsin Democratic governors: Delaware, Kentucky (split legislature), New York, Massachusetts

Alternate paths:

Governors using executive authority to move process along: Alabama, Georgia, Indiana
Interim study group legislation: Mississippi, Oklahoma, Utah, Wyoming

Among Democratic governors:

Passed: 9 states
Pending: 3 states
Failed/expired: 3 states
Not introduced yet/other circumstances: 4 states (e.g. Massachusetts, New York)

Republican governors:

Passed: (2 states with intent legislation)
Pending: 7 states
Failed/expired: 12 states
Not introduced/other: 9 states

* Rhode Island has legislation pending

Decision points and trends

- Whether to spell everything out in legislation
  - Trending towards leaving policy details to be determined later/next session
- Where in the government to establish the exchange (nonprofit/agency/quasi-governmental)

- Trending towards quasi-governmental agency (less strict hiring and procurement rules, easier rules for negotiating with third parties)
  - Whether to combine the individual and small group insurance exchanges
    - Trending towards keeping them separate
  - How to finance the exchange
    - Trending towards assessing fees on health plans
  - The role of agents and brokers
    - Trending towards bringing them into the fold and giving them a role

View from Center for Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight (CCIIO)

(Lead office within HHS on exchanges)

Areas of emphasis for states:

- Setting a vision: Partnerships between state/federal, private insurance market/Medicaid, and government/private sector
  - Consumer experience: “No wrong door,” seamless experience, real-time eligibility determinations where possible, maximize online usability
    - Bringing together necessary data streams to make this possible; upgrade eligibility systems and integrate with other state programs
  - Cross-agency collaboration within states; bring everyone to the table

Issues being raised from state perspective

- Extremely aggressive timeline; information and guidance not flowing from HHS fast enough
    - Several game-changing unknowns, i.e. essential benefits package;
  - Concerns over ultimate level of access to necessary data, i.e. synching state/federal tax information;
  - Cost allocation and budgeting; difficult to set budgets with uncertain funding streams; (especially challenging to incorporate Medicaid into budgets);
  - Ensuring that health plans will participate, balancing tradeoffs of setting “active purchasing” and reporting requirements so high as to deter plan participation; and
  - Navigating governance and conflict of interest issues.

Other observations

- States officials are beginning to step up dialogue to ask for more information, more guidance, faster review
- HHS is beginning to step up conversation, push for action (report out of Montana that they will assess states who have not taken action on 1/1/12).

Recent Headlines:

- HHS awarded Rhode Island, Washington, and Indiana “Establishment Grants” to provide continued funding for the IT infrastructure development of state exchanges. Indiana and Rhode Island received roughly $5 million and $6 million, respectively. Washington received $22 million to assist with IT as well as to help the state develop policy options.
- Alabama Governor Bentley signed an executive order creating the Alabama Health Insurance Exchange Study Commission.
- Colorado Governor John Hickenlooper signed legislation passed in early May creating an exchange.
- The Connecticut House voted Saturday on a bill to establish a quasi-public agency to oversee the exchange – It heads to the governor now.
- Georgia Governor Nathan Deal has signed an executive order creating a panel to determine whether to establish a state-based exchange.
- Oregon legislation was passed a final vote this week, and is headed to Governor Kitzhaber for signing.

Good Afternoon Health Policy Advisors:

I wanted to write to introduce myself and update you on several regulations from CMS.

First, I am the new Director of the Health Division in the Center for Best Practices at the National Governors Association. I have attached my bio and e-card. Please do not hesitate to call me if I can be of any assistance. I look forward to meeting and working with all of you. If any of you plan to attend the NGA Annual Meeting in Salt Lake City, please let me know and I will try to look you up.

Second, we expect a number of important regulatory announcements from CMS over the next few weeks and months. As these occur, we will provide you with information as quickly as possible. We plan to send you analysis of the implications of the insurance exchange regulations (see below) and host briefings via conference calls to give you all an opportunity to discuss and analyze the regulations.

CMS Announcement on Dual Eligibles

Today, CMS made an announcement today regarding dual eligibles. Summarized below are the three initiatives, including the testing of two shared savings models. The first model is a capitated approach to integration for Medicare-Medicaid enrollees and the second is a managed fee-for-service (FFS) approach to integration. CMS will also implement a demonstration to improve health outcomes in for nursing facility residents and a CMS will launch a technical assistance resource center to assist all states in coordinating care to high-need, high-cost beneficiaries. Attached is the letter sent to State Medicaid Directors regarding the new initiatives.

Demonstration Program to Test Financial Models for Improved Care Coordination

The CMS Center for Medicare and Medicaid Innovation will test two financial models to determine whether they save money while preserving or enhancing the quality of care. Interested states can send a letter of intent and work with CMS to determine whether they meet established standards and conditions. The Innovation Center will approve qualifying States that collectively serve up to 1 to 2 million dual eligibles.

CMS Fact Sheet: Testing Financial Models to Support State Efforts to Coordinate Care for Medicare-Medicaid Enrollees

Demonstration to Improve Care Quality for Nursing Facility Residents

CMS will competitively select and partner with independent organizations that will provide enhanced clinical services to people in approximately 150 nursing homes. Initiatives should be targeted to improve health outcomes and reduce preventable hospitalizations.

CMS Fact Sheet: Demonstration to Improve Care Quality for Nursing Facility Residents

Technical Assistance Resource Center Available to States

CMS announced it has created a resource center to assist states in delivering coordinated health care to high-cost beneficiaries. This resource center will focus on helping states in promoting coordinated care and reducing costs.

CMS Fact Sheet: Technical Assistance Resource Center Available to States

CMS Announcement on Health Insurance Exchanges

CMS will be releasing a series of regulations on Health Insurance Exchanges, the first of which is expected to be released on Monday morning and cover the operations of Exchanges, including the requirements for the establishment and operation of an Exchange and requirements for certifying health plans for participation. Also included will be information about navigators and SHOP Exchanges. Subsequent regulations will include tax eligibility and enrollment requirements and risk adjustment.

Thank you.

Key Issues and Decisions Briefing Paper
Health and Human Services Commission
Office of Social Services (OSS) - Policy Strategy, Analysis, and Development
August, 2012

Topic: Eligibility Changes as a result of the Affordable Care Act

Background

Effective January 1, 2014, the Affordable Care Act (ACA) requires states to:

- Use modified adjusted gross income (MAGI) methodologies for most eligibility determinations for Medicaid, the Children’s Health Insurance Program (CHIP), and the health benefit Exchange (Exchange). MAGI methodologies use tax definitions of household income to determine eligibility.
- Coordinate eligibility determinations between Medicaid, CHIP and the Exchange.

Implementing these requirements will result in significant changes to eligibility policy, operations, and systems. OSS is coordinating with HHSC Information Technology (IT) to plan for implementation of these changes. A summary follows of the impact of the ACA requirements.

Medicaid Eligibility Groups

- ACA creates four MAGI Groups for Medicaid and CHIP: (1) children; (2) pregnant women; (3) parents and caretakers; and (4) optional adult expansion group.<sup>1</sup>
- Some Medicaid groups are exempt from using MAGI methodologies to determine eligibility. In Texas, this includes Medicaid for the elderly and people with disabilities.

Income Eligibility Standards

Household Income

For MAGI groups, the ACA changes the rules for counting household income based on the rules used for federal income taxes, and prohibits assets tests and most income disregards.

Income Conversion

The ACA requires states to convert current income eligibility limits to MAGI-equivalent limits. The one-time income conversion establishes the maximum income eligibility limits for MAGI groups. States are required to submit an income conversion plan for federal approval.

---

<sup>1</sup> The Supreme Court ruling on the ACA provides states with the option to cover the adult expansion group. This is an option for legislative consideration. In addition, states have requested federal guidance on the impact of the ruling on applying MAGI to existing Medicaid groups and maintenance of effort requirements.

Maintenance of Effort (MOE)

ACA MOE requirements prohibit states from implementing more restrictive eligibility standards, methodologies, or procedures for adults in Medicaid until January 1, 2014 and for children in Medicaid or CHIP through September 30, 2019.

Eligibility Determinations

Applications & Renewals

- Federal law requires a single, streamlined application for Medicaid, CHIP and the Exchange. States may have separate applications for MAGI-exempt groups and for integrated programs (such as Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) and the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP)). States may use the single streamlined application developed by the federal government or an alternative application developed by the state with federal approval.
- The ACA requires an automatic renewal for MAGI groups. To the extent possible, states must use available information to make eligibility redeterminations without requesting information from clients.
- For MAGI groups, the ACA requires a redetermination of eligibility every 12 months and when a change in circumstance is received that may affect eligibility.

Verifications

The ACA requires the use of electronic verifications for eligibility determinations for MAGI groups to the extent possible. The federal government plans to establish an electronic service (known as the federal data hub) to facilitate electronic verifications. States are required to develop plans describing verification policies and procedures to be submitted to the federal government upon request.

Performance Standards

States must establish timeliness and performance standards for making eligibility determinations promptly and without undue delay. The Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) indicates that “real-time” eligibility determinations are possible in most cases.

Coordinating Medicaid, CHIP, and Exchange Eligibility Determinations

State Medicaid and CHIP programs must establish an interface with the Exchange to coordinate eligibility determinations, and have the option of delegating eligibility determinations to the Exchange. HHSC assumes that it will continue to make Medicaid and CHIP eligibility determinations.

Current Status

Currently, OSS is working on policy development and coordinating with IT on ACA systems changes. OSS also participates in monthly technical assistance calls with CMS.

Outstanding Issues

To make the required ACA eligibility changes, OSS must:

- Continue to develop the policy and process for establishing income eligibility standards, determining eligibility, and coordinating Medicaid, CHIP, and Exchange eligibility.
- Develop and submit an income conversion plan for federal approval.
  - CMS plans to issue guidance on income conversion this year.
- Determine the single, streamed application for the state.
  - CMS indicates it will release application examples by the end of the summer.
- Develop a verification plan to be submitted to the federal government upon request.
- Establish performance standards based on new policy and process.
- Develop and implement training and communications for eligibility field staff

CMS has not issued final guidance for many ACA required eligibility changes. HHSC requires federal guidance regarding the: (1) MAGI methodology; (2) federal data hub; (3) timeliness and performance standards; (4) methodology for claiming federal funds and (5) MOE requirements.

Key Decision To Be Made

As policy and process is developed, OSS will provide briefings and request direction as needed.

Time Sensitivity

System changes for ACA eligibility requirements are scheduled to be released in August and December 2013. HHSC has indicated to CMS that it would need complete federal guidance by August 2012 to develop policy for the systems changes. Given the outstanding issues, HHSC assumes that CMS will not issue complete guidance on ACA eligibility changes by this time.

Subject: Eligibility Criteria for Establishment Grants
Date: Wednesday, December 07, 2011 2:36:18 PM

As a follow-up to today's meeting, we are providing you with the eligibility criteria for exchange establishment grants.

As per the grant announcement, there are two application categories for this funding opportunity:

1. Level One Establishment is open to States that received exchange planning grants. — "Early Innovator" States are also eligible to apply. These cooperative agreements provide up to one year of funding to states that have made some progress under their exchange planning grant but are not yet able to meet the eligibility requirements of Level Two Establishment, defined below.
2. Level Two Establishment is open to states that received exchange planning grants. — "Early Innovator" States are also eligible to apply. Level Two Establishment awards will provide funding through December 31, 2014. This category is designed to provide funding to applicants that are further along in the establishment of an exchange and that can demonstrate achievement of specific eligibility criteria outlined below. Level One Establishment grantees are eligible to apply for Level Two Establishment after making sufficient progress in Level One and once they are able to meet the Level Two eligibility criteria defined below:
  - A. Has the necessary legal authority to establish and operate an exchange that complies with federal requirements available at the time of the application.
  - B. Has established a governance structure for the exchange.
  - C. 1) Submits a complete budget through 2014; 2) Submits an initial plan discussing financial sustainability by 2015; and 3) Submits a plan outlining steps to prevent fraud, waste, and abuse.
  - D. Submits a plan describing how capacity for providing assistance to individuals and small businesses in the state will be created, continued, and/or expanded, including provision for a call center.

The complete grant announcement is available at

Subject: Enrolling Resolution De-Funding Obamacare

The House has introduced an enrolling resolution (H.Con.Res. 35) that would add provisions to the continuing resolution (H.R. 1473) prohibiting any of its funds from being used to implement Obamacare. Text is available here. Timing of a Senate vote on the enrolling resolution is unclear, but the resolution is expected to require a 60-vote affirmative threshold for adoption. Background material on Obamacare implementation activities follows my signature.

Summary:

The resolution would direct the Clerk to correct the enrollment of H.R. 1473, so that the text of the continuing resolution would prohibit funding in the continuing resolution "or any previous Act" from being used to implement the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA, P.L. 111-148) or the health care provisions of the reconciliation Act (P.L. 111-152). The wording of the enrolling resolution WOULD de-fund mandatory as well as discretionary spending for Obamacare implementation, but WOULD NOT de-fund the education and student loan provisions included in last year's reconciliation measure.

Considerations:

- At a time when the federal government is running record budget deficits, as well as significant unfunded liabilities within Medicare and Medicaid, many may object to the creation of a $2.6

trillion new entitlement program.

- Obamacare as enacted broke many of candidate Obama's campaign promises – that health “reform” would allow individuals to keep their current coverage, save families $2500 from their health insurance premiums, not raise taxes on the middle class, and lower costs. Taxpayers should not be forced to fund a measure that so dramatically deviates from the President's promised goals on health care.
- With the American economy still suffering from tepid growth and millions of individuals still unemployed, continuing to implement a law that experts agree will both raise taxes and reduce the net labor supply for the American economy represents a poor policy choice.

De-Funding Obamacare Means Federal Tax Dollars Will NOT Be Spent On:

Raising Premiums: While candidate Obama repeatedly promised that he would cut premiums by $2500 per family, the Congressional Budget Office estimated that due to the new mandates in the law, individual insurance premiums would rise by $2100 per family. Multiple stories in recent months have highlighted how premiums are not only going up despite the health care overhaul, in many instances they have risen BECAUSE of it.

Taking Away Coverage: According to the Administration's own estimates, half of all businesses will lose their current coverage within two years – subjecting them to Obamacare's costly insurance mandates. Moreover, the Medicare actuary estimates that the health care law will reduce projected enrollment in Medicare Advantage by half, and further testified the promise that the promise that individuals would keep their current coverage is “not true in all cases.”

Writing New Regulations: The Administration has released 6,578 pages of regulations and related notices in the Federal Register since the health care law passed last year – a mere down payment on the tens of thousands of pages of Washington mandates likely to be handed down over the coming years, even decades. Even a potential government shutdown didn't prevent HHS from wanting to write more regulations; the Department's contingency operations plan in the event of a lapse in funding classified those writing new Washington insurance mandates as “essential.” The mandates produced by these unelected bureaucrats will raise burdens on businesses, particularly small businesses, at a time when firms are still struggling economically.

Discouraging Workers: The non-partisan head of the Congressional Budget Office previously testified that the health care law will reduce the total labor supply by about 800,000 jobs. CBO found that the health law “will effectively increase marginal tax rates,” which will “encourage some people to work fewer hours or to withdraw from the labor market” altogether.

Raising Costs: President Obama promised that “If any bill arrives from Congress that is not controlling costs, that's not a bill I can support.” However, the Medicare actuary previously noted that the health care law will RAISE total health spending by $310,800,000,000 in its first ten years alone, and further testified the promise that the health care law would lower costs was “false, more so than true.” The Congressional Budget Office also noted that the law will RAISE the federal budgetary commitment to health care by $464 billion.

Raising Taxes: At a time when the American economy faces continued sluggish job growth, the health care law imposes more than a half-trillion dollars of destructive tax increases – many of which will hurt middle-class families. For instance, one tax alone could raise insurance premiums on families by $5,000 during the law’s first ten years.

A “Feudal” Bureaucracy: An article in this morning’s Wall Street Journal discussed “a series of increasingly intense feuds” between federal bureaucrats aiming to protect their regulatory turf. As the article notes, much of the controversy among regulators involves who will be responsible for antitrust enforcement of the accountable care organizations created by Obamacare.

Extravagant Leases: The New York Times reported in December that “in Bethesda, [Maryland,] health care officials are leasing more than 70,000 square feet of space on three floors of an office building for about 230 employees to work on rule-making and other duties. The government agreed to pay $51.41 per usable square foot of space, compared with an average of $27 in Bethesda, because it wanted to get the operation running in July, officials said.” That’s an overpayment of more than \$1.7 million of taxpayers’ dollars in one year alone – just for a single office lease.

Misleading Mailings: Last May, the Administration spent \$18 million to send a mailing to seniors purportedly touting the “benefits” of the health care law to seniors. The Government Accountability Office found that the mailer – which was NOT reviewed or approved by the non-partisan Medicare actuary for its accuracy – “overstates some of [the law’s] benefits” and “presents a picture of [the law] that is not universally shared.”

Ads with “Weasel Words”: The Administration also spent millions more in taxpayer funds to run an ad campaign in which Andy Griffith took on the role of “pitching President Barack Obama’s health care law to seniors.” The non-partisan factcheck.org concluded that the ads used “weasel words” to mislead seniors about the impact of the health care law.

Propaganda Postcards: The Internal Revenue Service spent taxpayer funds to mail out 4 million postcards advertising the health care law’s “benefits,” in the form of a scaled-back small business tax credit. Yet the IRS has not shown a similar inclination to send out postcards warning the American people of the more than half-trillion dollars of destructive tax increases included as part of the law.

PR Agents: The public affairs office at the Department of Health and Human Services recently requested a 315% increase in its budget for the coming fiscal year; that office is “tasked with selling the health care reform law.”

Re: Essential Health Benefits Bulletin

Below please find information provided by the U.S. Department of Health late Friday regarding the Essential Health Benefits required under the federal health care law. As stated on their bulletin: "On December 16, 2011, the Department of Health and Human Services issued a bulletin outlining proposed policies that will give States more flexibility and freedom to implement the Affordable Care Act. This bulletin describes a comprehensive, affordable and flexible proposal and informs the public about the approach that HHS intends to pursue in rulemaking to define essential health benefits."

Comments are due by January 31, 2012.

Essential Health Benefits: HHS Informational Bulletin

On December 16, 2011, the Department of Health and Human Services issued a bulletin outlining proposed policies that will give States more flexibility and freedom to implement the Affordable Care Act. This bulletin describes a comprehensive, affordable and flexible proposal and informs the public about the approach that HHS intends to pursue in rulemaking to define essential health benefits.

HHS is releasing this intended approach to give consumers, states, employers and issuers timely information as they work towards establishing Affordable Insurance Exchanges and making decisions for 2014. This approach was developed with significant input from the American people, as well as reports from the Department of Labor, the Institute of Medicine, and research conducted by HHS.

Essential Health Benefits

The Affordable Care Act ensures Americans have access to quality, affordable health insurance. To achieve this goal, the law ensures health plans offered in the individual and small group markets, both inside and outside of the Affordable Insurance Exchanges (Exchanges), offer a comprehensive package of items and services, known as "essential health benefits." Essential health benefits must include items and services within at least the following 10 categories:

1. Ambulatory patient services
2. Emergency services
3. Hospitalization
4. Maternity and newborn care
5. Mental health and substance use disorder services, including behavioral health treatment
6. Prescription drugs
7. Rehabilitative and habilitative services and devices
8. Laboratory services
9. Preventive and wellness services and chronic disease management, and
10. Pediatric services, including oral and vision care

Intended Approach: Comprehensive and Flexible

HHS intends to propose that essential health benefits are defined using a benchmark approach. Under the Department's intended approach announced today, states would have the flexibility to select a benchmark plan that reflects the scope of services offered by a "typical employer plan." This approach would give states the flexibility to select a plan that would best meet the needs of their citizens.

States would choose one of the following benchmark health insurance plans:

- One of the three largest small group plans in the state by enrollment;
- One of the three largest state employee health plans by enrollment;
- One of the three largest federal employee health plan options by enrollment;
- The largest HMO plan offered in the state's commercial market by enrollment.

If states choose not to select a benchmark, HHS intends to propose that the default benchmark will be the small group plan with the largest enrollment in the state.

The benefits and services included in the benchmark health insurance plan selected by the state would be the essential health benefits package. Plans could modify coverage within a benefit category so long as they do not reduce the value of coverage.

To prevent federal dollars going to state benefit mandates, the health reform law requires states to defray the cost of benefits required by state law in excess of essential health benefits for individuals enrolled in any plan offered through an Exchange. However, as a transition in 2014 and 2015, some of the benchmark options will include health plans in the state's small group market and state employee health benefit plans.

These benchmarks are generally regulated by the state and would be subject to state mandates applicable to the small group market. Thus, those mandates would be included in the state essential health benefits package if the state elected one of the three largest small group plans in that state as its benchmark.

This approach would provide maximum flexibility to states, employers and issuers while providing quality, comprehensive, coverage for consumers.

Coverage

Essential health benefits must include coverage of services and items in all 10 statutory categories. Based on our research, we believe that these benchmarks will cover most of the essential health benefits outlined by the Affordable Care Act. These categories include preventive care, emergency services, maternity care, hospital and physician services, and prescription drugs. If a state selects a benchmark plan that does not cover all 10 categories of care, the state will have the option to examine other insurance plans, including the Federal Employee Health Benefits Plan, to determine the type of benefits that must be included in the essential health benefits package.

Allowing Plans Flexibility to Innovate and Consumers Greater Choice

To meet the EHB coverage standard, HHS intends to require that a health plan offer benefits that are “substantially equal” to the benchmark plan selected by the state and modified as necessary to reflect the 10 coverage categories. Health plans also would have flexibility to adjust benefits, including both the specific services covered and any quantitative limits, provided they continue to offer coverage for all 10 statutory EHB categories and the coverage has the same value. Permitting flexibility will provide greater choice to consumers, promoting plan innovation through coverage and design options, while ensuring that plans providing EHBs offer a certain level of benefits.

Updating the Approach

The department intends to propose that benchmarks will be updated in the future, and that state mandates outside the definition of essential health benefits may not be included in future years. The Bulletin also notes that updating the benchmark will allow benefits to reflect the most up-to-date medical and market practices.

How We Got Here: The Process

While the law calls on the department to provide details regarding essential health benefits, this has been a team effort.

As required by the Affordable Care Act, in April, the Department of Labor provided a report to HHS on employer-sponsored health insurance coverage. This report (PDF - 362 KB) detailed the benefits typically covered by employers. At the request of HHS, the Institute of Medicine provided its recommendations on a process for defining and updating the benefits that should be included in the essential health benefits package.

HHS also conducted a series of listening sessions to collect public comment and hear directly from the American people, doctors, nurses, Members of Congress and all interested stakeholders.

It is important to note that the Affordable Care Act distinguishes between a health plan’s covered services, and the plan’s cost-sharing features, such as deductibles, copayments, and coinsurance. The cost-sharing features will be addressed in separate rules and will determine the actuarial value of the plan, expressed as a “metal level” as specified in statute: bronze at 60% actuarial value, silver at 70% actuarial value, gold at 80% actuarial value, and platinum at 90% actuarial value.

Although this paper represents only the intended regulatory approach, public input on this paper is encouraged—comments can be sent on essential health benefits, are due by January 31, 2012, and can be sent to: EssentialHealthBenefits@cms.hhs.gov

Clarification

We have been informed that some of you have been contacted by a vendor claiming HHS/CCIO endorsement of their product – and that some recent media also suggest endorsement. This is not the case. CCIO has not endorsed Consumer Checkbook.

Ch-ch-ch-ch-Changes

The CCIO State team has been in the process for many months of trying to add additional staff to support States in their Exchange development. We are pleased to announce that several new and eminently qualified State Officers have joined CCIO and we hope to announce that more will be coming in early 2012. These new State Officers will be taking the reins of States shortly, which means some States will have a change in their main point-of-contact. New State officers will be paired with more experienced State officers to ensure States that do have a switch will have continuity in their relationship with CCIO.

State Exchange Implementation Q&As

Date: November 29, 2011

Subject: State Exchange Implementation Questions and Answers

Cost to States

Q1: What funding is available to assist States in the establishment of an Exchange under a fully State-based Exchange a Partnership Exchange and a Federally-facilitated Exchange?

A1: The Affordable Care Act provides funding for States establishing an Exchange through grants described in section 1311. Such grants are available for establishing a State-based Exchange to build functions that a State elects to operate under a Partnership Exchange and to support State activities to build interfaces with a Federally-facilitated Exchange. Grants may be awarded through the end of 2014 and grant funds are available for approved and permissible establishment activities.

The process of "establishing" an Exchange may extend beyond the first date of operation and may include improvements and enhancements to key functions over a limited period of time. Generally grants can be used to establish Exchange functions and operating systems and to test and improve systems and processes. We have determined that a State that does not have a fully certified State-based Exchange on January 1 2013 can continue to qualify for and receive a grant award subject to the Funding Opportunity Announcement (FOA) eligibility criteria. A State can also use grant funds to build and test interfaces with HHS to support certain functions of a Federally-facilitated Exchange such as information needed for certification of qualified health plans. As such HHS anticipates modifying and extending the schedule for States to apply for establishments grants in future guidance to accommodate this schedule.

Q2: What costs are States expected to assume in establishing an Exchange and can these costs be covered by grant funding?

A2: Under the Affordable Care Act States must ensure that their Exchanges are self-sustaining by January 1 2015. Therefore the costs to States for implementing a State-based Exchange and testing Exchange operations during 2014 may be allowed under section 1311(a). Additionally grants under section 1311 may be awarded until December 31 2014 for approved establishment activities after that date. Therefore it is also permissible that under a Partnership Exchange a State may receive a grant for activities to establish and test functions that the State performs in support of a Federally-facilitated Exchange.

Q3: Will States be charged for administrative expenses when a Federally-facilitated Exchange makes a Medicaid eligibility determination?

A3: State Medicaid and CHIP programs will not be required to contribute to the costs associated with the Federally-facilitated Exchange including the costs associated with a Federally-facilitated Exchange making a Medicaid or CHIP determination. However State Medicaid and CHIP programs will have to transfer information and cases to and accept information and cases from the Federally-facilitated Exchange the costs of establishing testing and maintaining those interfaces will be shared between the State Medicaid and CHIP programs and the Federally-facilitated Exchange consistent with current cost allocation rules.

HHS has provided additional help to States to build and maintain a shared eligibility service that allows for the Exchange the Medicaid agency and the CHIP agency to share common components technologies and processes to evaluate applications for insurance affordability programs. This includes enhanced funding under Medicaid and opportunities for other State programs to reuse the information technology (IT) infrastructure without having to contribute funding for development costs related to shared services. This additional help is available to defray State costs related to establishing an efficient and effective shared eligibility service regardless of whether a Federally-facilitated Exchange or a State-based Exchange is operating in a State.

Use of Data Services Hub

Q4: Will CMS charge States for use of the data services hub?

A4: CMS is establishing a Federally-managed data services hub to support information exchanges between States (Exchanges Medicaid and CHIP agencies) and relevant Federal agencies. In many cases Federal agencies other than CMS will be providing information through the hub. Additional information about the services available through the hub and the terms for accessing those services is under development. While the agency is considering the treatment of charges for fiscal year 2014 we do not anticipate charging fully State-based Exchanges for the use of the hub.

Clarification: All CMS has determined at this point is that the agency does not anticipate that State-based Exchanges will be charged for use of the data services hub in 2014. CMS is still exploring how this will work in other situations.

Basic Health Program Funding

Q5: Under what circumstances may Exchange planning grant dollars or the Exchange establishment grant dollars be used by a State exploring or establishing a Basic Health Program under section 1331 of the Affordable Care Act?

A5: Planning grants: Planning grant funds may be used to support research and explore health insurance coverage options permitted under the Affordable Care Act including the option of a Basic Health Program.

Establishment grants: Establishment grant funds may be used for Exchange establishment activities that would coordinate or overlap with activities undertaken pursuant to the establishment of an optional Basic Health Program. For example a call center may provide consumer information on a range of coverage options including the Basic Health Program and could therefore be funded through Establishment grant funds. However funding under the Establishment grants cannot be used to support operations of the Basic Health Program or to investigate the feasibility of the Basic Health Program.

Other funding sources: States electing to establish a Basic Health Program may opt to fund administrative or establishment activities for the Basic Health Program through user fees or other State funding.

Federally-facilitated Exchange and State Department of Insurance Responsibilities

Q6: How will the Federally-facilitated Exchange coordinate with State insurance departments?

A6: A Federally-facilitated Exchange will operate in States electing not to pursue a State-based Exchange. To the greatest extent possible HHS intends to work with States to preserve the traditional responsibilities of State insurance departments when establishing a Federally-facilitated Exchange. Additionally HHS will seek to harmonize Exchange policy with existing State programs and laws wherever possible.

For example qualified health plans (QHP) that will be offered in the Federally-facilitated Exchange must meet State licensure and solvency requirements and be in good standing in the State (section 1301(a)(1)(C) of the Affordable Care Act). Accordingly States continue to maintain an important responsibility with respect to health plans licensed and offered in their State regardless of whether the Exchange is Federally-facilitated or fully State-based.

With respect to review of network adequacy which is commonly a responsibility of State insurance departments or State health agencies in consultation with State insurance departments HHS would rely on the State for advice and recommendations regarding network adequacy standards where HHS is operating a Federally-facilitated Exchange. Network adequacy standards must ensure enrollees a sufficient choice of providers consistent with HHS regulations. We expect that if a State has not adopted such a standard HHS would develop it for the purposes of the Federally-facilitated Exchange using a commonly recognized and accepted standard such as the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) Network Adequacy Model Act.

Similarly HHS is also currently working to determine the extent to which activities like the review of rates and benefit packages are already conducted by State insurance departments and how these responsibilities could be recognized as part of the certification of QHPs by a Federally-facilitated Exchange. For example most States currently have an effective rate review program in place and HHS will rely on such processes to the extent practicable and where legally permissible.

In States with a Federally-facilitated Exchange HHS will also apply existing State standards on marketing materials assuming issuers will be required to convey information about premiums benefits and cost sharing that flow from data used for plan approval and HHS will work with States to harmonize procedures for responding to consumer complaints. We recognize that most State insurance departments already have procedures in place for addressing consumer complaints and we will work with States to utilize existing processes for consumer complaints as efficiently as possible to the extent practicable.

Pursuant to our goal to preserve the traditional responsibilities of State insurance departments when establishing a Federally-facilitated Exchange we are planning to establish one or more working groups with representatives from State insurance departments to start working through issues related to plan management functions in the coming weeks.

Successful operation of the Federally-facilitated Exchange will depend on successfully harmonizing State and HHS workflows so that the annual QHP certification process can be effectively completed in time to adequately support open enrollment including preparation and release of an insurance web portal. We look forward to conversations with and suggestions from States in pursuit of this harmonization.

Eligibility under a Federally-facilitated Exchange or a State-based Exchange

Q7: The Affordable Care Act prescribes a seamless streamlined eligibility process for consumers to submit a single application and receive an eligibility determination for enrollment in a qualified health plan (QHP) through the Exchange advance payments of the premium tax credit cost-sharing reductions Medicaid CHIP and the Basic Health Program if applicable.

- Under a Federally-facilitated Exchange can a State retain authority over Medicaid eligibility determinations?
- Under a State-based Exchange can the Federal government perform activities related to advance payments of the premium tax credit and cost-sharing reductions including the verification of employer-sponsored minimum essential coverage? Can the Federal government perform the eligibility process for exemptions from the individual responsibility requirement for State-based Exchanges?

A7: Section 155.305 of the proposed rule on Exchange Functions in the Individual Market: Eligibility Determinations Exchange Standards for Employers (Exchange Eligibility NPRM available here) proposes that the Exchange will make eligibility determinations for advance payments of the premium tax credit cost-sharing reductions Medicaid CHIP and the Basic Health Program where applicable based on modified adjusted gross income (MAGI). The Exchange Eligibility NPRM does not distinguish between a State-based Exchange and a Federally-facilitated Exchange in this regard. Based on comments to the Exchange Eligibility NPRM however we intend to modify this original proposal in the final rule to permit additional options for determining eligibility under a State-based and Federally-facilitated Exchange.

Federally-facilitated Exchange

In response to comments to the Exchange Eligibility NPRM we are planning to revise the options that are available for the responsibility for the determination of eligibility under a Federally-facilitated Exchange to include the following:

1. The Federally-facilitated Exchange will conduct initial assessments of applicants for Medicaid and CHIP eligibility based on MAGI as part of the determination of eligibility for advance payments of the premium tax credit and cost-sharing reductions. However the State Medicaid and CHIP agencies make final Medicaid and CHIP determinations under this option. In order to ensure an optimal consumer experience a State electing this option would agree to make these determinations consistent with general guidelines and the terms of an agreement established between the State and the Federally-facilitated Exchange to ensure that applicants are not required to submit redundant documentation and that timeliness standards are met.

2. Alternatively if a State does not choose to retain Medicaid and CHIP eligibility determinations as set out in paragraph 1 above the Federally-facilitated Exchange may determine Medicaid and CHIP eligibility using State eligibility rules and standards in conjunction with determining eligibility for advance payments of the premium tax credit and cost-sharing reductions.

State-based Exchange

Similarly States that operate a State-based Exchange but do not wish to operate all eligibility functions as described in the Exchange Eligibility NPRM would have additional options under our intended revisions:

1. A State-based Exchange could be approved if it conducted all eligibility functions.
2. Alternatively a State-based Exchange could be approved if it uses Federally-managed services to make determinations for advance payments of the premium tax credit cost-sharing reductions and exemptions from the individual responsibility requirement.

In all cases a State could decide to have the Medicaid and CHIP agencies support the eligibility process by executing some or all functions under an agreement with the Exchange. Certification as an Exchange would also require that procedures and systems are in place to ensure a simplified seamless consumer experience. In addition for States that are interested in determining eligibility for all programs under the Affordable Care Act we are exploring how the Federal government could manage services for verification of employer-sponsored minimum essential coverage.

Under these flexible options to ensure a strong consumer experience to applicants and enrollees and to minimize administrative burden and costs it will be critical for States and the Federal government to work closely together.

IRS elements to which States will have access

Q8: What data will IRS provide to support the eligibility verification process?

A8: Section 6103(l)(21) of the Internal Revenue Code as added by section 1414(a)(1) of the Affordable Care Act permits the Secretary of the Treasury to disclose the following taxpayer information – with taxpayer consent – to support eligibility determinations for insurance affordability programs: “ (i) taxpayer identity information with respect to such taxpayer (ii) the filing status of such taxpayer (iii) the number of individuals for whom a deduction is allowed under section 151 with respect to the taxpayer (including the taxpayer and the taxpayer’s spouse) (iv) the modified adjusted gross income (as defined in section 36B) of such taxpayer and each of the other individuals included under clause (iii) who are required to file a return of tax imposed by chapter 1 for the taxable year (v) such other information as prescribed by the Secretary by regulation to indicate whether the taxpayer is eligible for such credit or reduction (and the amount thereof) and (vi) the taxable year with respect to which the preceding information relates or if applicable the fact that such information is not available.”

The IRS will provide modified adjusted gross income (MAGI) for the parents or other head of household and for certain dependents who had enough income to have been required to file a tax return. Modified adjusted gross income is the adjusted gross income shown on the Form 1040 with additional amounts added: any tax-exempt interest on State or local bonds social security benefits that are excluded from gross income and any amounts earned abroad that are otherwise excluded from adjusted gross income. This information will be taken from the return that was last due to be filed. For example during open enrollment in the last quarter of 2013 income information will be provided from 2012 income tax returns.

The IRS will also provide information about the size of the household shown on the returns that were filed and coding to help the Exchange understand the information being provided and instances in which information may not be available. Where there has been a change in circumstance the applicant will work with the Exchange to establish what changes should be reflected in household income. Similarly where there is no prior year tax return data on file for example in the case of individuals with very low or no income who had not previously been required to file the applicant will work with the Exchange to establish household income through alternate means.

Multi-State Plans

Q9: To what extent should multi-State plans contracting with the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) adhere to State-based standards including State insurance standards (e.g. solvency prompt payment market conduct) as well as Exchange-specific qualified health plan certification standards in a State (e.g. network adequacy standards)?

A9: While the proposed rule on Establishment of Exchange and Qualified Health Plans deems OPM-approved multi-State plans as certified by an Exchange we recognize States’ concerns about the need to apply State insurance requirements and State-specific certification standards to multi-State plans. We also note that Section 1324 requires a level playing field in connection with certain State and Federal legal requirements for health plans.

We seek to ensure that implementation of section 1324 does not disrupt existing markets both inside and outside the Exchanges in the States. HHS and OPM will work with the National Association of Insurance Commissioners to address these questions. We will explore this issue by further identifying existing State standards as well as specific issues of greatest concern for multi-State plans and States including reduction of adverse risk selection the risks to multi-State plans and States and potential alternatives.

Risk Adjustment Data Collection

Q10: Could HHS collect encounter data and let States perform risk adjustment?

A10: The Affordable Care Act calls for a risk adjustment program to reduce incentives for health insurance plans to avoid covering people with pre-existing conditions or those in poor health. Risk adjustment ensures that health insurance plans have a financial incentive to provide services to the people who need them most by adjusting premiums to provide more funds to plans enrolling a higher proportion of people with high health costs. This mechanism ensures that insurance plans compete on the basis of quality and service and not on the basis of avoiding sick high-cost people.

HHS issued a proposed rule on Standards Related to Reinsurance Risk Corridors and Risk Adjustment (published on July 15 2011). HHS did not propose and will not implement any proposal that calls for States or the Federal government to collect personal data such as name social security number or address for the risk adjustment program. Protecting the privacy and confidentiality of an individual’s personal health information continues to be among HHS’s highest priorities. HHS will not require States to collect medical record or information that identifies an individual’s doctor nor would the Federal government collect this information.

Quality Certification Requirements

Q11: What quality activities must States engage in to meet Exchange approval and certification requirements?

A11: The Exchange establishment grant funding opportunity announcement indicates that State-based Exchanges must develop and report a quality rating for QHPs however the current expectation is that further guidance will be released before Exchanges are required to implement the quality rating system. At this time States should focus on developing and establishing other Exchange operational capacities. When focusing on quality States should consider their strategy for using quality information to certify QHPs including when to require issuer accreditation and how to assess the quality of plans seeking to participate in Exchanges. States will also need to determine what quality information or metrics the Exchange will display to consumers and build capacity in the development of Exchange systems to accept this quality data and report it on the website. States should also consider how the Exchange will monitor QHP quality during the plan year including performance monitoring of complaints, appeals and network adequacy. HHS intends to propose a phased approach to the quality rating provisions in which quality ratings in 2014 would be predicated on generally available and collected metrics and measures transitioning to a QHP-specific rating in 2016.

Advance Payments of the Premium Tax Credit in the Federally-facilitated Exchange

Q12: Will individuals who are enrolled in coverage through a Federally-facilitated Exchange have access to premium tax credits as well as the advance payments of tax credits that will be authorized by Exchanges?

A12: Yes. The proposed regulations issued by the Treasury Department and the related proposed regulations issued by the Department of Health and Human Services are clear on this point and supported by the statute. Individuals enrolled in coverage through either a State-based Exchange or a Federally-facilitated Exchange may be eligible for tax credits including advance payments. Additionally, neither the Congressional Budget Office score nor the Joint Committee on Taxation technical explanation discussed limiting the credit to those enrolled through a State-based Exchange.

Program Integrity

Q13: How will HHS ensure that States that adopt procedures consistent with Federal policy and rulemaking to streamline Medicaid and CHIP eligibility and perform real-time determinations will not be penalized as a result of subsequent audits or error-reduction programs?

A13: In 2010, CMS issued new regulations establishing the principle that in applying the Payment Error Rate Measurement (PERM) program to Medicaid and CHIP, PERM reviews should measure the extent to which State policies and procedures are consistent with Federal policy and regulations. As long as Federally-approved State procedures are followed, PERM classifies the case as an accurate determination. For example, where States rely on self-attestation to establish certain facts regarding eligibility, PERM audits also rely on those self-attestations to establish those facts. If Federally-approved State policies require additional verifications and data collection, auditors will review cases against those standards.

We will review and analyze all of our error rate measurement programs to ensure consistent application of this principle. While we are still evaluating how we will apply the Improper Payments Elimination and Recovery Act in the case of eligibility determinations involving advance payments of the premium tax credit, our intention is to follow the same general principle.

Technical Manifesto to CCIIO

Draft: October 4, 2011

Following up on our conversations with CCIIO, CMCS and Treasury staff at the CCIIO exchange grantee meeting in Crystal City on September 19-20, 2011, we wanted to share with you the items of most pressing concern to our states. Based on our experience in both Medicaid and in our individual and small group markets, we are convinced that CCIIO, CMCS, and the IRS must address the following concerns. Failure to deal with these issues will make it impossible to successfully implement state-operated exchanges in our (or any) jurisdictions.

1. Multi-state plans must be subject to state standards. Multi-state plans must comply with all QHPs established by a state-run exchange – even if they are not subject to the state-run exchange’s formal certification process. Otherwise, multi-state plans would have an unfair competitive advantage over domestic insurers, leading to distortions in the private marketplace. Exempting multi-state plans from the state-specific requirements would substantially degrade the ability of state-run exchange and regulatory officials to ensure market competition and underlying stability. Exemptions are highly unlikely to induce additional multi-state plans to enter a market, and the risks above far outweigh any perceived efficiencies that would accrue to the multi-state plans.

2. New, inflexible operational standards will destabilize our markets. To minimize the operational challenges with implementation, state-run exchanges need to rely on existing market rules and protocols. For this reason, the federal government must defer to state-run exchanges with respect to administrative issues such as dates for open enrollment in the individual market, participation rates in the SHOP exchange, effective dates of coverage, and the definitions of premium tiers in both. Otherwise, plans are highly likely to make system changes that lead to unanticipated errors or interruptions in process flows, which, given the ambitious implementation timeframe, we are unlikely to discover until go-live.

3. Federal-state partnerships should reflect the needs of both partners. Toward the goal of a constructive federal-state partnership, we suggest that the federal government (or its agent) offer to provide the following services for state-operated exchanges: (1) determination of individual mandate exemptions; (2) rating system of plan quality/cost metrics; (3) enrollee satisfaction tools/measurements with plans; and (4) determination of affordability and minimum value of employer-sponsored insurance. Some states are also interested in having the federal government determine eligibility for premium tax credits. Federal provision of these services could offer substantial value in terms of economies of scale, uniformity across states, and reduced administrative/reporting burden on employers. However, any model that necessarily displaces the central state role in Medicaid eligibility determinations is not viable. Likewise, federal-state partnerships are simply not viable for most states if CCIIO categorizes these to be “federally-administered” insurance exchanges.

4. We need an operational protocol, not a State Plan. The rules imply that the Medicaid State Plan and related amendment process would be applicable to the exchange. We view this to be inefficient, ineffective, and inappropriate – particularly given the absence of federal financial participation in the exchange following 2014. Rather than specify operational details in an inflexible, unwieldy regulation-State Plan construct, we urge the federal government to instead create a template of operational protocols in which the federal government specifies default values for specific fields (e.g., number of days for advance notice, contents of notices, effective dates of coverage, determination of the beginning of special enrollment periods, minimum participation rates, enrollment window for new employees, QHP recertification deadlines, requirements for QHPs in SHOP exchange to offer dependent coverage, etc.). State-run exchanges could then modify the defaults as appropriate and explain their policy rationale for doing so. We view the alternative of the State Plan approach described in the rule as simply unworkable. Particularly because the federal government lacks an enforcement mechanism for noncompliance after 2014, federal officials should engage the states on an approach that may better address our respective needs and concerns.

5. Continued delay on issuing federal rules will render them irrelevant or impossible to implement. In order to offer a comprehensible, meaningful choice of high quality health plans via an exchange, states must now begin to write final business rules, IT specifications, and QHP requirements for the myriad of procurements. States face the real risk that they may need to go to market with our RFPs prior to the releases of essential health benefits package, the actuarial value parameters, and the quality rating system. As a result, contractors will necessarily price in a degree of uncertainty, which will increase the total costs to the federal government. Likewise, amendments and change orders following the (late) release of federal guidance will complicate implementation and exponentially increase risks of large component failures during implementation (e.g., because of the lack of time to complete comprehensive testing prior to go-live). To the extent that the federal government will insist on any “hard-and-fast” requirements for any of the key items above, then federal officials must release the appropriate (and final) rules and guidance by the end of 2011 – or simply defer to the states.

6. The continued absence of eligibility process guidance will limit the ability of exchanges to make real-time eligibility determinations. The federal government has yet to clarify available data content on the federal hub, the requirements for resolving conflicts in income data, and whether IRS data will be available in real-time for eligibility purposes. Likewise, the federal government has not clarified whether it or state-run exchanges will be required to make employer-sponsored insurance “affordability” determinations. As a result, states are unable to plan and procure vendor assistance with eligibility systems, which directly imperils the realization of the mutual federal-state objective of expedited eligibility determinations. We ask that CCIIO and CMS issue such guidance immediately – or acknowledge and accept the inevitable variation in state approaches.

7. The termination for non-payment of premium provisions will be abused. We are concerned that the wording of the rules would allow someone to remit partial payments (e.g., of $1) and continue in arrears status indefinitely. Thus, issuers will have to compensate for their estimate of delinquent or foregone premiums from such enrollees during these grace periods by increasing the base premium rates for all enrollees. Accordingly, state-run exchanges and QHPs must be allowed to restrict services for individuals in delinquent pay status, and the exchange must be allowed to exclude any applicant from switching plans or (re-)enrolling for a tax credit if the applicant has a premium balance in arrears within the previous 12 months. That said, we recognize that nonpayment may be an indicator of a change in household circumstances or income, and we remain committed to pro-active, outbound outreach to such households to ensure that we redetermine eligibility and adjust consumer premium amounts as appropriate.

8. Medicaid bridge options should not affect determination of second lowest cost silver or “benchmark” plans. As Brian Haile of Tennessee explained in our email to Amanda Cowley (CCIIO), Cindy Mann (CMCS) and Jason Levitis (Treasury) dated September 14, 2011 (see below), the determination of the second lowest cost silver plan or “benchmark” plan should be determined without including any Medicaid “bridge” options. Otherwise, the federal government will substantially undermine the ability of any state to fulfill a goal of “one family, one card.” To enable the “one family, one card” solution, the federal government must defer to the states to determine the benchmark plan for each metallic tier for each age group in each rating area.

9. Federal rules must distinguish the definition of “small group” for risk adjustment and SHOP purposes. In order to reduce market instability, many of us may need to conform the definition of small group in 2014-15 to that closest to our existing state statutory definition. However, given the imminent expansion of the upper limit, we need to be able to make risk adjustment payments to groups of size 51-100 throughout the process. In the interest of market stability, states must be able to make risk adjustment payments to groups with 51-100, regardless of how the state defines small group pursuant to PPACA Section 1304(b)(3). We assume that most issuers will continue to experience-rate groups of 51-100 if the state excludes such groups from the definition of “small group,” which may make risk adjustment unnecessary. However, we would far prefer to have this flexibility and leave it unused than to find ourselves without this tool to stabilize the markets.

10. The federal government must reconcile outreach goals with the fact that state-run exchanges will not have operating funds prior to 2014 to award Navigator grants. We note with approval that CCIIO has funded five offices across Mississippi prior to exchange implementation to provide outreach and referral information (i.e., to serve as precursors to Navigators). Additionally, CCIIO is working with several states to fund robust marketing/communications efforts, which complement Navigator activities but are not Navigator functions per se. We believe that these types of arrangements are realistic ways to address these issues. We encourage CCIIO to provide a menu of such options to other states that are now beginning to confront these issues. The release of guidance clarifying the availability of Medicaid FFP for Navigator activities allocated to that program should be considered, but additional and immediate work here is necessary. Otherwise, outreach activities will be limited due to obvious fiscal pressures.

11. In the absence of explicit federal funding for Navigator activities, we must be creative about Navigator resources. Working with our stakeholders, we tried to develop a way to “repurpose” existing assets in a way that might induce enrollment among eligible individuals. At least one idea merits specific mention: health care providers could voluntarily “forgive” medical debt (which they are highly likely to write off) in exchange for an uninsured person becoming/remaining insured for 2014. Programmatically, the provider could forgive the debt after the individual proved enrollment for a specified period (e.g., with a letter of creditable coverage). To make this work, the IRS must expressly exclude this type of medical debt forgiveness from the definition of personal income -- at least for the 2014 and 2015 tax years. In this way, the individual would not incur an income tax liability for the forgiveness of medical debt. Likewise, CMS may also need to make changes in various policies so that providers wouldn't be penalized in some unintended way (e.g., with respect to DSH, CPE and other funding).

As you requested, we included the items above in our respective comments. However, we wanted to bring these issues to your attention to stress a growing consensus among states on these matters.

Thank you in advance for your thoughtful consideration of these items. Of course, we would be happy to discuss at your convenience in a conference call with the appropriate parties.

Sincerely,

[Staff Signatories, State Affiliation]

Subject: Medicaid bridge and tax credits

Per your request, I am following up on our conversation in Atlanta regarding the "one family, one card" idea that we discussed. As I mentioned, we have explored various possibilities -- and we are interested in the possibility of allowing Medicaid managed care organizations (MCOs) to offer a product in the insurance exchange. Either because of their own business strategy or agreements with health care providers, the MCOs may wish to limit the availability of the product only to persons who have a dependent in their immediate family that is enrolled in Medicaid or CHIP or has been enrolled in either program within the last six or 12 months. Thus, the product may be available only to a subset of individuals of a particular age in a given rating area (depending on the issuer's preference).

This approach would be consistent with the "one family, one card" ideal. The MCOs would provide a single card for use by the entire family while a dependent was enrolled in the Medicaid/CHIP programs and for a defined period thereafter. In this way, the system would reduce discontinuities/ disruptions in insurance coverage owing to different eligibility groups and periodic income changes. For your reference, I am attaching an analysis that we wrote back in June that describes this in greater detail. In the attached memo, we refer to the option described above as the "special silver level product"; elsewhere, this has also been called a Medicaid "bridge" product. Note: This attachment is available; please email [brian.haile@tn.gov.]

To be clear, this is not a proposal, nor is it Tennessee's position that we should or even would allow such a program in our market. Rather, we would simply like to have this as an option.

As we discussed, the precise of wording of the proposed rules for the tax credit eligibility standards* gives us cause for concern. Specifically, the preamble at 76 Fed. Reg. 50931-49, 50936 (August 17, 2011) and the proposed rules at § 1.36B-3(f) could be interpreted in a way that would require the State to include a "special silver level product" when determining the benchmark or second lowest cost silver plan. If this were the case, a state-operated exchange would run the risk that the special silver level product could lower the value of the benchmark plan -- thereby reducing the value of the tax credit for the individual. Consequently, a state-operated exchange would be highly unlikely to allow special silver level/Medicaid bridge products. In a perverse sense, then, the tax credit rules could inhibit our ability to achieve the "one family, one card" goal.

We would argue that the rules should be clarified so as to allow state-operated exchanges to consider only those silver plans available to all persons in an age group in a particular area when determining the benchmark plan. Because the special silver level/Medicaid bridge products are available only to subset of individuals of a particular age group, then the state-operated exchange could exclude such products when determining the benchmark plan. While seemingly technical in nature, this clarification could vastly improve our ability to provide consistent, uninterrupted insurance coverage to low-income families.

I would note in passing that proposed rules at 26 CFR 1.36B-5 require state-run exchanges to report the applicable benchmark plans. Presumably, a state-operated exchange could exercise some degree of interpretive latitude and determine the benchmark plan using the approach that I describe above. However, it would be far better for the federal government to revise the proposed rules and expressly permit this approach.

Thank you in advance for your consideration of this suggestion. We would be happy to discuss this with you at your convenience.

Sincerely,
Brian

In case you missed this.

FYI on the attached blueprint letter HHS just sent (a formal one will be sent to Governor Walker – this is the template language). HHS is extending the deadline for state-based Exchange blueprint applications until December 14. They will still be reviewed by January 1.

The deadline for State Partnership Exchanges have also been extended.

Katie,

Please find attached the two grant applications. One for the approved planning grant and the other one for the pending early innovator grant. Also, I just want to reconfirm that the Governor has the authority to make any changes to the principals of either grant and there is a process available through CMS to make those changes.

Please let me know if you have any questions or need more information.

Thanks,
Nico

HHS Expected to Give States More Time on Exchange Decisions

By Rebecca Adams, CQ HealthBeat Associate Editor

The federal government is likely to extend the Nov. 16 deadline for states to decide whether they will run their own health insurance exchanges, according to several state officials.

State officials were supposed to notify the Department of Health and Human Services by that date about whether they plan to run the insurance exchanges that will launch in 2014, create a state-federal partnership or let the federal government operate the exchange in their area. Instead, HHS officials are expected to set a new deadline for states that want to operate the marketplaces alone but have a rolling deadline with ongoing discussions for states that are interested in a partnership.

A Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services spokesman declined to comment.

The additional time will be a relief for many state officials who are trying to determine whether there is enough political will, technical knowledge and time for them to set up their own new health benefit marketplaces.

Although many governors, especially critics of the 2010 health care law (PL 111-148, PL 111-152), were not ready to commit to a state-run or state-federal hybrid exchange before the election because they did not want it to be interpreted as a show of support for the statute, many may be interested in exerting some control over an exchange in their jurisdictions since the alternative would be one run by Washington.

Before the election, nine states were expected to let the federal government operate an exchange. On Tuesday, Missouri voters in a ballot initiative also banned the state government from creating a state exchange, bringing the total of states refusing to run a state-administered exchange to 10. (See related story, CQ HealthBeat, Nov. 7, 2012)

Sixteen states have indicated that they would like to proceed with their own state-run exchange and 14 of them have sent official letters to CMS officials that are posted on the agency's website.

The decision about how to run an exchange is complicated and in many cases, governors who would like to go ahead will have to win the support of state legislators. On Wednesday, Tennessee Republican Gov. Bill Haslam said he would prefer to have the state run its own insurance exchange program than leave it to federal officials. But state legislators in his party chimed in with criticism, saying that the legislature would not go along with the creation of a state-based exchange. Governors in many states will have to navigate similar political climates.

Today, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) released a set of regulations pertaining to the implementation of health insurance Exchanges as created by the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. The two regulations, both of which are Notices of Proposed Rulemaking, cover critical areas of the Exchange.

The first regulation, Establishment of Exchanges and Qualified Health Plans, covers the following topics:

- I. Requirements for certification of health plans to be sold in exchanges (Section 155.1000, page 215, also discussed in preamble page 96)
- II. Governance and conflict of interest provisions (Section 155.110, page 215, also discussed in preamble page 25)
- III. State-Federal partnership exchanges (discussed in preamble, pages 19 and 26)
- IV. Changes to original statutory timeline for establishment of exchanges (Section 155.105, page 182, and 155.106, page 183)
- V. Navigator Program (Section 155.210, page 183, also discussed in preamble page 44)
- VI. State Plan Amendment process (Section 155.105, page 182, also discussed in preamble page 23)
- VII. Interaction with Medicaid agencies (Section 155.260, page 196, also discussed in preamble page 58)

The second regulation, Standards Related to Reinsurance, Risk Corridors and Risk Adjustment, covers the following topics:

- I. General Provisions (page 11)
- II. State Notice of Insurance Benefits and Payment Parameters (§153.100 Establishment of State insurance benefits and payment parameters. State Standards for the Transitional Reinsurance Program for the Individual Market (page 15)

- III. State Standards Related to the Risk Adjustment Program (page 29)
- IV. Health Insurance Issuer Standards Related to the Transitional Reinsurance Program (page 46)
- V. Health Insurance Issuer Standards Related to the Temporary Risk Corridors Program (page 48)
- VI. Health Insurance Issuer Standards Related to the Risk Adjustment Program (page 54)

Attached are two brief summaries of the regulations. These regulations present states with a number of choices. NGA intends to begin soliciting and circulating questions to help states assess options for the various paths forward. We will convene states after the NGA annual meeting for an evaluation of options and discussion of feedback to HHS.

We look forward to discussing these issues with you. Please feel free to forward any comments or questions you have.

Health Insurance Exchange Legislation in the States

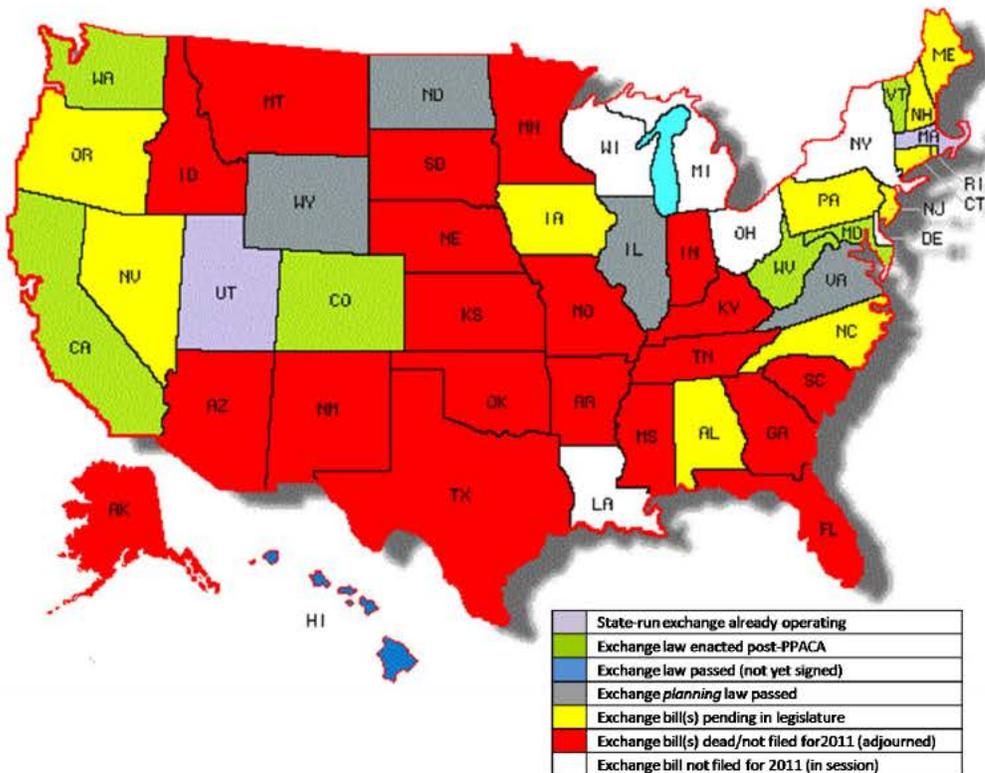

An MLA National Government Affairs Advisory

JUNE 3, 2011

The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act requires states to establish both an American Health Benefits Exchange (AHBE) and a Small Business Health Options Program (SHOP) Exchange. The former is expected to primarily serve uninsured, lower-income individuals earning between 133-400 percent of the Federal Poverty Level, who will be able to access sliding-scale tax credits and cost-sharing subsidies toward the purchase of coverage through the AHBE. The SHOP Exchange will be a marketplace where small businesses can offer a range of health insurance options to their employees. States face a deadline of January 1, 2013 (or sooner, at the discretion of the Secretary of Health and Human Services) to demonstrate that they have made sufficient progress toward establishing these portals or see the federal government do so on their behalf by 2014. Below are details on the status of state legislation establishing exchanges.

Dear Governors:

As you know, states must make many decisions within a short period of time regarding the implementation of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA). Severely strained budgets, tight deadlines and workforce shortages further complicate implementation in nearly every state.

Regardless of whether your state is considering a state-based health insurance exchange, a federal exchange, or a partnership with the federal government, a wide range of cross-agency planning and discussion must take place to meet the 2013 deadline established by the ACA.

The National Governors Association (NGA) seeks to assist states in a variety of ways to help determine the best course for your state. To that end, we hosted a health insurance exchange workshop in early September to allow states to work together on difficult issues, and communicate their needs to the federal government. We have also published two issue briefs aimed at further understanding the challenges associated with implementing exchanges.

NGA is now offering technical assistance to help further develop the strategy and tasks related to the planning and implementation of your chosen path. Teams from up to six states will be selected to work with two nationally-recognized experts in exchanges and Medicaid in a customized day-long retreat that will take place in your home state. Joel Ario, former insurance commissioner from Pennsylvania and Oregon, and former Director of Health Insurance Exchanges at the Office of the Center for Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight will serve as a resource on exchange planning. Deborah Bachrach, Medicaid expert from Manatt Health Solutions, will assist with the Medicaid aspects of the discussion.

Attached is the Request for Proposals for this technical assistance opportunity. Applications are due to NGA on November 1, 2011.

We hope you will consider this opportunity as you move forward in your consideration of implementation of the ACA. Questions and requests for additional information should be addressed to Maria Schiff at (202) 624-5395 or Mschiff@nga.org. Thank you.

Sincerely,

David Moore
Director

FYI- in WSJ. Daniels' op-ed on exchanges. Nice work, Debbie. An ObamaCare Appeal From the StatesTwenty-one governors representing more than 115 million Americans have written to Kathleen Sebelius asking for more flexibility on health-care reform.By MITCH DANIELSUnless you're in favor of a fully nationalized health-care system, the president's health-care reform law is a massive mistake. It will amplify all the big drivers of overconsumption and excessive pricing: "Why not, it's free?" reimbursement; "The more I do, the more I get" provider payment; and all the defensive medicine the trial bar's ingenuity can generate. All claims made for it were false. It will add trillions to the federal deficit. It will lead to a de facto government takeover of health care faster than most people realize, and as millions of Americans are added to the Medicaid rolls and millions more employees (including, watch for this, workers of bankrupt state governments) are dumped into the new exchanges.

Many of us governors are hoping for either a judicial or legislative rescue from this impending disaster, and recent court decisions suggest there's a chance of that. But we can't count on a miracle—that's only permitted in Washington policy making. We have no choice but to prepare for the very real possibility that the law takes effect in 2014.

For state governments, the bill presents huge new costs, as we are required to enroll 15 million to 20 million more people in our Medicaid systems. In Indiana, our independent actuaries have pegged the price to state taxpayers at $2.6 billion to $3 billion over the next 10 years.

This is a huge burden for our state, and yet another incremental expenditure the law's authors declined to account for truthfully.

Perhaps worse, the law expects to conscript the states as its agents in its takeover of health care. It assumes that we will set up and operate its new insurance "exchanges" for it, using our current welfare apparatuses to do the numbingly complex work of figuring out who is eligible for its subsidies, how much each person or family is eligible for, redetermining this eligibility regularly, and more. Then, we are supposed to oversee all the insurance plans in the exchanges for compliance with Washington's dictates about terms and prices.

The default option if any state declines to participate is for the federal government to operate an exchange directly. Which got me thinking: If the new law is not repealed by 2013, what could be done to reshape it in the direction of freedom and genuine cost control?

I have written to Kathleen Sebelius, secretary of Health and Services (HHS), saying that if her department wants Indiana to run its program for it, we will do so under the following conditions:

- We are given the flexibility to decide which insurers are permitted to offer their products.
- All the law's expensive benefit mandates are waived, so that our citizens aren't forced to buy benefits they don't need and have a range of choice that includes more affordable plans.
- The law's provisions discriminating against consumer-driven plans, such as health savings accounts, are waived.
- We are given the freedom to move Medicaid beneficiaries into the exchange, or to utilize new approaches to the traditional program, instead of herding hundreds of thousands more people into today's broken Medicaid system.
- Our state is reimbursed the true, full cost of the administrative burden to be imposed upon us, based on the estimate of an auditor independent of HHS.
- A trustworthy projection is commissioned, by a research organization independent of the department in the exchange, given the large incentives for employers to save money by off-loading their workers.

Obviously, this is a very different system than the one the legislation intends. Health care would be much more affordable, minus all the mandates, and plus the consumer consciousness that comes with health savings accounts and their kin. Customer choice would be dramatically enhanced by the state's ability to allow more insurers to participate and offer consumer-driven plans. Through greater flexibility in the management of Medicaid, the state might be able to reduce substantially the hidden tax increase that forced expansion of the program will impose.

Most fundamentally, the system we are proposing requires Washington to abandon most of the command-and-control aspects of the law as written. It steers away from nanny-state paternalism by assuming, recognizing and reinforcing the dignity of all our citizens and their right to make health care's highly personal decisions for themselves.

So why would Ms. Sebelius and HHS agree to this de facto rewrite of their treasured accomplishment? A glance at the recent fiasco of high-risk pools provides the answer. When a majority of states, including Indiana, declined to participate in setting up these pools, which cover those with high-cost, existing conditions, the task fell to

HHS. As widely reported, it went poorly, with costs far above predictions and only a tiny fraction of the expected population signing up.

If the feds can't manage this little project, what should we expect if they attempt it on a scale hundreds of times larger and more complex? If it were only Indiana asking, I have no doubt that HHS would ignore us. But Indiana is not alone. So far, 21 states—including Pennsylvania, Texas and Louisiana—have signed the same letter. We represent more than 115 million Americans. Washington's attempt to set up eligibility and exchange bureaucracies in all these places would invite a first-rate operational catastrophe.

If there's to be a train wreck, we governors would rather be spectators than conductors. But if the federal government is willing to reroute the train to a different, more productive track, we are here to help.

Mr. Daniels, a Republican, is the governor of Indiana.

there's a chance of that. But we can't count on a miracle—that's only permitted in Washington policy making. We have no choice but to prepare for the very real possibility that the law takes effect in 2014.

For state governments, the bill presents huge new costs, as we are required to enroll 15 million to 20 million more people in our Medicaid systems. In Indiana, our independent actuaries have pegged the price to state taxpayers at $2.6 billion to $3 billion over the next 10 years.

This is a huge burden for our state, and yet another incremental expenditure the law's authors declined to account for truthfully.

Perhaps worse, the law expects to conscript the states as its agents in its takeover of health care. It assumes that we will set up and operate its new insurance "exchanges" for it, using our current welfare apparatuses to do the numbingly complex work of figuring out who is eligible for its subsidies, how much each person or family is eligible for, redetermining this eligibility regularly, and more. Then, we are supposed to oversee all the insurance plans in the exchanges for compliance with Washington's dictates about terms and prices.

The default option if any state declines to participate is for the federal government to operate an exchange directly. Which got me thinking: If the new law is not repealed by 2013, what could be done to reshape it in the direction of freedom and genuine cost control?

I have written to Kathleen Sebelius, secretary of Health and Services (HHS), saying that if her department wants Indiana to run its program for it, we will do so under the following conditions:

- We are given the flexibility to decide which insurers are permitted to offer their products.
- All the law's expensive benefit mandates are waived, so that our citizens aren't forced to buy benefits they don't need and have a range of choice that includes more affordable plans.
- The law's provisions discriminating against consumer-driven plans, such as health savings accounts, are waived.
- We are given the freedom to move Medicaid beneficiaries into the exchange, or to utilize new approaches to the traditional program, instead of herding hundreds of thousands more people into today's broken Medicaid system.
- Our state is reimbursed the true, full cost of the administrative burden to be imposed upon us, based on the estimate of an auditor independent of HHS.
- A trustworthy projection is commissioned, by a research organization independent of the department in the exchange, given the large incentives for employers to save money by off-loading their workers.

Obviously, this is a very different system than the one the legislation intends. Health care would be much more affordable, minus all the mandates, and plus the consumer consciousness that comes with health savings accounts and their kin. Customer choice would be dramatically enhanced by the state's ability to allow more insurers to participate and offer consumer-driven plans. Through greater flexibility in the management of Medicaid, the state might be able to reduce substantially the hidden tax increase that forced expansion of the program will impose.

Most fundamentally, the system we are proposing requires Washington to abandon most of the command-and-control aspects of the law as written. It steers away from nanny-state paternalism by assuming, recognizing and reinforcing the dignity of all our citizens and their right to make health care's highly personal decisions for themselves.

So why would Ms. Sebelius and HHS agree to this de facto rewrite of their treasured accomplishment? A glance at the recent fiasco of high-risk pools provides the answer. When a majority of states, including Indiana, declined to participate in setting up these pools, which cover those with high-cost, existing conditions, the task fell to

HHS. As widely reported, it went poorly, with costs far above predictions and only a tiny fraction of the expected population signing up.

If the feds can't manage this little project, what should we expect if they attempt it on a scale hundreds of times larger and more complex? If it were only Indiana asking, I have no doubt that HHS would ignore us. But Indiana is not alone. So far, 21 states—including Pennsylvania, Texas and Louisiana—have signed the same letter. We represent more than 115 million Americans. Washington's attempt to set up eligibility and exchange bureaucracies in all these places would invite a first-rate operational catastrophe.

If there's to be a train wreck, we governors would rather be spectators than conductors. But if the federal government is willing to reroute the train to a different, more productive track, we are here to help.

FYI- in WSJ. Daniels' op-ed on exchanges. Nice work, Debbie. An ObamaCare Appeal From the StatesTwenty-one governors representing more than 115 million Americans have written to Kathleen Sebelius asking for more flexibility on health-care reform.By MITCH DANIELSUnless you're in favor of a fully nationalized health-care system, the president's health-care reform law is a massive mistake. It will amplify all the big drivers of overconsumption and excessive pricing: "Why not, it's free?" reimbursement; "The more I do, the more I get" provider payment; and all the defensive medicine the trial bar's ingenuity can generate. All claims made for it were false. It will add trillions to the federal deficit. It will lead to a de facto government takeover of health care faster than most people realize, and as millions of Americans are added to the Medicaid rolls and millions more employees (including, watch for this, workers of bankrupt state governments) are dumped into the new exchanges.

Many of us governors are hoping for either a judicial or legislative rescue from this impending disaster, and recent court decisions suggest there's a chance of that. But we can't count on a miracle—that's only permitted in Washington policy making. We have no choice but to prepare for the very real possibility that the law takes effect in 2014.

Louisiana:

The Honorable Kathleen Sebelius
Secretary
Department of Health and Human Services
200 Independence Ave, SW
Washington, DC 20201

November 16, 2012

Dear Secretary Sebelius:

As you know, on March 23, 2011, the State of Louisiana announced that it would not assume the risk of building a health insurance Exchange as outlined by the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA). Given the fact that deadlines established in the guidance issued in the August 13, 2012 request of the United States Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) are not legally binding, the State of Louisiana will not be submitting a Declaration Letter; however, this letter serves as the state of Louisiana's position regarding critical components of the PPACA.

Since the PPACA was signed into law, the State of Louisiana has repeatedly stated that the law has severe legal problems, is bad policy, and is unworkable. Those beliefs remain unchanged. With the Supreme Court's decision in National Federation of Independent Business v. Sebelius, the Court agreed with the State of Louisiana that at least one of the over 450 provisions of the PPACA is unconstitutional and the provision requiring all individuals to have insurance coverage can only be upheld as a tax. Even after the Supreme Court's decision, there remain many questions about the legality of the PPACA involving issues fundamental to all Americans, including religious freedom and unjust taxation.

While the Supreme Court ruled on the Constitutionality of some parts of the PPACA, it was not an endorsement of its policy merits. In fact, Chief Justice Roberts underscored this fact when he wrote, "Members of this Court are vested with the authority to interpret the law; we possess neither the expertise nor the prerogative to make policy judgments." The PPACA remains a flawed piece of legislation that fails to fix the fundamental existing problems in the United States health care system, particularly the unsustainable rising costs faced by American families and small businesses. Instead, we are faced with a more tightly controlled federal-run health insurance market that will increase costs, undermine the private health care marketplace, and weaken private sector job creation.

The Supreme Court's decision also fails to resolve the fact that the PPACA is simply an unworkable piece of legislation. With incomplete regulations and unrealistic deadlines, States and the Federal government will struggle to have a health insurance Exchange ready for open enrollment on October 1, 2013 that is not beset with major complications for the insurance market and the respective residents of the States. The full extent of damage the PPACA causes to small businesses, the nation's economy, and the American health care system will only be revealed with time. The State of Louisiana has no interest in being a party to this failure by implementing a state based exchange.

The PPACA's Legality

Louisiana was one of 26 States that filed suit against the federal government concerning the legality of the PPACA, specifically focusing on two parts: § 1501 (the individual mandate) and Title II (the mandatory expansion of the Medicaid eligible population to 133 percent of the federal poverty level). In June of this year, the Supreme Court agreed that the mandatory Medicaid expansion was unconstitutional. They also ruled that the individual mandate was unconstitutional under Congress's Commerce power, but upheld this provision as an example of Congress's taxing power, admitting that the purported penalty is actually a tax.

While the Supreme Court effectively rewrote the PPACA to uphold the individual mandate, they did not rule on the legality of the remainder of the law. In fact, the Supreme Court is aware that future challenges are likely to occur by its recent actions. With continuing questions about the PPACA's legality, we believe it is prudent to wait until these challenges are completely resolved. Provisions that the Court did not rule on that are still being challenged include:

The Employer Mandate

- The PPACA requires that all employers with fifty or more full-time employees provide adequate health care coverage to their employees. (§ 1513, §1514, and §10106). If they do not, these employers could face a tax of $2,000 or $3,000.

Federally-Facilitated Exchange Subsidy

- In the PPACA, State-based health Exchanges are authorized to provide premium assistance subsidies to individuals from 100% to 400% of the Federal Poverty Level. However, the PPACA does not expressly authorize Federally-facilitated Exchanges to do the same. Subsequent regulations from the Internal Revenue Service have interpreted the law so that all Exchanges are able to provide premium assistance. The legality of these regulations is currently being challenged.

Preventative Care Mandate

- Section 2713 of the PPACA allows for the Secretary to define preventive care services to be provided cost-free by all non-grandfathered insurance plans. In August 2011, the Secretary released a regulation that included contraceptive and some abortifacient services as preventative care. The regulation has been challenged by numerous groups and individuals (in over 35 lawsuits) who have religious objections to paying for health insurance that includes coverage for contraception and some abortifacient services.

Maintenance of Effort

- The Supreme Court's decision invalidated the provision of the PPACA which coerced States to expand their Medicaid program by threatening existing Medicaid funding. Questions remain whether this applies to the maintenance of effort (MOE) requirement, requiring States to maintain their existing Medicaid eligibility until 2014.

Origination Clause

- The Supreme Court decision made it clear that the individual mandate is a tax, not a penalty as claimed by the administration. The PPACA originated in the Senate. The Constitution (Article I, Section 7, Clause 1) is clear that all taxes are to originate in the House, and thus the individual mandate has been contested as an unconstitutional tax.

Independent Payment Advisory Board (IPAB)

- Sections 3403 and 10320 of the PPACA created this 15-member federal board that is granted the authority to make payment changes for the Medicare program without approval from Congress. There are also no administrative or judicial reviews of these decisions.

Legality of Rulemaking/Guidance

- With many of the provisions of the PPACA, formal rules and regulations have been delayed or even non-existent. There are serious questions about the legality of this procedure in light of the Administrative Procedures Act.

Bad Policy

While HHS has repeatedly said that the States serve as incubators of innovation, the PPACA robs States of this ability by limiting their opportunities to enact meaningful state-led health care reform. For example, the concept for an Exchange originated as a free market idea meant to lower the cost of health insurance for those who decide to purchase such insurance. In theory, an increased pool for those deciding to purchase health insurance is a good idea. It provides individuals the ability to select the insurance coverage that they want at a lower cost. If this were truly the framework for the Exchange model outlined in PPACA, the State of Louisiana would be glad to evaluate it as an option, adopting it to our State's needs. However, the PPACA Exchange is only masquerading as free market idea, and instead creates a vehicle for the Federal government to tightly control the coverage options available to consumers, raising costs and limiting choice. Many employers will drop the health insurance coverage they currently provide to employees, leaving individual health care needs to the federal government. Specifically, the consequences of the PPACA Exchange and associated insurance changes include:

Lack of Consumer Choice

- When the PPACA was proposed, the President promised that if individuals liked their current health care insurance, they could keep it. However, the PPACA model will actually force individuals into the broken, government-run Medicaid system and into heavily-regulated, government-run health care plans (deemed "minimal essential coverage" by the Federal government).

Individuals should have the right to select what health care plan is best for them, and not be limited to a one-size-fits-all product that a political process deems is "essential". By mandating that certain benefits be provided in all insurance plans, the price of premiums will increase, leaving individuals unable to continue the coverage they like and a price they can afford

Increased Taxes

- The PPACA requires that all Exchanges be financially self-sufficient by 2015. This will require the Exchange to generate revenue, either by instituting user fees in the Exchange market or in the entire insurance market- essentially a tax on all insurance plans purchased. This will only further drive up the costs of premiums in the Exchange market for consumers and for individuals who will have to pay the premium assistance through their taxes.

- The PPACA also includes a tax on insurance premiums which are proposed to be paid for by "the industry." It is troubling that these same taxes will affect managed care organizations, proven mechanisms for more effectively controlling cost for Medicaid and Medicare, especially needed for States with limited financial resources.

Impact on Employers and Employees

- The employer mandate, a tax on employers with fifty or more employees who decide not to provide "adequate" health insurance coverage to their employees, is a disincentive to provide coverage. Already, businesses are attempting to modify their business structure to avoid the law's mandates (either by laying off employees or reducing the number of hours these employees work). Even those employers who provide coverage can be taxed an additional $3,000 if that employee is eligible and enrolls in coverage on the health insurance Exchange. So instead of building upon the existing insurance market, the PPACA is undermining it.

Unworkable

The deadline for all Exchanges (both State and federally-facilitated) to be ready for open enrollment is October 1, 2013. However, it is likely many exchanges will not be ready by that point, even in those States that are supportive of the PPACA. The guidance received from the Federal government is often delayed or non-existent. For a project as large and complicated as health care reform, this is an insurmountable hurdle for the States to overcome. There are numerous unanswered questions and major problems remaining about Exchanges and the provisions of the PPACA entangled with them. Continuing issues include:

Exchanges in General

- In order for an Exchange to be ready for open enrollment on October 1, 2013, it must be approved or conditionally approved by January 1, 2013. However, there have been no formal regulations regarding what guidelines HHS will use to determine if an Exchange is conditionally approved or not.

- It has been continuously promised by officials at HHS that there will be cost comparisons between the Federally-facilitated Exchange, the State-based Exchange, and the partnership Exchanges. These cost estimates have not yet been made public.

Federally-facilitated Exchanges

- To date, in addition to the incomplete final rule for health insurance Exchanges, there has been no rulemaking regarding the Federally-facilitated Exchanges and their interactions with the respective States' eligibility systems. Promised in the March 2012 final Exchange regulation was further guidance regarding the Federally-facilitated Exchange. Since that point, only a questions and answers document has been released.

- Numerous contracts have been signed for the development of the Federally-facilitated Exchange, but these documents have not been made public. The State of Louisiana filed a Freedom of Information Act request within the last month for these contracts and has still not received these documents. Senator Orrin Hatch of Utah requested similar documents in his role as Ranking Member on the U.S. Senate Committee on Finance and has not received a response. It is necessary for these documents to be made public so that States can make informed decisions concerning Exchanges.

Partnership Exchange

- A partnership Exchange will be a Federally-facilitated Exchange with certain functions run by the State. It is an option first introduced by a power point presentation and further expanded by a document entitled "General Guidance on Federally-facilitated Exchanges," but has yet to be defined in federal regulations. The final Exchange rule proposed no regulations regarding this option.

- There has been no answer from the Federal government concerning whether the Federal government or the States will be responsible to pay for the state-run functions of a partnership Exchange.

The Workings of an Exchange

- The Exchange is required to provide premium tax credits to those between 100% and 400% of the federal poverty line. Originally projected to cost the federal government $462 billion between 2012 and 2019, these subsidies are now projected to be $574 billion during the same period by the Congressional Budget Office. Already, Medicare funding will be cut by $700 billion to pay for these premium tax credits. There is discussion that because these levels of subsidies are unsustainable, the number of Americans eligible for premium assistance subsidies will be reduced in number.

Essential Health Benefits and Actuarial Values

- All plans in the individual and small group markets (including plans sold on the respective State Exchanges) must meet "essential health benefits," benefits not yet defined by the Secretary of HHS in formal rulemaking. Initial informal guidance suggests that these benefits will be based off of the most popular small group plans in each State in addition to benefits specified by the PPPACA. The States, insurance companies, and other stakeholders are awaiting formal regulations about essential health benefits.

- The States are awaiting a promised "actuarial value calculator" to accurately determine actuarial values for plans sold on the Exchange. This still has not been delivered and numerous questions remain about how actuarial value of health insurance plans will be determined.

Reforms Needed

It is most disappointing that the PPACA failed to offer sustainable reform of the nation's health care system. Instead of strengthening the market to lower costs and increase consumer choice, the PPACA created a big government "solution"- the type of solution history tells us will only create debt and worry for future generations of Americans. Health care reform should focus on improving the value of health care in America by bringing down costs and improving quality.

There are several ways to do this. Transparency in health care is essential for individuals to be better consumers of care. The cost and success rates of different procedures can be made publically available to help individuals make decisions about their care. Increased competition through individuals being allowed to purchase insurance across State lines can create greater competition and lower costs.

Similarly, just as individuals should have more investment in their health care choices, States should have greater ability to design programs that meet the needs of their people. States know how to take care of their residents more than the bureaucrats in Washington, distant both in geography and in experience. Louisiana, for example, has been able to make remarkable progress in its care of the Medicaid population through an innovative model of managed care, saving money and improving the quality of care. However, constrained by the federal requirements for Medicaid, Louisiana can only do so much. It is time to give the States the option to administer this program through block grants to save both the Federal and State taxpayers money and eliminate the perverse incentives created by federal rules and funding streams.

States need to be given the tools to solve these problems. The PPACA should either be repealed or replaced with a system giving States the ability to truly innovate. At the very least, we ask that you give the States flexibility through waivers exempting States from the burdensome requirements of the PPACA while providing the care their populations need and want in the way the States know best how to deliver.

In addition to these needed reforms, the State of Louisiana fully expects HHS to coordinate its efforts regarding implementation of a Federally-facilitated Exchange in an effort to mitigate the negative impact on either our private insurance market or the Medicaid program. The State expects that the Federal government will adhere to the four guiding principles included in the "General Guidance on Federally-facilitated Exchanges" and intends to hold the Federal government accountable to these principles. Additionally, the impact on our State's budget is a significant concern. In this light we expect that HHS will:

- Provide a full and complete briefing to the State officials regarding on-going implementation efforts;
- Schedule routine meetings to update State officials on the implementation status;
- Notify the State when all stakeholder, consumer, or any other public meetings or public outreach activities are scheduled;
- Work with the State on memorandums of understanding and/or contracts if the Federal-facilitated Exchange expects any support or assistance of the State so that the State is fairly and equitably compensated, including for the use of any State data used by the Federally-facilitated Exchange to verify income;

- Provide the names of all contractors who will be working in the State on the Federally-facilitated Exchange and the details about what activities these contractors will be involved in, including copies of all contracts;
- After the establishment of the Exchange, provide regular (at least semi-annual) updates on its utilization, cost (including long-term financial health), and its impact on the State's insurance market, including, but not limited to the information that must be provided pursuant to §1311(d)(7) of the PPACA;
- If any changes to the Federally-facilitated Exchange model are anticipated, the State is notified immediately; and
- Inform the State of any navigator grant recipients and provide copies of memorandums of understanding between navigators and the Federally-facilitated Exchange.

All further correspondence regarding the PPACA and health insurance Exchange issues is to be directed to the Louisiana Department of Health and Hospitals (Bruce Greenstein, Secretary), the official agency authorized to collaborate with HHS on issues concerning the PPACA in Louisiana. The State of Louisiana hopes that HHS will listen to its concerns and give the States actual flexibility to improve health care for all Americans.

Sincerely,

Bruce D. Greenstein

Extending and Expanding Opportunities for Job Creation and Investment

OVERVIEW

- The Middle Class Tax Relief and Job Creation Act extends expensing (sometimes called 100 percent bonus depreciation) through 2012 to make it easier for employers, small and large, to invest now in new machinery and equipment, grow their businesses, and create jobs.

EXTENDING AND EXPANDING EXPENSING

- The Middle Class Tax Relief and Job Creation Act extends for an additional year, through 2012, the 100 percent depreciation allowance that is currently in effect for 2011.
- Additionally, the Act expands the current expensing provision in two ways.
  1. For 2012, the Act makes it easier for companies to claim AMT credits in lieu of bonus depreciation.
  2. For 2012, taxpayers that use the “percentage of completion method” of accounting can, for certain property, take into account the cost of the property, rather than the higher bonus depreciation amount.

BACKGROUND

In general, business taxpayers must depreciate the cost of capital assets over several years, with the exact period depending on the asset. In December 2010, as part of tax legislation that extended the 2001/2003 tax relief laws, Congress provided for expensing (100 percent bonus depreciation) for qualifying property purchased (and generally placed in service) between September 8, 2010, and December 31, 2011.

Also under current law, a corporation may elect to forgo bonus depreciation and instead claim unused AMT credits from tax years before January 1, 2006. However, several provisions limit the amount of unused AMT credits that may be claimed in any tax year. Finally, a taxpayer that uses the “percentage of completion” method of accounting generally must take into account income associated with a deduction at the time the deduction is taken.

Louisiana:

The Honorable Kathleen Sebelius
Secretary
Department of Health and Human Services
200 Independence Ave, SW
Washington, DC 20201

November 16, 2012

Dear Secretary Sebelius:

As you know, on March 23, 2011, the State of Louisiana announced that it would not assume the risk of building a health insurance Exchange as outlined by the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA). Given the fact that deadlines established in the guidance issued in the August 13, 2012 request of the United States Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) are not legally binding, the State of Louisiana will not be submitting a Declaration Letter; however, this letter serves as the state of Louisiana's position regarding critical components of the PPACA.

Since the PPACA was signed into law, the State of Louisiana has repeatedly stated that the law has severe legal problems, is bad policy, and is unworkable. Those beliefs remain unchanged. With the Supreme Court's decision in National Federation of Independent Business v. Sebelius, the Court agreed with the State of Louisiana that at least one of the over 450 provisions of the PPACA is unconstitutional and the provision requiring all individuals to have insurance coverage can only be upheld as a tax. Even after the Supreme Court's decision, there remain many questions about the legality of the PPACA involving issues fundamental to all Americans, including religious freedom and unjust taxation.

While the Supreme Court ruled on the Constitutionality of some parts of the PPACA, it was not an endorsement of its policy merits. In fact, Chief Justice Roberts underscored this fact when he wrote, "Members of this Court are vested with the authority to interpret the law; we possess neither the expertise nor the prerogative to make policy judgments." The PPACA remains a flawed piece of legislation that fails to fix the fundamental existing problems in the United States health care system, particularly the unsustainable rising costs faced by American families and small businesses. Instead, we are faced with a more tightly controlled federal-run health insurance market that will increase costs, undermine the private health care marketplace, and weaken private sector job creation.

The Supreme Court's decision also fails to resolve the fact that the PPACA is simply an unworkable piece of legislation. With incomplete regulations and unrealistic deadlines, States and the Federal government will struggle to have a health insurance Exchange ready for open enrollment on October 1, 2013 that is not beset with major complications for the insurance market and the respective residents of the States. The full extent of damage the PPACA causes to small businesses, the nation's economy, and the American health care system will only be revealed with time. The State of Louisiana has no interest in being a party to this failure by implementing a state based exchange.

The PPACA's Legality

Louisiana was one of 26 States that filed suit against the federal government concerning the legality of the PPACA, specifically focusing on two parts: § 1501 (the individual mandate) and Title II (the mandatory expansion of the Medicaid eligible population to 133 percent of the federal poverty level). In June of this year, the Supreme Court agreed that the mandatory Medicaid expansion was unconstitutional. They also ruled that the individual mandate was unconstitutional under Congress's Commerce power, but upheld this provision as an example of Congress's taxing power, admitting that the purported penalty is actually a tax.

While the Supreme Court effectively rewrote the PPACA to uphold the individual mandate, they did not rule on the legality of the remainder of the law. In fact, the Supreme Court is aware that future challenges are likely to occur by its recent actions. With continuing questions about the PPACA's legality, we believe it is prudent to wait until these challenges are completely resolved. Provisions that the Court did not rule on that are still being challenged include:

The Employer Mandate

- The PPACA requires that all employers with fifty or more full-time employees provide adequate health care coverage to their employees. (§ 1513, §1514, and §10106). If they do not, these employers could face a tax of $2,000 or $3,000.

Federally-Facilitated Exchange Subsidy

- In the PPACA, State-based health Exchanges are authorized to provide premium assistance subsidies to individuals from 100% to 400% of the Federal Poverty Level. However, the PPACA does not expressly authorize Federally-facilitated Exchanges to do the same. Subsequent regulations from the Internal Revenue Service have interpreted the law so that all Exchanges are able to provide premium assistance. The legality of these regulations is currently being challenged.

Preventative Care Mandate

- Section 2713 of the PPACA allows for the Secretary to define preventive care services to be provided cost-free by all non-grandfathered insurance plans. In August 2011, the Secretary released a regulation that included contraceptive and some abortifacient services as preventative care. The regulation has been challenged by numerous groups and individuals (in over 35 lawsuits) who have religious objections to paying for health insurance that includes coverage for contraception and some abortifacient services.

Maintenance of Effort

- The Supreme Court's decision invalidated the provision of the PPACA which coerced States to expand their Medicaid program by threatening existing Medicaid funding. Questions remain whether this applies to the maintenance of effort (MOE) requirement, requiring States to maintain their existing Medicaid eligibility until 2014.

Origination Clause

- The Supreme Court decision made it clear that the individual mandate is a tax, not a penalty as claimed by the administration. The PPACA originated in the Senate. The Constitution (Article I, Section 7, Clause 1) is clear that all taxes are to originate in the House, and thus the individual mandate has been contested as an unconstitutional tax.

Independent Payment Advisory Board (IPAB)

- Sections 3403 and 10320 of the PPACA created this 15-member federal board that is granted the authority to make payment changes for the Medicare program without approval from Congress. There are also no administrative or judicial reviews of these decisions.

Legality of Rulemaking/Guidance

- With many of the provisions of the PPACA, formal rules and regulations have been delayed or even non-existent. There are serious questions about the legality of this procedure in light of the Administrative Procedures Act.

Bad Policy

While HHS has repeatedly said that the States serve as incubators of innovation, the PPACA robs States of this ability by limiting their opportunities to enact meaningful state-led health care reform. For example, the concept for an Exchange originated as a free market idea meant to lower the cost of health insurance for those who decide to purchase such insurance. In theory, an increased pool for those deciding to purchase health insurance is a good idea. It provides individuals the ability to select the insurance coverage that they want at a lower cost. If this were truly the framework for the Exchange model outlined in PPACA, the State of Louisiana would be glad to evaluate it as an option, adopting it to our State's needs. However, the PPACA Exchange is only masquerading as free market idea, and instead creates a vehicle for the Federal government to tightly control the coverage options available to consumers, raising costs and limiting choice. Many employers will drop the health insurance coverage they currently provide to employees, leaving individual health care needs to the federal government. Specifically, the consequences of the PPACA Exchange and associated insurance changes include:

Lack of Consumer Choice

- When the PPACA was proposed, the President promised that if individuals liked their current health care insurance, they could keep it. However, the PPACA model will actually force individuals into the broken, government-run Medicaid system and into heavily-regulated, government-run health care plans (deemed "minimal essential coverage" by the Federal government).

Individuals should have the right to select what health care plan is best for them, and not be limited to a one-size-fits-all product that a political process deems is "essential". By mandating that certain benefits be provided in all insurance plans, the price of premiums will increase, leaving individuals unable to continue the coverage they like and a price they can afford

Increased Taxes

- The PPACA requires that all Exchanges be financially self-sufficient by 2015. This will require the Exchange to generate revenue, either by instituting user fees in the Exchange market or in the entire insurance market- essentially a tax on all insurance plans purchased. This will only further drive up the costs of premiums in the Exchange market for consumers and for individuals who will have to pay the premium assistance through their taxes.

- The PPACA also includes a tax on insurance premiums which are proposed to be paid for by "the industry." It is troubling that these same taxes will affect managed care organizations, proven mechanisms for more effectively controlling cost for Medicaid and Medicare, especially needed for States with limited financial resources.

Impact on Employers and Employees

- The employer mandate, a tax on employers with fifty or more employees who decide not to provide "adequate" health insurance coverage to their employees, is a disincentive to provide coverage. Already, businesses are attempting to modify their business structure to avoid the law's mandates (either by laying off employees or reducing the number of hours these employees work). Even those employers who provide coverage can be taxed an additional $3,000 if that employee is eligible and enrolls in coverage on the health insurance Exchange. So instead of building upon the existing insurance market, the PPACA is undermining it.

Unworkable

The deadline for all Exchanges (both State and federally-facilitated) to be ready for open enrollment is October 1, 2013. However, it is likely many exchanges will not be ready by that point, even in those States that are supportive of the PPACA. The guidance received from the Federal government is often delayed or non-existent. For a project as large and complicated as health care reform, this is an insurmountable hurdle for the States to overcome. There are numerous unanswered questions and major problems remaining about Exchanges and the provisions of the PPACA entangled with them. Continuing issues include:

Exchanges in General

- In order for an Exchange to be ready for open enrollment on October 1, 2013, it must be approved or conditionally approved by January 1, 2013. However, there have been no formal regulations regarding what guidelines HHS will use to determine if an Exchange is conditionally approved or not.
- It has been continuously promised by officials at HHS that there will be cost comparisons between the Federally-facilitated Exchange, the State-based Exchange, and the partnership Exchanges. These cost estimates have not yet been made public.

Federally-facilitated Exchanges

- To date, in addition to the incomplete final rule for health insurance Exchanges, there has been no rulemaking regarding the Federally-facilitated Exchanges and their interactions with the respective States' eligibility systems. Promised in the March 2012 final Exchange regulation was further guidance regarding the Federally-facilitated Exchange. Since that point, only a questions and answers document has been released.
- Numerous contracts have been signed for the development of the Federally-facilitated Exchange, but these documents have not been made public. The State of Louisiana filed a Freedom of Information Act request within the last month for these contracts and has still not received these documents. Senator Orrin Hatch of Utah requested similar documents in his role as Ranking Member on the U.S. Senate Committee on Finance and has not received a response. It is necessary for these documents to be made public so that States can make informed decisions concerning Exchanges.

Partnership Exchange

- A partnership Exchange will be a Federally-facilitated Exchange with certain functions run by the State. It is an option first introduced by a power point presentation and further expanded by a document entitled "General Guidance on Federally-facilitated Exchanges," but has yet to be defined in federal regulations. The final Exchange rule proposed no regulations regarding this option.
- There has been no answer from the Federal government concerning whether the Federal government or the States will be responsible to pay for the state-run functions of a partnership Exchange.

The Workings of an Exchange

- The Exchange is required to provide premium tax credits to those between 100% and 400% of the federal poverty line. Originally projected to cost the federal government $462 billion between 2012 and 2019, these subsidies are now projected to be $574 billion during the same period by the Congressional Budget Office. Already, Medicare funding will be cut by $700 billion to pay for these premium tax credits. There is discussion that because these levels of subsidies are unsustainable, the number of Americans eligible for premium assistance subsidies will be reduced in number.

Essential Health Benefits and Actuarial Values

- All plans in the individual and small group markets (including plans sold on the respective State Exchanges) must meet "essential health benefits," benefits not yet defined by the Secretary of HHS in formal rulemaking. Initial informal guidance suggests that these benefits will be based off of the most popular small group plans in each State in addition to benefits specified by the PPACA. The States, insurance companies, and other stakeholders are awaiting formal regulations about essential health benefits.
- The States are awaiting a promised "actuarial value calculator" to accurately determine actuarial values for plans sold on the Exchange. This still has not been delivered and numerous questions remain about how actuarial value of health insurance plans will be determined.

Reforms Needed

It is most disappointing that the PPACA failed to offer sustainable reform of the nation's health care system. Instead of strengthening the market to lower costs and increase consumer choice, the PPACA created a big government "solution"- the type of solution history tells us will only create debt and worry for future generations of Americans. Health care reform should focus on improving the value of health care in America by bringing down costs and improving quality.

There are several ways to do this. Transparency in health care is essential for individuals to be better consumers of care. The cost and success rates of different procedures can be made publically available to help individuals make decisions about their care. Increased competition through individuals being allowed to purchase insurance across State lines can create greater competition and lower costs.

Similarly, just as individuals should have more investment in their health care choices, States should have greater ability to design programs that meet the needs of their people. States know how to take care of their residents more than the bureaucrats in Washington, distant both in geography and in experience. Louisiana, for example, has been able to make remarkable progress in its care of the Medicaid population through an innovative model of managed care, saving money and improving the quality of care. However, constrained by the federal requirements for Medicaid, Louisiana can only do so much. It is time to give the States the option to administer this program through block grants to save both the Federal and State taxpayers money and eliminate the perverse incentives created by federal rules and funding streams.

States need to be given the tools to solve these problems. The PPACA should either be repealed or replaced with a system giving States the ability to truly innovate. At the very least, we ask that you give the States flexibility through waivers exempting States from the burdensome requirements of the PPACA while providing the care their populations need and want in the way the States know best how to deliver.

In addition to these needed reforms, the State of Louisiana fully expects HHS to coordinate its efforts regarding implementation of a Federally-facilitated Exchange in an effort to mitigate the negative impact on either our private insurance market or the Medicaid program. The State expects that the Federal government will adhere to the four guiding principles included in the "General Guidance on Federally-facilitated Exchanges" and intends to hold the Federal government accountable to these principles. Additionally, the impact on our State's budget is a significant concern. In this light we expect that HHS will:

- Provide a full and complete briefing to the State officials regarding on-going implementation efforts;
- Schedule routine meetings to update State officials on the implementation status;
- Notify the State when all stakeholder, consumer, or any other public meetings or public outreach activities are scheduled;
- Work with the State on memorandums of understanding and/or contracts if the Federal-facilitated Exchange expects any support or assistance of the State so that the State is fairly and equitably compensated, including for the use of any State data used by the Federally-facilitated Exchange to verify income;

- Provide the names of all contractors who will be working in the State on the Federally-facilitated Exchange and the details about what activities these contractors will be involved in, including copies of all contracts;
- After the establishment of the Exchange, provide regular (at least semi-annual) updates on its utilization, cost (including long-term financial health), and its impact on the State's insurance market, including, but not limited to the information that must be provided pursuant to §1311(d)(7) of the PPACA;
- If any changes to the Federally-facilitated Exchange model are anticipated, the State is notified immediately; and
- Inform the State of any navigator grant recipients and provide copies of memorandums of understanding between navigators and the Federally-facilitated Exchange.

All further correspondence regarding the PPACA and health insurance Exchange issues is to be directed to the Louisiana Department of Health and Hospitals (Bruce Greenstein, Secretary), the official agency authorized to collaborate with HHS on issues concerning the PPACA in Louisiana. The State of Louisiana hopes that HHS will listen to its concerns and give the States actual flexibility to improve health care for all Americans.

Sincerely,

Bruce D. Greenstein

<SC Gov Nikki Haley Letter to HHS Secretary.PDF>

President Obama has won reelection, and his administration has asked state officials to decide by Friday, November 16, whether their state will create one of Obamacare's health-insurance "exchanges." States also have to decide whether to implement the law's massive expansion of Medicaid. The correct answer to both questions remains a resounding no.

State-created exchanges mean higher taxes, fewer jobs, and less protection of religious freedom. States are better off defaulting to a federal exchange. The Medicaid expansion is likewise too costly and risky a proposition. Republican Governors Association chairman Bob McDonnell (R., Va.) agrees, and has announced that Virginia will implement neither provision.

There are many arguments against creating exchanges.

First, states are under no obligation to create one.

Second, operating an Obamacare exchange would be illegal in 14 states. Alabama, Arizona, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Missouri, Montana, Ohio, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Utah, and Virginia have enacted either statutes or constitutional amendments (or both) forbidding state employees to participate in an essential exchange function: implementing Obamacare's individual and employer mandates.

Third, each exchange would cost its state an estimated $10 million to $100 million per year, necessitating tax increases.

Fourth, the November 16 deadline is no more real than the "deadlines" for implementing REAL ID, which have been pushed back repeatedly since 2008.

Fifth, states can always create an exchange later if they choose.

Sixth, a state-created exchange is not a state-controlled exchange. All exchanges will be controlled by Washington.

Seventh, Congress authorized no funds for federal “fallback” exchanges. So Washington may not be able to impose Exchanges on states at all.

Eighth, the Obama administration has yet to provide crucial information that states need before they can make an informed decision.

Ninth, creating an exchange sets state officials up to take the blame when Obamacare increases insurance premiums and denies care to the sick. State officials won't want their names on this disastrous mess.

Tenth, creating an exchange would be assisting in the creation of a “public option” that would drive domestic health-insurance carriers out of business through unfair competition.

Eleventh, Obamacare remains unpopular. The latest Kaiser Family Foundation poll found that only 38 percent of the public supports it.

Twelfth, defaulting to a federal exchange exempts a state's employers from the employer mandate — a tax of $2,000 per worker per year (the tax applies to companies with more than 59 employees, but for such companies that tax applies after the 30th employee, not the 59th). If all states did so, that would exempt 18 million Americans from the individual mandate's tax of $2,085 per family of four. Avoiding those taxes improves a state's prospects for job creation, and protects the conscience rights of employers and individuals whom the Obama administration is forcing to purchase contraceptives coverage.

Finally, rejecting an exchange reduces the federal deficit. Obamacare offers its deficit-financed subsidies to private health insurers only through state-created exchanges. If all states declined, federal deficits would fall by roughly $700 billion over ten years.

For similar reasons, states should decline to implement Obamacare's Medicaid expansion. The Supreme Court gave states that option. All states should exercise it.

Medicaid is rife with waste and fraud. It increases the cost of private health care and insurance, crowds out private health insurance and long-term-care insurance, and discourages enrollees from climbing the economic ladder. There is scant reliable evidence that Medicaid improves health outcomes, and no evidence that it is a cost-effective way of doing so.

My colleague Jagadeesh Gokhale estimates that expanding Medicaid will cost individual states up to $53 billion over the first ten years. That's before an emboldened President Obama follows through on his threats to shift more Medicaid costs to states.

Neither the states nor the federal government have the money to expand Medicaid. If all states politely decline, federal deficits will shrink by another $900 billion.

Now is not the time to go wobbly. Obamacare is still harmful and still unpopular. The presidential election was hardly a referendum, as it pitted the first person to enact Obamacare against the second person to enact it. Since the election, many state officials are reaffirming their opposition to both implementing exchanges and expanding Medicaid.

If enough states do so, Congress will have no choice but to reopen Obamacare. With a GOP-controlled House, opponents will be in a much stronger position than they were when this harmful law was enacted.

FFIS Weekly Update – February 28, 2012

LEGISLATIVE UPDATE

February 28, 2012: House Leaders to Scale Back Long-Term Surface Transportation Reauthorization

The House and Senate are both back in session after a week-long recess. However, the House is not expected to move forward with its five-year reauthorization proposal (H.R. 7). After acknowledging last week that its surface transportation package would be broken into three parts for consideration, House leadership has signaled that it may be interested in pursuing a shorter-term reauthorization. The House is also likely to abandon proposed changes to transit financing, instead maintaining current dedicated transit funding from federal fuel taxes. Meanwhile, the Senate is expected to work through amendments to its two-year surface transportation package this week. The current short-term surface transportation extension expires March 31, 2012.

February 24, 2012: HHS Releases Proposed Rules for Electronic Health Records (EHR)-Stage 2 HHS announced the next steps for providers using EHR technology and receiving incentive payments from Medicare and Medicaid by releasing two proposed rules. The first specifies the criteria that providers must meet to qualify for incentive payments and makes changes to Stage 1 criteria. The second identifies standards and criteria for the certification of EHR technology. The proposed rules and fact sheets are available at: <http://www.hhs.gov/news/press/2012pres/02/20120224a.html>

February 24, 2012: HHS Awards Additional Health Insurance Exchange Establishment Grants HHS provided 10 states with a total of $229 million in grants. To date, 33 states and the District of Columbia have received exchange establishment awards. Click here for a list of grantees:

February 22, 2012: CCIIO Extends Deadline for Exchange Establishment Grants The Center for Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight (CCIIO) publicly signaled its intention to extend the deadline for exchange establishment grants (both level one and level two) through the end of 2014. These extensions will afford more states considering or seeking to establish health insurance exchanges additional time to apply for funds.

February 22, 2012: Supreme Court Sends California Medicaid Case on Provider Reimbursements Back to Ninth Circuit The U.S. Supreme Court in a 5-4 decision sent the case about whether private parties may pursue legal action under the Supremacy Clause back to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. The case, Douglas v. Independent Living Center of Southern California (No. 09-958, consolidated), involved new California laws that reduced the reimbursement rates paid to Medicaid providers and beneficiaries. Those providers and beneficiaries argued that the California statutes violated federal Medicaid law and secured temporary injunctions blocking implementation. Before the Supreme Court heard the case last October, HHS in an administrative action held that the California statutes did not violate federal Medicaid law. The court's opinion vacated the injunctions and remanded the cases back to the Ninth Circuit for the parties to argue the legality of the California laws subject now to the HHS administrative decision.

February 17, 2012: CMS Provides Early Retiree Reinsurance Program (ERRP) Update The Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) released a document showing payments by state/sponsor as of January 19, 2012. According to CMS, the requests for reimbursement exceed the $5 billion appropriated for the program. CMS is holding in order of receipt those reimbursement requests which exceed the program's appropriation, pending the availability of funds that may become available as a result of overpayment recoupment activities. ## New Year's Resolutions for Conservatives

Let's be honest: We all know you're not really gonna quit smoking, start exercising, and eat more vegetables as of today. As Emerson wryly remarked: "All promise outruns performance."

The key to keeping your New Year's resolutions is to make them more realistic. Rather than try to drastically change the way you live, why not start with the more modest goal of

FEATURED POSTS

- Chart of the Week: U.S. Presidents Ranked by Budget Deficits
- Scandal-Tainted ME Global President Still Serving as EPA Financial Adviser

changing the way you speak? And what better place to start for conservatives than with America's Founding principles?

As conservatives continue to rediscover the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, it is important to use words and embrace ideas that are consistent with our Founding principles.

If you're fond of the term "states' rights," have a soft spot for nullification, are tempted by isolationism or are wary of equality, here are four simple resolutions to begin getting right with America's principles. Once you have these down, you can start correcting your friends and move on to other core concepts.

1. Speak of Federalism, not "States' Rights"

States don't have rights. People do.

States have powers. Nowhere in the Constitution are states said to possess rights. Congress has certain powers, clearly enumerated in Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution, and the conservative-favorite Tenth Amendment makes clear that all the other powers are reserved to the states.

Not only is it incorrect to speak of states' rights, but the expression has more baggage than Samsonite and Louis Vuitton combined. In case you didn't know, "states' rights" was the rallying cry of segregationists. Since no right-thinking conservative will keep company with such people, let's just drop the term states' rights once and for all.

If you're concerned about federal encroachments on state sovereignty or the erosion of federalism--as you should be-- then speak of federal encroachments on state sovereignty or the erosion of federalism. Or of the need to restore limited constitutional government, reinvigorate local self-government, decentralize power or check the growth of out-of-control government. With so many great formulations to choose from, why weaken the case for liberty by relying on "states'" rights?

2. Resist the Nullification Temptation

Are you unhappy with the constitutional abomination called Obamacare? Do you think that Congress has no power to

QUICK HITS

Did you hear about Obama's Christmas tree tax? How about how Libya's draft constitution cited Sharia as its 'Principal Source of Legislation'? Those stories were among our Top 10 Foundry blog posts of 2011.

compel you to purchase health insurance?

Good. Now encourage the repeal of the law or wait and see what mood Justice Anthony Kennedy will be in next June when the Supreme Court rules on the constitutionality of Obamacare.

But please don't start talking about nullification as the magical silver bullet that other conservatives somehow overlooked in their efforts to repeal Obamacare (or any other unconstitutional law, for that matter).

Nullification is blatantly unconstitutional. As James Madison pointed out in 1798, 1800 and again during the Nullification Crisis of 1832, individual states do not have the power to unilaterally declare federal legislation unconstitutional. They have the power--in fact, the duty--to challenge laws they deem objectionable, but this must be done within the existing constitutional framework. Let us behold a republican remedy, as Madison would say, to this federal overreach.

3. Isolationism is un-American

Unless you're describing the Tokugawa Shogunate in Japan or the hermit kingdom of North Korea, "isolationism" should be eliminated from conservative foreign policy discussions.

As a nation dedicated to the universal truth of human equality, America simply cannot withdraw from the world and be indifferent to the fate of liberty. American exceptionalism is fundamentally incompatible with isolationism. More so than any other country, we have a duty to stand for liberty.

And no, the Founders were not isolationists. The Heritage Foundation's Marion Smith has written the definitive refutation of this bogus argument in "The Myth of Isolationism."

So if we're not isolationists, does that mean we're interventionists who want to make the world "safe for democracy"? Of course not. There is a middle ground between naive isolationism and crusading interventionism: a distinctively American foreign policy, anchored in the principles of the Founding, that secures our interests all the while upholding our commitment to liberty--a commitment which need not necessarily translate into military interventions.

4. Equality is not a four-letter word

Seeing how the Left blathers on incessantly about inequality and dreams of a Harrison Bergersonesque America, some conservatives are wary of equality. Yet no word is more central to the American tradition which we uphold than equality.

Equality is the first self-evident truth proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence and ours is a country "dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." By this, of course, we mean equal natural rights and the equal opportunities afforded by free markets and the rule of law.

The real tragedy of inequality in America is not that some earn more than others--class envy is something that afflicts Europeans, not Americans. Rather, it is that big government breeds what Paul Ryan calls "a class of bureaucrats and connected crony capitalists trying to rise above the rest of us, call the shots, rig the rules, and preserve their place atop society."

Let us therefore reclaim the mantle of equality from those who've perverted it in the pursuit of equal outcomes.

The Honorable Kathleen Sebelius
Secretary
U.S. Department of Health and Human Services
200 Independence Avenue, S.W.
Washington, DC 20201

Dear Secretary Sebelius;

Many of us believe the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) should be repealed by Congress if the courts do not strike it down first. But, with no assurance of either outcome, we face the decision of whether to participate in the bill by operating state exchanges, or to let the federal government take on that task, if the bill remains in effect in 2014.

In addition to its constitutional infringements, we believe the system proposed by the PPACA is seriously flawed, favors dependency over personal responsibility, and will ultimately destroy the private insurance market. Because of this, we do not wish to be the federal government's agents in this policy in its present form.

We wish states had been given more opportunity to provide input when the PPACA was being drafted. We believe in its current form the law will force our health care system down a path sure to lead to higher costs and the disruption or discontinuation of millions of Americans' insurance plans. Though we still have grave concerns with other provisions of the PPACA, we suggest the following improvements:

- Provide states with complete flexibility on operating the exchange, most importantly the freedom to decide which licensed insurers are permitted to offer their products
- Waive the bill's costly mandates and grant states the authority to choose benefit rules that meet the specific needs of their citizens.
- Waive the provisions that discriminate against consumer-driven health plans, such as health savings accounts (HSA's)

The Honorable Kathleen Sebelius
February 7, 2011

- Provide blanket discretion to individual states if they chose to move non-disabled Medicaid beneficiaries into the exchanges for their insurance coverage without the need of further HHS approval.
- Deliver a comprehensive plan for verifying incomes and subsidy amounts for exchange participants that is not an unfunded mandate but rather fully funded by the federal government and is certified as workable by an independent auditor.
- Commission a new and objective assessment of how many people will end up in the exchanges and on Medicaid in every state as a result of the legislation (including those "offloaded" by employers), and at what potential cost to state governments. The study must be conducted by a neutral third-party research organization agreed to by the states represented in this letter.

We hope the Administration will accommodate our states' individual circumstances and needs, as we believe the PPACA in its current form threatens to destroy our budgets and perpetuate and magnify the most costly aspects of our health care system. While we hope for your endorsement, if you do not agree, we will move forward with our own efforts regardless and HHS should begin making plans to run exchanges under its own auspices.

Supreme Court Case Challenging Obamacare

The Republican Governors Association policy arm, the Republican Governors Public Policy Committee, filed an amicus brief with the United States Supreme Court arguing against the constitutionality of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. The brief was filed through Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli and the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The filing marks the first time that the Republican Governors Public Policy Committee has ever submitted an amicus brief to the Supreme Court.

“While the amicus focuses on the individual mandate, this case is about far more than just that component,” said RGA Chairman Bob McDonnell. “The Obama administration’s healthcare takeover grants sweeping authority to the federal bureaucracy to dictate to individuals, churches, charities, hospitals, schools, businesses and states how they must operate. This is the opposite of the vision of America set forth by our nation’s founders.”

“At its core, this case is about the future of America, and whether we maintain our identity as a federal republic, or creep ever closer to a centralized government in which all the power flows out of Washington,” McDonnell concluded.

The full brief can be found by clicking HERE, and a summary of its arguments is below:

SUMMARY

I. THE PRESUMPTION OF CONSTITUTIONALITY ATTACHING TO PPACA IS WEAK OWING TO THE PARLIAMENTARY PROCESS EMPLOYED IN ITS ENACTMENT. There is doctrinal and philosophical support for such a presumption resting upon notions of separation of powers, particularly where it appears PPACA was not passed through any process resembling regular order. The United States Senate passed PPACA late on Christmas Eve 2009 as a floor substitute on a straight party line vote. The legislative vehicle was a House tax bill chosen to satisfy the Originating Clause for the taxes in PPACA. PPACA passed the Senate on cloture with considerable minority protest. To the extent that a presumption of constitutionality arises from regular order and a hard look by Congress at the limits of its own power, those conditions are simply not present.

II. THE FACT THAT CONGRESS HERETOFORE HAS NEVER CLAIMED THE POWER TO REQUIRE A CITIZEN TO PURCHASE A GOOD OR SERVICE FROM ANOTHER CITIZEN TENDS TO NEGATE THE EXISTENCE OF THAT POWER. In the case of PPACA, the lack of historical precedent was well known to Congress before it acted. At the heart of PPACA is § 1501, which generally requires American citizens to purchase a good or service from other citizens, namely, a health insurance policy. When the Senate Finance Committee asked the Congressional Research Service whether a mandate supported by a penalty would be constitutional, the response was equivocal: "Whether such a requirement would be constitutional under the Commerce Clause is perhaps the most challenging question posed by such a proposal, as it is a novel issue whether Congress may use this clause to require an individual to purchase a good or a service."

III. THE MANDATE AND PENALTY ARE CONTRARY TO THE TEXT OF THE COMMERCE CLAUSE AND FOUNDATIONAL UNDERSTANDINGS.

A. The Mandate and Penalty are Not Supported by the Text of the Commerce Clause. Noah Webster in 1828 defined commerce as "an interchange or mutual change of goods, wares, productions, or property of any kind, between nations or individuals, either by barter, or by purchase and sale; trade; traffick." This is commerce. Its hallmarks are spontaneity and voluntary activity; not a command to buy something. The claim that commerce means not commercial activity but mere passivity is violently discordant with any normal use of the word commerce at the founding or at any subsequent time.

B. The Historical Context in which the Commerce Clause was Drafted Makes it Highly Unlikely that it Included a Power to Command a Citizen to Purchase Goods or Services From Another Citizen. The founding generation would have regarded as preposterous any suggestion that Great Britain could have solved its colonial problems by commanding Americans to purchase tea under the generally conceded power of parliament to regulate commerce.

C. There is No Tradition of Using the Commerce Clause to Require a Citizen to Purchase Goods or Services from Another Citizen. Because this regime viewed the regulation even of economic activity as illegitimate unless that activity harmed or threatened harm to someone else, Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905), it is inconceivable that the Commerce Clause prior to 1938 would have been deemed to validly reach inactivity. The question thus becomes, has the Supreme Court decided any case in the post-Lochner era that has extended the Commerce Clause far enough to cover the mandate and penalty?

D. The Mandate and Penalty are Outside the Existing Outer Limits of the Commerce Clause and Associated Necessary and Proper Clause as Measured by Supreme Court Precedent. "[E]ven if [an] activity be local and though it may not be regarded as commerce, it may still, whatever its nature, be reached by Congress if it exerts a substantial economic effect on interstate commerce, and this irrespective of whether such effect is what might at some earlier time have been defined as 'direct' or 'indirect.'" Wickard, 317 U.S. at 125 (emphasis added). Wickard marks the affirmative outer limits of the Commerce Clause.

Since Wickard, the Supreme Court has proceeded no further than to hold that Congress can regulate three things under the Commerce Clause: (1) "use of the channels of interstate commerce" (2) "the instrumentalities of interstate commerce," and (3) "activities that substantially affect interstate commerce." U.S. v. Lopez, 514 U.S. at 558-59. "[T]he Federal balance is too essential a part of our constitutional structure and plays too vital a role in securing freedom for us to admit inability to intervene when one or the other level of Government has tipped the scales too far." Id. at 578.

None of this is changed by an appeal to the Necessary and Proper Clause. This Court elsewhere has emphatically held that the Necessary and Proper Clause is limited by general principles of federalism independent of any direct prohibition. Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706 (1999) ("When a 'Law . . . for carrying into Execution' the Commerce Clause violates the principle of state sovereignty reflected in the various constitutional provisions . . . it is not a 'Law . . . proper for carrying into Execution the Commerce Clause,' and is thus, in the words of The Federalist, 'merely [an] act of usurpation' which 'deserves to be treated as such.'") (citing Printz, 521 U.S. at 923-24). It simply does not matter how "necessary" the mandate and penalty might be to the congressional scheme if the end being pursued is improper under the Necessary and Proper Clause.

As you may have seen, the Senate agreed to a unanimous consent request regarding consideration of the continuing resolution (H.R. 1473) last night. The agreement provides that upon receipt of the papers from the House on the continuing resolution (i.e., immediately following House passage), the Senate will proceed to a series of three stacked roll call votes, in the following order:

1. H.Con.Res. 35, enrolling resolution (de-funding Obamacare);
2. H.Con.Res. 36, enrolling resolution (de-funding Planned Parenthood); and
3. H.R. 1473, the continuing resolution.

All votes will require a 60-vote affirmative threshold for adoption.

Timing of these votes later today is unclear; however, the House expects votes on the CR to take place circa 2:00-3:00 PM, meaning any Senate votes would take place after that time. (The Senate will be in morning business until 2:00 PM.)

We will have more information as it becomes available.

Hi Katie,

It's great to see you at the meetings. Knowing what is going on from your end is awesome! Last Friday the California Choice Exchange information kit was mailed to you. Hopefully you have received it by now. If not, here is their contact information.

In the last meeting you mentioned you want comments on PPACA regs by September 28, 2011. Please email these to me and we'll see what we can put together. NAHU, National Association of Health Underwriters, which is one of the national agent associations we represent in the Coalition, is making comment to HHS on all of the regs that come out. I want to make sure that we tap into this resource and share the comments with you as well.

Let me know if you have any questions, or if I can be of assistance. See you next Tuesday.

Thank you!

Respectfully,

Good afternoon,

Thank you to those that were able to join the call. We appreciate the conversation and feedback. Below is some background and additional talking points provided to us from the Senate Finance Committee. Hopefully this information will be helpful if your state decides to provide Senator Hatch and Chairmen Camp and Kline with a letter of support. If you need additional information or have questions that this information does not address please contact us.

Policy Background:

On July 12, 2012 the Department of Health and Human Services issued an “Information Memorandum” wherein they waived the requirements under Section 402 of the Social Security Act that include definitions of work activities and calculation of participation rates for the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program (TANF).

These work requirements have been an important feature of the bipartisan welfare reform law of 1996. Within 10 years of it being signed into law, it reduced welfare rolls from 12.2 million in 2006 to 4.5 million in 2006.

Furthermore, the Administration argued that since this was an “Information Memorandum” and not a rule, it was not subject to the Congressional Review Act (CRA).

Only July 31, 2012 Senator Hatch sent a joint letter with Chairman Camp to the Government Accountability Office (GAO) seeking a determination on if this memorandum qualified as a “rule” and hence was subject to the Congressional Review Act (CRA).

On September 4, 2012, the GAO agreed with Senator Hatch and Chairman Camp, that despite being issued as an “Informational Memorandum” this was indeed a rule since it was “designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy with regard to TANF.” Consequently, it is subject to the CRA.

Procedural Background:

What is a CRA?

- The Congressional Review Act (CRA) was first enacted in 1996 as part of the Contract with America Advancement Act (P.L. 104-121).
- The law requires that any agency promulgating a rule or a regulation must submit a report to the Congress and Comptroller General that contains a copy of the rule, a statement describing the rule and the proposed effective date. A rule cannot be implemented if this report is not submitted.
- More importantly, the CRA gives Congress an expedited process under which new federal rules and regulations issued by an agency can be overruled via a joint resolution.

How does a CRA Work?

- Within 60 days after the GAO determines an Administration action is a rule, any Senator can file a Resolution of Disapproval of the rule.
- If the committee to which the joint resolution is referred to (in this case the Senate Finance Committee) has not reported it in 20 days, then any Senator may get a discharge petition signed by 30 senators to proceed to the resolution. A vote to proceed to the resolution cannot be filibustered or amended.
- If the motion to proceed is agreed to, it is followed by 10 hours of debate on the Resolution, followed by a vote on final passage.

CRA's in the 111th and 112th Congress

- S.J. Res 30 – 111th Congress – disapproval of the rule submitted by the National Mediation Board (NMB) on election procedures (motion to proceed not agreed to 43-56 on 9/23/10).
- S.J. Res 39 – 111th Congress – disapproval of the rule relating to status of grandfathered plans under Obamacare (motion to proceed not agreed to 40-59 on 9/29/10).
- S.J. Res 37 – 112th Congress – disapproval of the EPA rule on the mercury and air quality standards also known as the Utility MACT rule (motion to proceed not agreed to 46-53 on 6/20/12).

Two follow-up items from today's hearing at the Energy & Commerce Committee, where Govs Barbour and Herbert testified.

The first is a report issued by Chairman Upton and Senator Hatch (release and link are below) provides a comprehensive overview of state government estimates regarding the cost of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) to state Medicaid programs. The report estimates the health law will cost state taxpayers at least $118.04 billion through 2023--more than double the Congressional Budget Office's (CBO) recent estimate of $60 billion through 2021.

Also, I would commend to your attention two op-eds that ran today, in connection with today's hearing:

(a) From Chairman Upton in National Review, talking about the new partnership the House Majority intends to have with Governors: <http://www.nationalreview.com/corner/260959/new-partnership-governors-fred-upton>; and,

(b) From Pennsylvania Governor Tom Corbett, asking that states be put in charge of guiding Medicaid reform: http://www.usatoday.com/news/opinion/forum/2011-03-01-corbett01\_st\_N.htm.

Medicaid Expansion in Health Law to Cost States $118 Billion Through 2023

Joint Congressional Committee Report Details New Health Law's Fiscal Burden on Fragile State Budgets, Sustainability of Medicaid Program

WASHINGTON, DC - In advance of today's House Energy & Commerce Committee hearing examining ObamaCare's impact on Medicaid and state health care reform, U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), Ranking Member of the Senate Finance Committee, and Fred Upton (R-Michigan), Chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee released a comprehensive report outlining the $118 billion price tag to states of the massive expansion of the Medicaid program in the health law.

The joint Congressional Committee report, Medicaid Expansion in the New Health Law: Costs to the States, put together by the Senate Finance Committee, Minority and the House Energy and Commerce Committee, Majority is the first to provide a comprehensive overview of state government estimates regarding the cost of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) to state Medicaid programs. The report estimates the health law will cost state taxpayers at least $118.04 billion through 2023--more than double the Congressional Budget Office's (CBO) recent estimate of $60 billion through 2021.

"Governors of both political parties were clear when Congress was debating the $2.6 trillion health law that they could not afford a massive expansion in Medicaid. Washington didn't listen and plowed forward instead by putting 16 million Americans onto the Medicaid rolls to keep the federal price tag down," said Hatch. "With this report, we see the true cost to states, who are already facing a collective $175 billion budget shortfall, of this unsustainable expansion. Any sustainable attempt by Governors to balance their budgets is undermined by the $118 billion cost of the massive growth of this federal program. It's time for Congress to peel this program back by putting states, not the federal government, back in charge."

"Nearly one year after the president signed the health care package into law, we are still finding more costly consequences," said Upton. "The health care law's onerous and unsustainable mandates altered the relationship the federal government has with the states by requiring that states dramatically expand their Medicaid populations. Governors are deeply concerned about the new unfunded mandates in the law and their impact on current state budgets—which are already strained. The laws enacted in Washington have a profound impact on state budgets, and it is critical we provide Governors with the flexibility they need to create innovative health programs in a way that helps the people they serve, preserves quality, and reduces the financial burden."

Established in 1965, Medicaid was designed as a limited, shared state-federal safety-net program for low-income Americans. When it was first established, less than five million Americans used Medicaid services, however, today nearly one in four are enrolled in the government program. Furthermore, today, Medicaid spending absorbs nearly a quarter of state government budgets, often forcing significant cuts to other state programs, such as education and law enforcement.

The enactment of PPACA in March 2010 was the largest expansion of the entitlement program since its inception more than 45 years ago. Half of those obtaining health care coverage under the new law will get it through Medicaid. This bicameral report, Medicaid Expansion in the New Health Law: Costs to the States, provides an in-depth state-by-state analysis of the financial impact ObamaCare will have on States and demonstrates the unsustainable fiscal burden this new law will foist upon taxpayers.

California, for example, will spend at least another $19.4 billion on Medicaid. The Texas Health and Human Services Commission has estimated that Texas will be forced to spend another $27 billion, which is more than the program's entire annual budget today. Kentucky will get hit with $675 million in news costs to Medicaid and the state of Idaho found that the law would grow its Medicaid program by nearly 50 percent. A copy of the full report can be viewed HERE.

FUTURE OF HEALTHY INDIANA PLAN REMAINS UNCERTAIN

INDIANAPOLIS (August 17, 2012) -- After two years of waiting for a response, the state has learned it may be forced to close enrollment for the 42,000-plus people in the Healthy Indiana Plan (HIP) beginning next year.

Family and Social Services Administration (FSSA) Secretary Michael Gargano recently received notification from the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS), a division of the U.S. Department of Health & Human Services, offering to approve only a one-year extension for HIP, to December 31, 2013. CMS failed to approve a multi-year extension for HIP and declined to respond to the state's questions about utilizing HIP to serve Hoosiers who may be eligible under a Medicaid expansion if the state decides to do so in 2014.

"We're disappointed that after two years, Indiana still does not have an answer about the long-term future of HIP. We will be forced to make a difficult decision about continuing HIP enrollment for a program that likely won't exist after 2013. States have been seeking answers and flexibility, and this response hampers innovation and efforts to plan," said Gargano.

HIP is the state's successful health insurance program that since 2008 has provided coverage for nearly 100,000 low-income Hoosiers ages 19 to 64 who have no access to employer-provided insurance. HIP features policies that promote cost sharing, such as requiring small contributions and incentivizing preventive care. The program enables participants to make cost-conscious and responsible health care choices.

The Indiana General Assembly passed HIP with bipartisan support in 2007. Members of the legislature also voted in 2011 for HIP to be the coverage vehicle for a potential Medicaid expansion.

FUTURE OF HEALTHY INDIANA PLAN REMAINS UNCERTAIN

INDIANAPOLIS (August 17, 2012) -- After two years of waiting for a response, the state has learned it may be forced to close enrollment for the 42,000-plus people in the Healthy Indiana Plan (HIP) beginning next year.

Family and Social Services Administration (FSSA) Secretary Michael Gargano recently received notification from the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS), a division of the U.S. Department of Health & Human Services, offering to approve only a one-year extension for HIP, to December 31, 2013. CMS failed to approve a multi-year extension for HIP and declined to respond to the state's questions about utilizing HIP to serve Hoosiers who may be eligible under a Medicaid expansion if the state decides to do so in 2014.

"We're disappointed that after two years, Indiana still does not have an answer about the long-term future of HIP. We will be forced to make a difficult decision about continuing HIP enrollment for a program that likely won't exist after 2013. States have been seeking answers and flexibility, and this response hampers innovation and efforts to plan," said Gargano.

HIP is the state's successful health insurance program that since 2008 has provided coverage for nearly 100,000 low-income Hoosiers ages 19 to 64 who have no access to employer-provided insurance. HIP features policies that promote cost sharing, such as requiring small contributions and incentivizing preventive care. ## Medicaid Moment of Truth

In medicine, the treatments known as heroic measures pose grave risks to patients but are performed anyway because the alternative is certain death. That also more or less describes what Chief Justice John Roberts did to save the Affordable Care Act, and now the entitlement faces another challenge, especially in the states.

The first major decision facing the states is whether to accept ObamaCare's Medicaid expansion, which will dump anywhere from 16 million to 20 million more low-income people into the joint state-federal insurance program that was already in crisis. The Supreme Court ruled that this was unconstitutional coercion—"a gun to the head," the 7-2 majority called it—and that states must be given the option of not participating without penalty.

Eight Governors have already said they won't, and that may be the wise play given the new liberal vision for Medicaid. The program was created in 1965 as a bridge to help the most vulnerable members of society emerge from poverty, but now Democrats want to convert it into a permanent price-controlled and Washington-run health system.

Accepting these terms means states will lose the autonomy they had left to make Medicaid decisions in line with their own choices about taxes and spending. Medicaid is already the largest line item for most statehouses, a little under a quarter of the budget on average, and nationwide Medicaid costs are expected to jump by—this is not a typo—20% in 2012. This spending is starting to crowd out other priorities like K-12 and higher education, public safety and building roads.

But the temptation for states—even among the 26 that challenged ObamaCare—will be to accept the expansion. One thing that Governors do really well, regardless of party, is game the open-ended Medicaid funding formula to maximize federal payouts. Only 40 cents of every Medicaid dollar is mandated by the federal government; the balance is spent on optional add-ons that the states created.

ObamaCare attempts to bribe the states by footing 100% of the cost of new Medicaid beneficiaries for two years, and then the federal share will fall to 90%. Supposedly this honeypot is too good an offer to refuse compared to the normal federal matching rate that ranges from 56% to 85%. The hospitals, which want more Medicaid revenue and are especially powerful at the local and state levels, are also aggressively lobbying Governors to accept the "free" money.

Not so fast. One problem is that the 100% matching rate is like a subprime loan with a teaser rate and balloon payment. Once the states accede, Congress will inevitably renege, since the federal fisc is nearly as stressed as state balance sheets. The new subsidies also only apply to the newly coverable, not to the nine million or so people who are already eligible for Medicaid but haven't signed up.

Meanwhile, Medicaid's payments to providers have already been cut to the marrow, while combined state and local health-care spending is now higher than all property tax receipts. The Beltway boys are mocking Governors for worrying about these obligations, but "only" millions of dollars still mean something in regions outside the Northeast and West Coast.

What almost every U.S. Governor wants most of all is more flexibility to manage Medicaid caseloads and reform how the program operates. ObamaCare locked in "maintenance of effort" rules that prevent any changes at all, much less state experimentation. On Tuesday Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius warned states that "The Court's decision does not affect other provisions of the law," which is another way of saying drop dead. States will get no meaningful policy waivers from the Obama crowd.

At the very least the states should delay this generational decision until after the election. Both Mitt Romney and House Republicans support a plan to block-grant Medicaid funding, which has a reasonable chance of becoming law if they win. This policy is less about controlling spending than freeing the states from federal central planning so they can innovate, much like welfare reform in the 1990s.

Rhode Island received a de facto block grant in the last days of the Bush Administration and has cut costs by nearly half compared to historical trend. Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Florida have also leveraged such waivers to make Medicaid more efficient.

At an American Enterprise Institute forum Wednesday, Gary Alexander—who pioneered the Rhode Island plan and is now at work in Pennsylvania—made an important point: In 1965, there were 17.9 workers for every Pennsylvanian on Medicaid, generally in line with the national trend. Today the ratio has fallen to 2.5 to one—and only 1.9 to one for workers in the private economy.

RE: Reconciliation

---

From day one, House Republicans have been focused on job creation. We understand that the debt and deficit have placed a massive burden on our economy and American families. Testimony before Congress and even the President's own Bowles-Simpson Commission demonstrates that the debt has slowed our economy by about one percentage point, which translates into approximately one million unrealized American jobs. If we do not get the nation's debt under control, our economy and our families will continue to suffer.

That is why one of the many reforms included in the House-passed Budget Resolution is the initiation of a "reconciliation" process, whereby certain House Committees would propose changes to current mandatory spending programs in order to generate a specified amount of savings. The savings generated from these reforms to mandatory programs would first be used to offset the cost (approximately $78 billion)<sup>[1]</sup> of replacing the automatic across-the-board discretionary spending cuts that are scheduled to occur on January 2, 2013, under what is known as sequestration. The additional savings achieved through reconciliation beyond the $78 billion (over $180 billion in the next ten years) would further reduce the deficit.

The six House Committees that received reconciliation instruction under the House-passed Budget Resolution are currently beginning the process of marking up their reconciliation packages which the House will take up as one bill in early May.

This memo will provide you with information on the necessity of replacing sequestration and a summary of the specific savings proposals that we anticipate being part of the final reconciliation bill.

Why it is Necessary to Replace the Sequester

As a result of political posturing by the Democrats, the "Super Committee" failed to report and Congress failed to enact $1.2 trillion in deficit reduction last December. Thus, current law requires that there be across-the-board cuts, known as a "sequester," imposed on January 2, 2013. The sequester will result in a 10% reduction in Department of Defense programs and an 8% reduction in certain domestic programs, such as the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and border security.

Intended as a mechanism to force action, there is bipartisan agreement that the sequester going into place would undercut key responsibilities of the federal government.

As the Administration makes clear in their own Budget, "By design, the sequester is not good policy and is meant to force Congress to take action: it would lead to significant cuts to critical domestic programs such as education and research and cuts to defense programs that could undermine our national security. ... [C]uts of this magnitude done in an across-the-board fashion would be devastating both to defense and non-defense programs." [The Budget of the United States Government, Fiscal Year 2013, p. 24, February 13, 2012]

Of particular concern is the impact sequestration, if allowed to occur, would have on our national security.

The sequestration cuts would be on top of the savings in discretionary defense spending that were already implemented as part of the debt limit agreement last August.

The House Armed Services Committee has analyzed the impact of the sequestration, and found that if left in place, sequestration would cut the military to its smallest size since before the Second World War – all while we are still a nation at war in Afghanistan, facing increased threats from Iran and North Korea, unrest in the Middle East, and a rising China.

Major consequences include:

- 200,000 soldiers and Marines separated from service, bringing our force well below our pre-9/11 levels;
- Ability to respond to contingencies in North Korea or Iran at jeopardy;
- The smallest ground force since 1940;
- A fleet of fewer than 230 ships, the smallest level since 1915;
- The smallest tactical fighter force in the history of the Air Force;
- Our nuclear triad that has kept the US and 30 of our allies safe for decades will be in jeopardy;
- Reductions of 20 percent in defense civilian personnel; and
- Two BRAC rounds of base closings.

[\[House Armed Services Committee Memo “Assessment of Impacts of Budget Cuts”, 9/22/2011\]](#)

Secretary Panetta and the professional military leadership have also looked at the impact of sequestration and reached similar conclusions:

Secretary Panetta stated, “If the maximum sequestration is triggered, the total cut will rise to about $1 trillion compared with the FY 2012 plan. The impacts of these cuts would be devastating for the Department... Facing such large reductions, we would have to reduce the size of the military sharply. Rough estimates suggest after ten years of these cuts, we would have the smallest ground force since 1940, the smallest number of ships since 1915, and the smallest Air Force in its history.” [\[Secretary Panetta, Letter to Senator John McCain, 11/14/2011\]](#)

General Dempsey, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, stated, “[S]equestration leaves me three places to go to find the additional money: operations, maintenance, and training. That’s the definition of a hollow force.”

The individual branch service chiefs echoed General Dempsey:

- “Cuts of this magnitude would be catastrophic to the military...My assessment is that the nation would incur an unacceptable level of strategic and operational risk.” – General Ray T. Odierno, Chief Of Staff, United States Army
- “A severe and irreversible impact on the Navy’s future,” – Admiral Jonathan W. Greenert, Chief of Naval Operations
- “A Marine Corps below the end strength that’s necessary to support even one major contingency,” – General James F. Amos, Commandant of the Marine Corps
- “Even the most thoroughly deliberated strategy may not be able to overcome dire consequences,” – General Norton A. Schwartz, Chief of Staff, United States Air Force

[\[Testimony of Service Chief before House Armed Services Committee, 11/2/2011\]](#)

Armed Services Ranking Member Adam Smith recently gave a speech about the need to reverse sequestration. During a question and answer period after the speech, he stated, “What I am saying is, we are going to have to re-write the sequestration law before January 1, one way or another, in order to make sure i[t] makes sense and can fit. I believe that between now and then we will find $1.2 trillion in deficit reduction somewhere, somehow, and avoid the immediate sequestration. But as the gentleman asked, the problem is now. If we wait until September we will have done great harm to the economy.”

According to an analysis by the House Appropriations Committee, the sequester will also have a significant impact on non-defense discretionary programs, including:

- Automatically reducing Head Start by $650 million, resulting in 75,000 fewer slots for children in the program;
- Automatically reducing the National Institutes of Health (NIH) by $2.4 billion, an amount equal to nearly half of total NIH spending on cancer this year; and
- A reduction of approximately 1,870 Border Patrol Agents (a reduction of nearly 9% of the total number of agents).

Democrats Have Failed to Offer a Credible Solution

While both Republicans and Democrats have warned of the consequences from both immediate sequestration cuts and the looming debt crisis, the President and leading Senate Democrats refuse to advance credible solutions:

- The President insists on taking more money from hardworking families and small businesses, a policy that will only exacerbate our current economic problems.

- Just as bad, Senate Democrats have failed to pass a budget in more than 1,000 days, and have chosen to give up on budgeting again this year.

Common-Sense Republican Reforms

- Pursuant to the Budget Resolution, the House will advance a series of reforms that replace across-the-board cuts scheduled in law with common-sense reforms that take steps to address government's autopilot spending.

Six House Committees will advance legislation that will:

- Stop Fraud, by Ensuring that Individuals are Actually Eligible for the Taxpayer Benefits They Receive;
- Eliminate Government Slush Funds and Stop Bailouts;
- Control Runaway, Unchecked Spending;
- Restrain Spending on Government Bureaucracies; and
- Reduce Waste and Duplicative Programs.

The savings from these reforms will replace the arbitrary discretionary sequester cuts and lay the groundwork for further efforts to avert the spending-driven economic crisis before us.

- Below is an outline of the reforms being advanced by the four committees (Agriculture, Financial Services, Judiciary, and Ways and Means) that are marking up instructions this week (week of April 16).

This memo will be updated to include the recommendations of the Energy & Commerce Committee and the Oversight and Government Reform Committee once their markups are announced.

Stopping Fraud by Ensuring that Individuals are Actually Eligible for the Taxpayer Benefits They Receive

- Restricting Categorical Eligibility under the SNAP (Food Stamp) Program: Under current law, an individual can automatically qualify for SNAP based on receipt of benefits through other low-income assistance programs, including the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) block grant, Supplemental Security Income (SSI), or state-run General Assistance (GA) programs.

- The Obama Administration has actively encouraged states to implement a policy called "broad-based categorical eligibility," which means states are conveying SNAP eligibility based upon a household receiving a TANF-funded brochure or access to an "800" number hotline.

As of January, there are now 43 jurisdictions – 40 States, the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands – implementing this policy. Of the 43 jurisdictions using broad-based categorical eligibility, 39 currently have no asset test and 27 have a gross income limit above 130% of the federal poverty guidelines.

The proposal from the House Agriculture Committee would restrict categorical eligibility to only those households receiving cash assistance from SSI, TANF, or a state-run General Assistance program. Receiving a TANF-funded brochure or a referral to an “800” number telephone hotline would no longer automatically make a household SNAP eligible. According to CBO, this proposal would save $11.7 billion over ten years.

Note: While this change would render some households no longer eligible for SNAP, any household that meets the eligibility requirements in SNAP law will continue receiving its SNAP benefits. This policy change would only affect those who are not truly eligible for the program under SNAP law.

Eliminating the SNAP “Heat and Eat” Loophole: Under current law, low-income households receiving any Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program (LIHEAP) payments also qualify for the SNAP Standard Utility Allowance (SUA) which automatically increases their SNAP benefits. Approximately 16 states and DC are abusing this interaction (often at the behest of advocacy groups) by sending $1 or $5 LIHEAP checks to low-income households so they may automatically take advantage of the SUA. In practice, if a participant receives $1 in LIHEAP, they can automatically deduct the SUA from their income, so their net income goes down and they receive more SNAP benefits. For example, this can trigger as much as $130 in additional SNAP benefits per month.

The proposal from the Agriculture Committee would change current law so that a LIHEAP payment no longer automatically triggers the SUA deduction, closing this loophole. This provision in no way prevents those households who are paying their utility bills out-of-pocket from receiving the SNAP SUA. Any household paying their utility bills can still receive this deduction. According to CBO, this proposal would save $14.3 billion over ten years.

Preventing Abuse in the Refundable Child Tax Credit: Current law provides for a child tax credit in the amount of $1,000 per child under the age of 17 ($500 per child beginning in 2013). This credit is partially refundable, meaning that taxpayers may, depending on their income and other tax obligations, receive a government check as a result of this credit. Such checks are considered spending for budget purposes. Under the rules in effect through 2012, the refundable portion of the child tax credit – sometimes referred to as the additional child tax credit (ACTC) – is capped at 15 percent of the taxpayer's earned income above $3,000.

Also under current law, individuals who are ineligible to work in the United States – and are thus ineligible for a Social Security Number (SSN) – can obtain an Individual Taxpayer Identification Number (ITIN) for tax purposes. In 1996, Congress enacted legislation making those without SSNs ineligible to receive the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC), a similar refundable tax credit. However, when the refundable portion of the child tax credit was subsequently enacted in 1997, Congress included no similar limitation, and the Treasury Department has taken the position that it lacks the statutory authority to limit the ACTC to those with an SSN. Thus, the refundable portion of the child tax credit currently remains available to individuals who are unable to obtain an SSN because they are ineligible to work in the United States.

The proposal from the House Ways and Means Committee would close this loophole and individuals (or at least one spouse in the case of a joint return) would be required to include their SSN on their tax return in order to claim the refundable portion of the child tax credit. According to the Joint Committee on Taxation, this proposal would save $7.6 billion over ten years.

Fully Recapture Exchange Subsidy Overpayments: The Democrats' health care law fails to adequately protect taxpayers from overpayments of health insurance Exchange subsidies, even in the case of fraud. Exchange subsidy eligibility is based on two-year old income tax return data. Because income can change (new job, promotion, spouse returns to the workforce, etc.), the government will conduct an annual review to determine if someone received more taxpayer-funded subsidies than he/she was entitled to.

If an overpayment was made, the recipient is required to repay some or all of the overpayment, subject to certain limits described below. Originally, under the health care law, the maximum amount a subsidy recipient was required to repay was $250 for an individual or $400 for a family, even if he/she/they received thousands of dollars in subsidy overpayments. Since the health care law's enactment, two laws have increased the maximum amount of improper Exchange subsidy payments the government can recoup, but in some instances still fails to require full repayment.

The proposal from the Ways and Means Committee would require those who receive Exchange subsidies to which they are not entitled to repay the full amount of overpayments. Individuals and families would still be allowed to keep the subsidies they are entitled to receive under the law. The Joint Committee on Taxation and CBO estimate this provision would reduce the deficit by $43.9 billion over ten years.

Eliminating Government Slush Funds and Stopping Bailouts

Protecting Taxpayers by Eliminating the Dodd-Frank Bailout Fund: The Dodd-Frank Act granted the FDIC “Orderly Liquidation Authority” that gives government bureaucrats the authority to use taxpayer dollars to bail out the creditors of “too big to fail” institutions and treat similarly situated creditors differently. The Democrats have claimed that they created this new resolution authority to prevent a replay of the 2008 bailouts of Bear Stearns, AIG, Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, Citigroup, Bank of America, GM and Chrysler. But in reality, Dodd-Frank’s Orderly Liquidation Authority mechanism just perpetuates the very taxpayer-funded bailout regime it claims it to abolish.

The proposal from the House Financial Services Committee would end “too big to fail” by repealing this Dodd-Frank fund that paves the way for future bailouts. Eliminating the bailout fund will, according to CBO, save $22 billion over ten years for deficit reduction.

Terminate Ineffective Housing Bailouts: The Obama Administration claimed HAMP, its signature foreclosure prevention initiative, would help up to 4 million struggling homeowners. Instead, HAMP has resulted in only 763,000 loans being permanently modified and has been the target of widespread and bipartisan criticism. Of the $30 billion in TARP funds set aside for HAMP, $2.54 billion has actually been disbursed. The Special Inspector General for TARP (SIGTARP), the Congressional Oversight Panel, the Government Accountability Office and even New York Times editorial page have all reported on the ineffectiveness of HAMP and highlighted how this program has hurt, rather than helped, many struggling homeowners.

The Financial Services Committee approved H.R. 839, the HAMP Termination Act, on March 9, 2011, and the House voted to pass the bill 252-170 on March 29, 2011, but the Senate has yet to act. Terminating this costly and ineffective program as part of reconciliation will, according to CBO, result in deficit reduction of $2.8 billion over ten years.

Reforming the National Flood Insurance Program: The National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 established the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP) to minimize the economic impact of floods and to provide flood insurance to individuals and businesses. Congress last enacted a long-term NFIP reauthorization and reform bill in 2004. H.R. 1309, the Flood Insurance Reform Act sponsored by Rep. Judy Biggert, includes a five-year reauthorization of the NFIP and will reform the program by encouraging broader participation, increasing financial accountability and eliminating unnecessary rate subsidies. The NFIP has historically failed to charge sufficient rates to cover its risk. H.R. 1309 eliminates unnecessary rate subsidies by including a phase-in of full-risk, actuarial rates for new and certain existing areas designated as “Special Flood Hazard.” This will improve the NFIP’s financial health.

The Financial Services Committee passed H.R. 1309 by a 54-0 vote on May 12, 2011 and the House approved the bill 406-22 on July 12, 2011, but the Senate has yet to act. Reforming this program as part of reconciliation will, according to CBO, result in $4.9 billion in savings over ten years.

Controlling Runaway, Unchecked Spending

Eliminate the Indexing on SNAP Nutrition Education: Under current law, states have the option of providing nutrition education to SNAP recipients as part of their program operations; such education is 100% funded by the federal government. Funding for the SNAP nutrition education program is capped at $375 million but is indexed for inflation so that the amount spent increases each year.

The proposal from the Agriculture Committee eliminates the automatic annual spending increase and, according to CBO, saves $546 million over ten years.

Terminate the SNAP Increase from the Stimulus: The American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009 (ARRA) included an across-the-board increase in SNAP benefits effective in April 2009. The ARRA effectively replaced the increase in SNAP benefits that occurs under the Food and Nutrition Act, which is normally based on annual food-price inflation indexing. The ARRA increase was to stay in place until food-price inflation “caught up” so that families did not see a decrease in their monthly SNAP benefit allotment. Therefore, the ARRA benefit increase was originally expected to terminate after FY 2018, when food-price inflation was estimated to “catch up” with the ARRA increase.

Last Congress, when the Democrat majority needed to pay for their other “priorities,” including a teacher’s union bailout and increasing school meal standards, the ARRA SNAP increase was used twice to offset other laws. They achieved their savings by moving up the ARRA termination date to October 31, 2013. This proposal from the Agriculture Committee terminates the ARRA increase on July 1, 2012 and would save, according to CBO, $5.9 billion over ten years.

Restrain Spending on Government Bureaucracies

Eliminating Automatic Funding of the New Bureaucracies: The centerpiece of the Dodd-Frank Act is the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB), a large and powerful Federal agency that is – by design – accountable to neither the executive branch nor Congress. Its Director has the unprecedented and sole authority to decide which financial products Americans can and cannot use. In addition, the Dodd-Frank Act authorizes the CFPB to fund itself by drawing money directly from the Federal Reserve to whatever extent the CFPB Director deems “necessary” up to $548 million in FY 2012, $598 million in FY 2013 and 12 percent of the Fed’s operating expenses each fiscal year thereafter. Not Congress, not the President, not even the Federal Reserve which provides its funding can oversee how the CFPB Director spends these hundreds of millions of dollars.

To correct this glaring lack of accountability, the Financial Services Committee proposes to make the CFPB subject to the ordinary congressional appropriations process and authorize the appropriation of $200 million to the agency for FY 2012 and FY 2013. This will ensure proper oversight and accountability, and according to CBO achieve savings of $5.4 billion over ten years.

Reducing Waste and Duplicative Programs

Repeal of the Social Services Block Grant: The Social Services Block Grant (SSBG) is a flexible source of Federal funds that states use for a wide variety of social services. Begun in 1956 as a way to match State spending on services to help families leave welfare, the SSBG is now a 100 percent Federal funding stream that can be used to provide almost any service to anyone regardless of their income. Many of the services funded by SSBG are duplicative of other federal programs including the Community Services Block Grant, Head Start, Foster Care and Adoption Assistance, Promoting Safe and Stable Families, the Child Care and Development Block Grant, Child Welfare Services, Chafee Foster Care Independence Program, and Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, among many others.

Because there are so few strings attached, some of the most common services supported by SSBG funds are:

- Information and Referral Services: The most common service supported with SSBG funds is information and referral to other social welfare programs. In other words, a significant amount of SSBG is spent not to provide services, but to provide people with information about and referrals to other services.
- Case Management Services: States also use the SSBG to pay for “the arrangement, coordination, and monitoring of services.” In other words, SSBG may be used for administrative costs.
- Other Services: Even with a flexible, unaccountable program like SSBG, States frequently report spending on “other” activities and services.

The proposal from the Ways and Means Committee would eliminate the SSBG program saving taxpayers almost $17 billion over 10 years, according to CBO.

Eliminate the 50/50 Cost Share for the SNAP Employment and Training (E&T) Program: Each fiscal year, USDA provides federal formula grants to state agencies for states to operate a SNAP Employment and Training (E&T) program. In addition to this funding, states have the option of providing more funding towards their state E&T program, which USDA is required to match. According to GAO, there are 47 federal employment training programs and almost all federal employment and training programs overlap with at least one other program in that they provide similar services to similar populations.

The proposal from the Agriculture Committee would maintain the federal formula grants for employment training, but eliminate the 50/50 cost share thus resulting in savings for federal taxpayers and, according to CBO, save $3.1 billion over ten years.

Eliminate State Performance Bonuses: States are responsible for administering the SNAP program and it is their duty to process applications in a timely manner, ensure households receive the accurate amount of SNAP benefits, and make certain the program is administered in the most effective and efficient manner. Under current law, states can receive a bonus for doing a good job. Annually, these bonuses total $48 million.

The proposal by the Agriculture Committee eliminates the bonuses that are given to states for essentially doing their job and would, according to CBO, save $480 million over ten years.

Reforming the Medical Liability System: Many state supreme courts have judicially nullified reasonable litigation management provisions enacted by state legislatures, many of which sought to address the crisis in medical professional liability that reduces patients' access to health care and increases overall health care costs. Consequently, in such states, passage of federal legislation by Congress may be the only means of addressing the state's current crisis in medical professional liability, restoring patients' access to health care, and controlling unnecessary costs.

To address these issues, the House Judiciary Committee has proposed the HEALTH Act, modeled after California's decades-old and highly successful health care litigation reforms. This reform addresses the current crisis in health care by reigning in unlimited lawsuits and thereby making health care delivery more accessible and cost-effective in the United States. California's Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act ("MICRA"), which was signed into law by Governor Jerry Brown in 1976, has proved immensely successful in increasing access to affordable medical care.

MICRA's reforms, which are included in the HEALTH Act, include:

- A $250,000 cap on noneconomic damages;
- Limits on the contingency fees lawyers can charge;
- Provisions creating a "fair share" rule, by which damages are allocated fairly, in direct proportion to fault;
- Reasonable guidelines – but not caps – on the award of punitive damages; and
- A safe harbor from punitive damages for products that meet applicable FDA safety requirements.

The HEALTH Act will accomplish reform without in any way limiting compensation for 100% of plaintiffs' economic losses (anything to which a receipt can be attached), including their medical costs, their lost wages, their future lost wages, rehabilitation costs, and any other economic out-of-pocket loss suffered as the result of a health care injury. The HEALTH Act also does not preempt any state law that otherwise caps damages.

According to CBO, "under [the HEALTH Act], premiums for medical malpractice insurance ultimately would be an average of 25 percent to 30 percent below what they would be under current law." Lower health care lawsuit liability premiums would reduce health care costs for everyone and increase the supply of vital doctors by allowing more doctors to continue practicing, including in higher-risk medical fields.

Further, abusive state tort laws drive what is known as "defensive medicine," which occurs when doctors are forced by the threat of lawsuits to conduct tests and prescribe drugs that are not medically required, simply to avoid liability exposure. Defensive medicine practiced in a variety of federal health care programs costs federal taxpayers billions of dollars. CBO pronounced that the legal reforms contained in the HEALTH Act would reduce the federal budget deficit by an estimated $40 billion over the next ten years.

TO: Members, House GOP Chiefs of Staff, Legislative Directors, Communicators, and District Directors

Payroll Tax Holiday Agreement

Protecting Americans from a Tax Increase, Reforming Unemployment and Welfare Programs, and Preventing Cut to Medicare Doctors

Payroll Tax Holiday Extended Through 2012

- The payroll tax holiday is extended through December 31, 2012.
- The amount of revenue that is foregone to the Social Security Trust Funds as a result of the payroll tax reduction is fully replaced with savings from Treasury's General Fund.

- Over the course of the year, a typical middle-class worker earning $50,000 would see his or her take-home pay increase by $1,000 as a result of this tax holiday.

Reforms & Extends the Unemployment Program

Reforms to the unemployment program

- Job Search Requirements: Requires those receiving unemployment benefits at both the state and federal level actually look for a job.
- Drug Screening & Testing: Overturns a 1960s-era Department of Labor ban on States' screening and testing UI applicants for illegal drugs. Specifically, the agreement allows every state to drug screen and test anyone who (1) lost their job because they failed or refused an employer drug test, or (2) is seeking a job that generally requires a drug test.
- Re-employment Programs: Allows waivers for up to 10 states for innovative re-employment programs like Georgia Works.

Reduces the number of weeks to levels typically seen in a recession

- Eliminates 20 Weeks of EB: Effectively eliminates the "Extended Benefits" program, which allowed states to receive an additional 20 weeks of federal benefits.
- 63 weeks vs. 93 Weeks: Ensures that by the end of the year the vast majority of states (36) receive a maximum of 63 weeks of benefits, compared to 46 states currently receiving 93 weeks of benefits – a reduction of 30 weeks. This is a level comparable to prior recessions.

No More Welfare Benefits At Strip Clubs & Liquor Stores

- Extends Welfare Benefits: The agreement extends the nation's primary welfare program, Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, through Fiscal Year 2012.
- Closes the "Strip Club" Loophole: The legislation ensures that welfare funds cannot be accessed at ATMs in strip clubs, liquor stores, and casinos.
- Data Standardization: Improves data matching and program integrity by requiring standardized data and Health and Human Services coordination of exchanges across State TANF programs.

Protects Seniors & Reforms Certain Medicare Programs

- Eliminates 27.4% Cut to Doctors: The agreement averts a 27.4 percent cut to physician payment rates and ensures seniors and the disabled have continued access to the physicians serving our Medicare beneficiaries.
- Doc Fix Through End of 2012: The agreement extends through the end of the year payment rates for Medicare doctors.
- Eliminates & Reforms Certain Medicare Programs: The Senate had sought to blindly extend all Medicare extenders. The agreement eliminates two of those programs (mental health add-on payments and an ObamaCare provision that increased payments for bone density scans). The agreement phases-out two programs: Section 508 hospitals and special pathology payments, while providing time for these providers to adapt to these changes. Extends and reforms the therapy cap exception process by requiring greater accountability, which will eliminate wasteful spending.

- Extends Certain Medicare Programs with Greater Oversight: Ambulance add-on payments, physician work floor, and outpatient hospital hold harmless payments are all extended, but the agreement requires GAO, MedPAC and CMS to report to Congress on their effectiveness and ways to better protect taxpayer dollars.

No Tax Increases & Government Spending Is Fully Offset

Rejects Senate’s insistence on higher taxes for higher spending

- No job-killing tax hikes to pay for more government spending.
- All government spending is fully offset with spending cuts and government reforms.

Unemployment benefits are fully paid for

- Firmly establishes that extensions of unemployment benefits must be paid for. Democrats added nearly $200 billion to our nation’s debt by extending an unprecedented level of unemployment benefits.
- The agreement offsets all unemployment program spending through:
  - Spectrum Auctions, which spur innovation, investment and job creation in the high-tech field.
  - Requiring new civilian federal employees and Members of Congress to contribute more towards their defined benefit pension programs.

Repeals key parts of ObamaCare and includes other health savings

- Cuts to ObamaCare pay for more than half ($11.6 billion) of the health spending in the agreement.
- Cuts an ObamaCare slush fund (the Harkin Prevention Fund) by $5 billion.
- Eliminates an ObamaCare giveaway to Louisiana saving $2.5 billion.
- Reduces Medicaid spending (DSH rebase) by more than $4 billion.
- Other health savings total $9.6 billion and include reductions to Medicare “bad debt” ($6.9 billion) and clinical laboratory payments ($2.7 billion).

Maximum Weeks of Unemployment Benefits

All: this afternoon we are releasing new data that will help shape the debate over the repeal of Obamacare, which the House begins later today. Our full survey results will be made public this Thursday.

Key health care findings:

- Plurality of registered voters supports Republican plans to repeal and replace the health care reform law, 49 to 44 percent (including 54 to 36 percent among Independents).
- When given arguments for and against repeal, voters favored the conservative statement 50 to 44 percent (including 51 to 40 percent among Independents).
- By 70 to 23 percent, voters believe they should be allowed to buy health insurance across state lines.
- Voters oppose an individual mandate to purchase health insurance by 56 to 39 percent.
- Voters support individual ownership of health insurance so that people would not lose their insurance if they lost their job, 53 to 36 percent.
- They believe frivolous medical malpractice lawsuits drive up the cost of health care by 53 to 38 percent.
- They also oppose allowing any taxpayer dollars to fund abortions by 52 to 41 percent.

Key point: Independents' support of plans to repeal and replace the health care law has remained steady since the mid-term elections. This is noteworthy for two reasons:

- Recent public polling has shown a slight increase in Obama's job approval, yet that increase has not closed the gap he faces among Independents on this issue.
- The survey was conducted among registered voters, and the data among these Independents is very similar to what we found last November with Independents who voted in the mid-terms.

RE: "Save the Date" NGA September Meeting on Exchange Implementation Issues

Based on guidance from the Executive Committee and widespread interest in Saturday's Health Committee session discussing Exchanges, NGA will convene a working meeting on Exchange implementation options and issues. As discussed on Sunday at the Salt Lake City breakfast meeting of Chiefs of Staff, this advance notice will allow you to identify the appropriate attendees. NGA will cover travel and related expenses for two officials from your state for the September 8 (Thursday) and 9 (Friday) meeting at the Crystal City Hyatt in Arlington, Virginia.

Working with a diverse group of experts, we are developing the agenda and background materials to focus the September meeting and maximize its value to States. We'd greatly appreciate any suggestions on topics that should be addressed, takeaways from your experience, or other suggestions.

We currently expect the meeting to focus on:

1. Understanding the various paths forward envisioned by the recently issued HHS proposed regulations regarding Exchanges, which will include timelines, state obligations, and key decisions under differing options;
2. Discussion about key requirements and challenges facing states making similar policy choices or at similar stages of implementation under the different options; and
3. Identifying items needing clarification or areas of common concern arising from the notices of proposed rulemaking.

A more formal information with draft agenda is forthcoming. Please contact Krista Drobac (202-624-7872; KDrobac@nga.org) or me (202-624-5340 slieberman@nga.org) with any questions or suggestions.

All,

Attached are two documents that substantiate all of the regulatory cost estimates and the Medicaid coercion estimates in the state-by-state talking points. Here's a quick overview of each document. Please feel free to call me at [REDACTED] if you have any questions.

Regulatory Cost Impact by State

The American Action Forum is fortunate enough to have Sam Batkins as its Director of Regulation. Sam has compiled a database of every regulation issued by the Obama Administration broken down by total pages, total cost, and paperwork burden hours. He has also broken each regulation down by the type of agencies affected so there is a sub-database for just healthcare regulations.

To derive the attached spread sheet estimating regulatory costs by state, Sam took the largest regulations that impact states and broke down the federal government's estimates proportionately by state to come up with a reasonable estimate of how costly the Affordable Care Act's regulations have already been to the private sector and the public.

Interestingly, Sam has built such an advanced database that we are now able to use it to bracket President during every state visit he makes to talk about jobs. I hope you all check out the database and tell your colleagues because it's a tremendous resource explaining the effect of the Obama Administration's red tape fiasco.

Measuring the Coerciveness of the PPACA Medicaid Expansion

The Medicaid related estimates come directly from the American Action Forum's Supreme Court Amicus brief on Medicaid, which was signed by over 100 economists including multiple Nobel Prize winners.

<http://www.scotusblog.com/2012/06/court-holds-that-states-have-choice-whether-to-join-medicaid-expansion/>

Court holds that states have choice whether to join medicaid expansion

The Court's decision on the constitutionality of the Medicaid expansion is divided and complicated. The bottom line is that: (1) Congress acted constitutionally in offering states funds to expand coverage to millions of new individuals; (2) So states can agree to expand coverage in exchange for those new funds; (3) If the state accepts the expansion funds, it must obey by the new rules and expand coverage; (4) but a state can refuse to participate in the expansion without losing all of its Medicaid funds; instead the state will have the option of continue the its current, unexpanded plan as is.

The votes for this outcome are divided among several opinions. Three Justices – the Chief, Justice Kagan, and Justice Breyer – took the position that depriving a state of all of its Medicaid funding for refusing to agree to the new expansion would exceed Congress's power under the Spending Clause. Although Congress may attach conditions to federal funds, they concluded, it may not coerce states into accepting those conditions. And in this case, taking away all the states' funds for the entirety of its Medicaid program just because it disagreed with a piece of the program would be coercive. But the remedy for that constitutional violation is not to declare the expansion unconstitutional – such that even states that want to participate would not have the option. Instead, the plurality held that the provision of the statute that authorized the Government to cut off all funds for non-compliance with the expansion was unconstitutional. The result is that states can choose to participate in the expansion, must comply with the conditions attached to the new expansion funds if they take that new money, but states can also choose to continue to participate only in the unexpanded version of the program if they want.

Justices Ginsburg and Sotomayor would have held the entire expansion program constitutional, even the provision threatening to cut off all funding unless states agreed to the expansion. Their votes created a majority for the proposition that the overall expansion was constitutional, and that states could choose to participate in the expansion and would have to comply with the expansion conditions if they did.

But there was still no majority about what to do about the states that do not want to participate in the expansion – the Chief Justice's 3-Justice plurality voted to strike down the provision allowing the Government to withhold all funds from states that reject the expansion; Justices Ginsburg and Sotomayor voted to uphold it.

The deadlock was broken by the dissenters. Justice Scalia – writing on behalf of himself, and Justices Kennedy, Thomas, and Alito – agreed with the Chief's plurality that the threat to withhold all funds was unconstitutionally coercive. But they would have held that the consequence is that the entire expansion program should be stricken. The result would have been that even states that wanted to participate in the program could not. The plurality's approach of simply striking down the provision that allowed withholding all funds if the state refused the expansion was, in the dissenters' view, tantamount to rewriting the statute.

At this point, that meant that there were 2 votes to uphold the expansion in its entirety, 4 votes to strike the entire expansion down, and 3 votes to strike down only the provision withholding all funds for non-compliance with the expansion mandate. So where does that leave things?

Fortunately (for the sake of clarity at least), Justices Ginsburg and Sotomayor resolved the ambiguity by voting with the plurality on the remedy question. That is, these Justices voted that if the statute was unconstitutionally coercive, then the remedy would be only to strike down the all-or-nothing sanction.

The consequence was a bottom line of 7 Justices – the Chief, Breyer, Kagan and the four dissenters – finding the expansion unconstitutional. But a different majority – the Chief, Ginsburg, Breyer, Sotomayor and Kagan – held that the remedy for the violation was to strike down only the provision allowing the federal government to withhold all Medicaid funds unless a state agrees to the expansion.

Christie says Sebelius hasn't answered his administration's questions about exchanges

Max Pizarro
Politicker NJ

NEWARK – New Jersey will comply with the law of the land, the Affordable Healthcare Act, but Gov. Chris Christie does not yet know how New Jersey will comply.

The federal government extended the deadline to Dec. 14 for New Jersey's decision on how it wants to participate in a healthcare exchange.

As part of the president's healthcare reform, a state can set up its own exchange system, partner with the federal government, or rely solely on the feds to operate the exchange.

Christie said he doesn't know yet which of these he favors, in large part because he said his administration's questions to Health Secretary Kathleen Sebelius (pictured) have gone unanswered.

"We have sent letters and they have not been answered," Christie told reporters at his press conference today.

He said he thought he was inclined to do a statewide exchange but is worried the feds will saddle New Jersey with more costs and he's unwilling to allow that to happen.

"I need answers from the Obama administration," Christie said. "I hope they don't back us into a decision by not giving me an answer."

If Sibelius doesn't respond, Christie said he's probably likely to select a pure federal implementation of the program so the state doesn't own it without knowing the program's full extent.

Medicaid

GOP Governors Want More Flexibility, Including Medicaid Block Grants, Fund Caps

By Sarah Barr

The Republican governors of 29 states June 13 said the states should have greater flexibility to administer the Medicaid program—an approach that would include rolling back the federal health reform law and allowing financing arrangements such as block grants or capped allotments.

In a letter to Rep. Fred Upton (R-Mich.) and Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah), the Republican governors said that as lawmakers consider changes to the Medicaid program, they “should provide states and territories a general healthcare framework where we can make necessary adjustments without constantly seeking permission from the federal government for changes that we already know work.”

Upton, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, and Hatch, ranking member of the Senate Finance Committee, asked the states May 23 to weigh in on how best to reform Medicaid.

Repeal of PPACA Sought

In the letter, the governors set forth seven principles they said should guide changes to Medicaid, including that states and territories “have the opportunity to innovate by using flexible, accountable financing mechanisms that are transparent and that hold states accountable for efficiency and quality healthcare.” Those mechanisms may include a block grant, a capped allotment, or other financing arrangements, according to the letter.

The governors also called for repeal of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, which they said further constrains states’ efforts to make Medicaid innovative and efficient.

As cash-strapped states grapple with budget shortfalls, many governors have spoken about the need for additional flexibility in Medicaid, although with varying degrees of enthusiasm about a total overhaul of the program. Generally, Republican governors have embraced block grants and their Democratic counterparts have criticized those proposals.

The House budget includes a plan to convert Medicaid into a block grant program; the Senate rejected that plan May 25 (102 DER G-10, 5/26/11). In addition, negotiations on a deficit reduction package are ongoing in Congress, and any final package is likely to include changes to health programs such as Medicare and Medicaid.

State-Federal Partnership Preferable

Meanwhile, two Medicaid directors said June 14 at a Medicaid conference that their states are not in favor of block grants for the program. Nancy V. Atkins, commissioner of the Bureau for Medical Services in West Virginia and Mark Schaefer, director of the Medical Care Administration in the Connecticut Department of Social Services, both said the current financing structure for Medicaid is preferable to a block grant system.

“Connecticut doesn't support the block grant concept,” Schaefer said. “We like the security of what we've got now in our partnership with the feds, and we feel that we've got the flexibility and the opportunity right now in our relationship with the feds to innovate in health care service delivery in the way that we need to.”

On June 13, Cindy Mann, director of the Center for Medicaid and State Operations at CMS, said “I don't think that all governors think that a block grant is a good solution for them.” She spoke at the sixth annual Medicaid Congress, sponsored by health policy organizations and private industry groups (See related report in this section.).

GOP Governors Want More Flexibility, Including Medicaid Block Grants, Fund Caps

By Sarah Barr

The Republican governors of 29 states June 13 said the states should have greater flexibility to administer the Medicaid program—an approach that would include rolling back the federal health reform law and allowing financing arrangements such as block grants or capped allotments.

In a letter to Rep. Fred Upton (R-Mich.) and Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah), the Republican governors said that as lawmakers consider changes to the Medicaid program, they “should provide states and territories a general healthcare framework where we can make necessary adjustments without constantly seeking permission from the federal government for changes that we already know work.”

Upton, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, and Hatch, ranking member of the Senate Finance Committee, asked the states May 23 to weigh in on how best to reform Medicaid.

Repeal of PPACA Sought

In the letter, the governors set forth seven principles they said should guide changes to Medicaid, including that states and territories “have the opportunity to innovate by using flexible, accountable financing mechanisms that are transparent and that hold states accountable for efficiency and quality healthcare.” Those mechanisms may include a block grant, a capped allotment, or other financing arrangements, according to the letter.

The governors also called for repeal of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, which they said further constrains states’ efforts to make Medicaid innovative and efficient.

As cash-strapped states grapple with budget shortfalls, many governors have spoken about the need for additional flexibility in Medicaid, although with varying degrees of enthusiasm about a total overhaul of the program. Generally, Republican governors have embraced block grants and their Democratic counterparts have criticized those proposals.

The House budget includes a plan to convert Medicaid into a block grant program; the Senate rejected that plan May 25 (102 DER G-10, 5/26/11). In addition, negotiations on a deficit reduction package are ongoing in Congress, and any final package is likely to include changes to health programs such as Medicare and Medicaid.

Brownback Administration will not support Obamacare exchange

Topeka – Kansas Governor Sam Brownback issued the following statement today after notifying Kansas Insurance Commissioner Sandy Praeger that he would not support her grant application to partner with the federal government to create a state-federal partnership insurance exchange in Kansas.

“Kansans feel Obamacare is an overreach by Washington and have rejected the state's participation in this federal program. My administration will not partner with the federal government to create a state-federal partnership insurance exchange because we will not benefit from it and implementing it could cost Kansas taxpayers millions of dollars.

“Any other elected official who supports implementation of a federal-state partnership exchange should pursue legislation in the 2013 legislative session where lawmakers can debate and vote on the proposal.”

Why States Are Reluctant On National Health Care Reform

By Dennis G. Smith | 7/9/2012

Last week's Supreme Court decision on the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) guarantees the debate over health care will continue. Supporters of PPACA want to convince the public that everything is settled and any opposition is just politics.

But opponents are not out to score political points. We believe now, as we did two years ago, that the economic assumptions used in the debate are flawed and the policies are wrong for the nation.

Since the Court's decision, the law's supporters insist that Obama policies are successful because the cost of health care is declining. But that is not the case. Americans know that cost and spending are not the same thing. If the cost of a car is too high, a family won't buy one, which means their spending is lower.

Health care spending has slowed, but for the wrong reason -- the lingering recession. Demand is lower because fewer people now have health insurance than when the President's term of office began. In 2008, 42.7 million individuals were uninsured according to the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS). CMS estimates there will be 48.6 million people without insurance in 2013. It is hard to see how this could be considered an accomplishment.

Even the government's own actuaries say that the slowdown in health spending now and into the future is unrelated to PPACA. PPACA hides and shifts costs; it does not lower them.

Most Americans already believe we are spending too much, not too little, on health care and that is what this debate should be focusing on once again. True health care reform must tackle the root causes of our health care costs and put individuals at the center of decision-making.

Those who support expanding Medicaid insist that a state cannot pass up "free" federal money or that if we don't expand, the money will go to another state. This is the kind of thinking that got us into the deficit and debt troubles we are in.

First, there is no such thing as "free" federal money. The federal government has no money of its own and it gets the money it spends from the same people the state government does. Regardless of who the tax collector is, the impact on the taxpayer is the same.

Second, Wisconsin won't "lose" Medicaid dollars to other states as some argue because each state gets its share of federal Medicaid funding regardless of what happens in another state. Finally, hospitals, doctors, and other health care professionals would receive higher payments under the new tax credits that will be used to purchase private insurance rather than under Medicaid.

The Court's decision reveals that PPACA is an enormous and regressive tax. The result may well be that lower income individuals pay the tax but won't qualify for either PPACA's new tax credits or for Medicaid. Some groups will press states to fix this inequity, but that burden rests with the authors of PPACA who deliberately chose a Medicaid expansion because it would be cheaper for the federal government.

PPACA took a layer cake approach to health care and stratified Americans according to income levels. But Americans should not be required to live their lives according to poorly designed federal government programs and rules. The best way to expand health insurance coverage is to get the economy moving again and Americans back to work.

PPACA was flawed from the start. The American people rightfully expect a new beginning to the health care debate.

Subject: Eight Ways Obamacare Has Harmed Americans This Year

Yesterday the Administration released a blog post <<http://1.usa.gov/v8gnhZ>> claiming eight ways in which Obamacare is helping Americans. But in reality, there are far more ways in which the law is wreaking havoc on Americans' health care and economic security. Herewith are just eight (plus one!) of the ways in which Obamacare has harmed millions of Americans during 2011:

Higher Premiums: One of the "success stories" cited in the White House blog post involved a premium increase <<http://1.usa.gov/uSFI3Y>> in Oregon lowered to "only" about 10 percent. But Candidate Obama repeatedly promised <<http://bit.ly/p8EjoH>> his health care plan would LOWER premiums by $2,500 per family, and do so within his first term <<http://bit.ly/ql8gYQ>>. So a 10 percent premium increase represents yet another broken promise by this Administration. Sadly, skyrocketing premium increases remain the norm: The price of the average employer-sponsored plan ROSE by more than $2,200 per family <<http://bit.ly/qVOce7>> since Obama was first elected in 2008 <<http://bit.ly/qAos02>>, according to studies from the Kaiser Family Foundation.

Jobs Disappearing: All over the country, firms are having to lay off workers as a result of Obamacare's tax increases and regulations. Last month, device manufacturer Stryker announced <<http://bit.ly/rZO8SP>> that it would be shedding "five percent of its workforce over concerns about the impending 2.3 percent medical device tax prescribed by" Obamacare. And in October, one insurance carrier announced plans <<http://dmreg.co/rzDMCC>> to eliminate 110 jobs in Nebraska and Iowa as a "fairly predictable consequence" of Obamacare's regulations. That's a long way from the 4 million jobs Speaker Pelosi claimed <<http://bit.ly/tR9Klh>> Obamacare would create.

Jobs Not Being Created: Just this week, the owner of the Carl's Jr. franchise wrote an op-ed <<http://bloom.bg/sAXX6F>> in which he discussed the uncertainty surrounding Obamacare, and the fact that his business will reduce capital spending and hiring in anticipation of higher health care costs. Other experts agree: Investment firm UBS has said <<http://bit.ly/uyNFVK>> Obamacare is "arguably the biggest impediment to hiring," and the President of the Atlanta Fed said <<http://bit.ly/ob8VAe>> "we've frequently heard strong comments to the effect of 'my company won't hire a single additional worker until we know what health insurance costs are going to be.'"

Lost Coverage: The Galen Institute recently released a paper <<http://bit.ly/s5PnQF>> chronicling all the plans that have dropped coverage since Obamacare was enacted into law – literally dozens of plans affecting millions of consumers nationwide. Sadly, these results are far from atypical; the Administration's own estimates <<http://1.usa.gov/fSVgrZ>> found that half of all employers – and up to 80% of all small businesses – would lose their current health plan by 2013.

Paperwork Galore: Already, the Administration has released more than 10,000 pages of regulations and notices regarding Obamacare – and the effects are echoing throughout the health care system. USA Today recently reported< <http://usat.ly/u8asxz> > that some medical facilities are actually laying off clinical staff to hire more administrative employees to deal with Obamacare-related paperwork. And one hospital in Alabama decided< <http://bit.ly/trlwaH> > to start imposing a new $25 annual fee on its patients to cover the “huge increase in paperwork” and “mountains of new forms” resulting from Obamacare.

Waivers and Favors: One obvious symbol of Obamacare’s onerous impacts on Americans’ health insurance is the myriad exemptions being granted from the law. As of July, the Administration approved a whopping 1,578 waivers< <http://bit.ly/hqmUmf> > exempting 3.4 million Americans, many of whom are in union plans, from just some of the law’s mandates. Even Senate Democrats were forced to send a letter< <http://1.usa.gov/ulb7dG> > to the Administration asking for a separate waiver from one of Obamacare’s provisions, noting that the law “may cause disruption for farmers and others in the agricultural sector.”

You Can’t Spell Insurance Without I-R-S: The Wall Street Journal reported< <http://on.wsj.com/fJ6wJd> > on the consequences of just one of Obamacare’s tax increases – restrictions on consumer-directed health accounts like Flexible Spending Arrangements (FSAs) and Health Savings Accounts (HSAs). New paperwork requirements led physicians to revolt: “I am now doing the IRS’s work, and that’s what I resent most,” said one pediatrician. And that’s not the only IRS-related provision bogged down in paperwork: An Inspector General report< <http://1.usa.gov/srb1zB> > recently revealed that takeup of the small business tax credit has been far short of predictions, possibly because claiming the credit involves filling out seven different worksheets< <http://1.usa.gov/tgXxEq> >.

Raising Mandates, Raising Costs: The 15-page guidance< <http://bit.ly/vIE0Zh> > released by HHS earlier this month gives states the “flexibility” to impose more benefit mandates, not fewer. It does so by allowing states to mandate an extremely rich benefit package, and do so without paying for the financial consequences of their decision – because the costs instead will be foisted on federal taxpayers funding insurance subsidies in that state. At this rate, the Congressional Budget Office estimate< <http://1.usa.gov/h37kt2> > of a $2,100 per family increase in individual insurance premiums due to Obamacare could very well be an under-estimate.

States Saddled by Mandates: The annual State Expenditure Report< <http://bit.ly/utB4cb> > released by the National Association of State Budget Officers revealed that Medicaid is consuming an ever-larger portion of state budgets, much faster than spending on education, corrections, or transportation. And the reason why Medicaid is crowding out other portions of state budgets is Obamacare; at a time when states face budget deficits totaling a collective $175 billion< <http://bit.ly/hUAcsX> >, Obamacare is imposing new unfunded mandates of at least $118 billion< <http://bit.ly/i2bJtL> >. Earlier this month the non-partisan Lewin Group released an analysis< <http://bit.ly/rUbjD3> > of the Rhode Island Medicaid program’s global compact waiver, revealing that the state saved tens of millions of dollars through flexibility – progress made despite the Obama Administration’s efforts, not because of them. While other states could achieve similar savings, the Administration has refused governors’ multiple< <http://bit.ly/hUAcsX> > requests< <http://bit.ly/gtbEmd> > for flexibility from the new Medicaid mandates included in Obamacare.

Good Afternoon Health Policy Advisors:

I wanted to write to introduce myself and update you on several regulations from CMS.

First, I am the new Director of the Health Division in the Center for Best Practices at the National Governors Association. I have attached my bio and e-card. Please do not hesitate to call me if I can be of any assistance. I look forward to meeting and working with all of you. If any of you plan to attend the NGA Annual Meeting in Salt Lake City, please let me know and I will look you up.

Second, we expect a number of important regulatory announcements from CMS over the next few weeks and months. As these occur, we will provide you with information as quickly as possible. We plan to send you analysis of the implications of the insurance exchange regulations (see below) and host briefings via conference calls to give you all an opportunity to discuss and analyze the regulations.

CMS Announcement on Dual Eligibles

Today, CMS made an announcement regarding dual eligibles. Summarized below are the three initiatives, including the testing of two shared savings models. The first model is a capitated approach to integration for Medicare-Medicaid enrollees and the second is a managed fee-for-service (FFS) approach to integration. CMS will also implement a demonstration to improve health outcomes for nursing facility residents and CMS will launch a technical assistance resource center to assist all states in coordinating care for high-need, high-cost beneficiaries. Attached is the letter sent to Governors and State Medicaid Directors regarding the new initiatives.

Demonstration Program to Test Financial Models for Improved Care Coordination

The CMS Center for Medicare and Medicaid Innovation will test two financial models to determine whether they save money while preserving or enhancing the quality of care. Interested states can send a letter of intent and work with CMS to determine whether they meet established standards and conditions. The Innovation Center will approve qualifying States that collectively serve up to 1 to 2 million dual eligibles.

CMS Fact Sheet: Testing Financial Models to Support State Efforts to Coordinate Care for Medicare-Medicaid Enrollees

Demonstration to Improve Care Quality for Nursing Facility Residents

CMS will competitively select and partner with independent organizations that will provide enhanced clinical services to people in approximately 150 nursing homes. Initiatives should be targeted to improve health outcomes and reduce preventable hospitalizations.

Technical Assistance Resource Center Available to States

CMS announced it has created a resource center to assist states in delivering coordinated health care to high-cost beneficiaries. This resource center will focus on helping states in promoting coordinated care and reducing costs.

CMS Announcement on Health Insurance Exchanges

CMS will be releasing a series of regulations on Health Insurance Exchanges, the first of which is expected to be released on Monday morning and cover the operations of Exchanges, including the requirements for the establishment and operation of an Exchange and requirements for certifying health plans for participation. Also included will be information about navigators and SHOP Exchanges. Subsequent regulations will include tax eligibility and enrollment requirements and risk adjustment.

Court's Ruling on Medicaid Disrupts Obamacare and Leaves More Unanswered Questions for States

Obamacare proponents frequently claim that the law will cover approximately 30 million people when fully implemented. However, how they plan to achieve this goal is rarely discussed. In addition to exchange subsidies, approximately 20 million individuals will be swept into a massive Medicaid expansion in 2014. Governors across the country opposed this Medicaid expansion because it would tie their hands with new federal mandates and would ultimately require significant state financial resources.

Today, the Supreme Court ruled that the federal government cannot punish states by cutting off all Medicaid funds to those that choose not to participate in the massive program and spending expansion. While this small decision is good news for states' rights, it raises new questions about the cost and construct of the law. Should a state decide to exercise its constitutional right to reject an unaffordable Medicaid expansion, what will it mean for the other Medicaid mandates attached to the law? How many more people will be pushed into a system of subsidies and government control? And, how much more will that cost the taxpayers? Federal government costs could spike even higher because more Americans will be pushed into government-approved and taxpayer-funded subsidized exchanges. Meanwhile, states are still facing burdensome maintenance of effort requirements and other provisions that drive up their costs and prevent them from taking innovative approaches to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of their Medicaid programs.

The ruling creates more uncertainty for states trying to navigate Obamacare's intricate web. That's why Republicans are committed to repealing the law in its entirety so we can pursue health care reforms on a clean slate and enact common-sense, step-by-step reforms that protect Americans' access to the care they need, from the doctor they choose, at a lower cost.

What Does the Election Mean for Obamacare? (Heritage Morning Bell)

Two of the largest elements of the health care law—the massive Medicaid expansion and the costly subsidies scheme funneled through government exchanges—are heavily dependent on state compliance. But the June Supreme Court decision reaffirmed that states are not at the mercy of the federal government. Many state officials realize that there is little upside to joining forces with Washington in implementing this disastrous endeavor, thus further eroding the long-term viability of Obamacare.

Obamacare: America's Last Entitlement (Forbes)

America's unsustainable fiscal situation means that Obamacare is destined to be the last major entitlement enacted by the United States. Republican governors scramble over next Obamacare steps (Washington Post)

States are working on a tight timeline: After the Nov. 16 deadline, they face another checkpoint on Jan. 1, when they have to demonstrate that their marketplace is on track to begin enrolling people in one year. "If were a governor, I'd be less concerned about the November deadline," Leavitt's Smith said. "I would be focused on the actual deadline, in January, to show you can make this work." With benchmarks looming, and the election barely hitting rearview mirror, many Republican governors seem to be in the middle of weighing the best next steps.

With Obama Re-Elected, States Scramble Over Health Law (NYT)

Much depends on the states as they decide in the coming weeks and months whether to build online marketplaces known as insurance exchanges, where individuals and small businesses can shop for health plans, and whether to expand their Medicaid programs to reach many more low-income people.

So far, according to Weil, only 13 states and Washington, D.C., have said they plan to set up their own exchanges. If states decide not to set up their own exchanges, the federal government will step in and do it instead. But federal officials still haven't spelled out exactly how that will work.

HHS Expected to Give States More Time on Exchange Decisions

By Rebecca Adams, CQ HealthBeat Associate Editor

The federal government is likely to extend the Nov. 16 deadline for states to decide whether they will run their own health insurance exchanges, according to several state officials.

State officials were supposed to notify the Department of Health and Human Services by that date about whether they plan to run the insurance exchanges that will launch in 2014, create a state-federal partnership or let the federal government operate the exchange in their area. Instead, HHS officials are expected to set a new deadline for states that want to operate the marketplaces alone but have a rolling deadline with ongoing discussions for states that are interested in a partnership.

A Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services spokesman declined to comment.

The additional time will be a relief for many state officials who are trying to determine whether there is enough political will, technical knowledge and time for them to set up their own new health benefit marketplaces.

Although many governors, especially critics of the 2010 health care law (PL 111-148, PL 111-152), were not ready to commit to a state-run or state-federal hybrid exchange before the election because they did not want it to be interpreted as a show of support for the statute, many may be interested in exerting some control over an exchange in their jurisdictions since the alternative would be one run by Washington.

Before the election, nine states were expected to let the federal government operate an exchange. On Tuesday, Missouri voters in a ballot initiative also banned the state government from creating a state exchange, bringing the total of states refusing to run a state-administered exchange to 10. (See related story, CQ HealthBeat, Nov. 7, 2012)

Sixteen states have indicated that they would like to proceed with their own state-run exchange and 14 of them have sent official letters to CMS officials that are posted on the agency's website.

The decision about how to run an exchange is complicated and in many cases, governors who would like to go ahead will have to win the support of state legislators. On Wednesday, Tennessee Republican Gov. Bill Haslam said he would prefer to have the state run its own insurance exchange program than leave it to federal officials. But state legislators in his party chimed in with criticism, saying that the legislature would not go along with the creation of a state-based exchange. Governors in many states will have to navigate similar political climates.

Republican Governors Public Policy Committee Files Amicus Brief in Supreme Court Case Challenging Obamacare

The Republican Governors Association policy arm, the Republican Governors Public Policy Committee, filed an amicus brief with the United States Supreme Court arguing against the constitutionality of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. The brief was filed through Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli and the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The filing marks the first time that the Republican Governors Public Policy Committee has ever submitted an amicus brief to the Supreme Court.

“While the amicus focuses on the individual mandate, this case is about far more than just that component,” said RGA Chairman Bob McDonnell. “The Obama administration’s healthcare takeover grants sweeping authority to the federal bureaucracy to dictate to individuals, churches, charities, hospitals, schools, businesses and states how they must operate. This is the opposite of the vision of America set forth by our nation’s founders.”

“At its core, this case is about the future of America, and whether we maintain our identity as a federal republic, or creep ever closer to a centralized government in which all the power flows out of Washington,” McDonnell concluded.

The full brief can be found by clicking HERE, and a summary of its arguments is below:

SUMMARY

I. THE PRESUMPTION OF CONSTITUTIONALITY ATTACHING TO PPACA IS WEAK OWING TO THE PARLIAMENTARY PROCESS EMPLOYED IN ITS ENACTMENT. There is doctrinal and philosophical support for such a presumption resting upon notions of separation of powers, particularly where it appears PPACA was not passed through any process resembling regular order. The United States Senate passed PPACA late on Christmas Eve 2009 as a floor substitute on a straight party line vote. The legislative vehicle was a House tax bill chosen to satisfy the Originating Clause for the taxes in PPACA. PPACA passed the Senate on cloture with considerable minority protest. To the extent that a presumption of constitutionality arises from regular order and a hard look by Congress at the limits of its own power, those conditions are simply not present.

II. THE FACT THAT CONGRESS HERETOFORE HAS NEVER CLAIMED THE POWER TO REQUIRE A CITIZEN TO PURCHASE A GOOD OR SERVICE FROM ANOTHER CITIZEN TENDS TO NEGATE THE EXISTENCE OF THAT POWER. In the case of PPACA, the lack of historical precedent was well known to Congress before it acted. At the heart of PPACA is § 1501, which generally requires American citizens to purchase a good or service from other citizens, namely, a health insurance policy. When the Senate Finance Committee asked the Congressional Research Service whether a mandate supported by a penalty would be constitutional, the response was equivocal: "Whether such a requirement would be constitutional under the Commerce Clause is perhaps the most challenging question posed by such a proposal, as it is a novel issue whether Congress may use this clause to require an individual to purchase a good or a service."

III. THE MANDATE AND PENALTY ARE CONTRARY TO THE TEXT OF THE COMMERCE CLAUSE AND FOUNDATIONAL UNDERSTANDINGS.

A. The Mandate and Penalty are Not Supported by the Text of the Commerce Clause. Noah Webster in 1828 defined commerce as "an interchange or mutual change of goods, wares, productions, or property of any kind, between nations or individuals, either by barter, or by purchase and sale; trade; traffick." This is commerce. Its hallmarks are spontaneity and voluntary activity; not a command to buy something. The claim that commerce means not commercial activity but mere passivity is violently discordant with any normal use of the word commerce at the founding or at any subsequent time.

B. The Historical Context in which the Commerce Clause was Drafted Makes it Highly Unlikely that it Included a Power to Command a Citizen to Purchase Goods or Services From Another Citizen. The founding generation would have regarded as preposterous any suggestion that Great Britain could have solved its colonial problems by commanding Americans to purchase tea under the generally conceded power of parliament to regulate commerce.

C. There is No Tradition of Using the Commerce Clause to Require a Citizen to Purchase Goods or Services from Another Citizen. Because this regime viewed the regulation even of economic activity as illegitimate unless that activity harmed or threatened harm to someone else, Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905), it is inconceivable that the Commerce Clause prior to 1938 would have been deemed to validly reach inactivity. The question thus becomes, has the Supreme Court decided any case in the post-Lochner era that has extended the Commerce Clause far enough to cover the mandate and penalty?

D. The Mandate and Penalty are Outside the Existing Outer Limits of the Commerce Clause and Associated Necessary and Proper Clause as Measured by Supreme Court Precedent. "[E]ven if [an] activity be local and though it may not be regarded as commerce, it may still, whatever its nature, be reached by Congress if it exerts a substantial economic effect on interstate commerce, and this irrespective of whether such effect is what might at some earlier time have been defined as 'direct' or 'indirect.'" Wickard, 317 U.S. at 125 (emphasis added). Wickard marks the affirmative outer limits of the Commerce Clause.

Since Wickard, the Supreme Court has proceeded no further than to hold that Congress can regulate three things under the Commerce Clause: (1) "use of the channels of interstate commerce" (2) "the instrumentalities of interstate commerce," and (3) "activities that substantially affect interstate commerce." U.S. v. Lopez, 514 U.S. at 558-59. "[T]he Federal balance is too essential a part of our constitutional structure and plays too vital a role in securing freedom for us to admit inability to intervene when one or the other level of Government has tipped the scales too far." Id. at 578.

None of this is changed by an appeal to the Necessary and Proper Clause. This Court elsewhere has emphatically held that the Necessary and Proper Clause is limited by general principles of federalism independent of any direct prohibition. Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706 (1999) ("When a 'Law . . . for carrying into Execution' the Commerce Clause violates the principle of state sovereignty reflected in the various constitutional provisions . . . it is not a 'Law . . . proper for carrying into Execution the Commerce Clause,' and is thus, in the words of The Federalist, 'merely [an] act of usurpation' which 'deserves to be treated as such.'") (citing Printz, 521 U.S. at 923-24). It simply does not matter how "necessary" the mandate and penalty might be to the congressional scheme if the end being pursued is improper under the Necessary and Proper Clause.

GOP Governors Detail the Cost of Obamacare on the States

As the Supreme Court today hears arguments about the impact upon the states of expanding Medicaid, the Republican Governors Association released information from states highlighting the costs of expanding Medicaid and implementing the health care law.

“President Obama’s federal health care takeover was enacted by Democrats in Congress over the objection of governors and with little regard for the costs to the states,” said RGA Chairman Bob McDonnell. “The federal health care law shifts billions of dollars in unfunded, long-term costs to state governments while restricting the ability of governors to craft Medicaid solutions for the citizens of their states. This one-size-fits-all approach is yet another reason why the health care law needs to be replaced, and Republican governors have offered a blueprint for true reform. The current law is simply unaffordable, unsustainable and unworkable.”

Costs to the States:

Alabama

The implementation of Obamacare will increase the costs of state government immediately and in the near future.

The overall Medicaid budget alone is expected to increase from $6.3 Billion in 2012 to $13.2 Billion at the beginning of the 2020 fiscal year.

Medicaid Expansion Details

- By 2014, Alabama expects to add up to 534,000 new enrollees to Medicaid. This is due to mandated eligibility to anyone under age 65 who has an income of less than 133% of the federal poverty level.
- Alabama is also required to provide subsidies to adults earning between 134% and 400% and children with incomes between 301% and 400%. This expansion would increase Medicaid eligibility from the current 21% of the state’s population to about 40% of the population.
- Nearly 1,000 new primary care physicians will be needed to care for this new population.
- This cost of services for the new eligibles would initially be borne by the federal government, but that support would fade to 90% of the cost by 2020.
- HCR legislation does not provide any additional funds to the state to certify enroll and manage the new recipients.
- Administrative costs alone will require an estimated $389 million in state funds. Eligibility system changes will be required to add new enrollees, to differentiate between those eligible under new vs. previous rules (each with different matching rates) and to allow information to flow back and forth between subsidy plans and Medicaid.

Alaska

Alaska continues to be hampered in its efforts to manage the costs of its Medicaid program and continues to see Medicaid population increases. For the first time in recent history the Budget of the Department of Health and Social Services (Medicaid Authority) has surpassed that of the Department of Education and is projected to continue to grow ahead of inflation.

For FY2013 it is projected that Alaska will need an additional $45 million in state general funds to cope with program growth and another $129 million in state general funds to offset the loss of enhanced federal Medicaid funding. Alaska continues to be faced with substantial growth in Medicaid caseloads and utilization and forecasts an over 20 percent increase in Medicaid state general fund expenditures.

The State of Alaska continues to narrow projections on estimating the total cost of the ACA over the long term. However, a June 2010 preliminary analysis of the Medicaid impacts reflects that cumulative state general fund spending will increase by $100M million, through 2020. While direct care spending in the early years is offset by increased federal match rates, spending in later years paints an even more concerning picture for Alaska's future and the ever increasing impact of Medicaid expansion on the State budget while oil throughput continues to decline.

Arizona

The mandatory Medicaid expansions in PPACA, and the woodwork created by these expansions, are expected to cost Arizona over $550 million in the next three fiscal years. Once fully implemented in the latter half of this decade, PPACA is anticipated to increase Arizona's annual Medicaid obligations by almost $500 million per year. Furthermore, because Arizona expanded to 100% of the Federal Poverty Level before the passage of the PPACA, it receives a lower matching rate for those populations than other states that did not expand (who will initially receive full federal financing).

Over the four year period of the recession, while overall state spending decreased, Medicaid spending soared by 63 percent, to the point where it accounted for nearly 30 percent of the state general fund in the recently-completed FY 2011. During the recession, Arizona's projected deficits spiked, which necessitated a series of aggressive, unprecedented steps in order to return the State to fiscal stability. An important element of this effort was the paring back of Arizona's Medicaid program in FY 2012, which will be undermined by the mandated increases in population due to the PPACA.

Florida

According to Florida's Agency for Health Care Administration, ObamaCare's Medicaid expansion will force Florida to spend an additional $1.5 billion and force an additional 1.8 million Floridians to enroll in Medicaid in four years.

Georgia

The projected impact of the Medicaid expansion in Georgia is significant. In January 2014, an estimated 650,000 additional members will be added to our state Medicaid and CHIP programs. This federally mandated expansion will increase state spending by at least $2.4 billion between FY2010-FY2020 alone. That said, the cost could soar substantially higher because there are more federal regulations to come and initial spending could spike because of the pent-up demand of new members. The Georgia Department of Community Health is continually reassessing the impact of the Medicaid expansion mandate.

Idaho

Idaho estimates between 150,000 and 200,000 new eligibles could be added to the Medicaid caseload when new expansion rules are implemented which could mean an 40-percent increase in participation compared to Idaho's current caseloads. The overall Medicaid benefit cost attributed to PPACA Medicaid provisions in the State of Idaho is conservatively estimated to be $228 million in State funds by 2020. In preparation for the PPACA 2014 changes, Medicaid system readiness is estimated to cost $34.8 million, of which Idaho's share will be $3.48 million.

Idaho is purposely holding off on changes related to the Medicaid expansion requirement because of the uncertainty surrounding the Supreme Court's decision, 2012 elections and State legislative decisions which could drastically impact how Medicaid expansion is implemented and designed. The State anticipates the cost to meet the new Medicaid expansion requirement will be approximately $9 million. That does not include the cost of operational and personnel needs related to the expansion.

In addition, the limited nature of the federal timelines and lack of final rules has forced Idaho to design a phased approach to accommodate the uncertainty surrounding Medicaid. Idaho is working on modernization, expansion and connection phases – all of which depend on the Supreme Court decision and 2012 elections.

Indiana

The additional enrollees will cost between $2.5 and $3.1 billion to Indiana's Medicaid expenditures for the period 2014 to 2020.

A fully state-operated Exchange is expected to cost the State between $57.7-$83.4M annually. This is in addition to the cost of the Medicaid expansion. Even if the State decides not to operate an Exchange, there will still be costs associated with eligibility for premium tax credits. Therefore, a fully federal Exchange is expected to cost the State between $10.4-$18.3M annually.

As recently as eight years ago, Iowa spent less than $2.5 billion in total Medicaid expenditures. Total Medicaid spending in Iowa now approaches $4 billion and accounts for more than 15% of Iowa General Fund expenditures.

When we entered office in January 2011, we were faced with replacing $540 million in one-time money that was used to fund the on-going Medicaid entitlement. Medicaid remains a complex funding source for health care that we manage very carefully.

It is anticipated that the federal takeover of health care under the Affordable Care Act will increase Medicaid enrollment by at least 150,000 people in Iowa. In 2014, the first year of implementation, our Medicaid population will grow from 400,000 to more than 550,000 covered lives in a state where our population is just over 3 million people. The total cost of this expansion is estimated to be between $180 to $818 million (with mid-point estimate of $255 million) in the first year, with the state picking up an increasing share of this cost over time. The uncertainty surrounding the wide range of potential costs is alone cause for concern.

Despite the federally mandated expansion of the Medicaid program, Iowa and other states will have less flexibility than ever before to effectively and efficiently manage this entitlement that is vital for so many of our vulnerable citizens. Federal maintenance of effort (MOE) requirements continue to tie the hands of state policymakers, forcing a continual squeeze on health care providers and diverting benefits from those who need them most.

Without flexibility to reform Medicaid to improve outcomes and reduce costs, Kansas will continue to see increases in Medicaid spending. Kansas' Medicaid budget has ballooned from $2.4 billion in 2008, at the onset of federally mandated maintenance of effort (MOE) requirements, to what will reach nearly $3 billion in 2013 without reforms. In the same period, enrollment will have increased from 293,000 to almost 400,000 -- all before the mandated PPACA expansion.

An example of the rigidity of the MOE requirements in the ARRA, and extended by PPACA, is the federal response to the Kansas Legislature's move in 2010 to adjust family premiums in the CHIP program by $40 a month. CMS did not approve it, citing MOE. Instead, HHS offered an option to raise premiums that would have amounted to about 50 cents per month on a typical premium.

Kansas has proposed to acquire the flexibility it needs to remake Medicaid in a two-track Section 1115 demonstration project. The first track will address authorities needed to implement KanCare, an integrated, person-centered care coordination model that will incorporate nearly all Medicaid and CHIP populations and services, including long term services and supports. The second track proposes a global waiver, more specifically an outcomes-based Medicaid and CHIP program under a per capita block grant, fundamentally redefining the federal-state relationship in Medicaid and providing a model for reform that honors the program's statutory goal of improving the health of Americans in the greatest need.

Louisiana

Obamacare is expected to cost Louisiana a total of $7 billion in additional state general funds over the next 10 years.

Obamacare will increase Medicaid rolls by 645,843 over the next 10 years at a cost of $3.69 billion in state general funds.

High costs of the IT systems needed to implement the expansions and the link to the Exchange (whether state-run or federal) are estimated to cost $162 million in state general funds.

Increase payments to primary care providers, increased utilization for physicians and hospitals are estimated to cost $2.6 billion in state general funds.

Maine

Maine's Medicaid program has experienced an increase in enrollment from 314,000 in June 2009 to 336,000 in June, 2010, and total spending in Maine's Medicaid program has increased by over one billion dollars since 2002. Over the last several years, Medicaid rates for healthcare providers have also been repeatedly cut to address the ongoing financial shortfalls in Medicaid as a result of increasing enrollment and utilization. As a result of these reductions, some Maine physicians have closed their practices to Medicaid patients significantly reducing access to primary care services for Medicaid beneficiaries. All of the above challenges will be exacerbated by ACA. As Maine struggles to confront a shortfall of more than $800 million in the next biennial budget and the requirement to adopt a balanced budget, it is imperative that the Governor and the Legislature have the necessary flexibility to comprehensively manage the Medicaid program and to make necessary changes to effectively reduce total spending in the program.

Mississippi

The overall cost to implement PPACA in Mississippi is estimated to be $1.7 billion over the next ten years, including an additional $443 million in year ten.

Nebraska

In addition, based upon preliminary professional consultant projections, the State of Nebraska estimates that it will cost anywhere from $61.4 million to $86.9 million to build a Health Insurance Exchange in Nebraska. Due to the changing nature of the health insurance exchange project and the instability of the federal government's promulgation of final rules and regulations, the State projects that a state exchange annual operating budget would be $17.5 million per year starting in 2016.

Nevada

In April of 2010, the Nevada Department of Health and Human Services estimated the General Fund impact of implementing the Affordable Care Act was $574 million from 2014 through 2019.

New Mexico

With the implementation of Obamacare, New Mexico is poised to add an additional 130,000 – 175,000 individuals to the Medicaid program with an additional cost of $300 million - $600 million between 2014 and 2019.

North Dakota

With the implementation of Obamacare, North Dakota's current estimate for additional Medicaid spending is $106 million over 10 years.

Ohio

The estimated cost to Ohio from the first year to 2019 is over $2.7 billion for Medicaid services. These estimates do not include the cost of increases in administration of the program. The long-term sustainability of the program is called into question, unless Ohio is given new options on how to manage the program.

Pennsylvania

Pennsylvania's Medicaid spending has doubled over the past ten years and it now comprises 31% of the state's budget. It has grown four times faster than K-12 spending, and nine times faster than transportation spending. Even before the healthcare bill passed, Medicaid has been on an unsustainable path. Under this law, these statistics will only get worse. Pennsylvania will see an additional 800,000 individuals on the Medicaid rolls adding a significant burden to the budget and taxpayers. As the Medicaid population continues to increase and state revenues continue to not keep pace, the mandates of the maintenance of effort requirement and the lack of any meaningful flexibility within the program will severely hamper virtually all other aspects of the state budget. States simply cannot afford Obamacare. Their budgets will be crushed by the Medicaid expansion that the federal establishment is forcing on them. Americans deserve a vibrant, robust, competitive and transparent health care system that puts patients and quality first, focuses on personal responsibility, not a large government takeover that shifts the costs from the federal government to state tax payers.

South Carolina

Medicaid enrollment will increase by 54% or 510,000 individuals in 2015 as a result of the Affordable Care Act. 176,000 of these persons will drop private insurance to go on Medicaid. The additional costs to state taxpayers between State Fiscal Year 2014 and State Fiscal Year 2020 ranges from $1.15 billion to $2.5 billion dollars depending on assumptions of participation rate and increases in physician fees resulting from physician shortages created by the new law.

South Dakota estimates it will cost at least $99.7 million in state funds through 2019 to comply with the Medicaid requirements of the PPACA.

This burden coupled with the inability to change other parts of the Medicaid program due to the MOE requirements will result in rate cuts to providers.

Providers that cannot absorb these cuts may stop taking people eligible for Medicaid, or may stop providing services altogether.

This would have a hugely detrimental effect on a very rural state, including citizens that rely on Medicaid for their health care and communities that may see their health care providers leave or quit. These unintended consequences of the MOE provisions in the PPACA are counter-productive of its larger goal to help Americans get access to the health care they need.

Tennessee's Medicaid program is continuing to experience budgetary challenges in the coming fiscal year, as state revenues continue their slow climb back to pre-recession levels. Unfortunately, the MOE requirements limit the flexibility needed to make important changes to the program as we deal with such issues. For instance, TennCare could save $16 million alone just by modifying nursing facility level of care requirements that would bring Tennessee in line with the criteria of other states and rebalance its long-term care system in order to serve more people with lesser levels of need in more cost-effective home and community-based settings while targeting the more expensive long-term care services to persons with higher acuity of need. However, we have yet to receive approval to make such a change.

At a time when Tennessee is already facing budget difficulties and the ACA is expected to cost the state in excess of $1.5 billion over five years, we must have the flexibility necessary to make common sense adjustments to the program.

Medicaid is consistently one of the biggest expenses all states face. It accounts for a quarter of the state budget in Texas. The Affordable Care Act expands Medicaid without reforming the program.

ACA will increase Medicaid enrollment in Texas by nearly 2 million people and cost the state $27 billion over 10 years.

States have received little federal guidance on key ACA provisions, including the primary care rate increases which is required starting in 2013. Additionally, guidance is needed on Medicaid Benchmark Benefits, eligibility changes, FMAP methodology and numerous other provisions.

Lack of timely guidance makes it impossible for states to effectively plan for the mushrooming Medicaid caseloads that the law will create. HHSC needs final, detailed guidance from the federal government to determine the full impact of certain ACA provisions on the Texas Medicaid and CHIP programs, and to make federally-required changes.

ACA does not recognize states' unique needs and prevents each state from tailoring its Medicaid and CHIP programs in accordance with the intent of its elected and appointed representatives.

Utah

The Insurance Department has been tracking hours of work to account for the additional burdens imposed by the ACA. During FY11, we are able to account for over 5,700 hours, equating to approximately $182,000 in personnel costs. Included in the estimate is time spent on rate review which has been supported by a grant from HHS, reimbursing the department $112,757 in personnel costs. In addition to the above, numerous hours have been incurred by the Commissioner or our actuary

The Commonwealth of Virginia has estimated the Medicaid cost of federal health reform to the State to be between $1.5 and $2.2 billion through 2022. These estimates have not been updated since August 2010, but because of the length of the recession and the current pace of economic growth, along with other developments in our understanding of the full impact of PPACA, the higher end of the cost range seems more realistic. For example, in a study completed for Medicaid Health Plans of America, Milliman, Inc. has estimated that the PPACA-mandated tax on health insurance companies, which did not exclude Medicaid health plans, will cost Virginia, a heavily managed Medicaid state, approximately $430 - $500 million through 2023; this was not included in Virginia's 2010 estimates of the PPACA cost, meaning this $430 - $500 million would be in addition to the $1.5 to $2.2 billion already estimated. Virginia is in the process of re-estimating impacts in preparation for the 2012 Medicaid forecast due in the fall of 2012. At that time, the estimates should better reflect the current economic environment in Virginia, and reflect a better understanding of the PPACA impact based on subsequent analysis and federal guidance that was not available for the 2010 estimates."

If implemented, the PPACA will force a heavy financial burden upon the people of Wisconsin through increased health insurance premiums, the expansion of Medicaid, and a new entitlement that will create new inequities among working families. Moreover, much of the new spending will not be used to increase coverage in Wisconsin, which has already achieved the levels of insurance that is aspired to under PPACA. Public dollars will simply displace private dollars at a higher cost.

New estimates from the Obama Administration and the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office (CBO) demonstrate that Medicaid enrollment will be higher than previously estimated. The Wisconsin Department of Health Services (DHS) believes that increased enrollment among currently eligible individuals and retention of higher income children due to Maintenance of Effort (MOE) requirements will drive up the cost to the state. However, the direct burden on the state budget remains uncertain. New eligibility rules will result in some individuals migrating into and out of Medicaid. Rules on federal matching rates that are critical to our fiscal analysis have not been finalized.

More than 750,000 childless adults, parents, caretakers, and children are already enrolled in Wisconsin Medicaid programs. There will be no additional federal assistance for the vast majority of these individuals and future enrollees. Some additional federal assistance will apply only to a relatively small number of individuals. Whether the federal government will “buy out” the state share of some eligibility groups is unknown at this time. It will matter little to taxpayers whether the costs will count as federal or state expenditures. Increased federal control over the management of the Medicaid program is stifling innovation and threatens to unnecessarily drive up costs.

The costs of maintaining our Medicaid program are fast becoming a serious threat to our state general funds. The 2013-2014 biennial budget for Medicaid in Wyoming includes $560 million in state general fund dollars. This is just the cost to provide care to the current population of approximately 76,000 enrollees. A study of Wyoming impacts from PPACA conducted by The Lewin Group in 2010 estimates an additional 31,000 enrollees due to the Medicaid expansion in 2014 – an increase of over 40%. It is difficult to estimate what the fiscal impact of this huge bolus of new enrollees will be. The State legislature commissioned a Medicaid Cost Study in 2011 and we expect findings in mid-2012. We do know, however, that the cost of implementing a new eligibility and enrollment system for Medicaid will cost over $3.5 million in state general funds after the 90/10 federal match.

The larger and more detrimental impact of the implementation of PPACA is likely to be to our private health insurance markets. An actuarial study of our small group and individual markets conducted by Gorman Actuarial, LLC in 2011 indicates that we can expect premiums to go up an average of 30% to 40% in the individual market due solely to new insurance regulations effective in 2014. When you add the projected impact of higher morbidity of new entrants into the market and essential benefit mandates, we can expect overall 40% to 60% increases in premiums in the individual market.

Given that Wyoming already has a higher percentage of small employers that self-insure than other states, it's not unreasonable to expect a number of small employers to stop providing insured coverage and either move their employees to the individual market or to self-insure to avoid regulation. During recent town hall meetings, a number of small employers indicated that it would be cheaper for them to pay the PPACA penalties for not providing coverage than it will be to continue to provide coverage. The Lewin Group estimates a net loss of over 8,000 covered lives in the employer sponsored insurance market.

With all the changes in PPACA, Gorman Actuarial estimates over 41,000 people in Wyoming will remain uninsured by 2016. This represents about half of the 83,000 people currently uninsured in our state.

Hello,

Some of you asked for talking points about the amicus/PPACA. Please find those below.

Best,

Mike

Amicus Brief and PPACA Talking Points

Amicus Brief Topline Talking Points

The amicus brief has three main arguments:

1. The presumption of Constitutionality attaching to PPACA is weak owing to the irregular parliamentary process employed in its enactment.
2. The fact that Congress has never before required a citizen to purchase a good or service from another citizen negates the existence of that power.
3. The individual mandate and penalty are contrary to the text of the commerce clause and foundational understandings

While the amicus focuses on the individual mandate, this case is about far more than just the individual mandate. The Obama administration's healthcare takeover grants sweeping authority to the federal bureaucracy to dictate to individuals, churches, charities, hospitals, schools, businesses and states how they must operate. This is the opposite of the vision of America set forth by our nation's founders.

General PPACA Talking Points

1. The Obama Administration has failed to adequately respond to the states requests for more flexibility: unfunded mandates, maintenance of effort, healthcare exchanges, denied waivers.
  - a. Essential to note: Republican governors proactively offered 31 specific solutions for reforming and saving Medicaid, but received no response from the White House.
2. True cost of Obamacare after the Democrats' budget gimmicks are removed is $2.5 trillion.
3. States cannot afford Obamacare, and the White House's failure to work with the states creates more uncertainty for both state budgets, which in turns creates uncertainty for businesses who don't know how states will pay for Obamacare's provisions.
4. ObamaCare is driving up premiums and jeopardizing coverage for millions of Americans. President Obama promised he would make our economy stronger, but policies like ObamaCare have made it worse.
  - a. The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Service actuaries find that Obamacare will dramatically increase the near-term growth rate of health care costs. In 2014, the actuaries find that growth in the net cost of health insurance will increase by nearly 14 percent, compared to 3.5% if PPACA had never passed.
  - b. A June 2011 report by McKinsey & Co. found that 30-50 percent of employers said they would stop offering health coverage once the bulk of ObamaCare took effect.
  - c. A May 2011 PriceWaterhouseCoopers survey found that 84 percent of employers would make changes to their plan as a result of ObamaCare.
  - d. Candidate Obama repeatedly promised his health care plan would LOWER premiums by $2,500 per family, and do so within his first term. But the price of the average employer-sponsored plan ROSE by more than $2,200 per family since Obama was first elected in 2008, according to studies from the Kaiser Family Foundation. In other words, Obama's abandoned promise has cost American families nearly $5,000 per year – a $2,200 premium increase compared to a $2,500 promised premium reduction.

5. Healthcare Exchanges: CMS continues to provide limited guidance and seeks to mandate a one size fit all approach to exchanges. Contrary to a recent White House report indicating that states are moving for embracing and implementing healthcare exchanges, states remain confused and are either not moving forward under any scenario or moving forward 1) play defense to the federal government, or 2) implement a market based anti-obamacare exchange.
6. The Administration's "compromise" on conscience protections for religious-affiliated employers now places the mandate on insurers to sell contraceptive coverage.
  - a. While religious employers will no longer be forced to provide products to which they have moral objections, they will be required to facilitate, directly or indirectly, access to those products. The Administration is forcing religious groups to "wash their hands" of actions they find morally objectionable by placing the mandate elsewhere.
  - b. Also, the rule is not fully repealed. The mandate will remain in place for other employers who may have conscience concerns about coverage of contraception and abortifacients. Religious leaders have expressed their strong desire to repeal the entire contraceptive mandate, noting that maintaining this new federal requirement – included in the President's unpopular health care law – would still create moral difficulties for "good... business people who can't in good conscience cooperate" with a federal mandate that violates their religious beliefs.

More Detailed Summary of Amicus Arguments

I. THE PRESUMPTION OF CONSTITUTIONALITY ATTACHING TO PPACA IS WEAK OWING TO THE PARLIAMENTARY PROCESS EMPLOYED IN ITS ENACTMENT. There is doctrinal and philosophical support for such a presumption resting upon notions of separation of powers, particularly where it appears PPACA was not passed through any process resembling regular order. The United States Senate passed PPACA late on Christmas Eve 2009 as a floor substitute on a straight party line vote. The legislative vehicle was a House tax bill chosen to satisfy the Originating Clause for the taxes in PPACA. PPACA passed the Senate on cloture with considerable minority protest. To the extent that a presumption of constitutionality arises from regular order and a hard look by Congress at the limits of its own power, those conditions are simply not present.

II. THE FACT THAT CONGRESS HERETOFORE HAS NEVER CLAIMED THE POWER TO REQUIRE A CITIZEN TO PURCHASE A GOOD OR SERVICE FROM ANOTHER CITIZEN TENDS TO NEGATE THE EXISTENCE OF THAT POWER. In the case of PPACA, the lack of historical precedent was well known to Congress before it acted. At the heart of PPACA is § 1501, which generally requires American citizens to purchase a good or service from other citizens, namely, a health insurance policy. When the Senate Finance Committee asked the Congressional Research Service whether a mandate supported by a penalty would be constitutional, the response was equivocal: "Whether such a requirement would be constitutional under the Commerce Clause is perhaps the most challenging question posed by such a proposal, as it is a novel issue whether Congress may use this clause to require an individual to purchase a good or a service."

III. THE MANDATE AND PENALTY ARE CONTRARY TO THE TEXT OF THE COMMERCE CLAUSE AND FOUNDATIONAL UNDERSTANDINGS.

A. The Mandate and Penalty are Not Supported by the Text of the Commerce Clause. Noah Webster in 1828 defined commerce as "an interchange or mutual change of goods, wares, productions, or property of any kind, between nations or individuals, either by barter, or by purchase and sale; trade; traffick." This is commerce. Its hallmarks are spontaneity and voluntary activity; not a command to buy something. The claim that commerce means not commercial activity but mere passivity is violently discordant with any normal use of the word commerce at the Founding or at any subsequent time.

B. The Historical Context in which the Commerce Clause was Drafted Makes it Highly Unlikely that it Included a Power to Command a Citizen to Purchase Goods or Services From Another Citizen. The founding generation would have regarded as preposterous any suggestion that Great Britain could have solved its colonial problems by commanding Americans to purchase tea under the generally conceded power of parliament to regulate commerce.

C. There is No Tradition of Using the Commerce Clause to Require a Citizen to Purchase Goods or Services from Another Citizen. Because this regime viewed the regulation even of economic activity as illegitimate unless that activity harmed or threatened harm to someone else, Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905), it is inconceivable that the Commerce Clause prior to 1938 would have been deemed to validly reach inactivity. The question thus becomes, has the Supreme Court decided any case in the post-Lochner era that has extended the Commerce Clause far enough to cover the mandate and penalty?

D. As this Court Found in Denying the Secretary's Motion to Dismiss, the Mandate and Penalty are Outside the Existing Outer Limits of the Commerce Clause and Associated Necessary and Proper Clause as Measured by Supreme Court Precedent. "[E]ven if [an] activity be local and though it may not be regarded as commerce, it may still, whatever its nature, be reached by Congress if it exerts a substantial economic effect on interstate commerce, and this irrespective of whether such effect is what might at some earlier time have been defined as 'direct' or 'indirect.'" Wickard, 317 U.S. at 125 (emphasis added). Wickard marks the affirmative outer limits of the Commerce Clause.

Since Wickard, the Supreme Court has proceeded no further than to hold that Congress can regulate three things under the Commerce Clause: (1) "use of the channels of interstate commerce" (2) "the instrumentalities of interstate commerce," and (3) "activities that substantially affect interstate commerce." Lopez, 514 U.S. at 558-59. "[T]he Federal balance is too essential a part of our constitutional structure and plays too vital a role in securing freedom for us to admit inability to intervene when one or the other level of Government has tipped the scales too far." Id. at 578.

None of this is changed by an appeal to the Necessary and Proper Clause. This Court elsewhere has emphatically held that the Necessary and Proper Clause is limited by general principles of federalism independent of any direct prohibition. Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706 (1999) ("When a 'Law . . . for carrying into Execution' the Commerce Clause violates the principle of state sovereignty reflected in the various constitutional provisions . . . it is not a 'Law . . . proper for carrying into Execution the Commerce Clause,' and is thus, in the words of The Federalist, 'merely [an] act of usurpation' which 'deserves to be treated as such.'") (citing Printz, 521 U.S. at 923-24). It simply does not matter how "necessary" the mandate and penalty might be to the congressional scheme if the end being pursued is improper under the Necessary and Proper Clause.

GOP Governors Detail the Costs of Obamacare on the States

As the Supreme Court today hears arguments about the impact upon the states of expanding Medicaid, the Republican Governors Association released information from states highlighting the costs of expanding Medicaid and implementing the health care law.

“President Obama’s federal health care takeover was enacted by Democrats in Congress over the objection of governors and with little regard for the costs to the states,” said RGA Chairman Bob McDonnell. “The federal health care law shifts billions of dollars in unfunded, long-term costs to state governments while restricting the ability of governors to craft Medicaid solutions for the citizens of their states. This one-size-fits-all approach is yet another reason why the health care law needs to be replaced, and Republican governors have offered a blueprint for true reform. The current law is simply unaffordable, unsustainable and unworkable.”

Costs to the States:

Alabama

The implementation of Obamacare will increase the costs of state government immediately and in the near future.

The overall Medicaid budget alone is expected to increase from $6.3 Billion in 2012 to $13.2 Billion at the beginning of the 2020 fiscal year.

Medicaid Expansion Details

- By 2014, Alabama expects to add up to 534,000 new enrollees to Medicaid. This is due to mandated eligibility to anyone under age 65 who has an income of less than 133% of the federal poverty level.
- Alabama is also required to provide subsidies to adults earning between 134% and 400% and children with incomes between 301% and 400%. This expansion would increase Medicaid eligibility from the current 21% of the state's population to about 40% of the population.
- Nearly 1,000 new primary care physicians will be needed to care for this new population.
- This cost of services for the new eligibles would initially be borne by the federal government, but that support would fade to 90% of the cost by 2020.
- HCR legislation does not provide any additional funds to the state to certify enroll and manage the new recipients.
- Administrative costs alone will require an estimated $389 million in state funds. Eligibility system changes will be required to add new enrollees, to differentiate between those eligible under new vs. previous rules (each with different matching rates) and to allow information to flow back and forth between subsidy plans and Medicaid.

Alaska

Alaska continues to be hampered in its efforts to manage the costs of its Medicaid program and continues to see Medicaid population increases. For the first time in recent history the Budget of the Department of Health and Social Services (Medicaid Authority) has surpassed that of the Department of Education and is projected to continue to grow ahead of inflation.

For FY2013 it is projected that Alaska will need an additional $45 million in state general funds to cope with program growth and another $129 million in state general funds to offset the loss of enhanced federal Medicaid funding. Alaska continues to be faced with substantial growth in Medicaid caseloads and utilization and forecasts an over 20 percent increase in Medicaid state general fund expenditures.

The State of Alaska continues to narrow projections on estimating the total cost of the ACA over the long term. However, a June 2010 preliminary analysis of the Medicaid impacts reflects that cumulative state general fund spending will increase by $100M million, through 2020. While direct care spending in the early years is offset by increased federal match rates, spending in later years paints an even more concerning picture for Alaska's future and the ever increasing impact of Medicaid expansion on the State budget while oil throughput continues to decline.

Arizona

The mandatory Medicaid expansions in PPACA, and the woodwork created by these expansions, are expected to cost Arizona over $550 million in the next three fiscal years. Once fully implemented in the latter half of this decade, PPACA is anticipated to increase Arizona's annual Medicaid obligations by almost $500 million per year. Furthermore, because Arizona expanded to 100% of the Federal Poverty Level before the passage of the PPACA, it receives a lower matching rate for those populations than other states that did not expand (who will initially receive full federal financing).

Over the four year period of the recession, while overall state spending decreased, Medicaid spending soared by 63 percent, to the point where it accounted for nearly 30 percent of the state general fund in the recently-completed FY 2011. During the recession, Arizona's projected deficits spiked, which necessitated a series of aggressive, unprecedented steps in order to return the State to fiscal stability. An important element of this effort was the paring back of Arizona's Medicaid program in FY 2012, which will be undermined by the mandated increases in population due to the PPACA.

Florida

According to Florida's Agency for Health Care Administration, ObamaCare's Medicaid expansion will force Florida to spend an additional $1.5 billion and force an additional 1.8 million Floridians to enroll in Medicaid in four years.

Georgia

The projected impact of the Medicaid expansion in Georgia is significant. In January 2014, an estimated 650,000 additional members will be added to our state Medicaid and CHIP programs. This federally mandated expansion will increase state spending by at least $2.4 billion between FY2010-FY2020 alone. That said, the cost could soar substantially higher because there are more federal regulations to come and initial spending could spike because of the pent-up demand of new members. The Georgia Department of Community Health is continually reassessing the impact of the Medicaid expansion mandate.

Idaho

Idaho estimates between 150,000 and 200,000 new eligibles could be added to the Medicaid caseload when new expansion rules are implemented which could mean an 40-percent increase in participation compared to Idaho's current caseloads. The overall Medicaid benefit cost attributed to PPACA Medicaid provisions in the State of Idaho is conservatively estimated to be $228 million in State funds by 2020. In preparation for the PPACA 2014 changes, Medicaid system readiness is estimated to cost $34.8 million, of which Idaho's share will be $3.48 million.

Idaho is purposely holding off on changes related to the Medicaid expansion requirement because of the uncertainty surrounding the Supreme Court's decision, 2012 elections and State legislative decisions which could drastically impact how Medicaid expansion is implemented and designed. The State anticipates the cost to meet the new Medicaid expansion requirement will be approximately $9 million. That does not include the cost of operational and personnel needs related to the expansion.

In addition, the limited nature of the federal timelines and lack of final rules has forced Idaho to design a phased approach to accommodate the uncertainty surrounding Medicaid. Idaho is working on modernization, expansion and connection phases – all of which depend on the Supreme Court decision and 2012 elections.

Indiana

The additional enrollees will cost between $2.5 and $3.1 billion to Indiana's Medicaid expenditures for the period 2014 to 2020.

A fully state-operated Exchange is expected to cost the State between $57.7-$83.4M annually. This is in addition to the cost of the Medicaid expansion. Even if the State decides not to operate an Exchange, there will still be costs associated with eligibility for premium tax credits. Therefore, a fully federal Exchange is expected to cost the State between $10.4-$18.3M annually.

As recently as eight years ago, Iowa spent less than $2.5 billion in total Medicaid expenditures. Total Medicaid spending in Iowa now approaches $4 billion and accounts for more than 15% of Iowa General Fund expenditures.

When we entered office in January 2011, we were faced with replacing $540 million in one-time money that was used to fund the on-going Medicaid entitlement. Medicaid remains a complex funding source for health care that we manage very carefully.

It is anticipated that the federal takeover of health care under the Affordable Care Act will increase Medicaid enrollment by at least 150,000 people in Iowa. In 2014, the first year of implementation, our Medicaid population will grow from 400,000 to more than 550,000 covered lives in a state where our population is just over 3 million people. The total cost of this expansion is estimated to be between $180 to $818 million (with mid-point estimate of $255 million) in the first year, with the state picking up an increasing share of this cost over time. The uncertainty surrounding the wide range of potential costs is alone cause for concern.

Despite the federally mandated expansion of the Medicaid program, Iowa and other states will have less flexibility than ever before to effectively and efficiently manage this entitlement that is vital for so many of our vulnerable citizens. Federal maintenance of effort (MOE) requirements continue to tie the hands of state policymakers, forcing a continual squeeze on health care providers and diverting benefits from those who need them most.

Without flexibility to reform Medicaid to improve outcomes and reduce costs, Kansas will continue to see increases in Medicaid spending. Kansas' Medicaid budget has ballooned from $2.4 billion in 2008, at the onset of federally mandated maintenance of effort (MOE) requirements, to what will reach nearly $3 billion in 2013 without reforms. In the same period, enrollment will have increased from 293,000 to almost 400,000 -- all before the mandated PPACA expansion.

An example of the rigidity of the MOE requirements in the ARRA, and extended by PPACA, is the federal response to the Kansas Legislature's move in 2010 to adjust family premiums in the CHIP program by $40 a month. CMS did not approve it, citing MOE. Instead, HHS offered an option to raise premiums that would have amounted to about 50 cents per month on a typical premium.

Kansas has proposed to acquire the flexibility it needs to remake Medicaid in a two-track Section 1115 demonstration project. The first track will address authorities needed to implement KanCare, an integrated, person-centered care coordination model that will incorporate nearly all Medicaid and CHIP populations and services, including long term services and supports. The second track proposes a global waiver, more specifically an outcomes-based Medicaid and CHIP program under a per capita block grant, fundamentally redefining the federal-state relationship in Medicaid and providing a model for reform that honors the program's statutory goal of improving the health of Americans in the greatest need.

Louisiana

Obamacare is expected to cost Louisiana a total of $7 billion in additional state general funds over the next 10 years.

Obamacare will increase Medicaid rolls by 645,843 over the next 10 years at a cost of $3.69 billion in state general funds.

High costs of the IT systems needed to implement the expansions and the link to the Exchange (whether state-run or federal) are estimated to cost $162 million in state general funds.

Increase payments to primary care providers, increased utilization for physicians and hospitals are estimated to cost $2.6 billion in state general funds.

Maine

Maine's Medicaid program has experienced an increase in enrollment from 314,000 in June 2009 to 336,000 in June, 2010, and total spending in Maine's Medicaid program has increased by over one billion dollars since 2002. Over the last several years, Medicaid rates for healthcare providers have also been repeatedly cut to address the ongoing financial shortfalls in Medicaid as a result of increasing enrollment and utilization. As a result of these reductions, some Maine physicians have closed their practices to Medicaid patients significantly reducing access to primary care services for Medicaid beneficiaries. All of the above challenges will be exacerbated by ACA. As Maine struggles to confront a shortfall of more than $800 million in the next biennial budget and the requirement to adopt a balanced budget, it is imperative that the Governor and the Legislature have the necessary flexibility to comprehensively manage the Medicaid program and to make necessary changes to effectively reduce total spending in the program.

Mississippi

The overall cost to implement PPACA in Mississippi is estimated to be $1.7 billion over the next ten years, including an additional $443 million in year ten.

Nebraska

In addition, based upon preliminary professional consultant projections, the State of Nebraska estimates that it will cost anywhere from $61.4 million to $86.9 million to build a Health Insurance Exchange in Nebraska. Due to the changing nature of the health insurance exchange project and the instability of the federal government's promulgation of final rules and regulations, the State projects that a state exchange annual operating budget would be $17.5 million per year starting in 2016.

Nevada

In April of 2010, the Nevada Department of Health and Human Services estimated the General Fund impact of implementing the Affordable Care Act was $574 million from 2014 through 2019.

New Mexico

With the implementation of Obamacare, New Mexico is poised to add an additional 130,000 –

175,000 individuals to the Medicaid program with an additional cost of $300 million - $600 million between 2014 and 2019.

With the implementation of Obamacare, North Dakota's current estimate for additional Medicaid spending is $106 million over 10 years.

Ohio

The estimated cost to Ohio from the first year to 2019 is over $2.7 billion for Medicaid services. These estimates do not include the cost of increases in administration of the program. The long-term sustainability of the program is called into question, unless Ohio is given new options on how to manage the program.

Oklahoma

The Oklahoma Health Care Authority estimates that the Obamacare Medicaid expansion will cost an additional $4.6 billion in state and federal funding and will add 250,000 new Oklahoman's to the Medicaid rolls from 2014-2020.

Pennsylvania

Pennsylvania's Medicaid spending has doubled over the past ten years and it now comprises 31% of the state's budget. It has grown four times faster than K-12 spending, and nine times faster than transportation spending. Even before the healthcare bill passed, Medicaid has been on an unsustainable path. Under this law, these statistics will only get worse. Pennsylvania will see an additional 800,000 individuals on the Medicaid rolls adding a significant burden to the budget and taxpayers. As the Medicaid population continues to increase and state revenues continue to not keep pace, the mandates of the maintenance of effort requirement and the lack of any meaningful flexibility within the program will severely hamper virtually all other aspects of the state budget. States simply cannot afford Obamacare. Their budgets will be crushed by the Medicaid expansion that the federal establishment is forcing on them. Americans deserve a vibrant, robust, competitive and transparent health care system that puts patients and quality first, focuses on personal responsibility, not a large government takeover that shifts the costs from the federal government to state tax payers.

Medicaid enrollment will increase by 54% or 510,000 individuals in 2015 as a result of the Affordable Care Act. 176,000 of these persons will drop private insurance to go on Medicaid. The additional costs to state taxpayers between State Fiscal Year 2014 and State Fiscal Year 2020 ranges from $1.15 billion to $2.5 billion dollars depending on assumptions of participation rate and increases in physician fees resulting from physician shortages created by the new law.

South Dakota estimates it will cost at least $99.7 million in state funds through 2019 to comply with the Medicaid requirements of the PPACA.

This burden coupled with the inability to change other parts of the Medicaid program due to the MOE requirements will result in rate cuts to providers.

Providers that cannot absorb these cuts may stop taking people eligible for Medicaid, or may stop providing services altogether.

This would have a hugely detrimental effect on a very rural state, including citizens that rely on Medicaid for their health care and communities that may see their health care providers leave or quit. These unintended consequences of the MOE provisions in the PPACA are counter-productive of its larger goal to help Americans get access to the health care they need.

Tennessee's Medicaid program is continuing to experience budgetary challenges in the coming fiscal year, as state revenues continue their slow climb back to pre-recession levels. Unfortunately, the MOE requirements limit the flexibility needed to make important changes to the program as we deal with such issues. For instance, TennCare could save $16 million alone just by modifying nursing facility level of care requirements that would bring Tennessee in line with the criteria of other states and rebalance its long-term care system in order to serve more people with lesser levels of need in more cost-effective home and community-based settings while targeting the more expensive long-term care services to persons with higher acuity of need. However, we have yet to receive approval to make such a change.

At a time when Tennessee is already facing budget difficulties and the ACA is expected to cost the state in excess of $1.5 billion over five years, we must have the flexibility necessary to make common sense adjustments to the program.

Texas

Medicaid is consistently one of the biggest expenses all states face. It accounts for a quarter of the state budget in Texas. The Affordable Care Act expands Medicaid without reforming the program.

ACA will increase Medicaid enrollment in Texas by nearly 2 million people and cost the state $27 billion over 10 years.

States have received little federal guidance on key ACA provisions, including the primary care rate increases which is required starting in 2013. Additionally, guidance is needed on Medicaid Benchmark Benefits, eligibility changes, FMAP methodology and numerous other provisions.

Lack of timely guidance makes it impossible for states to effectively plan for the mushrooming Medicaid caseloads that the law will create. HHSC needs final, detailed guidance from the federal government to determine the full impact of certain ACA provisions on the Texas Medicaid and CHIP programs, and to make federally-required changes.

ACA does not recognize states' unique needs and prevents each state from tailoring its Medicaid and CHIP programs in accordance with the intent of its elected and appointed representatives.

Utah

The Insurance Department has been tracking hours of work to account for the additional burdens imposed by the ACA. During FY11, we are able to account for over 5,700 hours, equating to approximately $182,000 in personnel costs. Included in the estimate is time spent on rate review which has been supported by a grant from HHS, reimbursing the department $112,757 in personnel costs. In addition to the above, numerous hours have been incurred by the Commissioner or our actuary

Virginia

The Commonwealth of Virginia has estimated the Medicaid cost of federal health reform to the State to be between $1.5 and $2.2 billion through 2022. These estimates have not been updated since August 2010, but because of the length of the recession and the current pace of economic growth, along with other developments in our understanding of the full impact of PPACA, the higher end of the cost range seems more realistic. For example, in a study completed for Medicaid Health Plans of America, Milliman, Inc. has estimated that the PPACA-mandated tax on health insurance companies, which did not exclude Medicaid health plans, will cost Virginia, a heavily managed Medicaid state, approximately $430 - $500 million through 2023; this was not included in Virginia's 2010 estimates of the PPACA cost, meaning this $430 - $500 million would be in addition to the $1.5 to $2.2 billion already estimated. Virginia is in the process of re-estimating impacts in preparation for the 2012 Medicaid forecast due in the fall of 2012. At that time, the estimates should better reflect the current economic environment in Virginia, and reflect a better understanding of the PPACA impact based on subsequent analysis and federal guidance that was not available for the 2010 estimates."

Wisconsin

If implemented, the PPACA will force a heavy financial burden upon the people of Wisconsin through increased health insurance premiums, the expansion of Medicaid, and a new entitlement that will create new inequities among working families. Moreover, much of the new spending will not be used to increase coverage in Wisconsin, which has already achieved the levels of insurance that is aspired to under PPACA. Public dollars will simply displace private dollars at a higher cost.

New estimates from the Obama Administration and the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office (CBO) demonstrate that Medicaid enrollment will be higher than previously estimated. The Wisconsin Department of Health Services (DHS) believes that increased enrollment among currently eligible individuals and retention of higher income children due to Maintenance of Effort (MOE) requirements will drive up the cost to the state. However, the direct burden on the state budget remains uncertain. New eligibility rules will result in some individuals migrating into and out of Medicaid. Rules on federal matching rates that are critical to our fiscal analysis have not been finalized.

More than 750,000 childless adults, parents, caretakers, and children are already enrolled in Wisconsin Medicaid programs. There will be no additional federal assistance for the vast majority of these individuals and future enrollees. Some additional federal assistance will apply only to a relatively small number of individuals. Whether the federal government will "buy out" the state share of some eligibility groups is unknown at this time. It will matter little to taxpayers whether the costs will count as federal or state expenditures. Increased federal control over the management of the Medicaid program is stifling innovation and threatens to unnecessarily drive up costs.

Wyoming

The costs of maintaining our Medicaid program are fast becoming a serious threat to our state general funds. The 2013-2014 biennial budget for Medicaid in Wyoming includes $560 million in state general fund dollars. This is just the cost to provide care to the current population of approximately 76,000 enrollees. A study of Wyoming impacts from PPACA conducted by The Lewin Group in 2010 estimates an additional 31,000 enrollees due to the Medicaid expansion in 2014 – an increase of over 40%. It is difficult to estimate what the fiscal impact of this huge bolus of new enrollees will be. The State legislature commissioned a Medicaid Cost Study in 2011 and we expect findings in mid-2012. We do know, however, that the cost of implementing a new eligibility and enrollment system for Medicaid will cost over $3.5 million in state general funds after the 90/10 federal match.

The larger and more detrimental impact of the implementation of PPACA is likely to be to our private health insurance markets. An actuarial study of our small group and individual markets conducted by Gorman Actuarial, LLC in 2011 indicates that we can expect premiums to go up an average of 30% to 40% in the individual market due solely to new insurance regulations effective in 2014. When you add the projected impact of higher morbidity of new entrants into the market and essential benefit mandates, we can expect overall 40% to 60% increases in premiums in the individual market.

Given that Wyoming already has a higher percentage of small employers that self-insure than other states, it's not unreasonable to expect a number of small employers to stop providing insured coverage and either move their employees to the individual market or to self-insure to avoid regulation. During recent town hall meetings, a number of small employers indicated that it would be cheaper for them to pay the PPACA penalties for not providing coverage than it will be to continue to provide coverage. The Lewin Group estimates a net loss of over 8,000 covered lives in the employer sponsored insurance market.

With all the changes in PPACA, Gorman Actuarial estimates over 41,000 people in Wyoming will remain uninsured by 2016. This represents about half of the 83,000 people currently uninsured in our state.

GOP Govs Request Expedited Review of Healthcare

Lawsuits

28 Republican governors sent a letter to President Obama today requesting him to direct the United States Department of Justice to support an expedited appellate process for the pending healthcare lawsuits to reach the United States Supreme Court as soon as possible.

A copy of the letter is attached.

The letter states, in part:

“This request for expedited review takes no position on PPACA, but seeks only to obtain the Supreme Court’s final determination as soon as possible.

Given the daunting and costly financial and regulatory burdens that our states and the private sector will face in implementing PPACA over the coming years, particularly during this unprecedented budgetary time, public interest requires expediting a final resolution of the litigation to give certainty as soon as possible. We should not endure years of litigation in the circuit courts, when the Supreme Court can promptly provide finality. This resolution can help prevent the states and the private sector from undertaking potentially unnecessary measures and expenses. More importantly, our businesses, health care providers, and citizens of our great nation need to know as soon as possible whether all or part of the law will be upheld or stricken, so they know their options and obligations.”

Governor Bob McDonnell Delivers Weekly Republican Address

'Republican governors are balancing their budgets on time, without tax increases, and without deficit spending.'

RICHMOND, VA – Governor Bob McDonnell (R-Virginia) released the following Weekly Republican Address. The address is available in both audio and video format and is embargoed until 6:00 a.m. ET, Saturday, February 11, 2012.

Audio of the address is available here
Video of the address will be available here

Full transcript of Governor McDonnell's Address:

"Hi, I'm Bob McDonnell, Governor of Virginia, and I hope you're enjoying a great weekend with family and friends.

"The second weekend in February is noteworthy for two reasons.

"For one, sadly, it's the first weekend without any football since August and depending on who your team is that could be either a good or bad thing!

"Second, this weekend marks the second straight year that we find ourselves waiting, again, for the annual release of the President's budget.

"While federal law mandates that the President release his budget on the first Monday of every February, the Administration has extended that period another seven days. Of course that one week delay from the White House pales in comparison to the nearly three-year holdup in the Democratic Senate. In that body, Senator Harry Reid's majority hasn't passed a budget in over 1000 days. Now, the Senator is refusing to even consider a budget on the floor. This is an astounding failure of leadership and management of the nation's finances.

"Harry Reid may not want to act, but we will still get a budget from the President in less than 48 hours. While we don't know the specifics of that budget, we can reasonably predict a lot from the President's previews and his past policy decisions.

"We can expect the President's budget to make private sector job creation tougher because it will raise taxes and continue policies like Obamacare that are making it harder for small businesses to hire—at a time when millions of Americans remain out of work.

"We can expect the President's budget to ignore the growing entitlement crisis in this country. It won't protect the security of Medicare and Social Security and, absent major reforms, it'll continue down the road to bankrupting these programs in the years ahead.

"Now we can expect the President's budget to again fail to address the $15 trillion, and growing, national debt—in fact, it will probably make it worse. With no boldness or leadership or setting priorities, the Obama approach is simply more debt, more taxes, and more blaming others.

"In short, we can expect that this will not be a proactive budget built to promote fiscal responsibility and future prosperity. Rather it appears we'll see a bloated budget that doubles down on the failed policies of the past.

"Republicans know that we can do better.

"We know that every day, hardworking taxpayers, families, and business owners balance their budgets on time, without excuses. They live within their means by setting priorities and making tough choices.

"They want, and they deserve, a smaller and smarter government that does the same.

"But they aren't seeing that in Washington D.C.

"But they are increasingly witnessing this common sense, responsible, conservative approach to governing in the growing number of state capitals with Republican leadership.

"While Washington D.C. borrows at a staggering $3.5 billion a day just to keep the lights on, Republican governors have closed $65 billion in deficits the past two fiscal years alone.

"Here in Virginia, we closed $6 billion in budget shortfalls without raising taxes and produced nearly $1 billion in surpluses the past two years, by putting new money into transportation and colleges and universities.

"In Nebraska, Governor Dave Heineman proposed $326 million in tax cuts.

"In New Jersey, Governor Chris Christie is pushing to cut the state income tax by 10 percent.

"And Republican governors in Florida, Georgia, Iowa, New Mexico and South Carolina are all working to reform their tax systems to make their states more competitive.

"Republican governors are balancing their budgets on time, without tax increases, and without deficit spending.

"And their hard work to make government more efficient and effective is helping to create the environment in which Americans can use their God-given talents to compete, grow, innovate and pursue the American Dream.

"In fact, in the most recent CNBC rankings of the most business friendly states in the country, 11 of the top 15 states have Republican governors.

"And Republican led states are outpacing Democratic counterparts when it comes to job creation.

"Seven of the 10 states with the lowest unemployment rates have Republican governors, and in 2011, states with Republican governors added 912,000 new jobs.

"A true and lasting economic recovery will not come from government. It will come from the hard work, talents, and vision of the American people.

"Republicans believe that it is our duty to help create an environment in which private sector jobs can be best created and sustained. And we know that when we limit government to free up capital, and reduce onerous regulations and litigation, we spur private sector job creation.

"In short, we believe the role of government in an economic recovery is simple:

"At every level, governments should pass budgets on time that fund core functions like education, transportation, and public safety well, and don't waste precious taxpayer dollars.

"And, at every level, governments should enact policies that ensure our private sector job creators, small business owners, and entrepreneurs can compete against the world, create jobs, and innovate.

"The American people can out-compete and out-work anyone, anywhere. All they need is the opportunity.

"Republican leaders in our state capitals are creating those opportunities for success and they are getting results.

"Now, we need that kind of leadership in the U.S. Senate and the White House.

"Thanks for your time, and have a great weekend."

Veto Avoids Saddling State Taxpayers with Huge, Open-Ended Exchange Costs Without Comparative Details of Alternatives from the Federal Government

Trenton, NJ – Continuing a careful and thoughtful approach that appropriately considers the best interests of the state’s residents and taxpayers, Governor Chris Christie today vetoed legislation that would have begun to establish a State-based health care exchange in New Jersey in line with the federal Affordable Care Act. Though December 14, 2012 is the deadline for states to decide whether to establish a State-based Exchange, the federal government has failed to provide critical information and to answer basic questions about the operation and implementation of each of the options provided, making any decision made now hasty, incomplete, and perhaps fiscally detrimental to the taxpayers of New Jersey.

Governor Christie has consistently stated that once legal issues surrounding the Affordable Care Act were settled, New Jersey would comply with the federal mandate, but only in the most responsible way among the available alternatives. The creation of health care exchanges is provided for in the Affordable Care Act as the vehicle for eligible individuals and businesses to access care, with three exchange options being given to states: Federally Facilitated, Partnership, or State-based. Though the federal government’s deadline for states to select the type of exchange they will participate in is nearly here, New Jersey and all other states still await substantial federal guidance on all three options.

“We will comply with the Affordable Care Act, but only in the most efficient and cost effective way for New Jersey taxpayers. Such an important decision as how to best move forward for New Jerseyans can only be understood and reasonably made when fairly and fully compared to the overall value of the other options. Until the federal government gives us all the necessary information, any other action than this would be fiscally irresponsible,” said Governor Christie. “Thus far, we lack such critical information from the federal government. I will not ask New Jerseyans to commit today to a State-based Exchange when the federal government cannot tell us what it will cost, how that cost compares to other options, and how much control they will give the states over this option that comes at the cost of our state's taxpayers."

Governor Christie has previously and continually cited the importance – both from a fiscal and health care policy perspective – of having additional clarity and guidance from the federal government on a host of critical issues related to implementation of the Affordable Care Act at the state level. Absent this critical information about cost, cost-sharing, scope of control, and the federal rulemaking landscape, New Jersey cannot fairly evaluate the best or most fiscally prudent path to follow for its residents.

"Financing the building and implementation of a State-based Exchange would be an extraordinarily costly endeavor," continued Governor Christie. "While the federal government has enabled states to apply for grant funding to cover some of the initial costs of such an endeavor, the total price for such a program has never been quantified, and is likely to be onerous. Without knowing the full scope of which Exchange option would be most beneficial and cost efficient for New Jerseyans, it would be irresponsible to force such a bill on our citizens."

In addition to the unknown cost and operation of a State-based Exchange, Governor Christie also cited the following areas or issues of other Exchange implementation options that lack complete information:

- Costs in Federally Facilitated or Partnership Exchanges: While "user fees" paid by insurers have been identified as a financing mechanism for Federally Facilitated or Partnership Exchanges, only late last week did the federal government offer a preliminary glimpse as to what those costs might include. Questions linger on the sharing of user-fees in Partnership Exchanges.
- Federal Exchange Operations: The federal government has yet to present a structured blueprint for the design and operation of a Federally Facilitated Exchange and the technical details for its linkage to each state.
- Federal Rulemaking: The last several weeks have triggered a restart of proposed federal regulations relating to the Affordable Care Act, guidance has come from Washington at an erratic pace, and there exists no predictable plan for future rulemaking.

In vetoing the legislation, the Governor also made clear that New Jersey's right to further consideration on the matter is reserved for later in the implementation process, as the federal government has provided states with the flexibility to amend Exchange selection in subsequent years. If and when additional information becomes available to make a more complete and fully informed determination for the people of New Jersey, it will be welcomed and considered.

Primary sponsors of S-2135 include Senators Nia Gill and Joseph Vitale and Assemblymembers Upendra Chivukula, Herb Conaway, Ruben Ramos, and Troy Singleton.

A copy of the Governor's veto message can be found attached to the release.

Governor Nathan Deal
Office of the Governor

Why Gov. Deal refused to establish a state-based exchange

Georgia, alongside 16 other states to date, is defaulting to Federal Exchange. Gov. Deal will not commit state taxpayers to a plan with no flexibility and many unknowns.

Deal sought guidance from the federal government on establishing exchanges and received only vague responses.

- In a letter dated November 9th, Secretary Sebelius stated, "We intend to issue further guidance to assist you in the very near future."
- Deal wants to know... Will enough people sign up so the costs could be reasonably allocated via assessment or user fees? If not, would general state revenue be required to subsidize the exchange? Some states are estimating annual exchange operational costs to be in the $30M-$60M range.

Georgia has no interest in spending our tax dollars on an exchange that is state-based in name only. States are not granted a full spectrum of choices, but rather a limited set of decisions within federal guardrails.

Qualified Health Plans embody lack of flexibility:

- Plans must meet federal guidelines of what meets "qualified" coverage, limiting what plans can be offered in a state-based exchange.
- Deal believes that restrictions on what the exchanges can and can't offer render meaningless the suggestion that Georgia could tailor an exchange that best fits the unique needs of its population.
- The fed's blanket requirements have the potential to cause significant disruption in a state's insurance market.
- Obamacare does not allow insurance exchanges to be truly private, despite the fact that evidence shows exchanges must be run like a business to be successful long term.

Feds to control SHOP Exchanges:

- The feds will limit the types of products that can be sold on the SHOP Exchange; only qualified health plans may be offered.
- The federal government will oversee and approve the financing and operating plans for the SHOP Exchanges.

- Deal believes a market-based approach could serve as a useful tool for Georgia's small businesses, but federal guidelines forbid that.

Feds to control Medicaid/CHIP Eligibility:

- States have always administered eligibility determination for state Medicaid and CHIP programs.
- Deal says Georgia will maintain that responsibility and has no intention whatsoever of letting the federal government enroll individuals into our program without state approval, even though the feds have offered to do that for us.

Since many of the details surrounding a State Partnership Exchange are still unavailable, it too is not a viable option.

Deal outlines challenges posed by Medicaid expansion

Georgia will opt out of the Obamacare Medicaid expansion unless Congress moves to give states more flexibility. Gov. Deal would be more in favor of a block-grant type approach giving states the ability to expand coverage without stressing state treasuries.

The following outlines what Georgia would face if it expanded Medicaid as called for in Obamacare:

Ballooning costs

- By 2014 (6 months cost – effective January 1, 2014)
  - State Funds Cost: $76.3 million
  - Total Funds (State + Federal) Cost: $1.9 billion
- By 2015
  - State Funds Cost: $219.8 million
  - Total Funds (State + Federal) Cost: $3.7 billion
- 10-year total (2014-2023)
  - State Funds Cost: $4.5 billion
  - Total Funds (State + Federal) Cost: $40.8 billion
- Constitutionally bound to balance the budget — a common-sense constraint — Georgia cannot afford Obamacare.
- Deal thinks that the proposed Medicaid expansion forces states to choose between job-killing tax increases and immense cuts that could dramatically impact public education and public safety.

Increasing rolls

- An additional 620,000 people would be enrolled in Medicaid in 2014, growing to almost 695,000 by 2023.
- The addition of 620,000 new people in 2014 represents a 34 percent increase in Medicaid rolls.
- Obamacare will increase the percent of Georgia's on Medicaid from 17.6 percent today to 24.2 percent in 2014, meaning nearly 1 in 4 Georgians will be on Medicaid.
- These numbers include both children and adults currently eligible, but not enrolled, newly eligible populations and enrollment due to employers dropping coverage.
- Deal says that regardless of if we expand, the state will see an increased cost of approximately $40 million in 2014 due to this "woodwork effect" and other Obamacare provisions.

Feds' questionable promises

- The federal government promises to pay the full cost of the new enrollees for Medicaid for three years, but given the federal budget situation, it's questionable it can fulfill this obligation.
- The breakdown: 100 percent from 2014 to 2016, 95 percent in 2017, 94 percent in 2018, 93 percent in 2019, and, 90 percent in the out years.
- Regardless of if our federal government does live up to its end of the bargain, there is NO money in state treasuries to cover our part.
- Even before the expansion, Georgia struggled to pay the ever-increasing price tag for Medicaid, particularly as the recession has pummeled state revenues for years.
- Deal notes that for the 2013 and 2014 budget years, we face a $700 million shortfall in our Medicaid program — and that's long before we have to start paying a 10 percent share on more than 620,000 new enrollees.

HATCH: INDEPENDENT CRS REPORT CONFIRMS HHS HAS AUTHORITY TO WAIVE BURDENSOME MEDICAID REQUIREMENTS IN NEW HEALTH LAW

Calls on Secretary Kathleen Sebelius During Committee Hearing to Heed to the Calls of Governors and Do Away With Unreasonable Regulations

WASHINGTON –U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), Ranking Member of the Senate Finance Committee, today called on Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius to heed to the calls of Governors representing cash-strapped states and waive the onerous maintenance-of-effort (MOE) restrictions that were included in the stimulus and in the new health law.

“The Medicaid mandates included in ObamaCare are crippling state budgets, encroaching on their flexibility to lower Medicaid spending, and tying states hands in targeting scarce resources to the most vulnerable beneficiaries,” said Hatch, who has led the charge against the unreasonable MOE restrictions and the expansion of Medicaid in the new health law. “Despite repeated calls from our Governors to waive such burdensome regulations, Secretary Sebelius has turned a blind eye to the fiscal fiasco the maintenance of effort requirements have generated. An independent CRS Report now confirms that the Secretary does, indeed, have the authority to do away with the requirements and it is incumbent upon the Department of Health and Human Services to act now and heed to the Governors call for help.”

The $2.6 trillion health law included maintenance-of-effort restrictions on states that forces them to maintain expanded eligibility requirements. Given the states’ $175 billion collective budget crisis, a majority of Governors have requested relief from the maintenance-of-effort restrictions. These regulations have hampered state efforts to balance their budgets and forced them to make cuts to education, law enforcement, and other state priorities.

Secretary Sebelius has repeatedly said she does not have the authority to authorize the waivers.

Despite such claims, during a hearing with Secretary Sebelius examining ObamaCare today, Senator Hatch cited an independent Congressional Research Services (CRS) report that confirmed the Secretary has the authority, if she chooses to use it, to waive such burdensome regulations.

Specifically, the report found:

- “States may apply for waivers under various provisions of the Social Security Act, including... the demonstration project waiver under Section 1115 of the Social Security Act (‘section 1115’).

- Section 1115, the subject of this analysis, allows the Secretary to waive the requirements of specific sections of the Social Security Act, including section 1902, for any 'experimental, pilot or demonstration project which, in the judgment of the Secretary, is likely to assist in promoting the objectives of title... XIX of this chapter... in a state or states.'
- The Secretary may waive the specified provisions 'to the extent and for the period he finds necessary to enable such State or States to carry out such project.'
- The Secretary's discretion to approve demonstration projects under Section 1115 is broad, and the courts have been reluctant to circumscribe the Secretary's authority under this provision.
- Congress placed the PPACA MOE requirements, described above, in section 1902(a) of the Social Security Act. The Secretary has the authority, when she chooses to grant a section 1115 demonstration project waiver to a state, to waive compliance with the provisions of section 1902... In either case, it is likely that the courts would accord considerable deference to the Secretary's interpretation of the provisions in question, and uphold the Secretary's determination as 'a reasonable interpretation made by the administrator of an agency.'"

Declaration of Independence, Not Dependence

July 3, 2012

As we celebrate our nation's birthday this week, it is important to remember and teach our children the Founding Fathers were declaring our independence, not creating a culture of dependence. (They also protested unfair taxation, but that is another story for another day.) This is an especially important lesson, given the Supreme Court's ruling last week on Obamacare.

The ruling was both a disappointment and a blow to our freedoms. As we get further away from the ruling, reality will dawn on people, and we will be right back to where we were. The American people did not want or approve of Obamacare then, and they do not now. Americans oppose it because it will decrease the quality of our health care, raise taxes by over $500 billion, cut Medicare by over $500 billion, and, with a $1.76 trillion price tag, break the bank.

The President promised us our premiums would go down $2,500 per family per year if we passed his reform; family premiums increased 9 percent last year. President Obama promised us we could keep our plans and our doctors; as many as 20 million Americans will lose their employer-provided health plans. President Obama promised us he would "protect Medicare;" Medicare's Chief Actuary says the Obamacare cuts to providers are "unrealistic" and not sustainable, and millions of seniors will lose access to Medicare Advantage plans and benefits. The President promised us he wouldn't raise taxes on middle class families making less than $250,000 a year; Obamacare raises taxes on health plans, medical devices, prescription drugs, and employers, and 75% of the individual mandate tax will fall on the middle class. Over 20 million individuals will remain uninsured, and health care spending will be higher than it would have been if the law had not passed. President Obama campaigned against Hillary Clinton's individual mandate and John McCain's tax increase on generous health care insurance, and included both in Obamacare.

Amazingly, facing the greatest economic recession since the Great Depression, President Obama chose to create a new entitlement program when we cannot afford the ones we already have. Republicans like to go on television and say we are borrowing from our children's and grandchildren's future. We can throw those talking points out; we are hurting ourselves now. You know we are in trouble when the German Finance Minister rebuffs President Obama and basically tells him to clean up his own mess before offering advice to others. Even the Europeans feel they have the moral high ground to tell us to tackle our own debt problems; that's like the town drunk telling you that you have a drinking problem.

Opposition to Obamacare will escalate for one simple reason; Obamacare is the most unpopular when people are thinking about it. Then-Speaker Pelosi said they had to pass the 2,000 plus page bill so we could find out what is in it. The President promised it would become more popular the more people learned about it. Yet, there has never been one day a majority of the American people wanted this massive government overreach that was forced on us by a party-line vote.

The Supreme Court should have protected our constitutional freedoms, but remember, it was the President who forced this law on us. I congratulate the Supreme Court on one thing; they were far more honest about Obamacare than President Obama was. They rightly have called it what it is – a tax.

The Supreme Court has done something new; they have declared that President Obama can use the taxation power of the federal government to compel behavior. The federal government can even tax the lack of behavior. What's next? Taxes on people who refuse to drive Chevy Volts or eat tofu? This is ridiculous.

In fact, the Court actually rewrote Obamacare to make it fit under the taxation clause. I don't know how one defines legislating from the bench, but this seems pretty close. The Readers Digest version of the Supreme Court's decisions last week is this – The Government can require proof of insurance, but not proof of citizenship.

Here is the big picture situation in America today. Success used to be measured by how many people we could get off the government dole, but now, under President Obama, we measure success by how many people we can get on government programs. Indeed, food stamp rolls have increased by 70 percent since 2007, and yet the government is spending millions of taxpayer dollars on advertising and encouraging parties to enroll even more. There used to be a stigma to relying on the government, but now it's celebrated. We have it 100 percent backwards in America today. We should celebrate people getting off food stamps, off Medicaid, and off government health care. The bottom line is that Obamacare eats into the spirit of independence that has made America great in the first place, and if we don't repeal it soon, we will have more people riding in the cart than pulling the cart. We are at an inflection point in our nation's history. We have to decide whether we want to revive our economy by growing the private sector or expanding the public sector, to continue our culture of self-reliance versus a culture of dependency, to provide our children with opportunity or a sense of entitlement, and to pursue the American model or give in to the European model.

Here is the crazy part – the federal government cannot pay for our existing entitlement programs. We have to reform those or they will crumble, and yet President Obama has created another one we cannot afford. Democrats are already attacking Republicans for turning down free health care. Here is a news flash. All of this government spending is not free. It is our money they are spending; it is our future they are destroying; and it is really not that far into the future. The credit card is maxed out, and the bank of China is closed. I have vowed not to implement Obamacare in Louisiana, especially creating the exchange and expanding Medicaid, because this November we're going to elect a new President and a new Congress who will repeal and replace the terrible law. In Louisiana, our health department estimates the Medicaid expansion alone will cost our taxpayers $3.7 billion over the first ten years of implementation and will take 187,000 new enrollees off private insurance.

The Court's decision is a reminder that elections do in fact matter. The left wing won the elections in 2006 and 2008, giving liberals full control of the House, Senate, and the White House. They used this power to force through a government takeover of health care that the public didn't even want.

Now, the American people have an opportunity to reverse this course in November by electing Governor Romney and a Republican Senate. We have to stop complaining about the Supreme Court and deal with the real problem – which is President Obama. Obamacare has now been unmasked for what it really is, a massive tax increase to pay for a massive new federal entitlement program that we do not want and cannot afford. If you are a small business owner, a middle-class taxpayer, or if you are worried about what Obamacare will do to the quality of your health care, or if you are worried about the fact that our government is headed towards insolvency – you have only one recourse – make President Obama a one-termer. Elections do matter; this one matters a lot.

Re: HHS letter extending blueprint deadline for state-based exchanges

Today, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) announced that the deadlines for states seeking to operate either a State-based or Partnership Exchange under the Affordable Care Act have been extended. According to the new guidance, which is attached, states electing to operate a State-based Exchange must still send a Declaration Letter by November 16th, but the Blueprint is not due until December 14, 2012. States electing to operate a State Partnership Exchange can submit their Declaration Letter and Blueprint on a rolling basis up to February 15, 2013.

Re: New Information on Health Insurance Exchanges

On November 29, 2011, CMS released Frequently Asked Questions (FAQ) to address the many questions states have had as they consider their options related to health insurance exchange implementation. The FAQ signals important CMS policy positions in a number of key areas regarding flexibility for states to tailor arrangements to reflect state practices, traditional functions (e.g., activities of state insurance departments) and preferences; options for eligibility determination in a number of areas; the operation of the federal exchange; several financial issues; and error rate determination and related liability issues.

The FAQ also addresses a number of concerns raised by NGA in its November 2, 2011 letter to Secretary Sebelius. Rather than emphasize a partnership model, CMS has promised greater flexibility for states under both the state-based and federally-facilitated exchanges. Specifically, under the proposal:

- States will not be required to cede Medicaid eligibility determination to the federal government. CMS intends to modify its original proposal to provide states with additional options for eligibility determination under both the state-based and federally-facilitated exchanges. Under this plan, states could decide to have their Medicaid and CHIP agencies execute some or all functions under an agreement, including Medicaid and CHIP eligibility, through the use of federally-managed services.
- States may opt to assign certain functions of eligibility determination to the federal government. State-based exchanges may use federally-managed services to make determinations for advance payments of the premium tax credit, cost-sharing reductions and exemptions from the individual responsibility requirement. Under the federally-facilitated exchange, a state may either make final Medicaid and CHIP determinations or allow the federally-facilitated exchange to make Medicaid and CHIP eligibility determinations using its state eligibility rules and standards.
- State-based exchanges may obtain funding to establish new state exchange functions until December 31, 2014. Grants are available until December 31, 2014 for approved and permissible activities to establish a state-based exchange, to build functions that a state elects to operate under a partnership exchange, and to support state activities to build interfaces with a federally-facilitated exchange.
- Fully state-based exchanges are not anticipated to incur charges for use of the federally-managed data services hub. A CMS-established data hub will support information exchanges between states (exchanges, Medicaid and CHIP agencies) and relevant federal agencies (including agencies other than CMS). The scope and availability of its services and its treatment of charges for fiscal year 2014 are yet to be determined. However, CMS does not anticipate charging fully state-based exchanges for the use of the hub.

The actual implications of many of the points conveyed in the FAQ will depend on formal regulatory guidance, sub-regulatory materials, and agreements.

NGA's Health and Human Services Committee will host a meeting for states to discuss this information on Wednesday, December 7 at 2:00 pm EST in the Governors room. The meeting will also be conference call accessible at: 877-261-8991, passcode: 6010576.

A copy of the FAQ sheet and additional information provided by CMS is available at http://cciio.cms.gov/resources/files/Files%202011282011/exchangeqa\_11\_29\_11.pdf.

Please see below (or click here for a PDF) for a memo to editorial boards from Speaker Boehner's press office on the House-passed budget for FY 2012, The Path to Prosperity, and its focus on creating jobs, cutting spending, and preserving Medicare for current and future generations.

MEMORANDUM

TO: EDITORIAL BOARD MEMBERS
FROM: SPEAKER BOEHNER'S PRESS OFFICE
DATE: APRIL 28, 2011
RE: THE PATH TO PROSPERITY

On April 15, 2011, the Republican-led U.S. House of Representatives adopted a budget – authored by Chairman Paul Ryan (R-WI) and entitled “The Path to Prosperity” – that will help boost our economy and create new jobs, lift the crushing burden of debt that threatens our future, and preserve critical health and retirement programs for America's seniors.

Despite the onslaught of misleading attacks from the Democratic Party, the most recent USA Today/Gallup survey says “Republicans hold a 12-percentage-point edge over Democrats as the party better able to handle the budget, and a five-point edge on the economy in general.” The reason is simple: Republicans have put forth a credible budget that honestly addresses the economic and fiscal challenges our country faces. In contrast, President Obama put forth a budget in February that was widely-panned as not serious, and gave a speech several weeks ago that again failed to fully address our nation’s problems.

Here is a quick comparison between the GOP budget (H. Con. Res. 34) and the plans outlined by President Obama:

THE GOP BUDGET WILL BOOST OUR ECONOMY & HELP CREATE NEW AMERICAN JOBS: The GOP budget is focused on helping end the uncertainty facing job creators so they can start hiring again by cutting spending, eliminating $800 billion in tax increases imposed by President Obama’s health care law, and preventing the $1.5 trillion tax hike proposed in his budget. It creates a simpler, less burdensome tax code and lowers rates for families and small businesses by “weeding from the tax code numerous tax breaks and loopholes,” according to the Associated Press. It also repeals the president’s health care law (and all of its tax hikes, mandates, and excessive regulations) and removes barriers to energy production that will help lower gas prices and create new jobs.

- The president’s budget would destroy jobs and create more uncertainty by imposing dramatic tax hikes on job creators. James Pethokoukis with Reuters says the president’s proposed tax hikes amount to “$2 trillion in new taxes over 12 years.”
- Analysis by the House Budget Committee found the White House “included the new tax increases associated with the health care bill” in its budget. Economist Diana Furchtgott-Roth says the health care law’s tax hikes and penalties discourage small businesses from hiring. She says, “Firms with fewer than 50 workers won’t want to grow, and firms with around 60 to 70 workers will be trying to shrink to 50 workers to cut costs. Low-skill workers will be the worst affected.”
- In testimony before the House Budget Committee, former Director of the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office (CBO) Douglas Holtz-Eakin said “cutting spending is a pro-growth policy move,” and that “controlling federal spending growth” is essential to help create new jobs.
- When it comes to helping the economy, a Democratic polling firm found that independents prefer “reducing the deficit through spending cuts” to tax hikes by a margin of 50 – 39 percent.

THE GOP BUDGET WILL CUT SPENDING & PUT US ON A PATH TO PAY DOWN OUR DEBT: The Path to Prosperity cuts government spending by $6.2 trillion over the next decade. The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office \(CBO\) confirms that the GOP plan balances the budget and puts us on a path to pay down our debt over time. It also eliminates hundreds of duplicative government programs, maintains the Republican ban on pork-barrel earmarks, and ends the taxpayer bailouts of financial institutions (including Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the government mortgage giants at the heart of our economic crisis).

- Alan Simpson and Erskine Bowles – co-chairmen of President Obama’s deficit commission – said the GOP budget “incorporates many of the proposals included in the Commission report,” and “is a serious, honest, straightforward approach to addressing our nation's enormous fiscal challenges.”
- The president’s budget locks in the failed “stimulus” spending binge and adds more than $9 trillion to the debt over the next 10 years. Stanford economist John B. Taylor says federal spending was 18.2% of GDP in the year 2000 and 19.6% in 2007. “But in the three years since 2009 it's jumped to an average of 24.4%,” and the president's budget “proposed to make that spending binge permanent.”
- President Obama has also asked Congress to raise the debt limit without serious spending cuts or budget reforms. A new survey by Resurgent Republic found that “voters overwhelmingly oppose increasing the debt limit unless strong conditions” and “substantial spending cuts” are attached.
- A recent CNN survey shows that – when “dealing with the tough choices involved both in cutting programs to reduce the budget deficit and still maintaining needed federal programs” – independents prefer the Republican approach by a margin of 49 – 34 percent.

THE GOP BUDGET WILL PROTECT & PRESERVE CRITICAL HEALTH & RETIREMENT PROGRAMS:

Under The Path to Prosperity, there will be no changes and no disruptions to benefits for Americans over the age of 55, and future beneficiaries will have access to the same kinds of options as Members of Congress. The GOP budget ensures that lower-income Americans get more support and that the costs of junk lawsuits are not passed on to consumers in the form of higher prices. It stops Washington from raiding Medicare to pay for other costly programs and eliminates the Independent Payment Advisory Board (IPAB), a “rationing board” created by ObamaCare. It also ends the one-size-fits-all approach of Medicaid and gives states more flexibility to meet the needs of their residents. Bottom line: this plan saves programs like Medicare for current and future generations of Americans.

- The president’s budget does nothing, guaranteeing benefit cuts for seniors. FactCheck.org reported that “if nothing is done, when those trust funds are exhausted, benefits would have to be cut by 22 percent in 2037, and more each year after that, according to the most recent report of the system’s trustees. By 2084, the system will generate only enough revenue to pay for 75 percent of promised benefit levels.”
- Analysis by the nonpartisan CBO shows – if we do nothing – Medicare will be bankrupt within 10 years. A report by the trustees for Medicare says “[w]ithout corrective legislation... the assets of the [Medicare] trust fund would be exhausted within the next 7 to 19 years.”
- The president would also rely on the IPAB – an unelected “rationing board” – to force hundreds of billions of dollars in cuts in addition to the hundreds of billions in Medicare cuts Democrats used to finance ObamaCare. The Wall Street Journal says this will lead to “the political rationing of care for the elderly, as now occurs in Britain,” and many doctors and hospitals may “drop out of Medicare” altogether.

- Despite the best efforts of Democrats to demonize the GOP budget, a CBS News/New York Times survey “reported that a plurality of Americans actually approve of GOP Rep. Paul Ryan's Medicare reforms.”
- A new national survey by Gallup says “[p]luralities of middle-aged Americans as well as those 65 and older prefer Ryan's plan to Obama's,” with seniors preferring The Path to Prosperity by a 48-42 margin.

SCOPE OF WORK/OFFEROR'S DUTIES

Assess potential impacts of substantive options on the insurance market. The vendor should be prepared to advise the State on the qualitative and quantitative impact of various options around these major policy decisions. At a minimum, this should include:

- Statewide survey of existing insurance carriers about aspects of their product lines and plans;
- Existing state and federal regulations;
- Best methods to identify/certify qualified health plans for the exchange
- Consideration of the reinsurance/risk adjustment methods provided for in PPACA sections 1341-1343

- Review and summarization of effective cost control strategies

- Actuarial modeling related to evaluation of premium structure, rate setting, risk adjustment, and benefit plan and cost-sharing design.

- Actuarial modeling evaluating the Medical Loss Ratio (MLR) and other requirements in the non-group/small group markets and potential impact on the Oklahoma insurance market.

- The expected impact of mandatory reforms and the Exchange on insurance market prices and market stability;

- The expected impact of an incremental phase-in of the market reforms, such as rating bands in the individual market, on premiums for plans sold in the Exchange;

- The expected impact on premiums in the Exchange of merging the risk pools of the individual and small group market; and

- The expected impact of different legal or regulatory expectations for health plans sold in the Exchange as opposed to outside the Exchange.

Good afternoon,

Please see the below White House's press release on 'States Moving Forward to Implement Health Reform's Affordable Insurance Exchanges. Please review these materials, as we are mindful of the administration's attempt to use Republican states as examples of Obamacare implementation. This press release touts two Republican states as moving forward with Obamacare.

We would like to request that you all take a very serious look at this release and get back to us with any thoughts, comments or even a quote from your boss that may aid us if, as a caucus, we deem it necessary to respond. We have responded to some press requests at RGA today about this exchange report and some of you may get press calls directly. Please let us know if we may be of assistance to you.

Thank you for your time,

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

January 18, 2012

New Report: States Moving Forward to Implement Health Reform's Affordable Insurance Exchanges

Twenty-eight States are on their way toward establishing a key component of health care reform – Affordable Insurance Exchanges – according to a report issued today by the White House.

“States are taking strong steps to implement health reform,” said White House Deputy Chief of Staff Nancy-Ann DeParle. “The Obama Administration is working in partnership with State leaders across the country. We will ensure Americans in every State have access to an Exchange and the same kinds of insurance choices as Members of Congress.”

Affordable Insurance Exchanges are State-based, one-stop marketplaces where consumers can choose a private qualified health insurance plan that fits their health needs. Beginning in 2014, Exchanges will offer consumers the same kinds of insurance choices that members of Congress will have.

The report released today highlights how some States are moving forward to build Affordable Insurance Exchanges. The States profiled are not necessarily the States most advanced in establishing an Exchange; instead, they illustrate the diversity of approaches and progress being made. Some of the actions in the report include:

- Alabama Governor Robert Bentley (R), a physician, issued an Executive Order that created the Alabama Health Insurance Exchange Study Commission on June 2, 2011, which recommended that Alabama establish its own Exchange called the “Alabama Health Insurance Marketplace.” The legislature, which meets in February, is expected to take up legislation to establish an Exchange.
- Colorado passed a bipartisan bill to establish the independent Colorado Health Insurance Exchange, which was signed into law on June 1, 2011. The Colorado Exchange has started public education about health reform and the Exchange at its website, www.getcoveredco.org. Organizations such as the Colorado branch of the National Federation of Independent Business (NFIB) and the Colorado Association of Commerce and Industry have been active participants in the creating the small business component of the Exchange.
- In Nevada, unanimous, bipartisan legislation authorized the Silver State Health Insurance Exchange, which was signed into law by Governor Brian Sandoval (R) on June 16, 2011. Its board has been appointed, executive director named, and application submitted for its next round of funding for building the Exchange.

The report outlines some of the steps the Administration has taken to ensure all Americans have access to an exchange beginning in 2014. These include developing the information technology and business systems necessary to facilitate Exchanges in multiple states.

Developing Exchanges is just one of the ways States are implementing health reform. In the nearly two years since President Obama signed the Affordable Care Act into law, States have enforced the patient protections like banning lifetime dollar limits on coverage and ensuring coverage of proven prevention services. Forty-three States and the District of Columbia are participating in the new premium rate review system where insurers must justify the rationale for any double-digit insurance premium increase. All States have received Affordable Care Act grants to improve prevention and public health. And the Affordable Care Act has already made an incredible difference to millions of Americans:

- 2.5 million more young adults have health insurance.
- As of October 2011, more than 2.65 million seniors got a 50 percent discount on their prescription drugs when they hit the donut hole.
- Insurance companies can no longer drop your coverage when you get sick or put a lifetime cap on the amount of care you can receive.

New Survey: Small Businesses Confirm POTUS' Policies are Hurting Job Growth; GOP Fighting for Solutions

April 16, 2012 | Posted by Katie Boyd (@KEBoyd) | Permalink

The Obama administration claims its policies have been “remarkably effective,” but according to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce’s most recent Small Business Outlook Survey released today, America’s job creators disagree. The vast majority of small business owners surveyed say that the Obama administration’s onslaught of excessive regulations and the president’s failure to address high gas prices are weighing heavily on their ability to plan ahead and hire new workers. Here are a few key points from the survey, and a look at what House Republicans are doing to help small businesses put Americans back to work:

PROBLEM: High Gas Prices “Pose an Immediate Threat” to Small Businesses. “Eight out of ten small business owners report that higher energy prices pose an immediate threat to the success of their business,” according to the survey. While President Obama claims to support an “all-of-the-above” energy strategy, his rhetoric is belied by the fact that gas prices have doubled on his watch, while he continues calling for tax hikes that will increase energy costs and blocking access to America’s resources.

- GOP SOLUTION: Increase American Energy Production to Help Address High Gas Prices & Create Jobs. With the American Energy Initiative, House Republicans have passed numerous bills that would remove barriers to American energy production and help create jobs (most of which have been blocked by Senate Democrats). That effort will continue moving forward in the coming weeks with action on the Gasoline Regulations Act aimed at stopping the government red tape that drives up energy prices, and the Strategic Energy Production Act, legislation ensuring the Obama administration does not tap the Strategic Petroleum Reserve without taking steps to increase American energy production. The House will also continue fighting for approval of the widely-popular Keystone pipeline that President Obama has rejected and personally lobbied against, at the expense of 20,000 new American jobs.

PROBLEM: Excessive Regulations One of the Greatest Threats to Small Business Success. More than half (52 percent) of the small business owners surveyed say that excessive government red tape is the “greatest threat to the success of their business, increasing 9 percent since last June.” The Obama administration has more than 3,000 new regulations in the pipeline, and has already implemented more than 100 major regulations that have added $46 billion in new costs to the economy per year, according to a recent Heritage Foundation report.

- GOP SOLUTION: A Jobs Plan that Stops the Onslaught of Burdensome Regulations. The Republican Plan for America’s Job Creators includes several measures aimed at reducing the excessive regulatory burden on small businesses, including the Regulatory Accountability Act (H.R. 3010) that “requires agencies to assess the costs and benefits” of new regulations on small businesses, and the Regulations From the Executive in Need of Scrutiny (REINS) Act that would require an up-or-down vote on new rules that will have a major impact on jobs and the economy. These bills – along with several others that remove regulatory obstacles to small business growth – also remain stalled in the Democratic-led Senate.

PROBLEM: ObamaCare “An Obstacle to Hiring More Employees.” “Nearly three out of four (73%) of the small business owners surveyed say ObamaCare “is an obstacle to hiring more employees.” Small businesses owners have repeatedly warned that Democrats’ government takeover of health care is holding back hiring, and more than two hundred economists agree that that the maze of mandates, penalties and regulations in ObamaCare constitutes a major “barrier to stronger job growth.”

- GOP SOLUTION: Keeping the Pledge to America to Repeal ObamaCare & Protect Small Businesses. House Republicans have voted more than 25 times to repeal, defund and dismantle ObamaCare, including a bill that saved small businesses from the job-crushing paperwork mandate. The effort to fully repeal the law and replace it with better solutions will continue in the weeks and months ahead.

This week, the House will continue working to create a better environment for small business job growth by passing the Small Business Tax Cut Act – Pledge to America legislation that will allow job creators to invest more of their resources in their businesses and hire new workers. ## Michigan moves toward state-federal partnership health exchange, leaves door open for MI Health Marketplace

LANSING, Mich. – Gov. Rick Snyder has filed a grant application to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Service (HHS) to collaborate with the federal government on a state partnership exchange (SPE). The governor said, however, that if additional federal deadlines are extended or the Michigan Legislature takes action authorizing a state-based exchange, then Michigan may exercise its option for the proposed MI Health Marketplace. Snyder has not yet filed a declaration letter formally choosing Michigan's path.

“Ensuring that Michigan residents have the best available quality health care and customer service has been a priority from Day One. I have felt strongly that a Michigan-run MI Health Marketplace could further accomplish this goal. That said, we must be realistic about how feasible implementing this could be under the current federal timeframes. At this point we’re moving toward a state partnership exchange. However, we will continue to work with our legislative partners and seek more details and clarity from the federal government to make a final determination on Michigan’s path forward – whether that’s a state partnership exchange or state-based exchange.”

Thursday, Nov. 15, was a key funding deadline. There are also multiple operational deadlines, some of which have changed twice in the past week. The next major milestone is now Dec. 14, 2012, when states must declare if they wish to operate their own exchanges. Under current federal rules, all exchanges must be operational on Oct.1, 2013.

Coordinated RGPPC Effort

The RGPPC in conjunction with the RGA would like to put out a press release of our own on Wednesday. We envision the document to have a quote from every Republican Governor about the effects that Obamacare has had on each individual state. You can lift or prepare such quotes from the actions you are already considering for next week. Please email to Mike Schrimpf by tomorrow close of business. Mike's email is mschrimpf@rga.org. Please feel free to call or email me with any questions you have regarding this request.

Thank you for your time!

Subject: Obamacare Hits the States (Again)

The website Stateline last week published an analysis <<http://bit.ly/wznSE3>> of the major issues facing states in 2012, and not surprisingly Medicaid was high on that list. While the recession hit states hard, Obamacare's onerous new mandates have combined with the continued economic slowdown to inflict a devastating one-two punch on state budgets:

Two years ago, Medicaid eclipsed K-12 education as the most expensive item in state budgets. Since then, it has only kept growing. Medicaid now comprises 24 percent of state budgets <<http://bit.ly/wazu7w>>, when federal funds are counted. That's up from 22 percent last year, according to the National Association of State Budget Officers. The upward spiral seems to be continuing. Even as states get ready to write their budgets for fiscal year 2013, which starts in July in most states, half of them expect to be wrestling with Medicaid shortfalls in their 2012 budgets, according to a survey by the Kaiser Family Foundation.

Making the job for fiscal 2013 even more difficult for states are new federal restrictions and an increasing number of court rulings that limit states' options for trimming their programs....Other restrictions on states come from [Obamacare], which prevents states from doing anything that would lower enrollment. In addition, a new federal rule proposed late last year would require states to produce data showing that cuts to hospital and doctor fees won't make it harder for Medicaid patients to get the care they need....[Under Obamacare,] states are barred from doing anything that would lower Medicaid enrollment below the income levels called for in the national health law's 2014 Medicaid expansion. That includes raising premiums and co-pays to levels the federal government considers unaffordable for low-income patients. That leaves states with relatively few options when it comes to controlling Medicaid costs. They can reduce provider fees and eliminate optional benefits.

As the article demonstrates, Medicaid is a large – and growing – share of state budgets, and has increasingly begun to crowd out other potential priorities like education, corrections, transportation, etc. Yet Obamacare only makes this budgetary mess worse, imposing new unfunded mandates of at least $118 billion <<http://bit.ly/j2bjtL>>. Thus, even as the states (slowly) start to recover from the budgetary effects of the recession, the budgetary effects of Obamacare will have consequences for years – even decades – to come.

Glen, Lewis,

Ya'll two definitely need to be on one of these sub-groups. I probably should too. We all hate Obamacare, but the train has left the station and our job now is to INFLUENCE the process and INFORM elected officials until Congress can shut this thing down. In the process, we may be able to set up a framework for a "Utah" market based exchange (which is evidently working quite well) to slide in place of the Federal monstrosity. Look...the AGENCIES are out in front on this....just like the guys at that Heritage conference told us would happen. We HAVE to stay informed and relevant to the process OR WE WILL GET ROLLED - its in my notes! I attached them again - just for giggles.

RE: Oklahoma Healthcare Exchange – ADVISORY WORK GROUP Signup Information

Greetings Oklahoma Healthcare Exchange Stakeholders & Interested Parties:

Developing a common understanding of what an Oklahoma State Healthcare Exchange must do is a critical first step in the creation of a strategic road map for the Exchange. To accomplish this step, Key Advisory Work Groups and sub-groups will be formed to develop recommendations on Exchange related issues. Each Work Group and sub-group will be responsible to meet, discuss and perform research to develop recommendations and advise on language to be used for the development of a strategic plan for the Exchange. Advisory Work Group participation will require an estimated 3 month commitment.

Following are Key Issues, around which Advisory Work Groups and sub-groups will be created:

1. Governance & Administrative Structure
2. Eligibility Process & Infrastructure
3. Enrollment
4. Information Technology
5. Carrier & Plan Selection
6. Financial Management
7. Education & Marketing

Attached to this email is a spreadsheet listing questions and considerations for each of the seven Key Issues. The spreadsheet also identifies the Project Manager who will act as liaison for each Advisory Work Group. Please keep in mind that the list of questions and considerations is not intended to be exhaustive and is provided as a tool which can be used by the Advisory Work Groups to initiate and focus group discussions. Each Advisory Work Group will be provided additional resources by the Project Managers as well as be responsible to perform independent research on its assigned Key Issue.

In preparation of our meeting next Wednesday, please review the attached list and take careful consideration as to which Advisory Work Group(s) you would like to participate. Advisory Work Group and sub-group participation will be assigned based upon the knowledge, demonstrated leadership experience and areas of expertise of each participant as well as each participant's ability to commit the time, effort and resources needed to adequately address the assigned Key Issue. In most cases participants will be assigned to the Advisory Work Group(s) of their choice.

Your active participation will be a deciding factor in determining Oklahoma's success in the development of an Exchange. Additional information about the formation and requirements of the Work Groups will be provided at the January 26th, 10:30am -12:00pm, General Stakeholder meeting. We look forward to seeing you then to further discussion regarding your participation in the Advisory Work Groups.

Thank you!

Subject: Oklahoma wins an Early Innovator Grant

Dear Representatives McCullough and Mulready,

As I mentioned to you previously, Oklahoma via the Oklahoma Health Care Authority applied for the federal early innovator grant to build the IT infrastructure necessary for a state-based health insurance exchange. As you can see below, our application was successful. The official announcement is being made this afternoon in Washington D.C. There will be a lot of work ahead of everyone but this allows the state to make our own plan. I also wanted to note that 97 percent of these funds are planned to be spent through private vendor contracts. I do not have a lot of detail at this time but I am happy to answer any questions or provide you additional information.

Thanks,
Nico

States Leading the Way on Implementation: HHS Awards “Early Innovator” Grants to Seven States

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) today announced the award of seven cooperative agreements to help a group of “Early Innovator” states design and implement the information technology (IT) infrastructure needed to operate Health Insurance Exchanges. These states are leading the way on building a better health insurance marketplace, one that allows individuals and small-business owners to pool their purchasing power to negotiate lower rates. Using these new funds, the Early Innovator states will develop Exchange IT models that can be adopted and tailored by other states.

Kansas, Maryland, New York, Oklahoma, Oregon, Wisconsin, and a consortium of New England states will receive a total of approximately $241 million. Information on how much each state or consortium will receive and how each will use the grant funds is available at www.HealthCare.gov/news/factsheets/exchanges02162011a.html.

“Early Innovator states will play a critical role in developing a consumer-friendly marketplace where insurers must compete to deliver the best deal,” said HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius. “These grants ensure that consumers in every state will be able to easily navigate their way through health insurance options.”

Starting in 2014, Exchanges will help individuals and small employers shop for, select, and enroll in high-quality, affordable private health plans that fit their individual needs at competitive prices. By providing a place for one-stop shopping, Exchanges will make purchasing health insurance easier and more understandable. Similar to any consumer-based industry such as the airline or banking industries, sophisticated, consumer-friendly IT infrastructure will be critical to the success of the Exchanges. Although Exchanges are not scheduled to launch until 2014, work is already underway to design and implement them across the country. As states prepare, they have requested early funding assistance to develop the right IT, particularly with respect to eligibility and enrollment systems.

All Early Innovator states have committed to assuring that the technology they develop is reusable and transferable. Using the grants, they will develop the building blocks for Exchange IT systems, providing models for how Exchange IT systems can be created. This will help states to establish their Exchanges quickly and efficiently using the models and building blocks created by the Early Innovator states. At the same time, states continue to have the flexibility to develop an Exchange that best meets the needs of their unique health insurance market without having to start from scratch.

The seven grantees offer a diversity that will be valuable to all states as they work to set up their Exchanges. The grantees represent different regions of the country, as well as different Exchange governance structures and Information Systems. This diversity will help ensure that a wide range of IT models are developed, and every state will benefit.

"Everyone wins," said Don Berwick. "This grant program means that states don't have to waste money reinventing the wheel, and consumers get the best of the best."

Summary of Early Innovator Grants

- Kansas: Kansas Insurance Department, $31,537,465
- Maryland: Maryland Dept of Health and Mental Hygiene, $6,227,454
- Multi-State Consortia: University of Massachusetts Medical School, $35,591,333
- New York: New York Department of Health, $27,431,432
- Oklahoma: Oklahoma Health Care Authority, $54,582,269
- Oregon: Oregon Health Authority, $48,096,307
- Wisconsin: Wisconsin Department of Health Services, $37,757,266

REAL MEDICAID REFORM WILL REQUIRE LISTENING AND LEARNING FROM THE STATES

By Governor C.L. "Butch" Otter

For millions of people, Medicaid has become a lifeline – more important in many ways than family or community. For some, it is a profit center. For others, it is a nightmare of bureaucracy, entitlement, and too often disappointment.

Nationally, healthcare costs continue grabbing headlines, and the issue will be a major part of the 2012 political debate.

Meanwhile, Idaho and other states are working hard to create public-private healthcare partnerships and foster local solutions – and along the way to nudge the national Medicaid reform discussion toward common sense and reality.

Many aspects of our healthcare system are linked to Medicaid, the taxpayer-funded health benefits program for those meeting eligibility criteria including poverty and disability. Idaho and other states have been grappling with the complexities and challenges of this massive government program and its federal mandates since the 1960s. Medicaid cost the State of Idaho nearly $359 million in the fiscal year ending July 1, and it will take up a projected 18 percent of Idaho's General Fund budget in the new fiscal year.

That's to say nothing of how much it costs Idahoans in federal tax dollars every year.

In May, U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch of Utah and Congressman Fred Upton of Michigan sent a letter to all governors asking for feedback on the challenges they face and for ideas on how to make Medicaid work better.

They cited the fact that both Democrat and Republican governors have expressed the need for Medicaid reform, seeking to replicate the successful model used in overhauling the welfare system in the 1990s.

“Solutions for sustainable welfare reform came from the states – not just Washington – and the same model will work to fix Medicaid,” they wrote. And I couldn’t agree more.

I recently joined 27 other Republican governors in signing a letter responding to the request for input. We agreed first and foremost that Obamacare should be repealed to allow states the opportunity – and the flexibility – to keep addressing our unique healthcare challenges.

We agreed that Medicaid should be reformed in a comprehensive and sustainable manner, not only to improve care for our nation’s most vulnerable citizens, but also to address the inequities, inefficiencies, excess costs, fraud, waste and abuse that unfortunately are far too prevalent in Medicaid programs across the country.

An expanded report detailing recommendations built upon each state’s input is being developed for Senator Hatch and Congressman Upton.

Idaho’s input will be extremely valuable in helping Congress understand how states with smaller populations are impacted by the Medicaid system – through our budgets and the wellbeing of our citizens – and what we already have found will work to improve it.

Understandably, the news media’s focus has been on our legal challenge to Obamacare, confronting an unconstitutional abuse of power and asserting our rights as citizens of a sovereign state. But that’s only part of the story. Little attention has been paid to our efforts to more effectively coordinate Idaho initiatives in healthcare through the work of the Idaho Health Care Council.

I established the council in 2010 to support and implement Idaho’s best solutions in making healthcare more accessible and affordable. Together – patients and physicians, hospitals and insurers, employers and employees – are helping us develop innovative, sustainable and market-based solutions to improve healthcare right here at home without waiting for federal permission, directives or mandates.

But we’re not alone in working to move our healthcare system in the right direction. I am collaborating with 27 other governors and their states, as well as our congressional delegations, in a unified effort to reform Medicaid in a way that implements proven best practices and leverages both public and private resources.

Our shared goal is to establish and maintain a responsible safety net for our children’s and grandchildren’s generations without breaking our economy or putting those same generations and beyond even deeper in debt. And we are committed to doing it without giving up our self-determination or freedom.

HATCH: GAO REPORT CONFIRMS NEED FOR STRUCTURAL REFORMS TO MEDICAID

Utah Senator Says, "This report exposes problems with massive expansions of a program that already yields billions of dollars in waste, let's act now and implement robust, structural reforms that will preserve the long-term viability of this safety net program for the most vulnerable Americans."

WASHINGTON – U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), Ranking Member of the Senate Finance Committee, today said a new Government Accountability Office (GAO) report that found billions of wasteful dollars in the Medicaid program demonstrates the clear need for concrete, structural reforms that will help guarantee the system's long-term solvency. The report, which was requested by Hatch, found billions in unaccountable Medicaid dollars for fiscal year (FY) 2009.

"The President's $2.6 trillion health law – the cornerstone of his domestic agenda – "covered" half its newly insured through Medicaid, already an unsustainable, budget-busting entitlement program," said Hatch, whose Committee has jurisdiction over the Medicaid program. "But as demonstrated by the nonpartisan GAO, the Obama Administration once again bit off more than they can chew and remains woefully unprepared for the largest expansion of Medicaid in history. This report exposes problems with massive expansions of a program that already yields billions of dollars in waste, let's act now and implement robust, structural reforms that will preserve the long-term viability of this safety net program for the most vulnerable Americans."

States report two sets of data to the federal government for purposes of the Medicaid program: CMS-64 data, which is usually reported on time, aggregates state expenditures for purposes of getting payments from the federal government, and MSIS data, which is routinely 3 years late in coming, represents how the money was spent on individual beneficiaries. The CMS-64 and the MSIS databases are off by about 10 percent every year, and while some of the differences can be accounted for, there are billions of Medicaid dollars unexplained every year.

Key findings from the GAO Report follow and a full copy of the report can be found HERE:

- In 2009, $43 billion could not be traced directly back to Medicaid beneficiaries: "In fiscal year 2009, the difference between MSIS and CMS-64 was $43 billion. Much of the difference was primarily the result of the different designs of each data set. CMS uses MSIS data for beneficiary-specific expenditures, while CMS-64 data are used to compute the federal financial participation for each state's Medicaid program costs. However, even after adjusting for DSH payments, Medicare premiums, prescription drug rebates, and Medicaid health insurance payments, differences remain. In fiscal year 2009, total MSIS expenditure data, after adjustments, showed MSIS at 94 percent of CMS-64 expenditures, which left billions of dollars unexplained."
- States are generally 3 years late in telling the federal government how they spent Medicaid money: "The 3-year lag in states' reporting of MSIS data prevents its use for timely oversight of beneficiary-related utilization and other spending trends. For example, identifying a difference in hospital expenditures between MSIS and CMS-64 is of limited use when detected 3 years later. If states were meeting the current requirement of providing MSIS data 45 days after each quarter, then such comparisons could provide more useful and timely information."
- Medicaid continues to be an easy target for waste, fraud, and abuse – a program in dire need of reform not a massive expansion: "Medicaid is on GAO's high-risk list because of vulnerabilities to waste, fraud, abuse, and mismanagement." "This is critical given that Medicaid, a program that GAO identified on our high-risk list, has among the highest estimated improper payments of any federal program reporting such data."

Republican Governors Public Policy Committee Files Amicus Brief in Supreme Court Case Challenging Obamacare

The Republican Governors Association policy arm, the Republican Governors Public Policy Committee, filed an amicus brief with the United States Supreme Court arguing against the constitutionality of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. The brief was filed through Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli and the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The filing marks the first time that the Republican Governors Public Policy Committee has ever submitted an amicus brief to the Supreme Court.

“While the amicus focuses on the individual mandate, this case is about far more than just that component,” said RGA Chairman Bob McDonnell. “The Obama administration’s healthcare takeover grants sweeping authority to the federal bureaucracy to dictate to individuals, churches, charities, hospitals, schools, businesses and states how they must operate. This is the opposite of the vision of America set forth by our nation’s founders.”

“At its core, this case is about the future of America, and whether we maintain our identity as a federal republic, or creep ever closer to a centralized government in which all the power flows out of Washington,” McDonnell concluded.

The full brief can be found by clicking HERE, and a summary of its arguments is below:

SUMMARY

I. THE PRESUMPTION OF CONSTITUTIONALITY ATTACHING TO PPACA IS WEAK OWING TO THE PARLIAMENTARY PROCESS EMPLOYED IN ITS ENACTMENT. There is doctrinal and philosophical support for such a presumption resting upon notions of separation of powers, particularly where it appears PPACA was not passed through any process resembling regular order. The United States Senate passed PPACA late on Christmas Eve 2009 as a floor substitute on a straight party line vote. The legislative vehicle was a House tax bill chosen to satisfy the Originating Clause for the taxes in PPACA. PPACA passed the Senate on cloture with considerable minority protest. To the extent that a presumption of constitutionality arises from regular order and a hard look by Congress at the limits of its own power, those conditions are simply not present.

II. THE FACT THAT CONGRESS HERETOFORE HAS NEVER CLAIMED THE POWER TO REQUIRE A CITIZEN TO PURCHASE A GOOD OR SERVICE FROM ANOTHER CITIZEN TENDS TO NEGATE THE EXISTENCE OF THAT POWER. In the case of PPACA, the lack of historical precedent was well known to Congress before it acted. At the heart of PPACA is § 1501, which generally requires American citizens to purchase a good or service from other citizens, namely, a health insurance policy. When the Senate Finance Committee asked the Congressional Research Service whether a mandate supported by a penalty would be constitutional, the response was equivocal: "Whether such a requirement would be constitutional under the Commerce Clause is perhaps the most challenging question posed by such a proposal, as it is a novel issue whether Congress may use this clause to require an individual to purchase a good or a service."

III. THE MANDATE AND PENALTY ARE CONTRARY TO THE TEXT OF THE COMMERCE CLAUSE AND FOUNDATIONAL UNDERSTANDINGS.

A. The Mandate and Penalty are Not Supported by the Text of the Commerce Clause. Noah Webster in 1828 defined commerce as "an interchange or mutual change of goods, wares, productions, or property of any kind, between nations or individuals, either by barter, or by purchase and sale; trade; traffick." This is commerce. Its hallmarks are spontaneity and voluntary activity; not a command to buy something. The claim that commerce means not commercial activity but mere passivity is violently discordant with any normal use of the word commerce at the founding or at any subsequent time.

B. The Historical Context in which the Commerce Clause was Drafted Makes it Highly Unlikely that it Included a Power to Command a Citizen to Purchase Goods or Services From Another Citizen. The founding generation would have regarded as preposterous any suggestion that Great Britain could have solved its colonial problems by commanding Americans to purchase tea under the generally conceded power of parliament to regulate commerce.

C. There is No Tradition of Using the Commerce Clause to Require a Citizen to Purchase Goods or Services from Another Citizen. Because this regime viewed the regulation even of economic activity as illegitimate unless that activity harmed or threatened harm to someone else, Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905), it is inconceivable that the Commerce Clause prior to 1938 would have been deemed to validly reach inactivity. The question thus becomes, has the Supreme Court decided any case in the post-Lochner era that has extended the Commerce Clause far enough to cover the mandate and penalty?

D. The Mandate and Penalty are Outside the Existing Outer Limits of the Commerce Clause and Associated Necessary and Proper Clause as Measured by Supreme Court Precedent. "[E]ven if [an] activity be local and though it may not be regarded as commerce, it may still, whatever its nature, be reached by Congress if it exerts a substantial economic effect on interstate commerce, and this irrespective of whether such effect is what might at some earlier time have been defined as 'direct' or 'indirect.'" Wickard, 317 U.S. at 125 (emphasis added). Wickard marks the affirmative outer limits of the Commerce Clause.

Since Wickard, the Supreme Court has proceeded no further than to hold that Congress can regulate three things under the Commerce Clause: (1) "use of the channels of interstate commerce" (2) "the instrumentalities of interstate commerce," and (3) "activities that substantially affect interstate commerce." U.S. v. Lopez, 514 U.S. at 558-59. "[T]he Federal balance is too essential a part of our constitutional structure and plays too vital a role in securing freedom for us to admit inability to intervene when one or the other level of Government has tipped the scales too far." Id. at 578.

None of this is changed by an appeal to the Necessary and Proper Clause. This Court elsewhere has emphatically held that the Necessary and Proper Clause is limited by general principles of federalism independent of any direct prohibition. Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706 (1999) ("When a 'Law . . . for carrying into Execution' the Commerce Clause violates the principle of state sovereignty reflected in the various constitutional provisions . . . it is not a 'Law . . . proper for carrying into Execution the Commerce Clause,' and is thus, in the words of The Federalist, 'merely [an] act of usurpation' which 'deserves to be treated as such.'") (citing Printz, 521 U.S. at 923-24). It simply does not matter how "necessary" the mandate and penalty might be to the congressional scheme if the end being pursued is improper under the Necessary and Proper Clause.

Guys—

In an effort to make you guys aware of moving parts for the Governors' meeting in Las Vegas, below is a summary of your subcommittee's report. I expect most of the policy portion to be dedicated to Obamacare and the conversations as of late, and I do not expect governors to be asked to make a subcommittee report. Nevertheless, I wanted to share with you what we have prepared for your committee. Let us know if you have any questions.

Best,
Marie

Federalism (Fallin and Brownback)

- This subcommittee worked with the other committees to weave themes of Federalism throughout the language used in reports, letters and press releases.
- This subcommittee also has investigated potential partnerships with other organizations, such as the National Association of Counties to evaluate unfunded mandates.

RGA Chairman Bob McDonnell: How Much Longer Will the President Ignore Governors?

The Republican Governors Association released a new letter today reiterating the need for additional guidance on the Medicaid and Health Insurance Exchanges provisions in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act.

In the 80 days since 29 Republican governors first submitted their questions, the Obama Administration has only addressed a few of the questions in any meaningful way.

Click HERE to read the letter.

“Thirty months have passed since the President signed Obamacare into law, and it ought to be alarming that the Democrats who wrote the legislation are still trying to figure out what’s in it,” said RGA Chairman Bob McDonnell. “Unfortunately, this ill-conceived law has serious consequences for patients and doctors as well as taxpayers and state governments.”

“We are now nearly two-thirds of the way to the law’s alleged implementation date. How much longer will the Obama Administration make governors wait to have our questions answered?” McDonnell asked.

“As governors continue to wait for answers, it becomes more and more clear that Obamacare needs to be repealed and replaced, and the only way to do that is by electing Mitt Romney in November,” McDonnell concluded.

RGA Continues to Press HHS for Answers

The Republican Governors Association released a letter today written by Virginia Governor Bob McDonnell, Chairman of the RGA, addressing the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' letter declining to directly address the 30 questions about the future of Medicaid and Health Insurance Exchanges raised by Republican governors last week.

In fact, as part of the official response to the governors' very specific questions, the Department stated, "more guidance will be issued in the year and a half before the Medicaid eligibility expansion and exchanges begin."

A copy of Governor McDonnell's letter is attached, and an excerpt is below:

On July 10th I wrote a letter on behalf of the 29 republican governors asking 30 specific questions about the implementation of exchanges and the expansion of Medicaid. The July 13, 2012 letter from Acting Administrator Marilyn Tavenner was a cordial but vague response from the Obama Administration. With the challenging and detailed work ahead for our nation to address the issues of health care, the letter was wholly inadequate. The response was neither substantive nor serious and appeared to be more of a marketing tool than serious problem solving...

...As you may have seen from the reports from the National Governors Association meeting that I was honored to host in Williamsburg, Virginia, a majority of the nation's governors are uncertain about the major decisions which must be made on what kinds of exchanges to implement, whether to expand Medicaid, and how the vast new bureaucracies will be paid for and administered in a nation $16 trillion in debt.

Therefore we need specific answers, not general platitude. If you don't know the answers, please tell us. Otherwise, please address the many serious questions we have on these issues, and please answer the NGA staff as well on the issues raised on behalf of ALL the nation's governors...

... We do not need yet another tour that promotes PPACA but ignores the realities of implementation of a more than 2000 page bill that few read.

I've taken the liberty of reattaching our list of questions. Specific, written responses to each question would be most beneficial to governors and our staffs. Hopefully, your administration is willing and able to cooperate with the nation's governors by answering each question thoroughly. I look forward to hearing from you.

RGA Letter on Medicaid and Exchanges to President Obama

Virginia Governor Bob McDonnell, chairman of the Republican Governors Association, sent a letter on behalf of Republican governors to President Obama today seeking clarification on critical outstanding questions related to the federal health care law in the wake of the Supreme Court's decision.

To read a copy of the letter in its entirety, click HERE. An excerpt of Governor McDonnell's letter, including the questions, is below:

While we continue to believe the best option is to fully repeal and replace the PPACA, states now confront numerous deadlines and face major policy decisions in the wake of the Supreme Court decision. Before making any final policy decisions, governors must carefully consider the short and long-term implications of an expanded entitlement program and the consequences of significantly increasing the size of government to manage these programs.

The states' burden of the expansion population as well as administrative costs remains significant. Increased spending on Medicaid crowds out resources available to states to spend on other meaningful priorities like education, the environment, public safety and infrastructure.

Moreover, even before increasing the Medicaid-eligible population as prescribed by PPACA, Medicaid has been on an unsustainable path, comprising a growing share of state budgets every year. It is difficult to see how expanding Medicaid without reform would do anything other than put more strain on state budgets and the taxpayers, especially when considering that many pernicious provisions that curtail state flexibility remain.

While the Supreme Court decision focused on the states' role in determining whether a Medicaid expansion is in the best interest of its citizens, states also face other PPACA-related decisions, like whether to establish a state based health-insurance exchange or accept the default of a federal exchange. As the exchange issue is currently interpreted, states are essentially being tasked with shouldering all the responsibility without any authority.

If states determine that a Medicaid expansion is not in the best interests of its citizens, it is likely that there will be a significant gap in coverage for low-income individuals who do not qualify for tax credits. We believe it is incumbent upon the authors of PPACA and your Administration to detail precisely how you intend to address this situation.

We also believe that it is unlikely that the federal government will have fully functional exchanges in place by the Fall of 2013 in order for millions of Americans to be able to purchase coverage beginning January 2014. We respectfully request the Administration provide the detailed work plan that demonstrates these deadlines will be met. If they cannot be met, the responsible course would be for HHS to level with us and the American people. We also do not understand how the federal government can begin to afford to implement PPACA, with deficits already over $1 trillion in every year of your presidency, and the debt growing $5 trillion in the past 3 years to an outrageous record of nearly $16 trillion.

The consequences of governors' decisions will impact our states – and the nation – for decades to come, so we must have all the information needed to choose wisely. We have taken the liberty of compiling below just some of the critical questions that must have answers before states can determine best how to proceed in light of the Court's decision. We undertake this task with a sense of great responsibility, and resolve to only move forward when we have full and complete knowledge of all the implications of our decision.

Healthcare Exchanges:

- 1.) Please provide a complete list of regulations that will have to be reviewed, revised and re-opened for public comment prior to implementation as a result of the Supreme Court ruling (e.g., the Medicaid eligibility regulations, exchange regulations related to interface with Medicaid)? What is the schedule for re-issuing these regulations?
- 2.) When will either additional guidance or actual rules be issued on essential health benefits, actuarial value and rating areas be issued?
- 3.) The federal government has already extended deadlines for applying for Level 1 and Level 2 Exchange Establishment funding into 2014. Can we expect extensions of the deadlines for implementation given the uncertainty caused by the Supreme Court ruling and the linkage between Medicaid expansion and exchange eligibility and enrollment functions? In addition, will the deadlines change for states implementing a partnership exchange? Will the deadlines be extended for states implementing a federal exchange?
- 4.) When will the details of the federal partnership options be available? These cannot be considered as an option without details including cost estimates. How will the long term funding of the federally-facilitated healthcare exchanges be sustained?
- 5.) States considering a state-based exchange need to know whether there will be a charge and by how much to use the federal data hub, advance premium tax credit/cost-sharing reduction service, risk adjustment and transitional reinsurance programs.
- 6.) When will states learn the details of the operational systems for a federal exchange? The procedural, technical, and architectural requirements for linking to the federal exchange have not been released. It is not feasible to know if a state-based exchange is better for our citizens until we know what the contents of a federal exchange will be. Taking grant money at this time for state exchange creation may be wasted if a federal exchange makes more sense for a particular state.

- 7.) When will information from the establishment of a federal exchange be available for states to use if a state opts to build its own exchange? It is costly for each state to have to start from scratch and still not know how interfaces will work.
- 8.) If states choose to build a state-based exchange, what dollars will the federal government contribute now and in the future? For the federal exchange states, when will the regulations regarding the imposition of taxes on a state's insurers be released?
- 9.) It has been widely reported that Congressional leaders who have to appropriate money will seek to defund exchanges. Please explain how the enactment provisions of the law allow the Executive Branch to continue to fund exchanges without Congressional action to appropriate money.
- 10.) What happens to a state that has taken exchange planning and implementation grants if their exchange is not financially viable after 2015? Can a state refuse to increase taxes on either its residents or insurers, thus putting the financial underpinning of an exchange at risk? What penalties does the federal government envision in this case?
- 11.) What happens if a state accepts grant money now to begin to build a state exchange, and subsequently determines that a federal exchange may be better? Will the federal government claw back these grant dollars from the states?
- 12.) What impact will changes to the Medicaid expansion have on exchange implementation? The federal exchange is currently structured to provide Medicaid eligibility determination. How will this work if some states participate and others do not?
- 13.) Last month the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) pointed out a provision in the law that reduces exchange subsidies after 2018, which means fewer and fewer people will qualify for subsidies, and the people who do qualify will get a smaller and smaller subsidy. Does the Administration support that change, and if so, how would you pay for it? If you do not, why do you think people should be forced to buy insurance if federal subsidies are shrinking?
- 14.) CMS has released 90/10 funding under ARRA and HITECH in order for states to improve their eligibility systems for Medicaid and other social service programs. Will that funding continue?
- 15.) Alongside the considerable challenge of greatly expanding the Medicaid program, states are charged by the PPACA with creating a single, seamless point of entry for all of the insurance affordability programs affected by the Act--Medicaid, the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP), the Basic Health Plan (where offered), advance tax credits for individual and Small Business Health Options Program (SHOP) exchange enrollees. This leaves another major question on the table. What about all of the other social service programs? Will states still be able to create an eligibility system for all social service programs under the 90/10 funding mechanism?
- 16.) In order to minimize disruptions to a state's insurance market, The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) is required to certify multi-state plans that must be included in every exchange, when will the rules be released detailing the requirements and timeline for multi-state plans. How OPM structures these rules can be very disruptive to a state's insurance market.
- 17.) Does the federal government intend to maintain high risk pools and how will they be financed? What actions will they take in a state that has opted not to operate a high risk pool or an exchange?

Medicaid

- 1.) When can we expect to receive updated guidance on Medicaid expansion and related topics?
- 2.) Is there a deadline for letting the federal government know if a state will be participating in the Medicaid expansion? How does that relate to the exchange declaration deadline? The two programs are currently scheduled to be implemented simultaneously in January 2014.
- 3.) Will states that expand Medicaid coverage up to a level below 138% of the federal poverty level (FPL), for example up to 100% of FPL, still receive the enhanced federal medical assistance percentage (FMAP) available for “newly covered” populations?
- 4.) Will states be allowed to phase in Medicaid coverage up to 138% of FPL (or 100% FPL) years after 2013 and still receive the enhanced FMAP?
- 5.) Does the MOE requirement apply to the expansion population or does it apply only to the current Medicaid population? If a state accepts the expansion, but the federal match goes away, can we drop out of the expansion program? Will you waive the MOE under your 1115 waiver authority? What will be the penalties for failure to comply with MOE requirements? Since the MOE was a direct result of the expansion funding, if a state chooses not to expand is the MOE no longer effective?
- 6.) Regarding the two year increase in Medicaid reimbursement for primary care codes, are you going to extend it? If so, how are you going to pay for it? Congressional Republicans have expressed opposition to any funded for PPACA.
- 7.) Will states still be required to convert their income counting methodology to MAGI for purposes of determining eligibility regardless of whether they expand to the optional adult group? If so, how do states link the categorical eligibility criteria to the MAGI? How will the federal exchanges utilize the state’s criteria?
- 8.) If a state expanded Medicaid through a waiver prior to enactment of the PPACA, but then chooses not to expand coverage further, are they still eligible for the 75% to 90% enhanced FMAP for the previously expanded population?
- 9.) Will the federal government support options for the Medicaid expansion population that encourage personal responsibility – cost sharing or accountability provisions, the use of high deductible plans such as Health Savings Accounts, and other options at the state’s choice?
- 10.) What specific plans and timeline do you have for enacting the reforms and flexibility options for Medicaid that you spoke of in 2009? When can states give further input on the needed reforms?
- 11.) You have stated that you will not deport undocumented aliens who have not committed a crime. You have also said that these undocumented aliens will be exempt from the individual mandate. How will the state be reimbursed for medical services given to these individuals?
- 12.) Will CMS approve global waivers with an aggregate allotment, state flexibility, and accountability if states are willing to initiate a portion of the expansion?
- 13.) The Disproportionate Share allotments will be reduced every year with a methodology based in the reduction in the number of uninsured. One, when will HHS issue the regulations and methodology for this reduction? Two, for a state that does not see a decrease in its uninsured population will the remaining state absorb the full reduction? In addition, can a state implement a new DSH Diversion program as part of the optional expansion? Can a state implement new DSH Diversion programs for services to the uninsured/uncompensated care services?

RGA Letter to the President: Time to Engage on Healthcare

RGA Chairman Governor Bob McDonnell and Governor Bobby Jindal sent a letter today to President Obama asking him to extend the deadline for choosing a health insurance exchange and requesting a meeting with him to discuss the many state responsibilities required under the Patient Protection Affordable Care Act (PPACA) and the lack of guidance provide by his Administration thus far.

In order to be compliant with federal guidance states must decide whether or not they will choose to move forward with a state based healthcare exchange by November 16. The guidance Friday from Secretary Sebelius extends the date only for the election of a partnership exchange, and subsequently for the federal exchange.

As it stands, current guidance contains numerous instances where it mentions that further rulemaking or guidance will be issued, making it difficult for states to make the best decision for their unique populations. In addition, last Thursday, HHS submitted two proposed regulations to OMB, hinting that the Administration had the information necessary for states to make their decisions but was waiting until after the election to release.

“The lack of a complete and open rulemaking process and the deficit of information being shared with states have created a virtual roadblock for governors, who must decipher what type of exchange is appropriate for their state,” said RGA Chairman Bob McDonnell. “We are asking for the President to intervene with HHS, push the deadline and engage directly with governors of both parties in a serious dialogue about healthcare exchanges and overall healthcare reform in our states.”

In their letter, the governors’ wrote: “As has been stated many times, before making any final policy decisions, governors must carefully consider the short and long-term implications of an expanded entitlement program and the consequences of significantly increasing the size of government to manage these programs. In the near term, we need to better understand how the federal government will implement a federal exchange as it is clear most states will not be ready on their own. We also have concerns about future cost shifting to states, and need certainty as we prepare our budgets, many of which are biennial budgets. We also remain very concerned about the unsustainable deficits and national debt, and the reality that imprudent implementation of PPACA will contribute dramatically to an increase in both.”

In August of 2011, the Republican governors submitted 31 specific solutions for Medicaid reform to improve the delivery of service and reduce costs for the federal government and states. When healthcare reform was discussed in 2010 and PPACA ultimately passed, no governor was invited to provide input into the nation’s healthcare overhaul.

“The American people want Republicans and Democrats to work together to move our country forward, and we ask the President and his Cabinet to work with governors to honestly address the real concerns we have about the health care law and our nation’s healthcare system as a whole,” said Governor Bobby Jindal.

RGA Statement on New Health Insurance Exchange Regulations

Republican Governors Association Chairman Bob McDonnell issued the following statement regarding the U.S. Department of Health Human Services' release of new regulations governing Health Insurance Exchanges:

“Once again, the Obama administration has overpromised, oversold and under-delivered, this time with regards to granting states the flexibility needed to establish and maintain health insurance exchanges. The regulations issued today by the Department of Health and Human Services extend the federal government’s reach into the states and will cost the states millions of dollars annually to operate. This Administration’s inability to provide critical guidance to their broken healthcare reform mandate gives more and more credence to the necessity of the Supreme Court ruling this law unconstitutional.”

Shortcomings of the Regulations

- No clarity on what benefit mandates will be imposed on states
- No clarity on cost-sharing
- No clarity on risk adjustment and reinsurance
- No clarity on the federal health insurance exchange that would be forced upon states if they refuse to implement the law
- No clarity regarding who will pay for a federal health insurance exchange
- No clarity on "partnership exchanges"

Bottom Line

Rather than provide clarity, the rule opens new questions and is silent on the most crucial pieces of information for states. To date, HHS has not issued proposed rules in many of the areas listed above.

RGA Statement on Supreme Court Decision

Republican Governors Association Chairman Bob McDonnell issued the following statement regarding the Supreme Court's decision to uphold the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act:

“Today's ruling crystallizes all that's at stake in November's election. The only way to stop Barack Obama's budget-busting health care takeover is by electing a new president.

Barack Obama's health care takeover encapsulates his Presidency: Obamacare increases taxes, grows the size of government and puts bureaucrats over patients while doing nothing to improve the economy.

It's never been more important that we elect a President who understands the marketplace and will make job creation his top priority. By replacing Barack Obama with Mitt Romney, we will not only stop the federal government's healthcare takeover, but will also take a giant step towards a full economic recovery.”

Action officers,

Per our meeting on Monday, I indicated I would make you aware of the documents provided to your COSs for tomorrow's COS call. As we discussed, many of the COSs hope this to be strictly a peer to peer conversation with other COSs. We want them to be as prepared as possible in their discussion and we hope this advance agenda is helpful to you. None of this should be new information and many of the documents are documents you've already received. There is a summary of goals for the subcommittees. This is still in draft form but we will discuss these activities on Monday.

Thanks,
Marie

AGENDA

1. Roll Call (Marie Sanderson- RGPPC)
2. Welcome from the RGA Chairman (Martin Kent- VA)
  - a. NGA meeting coordination and White House meeting (suggested themes: Jobs and the Economy, healthcare, Energy, and unfunded mandates/federalism. Talking points will be forwarded to your state). See schedule attached ("2012 NGA WM Program Draft for Staff")
  - b. Healthcare lawsuit Amicus Brief- Deadline Feb. 6
3. Welcome from RGPPC Chairman (Earl Goode- IN)
  - a. Governor Daniels Best Practices E Harmony Effort; see attached survey to complete included in Gov. Daniels' 11/15/2011 memo to governors ("2011 11 15 Daniels Memos to Govs"). We are seeking responses from 13 more states. The first matching making session on Performance Management, taught by IN, is Feb 17th at

RGPA in DC

4. Overview of efforts and attachments (Marie- RGPPC)
  - a. State of State Summary- a draft summary is prepared, attached ("2012-02-01 State of States Summary2"). This memo will continued to be enhanced and updated as budgets are released and reviewed.
  - b. State healthcare exchange update- see two documents attached summarizing award grants is attached ("2012 0101 Healthcare Exchange Award Summary and 2012-02-03 Exchangestatus_MW"). Neither are intended to label a state's position on healthcare exchanges.
  - c. Energy Brief- brief attached ("2012 COS EE Brief"). This brief is a summary of reports RGPPC is providing to energy staff.
  - d. Surveys— see surveys attached and links below to online versions ("2012 PPACA Survey, 2012 Energy and Env Regs Survey, 2012 Policy Contacts Survey")
    1. PPACA and healthcare; working with US Senate Finance and House Energy and Commerce to push back on a White House report indicating that some R states, which are moving forward with some form of a healthcare exchange, are endorsing Obamacare. Survey is meant for data collection.
https://www.surveymonkey.com/s/RGPPC\_PPACA
    2. Energy and Environment Regs; working with the Speaker's Office on the most burdensome regs and House Natural Resources on DoI and ESA. Survey is meant for data collection.
https://www.surveymonkey.com/s/EE\_Regs\_Survey
    3. Staff contacts; RGPPC is enhancing our distribution of information. We are seeking the appropriate policy advisor for the various issue sets in each office. Survey requests contact information for staff or agency head.
<https://www.surveymonkey.com/s/DR8ZQ7E>
  - e. RGPPC Subcommittee Goals; summary document attached ("COS Committee Update 2")
  - f. RGPPC Events (TBD- beginning in May- Nov)
5. Other Business
  - a. Natural gas MOU (Denise Northrop- OK ) see press materials and MOU attached ("NGV 01112 Bloomberg Bus Week, NGV 100311 GM Bi-Fuel Pickup, and NGV-MOU Amended 1-27-11")
6. Logistics, Meet via conference call quarterly?

Thank you. We look forward to continuing our work with you and your teams.

Late Tuesday afternoon, the federal government, through the Department of Justice, filed their official appeal and a request for an expedited appeal with the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals in the Florida Obamacare lawsuit. The attached RSC Policy Brief highlights some key findings within Judge Roger Vinson's order granting the federal government a stay of his declaratory judgment ruling Obamacare unconstitutional pending appeal.

Also, yesterday's CQ Today article yesterday (page 11) quoted Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) Administration Donald M. Berwick as stating, "I am talking with anyone in Congress who wants to talk with me. I enjoy it, and we're trying to find our way to a better health care system. That's the job I'm doing, and we have plenty of formats for interaction around that." This is not the first time that Administrator Berwick has offered to meet with any Member of Congress. At a November 17, 2010 Senate Finance Committee hearing, Administrator Berwick mentioned, "I want to have dialogue with you and all the Members of Congress...any request at an individual level to meet with any Member of Congress that's come my way I have said yes to and done it and I look forward to ongoing dialogue and exchange with this committee and all Members of Congress, it's my job to do that."

Some RSC Members have already sat down and personally met with Administrator Berwick to discuss his role as Administrator to an agency whose budget is larger than the Pentagon's, his background, and any other health care related issue. We recommend that your boss consider making a similar request.

Senators Challenge Insurance Mandate 43 Republicans Submit Amicus Brief On Behalf Of The Supreme Court Challenge Filed By States And Small Businesses

WASHINGTON, DC – U.S. Senate Republican Leader Mitch McConnell and 42 of his colleagues filed an amicus brief with the United States Supreme Court Monday on behalf of the bipartisan, multi-state challenge to the Democrats' health spending law.

"The Democrats' 2,700 page health spending bill represents an unprecedented and unconstitutional expansion of the federal government into the daily lives of every American," Sen. McConnell said. "Americans have rejected the law's mandate that they must buy government-approved health insurance, and we hope the Supreme Court will do the same."

The following are excerpts from the amicus brief:

"Put simply, Congress acted without constitutional authority in enacting the Individual Mandate of the PPACA. In so doing, it has damaged Congress' institutional legitimacy and has triggered severe conflicts between state and federal governments that the Constitution was carefully designed to avert."

"Because the Individual Mandate regulates a simple decision or choice not to purchase a particular product, it exceeds the proper scope of the Commerce Clause."

"If Congress may punish a decision to refrain from engaging in a private activity (namely, the purchase of health insurance) because the consequences of not engaging in it, in the aggregate, could substantially affect interstate commerce, then the Congress can require the purchase of virtually anything. For example, this same rationale would allow Congress to punish individuals for not purchasing a host of health-related products, such as vitamin supplements, the use of which could lower aggregate health costs. Indeed, it is hard to imagine any private decision not to purchase a particular good or service that does not have some economic impact when aggregated among millions of people. Under that rationale, the government could mandate any commercial activity."

The brief was signed by:

SOTU FACT: ObamaCare is Driving Up Costs & Jeopardizing Coverage for American Families

January 24, 2012 | Posted by Speaker Boehner's Press Office | Permalink

CLAIM: President Obama claims that ObamaCare is protecting access to health coverage for Americans.

- "I will not go back to the days when health insurance companies had unchecked power to cancel your policy, deny you coverage, or charge women differently from men.” (President Obama, State of the Union Address, January 24, 2012

FACT: ObamaCare is driving up premiums and jeopardizing coverage for millions of Americans. President Obama promised he would make our economy stronger, but policies like ObamaCare have made it worse.

- “Contrary to the President, the [Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services] actuaries find that Obamacare will dramatically increase the near-term growth rate of health care costs. In 2014, the actuaries find that growth in the net cost of health insurance will increase by nearly 14 percent, compared to 3.5% if PPACA had never passed.” (Forbes, 8/9/11)
- According to the Kaiser Family Foundation, “employers’ spending on health coverage for workers spiked abruptly” in 2011, with the average cost of a family plan increasing by nine percent, and the average cost for an individual plan increasing by eight percent.
- A June 2011 report by McKinsey & Co. found that 30-50 percent of employers said they would stop offering health coverage once the bulk of ObamaCare took effect.
- A May 2011 PriceWaterhouseCoopers survey found that 84 percent of employers would make changes to their plan as a result of ObamaCare.
- Instead of adding to the challenges small businesses face, Republicans have voted to repeal ObamaCare and have put forth a Plan for America’s Job Creators that focuses on removing government barriers to job growth.

QUOTE: “If there’s a constant in the story of ObamaCare, it’s broken promises. ... Instead of lower costs, families and small businesses are being squeezed even further. Instead of keeping what they like, millions are being forced off their coverage. ... Together, we can repeal ObamaCare and replace it with common-sense reforms that lower costs and protect American jobs.” (Speaker John Boehner, Press Release, 3/23/11)

MEMORANDUM

TO: House Republicans
FR: Eric Cantor
DT: Friday, May 25, 2012
RE: Summer Legislative Agenda

---

In line with our underlying principles for legislation, the House will move forward this summer with a number of proposals aimed at addressing job creation and the economy, reducing spending, and shrinking the size of the federal government while protecting and expanding liberty. Above all, we must continue to focus on economic growth and small business—producing results that get Americans back to work. The summer legislative schedule is detailed below for your review.

MEMORIAL DAY TO FATHER'S DAY

Nearly 7,000 American servicemen and women have lost their lives in Operation

Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom. There's no question that these tragic losses have made our country safer. Every day that goes by quietly on American soil is yet another silent reminder of the courageous blanket of freedom that our men and women in uniform have selflessly provided for us.

As we observe Memorial Day, it is critical that we ensure for the care and support of our returning heroes. To that end, the House will take up the Military Construction and Veterans' Affairs Appropriations bill on Thursday May 31, and Friday, June 1. This year's bill maintains funding at the FY12 appropriated level, taking into account our commitment to our Armed Forces and veterans and the reality of today's fiscal challenge. Chairman Hal Rogers and Subcommittee Chairman John Culberson should be commended for their work.

We will also pass our third authorization of the nation's intelligence community and its activities since taking the majority. I expect Chairman Mike Rogers' bill (H.R. 5743) to be brought forth and passed on Thursday, May 31, in a bipartisan manner. The Intelligence Committee's work this Congress has been truly impressive in restoring both the role of congressional oversight and bipartisanship, as well as needed policy solutions in rising threat areas like cyber security.

Members should be prepared to vote on Chairman Fred Upton's FDA user fee reform bill (H.R. 5651) on Wednesday, May 30. Chairman Upton's bipartisan bill brings needed reform to the federal drug and medical device approval process, enhancing the environment for American innovation and job growth. Though these programs expire at the end of September, the Energy and Commerce Committee hopes to complete negotiations with the Senate on a final bill by July 4th.

Related to the medical device industry is the draconian tax that is scheduled to go into effect under ObamaCare. This tax, to fund a flawed law, will have a negative impact on jobs in the medical device industry. Chairman Dave Camp and the Ways and Means Committee have done an excellent job highlighting this issue, as well as ObamaCare's ban on the use of Health Savings Accounts (HSAs), Flexible Spending Accounts (FSAs), and other accounts to purchase over-the-counter (OTC) drugs. Regardless of the outcome of the Supreme Court's decision on the constitutionality of ObamaCare, we should all be able to agree on Erik Paulsen's bill to repeal the medical device tax (H.R. 436) and Lynn Jenkins' bill to repeal the OTC ban (H.R. 5842). I expect a vote on the Paulsen and Jenkins bills as early as the week of June 4.

The remainder of our pre-Father's Day legislative agenda will be spent considering additional appropriations bills. Though we continue to work with the Committee on an exact schedule, possible bills include Energy and Water Appropriations, Homeland Security Appropriations, and Legislative Branch Appropriations. Each bill conforms to the overall level of discretionary spending authorized under the House's FY13 budget resolution and deserves our support.

As the Speaker has committed, these bills will be considered under an open and deliberative process, allowing all Members to offer amendments. In order to consider as many bills and amendments as possible, Members should be judicious in the issues they choose to raise, and expeditious in their remarks during consideration.

FATHER'S DAY TO INDEPENDENCE DAY

When we return from Father's Day, the House will turn its attention on the floor to American jobs and out-of-pocket expenses affected by domestic energy production. According to AAA, the average national price of a gallon of gasoline was $1.84 when President Obama took office. The average today is roughly double that level. That additional cost acts as a drag on the already-sluggish economy and a tax on struggling American consumers, especially small businesses and the middle class.

Some Democrats argue that increasing domestic oil and natural gas leases and regulatory reform won't affect the price at the pump today. This is the same argument they made 10 years ago that has prevented production today and contributed to domestic refinery closures.

The real tragedy is that thousands of jobs go unrealized as a result of the President's energy policies—jobs that could bolster our slow economic recovery. It is critically important that we promote and invest in America's energy resources, encouraging—not discouraging—states like North Dakota, Ohio, and Pennsylvania to lead a domestic energy boom.

Therefore, Chairman Doc Hastings and Chairman Upton will be bringing forward a series of bills from their respective committees during the week of June 18 to encourage production on federal lands and lessen the burden of job-inhibiting red tape. Mike Coffman, Cory Gardner, Bill Johnson, Doug Lamborn, Scott Tipton, and Ed Whitfield, as well as the entire House EnergyAction Team (HEAT), will be instrumental in this debate.

Job creation often starts at the local level with small businesses but all too often federal policies stand in the way of economic growth. By employing sound, scientific management, government can play a role in fostering growth at no cost to the taxpayer. Where appropriate, through reducing bureaucratic delays, transferring or selling land, and modifying restrictive land use designations, we can give a green light to needed infrastructure. Members on both sides of the aisle have locally-tailored bills such as these and Chairman Hastings and the Natural Resources Committee have done an excellent job in bringing them forward. I expect a number of these bills to come to the floor the week of June 18.

Finally, we will close out the month of June with the consideration of additional appropriations bills and stop-gap measures.

INDEPENDENCE DAY TO AUGUST

Americans will rightly be focused on the effects of the Supreme Court's ObamaCare decision when we return from July Fourth. Although we do not know how the Court will rule, we are prepared to move forward to ensure that the whole unworkable law is fully repealed.

Of course, we will also be focused on economic growth during the month of July. It's too hard to be a small business owner in America right now and we've got to turn that around. First among our efforts will be passing Tim Griffin's bill (H.R. 4078) aimed at cutting government red tape to make it easier for small businesses to create jobs. Under the Griffin bill, there will be a moratorium imposed on any new regulation, save for health and emergency, until unemployment drops below six percent nationally.

Additional Members, like Reid Ribble and Ben Quayle, have legislation to get government regulations off the back of our job creators. The Ribble bill (H.R. 4607) curtails so-called "midnight regulations," while the Quayle bill (H.R. 3862) shines a light on the preponderance of "sue-and-settle" agreements. We will be working with Chairman Lamar Smith and the Judiciary Committee to schedule as many of these proposals as possible throughout July.

The music industry and small business owners across the country watched nervously as the federal government recently raided Gibson Guitar. Whether intended or not, a 2008 law amending the over 100-year old Lacey Act resulted in the raid. Just as fast as Congress can create unintended consequences, we can also fix them. Jim Cooper and Marsha Blackburn have introduced a bill (H.R. 3210) that helps protect small business jobs from government criminalization. The Natural Resources Committee is currently working to advance the bipartisan Cooper bill so that it can be considered on the floor in July.

Our constituents have been—or will soon be—impacted by the closure and hours of operation changes to U.S. Postal Service (USPS) facilities across the country. This is the result of yet another government backed entity that cannot meet its financial obligations and is in need of vast reforms to its business plan and operations. Chairman Darrell Issa, Subcommittee Chairman Dennis Ross, and the Oversight and Government Reform Committee have passed a responsible proposal (H.R. 2309) to reform the USPS, and we will be working to bring their bill to the floor.

In July, we will also be voting on Ron Paul's bill authorizing an audit of the Federal Reserve and report to Congress (H.R. 459).

Very little of what we do this summer will be able to offset the harm to small businesses if the largest tax increase in American history is allowed to go into effect on January 1, 2013. In fact, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) warned us earlier this week that this massive tax increase will likely contribute to what would “probably be judged to be a recession.”

Working families and small business should not be saddled with the uncertainty of a looming tax increase as they attempt to invest and grow for the remainder of this year. That’s why Chairman Camp and the Ways and Means Committee have been working on pro-growth reform to simplify the tax code.

Knowing that comprehensive reform will take time, we must ensure that while Congress is working to bring about competitive change, government does not increase the cost of business. Therefore, before we leave for August, I expect to schedule a vote on legislation preventing the largest tax increase in history. The Senate should join us in providing this very basic level of certainty prior to November.

CONCLUSION

We have a busy legislative agenda planned this summer and our schedule will undoubtedly require further additions. I hope this memo provides you and your constituents with an outline of our pro-growth plan for the months ahead. Have a safe and blessed Memorial Day.

Sincerely,
Eric

Also, I think there was a question about TANF extensions at the end of Monday's meeting - - the House will take up an extension as a suspension tomorrow (Wednesday) as it is not included in the CR.

The President's "balanced" misdirection

The White House is marketing the President's new deficit reduction proposals as "A Balanced Approach."

THE PRESIDENT: Now, I'm proposing real, serious cuts in spending. When you include the $1 trillion in cuts I've already signed into law, these would be among the biggest cuts in spending in our history. But they've got to be part of a larger plan that's balanced -- a plan that asks the most fortunate among us to pay their fair share, just like everybody else.

The President argues that "balance" between spending cuts and tax increases is good. He further argues that he achieves this desired balance by both cutting spending and raising taxes. I think balance between spending cuts and tax increases is a negotiating concept rather than an objective measure of equity. It defines fair as "each of the negotiating parties has to accept things they don't like." That's a relativist concept based on how one defines what one likes or will accept. Further, the President's definition of "shared sacrifice" exempts the largest entitlement spending program (Social Security), his biggest legislative achievement (the new health entitlement created two years ago), and tax increases for more than 99% of the population. That is an odd definition of "shared."

Many others, however, accept the concept of balance between spending cuts and tax increases, and are willing to overlook the above problems. For the moment let's set aside my problems with spending/tax balance and examine whether the President's new proposals are balanced between spending cuts and tax increases.

Thanks to the help of a budget expert friend, I'm going to strip out the optical gimmicks from the President's proposal and show you the new fiscal policy changes he is actually proposing. All numbers below are 10-year totals (in billions of $) from OMB's new document released today. I put spending "cuts" in quotes because they're really reductions in the rate of spending growth.

|                                            | ($B 10 yrs) |
|--------------------------------------------|--------------|
| Mandatory spending "cuts"           |              |
| Medicare & Medicaid savings                | -320         |
| Other mandatory                            | -257         |
| Subtotal, mandatory spending "cuts" | -577  |
| Spending increases                  |              |
| Jobs bill spending increases               | +193         |
| Medicare "doc fix" (hidden)                | +298         |
| Subtotal, spending increases        | +491  |
| Net change in spending              | -86   |
| Taxes                               |              |
| Jobs bill tax cuts                         | -254         |

|                                         |              |
|-----------------------------------------|--------------|
| Tax increases                           | +1534        |
| Net tax increases                       | +1280        |
| Summary                          |              |
| Net deficit effect, spending            | -86          |
| Net deficit effect, taxes               | -1280        |
| Net deficit effect, all policies | -1366 |

This table differs from the Administration's presentation in the following ways:

- It does not count (again) deficit reduction resulting from discretionary spending cuts enacted six weeks ago in the Budget Control Act.
- It does not count (again) deficit reduction resulting from the drawdown in Iraq and the anticipated drawdown in Afghanistan, policies which were announced many months ago and do not represent new policy changes.
- It includes $298 B of proposed Medicare spending increases for doctors (the so-called "doc fix") that the Administration conveniently buries in the baseline. They did the same thing with ObamaCare, enacting that spending increase separately so they could claim the base bills reduced the deficit. This spending will occur, we just don't know in what legislative context it will be enacted.
- It focuses on policy changes, and therefore excludes the interest savings the Administration is using to bump up their totals. This interest savings would occur, but budget presentations traditionally leave that out and focus only on the direct savings from proposed policy changes.

Based on this presentation, I draw the following conclusions about the President's new proposal:

- The President is not, as he claims "proposing real, serious cuts in spending." His proposals would result in a tiny net reduction in spending: -$86 B over 10 years. Almost all of the spending cuts for which he wants to claim credit have already been enacted or accounted for. Almost all the new spending cuts he proposes would be used to offset higher spending in his Jobs bill proposal and for more Medicare spending on doctors.
- The President is proposing about $1.5 T in higher taxes over ten years, offset by about $250 B of tax relief, for a net tax increase of almost $1.3 T.
- Almost all of the President's new proposed deficit reduction comes from tax increases.

Simplifying even further, there is a perverse hidden logic to the President's proposal. It goes like this: "We cut spending in the spring and summer, so we're going to propose almost all tax increases this time. That's balanced." If you reread the Presidential quote up top, you can see the rhetorical trick revealed:

THE PRESIDENT: ... When you include the $1 trillion in cuts I've already signed into law, these would be among the biggest cuts in spending in our history. But they've got to be part of a larger plan that's balanced ...

You could be forgiven for thinking that the President is claiming that his new proposals are balanced, and that "the larger plan that's balanced" is what he has proposed this month, consisting of equal-sized spending cuts and tax increases. That is the incorrect conclusion to which you are led, but technically the President is not claiming that. The "larger plan that's balanced" is one that includes spending cuts enacted over the past six months. The "among the biggest cuts in spending in our history" are not those newly proposed, but those previously enacted. They are playing a word game to fool you, and if you listen carefully you'll hear it repeated over the next few weeks. Team Obama knows they'd never win the public debate if they admitted that the President is now proposing massive tax increases to "balance" previously enacted spending cuts, so they're engaging in a little misdirection.

Team Boehner

November 13, 2012

Dear [House GOP Colleague],

Two years ago, as we prepared for the opening sessions of the 112th Congress, I vowed our Republican majority in the House of Representatives would be an outpost in Democratic-controlled Washington for the priorities of the American people. The idea was that we'd be the vanguard for the like-minded GOP White House and Senate that would arrive after 2012.

We find ourselves today with a different mission. For the foreseeable future, we will be the last line of defense in Washington for the American people against a government that spends too much, taxes too much, and borrows too much when left to its own devices.

Americans re-elected President Obama and a Democratic majority in the Senate. But they also re-affirmed our majority in the House. Indeed, tempered by a few painful losses, the historic freshman class of 2010 returns nearly intact, joined by some new Members-elect who are certain to further invigorate our conference.

Together with the 30 Republicans who will serve in 2013 as governors of their states, we have the responsibility – and opportunity – of carrying our party's banner of freedom, economic opportunity and limited government into the future.

Some would have us roll that banner up and tuck it away.

That isn't going to happen.

A better approach is to hoist the banner high, true to our principles, with a determination to govern and serve responsibly. We serve the American people, millions of whom entrusted us with the majority – and that's what they're counting on us to do.

Our core principles are strong, and enduring. They are the principles upon which a great nation was built. And they are the principles upon which, in time, a stronger, prosperous America will be built as well.

Our party doesn't need new principles. What it needs is a new plan – a strategy that speaks to Americans from all walks of life, and properly conveys our passion for reforms that preserve and renew the American Dream.

Problems in our party's infrastructure for campaigns and elections must be diagnosed and remedied to ensure our resources are fully deployed in support of our principles.

And most importantly, we need to redouble our commitment to the pillars of the reform agenda for which our majority has fought and sacrificed, and endured.

Here's what I have in mind. It boils down to four parts, which I'm eager to discuss further with you this week.

THE PILLARS

Our economic vision of pro-growth tax reform with fewer loopholes and lower rates for all – and entitlement reforms critical to reducing the primary drivers of our debt – represent not just a path to avert the “fiscal cliff,” but also the basis for solutions to the biggest problem our country faces. The debt is the greatest challenge our country faces – a direct threat to our children’s future. It can only be solved with economic growth. Raising tax rates, as President Obama proposed on the campaign trail, will hurt our economy, making the problem worse.

As I said last week, 2013 must be the year we enact significant tax reform and entitlement reform to begin the process of solving our debt problem. Our first challenge of the new Congress is to deal successfully with the final challenge of the current Congress. That means averting the fiscal cliff in a manner that steers clear of increased tax rates and encourages economic growth instead.

As I also said last week, the president’s health care law – which adds a massive, expensive, unworkable government program at a time when our debt already exceeds the size of our whole economy – must remain on the table. The president’s re-election means it’s the law of the land at the moment – but we can’t afford ObamaCare, and we can’t afford to leave it intact.

I’ve long maintained that there are three possible routes to repeal of ObamaCare: the courts, the presidential election, and our constitutional responsibility for oversight. With two of them having come up short, the third and final of these becomes more important than ever.

THE POLICIES

Private-sector job growth eluded us during President Obama’s first term, in part because of the regulatory juggernaut that looms over small businesses. The president’s second-term almost certainly will bring a renewed zeal on the part of the White House to implement through regulation what the president has been unable to impose on job creators through legislation. Our constitutional responsibility for oversight of the Executive Branch – and our readiness to move legislation that prevents excessive regulatory meddling in our economy – will be critical in the coming year as our economy struggles to grow.

Our oversight activity need not be limited to oversight of the Executive Branch. With the president’s re-election, a continued stream of Obama-appointed judges at the district and appellate level is guaranteed. We should not be hesitant to exercise our constitutional oversight responsibility in circumstances in which judicial overreach has occurred or threatens to occur, particularly when it poses harm to our economy.

Just as we'll be ready to say where we disagree with President Obama and his Democratic-controlled Senate, we must also be prepared to identify areas in which we agree or see opportunity for common ground. In 2011, trade was one such area, resulting in the enactment of important Free Trade Agreements with Colombia, Korea, and Panama. The year or two ahead may bring the opportunity for even more significant trade agreements involving the Pacific region. A Democratic-controlled House stalled such achievements for years at the expense of U.S. jobs; our Republican majority must ensure they advance.

THE PROBLEM

Warning signs are flashing on the dashboard for our party. Some of the problems are tactical in nature; others are strategic. We can't ignore them and expect to assemble a winning electoral coalition in the future.

We need a state-of-the-art political infrastructure fueled by rock-solid data that can be relied upon to turn out voters when we need them in the places they're needed most. We need accurate survey data, and technology in place that will ensure such data is put to use. And as I noted earlier, our strategy at all levels must be aimed at reaching potential voters from all walks of life. That doesn't mean changing our principles; it means changing our approach.

THE POTENTIAL

While challenges lie ahead for our party, opportunities clearly exist as well. From the House to the Senate to the 30 states who will have a Republican governor in 2013, we have a very deep bench of leaders eager for the chance to take our country in a different direction. My leadership style is to recognize the unique talent and potential of every member of our team, and put members in a place where they can grow and succeed.

Some of the policy frontiers that lie ahead offer possibilities as well. On immigration, for example, we have an opportunity to offer innovative solutions rooted in our enduring principles.

IN SUMMARY: A MAJORITY THAT MATTERS

Commitment to principle provides clarity of purpose that is essential to successful leadership. With it comes the confidence to articulate not just what we're against, but what we are for.

When in 2007 I became House Republican Leader, one of my first and toughest duties was handing Rep. Pelosi the Speaker's gavel on Opening Day. I did so with a gentle note of caution for the incoming Democratic majority.

"The value of a majority lies not in the opportunity to wield great power," I said, "but in the chance to use limited power to do great things.”

Having served as Speaker now for two years, I believe more strongly than ever that this must be our test. The American people need us to act courageously, think selflessly, and lead boldly. Having humbled us with their confidence, the American people deserve nothing less.

I ask that you give me the honor of serving as your Speaker as we stand to meet that test.

Sincerely,

John Boehner

MEMORANDUM

TO: House Republicans

FR: Eric Cantor

DT: Monday, August 29, 2011

RE: Upcoming Jobs Agenda

As you know, we released The House Republican Plan for America's Job Creators earlier this year. While the debt crisis has demanded much of our attention, our new majority has passed over a dozen pro-growth measures to address the equally troubling jobs crisis, such as the Energy Tax Prevention Act and the Putting the Gulf of Mexico Back to Work Act. Aside from repeal of the 1099 reporting requirement in ObamaCare, however, each House Republican jobs bill now sits dormant in the Democrat-controlled Senate. You can view the progress of our jobs bills at MajorityLeader.gov/JobsTracker.

When we return next week, the Joint Select Committee on Deficit Reduction will begin meeting to take an additional incremental step towards addressing our debt crisis. During this time, it is essential that the House continue our focus on the jobs crisis. Below are two areas of our jobs agenda that I want to bring to your attention for our upcoming fall and winter legislative schedule.

REPEAL OF JOB-DESTROYING REGULATIONS TO CREATE MIDDLE CLASS JOBS

Since passage of H.Res. 72 on February 11, our committee chairmen have been investigating and inventorying regulatory burdens to job creators. They've found many that have tied the hands of small business people and prevented job growth. By pursuing a steady repeal of job-destroying regulations, we can help lift the cloud of uncertainty hanging over small and large employers alike, empowering them to hire more workers.

Our regulatory relief agenda will include repeal of specific regulations, as well as fundamental and structural reform of the rule-making system through legislation like the REINS Act, the Regulatory Flexibility Improvements Act, and reform of the Administrative Procedures Act (all three bills are expected on the floor in late November and early December).

The following is a list of the 10 most harmful job-destroying regulations that our committee chairmen have identified, as well as a selective calendar for their repeal.

These regulations are reflective of the types of costly bureaucratic handcuffs that Washington has imposed upon business people who want to create jobs.

Top 10 Job-Destroying Regulations:

- NLRB's Boeing Ruling (Week of September 12): On April 20, the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) issued a complaint against The Boeing Company for the alleged transfer of an assembly line from Washington to South Carolina. Yet, not one union employee at Boeing's Puget Sound facility has lost his or her job as a result of the proposed South Carolina plant. Still, the NLRB is pursuing a "restoration order" against Boeing that would cost South Carolina thousands of jobs and deter future investment in the United States. H.R. 2587, the Protecting Jobs From Government Interference Act, sponsored by Rep. Tim Scott (SC), would take the common sense step of preventing the NLRB from restricting where an employer can create jobs in the United States.
- Utility MACT and CSAPR (Week of September 19): The Administration's new maximum achievable control technology (MACT) standards and cross-state air pollution rule (CSAPR) for utility plants will affect electricity prices for nearly all American consumers. In total, 1,000 power plants are expected to be affected. The result for middle class Americans? Annual electricity bill increases in many parts of the country of anywhere from 12 to 24 percent. H.R. 2401, the Transparency in Regulatory Analysis of Impacts on the Nation (TRAIN) Act, sponsored by Rep. John Sullivan (OK), would require a cumulative economic analysis for specific EPA rules, and specifically delay the final date for both the utility MACT and CSAPR rules until the full impact of the Obama Administration's regulatory agenda has been studied.
- Boiler MACT (Week of October 3): From hospitals to factories to colleges, thousands of major American employers use boilers that will be impacted by the EPA's new "boiler MACT" rules. These new stringent rules will impose billions of dollars in capital and compliance costs, increase the cost of many goods and services, and put over 200,000 jobs at risk. The American forest and paper industry, for example, will see an additional burden of at least $5-7 billion. H.R. 2250, the EPA Regulatory Relief Act, sponsored by Rep. Morgan Griffith (VA), would provide a legislative stay of four interrelated rules issued by the EPA in March of this year. The legislation would also provide the EPA with at least 15 months to re-propose and finalize new, achievable rules that do not destroy jobs, and provide employers with an extended compliance period.
- Cement MACT (Week of October 3): The "cement MACT" and two related rules are expected to affect approximately 100 cement plants in America, setting exceedingly stringent requirements that will be cost-prohibitive or technically infeasible to achieve. Increased costs and regulatory uncertainty for the American cement industry—the foundation of nearly all infrastructure projects—are likely to offshore thousands of American jobs. Ragland, Alabama, for example, recently saw the suspension of a $350 million cement production facility, putting 1,500 construction jobs on hold and additional permanent and high-paying plant operation jobs in limbo. H.R. 2681, the Cement Sector Regulatory Relief Act, sponsored by Rep. John Sullivan (OK), would provide a legislative stay of these three rules and provide EPA with at least 15 months to re-propose and finalize new, achievable rules that do not destroy jobs, and provide employers with an extended compliance period.

- Coal Ash (October/November): These anti-infrastructure regulations, commonly referred to as the “coal ash” rules, will cost hundreds of billions of dollars, affecting everything from concrete production to building products like wall board. The result is an estimated loss of well over 100,000 jobs. H.R. 2273, the Coals Residuals Reuse and Management Act, sponsored by Rep. David McKinley (WV), would create an enforceable minimum standard for the regulation of coal ash by the states, allowing their use in a safe manner that protects jobs.
- Grandfathered Health Plans (November/December): We all remember when President Obama promised Americans that if they liked their health care plan they could keep it. Now, the Obama Administration has been issuing further restrictions against those previously protected plans. The result, by the Administration’s own estimates, will be a loss of 49 to 80 percent of small employer plans, 34 to 64 percent of large employer plans, and 40 to 67 percent of individual insurance plans. Meanwhile, employers losing their grandfathered status will face steep penalties, increasing their costs and negatively affecting wages and job growth. The Energy and Commerce, Ways and Means, and Education and Workforce committees will soon be working on legislation to repeal these ObamaCare restrictions.
- Ozone Rule (Winter): This effective ban or restriction on construction and industrial growth for much of America is possibly the most harmful of all the currently anticipated Obama Administration regulations. Consequences would reach far across the U.S. economy, resulting in an estimated cost of $1 trillion or more over a decade and millions of jobs. Unlike her predecessors, EPA Administrator Lisa Jackson is pushing for a premature readjustment of the current ozone standards, dramatically increasing the number of “nonattainment” areas. The new readjustment rule is expected early this fall and I expect the Energy and Commerce Committee to act swiftly to prevent its implementation, in order to protect American jobs.
- Farm Dust (Winter): The EPA is expected to issue revised standards for particulate matter (PM) in the near future. Any downward revision to PM standards will significantly impact economic growth and jobs for businesses and people throughout rural America that create dust, like the farmer in Atkinson, Illinois, who raised his concerns with the President at a town hall earlier this month. While the President may have sent him on a bureaucratic wild goose chase, the House will act promptly on H.R. 1633, the Farm Dust Regulation Prevention Act, sponsored by Rep. Kristi Noem (SD). H.R. 1633 would protect American farmers and jobs by establishing a one year prohibition against revising any national ambient air quality standard applicable to coarse PM and limiting federal regulation of dust where it is already regulated under state and local laws.

- Greenhouse Gas (Winter): The EPA's upcoming greenhouse gas new source performance standards (NSPS) will affect new and existing oil, natural gas, and coal-fired power plants, as well as oil refineries, nationwide. While the impact on the economy and jobs are likely to be severe, the rules are quickly moving forward, once again revealing the Administration's disregard for the consequences of their policies on our jobs crisis. Again, I expect Chairman Upton and the Energy and Commerce Committee to move swiftly in the coming months to protect American jobs and consumers.
- NLRB's Ambush Elections (Winter): This summer, the NLRB issued a notice of proposed rulemaking that could significantly alter current union representation election procedures, giving both employers and employees little time to react to union formations in the future. The result will increase labor costs and uncertainty for nearly all private employers in the U.S. The House will soon consider legislation that will bring common sense to union organizing procedures to protect the interests of both employers and their workers.

IMMEDIATE TAX RELIEF TO CREATE MIDDLE CLASS JOBS

The second focus of our jobs agenda this fall and winter will pursue tax relief designed to help American employers create middle class jobs. Small businesses, in particular, are overburdened with taxes that destroy jobs and in a fragile economy, the worst thing government can do is impose tax increases that prevent small businesses from hiring. Instead, government should be focused on ways to enable businesses small and large to unlock more capital and create new jobs.

Therefore, under Chairman Dave Camp's leadership, the Ways and Means Committee will be exploring a number of ways to remove tax burdens for job creators and incentivize small businesses. These targeted efforts will not interfere with House

Republicans' continued pursuit of fundamental tax reform, just as we proposed in our budget resolution this spring. Rather, the following proposals represent bipartisan and pro-growth steps that can be taken immediately to help businesses hire those struggling to find a job today.

3% Withholding Rule Repeal:

Beginning in 2013, federal, state, and local governments will be required to withhold three percent of all government payments made to contractors in excess of $100 million. While the law has been delayed multiple times, its effect once implemented will be massive—causing accounting burdens on governments and potentially harmful cash flow disruptions for contractors and subcontractors across all sectors. Therefore, we will move quickly this fall to repeal this burdensome requirement and relieve construction contractors, medical providers, manufacturers, farmers, and many others providing goods and services under government contracts of the uncertainty the impending law is creating.

20% Small Business Tax Deduction:

Small businesses employ about half of all Americans, yet President Obama is proposing federal tax rates that could take away more than 40 percent of their income. While the previous Democrat majority was pushing through their nearly $1 trillion stimulus, we began work on a proposal to allow small business people to take a tax deduction equal to 20% of their income. The goal was simple—immediately free up funds for small business people to retain and hire new employees, and reinvest in and grow their businesses. In light of the stimulus's failure, and our current position in the majority, I expect the House to move quickly in the coming months on this common sense and pro-growth small business proposal to create middle-class jobs.

FINAL THOUGHTS

In the weeks and months ahead, we will move aggressively on the items outlined above. But, our increased focus on the repeal of job-destroying regulations and pursuit of pro-growth tax relief will not distract from other equally important areas of our jobs agenda.

As he has promised in the past, we expect the President to transmit three vitally important trade agreements this fall. When he finally sends them our way, I will not hesitate to schedule them. In addition, the Senate has set up a vote on the House-passed patent reform bill next week. Increased movement in both of these areas on the part of the President and the Senate is welcomed. I hope the Senate and the President will join the House in acting on the other many pro-growth items we have already passed and will be passing in the coming months.

See you next week.

Sincerely,
Eric

Subject: Washington's Latest "Power Grab"

The New York Times has an article this morning on the Administration's proposed new Medicaid regulations. The regulations, which were released Friday, will according to the article "make it much more difficult for states to cut Medicaid payments" and "could also put pressure on some states to increase Medicaid payments" – both of which will further exacerbate states' already difficult fiscal situations.

The article also includes a sampling of reactions from state Medicaid directors to the proposed rule, which shows the bipartisan opposition to yet another attempt by the federal government to micro-manage state programs:

Dennis Smith, secretary of Wisconsin's Department of Health Services: "A federal power grab....Putting states in jeopardy, by inventing a new meaning for a longstanding statutory provision, is another example of how distant and disconnected the administration is from what is happening across the country."

Douglas Porter, Washington state’s Medicaid director: “The Administration has gone overboard, creating a system of access review that is far too complex, elaborate and burdensome.” (As a reminder, Washington state’s governor is a Democrat.)

Bruce Greenstein, secretary of Louisiana’s Department of Health and Hospitals: “The proposal leaves too much discretion with the federal government. It does not clearly enunciate the criteria to be used in measuring access to care.”

Unfortunately, the article notes that Washington could impose even more new mandates on Medicaid programs in the months to come: “The new rule does not apply to managed care. But the Obama administration said it was ‘considering future proposals’ to guarantee access to care for Medicaid recipients in such private health plans.”

States are already suffering from record budget deficits, due in large part to the continued sluggish economy. Having failed to deliver the lower unemployment and economic growth that could help alleviate state budgetary shortfalls, the Obama Administration instead is working to exacerbate them, by imposing new mandates that could force states to raise taxes or cut other essential government spending.

Rule Would Discourage States’ Cutting Medicaid Payments to Providers

By ROBERT PEAR

WASHINGTON — In a new effort to increase access to health care for poor people, the Obama administration is proposing a rule that would make it much more difficult for states to cut Medicaid payments to doctors and hospitals.

The rule could also put pressure on some states to increase Medicaid payment rates, which are typically lower than what Medicare and commercial insurance pay.

Federal officials said Monday that the rule was needed to fulfill the promise of federal law, which says Medicaid recipients should have access to health care at least to the same extent as the general population.

“We have a responsibility to ensure sufficient beneficiary access to covered services,” the administration said in issuing the proposal, to be published Friday in the Federal Register.

In many parts of the country, Medicaid recipients have difficulty finding doctors who will take them because Medicaid payment rates are so low.

Faced with huge financial problems, many states have frozen or reduced Medicaid payments to health care providers, and governors of both parties have proposed additional cuts this year. Medicaid recipients and health care providers have sued state officials to block such cuts, and one case, from California, is pending in the United States Supreme Court.

“Tight state budgets, coupled with increased demand for services during the recession, have led many states to propose reductions in Medicaid provider payments, without clear federal guidance on how to assure access,” said Cindy Mann, the federal official in charge of Medicaid.

The new rule provides that guidance, but several state officials expressed concerns.

Dennis G. Smith, secretary of the Wisconsin Department of Health Services, described the proposal as “a federal power grab.”

“The administration talks about flexibility and working with states, but continues to take actions such as this that are contrary to the partnership,” Mr. Smith said. “Putting states in jeopardy, by inventing a new meaning for a longstanding statutory provision, is another example of how distant and disconnected the administration is from what is happening across the country.”

Medicaid is financed jointly by the federal government and the states. Even before the recent recession, it was one of the fastest-growing items in most state budgets.

Douglas Porter, the Medicaid director in Washington State, said: “The intent of the proposed regulation is reasonable. But the administration has gone overboard, creating a system of access review that is far too complex, elaborate and burdensome.”

Bruce D. Greenstein, secretary of the Louisiana Department of Health and Hospitals, said: “The proposal leaves too much discretion with the federal government. It does not clearly enunciate the criteria to be used in measuring access to care.”

The new initiative comes as federal and state officials prepare for a huge expansion of Medicaid eligibility, scheduled to occur in 2014 under the new health care law.

About half of the 34 million uninsured people who are expected to gain coverage under the law will get it through Medicaid.

The proposed rule generally prevents states from cutting Medicaid payments to providers unless they can show that Medicaid recipients will have “sufficient access” to care after the cuts.

Regardless of whether they want to cut payment rates, states must continually monitor Medicaid recipients’ access to care and develop plans to fix any problems they discover, the rule says.

Under the rule, states must measure and document access to “each covered benefit” at least once every five years. Data from such reviews could provide doctors, hospitals and nursing homes with powerful new tools to lobby for higher reimbursement.

States set Medicaid payment rates within broad federal guidelines. Federal law has long said that states must “enlist enough providers” to make sure Medicaid recipients have access to care equivalent to that of other people in the area.

Under presidents of both parties, federal officials have often disregarded this requirement, approving cuts in Medicaid payment rates that discouraged doctors from accepting Medicaid patients.

In an effort to rein in costs, states have increasingly turned to health maintenance organizations and other types of managed care. The new rule does not apply to managed care. But the Obama administration said it was “considering future proposals” to guarantee access to care for Medicaid recipients in such private health plans.

Under the proposal being issued this week, “beneficiary access must be considered in setting and adjusting” Medicaid payments to doctors, dentists, psychologists, hospitals, clinics, pharmacies, nursing homes and suppliers of medical equipment.

States must consult Medicaid recipients because, the rule says, their experience is “the most important indicator of whether access is sufficient.” Federal officials suggested that states survey Medicaid recipients to see how much difficulty they had in scheduling doctor’s appointments.

In addition, the rule says, states should compare Medicaid payment rates with the amounts paid by Medicare or commercial insurers, with providers’ costs or with their customary charges. Another important factor, it said, is the number and percentage of doctors who accept new Medicaid patients.

A roundup of what each state's leadership has said about their Medicaid plans

Last updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.

The Supreme Court's ruling on the Affordable Care Act (ACA) allows states to opt out of the law's Medicaid expansion, leaving each state's decision to participate in the hands of the nation's governors and state leaders.

Based on lawmakers' statements, press releases, and media coverage, the Daily Briefing and American Health Line editorial teams have rounded up where each state currently stands on the expansion.

**Italics indicate a state's participation in the multistate lawsuit against ACA*

Will not participate (5 states)

- Florida: Gov. Rick Scott (R) said, “Florida will opt out of spending approximately $1.9 billion more taxpayer dollars required to implement a massive entitlement expansion of the Medicaid program.” In addition, the governor said the state will not establish an insurance exchange (Pear, New York Times, 7/2).
- Louisiana: In an interview on NBC’s “Meet the Press,” Gov. Bobby Jindal (R) said, “Every governor’s got two critical decisions to make. One is do we set up these exchanges. And, secondly, do we expand Medicaid. And, no, in Louisiana, we’re not doing either one of those things” (Barrow, New Orleans Times-Picayune, 7/2).
- Mississippi: Gov. Phil Bryant (R) does not plan to participate in the Medicaid expansion, according to Bryant spokesperson Mick Bullock, Bloomberg reports (Niquette/Wayne, Bloomberg, 7/5).
- South Carolina: Gov. Nikki Haley (R) on Sunday announced via Facebook that South Carolina “will NOT expand Medicaid, or participate in any health exchanges” (Hawkins, TheDigitalCharleston, 7/2; Dudley, Charleston Post and Courier, 6/29).
- Wisconsin: Gov. Scott Walker (R) issued a statement following Thursday’s ruling saying that “Wisconsin will not take any action to implement ObamaCare” (Office of Gov. Walker release, 6/28; Radnofsky et al., Wall Street Journal, 7/2).

Leaning toward not participating (6 states)

- Iowa: Gov. Terry Branstad (R) announced at a Des Moines news conference that while his staff is still assessing the Supreme Court ruling on the ACA, he expects to forgo the federal funding that would allow an estimated 150,000 low-income Iowans to enroll in the state Medicaid program. Branstad said, “Here’s the problem: The federal government has done this again and again: ‘Buy into our program, and we’re going to do all these things for you,’ and then it doesn't happen, and then the taxpayers of the state get stuck with it," Branstad said on Monday (Totland, Washington Times, 7/2; Wiser, Waterloo Cedar Falls Courier, 7/3).

- Missouri: Moments after the ruling, Republican leaders in Missouri "closed the door... on expanding Medicaid eligibility," the Associated Press reports. Republican Lt. Gov. Peter Kinder said the Medicaid expansion would be "a break-the-bank provision for the state of Missouri." House Budget Committee Chair Ryan Silvey (R), said, "I just don't see any way we will be expanding Medicaid at the expense of things like education and public safety." By rejecting Medicaid expansion the state would be "turning down an estimated $8.4 billion windfall from the federal government" but could save up to "$431 million of its own" (Blank, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28; Crisp, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, 7/1).
- Nebraska: Gov. Dave Heineman (R) on June 28 pledged to block any effort to expanded Nebraska's Medicaid program, telling reporters that an expansion would remove money from other priorities or require a tax increase, AP/BloombergBusinessweek reports. In a statement on his website, Heineman said, "As I have said repeatedly, if this unfunded Medicaid expansion is implemented, state aid to education and funding for the University of Nebraska will be cut or taxes will be increased. If some state senators want to increase taxes or cut education funding, I will oppose them." However, the governor noted that the Supreme Court's decision on Medicaid was unexpected, adding, "Again, I want to emphasize that reviewing this decision in a detailed, thoughtful and responsible manner will take time before a complete determination can be made on what this ruling means for Nebraska" (Schulte, AP/BloombergBusinessWeek, 6/29; Heineman statement, 6/28).
- Nevada: After the Supreme Court ruling, Gov. Brian Sandoval (R) said the impact of the decision on was not immediately clear but indicated that he is leaning toward not expanding the state's Medicaid program. Sandoval's press secretary, Mary-Sarah Kinner, said in a statement, "The governor does not intend to automatically accept the Medicaid expansion" (Haynes et al., Las Vegas Review-Journal, 6/28).
- New Jersey: on Fox News' "Fox and Friends" on July 3, Gov. Chris Christie (R) said he is leaning toward not accepting federal funding to expand the state's Medicaid program. He noted, "Medicaid is pretty well expanded in our state already because of the legacy of previous Democratic governors. So I don't know if there's a lot more to do in New Jersey in that regard" ("Fox News Insider," Fox News, 7/3; San Francisco Chronicle, 7/3; Friedman, Newark Star-Ledger, 7/3).

- Texas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Lucy Nashed—deputy press secretary for Gov. Rick Perry (R)—said Perry will be working with Attorney General Greg Abbott (R) "and appropriate state agencies to determine the impact of the Supreme Court decision on the state of Texas," adding that "the governor has previously made clear, he has no interest in fast tracking any portion of this bankrupting and overreaching legislation. We will continue to call for the full repeal of the bill" (Nashed email, 7/5). [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]

Leaning toward participating (3 states)

- Arkansas: Gov. Mike Beebe (D) said he is inclined to proceed with Medicaid expansion for his state given the "opportunity to pay for it with taxes that are coming from ... the federal government," he said at a news conference in Washington, D.C. "I don't want to send [tax money] to Massachusetts or California and ignore our own people," he added (Lyon, Arkansas News, 7/2).
- Oregon: Gov. John Kitzhaber (D) said he is confident that the Oregon legislature will approve a state Medicaid expansion, and State Sen. Alan Bates (D) has expressed similar confidence, the Associated Press reports. In an interview last week, Kitzhaber said, "We'll make a decision on whether or not to expand the Medicaid program really based on, I think, the resources we have available in the general fund for that purpose going forward" (Budnick, The Oregonian, 7/3; Wong, Statesman Journal, 6/28; Cooper, AP/Real Clear Politics, 6/28).
- Rhode Island: In statement on his website, Gov. Lincoln Chaffee (I) said, "I have fully committed to ensuring Rhode Island is a national leader in implementing health reform whatever the Supreme Court decision, and this just reinforces that commitment." According to Steven Costantino, the state's secretary of health and human services, "The expansion is easy to do and makes sense" (Chaffee statement, 6/28; Radnofsky et al.,

Participating (10 states and District of Columbia)

- California: California got a head start on expanding its Medicaid program in November 2010, shortly after Obama signed the Affordable Care Act into law. After the high court's ruling, Gov. Jerry Brown (D) issued a statement, "Today's dramatic Supreme Court ruling removes the last roadblock to fulfilling President Obama's historic plan to bring health care to millions of uninsured citizens." Duane Dauner, president of the California Hospital Association, said in separate statement that he expects "California will comply with the Medicaid expansion in the law, even though it will increase the state's costs in future years" (Office of Gov. Brown release, 6/28; California Hospital Association release, 7/3).
- Connecticut: Gov. Dannel Malloy (D) was among the first to sign his state up for Medicaid expansion when Obama signed the law in 2010. Following the Supreme Court's ruling preserving the legislation, he responded, "it's great ... [and a] very important decision for the people of Connecticut. 500,000 people would have lost coverage if Republicans had their way" (Davis, WTNH, 7/28).
- Delaware: Gov. Jack Markell—chair of the Democratic Governors Association—said in a statement, "The Supreme Court's ruling enables Delaware to continue to implement provisions of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to provide access to health care benefits for Delawareans," adding, "On the Medicaid front, Delaware already voluntarily expanded the state's Medicaid coverage program in 1996 to cover many Delawareans not previously covered" (Office of Gov. Markell release, 6/28).
- District of Columbia: "The District is not at risk of losing any Medicaid funding as a result of this ruling, because District officials have already begun implementation of the ACA's Medicaid-expansion provisions and will continue to implement the expansion," according to a statement from the office of D.C. Mayor Vincent Gray (D) (Executive Office of the Mayor release, 6/28).
- Hawaii: Gov. Neil Abercrombie (D) said in a statement after the ruling, "The Affordable Care Act is our ally" in the effort to "support a healthcare system that ensures high quality, safety and sustainable costs." Pat McManaman, the state's director of the Department of Human Services, said starting next month Hawaii's Medicaid eligibility requirements will be in line with federal guidelines under the overhaul, meaning an additional 24,000 people will be eligible for the program by 2014 (Office of Gov. Abercrombie release, 6/28; Garcia, AP/CBS News, 6/29).

- Illinois: Gov. Pat Quinn (D) on Thursday praised the court's decision and said he "will continue to work with President Obama to help working families get the healthcare coverage they need," including expanding Medicaid (Office of the Governor release, 6/28; Thomason, Rock River Times, 7/3).
- Maryland: Gov. Martin O'Malley (D) in a statement said the Supreme Court's decision "gives considerable momentum to our health care reform efforts here in Maryland," adding that the state will move forward to implement the overhaul (Office of the Governor release, 6/28).
- Massachusetts: Gov. Deval Patrick (D) said Massachusetts is "an early expansion state as you know and we're expecting further resources from federal government to sustain the experiment here in Massachusetts." Patrick said the ruling is "good news for us" Patrick said (Walker, YNN, 6/28).
- Minnesota: "Today's ruling will be met with relief by the Minnesotans whose lives have already been improved by this law," Gov. Mark Dayton (D) said in a statement on Thursday. Dayton in 2011 used federal money to expand Medicaid early to 84,000 adults with annual incomes below $8,400 (Lohn, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Vermont: Gov. Peter Shumlin (D) said Vermont's Medicaid program already meets the requirements under the health reform law's Medicaid expansion, WCAX reports (Steimle, WCAX, 7/1).
- Washington: Gov. Chris Gregoire (D) "supports the Medicaid expansion—and Washington will move forward," Karina Shagren—a deputy communications director in Gregoire's administration—said in an email to American Health Line (Shagren email, 7/5).
[updated on July 5 at 1:35 p.m.]

Undecided/no comment (26 states)

- Alabama: As of June 29, Gov. Robert Bentley (R) had not decided whether Alabama will opt out of the Medicaid expansion, according to Jennifer Ardis, Bentley's press secretary, AP/CBS

News reports. In a statement on his website, Bentley said, “I am deeply disappointed by today’s Supreme Court decision,” but he did not address the court’s ruling on the Medicaid expansion (AP/CBS News, 6/29; Bentley statement, 6/28).

- Alaska: As of Tuesday, Gov. Sean Parnell (R) has not made a statement regarding Alaska’s intent to participate in the Medicaid expansion, only saying in a release that “now with no penalty we need to rethink what we’re going to do with Medicaid” and the “expansion costs that are mandated” (Office of Gov. Parnell release, 6/28; Coyne, Alaska Dispatch, 7/1).
- Arizona: Gov. Jan Brewer (R) in a statement following the Supreme Court ruling repeated her call for the entire law to be repealed but did not directly address the expansion. House Speaker Andy Tobin (R), however, said budgetary issues in the state and a conservative political climate will make expanding Medicaid difficult. “We’re going to have to sit down and weigh carefully what is reasonable to expect of our political leaders,” he said. “I don’t see us going along with the expansion if it’s not mandated,” Tobin added. “It’s an ever-expanding cost, so it continues to put pressure on the state budget when we’re barely recovering as it is” (Brewer statement, 6/28; Reinhart, Arizona Central, 6/28; Young, Huffington Post, 7/2).
- Colorado: Gov. John Hickenlooper (D) at a press conference on June 28 gave only a lukewarm nod to the Medicaid expansion. He said, “Well, we’ll see. We’re certainly looking at that. We’re probably a little bit premature, but we’re certainly looking at it and trying to figure out a way we can do that and still live within our means” (McCrimmon, Health Policy Solutions, 7/2; AP/CBS’ “Moneywatch,” 6/29).
- Georgia: As of July 2, Gov. Nathan Deal (R) had not yet decided whether Georgia would opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Chattanooga Times Free Press reports. Over 10 years, the expansion is projected to cost Georgia about $4.5 billion, “money we don’t have,” Deal spokesperson Brian Robinson said (Sher, Chattanooga Times Free Press, 7/2).
- Idaho: Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter (R) this week did not indicate his preference on whether Idaho would widen Medicaid coverage (AP/KTVB, 7/1; Messick, StateImpact Idaho, 6/29).
- Indiana: In a press release Gov. Mitch Daniels (R) said, “Any decision to expand Medicaid in 2014 is entirely the province of the next General Assembly and governor.” On Thursday Daniels told reporters “If it’s optional as I’m advised that it is, that’ll be a decision for future legislators to make” (Office of Gov. Daniels release, 6/29; AP/Lafayette Journal and Courier, 7/2; “Moneywatch,” AP/CBS News, 6/29; Wilson, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).

- Kansas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Sherriene Jones-Sontag—communications director and press secretary for Gov. Sam Brownback (R)—said Brownback believes “this is now a political issue that will be resolved by the American people in the November elections” and “he will wait until after the November elections before making any decisions related to ObamaCare.” [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]
- Kentucky: Gov. Steve Beshear (D) on June 28 said, “We continue to review the Supreme Court’s opinion, particularly on the Medicaid portion of the Affordable Care Act to determine what our options may be.” He also noted that he soon would issue an executive order to create a health insurance exchange (Office of Gov. Beshear release, 6/28; AP/Evansville Courier & Press, 6/28).
- Maine: Gov. Paul LePage (R) said in a statement on June 28, “It is a sad day, and it is now up to the American people to demand full repeal of Obamacare.” The governor did not directly address the Medicaid expansion in his statement. The state Legislature and LePage approved reductions in Medicaid spending earlier this year, and Maine Department of Health and Human Services Commissioner Mary Mayhew said the state “will follow federal procedures and submit state plan amendments within the coming weeks that will outline the Medicaid reductions that were enacted by the Maine Legislature” (Office of Gov. LePage release, 6/28; Farwel, Bangor Daily News/Lewiston Sun Journal, 6/29).
- Michigan: As of July 1, Gov. Rick Snyder (R) had not decided to whether Michigan will opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Lansing State Journal reports. Snyder spokesperson Sara Wurfel said the administration wants to examine the cost of the expansion to assess the “best course of action” for the state. Meanwhile, Republican lawmakers, who control both chambers of the state legislature, have not committed to the expansion (Davis, Lansing State Journal, 7/1).

- Montana: Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer (D), through a spokeswoman, declined to comment on the court's decision. Schweitzer expressed deep reservations about the Medicaid expansion and effect on Montana's budget. "Here's what I know," Schweitzer in February 2011 said, "that unless we challenge the underlying costs of health care ... it will bankrupt the states because there's no way of decreasing the cost of health care under the current system" (Dennison, Gazette State Bureau, 6/28; Drake, Montana Watchdog, 7/2).
- New Hampshire: As of July 1, Gov. John Lynch (D)—who in the past has voiced concern over how the government would pay for the Medicaid expansion—had made no statement on whether New Hampshire would opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Nashua Telegraph reports. In a June 28 statement on his website, Lynch noted that the state has "been preparing to implement the Affordable Care Act and will continue doing so in a way that best fits New Hampshire" (Landrigan, Nashua Telegraph, 7/1; Lynch statement, 6/28).
- New Mexico: Gov. Susana Martinez (R) has not decided whether the state will expand Medicaid, according to spokesperson Scott Darnell. He said, "The governor is reviewing today's Supreme Court decision and will proceed in a manner that best protects the safety net for the most vulnerable New Mexicans in a responsible and sustainable manner" (Massey, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- New York: As of July 2, Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) had not made a statement on whether New York would participate in the Medicaid expansion. In a release last week, the governor said, "I am pleased the Supreme Court upheld this law," adding that he looked forward to working with the "Obama administration to ensure accessible, quality care for all New Yorkers (Office of Gov. Cuomo release, 6/28; The Journal News, 6/29; Caruso, San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- North Carolina: As of July 3, Gov. Beverly Perdue (D) had not made any public statement about her state's participation in the Medicaid expansion. However, in a statement responding to the Supreme Court's decision, Perdue said she is "committed to continuing to move forward ... to ensure that all North Carolinians have affordable, reliable health coverage." Meanwhile, a spokesperson for Perdue said the governor has been in contact with HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius about the Medicaid expansion and will review the Supreme Court's ruling to determine how it might affect North Carolina (Office of Gov. Perdue release, 6/28; Dalesio, CBS News, 6/28; Jarvis/Bonner, Winston-Salem Journal, 6/29).

- North Dakota: As of Tuesday, Gov. Jack Dalrymple (R) had not made a statement about his state's intent to participate in the Medicaid expansion. However, in a statement responding to the Supreme Court's ruling, Dalrymple said the health reform law "is wrong for North Dakota," adding that its "citizens want the freedom to make their own decisions about their health-care coverage." Dalrymple has said that his staff is analyzing the court's ruling, but it is unclear whether the state will participate in the Medicaid (Office of Gov. Dalrymple release, 6/28; MacPherson, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Ohio: Gov. John Kasich (R) on Monday said he has not decided whether his state will participate in the Medicaid expansion and he does not plan to set a "deadline" to make his decision. The head of the state's Office of Health Transformation also said the state must first determine how to cover the additional Medicaid costs the state would incur even if the state does not participate in the expansion. In a statement on the Supreme Court's ruling, Kasich said, "We are very concerned that a sudden, dramatic increase in Medicaid spending could threaten Ohio's ability to pursue needed reforms in other areas" (Office of Gov. Kasich release, 6/28; Tribble, Cleveland Plain Dealer, 7/2; Columbus Business First, 7/3; Candisky, Columbus Dispatch, 7/3).
- Oklahoma: Gov. Mary Fallin (R) has not yet decided whether Oklahoma will opt of the Medicaid expansion, Tulsa World reports. Fallin said, "Certainly I am hoping that we'll elect a new president and we'll be able to change faces ... in the (Democratic-controlled) U.S. Senate that we can once and for all overturn the federal health care bill" (McNutt, The Oklahoman, 6/29; Greene, Tulsa World, 7/3; McGuigan, Tulsa Today, 7/2).
- Pennsylvania: Gov. Tom Corbett (R) has not yet announced whether Pennsylvania will opt out of the Medicaid expansion. He said in a statement, "I think we can all agree there are Pennsylvanians who need our help. However, expanding government bureaucracy, government programs and government spending is not the answer” (Office of the Gov. Corbett release, 6/28, LoBasso, “PhillyNow,” Philadelphia Weekly, 7/3).

- South Dakota: South Dakota: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Joe Kafka—press secretary in Gov. Dennis Daugaard’s (R) administration—said Daugaard “has made no decision on [the] Medicaid expansion, which will be costly for South Dakota, and he won’t make any decision on it until after the election” (Kafka email, 7/5). [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]
- Tennessee: As of July 2, Gov. Bill Haslam (R) had not yet decided whether Tennessee would opt out of the Medicaid expansion. After the Supreme Court ruling, Haslam told reporters, “We don’t really know what we’re going to do ... but the cost impact to the state is very significant” (Sher, Chattanooga Times Free Press, 7/2).
- Utah: Gov. Gary Herbert (R) said his administration is conducting a thorough legal and policy review of the Supreme Court ruling, but he did not comment on whether the state would expand its Medicaid program (Stewart, Salt Lake Tribune, 6/29; AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Virginia: Gov. Bob McDonnell (R) has made statements indicating that he is against the Medicaid expansion, but has declined at this point to comment definitively on whether Virginia will opt out of it. McDonnell said he will review the state’s options in the upcoming weeks (Martz, Richmond Times-Dispatch, 7/1; Millman, Politico, 6/29).
- West Virginia: Gov. Earl Ray Tomblin (D) has not yet announced whether West Virginia will proceed with the Medicaid expansion. In a statement, Tomblin said, “We know what the law is but as I’ve said before, I will continue to do what is best for West Virginia... We’re going to review the Supreme Court’s ruling, and work with our federal delegation on how we move forward” (Smith, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28; Office of Gov. Tomblin statement, 6/28).
- Wyoming: Gov. Matt Mead (R) in a statement said he will study the Supreme Court’s ruling and the health reform law more carefully before making any implementation plans for Wyoming, but he believes “the ACA is not a good fit” for the state (Office of Gov. Mead release, 6/28; Wolfson, Billings Gazette, 6/28).

Why not expand Medicaid?

Monday, July 16, 2012

Last week former Michigan Governor Jennifer Granholm \(D\) argued that any Governor who rejected the Affordable Care Act's new Medicaid expansion was either stupid or evil. This is a common refrain from the law's defenders, that only an irrational or uncaring Governor would reject the ACA's new Medicaid subsidies to provide health insurance to poor adults without kids. This question is now relevant thanks to the Supreme Court's recent ruling. The Roberts Court ruled that the federal government may not deny the federal share of funds for a state's existing Medicaid program if that state refuses to avail itself of the new subsidies offered for expanding program eligibility. In the wake of this ruling several Governors have said they will not, or may not, expand their Medicaid programs, notwithstanding the ACA's offer of generous matching federal funds.

How generous? Under the ACA the Feds will pay all benefit costs for this new population for two years, and then from 80-95 percent of benefit costs beyond that. That compares to an average federal share of 57 cents of each dollar spent on Medicaid benefits for existing populations. The exact federal share varies by state and ranges from 50 cents federal to 78 cents federal for basic Medicaid benefits.

New York Governor Cuomo might say, "I have to pay 50 cents of state money for each Medicaid dollar spent in New York. If I expand my Medicaid program to these poor childless adults, I'll have to pay about 18-19 cents of state money for each Medicaid dollar spent on them after the first few years." The Mississippi Governor might see his costs reduced from 22 cents of state money per dollar spent for existing Medicaid populations, down to only 5 cents of state money per dollar spent on these new populations. From a state's perspective, the decision to expand Medicaid means higher state expenditures but at a drastically reduced cost in state funds per new enrollee. Adding new people still costs you scarce state funds, but these new enrollees would be cheaper to the state than the people already in your program.

Why, then, would a Governor reject such a generous offer? She can provide health insurance for poor residents of her state for no cost in the first two years and at an extremely reduced cost after that. If a Governor refuses, ACA defenders argue she will be leaving enormous amounts of federal money "on the table." Governor Granholm points out that states already subsidize hospitals to cover some of the costs of the uncompensated care delivered to these poor uninsured people. And since in most cases Medicaid pays providers low payment rates, adding them to Medicaid is a relatively inexpensive way to provide them with health insurance.

Charles Blahous was first to publicly explain how the Court's decision could make the ACA's finances untenable. He examined the incentive the Court's decision would have for Governors to abandon Medicaid expansions in favor of federally-funded subsidies through state exchanges.

Let's briefly review seven additional challenges to the case made by advocates for Medicaid expansion under the ACA. The bar is low: we don't have to prove that a Governor should not expand Medicaid, only that one can make this decision without being irrational or evil. Thanks to a knowledgeable friend for helping me with these.

1. "Leaving federal money on the table" looks at the problem backwards. The law does not offer states free money without conditions, it reduces the price to the state of covering these new people. A state must still find the funds to cover its five to 20 percent of the new Medicaid costs. While that's a tiny fraction of the total new costs, Medicaid is a huge program and many states are already in dire financial condition. If a state can't afford its share it doesn't matter how much the Feds are offering. A Governor must look at her budget and prioritize the state resources at her disposal. Medicaid spending is one of the two largest components of most state budgets. It is reasonable for a Governor to conclude she would rather use her limited resources for other needs (education, emergency services, public infrastructure) than to expand her state's obligations for its biggest and fastest-growing entitlement.
2. A smart Governor recognizes that a commitment to expand Medicaid eligibility is likely to be permanent, so she may be risk averse. It is quite difficult to cut off eligibility for a group of people once it's been granted. Our Governor must also consider political and legislative risk from Washington. Sure, the Feds are offering to pay all benefit costs for the first two years, and most costs after that. But the law might be repealed in 2013. Even if it's not, Congress could cut federal match rates in the future to address federal spending pressures. In his budget President Obama has proposed to "align" match rates in Medicaid and CHIP, code for cutting CHIP match rates. A federal “Grand Bargain” fiscal negotiation would certainly consider cutting federal match rates for Medicaid and CHIP. In any of these scenarios the state and our Governor bear the downside fiscal risk.

3. A Governor must also worry about creeping federal requirements for this new population. States have some flexibility designing benefit packages for their Medicaid populations and a lot of flexibility in designing insurance structures and setting payment rates. The Feds, however, are looking at this new group of people as part of their “ACA eligibility expansions,” along with others who will buy subsidized insurance through state exchanges. What happens, then, if the Feds want to impose new requirements on the exchanges, and then require states to do the same with their Medicaid programs? The Feds have a history of doing this in Medicaid.

4. There are hidden costs to this expansion. Any time a program like Medicaid is expanded there is a woodwork effect. Some mothers and their kids who were eligible for Medicaid before the ACA, but who had not enrolled, would be drawn to enroll with the increased publicity to enroll newly eligible poor childless adults. If your focus is on enrolling poor people in Medicaid this is a good thing. It is also an increased cost to the state budget, especially since these mothers and their kids are not eligible for the higher federal match rate in the ACA. A Governor considering whether to expand her program must include these additional costs in her decision, even though they don’t directly impact the target population. A state also bears the administrative expenses and challenges of expanding its program.

5. Adding new people increases government spending and total spending on health care. Yes, those who lack prepaid health insurance impose uncompensated care costs on hospitals. Yes, the states pick up some of these costs through subsidies to those hospitals. Both would be reduced if more people had prepaid health insurance. But while expanded Medicaid eligibility means more and better medical care for those who were previously uninsured, it comes at an added cost to the government (Feds + States). There is no free lunch here, only a reduced price lunch. More people X more medical care = more spending.

6. A Governor creates negotiating leverage with the Feds by saying no, even temporarily. The Feds and States are constantly engaged in negotiations over funding and rules for Medicaid and CHIP. Governors know that the Obama Administration needs them to expand their Medicaid populations for PPACA to approach its coverage goals. Congress wrote the law with an effective mandate on states to cover these people. The Court inverted that power dynamic, and any Governor who says no to an expansion gains leverage for more federal funds or flexibility in other areas.

7. If it’s such a good deal why did the Feds mandate it? There’s a parallel here with the individual mandate and accompanying subsidies. The law’s authors knew that subsidies would encourage some individuals and some states to buy health insurance or expand their Medicaid programs. They knew that others would not take advantage of these subsidies, so they mandated participation with penalties for noncompliance. The individual mandate and penalty tax survived the Court challenges while those imposed on states did not. It is reasonable to assume that, without the mandate, some states will now choose not to expand their biggest (or second-biggest) state spending program any further.

When the ACA was enacted in 2010 CBO estimated that the Medicaid expansions would result in 17 million more Medicaid enrollees by 2016. The Supreme Court’s ruling and subsequent decisions by Governors should reduce that. We will see by how much if the law is not repealed next year.

Why the Obama-Boehner talks fell apart

Budget talks between President Obama and Speaker Boehner fell apart yesterday after the Speaker called the President and said he would instead negotiate directly with Senate Leaders Reid & McConnell.

The President spoke to the press within the hour to begin framing the collapse of the negotiations. He reinforced his theme that he was the reasonable, flexible party willing to compromise to get a deal.

I just got a call about a half hour ago from Speaker Boehner who indicated that he was going to be walking away from the negotiations ...

... And so the question is, what can you say yes to? Now, if their only answer is what they've presented, ... -- if that's their only answer, then it's going to be pretty difficult for us to figure out where to go. Because the fact of the matter is that's what the American people are looking for, is some compromise, some willingness to put partisanship aside, some willingness to ignore talk radio or ignore activists in our respective bases, and do the right thing.

And to their credit, Nancy Pelosi, Harry Reid, the Democratic leadership, they sure did not like the plan that we are proposing to Boehner, but they were at least willing to engage in a conversation because they understood how important it is for us to actually solve this problem. And so far I have not seen the capacity of the House Republicans in particular to make those tough decisions.

The President positioned himself as the aggrieved party, trying to understand what went wrong:

It is hard to understand why Speaker Boehner would walk away from this kind of deal.

I actually think it's quite easy. The President backtracked in private negotiations this week, demanding bigger tax increases after the Gang of Six, including three conservative Republican Senators, released a plan that raised taxes more than the President had previously demanded.

Today's press stories treat this as a detail. It is instead the key to understanding why the talks fell apart.

Here are some primary source materials for reference:

- video and transcript of the President's press briefing;
- excerpts and video of Speaker Boehner's statement and his Dear Colleague letter.

Recent history of the negotiations

First we'll look at total levels of taxation.

This gets a little tricky, because Republicans and Democrats frame tax numbers differently. These negotiations assumed a gap between current law taxation and current policy taxation of $3.5 T over 10 years.

- Last weekend the White House was willing to, from their perspective, reduce revenue at least $2.8 T relative to current law. That's about $700 B higher revenues than current policy. That number would be a ceiling for revenues.
- Tuesday the Gang of Six proposed their budget plan. The Gang's plan would reduce revenues $1.5 T relative to current law, which (using these baselines) means $2 T higher revenues than current policy. That means the Gang of Six proposed $1.3 T higher revenues than the President had been demanding privately. The Gang of Six includes three conservative Republican Senators.
- After the Gang of Six offered their plan, the President backtracked from his position last weekend and increased his demand. Late this week the President was willing to reduce revenue by at most $2.4 T relative to current law. Using CBO's numbers, that's about $1.1 T higher revenues than current policy, and $400 B higher than last weekend. That number would be a floor for revenues.

Last week the President increased his tax demand by $400 B and changed a ceiling for revenues into a floor. (Technical note: My numbers are $100 B off from the $800 B and $1.2 T numbers publicly discussed. This doesn't change the story and the backtrack amount is still $400 B.)

Next let's look at tax rates. The President and the Speaker were negotiating certain parameters that would be agreed to for a future tax reform:

- As of last weekend, the President was willing to support three individual tax rates, and the top rate would be less than 35 percent. Team Obama also agreed that the difference between the top individual and corporate rates would be limited.
- After the Gang of Six released their plan, the President's team backed away from this position.
- In addition, Team Obama suddenly insisted that refundable tax outlays (for the poor) not be reduced by tax reform.

Again, the President retreated from an earlier position on taxes as a result of the Gang of Six introducing their plan. On total tax revenues, tax rates, and refundable outlays, the President increased his demands last week.

The Speaker's statement today reinforces this description of recent history:

The discussions we've had broke down for two reasons. First, they insisted on raising taxes. We had an agreement on a revenue number - a revenue number that we thought we could reach based on a flatter tax code with lower rates and a broader base that would produce more economic growth, more employees and more taxpayers, and a tax system that was more efficient in collecting the taxes that were due the federal government. Let me just say that the White House moved the goalposts. There was an agreement, until the President demanded $400 billion more, which was going to be nothing more than a tax increase on the American people. I can tell you Leader Cantor and I were very disappointed in this call for higher revenue. Second, they refused to get serious about cutting spending, and making the tough choices that are facing our country on entitlement reform. Listen, that's the bottom line.

The President's statement does not explicitly confirm that the President "moved the goalposts," but is consistent with it, and he cited the Gang of Six four times, wrapping his arms around their position.

In addition, what we sought was revenues that were actually less than what the Gang of Six signed off on. So you had a bipartisan group of senators, including Republicans who are in leadership in the Senate, calling for what effectively was about $2 trillion above the Republican baseline that they've been working off of. What we said was give us $1.2 trillion in additional revenues

Press reports today say Presidential advisors confirmed that the President increased his demand for more revenues last week.

In addition, the President and the Speaker had open disputes about how much to save from Medicaid, and about an automatic mechanism to force Congress to act on the entitlement and tax provisions. The President wanted a provision that would "decouple" tax rates if Congress failed to act, allowing top tax rates to increase while extending the other tax rates. Republicans would hate this outcome and would therefore have an incentive to legislate the deal. The Speaker insisted that if this automatic hammer decoupled tax rates, it also had to repeal the individual mandate from the Affordable Care Act (ObamaCare), to create roughly equal legislative pressure on both sides of the aisle.

Negotiation tactics, framing & strategy

While it is an aggressive tactic, there is nothing "wrong" with moving backward in a negotiation. It is likely to anger the counterparty, and it usually reduces the chance of getting a deal. But sometimes conditions change, as they did this week, and one party feels his position is strengthened and thinks he can demand more.

That appears to be the case here. The three conservative Republican Senators who supported a high level of taxes changed the President's perception of what he could demand on taxes, and especially what he could publicly defend as reasonable if negotiations fell apart. So he backtracked and increased his demand.

At the same time, this has important consequences for those trying to understand why negotiations fell apart.

- It shows the President was willing to risk not getting a deal for what he perceived as an improved chance of getting better than his bottom line on taxes.

The President's increased private demands on taxes contradict his public claim that he has been doing everything possible to get a deal.

- The President said, "It is hard to understand why Speaker Boehner would walk away from this deal." No it's not. The deal the President offered him got worse over the course of the past week.
- Imagine the Republican reaction if word had leaked out that the Speaker and Leader Cantor had agreed to a worse tax position than the President had offered them one week prior. There is no way they could take that risk, and the President had to know that. The President made a new demand he had to know Republican Leaders could not possibly accept. The President toughened his position knowing it would cause the talks to fall apart, yet feeling comfortable that he had a stronger rhetorical position explaining the collapse.
- The Gang of Six's efforts have been characterized by some as a shining example of bipartisanship that showed a path forward toward a budget compromise. But because the Gang's plan was left of the President on taxes, the President backtracked and caused negotiations to collapse. The Gang of Six's substance and timing helped kill whatever remaining short-term chance there was for a big budget deal.

President Obama used the Gang of Six's plan as an exit strategy. He backtracked on taxes, knowing this would force the Speaker to abandon negotiations, and knowing he could use the Republican Senators in the Gang to argue from a position of increased rhetorical strength in the ensuing debate. It's a clever strategy but it belies the President's public posture.

It seems the President's own questions should be asked of him:

And so then the question becomes, where's the leadership? Or, alternatively, how serious are you actually about debt and deficit reduction? Or do you simply want it as a campaign ploy going into the next election?

HATCH OUTLINES NEED FOR COMPREHENSIVE MEDICAID REFORM

In Speech Today, Utah Senator Says, "I reject the President's inside-the-beltway approach to providing health care for a country as large and diverse as ours. Instead of centralizing power in the nation's capital, we should empower the states to run their Medicaid programs in a manner consistent with the needs and the values of their citizens."

WASHINGTON – In a speech at the Heritage Foundation today, U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), Ranking Member of the Senate Finance Committee, outlined why Medicaid reform must happen given the financial burden it's placing on state and federal budgets and the poor quality of care it offers patients. On Monday, Republican Governors sent Hatch and Chairman Upton a letter outlining a series of principles that should guide reform. Hatch believes that the highly successful, bipartisan welfare reform of 1996 - where states led the way to provide the best solutions for a broken program - should be the model to modernize Medicaid.

"Medicaid has served as an important safety net for more than 45 years, but in order to continue serving the most vulnerable in our society, it is absolutely essential that we modernize this program," said Hatch. "The bottom line is that those who are the biggest advocates for Medicaid, and most criticize conservatives for seeking to reform the program, are happy to consign America's poorest and sickest patients to a health care gulag."

Hatch continued, "I reject the President's inside-the-beltway approach to providing health care for a country as large and diverse as ours. Instead of centralizing power in the nation's capital, we should empower the states to run their Medicaid programs in a manner consistent with the needs and the values of their citizens. In the coming months, I look forward to working closely with the governors to develop specific solutions. We have a great deal of work to do to turn the governors' principles into federal law, but we are ready for the challenge."

Below are Hatch's remarks as prepared for delivery:

Thank you Mike for that kind introduction. I always appreciate the invitation to participate in Heritage Foundation events. For decades, folks like yourself, and Ed Meese, and Bob Moffitt, and Stuart Butler — not to mention Dr. Feulner — have been at the vanguard of conservative policy. It is hard to think of a conservative policy achievement that does not have your imprint on it, and for that leadership I am grateful.

Unfortunately, the need for your leadership is always growing.

It is nice to be on offense, but since President Obama's inauguration, we have too often found ourselves on defense, holding the line for limited government and free markets. The debate over health care reform is a case in point.

Along with many other groups, Heritage had spent years working through the nuances of health care policy, identifying the root causes of access problems and recommending solutions consistent with our constitutional commitment to personal liberty.

And then what happened?

President Obama, having salted the earth during the campaign, took all of the innovative work that had been done and tossed it in the garbage. Instead of reforming a bankrupt system, he decided to double down on it. For all of the 2,000-plus pages of ObamaCare — and believe me, it is no picnic getting through that bill — it really is a pretty simple scheme.

Spend $2.6 trillion on new coverage entitlements, and pretend to pay for it by raiding already bankrupt entitlements and raising taxes by half a trillion dollars. While they may have expanded coverage, they did nothing to address the fundamental problem facing our nation's health care system — the cost of health care. We know how this book is going to end. If you put government on the hook for expanded coverage, without reducing the cost of coverage, the cost to taxpayers is going to go up.

Democratic Governor Phil Bredesen has it right. This is his assessment of ObamaCare. "What a stunning disappointment. The health care 'reform' we finally wrote into law isn't transformational. It provides health insurance for a great many more people, but doesn't directly attack any of the deep structural problems of health care."

Nowhere is the impact of this deadly combination of expanding coverage and expanding costs more insidious than in Medicaid. Medicaid is not only a federal entitlement that was massively expanded through ObamaCare, but it is an entitlement that states are responsible for. By exploding Medicaid populations and denying the states the ability to effectively manage those populations, ObamaCare is a direct assault on our Founding Fathers' Constitution of limited federal powers and reserved states' rights.

The bottom line is that we need to repeal this terrible law in its entirety. But addressing Medicaid is a reasonable place to start for conservatives who want to restore the fiscal integrity of the states and to undo the damage done by this administration to the nation's health care system.

Medicaid has served as an important safety net for more than 45 years, but in order to continue serving the most vulnerable in our society, it is absolutely essential that we modernize this program.

One of Medicaid's biggest problems is mission creep. In its first year, fewer than five million individuals used Medicaid services. Today, nearly one in four Americans is on Medicaid and half those newly covered by ObamaCare will be on Medicaid. This is simply unsustainable. Medicaid was intended to be a safety net program for the poor. But it has turned into substitute health insurance for nearly one-quarter of the population. Not only can the states and the federal government not afford such a massive program, but as currently structured it provides nowhere near the level of care that it should. In short, an ever expanding Medicaid program is devastating for the nation's and the states' finances, and by spreading itself so thin it fails to provide adequate care for those who need it.

Medicaid's budget burdens are a significant problem. It is no exaggeration to say that Medicaid threatens to bankrupt both the federal budget and the vast majority of state budgets. Over the next ten years, Washington alone will spend $4.6 trillion on Medicaid. Think of that for a minute. Our publicly held debt is already $14 trillion. We are talking right now about significant spending reductions that amount to between $2 trillion and $3 trillion. Yet, we are set to spend $4.6 trillion on this one program alone.

When Admiral Mullen said that the greatest threat to our national security is our debt, he probably had a copy of the Social Security Act open and turned to the Medicaid program. The levels of Medicaid spending are not just a budget issue. They are also a governance issue, depriving lawmakers and governors of the flexibility to provide much needed services to their citizens. With Medicaid spending now consuming nearly a quarter of state government budgets, this program routinely crowds out other critical priorities such as education and law enforcement.

States need to enact their own pro-growth agendas, keeping taxes low to spur job growth, but Medicaid obligations are strangling these efforts. Unfortunately, liberal Medicaid advocates and their Democratic allies do not seem to care. They put on their blinders and pretend as though there is no problem with Medicaid's financing and that any reductions in spending or meaningful reforms are assaults on the poor. It is worth reminding these professional advocates just how much waste, fraud, and abuse there is in the Medicaid program.

Anyone who doubts that we can save money in Medicaid should Google Medicaid and Financial Planning. There's an entire consulting industry out there teaching people how to game the system and get Medicaid to pay for long term care services. People can own a $750,000 house and still qualify for Medicaid these days.

Medicaid is a massive target for waste, fraud, and abuse. By CMS' own estimates, tens of billions of dollars are lost to fraud, waste and abuse each year. Medicaid's improper payment rate averages nearly 10 percent, and when you are talking about a $400 billion a year program that's a lot of money. These are not hypotheticals.

One state's Auditor General found that Medicaid was paying claims on behalf of 1,705 dead people. And a GAO report determined that beneficiaries were improperly obtaining addictive drugs at a cost of $65 million to taxpayers.

So Medicaid is like every other government program. There is fat to be cut. The only difference between this and other programs is how well marbled Medicaid is.

I want to make one more point, however.

Irrespective of one's views on the merits of the Medicaid program as a matter of principle or constitutional soundness, it should at the very least be able to measure up as a program that achieves its objectives.

In other words, does Medicaid even do what it sets out to do? I think that the answer is clear that too often it does not. In too many instances, Medicaid fails the patients that it purports to serve.

Scott Gottlieb's recent piece on this subject in the Wall Street Journal is jarring, and every bleeding heart who attacks conservatives for failure to support the poor should have to answer for Medicaid's abysmal record in treating its impoverished beneficiaries.

According to this article, Medicaid patients and people lacking any health insurance were both 50 percent more likely to die when compared with privately insured patients. They were 80 percent more likely than those with private insurance to have tumors that spread to at least one lymph node.

A 2010 study of major surgical operations found that Medicaid patients had the longest length of stay in the hospital, the most total hospital costs, and the highest risk of death. Even according to government data, Medicaid patients are more likely to end up in the emergency room than privately insured and even uninsured patients.

Gottlieb concludes that being on Medicaid is actually worse than having no health care coverage at all. And I cannot say that I disagree.

Nor can I say that I am surprised. What about our experience with top down government-run programs suggests that it would lead to top flight medical care?

The bottom line is that those who are the biggest advocates for Medicaid, and are the quickest to criticize conservatives for seeking to reform the program, are happy to consign America's poorest and sickest patients to a health care gulag.

The single greatest reason for this failure of the Medicaid program is a Washington bureaucracy that has tied the states' hands, preventing them from making meaningful changes and reforms.

President Obama took this programmatic jalopy and crashed it into a bridge abutment. Instead of reforming this program and putting it on sound financial footing, he made matters worse by continuing to hamstring the states.

Instead of trying to fix Medicaid's problems, he exacerbated all of the program's worst features. This administration has demonstrated an alarming pattern of usurping states' authority to manage their Medicaid programs in ways that best meet the needs of their citizens.

First, the so-called stimulus package restricted states from managing their program eligibility through an onerous mandate called the Maintenance of Effort or M-O-E.

States — unlike Washington — which too often just prints money to pay for out-of-control spending, actually have to make tough budget decisions every year. And the states are facing the worst budget crisis since the Great Depression with a collective $175 billion shortfall.

Washington's micromanagement of state Medicaid programs makes it incredibly difficult for the states to balance their budgets and provide for those who are most in need. Because of the overly generous benefit programs that Washington forces on the states, they are unable to target health services to those most in need of assistance. Because of these M-O-E restrictions, Governors are unable to undertake common-sense reforms that root out program waste, fraud, and abuse.

The result of these M-O-E requirements is nothing short of Washington induced state fiscal crises. My close friend Utah Governor Gary Herbert has said, "[n]ot a state in this nation is immune to tough budget decisions, and sometimes Washington makes it even harder. Utah must seriously weigh the real costs of Medicaid, one of the largest and most expensive programs we have....Unfortunately, federal mandates tie our hands. Utah has zero flexibility to respond to economic conditions, or the option to scale the program back in a way that reflects local values and priorities.”

Governor Herbert — and many other governors across the nation — have repeatedly asked Washington to repeal these onerous Medicaid M-O-E mandates. And I have recently introduced legislation, the State Flexibility Act, to do exactly what the governors have asked.

The State Flexibility Act fully repeals these burdensome Medicaid M-O-E regulations. It starts to put states back in control, empowering them to prioritize and balance their budgets, while simultaneously lowering federal entitlement spending. This legislation will save American taxpayers $2.8 billion over just the first five years.

Regardless of political affiliation, I am confident that this bill has the potential to garner strong, bipartisan support in Congress and represents a strong first step toward achieving comprehensive Medicaid reform. Still, this legislation is just a first step towards achieving comprehensive Medicaid reform, and we have much more work to do.

In April, the Obama Administration proposed a new regulation out of C-M-S that will force states to ask Washington's permission whenever they want to lower spending on reimbursement rates to providers.

After first taking away states' ability to manage their Medicaid enrollment, now the Obama Administration is trying to completely tie states' hands when it comes to setting rates. These regulations will straightjacket the states and make it virtually impossible for them to lower their Medicaid spending.

Now the Obama Administration is also trying to impose its pro-abortion agenda on the states. In May, the State of Indiana passed a law to restrict taxpayer dollars from going to abortion facilities, but the Obama Administration is trying to stop Indiana from implementing that law. Some media reports even indicate that the Obama Administration is considering cutting the entirety of Indiana's federal Medicaid match over this issue.

Last week, I sent a letter to the Obama Administration along with 27 other United States Senators explaining that the State of Indiana is clearly within its rights to implement its law. Indiana's law effectively closes a loophole that has allowed taxpayer dollars to support operational costs for abortions; and furthermore, their law ensures full compliance with the longstanding federal policy of the Hyde Amendment.

Indiana's proposal should not only be approved by the federal government; I believe it serves as an important model for every state. More broadly, I support the right of states to administer their Medicaid programs in a manner consistent with the values of their citizens.

As if these attacks from the Obama Administration aren't enough, the Supreme Court will be hearing a case this fall known as Maxwell-Jolly that could give a completely unprecedented private right of action over Medicaid. If the Supreme Court decides the case in the same way that the liberal Ninth Circuit in California did, the litigation costs for states will exponentially increase.

Each of these examples is unique, but they all share a common theme. Each is an effort by Washington to micromanage the states when it comes to Medicaid. As Ranking Member of the Senate Finance Committee, I'm fighting back hard against the Obama Administration on each of these issues. We have our work cut out for us.

In 2017, state governments will be forced to spend new money on expanded Medicaid populations, and by 2020, the states will fully shoulder their share for these new populations. The non-partisan Congressional Budget Office originally estimated ObamaCare's Medicaid expansions at a $60 billion cost to the states through 2021. I authored a joint Congressional Committee Report with House Energy and Commerce Chairman Fred Upton that was the first to comprehensively examine state government estimates of the costs of ObamaCare for state Medicaid programs.

States use these estimates in managing their budgets; this report therefore gives the clearest picture to date of the health care law's new Medicaid costs to state taxpayers. This report conservatively estimates that ObamaCare will cost state taxpayers at least $118.04 billion through 2023. The state-by-state findings of this report indicate just how unrealistic ObamaCare's Medicaid mandates are for the states. In just one state, the Medicaid program will be forced to spend $27 billion more than the program's entire annual budget today.

Though this picture is grim, there is a better way for Medicaid.

I reject the President's inside-the-beltway approach to providing health care for a country as large and diverse as ours. Instead of centralizing power in the nation's capital, we should empower the states to run their Medicaid programs in a manner consistent with the needs and the values of their citizens.

The welfare reform of the 1990s — the most successful conservative reform of an entitlement program, and one that you are very familiar with in this building — can serve as a model for Medicaid reform. Solutions for sustainable welfare reform came from the states — not just Washington. Our goal is to empower the states to design and implement innovative Medicaid solutions. Our nation's governors have run Medicaid programs and are in the best position to help Congress in fixing Medicaid.

I would also add that the history of welfare reform can keep us optimistic even when we are slogging through fights over Medicaid reform. When we began the fight for welfare reform, we were told that our work-first approach and end to the welfare entitlement would be devastating to the poor. Today, after the positive results from welfare reform, that original conservative position is virtually unassailable.

So I am ready for the onslaught from the left, but as Richard Weaver put it, ideas have consequences, and I am confident that thoughtful conservative reforms to the Medicaid system will not only prevail, but will have a positive impact on the program's finances and on the quality of care.

Here are just a few of the examples that conservatives can look to when they are reforming Medicaid. Rhode Island implemented a global cap on Medicaid expenditures back in 2009. The waiver gave the state flexibility from Washington's bureaucracy. Not only did the State improve patient care, by implementing important wellness programs and moving seniors from nursing homes into community care when appropriate, but the state has saved a significant amount of money by making its program more competitive and efficient.

The State of Indiana implemented an innovative Medicaid model that couples a commercial health care plan (for expenses above $1,100) with a health care spending account controlled by the Medicaid beneficiary. The accounts are prefunded by the state on an income sliding scale.

The results? A recent survey of program enrollees found that the personal responsibility approach is positively changing health care behaviors: 76 percent of respondents had received an annual physical, six in ten respondents now think differently about where and when they get their health care, and two-thirds of respondents say they are more likely to seek treatment when needed.

Finally, the state of West Virginia has implemented innovative reforms to promote personal responsibility among Medicaid beneficiaries. The state established "Healthy Rewards Accounts" to encourage healthy behaviors. To open a reward account, a beneficiary must sign a member rights and responsibility agreement, which says, for example, "I understand that smoking, using drugs illegally, drinking too much alcohol, and being overweight are bad for my health." The state then awards bonuses to beneficiaries for meeting health goals such as medication regimen compliance.

According to Nancy Adkins, Commissioner of the West Virginia Bureau for Medical Services, "West Virginia is poised to take the lead in moving Medicaid from a welfare mentality to a model which emphasizes personal empowerment and responsibility."

I could go on about the innovative things that Texas and New York have done in better coordinating care for patients eligible for both Medicare and Medicaid — or the "duals." Not only have these approaches saved the states money, they have improved care for the patients.

It is important for Congress to encourage, rather than stymie these state-based innovations. Last month, Chairman Upton and I sent each governor a letter asking for feedback on both the challenges states have faced and for their ideas on how to make Medicaid work better.

We have heard many governors — both Democrat and Republican — express the need for Medicaid reform. Former Governor Phil Bredesen has called the Medicaid program "an obsolete and broken system."

Former Governor Jeb Bush said, "We're left with a broken system that creates barriers for patients, removes incentives for compassionate high-quality health care and encourages fraud and abuse by some vendors who have learned how to gain from the system rather than take care of Florida's most vulnerable citizens."

Governors have run a Medicaid program and are in the best position to tell Washington how to fix Medicaid. Chairman Upton and I asked for feedback on both the challenges governors have faced and for their ideas on how to make Medicaid work better. My goal is to empower the states to design and implement innovative Medicaid solutions that work for their states.

This week we received a response from Republican governors. Their letter outlined key principles for Medicaid reform. Some patterns are emerging when we hear from the people on the ground who have the burden of administering the Medicaid programs.

First, governors want to design Medicaid solutions based on the needs, culture, and values of each state. The governors also asked for accountable and transparent financing mechanisms, which might include a block grant, that will save money for both federal and state taxpayers.

Governors want the freedom to make Medicaid more patient-centered, to streamline and simplify eligibility processes, and to provide patients a choice about their coverage plans. And finally, governors need the flexibility to deal with the quality and spending challenges posed by long term care services and with the dual eligible populations.

In the coming months, I look forward to working closely with the governors to develop specific solutions. We have a great deal of work to do to turn the governors' principles into federal law, but we are ready for the challenge.

Furthermore, I look forward to continuing my work with the Heritage Foundation in developing a sustainable Medicaid program that saves money and improves care. Democrats might turn a blind eye to these efforts, but as we careen toward a full-blown debt crisis, we really have no other option. Congress and the nation's governors can — and we will — develop comprehensive and sustainable Medicaid reform. It is time to fix the Medicaid program. We owe it to taxpayers and to beneficiaries. And we owe it to future generations.

Abraham Lincoln understood that this country must constantly recommit itself to its founding principles of liberty and equal rights. Our national debt and entitlement programs are now a threat to both. Reforming Medicaid will be a solid down payment on broader conservative efforts to rein in the federal government and restore our constitutional system of limited powers and sovereign states.

Thank you.

WHERE EACH STATE STANDS ON ACA'S MEDICAID EXPANSION

A roundup of what each state's leadership has said about their Medicaid plans

July 05, 2012

Last updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.

The Supreme Court's ruling on the Affordable Care Act (ACA) allows states to opt out of the law's Medicaid expansion, leaving each state's decision to participate in the hands of the nation's governors and state leaders.

Based on lawmakers' statements, press releases, and media coverage, the Daily Briefing and American Health Line editorial teams have rounded up where each state currently stands on the expansion.

Learn more about the Court's ruling, discuss takeaways with our experts, and model the impact on your organization.

The following information was last updated on July 5 at 10:30 a.m. ET. We will continue to update this map and list as more information becomes available. Send us news, tips, and feedback by commenting below or emailing dailybriefing@advisory.com.

**Italics indicate a state's participation in the multistate lawsuit against ACA*

Will not participate (5 states)

- Florida: Gov. Rick Scott (R) said, “Florida will opt out of spending approximately $1.9 billion more taxpayer dollars required to implement a massive entitlement expansion of the Medicaid program.” In addition, the governor said the state will not establish an insurance exchange (Pear, New York Times, 7/2).
- Louisiana: In an interview on NBC’s “Meet the Press,” Gov. Bobby Jindal (R) said, “Every governor’s got two critical decisions to make. One is do we set up these exchanges. And, secondly, do we expand Medicaid. And, no, in Louisiana, we’re not doing either one of those things” (Barrow, New Orleans Times-Picayune, 7/2).
- Mississippi: Gov. Phil Bryant (R) does not plan to participate in the Medicaid expansion, according to Bryant spokesperson Mick Bullock, Bloomberg reports (Niquette/Wayne, Bloomberg, 7/5).
- South Carolina: Gov. Nikki Haley (R) on Sunday announced via Facebook that South Carolina “will NOT expand Medicaid, or participate in any health exchanges” (Hawkins, TheDigitalCharleston, 7/2; Dudley, Charleston Post and Courier, 6/29).

- Wisconsin: Gov. Scott Walker (R) issued a statement following Thursday’s ruling saying that “Wisconsin will not take any action to implement ObamaCare” (Office of Gov. Walker release, 6/28; Radnofsky et al., Wall Street Journal, 7/2).

Leaning toward not participating (6 states)

- Iowa: Gov. Terry Branstad (R) announced at a Des Moines news conference that while his staff is still assessing the Supreme Court ruling on the ACA, he expects to forgo the federal funding that would allow an estimated 150,000 low-income Iowans to enroll in the state Medicaid program. Branstad said, “Here’s the problem: The federal government has done this again and again: ‘Buy into our program, and we’re going to do all these things for you,’ and then it doesn’t happen, and then the taxpayers of the state get stuck with it,” Branstad said on Monday (Totland, Washington Times, 7/2; Wisner, Waterloo Cedar Falls Courier, 7/3).
- Missouri: Moments after the ruling, Republican leaders in Missouri “closed the door... on expanding Medicaid eligibility,” the Associated Press reports. Republican Lt. Gov. Peter Kinder said the Medicaid expansion would be “a break-the-bank provision for the state of Missouri.” House Budget Committee Chair Ryan Silvey (R), said, “I just don’t see any way we will be expanding Medicaid at the expense of things like education and public safety.” By rejecting Medicaid expansion the state would be “turning down an estimated $8.4 billion windfall from the federal government” but could save up to “$431 million of its own” (Blank, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28; Crisp, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, 7/1).
- Nebraska: Gov. Dave Heineman (R) on June 28 pledged to block any effort to expanded Nebraska’s Medicaid program, telling reporters that an expansion would remove money from other priorities or require a tax increase, AP/BloombergBusinessweek reports. In a statement on his website, Heineman said, “As I have said repeatedly, if this unfunded Medicaid expansion is implemented, state aid to education and funding for the University of Nebraska will be cut or taxes will be increased. If some state senators want to increase taxes or cut education funding, I will oppose them.” However, the governor noted that the Supreme Court’s decision on Medicaid was unexpected, adding, “Again, I want to emphasize that reviewing this decision in a detailed, thoughtful and responsible manner will take time before a complete determination can be made on what this ruling means for Nebraska” (Schulte, AP/BloombergBusinessWeek, 6/29; Heineman statement, 6/28).

- Nevada: After the Supreme Court ruling, Gov. Brian Sandoval (R) said the impact of the decision on was not immediately clear but indicated that he is leaning toward not expanding the state’s Medicaid program. Sandoval’s press secretary, Mary-Sarah Kinner, said in a statement, “The governor does not intend to automatically accept the Medicaid expansion” (Haynes et al., Las Vegas Review-Journal, 6/28).
- New Jersey: on Fox News’ “Fox and Friends” on July 3, Gov. Chris Christie (R) said he is leaning toward not accepting federal funding to expand the state’s Medicaid program. He noted, “Medicaid is pretty well expanded in our state already because of the legacy of previous Democratic governors. So I don’t know if there’s a lot more to do in New Jersey in that regard” (“Fox News Insider,” Fox News, 7/3; San Francisco Chronicle, 7/3; Friedman, Newark Star-Ledger, 7/3).
- Texas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Lucy Nashed—deputy press secretary for Gov. Rick Perry (R)—said Perry will be working with Attorney General Greg Abbott (R) "and appropriate state agencies to determine the impact of the Supreme Court decision on the state of Texas," adding that "the governor has previously made clear, he has no interest in fast tracking any portion of this bankrupting and overreaching legislation. We will continue to call for the full repeal of the bill" (Nashed email, 7/5). [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]

Leaning toward participating (3 states)

- Arkansas: Gov. Mike Beebe (D) said he is inclined to proceed with Medicaid expansion for his state given the “opportunity to pay for it with taxes that are coming from ... the federal government,” he said at a news conference in Washington, D.C. “I don’t want to send [tax money] to Massachusetts or California and ignore our own people,” he added (Lyon, Arkansas News, 7/2).
- Oregon: Gov. John Kitzhaber (D) said he is confident that the Oregon legislature will approve a state Medicaid expansion, and State Sen. Alan Bates (D) has expressed similar confidence, the Associated Press reports. In an interview last week, Kitzhaber said, “We’ll make a decision on whether or not to expand the Medicaid program really based on, I think, the resources we have available in the general fund for that purpose going forward” (Budnick, The Oregonian, 7/3; Wong, Statesman Journal, 6/28; Cooper, AP/Real Clear Politics, 6/28).
- Rhode Island: In statement on his website, Gov. Lincoln Chaffee (I) said, “I have fully committed to ensuring Rhode Island is a national leader in implementing health reform whatever the Supreme Court decision, and this just reinforces that commitment.” According to Steven Costantino, the state’s secretary of health and human services, “The expansion is easy to do and makes sense” (Chaffee statement, 6/28; Radnofsky et al., Wall Street Journal, 7/2).

Participating (10 states and District of Columbia)

- California: California got a head start on expanding its Medicaid program in November 2010, shortly after

Obama signed the Affordable Care Act into law. After the high court's ruling, Gov. Jerry Brown (D) issued a statement, "Today's dramatic Supreme Court ruling removes the last roadblock to fulfilling President Obama's historic plan to bring health care to millions of uninsured citizens." Duane Dauner, president of the California Hospital Association, said in separate statement that he expects "California will comply with the Medicaid expansion in the law, even though it will increase the state's costs in future years" (Office of Gov. Brown release, 6/28; California Hospital Association release, 7/3).

- Connecticut: Gov. Dannel Malloy (D) was among the first to sign his state up for Medicaid expansion when Obama signed the law in 2010. Following the Supreme Court's ruling preserving the legislation, he responded, "it's great ... [and a] very important decision for the people of Connecticut. 500,000 people would have lost coverage if Republicans had their way" (Davis, WTNH, 7/28).
- Delaware: Gov. Jack Markell—chair of the Democratic Governors Association—said in a statement, "The Supreme Court's ruling enables Delaware to continue to implement provisions of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to provide access to health care benefits for Delawareans," adding, "On the Medicaid front, Delaware already voluntarily expanded the state's Medicaid coverage program in 1996 to cover many Delawareans not previously covered" (Office of Gov. Markell release, 6/28).
- District of Columbia: "The District is not at risk of losing any Medicaid funding as a result of this ruling, because District officials have already begun implementation of the ACA's Medicaid-expansion provisions and will continue to implement the expansion," according to a statement from the office of D.C. Mayor Vincent Gray (D) (Executive Office of the Mayor release, 6/28).
- Hawaii: Gov. Neil Abercrombie (D) said in a statement

after the ruling, “The Affordable Care Act is our ally” in the effort to “support a healthcare system that ensures high quality, safety and sustainable costs.” Pat McManaman, the state’s director of the Department of Human Services, said starting next month Hawaii’s Medicaid eligibility requirements will be in line with federal guidelines under the overhaul, meaning an additional 24,000 people will be eligible for the program by 2014 (Office of Gov. Abercrombie release, 6/28; Garcia, AP/CBS News, 6/29).

- Illinois: Gov. Pat Quinn (D) on Thursday praised the court’s decision and said he “will continue to work with President Obama to help working families get the healthcare coverage they need,” including expanding Medicaid (Office of the Governor release, 6/28; Thomason, Rock River Times, 7/3).
- Maryland: Gov. Martin O’Malley (D) in a statement said the Supreme Court’s decision “gives considerable momentum to our health care reform efforts here in Maryland,” adding that the state will move forward to implement the overhaul (Office of the Governor release, 6/28).
- Massachusetts: Gov. Deval Patrick (D) said Massachusetts is “an early expansion state as you know and we’re expecting further resources from federal government to sustain the experiment here in Massachusetts.” Patrick said the ruling is “good news for us” Patrick said (Walker, YNN, 6/28).
- Minnesota: “Today’s ruling will be met with relief by the Minnesotans whose lives have already been improved by this law,” Gov. Mark Dayton (D) said in a statement on Thursday. Dayton in 2011 used federal money to expand Medicaid early to 84,000 adults with annual incomes below $8,400 (Lohn, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Vermont: Gov. Peter Shumlin (D) said Vermont’s Medicaid program already meets the requirements under the health reform law’s Medicaid expansion, WCAX reports (Steimle, WCAX, 7/1).

- Washington: Gov. Chris Gregoire (D) "supports the Medicaid expansion—and Washington will move forward," Karina Shagren—a deputy communications director in Gregoire's administration—said in an email to American Health Line (Shagren email, 7/5). [updated on July 5 at 1:35 p.m.]

Undecided/no comment (26 states)

- Alabama: As of June 29, Gov. Robert Bentley (R) had not decided whether Alabama will opt out of the Medicaid expansion, according to Jennifer Ardis, Bentley's press secretary, AP/CBS News reports. In a statement on his website, Bentley said, "I am deeply disappointed by today's Supreme Court decision," but he did not address the court's ruling on the Medicaid expansion (AP/CBS News, 6/29; Bentley statement, 6/28).
- Alaska: As of Tuesday, Gov. Sean Parnell (R) has not made a statement regarding Alaska's intent to participate in the Medicaid expansion, only saying in a release that "now with no penalty we need to rethink what we're going to do with Medicaid" and the "expansion costs that are mandated" (Office of Gov. Parnell release, 6/28; Coyne, Alaska Dispatch, 7/1).
- Arizona: Gov. Jan Brewer (R) in a statement following the Supreme Court ruling repeated her call for the entire law to be repealed but did not directly address the expansion. House Speaker Andy Tobin (R), however, said budgetary issues in the state and a conservative political climate will make expanding Medicaid difficult. "We're going to have to sit down and weigh carefully what is reasonable to expect of our political leaders," he said. "I don't see us going along with the expansion if it's not mandated," Tobin added. "It's an ever-expanding cost, so it continues to put pressure on the state budget when we're barely recovering as it is" (Brewer statement, 6/28; Reinhart, Arizona Central, 6/28; Young, Huffington Post, 7/2).
- Colorado: Gov. John Hickenlooper (D) at a press conference on June 28 gave only a lukewarm nod to the Medicaid expansion. He said, “Well, we’ll see. We’re certainly looking at that. We’re probably a little bit premature, but we’re certainly looking at it and trying to figure out a way we can do that and still live within our means” (McCrimmon, Health Policy Solutions, 7/2; AP/CBS’ “Moneywatch,” 6/29).

- Georgia: As of July 2, Gov. Nathan Deal (R) had not yet decided whether Georgia would opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Chattanooga Times Free Press reports. Over 10 years, the expansion is projected to cost Georgia about $4.5 billion, “money we don’t have,” Deal spokesperson Brian Robinson said (Sher, Chattanooga Times Free Press, 7/2).
- Idaho: Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter (R) this week did not indicate his preference on whether Idaho would widen Medicaid coverage (AP/KTVB, 7/1; Messick, StateImpact Idaho, 6/29).
- Indiana: In a press release Gov. Mitch Daniels (R) said, “Any decision to expand Medicaid in 2014 is entirely the province of the next General Assembly and governor.” On Thursday Daniels told reporters “If it’s optional as I’m advised that it is, that’ll be a decision for future legislators to make” (Office of Gov. Daniels release, 6/29; AP/Lafayette Journal and Courier, 7/2; “Moneywatch,” AP/CBS News, 6/29; Wilson, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Kansas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Sherriene Jones-Sontag—communications director and press secretary for Gov. Sam Brownback (R)—said Brownback believes “this is now a political issue that will be resolved by the American people in the November elections” and “he will wait until after the November elections before making any decisions related to ObamaCare.” [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]
- Kentucky: Gov. Steve Beshear (D) on June 28 said, “We continue to review the Supreme Court’s opinion, particularly on the Medicaid portion of the Affordable Care Act to determine what our options may be.” He also noted that he soon would issue an executive order to create a health insurance exchange (Office of Gov. Beshear release, 6/28; AP/Evansville Courier & Press, 6/28).

- Maine: Gov. Paul LePage (R) said in a statement on June 28, “It is a sad day, and it is now up to the American people to demand full repeal of Obamacare.” The governor did not directly address the Medicaid expansion in his statement. The state Legislature and LePage approved reductions in Medicaid spending earlier this year, and Maine Department of Health and Human Services Commissioner Mary Mayhew said the state “will follow federal procedures and submit state plan amendments within the coming weeks that will outline the Medicaid reductions that were enacted by the Maine Legislature” (Office of Gov. LePage release, 6/28; Farwel, Bangor Daily News/Lewiston Sun Journal, 6/29). <li class="MsoNormal" style="mso-margin-top-alt:auto;mso-margin-bottom-alt:auto;mso-list:l6 level1 lfo10"

Leaning toward not participating (6 states)

- Iowa: Gov. Terry Branstad (R) announced at a Des Moines news conference that while his staff is still assessing the Supreme Court ruling on the ACA, he expects to forgo the federal funding that would allow an estimated 150,000 low-income Iowans to enroll in the state Medicaid program. Branstad said, “Here’s the problem: The federal government has done this again and again: ‘Buy into our program, and we’re going to do all these things for you,’ and then it doesn’t happen, and then the taxpayers of the state get stuck with it,” Branstad said on Monday (Totland, Washington Times, 7/2; Wisner, Waterloo Cedar Falls Courier, 7/3).
- Missouri: Moments after the ruling, Republican leaders in Missouri “closed the door... on expanding Medicaid eligibility,” the Associated Press reports. Republican Lt. Gov. Peter Kinder said the Medicaid expansion would be “a break-the-bank provision for the state of Missouri.” House Budget Committee Chair Ryan Silvey (R), said, “I just don’t see any way we will be expanding Medicaid at the expense of things like education and public safety.” By rejecting Medicaid expansion the state would be “turning down an estimated $8.4 billion windfall from the federal government” but could save up to “$431 million of its own” (Blank, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28; Crisp, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, 7/1).
- Nebraska: Gov. Dave Heineman (R) on June 28 pledged to block any effort to expanded Nebraska’s Medicaid program, telling reporters that an expansion would remove money from other priorities or require a tax increase, AP/BloombergBusinessweek reports. In a statement on his website, Heineman said, “As I have said repeatedly, if this unfunded Medicaid expansion is implemented, state aid to education and funding for the University of Nebraska will be cut or taxes will be increased. If some state senators want to increase taxes or cut education funding, I will oppose them.” However, the governor noted that the Supreme Court’s decision on Medicaid was unexpected, adding, “Again, I want to emphasize that reviewing this decision in a detailed, thoughtful and responsible manner will take time before a complete determination can be made on what this ruling means for Nebraska” (Schulte, AP/BloombergBusinessWeek, 6/29; Heineman statement, 6/28).

- Nevada: After the Supreme Court ruling, Gov. Brian Sandoval (R) said the impact of the decision on was not immediately clear but indicated that he is leaning toward not expanding the state’s Medicaid program. Sandoval’s press secretary, Mary-Sarah Kinner, said in a statement, “The governor does not intend to automatically accept the Medicaid expansion” (Haynes et al., Las Vegas Review-Journal, 6/28).
- New Jersey: on Fox News’ “Fox and Friends” on July 3, Gov. Chris Christie (R) said he is leaning toward not accepting federal funding to expand the state’s Medicaid program. He noted, “Medicaid is pretty well expanded in our state already because of the legacy of previous Democratic governors. So I don’t know if there’s a lot more to do in New Jersey in that regard” (“Fox News Insider,” Fox News, 7/3; San Francisco Chronicle, 7/3; Friedman, Newark Star-Ledger, 7/3).
- Texas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Lucy Nashed—deputy press secretary for Gov. Rick Perry (R)—said Perry will be working with Attorney General Greg Abbott (R) "and appropriate state agencies to determine the impact of the Supreme Court decision on the state of Texas," adding that "the governor has previously made clear, he has no interest in fast tracking any portion of this bankrupting and overreaching legislation. We will continue to call for the full repeal of the bill" (Nashed email, 7/5). [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]

Leaning toward participating (3 states)

- Arkansas: Gov. Mike Beebe (D) said he is inclined to proceed with Medicaid expansion for his state given the “opportunity to pay for it with taxes that are coming from ... the federal government,” he said at a news conference in Washington, D.C. “I don’t want to send [tax money] to Massachusetts or California and ignore our own people,” he added (Lyon, Arkansas News, 7/2).
- Oregon: Gov. John Kitzhaber (D) said he is confident that the Oregon legislature will approve a state Medicaid expansion, and State Sen. Alan Bates (D) has expressed similar confidence, the Associated Press reports. In an interview last week, Kitzhaber said, “We’ll make a decision on whether or not to expand the Medicaid program really based on, I think, the resources we have available in the general fund for that purpose going forward” (Budnick, The Oregonian, 7/3; Wong, Statesman Journal, 6/28; Cooper, AP/Real Clear Politics, 6/28).
- Rhode Island: In statement on his website, Gov. Lincoln Chaffee (I) said, “I have fully committed to ensuring Rhode Island is a national leader in implementing health reform whatever the Supreme Court decision, and this just reinforces that commitment.” According to Steven Costantino, the state’s secretary of health and human services, “The expansion is easy to do and makes sense” (Chaffee statement, 6/28; Radnofsky et al., Wall Street Journal, 7/2).

Participating (10 states and District of Columbia)

- California: California got a head start on expanding its Medicaid program in November 2010, shortly after

Obama signed the Affordable Care Act into law. After the high court's ruling, Gov. Jerry Brown (D) issued a statement, "Today's dramatic Supreme Court ruling removes the last roadblock to fulfilling President Obama's historic plan to bring health care to millions of uninsured citizens." Duane Dauner, president of the California Hospital Association, said in separate statement that he expects "California will comply with the Medicaid expansion in the law, even though it will increase the state's costs in future years" (Office of Gov. Brown release, 6/28; California Hospital Association release, 7/3).

- Connecticut: Gov. Dannel Malloy (D) was among the first to sign his state up for Medicaid expansion when Obama signed the law in 2010. Following the Supreme Court's ruling preserving the legislation, he responded, "it's great ... [and a] very important decision for the people of Connecticut. 500,000 people would have lost coverage if Republicans had their way" (Davis, WTNH, 7/28).
- Delaware: Gov. Jack Markell—chair of the Democratic Governors Association—said in a statement, "The Supreme Court's ruling enables Delaware to continue to implement provisions of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to provide access to health care benefits for Delawareans," adding, "On the Medicaid front, Delaware already voluntarily expanded the state's Medicaid coverage program in 1996 to cover many Delawareans not previously covered" (Office of Gov. Markell release, 6/28).
- District of Columbia: "The District is not at risk of losing any Medicaid funding as a result of this ruling, because District officials have already begun implementation of the ACA's Medicaid-expansion provisions and will continue to implement the expansion," according to a statement from the office of D.C. Mayor Vincent Gray (D) (Executive Office of the Mayor release, 6/28).
- Hawaii: Gov. Neil Abercrombie (D) said in a statement

after the ruling, “The Affordable Care Act is our ally” in the effort to “support a healthcare system that ensures high quality, safety and sustainable costs.” Pat McManaman, the state’s director of the Department of Human Services, said starting next month Hawaii’s Medicaid eligibility requirements will be in line with federal guidelines under the overhaul, meaning an additional 24,000 people will be eligible for the program by 2014 (Office of Gov. Abercrombie release, 6/28; Garcia, AP/CBS News, 6/29).

- Illinois: Gov. Pat Quinn (D) on Thursday praised the court’s decision and said he “will continue to work with President Obama to help working families get the healthcare coverage they need,” including expanding Medicaid (Office of the Governor release, 6/28; Thomason, Rock River Times, 7/3).
- Maryland: Gov. Martin O’Malley (D) in a statement said the Supreme Court’s decision “gives considerable momentum to our health care reform efforts here in Maryland,” adding that the state will move forward to implement the overhaul (Office of the Governor release, 6/28).
- Massachusetts: Gov. Deval Patrick (D) said Massachusetts is “an early expansion state as you know and we’re expecting further resources from federal government to sustain the experiment here in Massachusetts.” Patrick said the ruling is “good news for us” Patrick said (Walker, YNN, 6/28).
- Minnesota: “Today’s ruling will be met with relief by the Minnesotans whose lives have already been improved by this law,” Gov. Mark Dayton (D) said in a statement on Thursday. Dayton in 2011 used federal money to expand Medicaid early to 84,000 adults with annual incomes below $8,400 (Lohn, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Vermont: Gov. Peter Shumlin (D) said Vermont’s Medicaid program already meets the requirements under the health reform law’s Medicaid expansion, WCAX reports (Steimle, WCAX, 7/1).

- Washington: Gov. Chris Gregoire (D) "supports the Medicaid expansion—and Washington will move forward," Karina Shagren—a deputy communications director in Gregoire's administration—said in an email to American Health Line (Shagren email, 7/5). [updated on July 5 at 1:35 p.m.]

Undecided/no comment (26 states)

- Alabama: As of June 29, Gov. Robert Bentley (R) had not decided whether Alabama will opt out of the Medicaid expansion, according to Jennifer Ardis, Bentley's press secretary, AP/CBS News reports. In a statement on his website, Bentley said, "I am deeply disappointed by today's Supreme Court decision," but he did not address the court's ruling on the Medicaid expansion (AP/CBS News, 6/29; Bentley statement, 6/28).
- Alaska: As of Tuesday, Gov. Sean Parnell (R) has not made a statement regarding Alaska's intent to participate in the Medicaid expansion, only saying in a release that "now with no penalty we need to rethink what we're going to do with Medicaid" and the "expansion costs that are mandated" (Office of Gov. Parnell release, 6/28; Coyne, Alaska Dispatch, 7/1).
- Arizona: Gov. Jan Brewer (R) in a statement following the Supreme Court ruling repeated her call for the entire law to be repealed but did not directly address the expansion. House Speaker Andy Tobin (R), however, said budgetary issues in the state and a conservative political climate will make expanding Medicaid difficult. "We're going to have to sit down and weigh carefully what is reasonable to expect of our political leaders," he said. "I don't see us going along with the expansion if it's not mandated," Tobin added. "It's an ever-expanding cost, so it continues to put pressure on the state budget when we're barely recovering as it is" (Brewer statement, 6/28; Reinhart, Arizona Central, 6/28; Young, Huffington Post, 7/2).
- Colorado: Gov. John Hickenlooper (D) at a press conference on June 28 gave only a lukewarm nod to the Medicaid expansion. He said, “Well, we’ll see. We’re certainly looking at that. We’re probably a little bit premature, but we’re certainly looking at it and trying to figure out a way we can do that and still live within our means” (McCrimmon, Health Policy Solutions, 7/2; AP/CBS’ “Moneywatch,” 6/29).

- Georgia: As of July 2, Gov. Nathan Deal (R) had not yet decided whether Georgia would opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Chattanooga Times Free Press reports. Over 10 years, the expansion is projected to cost Georgia about $4.5 billion, “money we don’t have,” Deal spokesperson Brian Robinson said (Sher, Chattanooga Times Free Press, 7/2).
- Idaho: Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter (R) this week did not indicate his preference on whether Idaho would widen Medicaid coverage (AP/KTVB, 7/1; Messick, StateImpact Idaho, 6/29).
- Indiana: In a press release Gov. Mitch Daniels (R) said, “Any decision to expand Medicaid in 2014 is entirely the province of the next General Assembly and governor.” On Thursday Daniels told reporters “If it’s optional as I’m advised that it is, that’ll be a decision for future legislators to make” (Office of Gov. Daniels release, 6/29; AP/Lafayette Journal and Courier, 7/2; “Moneywatch,” AP/CBS News, 6/29; Wilson, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Kansas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Sherriene Jones-Sontag—communications director and press secretary for Gov. Sam Brownback (R)—said Brownback believes “this is now a political issue that will be resolved by the American people in the November elections” and “he will wait until after the November elections before making any decisions related to ObamaCare.” [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]
- Kentucky: Gov. Steve Beshear (D) on June 28 said, “We continue to review the Supreme Court’s opinion, particularly on the Medicaid portion of the Affordable Care Act to determine what our options may be.” He also noted that he soon would issue an executive order to create a health insurance exchange (Office of Gov. Beshear release, 6/28; AP/Evansville Courier & Press, 6/28).

- Maine: Gov. Paul LePage (R) said in a statement on June 28, “It is a sad day, and it is now up to the American people to demand full repeal of Obamacare.” The governor did not directly address the Medicaid expansion in his statement. The state Legislature and LePage approved reductions in Medicaid spending earlier this year, and Maine Department of Health and Human Services Commissioner Mary Mayhew said the state “will follow federal procedures and submit state plan amendments within the coming weeks that will outline the Medicaid reductions that were enacted by the Maine Legislature” (Office of Gov. LePage release, 6/28; Farwel, Bangor Daily News/Lewiston Sun Journal, 6/29).
- Michigan: As of July 1, Gov. Rick Snyder (R) had not decided to whether Michigan will opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Lansing State Journal reports. Snyder spokesperson Sara Wurfel said the administration wants to examine the cost of the expansion to assess the “best course of action” for the state. Meanwhile, Republican lawmakers, who control both chambers of the state legislature, have not committed to the expansion (Davis, Lansing State Journal, 7/1).
- Montana: Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer (D), through a spokeswoman, declined to comment on the court’s decision. Schweitzer expressed deep reservations about the Medicaid expansion and effect on Montana’s budget. “Here’s what I know,” Schweitzer in February 2011 said, “that unless we challenge the underlying costs of health care ... it will bankrupt the states because there’s no way of decreasing the cost of health care under the current system” (Dennison, Gazette State Bureau, 6/28; Drake, Montana Watchdog, 7/2).
- New Hampshire: As of July 1, Gov. John Lynch (D)—who in the past has voiced concern over how the government would pay for the Medicaid expansion—had made no statement on whether New Hampshire would opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Nashua Telegraph reports. In a June 28 statement on his website, Lynch noted that the state has “been preparing to implement the Affordable Care Act and will continue doing so in a way that best fits New Hampshire” (Landrigan, Nashua Telegraph, 7/1; Lynch statement, 6/28).

- New Mexico: Gov. Susana Martinez (R) has not decided whether the state will expand Medicaid, according to spokesperson Scott Darnell. He said, “The governor is reviewing today’s Supreme Court decision and will proceed in a manner that best protects the safety net for the most vulnerable New Mexicans in a responsible and sustainable manner” (Massey, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- New York: As of July 2, Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) had not made a statement on whether New York would participate in the Medicaid expansion. In a release last week, the governor said, “I am pleased the Supreme Court upheld this law,” adding that he looked forward to working with the “Obama administration to ensure accessible, quality care for all New Yorkers (Office of Gov. Cuomo release, 6/28; The Journal News, 6/29; Caruso, San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- North Carolina: As of July 3, Gov. Beverly Perdue (D) had not made any public statement about her state’s participation in the Medicaid expansion. However, in a statement responding to the Supreme Court’s decision, Perdue said she is “committed to continuing to move forward ... to ensure that all North Carolinians have affordable, reliable health coverage.” Meanwhile, a spokesperson for Perdue said the governor has been in contact with HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius about the Medicaid expansion and will review the Supreme Court’s ruling to determine how it might affect North Carolina (Office of Gov. Perdue release, 6/28; Dalesio, CBS News, 6/28; Jarvis/Bonner, Winston-Salem Journal, 6/29).
- North Dakota: As of Tuesday, Gov. Jack Dalrymple (R)

had not made a statement about his state's intent to participate in the Medicaid expansion. However, in a statement responding to the Supreme Court's ruling, Dalrymple said the health reform law "is wrong for North Dakota," adding that its "citizens want the freedom to make their own decisions about their health-care coverage." Dalrymple has said that his staff is analyzing the court's ruling, but it is unclear whether the state will participate in the Medicaid (Office of Gov. Dalrymple release, 6/28; MacPherson, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).

- Ohio: Gov. John Kasich (R) on Monday said he has not decided whether his state will participate in the Medicaid expansion and he does not plan to set a "deadline" to make his decision. The head of the state's Office of Health Transformation also said the state must first determine how to cover the additional Medicaid costs the state would incur even if the state does not participate in the expansion. In a statement on the Supreme Court's ruling, Kasich said, "We are very concerned that a sudden, dramatic increase in Medicaid spending could threaten Ohio's ability to pursue needed reforms in other areas" (Office of Gov. Kasich release, 6/28; Tribble, Cleveland Plain Dealer, 7/2; Columbus Business First, 7/3; Candisky, Columbus Dispatch, 7/3).
- Oklahoma: Gov. Mary Fallin (R) has not yet decided whether Oklahoma will opt of the Medicaid expansion, Tulsa World reports. Fallin said, "Certainly I am hoping that we'll elect a new president and we'll be able to change faces ... in the (Democratic-controlled) U.S. Senate that we can once and for all overturn the federal health care bill" (McNutt, The Oklahoman, 6/29; Greene, Tulsa World, 7/3; McGuigan, Tulsa Today, 7/2).
- Pennsylvania: Gov. Tom Corbett (R) has not yet announced whether Pennsylvania will opt out of the Medicaid expansion. He said in a statement, "I think we can all agree there are Pennsylvanians who need our help. However, expanding government bureaucracy, government programs and government spending is not the answer” (Office of the Gov. Corbett release, 6/28, LoBasso, “PhillyNow,” Philadelphia Weekly, 7/3).

- South Dakota: South Dakota: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Joe Kafka—press secretary in Gov. Dennis Daugaard’s (R) administration—said Daugaard “has made no decision on [the] Medicaid expansion, which will be costly for South Dakota, and he won’t make any decision on it until after the election” (Kafka email, 7/5). [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]
- Tennessee: As of July 2, Gov. Bill Haslam (R) had not yet decided whether Tennessee would opt out of the Medicaid expansion. After the Supreme Court ruling, Haslam told reporters, “We don’t really know what we’re going to do ... but the cost impact to the state is very significant” (Sher, Chattanooga Times Free Press, 7/2).
- Utah: Gov. Gary Herbert (R) said his administration is conducting a thorough legal and policy review of the Supreme Court ruling, but he did not comment on whether the state would expand its Medicaid program (Stewart, Salt Lake Tribune, 6/29; AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Virginia: Gov. Bob McDonnell (R) has made statements indicating that he is against the Medicaid expansion, but has declined at this point to comment definitively on whether Virginia will opt out of it. McDonnell said he will review the state’s options in the upcoming weeks (Martz, Richmond Times-Dispatch, 7/1; Millman, Politico, 6/29).
- West Virginia: Gov. Earl Ray Tomblin (D) has not yet announced whether West Virginia will proceed with the Medicaid expansion. In a statement, Tomblin said, “We know what the law is but as I’ve said before, I will continue to do what is best for West Virginia... We’re going to review the Supreme Court’s ruling, and work with our federal delegation on how we move forward” (Smith, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28; Office of Gov. Tomblin statement, 6/28).
- Wyoming: Gov. Matt Mead (R) in a statement said he will study the Supreme Court's ruling and the health reform law more carefully before making any implementation plans for Wyoming, but he believes "the ACA is not a good fit" for the state (Office of Gov. Mead release, 6/28; Wolfson, Billings Gazette, 6/28).

FINANCE COMMITTEE REPUBLICANS SUBMIT RECOMMENDATIONS TO DEFICIT REDUCTION COMMITTEE

WASHINGTON – Today, a group of Republican members of the Senate Finance Committee submitted recommendations to the Joint Select Committee on Deficit Reduction (Joint Committee) for consideration. Under the Budget Control Act, congressional committees can submit recommendations to the Joint Committee by October 14, 2011. The Finance Committee has jurisdiction over all tax policy, Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security, pensions, welfare and international trade.

In a letter to Joint Committee Co-Chairs Senator Patty Murray (D-Wash.) and Rep. Jeb Hensarling (R-Texas) which accompanied the recommendations, the Senators wrote, “As members of the Senate’s Committee on Finance, we are submitting our recommendations on tax, entitlement programs, and trade policy that make meaningful contributions to deficit reduction.”

The recommendations were submitted by Finance Committee Ranking Member Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), and Senators Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa), Mike Crapo (R-Idaho), Pat Roberts (R-Kansas), Mike Enzi (R-Wyo.), John Cornyn (R-Texas), John Thune (R-S.D.), Tom Coburn (R-Okla.) and Richard Burr (R-N.C.).

The recommendations to the Joint Committee are as follows, and can be found HERE:

TAXATION: The Senators outline seven guiding principles and six specific proposals that comprehensive tax reform should achieve:

- The principles for reform include economic growth, fairness, simplicity, revenue neutrality, permanence, competitiveness, and savings and investment.

- The specific proposals include an income tax rate for individuals and corporations that is no higher than 25 percent; repeal of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) and its tax increases; full repeal of the Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT); the adoption of a territorial tax system as an anchor for corporate tax reform; small business income should only be subject to a single level of tax; and the Joint Committee on Taxation (JCT) should include macroeconomic feedback effects in its revenue estimates of any tax overhaul.

HEALTH CARE AND WELFARE: The Senators outline the challenges facing Medicare, Medicaid, and Welfare programs and the means of fixing them.

MEDICARE – Designed for seniors, the Medicare program is split into Part A for in-patient hospital care, Part B for out-patient services, Part C for Medicare Advantage plans, and Part D for prescription drug coverage.

Medicare: The Senators recommend:

- Addressing the eligibility age;
- Evaluating the impact of supplemental coverage;
- Establishing a uniform deductible covering Medicare Part A and Medicare Part B services; and
- Strengthening efforts against fraud, waste and abuse.

Medicare Part A: The Senators recommend:

- Reducing geographic variations in health spending;
- Realigning provider payments; and
- Evaluating existing cost-sharing structures for post-acute services.

Medicare Part B: The Senators recommend the evaluation of the Medicare Part B cost-sharing threshold to ensure the long-term health of the Supplementary Medical Insurance (SMI) Trust Fund.

Medicare Part C: The Senators recommend:

- Examining approaches that competitively set reimbursement to plans and simultaneously preserve access in rural areas; and
- Promoting reforms that encourage innovative plan designs to meet beneficiary needs.

Medicare Part D: The Senators recommend a reevaluation and examination of the current Part D cost-sharing thresholds to ensure long-term health of the program.

MEDICAID – Designed for low-income and disabled individuals and families, Medicaid is a joint federal-state program: The Senators urge modernization of the program using the successful welfare reform model of the 1990s with states and governors leading the way through:

- Implementing fiscal responsibility by giving states defined budgets; and
- Empowering states to implement solutions for their citizens by giving states flexibility to:
  - o Modernize eligibility determination;
  - o Develop and implement provider reimbursement systems that encourage value over volume of services;
  - o Design benefits that comport with private-sector coverage, encourage healthy beneficiary behavior, and better manage chronic disease;
  - o Provide long-term care benefits with approaches that promote cost-effectiveness and self-directed services; and
  - o Partner with the federal government in providing more coordinated care for beneficiaries eligible for both Medicare and Medicaid.

Repeal of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act: The Senators recommend the repeal of this flawed health law as an essential step in improving the nation's future economic and fiscal outlook.

Welfare and Related Program: The Senators recommend collapsing the Social Services Block Grant, the Child Care and Development Fund and the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families into one funding stream for states, the Social Services Fund, and establish time-defined goals.

Tort Reform: The Senators recommend tort reform as a means of slowing health care costs that are driven in part by the expensive practice of defensive medicine and saving billions of dollars.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE – Trade Adjustment Assistance: The Senators recommend the following:

- Reform the eligibility criteria to ensure that only those dislocated workers whose job loss is directly related to international trade are eligible for benefits;
- More narrowly defined benefits; and
- Allocation of any additional funding only to those programs that directly benefit dislocated workers.

SOCIAL SECURITY – The Senators find that with over 55 million Americans receiving Social Security retirement, disability, or survivors benefits and with fewer workers supporting more and more retirees, timely reform of this program is necessary and would send a positive signal to financial markets that America is solving its long-term imbalances.

The Senators recommend that reforms accord with the following principles:

Reform should ensure lasting, sustainable solvency of the program and maintain the integrity of Social Security as a safety net program that protects against poverty in old age or when a worker becomes disabled;

Promised benefit changes should apply to younger workers who can plan accordingly and should not change the real value of benefits for current retirees or those close to retirement;

Any proposed benefit changes should ensure protection against poverty for workers with low lifetime earnings and disabilities;

Maintain, as best possible, the fundamental value that there is a relationship between what workers put into the system and what they get out;

Be mindful of the negative effects of raising payroll taxes and lifting the taxable wage cap, as both would slow job creation and economic growth; and

The Disability Insurance component of the Social Security system – with a Trust Fund that will be exhausted as early as 2016 – must be a part of any overall Social Security reform effort.

GOP Govs Release Medicaid Reform Report

The Republican Governors Public Policy Committee released today a report detailing 31 policy solutions for reforming Medicaid.

"One of the major mistakes of Obamacare is that it ignored input from the states," said RGA Policy Chairman Haley Barbour. "This report encompasses four months of substantive dialogue among the states about how to best reform Medicaid. It is a well thought out document that should be taken seriously by anyone in Congress or the White House who is interested in saving Medicaid."

"Medicaid consumes an ever-increasing and frightening share of state budgets and the current pace of spending is unsustainable," said RGA Chairman Bob McDonnell. "Regardless of whether or not Obamacare is repealed or struck down, Medicaid is in dire need of reform. This report offers realistic ideas about how to fix Medicaid from the states' perspective."

The report, titled A New Medicaid: A Flexible, Innovative and Accountable Future, follows a June 13th letter Republican governors sent to Congressional leaders outlining seven guiding principles for Medicaid reform. Every policy solution in the report falls within the principles outlined in the June letter.

A copy of the report is attached.

Please Note: This report is a collection of policy ideas from the Republican Governors Public Policy Committee Health Care Task Force. Inclusion in this report does not constitute an endorsement of the policy prescription by any specific governor. Instead, these policy proposals should be viewed as among the best ideas from the states to be considered in reforming the nation's healthcare system. Not every governor will choose or should choose to adopt and implement all of these solutions.

ICYMI: Adding Fuel to the Health Care Fire

The Associated Press reports today that a newly discovered provision in President Obama's health care law would make millions of people newly eligible to receive Medicaid. The article notes that the discovery will boost Republican governors' argument that Obamacare's rules concerning Medicaid don't make sense.

In fact, Republican governors have long been advocating that the Medicaid provisions in Obamacare are in desperate need of reform, making the flippant response from the Senate Finance Committee to today's finding all the more disconcerting. The time when federal Democrats can shrug their shoulders and ask everyone to trust them is over.

The full article is below:

A twist in Obama's health care law

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama's health care law would let several million middle-class people get nearly free insurance meant for the poor, a twist government number crunchers say they discovered only after the complex bill was signed.

The change would affect early retirees: A married couple could have an annual income of about $64,000 and still get Medicaid, said officials who make long-range cost estimates for the Health and Human Services department.

Up to 3 million people could qualify for Medicaid in 2014 as a result of the anomaly. That's because, in a major change from today, most of their Social Security benefits would no longer be counted as income for determining eligibility.

Medicare chief actuary Richard Foster says the situation keeps him up at night.

"I don't generally comment on the pros or cons of policy, but that just doesn't make sense," Foster said during a question-and-answer session at a recent professional society meeting. It's almost like allowing middle-class people to qualify for food stamps, he suggested.

"This is a situation that got no attention at all," added Foster. "And even now, as I raise the issue with various policymakers, people are not rushing to say ... we need to do something about this."

Indeed, administration officials and senior Democratic lawmakers say it's not a loophole but the result of a well-meaning effort to simplify rules for deciding who will get help with insurance costs under the new health care law. Instead of a hodgepodge of rules, there will be one national policy.

"This simplification will stop people from falling into coverage gaps and may cause some to be newly eligible for Medicaid and others to no longer qualify," said Brian Cook, spokesman for the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services.

But states have been clamoring for relief from Medicaid costs, complaining that just these sorts of federal rules drive up spending and limit state options. The program is now one of the top issues in budget negotiations between the White House and Congress. Republicans are pushing for a rollback of federal requirements that block states from limiting eligibility.

Medicaid is a safety net program that serves more than 50 million vulnerable Americans, from low-income children and pregnant women to Alzheimer's patients in nursing homes. It's designed as a federal-state partnership, with Washington paying close to 60 percent of the total cost.

Early retirees would be a new group for Medicaid. While retirees can now start collecting Social Security at age 62, they must wait another three years to get Medicare, unless they're disabled.

Some early retirees who worked all their lives may not want to be associated with a health care program for the poor, but others might see it as a relatively painless way to satisfy the new law's requirement that all Americans carry medical insurance starting in 2014. It would help tide them over until they turn 65 and qualify for Medicare.

The actuary's office said the 3 million early retirees who would become eligible for Medicaid are on top of an estimated 16 million to 20 million people that Obama's law would already bring into the program, by opening it to childless adults with incomes near the poverty level. Federal taxpayers will cover all of the initial cost of the expansion.

A spokeswoman for the Senate Finance Committee, which wrote much of the health care law, said if the situation does become a problem there's plenty of time to fix it later.

"These changes don't take effect until 2014, so we have time to review all possible cases to ensure Medicaid meets its mission of serving only the neediest Americans," said Erin Shields.

But Republicans already see a problem.

Former Utah governor Mike Leavitt said adding early retirees will "just add fuel to the fire," bolstering the argument from Republican governors that some of Washington's rules don't make sense.

"The fact that this is being discovered now tells you, what else is baked into this law?" said Leavitt, who served as Health and Human Services secretary under President George H.W. Bush.

Re: Letters from HHS to governors

For those who may not have received copies, Secretary Sebelius sent two letters today to governors:

- 1) a letter co-signed by Secretary Duncan regarding a new initiative to find and enroll eligible children into the Medicaid and Children's Health Insurance Programs (attached); and
- 2) a letter identifying resources and opportunities to assist states in setting up exchanges under the ACA (see text below).

Letter from Secretary of Health and Human Services Kathleen Sebelius to State Officials

August 12, 2011

Dear Governor:

I am writing to update you on important opportunities that are available to your state in connection with the establishment of Affordable Insurance Exchanges. These Exchanges – state-based competitive health insurance marketplaces – will help deliver coverage to individuals and small businesses in your state in a way that is simple, seamless, and affordable.

First, we are awarding a new round of “Establishment Grants” – federal funding for states to develop, implement, and establish Exchanges. States can use these grant funds to ensure that key Exchange functions are designed and implemented at the state level and take into account local factors and circumstances. States can apply for these grants on a rolling basis; applications are processed quarterly by HHS. The next deadline for applications is September 30, 2011. Three states have previously received these grants, and today I am pleased to award more than $185 million to 13 additional states and the District of Columbia.

Second, HHS and the Treasury Department today are releasing proposed rules regarding Exchanges that further the goals of making access to affordable health insurance options simple and seamless. These proposed rules provide additional guidance on a simplified process for determining whether individuals are eligible for coverage through Exchanges, for premium tax credits to assist in the purchase of private insurance, or for other programs such as Medicaid or the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP). The rules follow guidance published July 15, 2011, which details many of the key areas in which states may choose to tailor their Exchange to meet the particular needs of their small businesses and residents. We expect to modify these proposals based on the feedback we receive from the American people. I encourage you to share your comments regarding these proposals with the Departments, particularly by formally commenting on the proposed rules over the next 75 days.

Furthermore, over the coming weeks, we will actively seek state feedback on these proposed rules through a series of regional meetings. You will be hearing from our HHS Regional Director inviting your state to participate in one of these regional meetings in the near future.

I strongly encourage your state to participate. Your feedback – particularly your formal comments on the proposed rules – will significantly help us in the development of the final rules.

The availability of Establishment Grants, along with the flexibility we have provided to states in the development of their Exchanges, creates important opportunities to advance the development of state-based Exchanges. States have several options in implementing Exchanges that can accommodate varying levels of state activity:

State-operated Exchange. Under this option, the state operates all of the functions of the Exchange. HHS will certify state Exchanges by January 1, 2013. However, states can seek conditional approval if they expect to be ready in 2013. States may also choose to establish a state-operated Exchange in future years.

State Partnership Model. The Exchange could be run in partnership between the state and HHS, with some activities performed by the state and others by HHS. States and HHS can explore using a Partnership model to tailor the Exchange to local needs and market conditions. States can also use this model to transition to running their Exchange independently. We look forward to working with the states to further define this option.

Federally-facilitated Exchange. Under this option, HHS will ensure that there is a functioning Exchange in the state. HHS will work with the state to ensure coordination with the state's ongoing role in managing the private insurance market, Medicaid, and CHIP.

Based on your feedback, HHS is already developing information technology (IT) initiatives to make eligibility determinations easier for states, including a federal "hub" through which HHS will provide certain data verification services to all Exchanges as well as Medicaid and CHIP, rather than requiring Exchanges and these other programs to separately interact with multiple federal agencies.

Substantial federal funding is available now to help states establish an Exchange, with Establishment Grant applications accepted through June of 2012 and funding available through 2014. The "initial open enrollment" for Exchanges – the first period in which new coverage options will be available – is scheduled to begin in the fall of 2013. This means that much of the work in preparation for open enrollment needs to be completed earlier in 2013. As such, I encourage states to have a fully developed grant strategy by early 2012. State Exchange grants can be used to help states determine whether they will operate an Exchange on their own, partner with the federal government, or rely on a federally-facilitated Exchange. I encourage all states to take advantage of this opportunity and use these resources to determine which model will work best for their residents. My staff looks forward to meeting on Exchange implementation with state Exchange grantees on September 19 and 20, 2011 in Arlington, VA.

Since the Affordable Care Act was signed into law, the development of Affordable Insurance Exchanges and implementation of this landmark law more generally have been aided by state leaders who have shared their input and advice with our Department. I hope we will continue to hear from you as we work to develop strong partnerships, establish Affordable Insurance Exchanges and implement other aspects of health reform that will improve our health care system. I look forward to continuing to work with you as we pursue our shared goal of better, more affordable health insurance for all Americans.

Sincerely,

/S/Kathleen Sebelius
Secretary of Health and Human Services

New Republican Governors Mark 100 Days

Today marks 100 days since the last of the country's new majority of Republican governors took office. Already, these 18 new governors have made a profound impact on their states as well as the nation at-large.

They have proven that true reform can occur despite opposition from well-funded, powerful interests and have shown Washington that not only can deep-holed budgets be balanced without raising taxes, but that it is possible to implement entitlement reform and restructure government's long-term costs and succeed. From education reform to fiscal and government reform, Republican governors are providing unparalleled political leadership.

Below is a list of the new governors' major initiatives and successes in their first 100 days:

Gov. Robert Bentley (AL)

- Signed the Responsible Budgeting and Spending Act which revises the budgeting process for the Education Trust Fund by allowing a "rolling reserve" process to make the Education Trust Fund resistant to proration.
- Working to implement health insurance exchanges that will increase competition and lower costs.

Gov. Rick Scott (FL)

- Rejected federal high speed rail proposal.
- o Instead announced support of meaningful infrastructure projects like the dredging of the Port of Miami - a project that will help create 33,000 jobs - to accommodate Post Panamax ships and increased shipping that will result when the Panama Canal is expanded and free trade agreements with Colombia and Panama are ratified.

- Signed an executive order to freeze job-killing regulations and establish the Office of Fiscal Accountability and Regulatory Reform to review all new rules.
  - o This office has already identified more than 1000 unnecessary regulations that can be repealed.
- Signed the Student Success Act into law, establishing a system to pay the best teachers more and eliminate teacher tenure for new teachers.
- Created a Drug Strike Force to attack illegal use of prescription drugs by targeting criminal distributors.
- Sold state-owned aircraft to reduce unnecessary state spending - one of the Governor's campaign promises
- Job Creation: through Gov. Scott's commitment to reduce the size, scope and cost of government, as well as return savings to taxpayers through tax cuts, the Governor has enticed companies like Bing Energy and Chromalloy to move operations to Florida and companies like Vision Airlines to expand business in the Sunshine State.
Gov. Nathan Deal (GA)
- Signed an overhaul of the state's cash-strapped HOPE scholarship into law, which assists students with their educational costs of attending college in Georgia.
- Passed an $18.3 billion budget without controversy.
- Earmarked $32 million in bond money for water infrastructure projects.
- Improved accessibility, holding regular legislative office hours for lawmakers.

Governor Terry Branstad (IA)

- Restored openness in state government:
    - o Launched a weekly video "Ask the Gov" Question and Answer series
    - o Revived weekly press conference after previous administrations abolished it
    - o Webcast live every weekly news conference
    - o Launched the "Call Gov. Branstad" show on WHO Radio
  - Opening Iowa back up for business
    - o Signed an executive order rescinding burdensome RICE rule
    - o Announced new businesses bringing hundreds of jobs to Iowa, including Alltech, Cargill and Valent BioSciences Corporation.
    - o Signed an executive order requiring a Jobs Impact Statement for every proposed rule so as to know exactly the ramifications contained therein.
  - Improving the state's finances:
    - o Gov. Branstad insists on a biennial budget that balances with five-year revenue projections and spends less than Iowa takes in each year.
- Gov. Sam Brownback (KS)
- Sweeping reform of state agencies to find efficiencies, reduce burdensome regulation and focus on the core functions of state government.

- o Established Office of the Repealer to review state laws and regulations and identify those which are unreasonable, unduly burdensome, duplicative, or contradictory.
- o Created Citizens Regulatory Review Board to review new rules and regulations proposed by state agencies and provide the Governor with feedback on any concerns raised by its review.
- o Eliminated, streamlined and/or re-organized seven state agencies.
- o Streamlined state human resources and homeland security, ensuring efficiency, uniformity and cost-effectiveness for state government agencies and cuts overhead costs.
- Established Rural Opportunity Zones:
  - o Designated 50 counties as “Rural Opportunity Zones” (ROZ), providing an income tax exemption for certain out-of-state taxpayers who relocate to those counties; and authorizing the counties to participate in a state-matching program to repay student loans of up to $15,000 for college graduates who move to ROZ counties.

Gov. Paul LePage (ME)

- Expedited state repayments of a Medicaid debt to hospitals.
- Agreed to allow the Maine Educational Loan Authority (MELA) to proceed with issuance of tax-exempt student loan revenue bonds to fund student loans for the upcoming academic year.
- Worked to remove unnecessary regulation, which will ease the burden on working families.

Gov. Rick Snyder (MI)

- Fundamentally realigning the state’s tax structure to encourage investment and job creation.
- Put in place tools to help the state and local governments reduce long-term costs.
- Produced a budget plan that would cut taxes on businesses by more than $1.5 billion – including the elimination of the Michigan Business Tax.

Gov. Susanna Martinez (NM)

- Balanced the budget:
  - o Governor Susana Martinez balanced a nearly-half billion dollar deficit she inherited upon taking office without raising taxes.
  - o Governor Martinez’s balanced budget cut unnecessary spending, allowing an increase in state funding levels for top priorities like public education and healthcare for the most vulnerable citizens.
- Education reform:
  - o Governor Martinez worked with a bi-partisan group of legislators to pass a new school evaluation system with overwhelming support. New Mexico schools will now be graded on an easy-to-understand A-F scale, allowing parents to know how well their schools are serving their children and taxpayers to know how effectively their tax dollars are spent. This legislation will also speed up the process of assisting failing schools by targeting resources and providing additional help to struggling students.
- Katie’s Law:
  - o This legislation will require a DNA sample from anyone arrested for a felony crime in New Mexico. New Mexico now has one of the strongest versions of Katie’s Law in the country, giving law enforcement one of the best available tools to prevent crimes, convict criminals, and exonerate the innocent.

o Governor Martinez originally championed this legislation as a district attorney in 2006, but the bill that eventually passed only required a sample to be taken for certain violent felony arrests.

Gov. Jack Dalrymple (ND)

· Proposed budget includes cutting property and income taxes by $500 million and unprecedented investments in infrastructure without borrowing money, while continuing to build the state's reserves to more than $1 billion.

· Signed into law HB 1013, providing $100 million to help communities in North Dakota's oil and gas counties offset direct impacts created by the rapidly developing energy industry.

Gov. Brian Sandoval (NV)

· Balanced the budget in the most challenging time in modern Nevada history.

· Introduced comprehensive education reform package.

· Improving government transparency and accessibility.

Gov. John Kasich (OH)

· Senate Bill 5 levels the playing field between taxpayers and the government workers who serve them, while maintaining government employees' ability to collectively bargain on wages and working conditions.

· Governor Kasich's Jobs Budget would balance an $8 billion deficit while preserving an $800 million tax cut for Ohio families.

· JobsOhio was established through House Bill 1 and is a non-profit economic development corporation that will work more effectively than Ohio's current state-centered efforts to retain and attract businesses. JobsOhio will be managed by a board of directors who are leaders in the business world, and because it is not a government entity, it will move at the speed of the market rather than at the speed of statute.

· Saving Jobs: Companies with major Ohio presences like American Greetings, Bob Evans, Diebold and Goodyear have committed to remaining in the state – preserving 5,500 jobs – and the unemployment rate has dropped below 9 percent for the first time in two years.

· Common Sense Initiative (CSI): Led by Lt. Gov. Taylor, is already eliminating undue burdens on business and helping Ohio companies grow and thrive.

· Statewide Coordination in the Fight Against Opiate Abuse: Through the new Cabinet-level Opiate Task Force will direct addiction prevention efforts across the state. The task force has already led to the raid of two pill mills where important evidence was collected that may assist in this effort.

Gov. Mary Fallin (OK)

· Delivered landmark, comprehensive lawsuit-reform legislation:

o By placing a hard cap of $350,000 on non-economic damages and pursuing other common-sense legal reforms, Governor Fallin has helped to ensure that our legal system is fair to plaintiffs and victims without the kind of "jackpot justice" that drives jobs out of state.

· Cut Taxes:

o Allowed the income tax trigger to take place, cutting income taxes in Oklahoma by roughly $120 million annually for businesses and individuals.

· Brought more accountability to public schools:

o Governor Fallin signed into law important legislation empowering the state superintendent and eliminating "trial de novo," a costly legal appeals process that makes it nearly impossible to terminate ineffective teachers.

- Continued the fight against ObamaCare and federal overreach:
  - o The governor worked with Attorney General Scott Pruitt to ensure that the state of Oklahoma joined other states in challenging the constitutionality of President Obama's health care bill.
  - o She has also agreed to refuse $54 billion in federal funds to ensure that Oklahoma cannot be tied to ObamaCare.

Gov. Tom Corbett (PA)

- Advocating For a Responsible Budget:
  - o When Gov. Corbett came into office in January, Pennsylvania was faced with a $4.3 billion dollar deficit. His budget eliminates the deficit without raising taxes by reducing the cost of government.
- The Fair Share Act:
  - o Will end abusive and frivolous civil lawsuits that target parties with "deep pockets" instead of the defendants who are most culpable.
  - o Has passed the House and is making its way through the Senate.
  - o The measure will improve Pennsylvania's economic climate and competitiveness.
- Pushing for education reform:
  - o Gov. Corbett's plan includes school choice, merit pay, local property tax reform and giving school districts the ability to furlough employees when economic conditions make it necessary.

Gov. Nikki Haley (SC)

- Passed legislation that put more House and Senate votes on the record.
- Took taxpayer cash away from the state's public television and arts operations.
- Set in motion plans to deal with a soaring deficit in Medicaid programs and to restructure state government.

Gov. Dennis Daugaard (SD)

- Signed a balanced budget that completely eliminated the state's structural deficit without raising taxes or using one-time money.
- Proposed and signed package of bills to increase state incentives for economic development.

Gov. Bill Haslam (TN)

- Teacher tenure reform:
  - o Changed probationary period from three to five years.
  - o Included performance evaluations in tenure review.
  - o Gave principals flexibility to keep teachers beyond five year period but not grant tenure.
- Jobs4TN economic development strategy
  - o Regionalized strategies and created target industry clusters where Tennessee already has a clear competitive advantage.

- o Created ECD field director positions to be the region's 'ombudsman' for businesses.
- o Put focus more on turning Tennessee-based intellectual property from research hubs such as ORNL, St. Jude and Vanderbilt into Tennessee jobs.
- o Restructured the Economic and Community Development office.

· Budget proposal -- $1.8 billion less than previous years while still maintaining essential services.
Gov. Scott Walker (WI)

- 24,000 private sector jobs created, including 8,200 manufacturing jobs.
- Eliminated state taxes on Health Savings Accounts.
- Reformed Wisconsin's litigation climate.
- Signed relocation and economic development tax credit legislation.
- Providing tax relief for Wisconsin's job creators: small businesses.
- Transforming the Department of Commerce into the Wisconsin Economic Development Corporation.
- Enacted supermajority for passage of tax increase legislation.
- Right-sizing state government with modest requests on state pension, health care.
- Balancing Wisconsin's FY 2011 Budget.
- Proposed budget that balances $3.6 billion deficit and reduces the structural deficit to lowest point in recent history.
- Introduced 3rd Grade Reading Taskforce to make sure every Wisconsin 3rd grader can read at grade level.
- Aggressively marketed Wisconsin as "Open for Business" after massive Illinois tax increase.

Gov. Matt Mead (WY)

- Began streamlining state government:
  - o Governor Mead and the Republican Legislature combined two state agencies into a single agency.
  - o Governor Mead cut salaries in his Office.
  - o Reviewing all existing executive orders going back decades to remove any that are unnecessary or irrelevant.
- Finished the legislative session while continuing to maintain a surplus and put money into savings.
- Successfully advocated for job creating initiatives that could bring new industries to Wyoming like data centers.
- Kept a tax exemption in place for manufacturers.
  - o Shortly after signing that bill a new employer (Worthing Gestamp) announced they would build a wind tower manufacturing facility in Wyoming.

Galen Institute, Angel Raich, Docs 4 Patient Care, the Benjamin Rush Society, and the Pacific Research Institute File Amicus Brief Against ObamaCare

February 13, 2012 — The Galen Institute, Angel Raich, Docs 4 Patient Care, the Benjamin Rush Society, and the Pacific Research Institute today issued the following statements after filing an amicus brief with the U.S. Supreme Court supporting the 11th Circuit’s decision that the individual mandate contained in the health overhaul law is unconstitutional.

Grace-Marie Turner, President and Founder of the Galen Institute said: “Our brief exposes the fallacy behind a key issue that the Congress and Obama administration used to justify passage of their health overhaul law — namely, the attempt to avoid cost shifting from ‘free-riders.’ Our brief explains in detail how the individual mandate will not solve the problem but will actually make it worse. That demolishes the government’s case that the individual mandate is justified as a means of regulating commerce under the Constitution.”

John Hoff, Counsel for amici curiae and Trustee of the Galen Institute said: “The brief demonstrates the fallacy of the Government’s claim that the individual mandate cures any problem of shifting costs of uncompensated care to private insurance and explains why Congress lacked authority under the Constitution to impose the mandate. Congress has taken a step too far in invoking its authority to regulate interstate commerce.”

Sally C. Pipes, President and CEO of the Pacific Research Institute and John R. Graham, Executive Director of the Benjamin Rush Society, in a joint statement said: “The Obama administration’s claim that the individual mandate is needed to avoid the supposed effects of cost-shifting by the uninsured misreads the government’s own facts and analysis. The individual mandate at best only causes 16 million persons to obtain coverage they otherwise would forego. As a result, the mandate does not have substantial effect on interstate commerce and is neither necessary nor proper for addressing the supposed problem of cost shifting.”

Hal Scherz, MD, FACS, FAAP, President and Founder of Docs 4 Patient Care said: “On March 26, the United States Supreme Court will hear arguments regarding the constitutionality of the Affordable Care Act. Docs 4 Patient Care is honored to be an amicus in support of the 26 states suing the federal government, along with the Benjamin Rush Society, the Pacific Research Institute, and the Galen Institute. As one of the few physician organizations who have filed a brief with the court, we hope to bring credibility to the multi-state case and raise points regarding the new law in a way that none of the other amici can.

“It is our hope that our involvement in this case will play a small role in influencing the Supreme Court justices to conclude as we have, that this law is wrong for America and has been forced upon us as a result of arguments and logic which are specious. This decision will determine not just the fate of a ruinous healthcare policy, but the behavior of the federal government from this point forward. If they can force individuals to purchase a product, there is no limit to what the government can force its citizens to do.”

To interview Erik S. Jaffe, the Counsel of Record, please contact Rowena Itchon at the Pacific Research Institute. To interview Grace-Marie Turner or John Hoff of the Galen Institute, please contact Tara Persico.

Angel McClary Raich

Ms. Raich was the lead respondent in one of the U.S. Supreme Court’s important recent Commerce Clause cases, Gonzales v. Raich. Battling cancer, she brings to this case the perspective of both a patient and a litigant with a personal understanding of the implications of an expansive construction of the Commerce Clause on individual freedom.

Galen Institute

The Galen Institute is a non-profit, 501(c)(3) public policy research organization devoted to advancing ideas and policies that would create a vibrant, patient-centered health sector. It promotes public debate and education about proposals that support individual freedom, consumer choice, competition, and innovation in the health sector.

Docs 4 Patient Care

Docs 4 Patient Care is an organization of concerned physicians committed to the establishment of a health care system that preserves the sanctity of the doctor-patient relationship, promotes quality of care, supports affordable access to all Americans, and protects patients’ freedom of choice.

Benjamin Rush Society

The Benjamin Rush Society aims to unite those across the political spectrum who believe that the profession of medicine calls its practitioners to serve their patients, rather than the government.

Pacific Research Institute

For 33 years, the Pacific Research Institute (PRI) has championed freedom, opportunity, and individual responsibility through free-market policy solutions. Founded in 1979 and based in San Francisco, PRI is a non-profit, non-partisan 501(c)(3) education institution.

Obama's Government Shutdown Gambit

By Karl Rove

Wall Street Journal

April 7, 2011

http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424052748704013604576246740907565666.html?mod=djemEditorialPage\_h

In the White House Press Room on Tuesday, President Barack Obama did what comes naturally—scold others, in this case the Congress. Mr. Obama complained that a budget agreement "could have gotten done three months ago."

What he didn't say was that the budget should have "gotten done" six months ago, before the current fiscal year started last Oct. 1. Our government's failure to have a budget in place halfway through the fiscal year is the president's responsibility. He and his party dominated Congress by wide margins when the budget was supposed to be put in place.

Also on Tuesday, at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue, House Budget Chairman Paul Ryan did what the president has not. Demonstrating leadership and more than a little courage, Mr. Ryan laid out a thoughtful, ambitious blueprint for the next decade.

The Path to Prosperity would return discretionary spending to its 2008 levels and hold it flat for five years; reduce the federal government's work force by 10%; slash corporate welfare; reform the tax code; and reduce the corporate and top personal rate to 25%. It would repeal ObamaCare, change Medicare so the government helps all seniors pay for an insurance policy they choose, and send states money for each person covered by Medicaid, plus the flexibility to spend that money as they see fit.

The Obama-Ryan budget battle foreshadows what Americans are likely to hear in the 2012 campaign: an unengaged, reactive chief executive versus a bold, reform-minded GOP.

In the short term, it's obvious what Mr. Obama hopes to gain. Having watched his standing as "a strong and decisive leader" drop to 52% in last month's Gallup poll from 60% last year, the president is looking to profit politically from a shutdown of the federal government.

When the government was twice shut down in 1995 and 1996, Congressional Republicans survived the controversy and kept their majorities in the 1996 election. At the same time, the shutdowns boosted Bill Clinton's image. Only 37% viewed him as "a strong leader" in a June 1995 ABC News poll. In a January 1996 CBS News poll after the shutdowns, 53% said Mr. Clinton had "strong qualities of leadership."

The president will instruct his party to demagogue the House Republican budget, labeling it as an assault on the poor and a windfall for the rich that will rip America's social safety net to shreds. Never mind that these charges are false and irresponsible. Mr. Ryan would have the government spend $40 trillion over the next 10 years, $6.2 trillion less than Mr. Obama's budget plan of $46 trillion. This is an overall reduction in what the government plans to spend, not a cut from what it is spending today.

Under Mr. Ryan's proposal, for example, health-care spending would still rise for both Medicaid, which serves the poor, and Medicare, which serves seniors. The $275 billion spent on Medicaid this year would grow to $305 billion in 2021 while the $563 billion spent on Medicare this year would grow to $953 billion in 2021. Nor would anyone 55 years or older be affected by any Medicare reforms.

Mr. Ryan and his colleagues want to act now to keep entitlement programs solvent. They want to keep Americans from experiencing the pain of the crisis that will come when the public debt has doubled by 2012 (from the level when Mr. Obama came into office) and nearly tripled by 2021, as it would under the president's plan. Already mandatory spending, the part of the budget that's automatic and not subject to approval each year by Congress, eats up all available revenue this year. Medicare goes broke in 2029, and Social Security is bankrupt in 2037.

The White House doesn't care—it perceives a political path to victory in 2012. What makes this strategy doubly reckless and cynical is that the administration knows a debt crisis is coming and that its spending plans cannot continue.

But the Obama administration's adults—Chief of Staff Bill Daley, Office of Management and Budget Director Jack Lew, and National Economic Council Director Gene Sperling—are clearly not in charge. The politicians—Senior Adviser David Plouffe (who managed Mr. Obama's 2008 campaign) and Communications Director Daniel Pfeiffer (who had the same title in the 2008 campaign) have their hands on the wheel. The White House is in full re-election mode.

The House GOP budget will not become law this year, but it will smoke the president out on spending and provide a framework for Republicans to discuss the nation's fiscal challenges. The contrast between the GOP's boldness and the president's cowardice is striking. The question is whether the president and his party will pay a political price for their abdication of leadership. We're about to find out.

Speaker of the House John Boehner

GOP Budget Will Protect & Preserve Medicare for Current & Future Generations

April 29, 2011 | Posted by Kevin Smith | Permalink

All across the country, Republicans are engaging their constituents about the GOP budget that will help boost our economy and create new jobs, lift the crushing burden of debt that threatens our future, and preserve critical health and retirement programs for America's seniors.

While Democrats have made false claims about the GOP plan, their strategy to scare senior citizens isn't working. Republicans were ready to engage their constituents during this two-week district work period and ready to answer questions about our plan. In fact, when Republicans explain how our plan preserves and protects Medicare, the response has been favorable. For example:

- A new national survey by Gallup says “[p]luralities of middle-aged Americans as well as those 65 and older prefer Ryan’s plan to Obama’s,” with seniors preferring the GOP plan by a 48-42 margin.
- A CBS/New York Times poll recently found that when asked whether “Medicare should be changed from a program in which the government pays doctors and hospitals for treating seniors to a program in which the government helps seniors purchase private health insurance,” 47 percent say yes, 41 percent say no.

Under the GOP plan, there will be no changes and no disruptions to benefits for Americans over the age of 55, and future beneficiaries will have access to the same kinds of options as Members of Congress. The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel tells the story of a Wisconsin townhall where Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan (R-WI) explained the facts about the GOP plan to his constituents:

“Several at the Oak Creek meeting said they were confused about Medicare and whether it would end under Ryan’s plan. Ryan set them straight, explaining that his proposed changes to Medicare would affect those under 55. He said his intent was to preserve the program, which otherwise is expected to be insolvent in nine years.

“‘We need to reform it for the next generation to preserve it,’ Ryan said, adding the reformed plan would work like Medicare Part D, the prescription drug plan that encourages competition for the best rates.

“Tanya Soich of Franklin said she attended sessions in both Franklin and Oak Creek because she wanted to make sure she understood Ryan’s position on Medicare. Her mother-in-law was concerned it would end, she said.

“‘Now I can have the confidence to tell her that she’s taken care of, as well as my children,’ said Soich.

In contrast, the facts show that the President’s plan will ultimately guarantee deep and painful Medicare cuts for seniors:

- The President’s budget does nothing, guaranteeing benefit cuts for seniors. FactCheck.org reported that “if nothing is done, when those trust funds are exhausted, benefits would have to be cut by 22 percent in 2037, and more each year after that, according to the most recent report of the system’s trustees. By 2084, the system will generate only enough revenue to pay for 75 percent of promised benefit levels.”
- Analysis by the nonpartisan CBO shows – if we do nothing – Medicare will be bankrupt within 10 years. A report by the trustees for Medicare says “[w]ithout corrective legislation... the assets of the [Medicare] trust fund would be exhausted within the next 7 to 19 years.”
- The president would also rely on the IPAB – an unelected “rationing board” – to force hundreds of billions of dollars in cuts in addition to the hundreds of billions in Medicare cuts Democrats used to finance ObamaCare. The Wall Street Journal says this will lead to “the political rationing of care for the elderly, as now occurs in Britain,” and many doctors and hospitals may “drop out of Medicare” altogether.

GOP Governors Mark Anniversary of Obamacare

Republican governors marked the one-year anniversary of Obamacare today by detailing ways in which the federal healthcare law will damage state budgets and fail to adequately reform the nation's healthcare system.

Republican governors are also taking to the airwaves this week to discuss the one-year anniversary on national news programs.

RGA Chairman Rick Perry (TX): "Perhaps the most telling development of the year since Obamacare was signed has been the immediate and widespread mobilization of individuals seeking to spare states and citizens from the most painful results of this misguided legislation. In Texas alone, Obamacare stands to cost our state's taxpayers $27 billion over 10 years starting in 2014, a price tag that will result in painful realities for families and employers of all sizes. I'm hopeful Obamacare will be fully repealed, and we can begin a real dialogue on health care reform in America."

RGA Vice Chairman Bob McDonnell (VA): "Implementation of Obamacare would cost Virginia two billion dollars over the next decade in unfunded mandates. We need to improve healthcare in our nation with commonsense, free market solutions, not with federal mandates on the states that take away our flexibility and violate the Constitution."

RGA Policy Chairman Haley Barbour (MS): "Americans are no closer to affordable healthcare than they were one year ago. Instead, at this one year anniversary, we continue to learn the ramifications of the law's many budget gimmicks, bureaucratic hurdles, and expensive mandates for both states and businesses. In my state, the cost to implement PPACA for Medicaid is $1.7 billion over 10 years, including $443 million in the 10th year alone. This law is expanding broken state Medicaid programs and undoing state-based reforms, pulling tax dollars from other necessary areas like education and law enforcement."

Gov. Sean Parnell (AK): "At the one-year anniversary of the federal healthcare law, 26 states are currently challenging its constitutionality, the House of Representatives passed its repeal, and half the country is opposed to it. In Alaska, we remain hopeful that it will be ruled unconstitutional, but in the meantime are working at the state level to improve affordability and increase access to healthcare with state resources and without federal entanglement."

Gov. Jan Brewer (AZ): "In the last 12 months, state leaders have learned the true costs of President Obama's health care 'reform.' Those costs have been meted out to states in the form of unfunded mandates and rigid federal regulations. At a time when states like Arizona are facing historic budget pressures, we need a federal partner willing to provide us the flexibility we need to operate our Medicaid programs in a fashion that best serves our citizens while being fiscally responsible."

Gov. Rick Scott (FL): "One year later, I remain convinced that Obamacare is bad for patients, businesses and taxpayers. This ill-conceived policy will force Florida to spend an additional $12.8 billion on Medicaid and add an additional 2.1 million Floridians to Medicaid. Eliminating patient choice, rationing care and implementing the largest tax hikes in American history are just the beginning of the federal mandate's consequences. I commend Florida's Attorney General Pam Bondi and the other elected officials throughout the country who are standing up to Obamacare. This law has already been ruled unconstitutional in Florida. Now, we need an expedited appellate process to finish the case against Obamacare, and we need the federal government to immediately repeal the taxes enacted to pay for its implementation."

Gov. Nathan Deal (GA): "With one year of Obamacare under our belts, we can already see mandates crunching our state budget – and the bottom lines of our state's job creators in the private sector. The worst is yet to come. An anniversary is always a good time to renew our vows, even if we're vowing to keep up the fight."

Gov. Butch Otter (ID): "The unprecedented and unconstitutional burden that Obamacare seeks to impose on the American people already is damaging state efforts to implement responsible, cost-effective measures to make health care more affordable and accessible. It's diverting attention, effort and resources from our own data- and market-driven policy initiatives. That's why we here in Idaho have taken a stand and will continue to lead the way in pushing back against this unconscionable overreaching of federal authority."

Gov. Mitch Daniels (IN): "For state governments, the bill presents huge new costs, as we are required to enroll 15 million to 20 million more people in our Medicaid systems. In Indiana, our independent actuaries have pegged the price to state taxpayers at $2.6 billion to $3 billion over the next 10 years. This is a huge burden for our state, and yet another incremental expenditure the law's authors declined to account for truthfully."

Gov. Terry Branstad (IA): "President Obama's health care plan adds to the nation's deficit, and forces burdensome mandates on states that we cannot afford. In Iowa, this means an additional 100,000 Iowans on the Medicaid rolls at a time when we are facing a $540 million shortfall. Rather than add more burdensome costs, it's governors who are identifying significant cost savings. I am committed to exploring every possible cost-saving option to help us maximize health coverage for more Iowans and efficiently use taxpayer dollars. One option being explored is the expanded use of generic drugs. Economist Alex Brill recently studied the potential impact of improving the generic substitution rate in Iowa that could save millions of dollars in the Medicaid program."

Gov. Sam Brownback (KS): "If fully enacted, the Obama Health Care plan would devastate the Kansas budget with unaffordable mandates, threatening every other priority in state government. As Governor, I have pledged to make protecting the Kansas economy and Kansas jobs a priority. We continue our call on Congress to repeal and replace the overreaching regulations of Obamacare with legislation that allows Kansas to determine our state's needs and health care priorities. Kansas - not Washington - should determine the state's needs and priorities and then enact our own reforms that increase health insurance choice, competition and coverage while reducing costs."

Gov. Bobby Jindal (LA): "Obamacare must be repealed and replaced. It is an awful policy that creates enormous financial burdens on states and unfunded liabilities in the Medicaid program."

Gov. Jack Dalrymple (ND): "There are many aspects of the health care reform bill that are not well suited to the realities of health care delivery in a state like North Dakota."

Gov. Mary Fallin (OK): "I was proud to be one of the 65% of Oklahomans who voted for and helped to pass an amendment to the Oklahoma constitution designed to block the 'individual mandate' contained within the federal health care law. As governor, I continue to offer my full support to our attorney general, who is leading our legal challenge against Obamacare, as well as the national effort to repeal and replace the law."

Gov. Tom Corbett (PA): "The Federal health care law does not adequately address the costs of health care. Not addressing medical liability reform to stop frivolous lawsuits and to prevent defensive medicine was a major shortcoming of the law."

Gov. Nikki Haley (SC): "Whether it's supporting our attorney general's constitutional challenge, Senator DeMint's repeal effort, Senator Graham's opt-out plan or leading 28 other governors in asking the president to expedite an Obamacare hearing, we have been very clear in South Carolina: we are an equal opportunity opponent of Obamacare – a spending disaster that our state does not want and cannot afford."

Gov. Gary Herbert (UT): "One year ago, the federal government usurped state autonomy and ignored that several states--the incubators of solutions-- had already initiated state-based health system reform. Now the federal government has decreed a 'one-size-fits-all' solution and has left states to shoehorn the ACA's dictates into local agencies and budgets. It's completely unacceptable that the governors who are responsible for much of the implementation were never invited to the table during development. However, states will continue to exert their authority under the Constitution and will continue to innovate and find solutions to pressing issues like healthcare reform."

Gov. Scott Walker (WI): "Health reform started with the promise of reducing the cost of health care. Unfortunately, other than paying higher premiums for health insurance, PPACA holds little gain for the people of Wisconsin. Hundreds of thousands of people in Wisconsin will lose their current coverage. We estimate that 46 percent of those who will become subsidized under either Medicaid or the new tax credits already have health insurance. This means that billions of dollars nationally will be spent without increasing coverage.

PPACA is also a threat to our vibrant and competitive private health insurance market in Wisconsin. Many Wisconsin families will face increased cost in premiums. Our young people, struggling with the costs of raising their families will see the greatest premium costs in the individual and small group markets. Wisconsin has long been an innovative leader in health care. We are already far ahead of what PPACA is supposed to accomplish. We will continue to press all three branches of government at the federal level to reopen PPACA and deliver authentic health care reform that can gain the support of the states and the American people."

Gov. Matt Mead (WY): "Wyoming has fully accepted President Obama's challenge to the states to come up with better alternatives to the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. I firmly believe that the best solutions come from the states, and Wyoming has already begun to work on options that not only keep our residents healthier, but also tackle the cost issues ignored in the federal law."

GOP Governors Unveil 7 Principles of Real Health Reform

The Republican Governors Association unveiled 7 principles for real health care reform today in an op-ed by RGA Chairman Bob McDonnell published by Politico and at an event with Utah Governor Gary Herbert and the American Action Forum.

The governors' efforts build upon the 31 detailed solutions for Medicaid reform released by the RGA last August, and the governors will use the principles outlined below as a guide as they produce a blueprint for comprehensive reform to be released this summer.

A copy of the op-ed is below:

7 principles of health reform

Two years ago this week — after backroom deals and over the objection of many governors — the misnamed Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act became law.

Now, though the Obama administration has issued 10,000 pages of regulations since Democrats in Congress passed the more than 2,000-page behemoth, the law still does little to protect patients and is unlikely to make care more affordable.

In fact, it's doing the opposite.

It adds to the nation's unsustainable debt, and its projected costs have nearly doubled.

It has failed to rein in rising health care costs. Despite President Barack Obama's pledge to reduce premiums by $2,000 for a typical family, premiums are up. The general population is simply no closer to affordable, quality health care coverage than it was two years ago.

The basic way that "Obamacare" seeks to expand coverage is by increasing the number of people eligible for Medicaid. This is not reform. It is just an expansion of the welfare state by the federal government, which can't afford it, largely on the backs of the states, which also can't afford it.

Because “Obamacare” essentially unraveled the partnership of the states and federal government to deliver health care to the poor, Republican governors last August offered 31 recommendations to bring Medicaid into the 21st century.

This plan was developed to give states greater flexibility, spur innovation, encourage accountability and reduce costs for states and the federal government.

As the need for the Supreme Court to rule this health care law unconstitutional becomes clearer, Republican governors are taking the next step — creating a menu of recommendations for comprehensive, sustainable health care reform. The governors’ blueprint, due to be completed this summer, has seven guiding principles.

1. Health care reform should emphasize health: Health and well-being are determined by more than health services used. Employment, education and personal choices influence the health of each American. Unfortunately, the health care law undermines employment and limits personal choice. Meaningful reform should emphasize health by expanding economic opportunity and aligning incentives for Americans to make healthier personal choices that can drive improvements throughout the health care system.

2. Responsibility is best fostered through individual incentives and not an oppressive federal mandate that violates the economic freedoms of Americans: Americans should be in control of their health and the decisions regarding their care. Individuals and families, not governments, are best able to decide the right course of action, which is why price and quality transparency are essential to meaningful reform.

3. Health care reform should enable Medicaid to restore and maintain the economic independence as well as health status of the neediest Americans: Medicaid should be a bridge, not a barrier, to independence. Public assistance programs should be designed to offer support for disabled Americans and help individuals return to or maintain economic independence as well as health status.

4. Health care reform should increase design flexibility in Medicaid and the private insurance market to improve coverage choices: Increasing design flexibility in Medicaid and the private insurance market will strengthen access to care for patients, reduce the regulatory burden that increases the cost of care and lead to innovative programs.

5. Health care reform should align delivery system incentives to improve the value of patient care: Delivery incentives should be aligned to focus on quality, value-based and patient-centered programs that improve health — driving value over volume and quality over quantity while containing costs.

6. Health care reform should foster state innovation to improve health care systems: States are best able to make decisions about the design of their health care systems based on the needs, culture and values of their citizens. Reform should reduce the federal disruption in state and local health care markets while increasing accountability.

7. Health care reform should address unsustainable spending at the family, state and federal levels to ease the debt burden that threatens our future: Families, states and the federal government face a dangerous budgetary outlook made worse by this health care law. The budget problem is spending; correcting it means empowering individuals and fixing the Tax Code to remove hidden costs from the health care system.

These principles are not partisan. Nor should they be considered controversial. They are, however, essential. Too often, Washington policymakers lose sight of what their goals should be by focusing on process and the political implications of their decision making.

Republican governors look forward to replacing "Obamacare" with legislation that will follow these guiding principles to improve health outcomes and contain costs.

GOP Govs Unveil Medicaid Reform Principles

29 Republican governors unveiled today seven guiding principles for reforming Medicaid in a letter written to Senator Orrin Hatch, Ranking Member of the Senate Committee on Finance and Representative Fred Upton, Chairman of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce.

The principles will serve as the framework for future specific recommendations from the governors as they begin what will be an ongoing dialogue with Congress as it weighs how to reform Medicaid.

“Aside from the full repeal of Obamacare, no issue is more important to fixing our nation’s healthcare system than improving Medicaid,” said RGA Chairman Rick Perry. “Governors must be given the flexibility to craft solutions based on their states’ specific needs without constantly needing to ask the federal government for permission.”

“Medicaid is on an unsustainable trajectory that threatens the fiscal health of our states and the nation,” said RGA Policy Chairman Haley Barbour. “Just as governors answered the call to help reform the welfare system in the 1990’s, today’s Republican governors are committed to working with Congress to reform Medicaid.”

The seven principles are:

1. States and territories are best able to make decisions about the design of their healthcare systems based on the respective needs, culture and values of each state.
2. States and territories should also have the opportunity to innovate by using flexible, accountable financing mechanisms that are transparent and that hold states accountable for efficiency and quality healthcare. Such mechanisms may include a block grant, a capped allotment outside of a waiver, or other accountable and transparent financing approaches.

3. Medicaid should be focused on quality, value-based and patient-centered programs that work in concert to improve the health of our states' citizens and drive value over volume, quality over quantity, at the same time containing costs.
4. States and territories must be able to streamline and simplify the eligibility process to ensure coverage for those most in need, and states must be able to enforce reasonable cost sharing for those able to pay.
5. States and territories can provide Medicaid recipients a choice in their healthcare coverage plans, just as many have in the private market, if they are able to leverage the existing insurance marketplace through innovative support mechanisms.
6. Territories must be ensured full integration into the federal healthcare system so they can provide healthcare coverage to those in need with the flexibility afforded to the states.
7. States must have greater flexibility in eligibility, financing and service delivery in order to provide long-term services and support that keep pace with the people Medicaid serves. New federal requirements threaten to stifle state innovation and investment. In addition, since dual eligibles now constitute 39 percent of Medicaid spending, Medicare policies that shift costs to the states must be reversed and the innovative power of states should be rewarded by a shared-savings program that allows full flexibility to target and deliver services, which are cost-effective for both state and federal taxpayers.

A copy of the letter is attached. Gov. Rick Snyder has sent a separate letter to Chairman Upton.

GOP lawmakers urge states on Medicaid

By: Manu Raju
June 29, 2012 05 08 PM EDT

Republican lawmakers are urging their home-state governors to drop out of the Medicaid expansion that was part of Barack Obama's health care law now that the Supreme Court has given them a way out.

In interviews on Friday, GOP House and Senate lawmakers said their states should seriously consider rejecting the law's provision for wider Medicaid coverage, which would gut the law's expanded insurance coverage if many states decide to opt out.

"No, I don't," said Rep. Phil Gingrey (R-Ga.) when asked whether Republican Gov. Nathan Deal should keep his state under the new Medicaid program.

"It's a big increase in cost that the state government will have to incur and Medicaid is already unaffordable in Pennsylvania, as it is for most states," said Sen. Pat Toomey (R-Pa.). "I think they'll have to weigh the option very seriously of not going for that expansion."

"I think they should" drop out, said GOP Rep. Tom Rooney, referring to his home-state of Florida. "The more [states], the better. ... Anything that a state can do to try to water it down, the better."

"I can't imagine they're going to do that," Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) told POLITICO when asked if he believed Kentucky should go along with the Medicaid program. "The governor, our Democratic governor, has already said he has no idea how they'd be able to pay for it."

Like most governors, Kentucky Gov. Steven Beshear (D) has issued a cautious response to the Supreme Court decision, saying he was weighing all his options, despite earlier raising cost concerns with the program.

Under the 2010 health law, the Medicaid expansion would cover 16 million people, mostly paid for by the federal government. The law says that the federal government will initially cover the costs of the expansion between 2014 and 2016, but it eventually will phase down to picking up about 90 percent of the costs by 2020, shifting some of the burden onto the states.

If states refused to go along, the law allowed the government to cut off federal dollars for their current Medicaid programs, a prospect that prompted litigation from states' attorneys general.

Under Chief Justice John Roberts's ruling that upheld the individual mandate and much of the health care law, the court said that the federal government could not penalize the states by withholding those Medicaid funds for those that refused to comply. Now, the states have the choice to decide whether to participate in the program, which would cover those under 133 percent of the federal poverty line starting in 2014.

If states choose to forgo the option, it could leave millions of poorer citizens in a lurch since the health care law was structured to ensure Medicaid covered their health care costs.

"I cannot believe any reasonable public official wouldn't want to provide health insurance," said Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-Ohio) when asked about his Republican Gov. John Kasich. Recognizing that states are in a politically thorny situation, some prospective Mitt Romney running mates took a more cautious stance on Friday.

"We need to look at it, we're doing some research on it ... and it needs to be a decision based on the facts: coverage and expense," said Sen. Rob Portman (R-Ohio). "I know they want much more flexibility."

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) said: "I respect whatever decision they make. I think they are not supportive of Obamacare, and certainly the implications of what it means to the state budget. Many states would be bankrupted by that measure."

Sen. John Thune (R-S.D.) said his guess is that South Dakota "may opt not to go along with that" but he didn't "want to tell [Gov. Dennis Daugaard] what to do."

"That's a conversation obviously I'll have to have with my governor on that," Thune said Friday.

Many Republicans struggled Friday to lay out how to handle underprivileged voters who could be affected if states choose not to go along. Gingrey said those at 133 percent of poverty level have "got a little bit more money in their pocket than those who are at 100 percent of the federal poverty level."

Added Rep. Cathy McMorris Rodgers (R-Wash.): "Medicaid is an important safety net for our most vulnerable, for the disabled, and I'm concerned about promises that were made in the bill that I want to make sure that we're continuing to protect the intended population that Medicaid is targeting."

Still, other Republicans seemed ready to see their states exercise their option to drop out of the Obama program.

"It really would be difficult to justify going forward when you're really struggling to pay for [other] programs," said Sen. John Boozman (R-Ark.).

Sen. Mike Johanns (R-Neb.) added that GOP Gov. Dave Heineman's "choices here are to cut other programs, that's mostly education, K-12 and higher education, or raise taxes. And we don't want to raise taxes in our state, so there you go. Expand Medicaid, and then you've got to cut other programs."

MEDIA ADVISORY

April 5, 2011

Here's a statement from Governor Daniels about the FY 2012 Budget Resolution released today by the House Budget Committee:

"The House budget resolution is the first serious proposal produced by either party to deal with the overriding issue of our time. The national debt we are amassing threatens the livelihood and the liberty of every single American, and in particular the life prospects of our young people.

"Anyone criticizing this plan without offering a specific and equally bold program of his own has failed in the public duty to be honest and clear with Americans about the gravest danger we are facing together."

RGA Leadership Supports House GOP Budget; Calls for Medicaid Block Grants

Leaders of the Republican Governors Association sent a letter today to Representative Paul Ryan, Chairman of the House Budget Committee, supporting his budget proposal and calling for Medicaid block grants.

The letter was signed by RGA Chairman Rick Perry, Vice Chairman Bob McDonnell, Policy Chairman Haley Barbour and Policy Vice Chairman Chris Christie.

A copy of the letter is attached and below:

Dear Chairman Ryan:

On behalf of Republican Governors, we applaud the bold FY 2012 budget proposal you announced today. The House Republican budget halts the out of control spending spree of recent years, and imposes a back to basics, fiscal discipline that voters clearly asked for in last November's mid-term elections. It also gives businesses the certainty they need to create jobs and accelerate the engines of economic growth.

We appreciate the many innovative reforms this budget will demand; the current path forward is unsustainable. As House Republican leadership redesigns programs to implement this budget, federal restrictions on Governors' ability to freely govern must be eliminated. Republican Governors are ready to assist you.

Medicaid reform is welcome and the Republican Governors overwhelmingly support the creation of a Medicaid block grant program. This well established approach will give states the freedom to innovate, share best practices, and create cost-effective ways to deliver quality health care to our most vulnerable populations. We appreciate this effort because The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) does not provide the flexibility states need for the challenges of today or tomorrow. Medicaid remains an antiquated, federal maze of regulations and mandates focused on process instead of quality health care. It requires months and sometimes years of negotiations for even modest changes, "perhaps" resulting in a positive outcome at the end of the process. This practice must stop if Governors are to contain costs and provide a safety net for our citizens; we know their needs far better than the federal government. We cannot do the jobs we were elected to do while continuing to be hampered by a federal program that stifles innovation and handcuffs state flexibility.

Chairman Ryan, your Medicaid proposals are far superior to those envisioned in the PPACA. As you know, Republican Governors have urged the President to support an expedited review of the court cases associated with the new law; its federal command and control approach does not address the health care needs of the 21st century.

We commend your leadership during these challenging economic times. We are thankful for the opportunity to work with you and the entire House leadership to ensure that Governors are leading the necessary government reforms you seek.

Sincerely,

Governor Rick Perry

Governor Bobby Jindal: Patients Over Bureaucrats

Once the United States Supreme Court reminds our constitutional lawyer professor-turned-President of the existence of the Tenth Amendment and the limits of the Commerce Clause, thereby repealing Obamacare, the natural question becomes, what's next? All of the problems that existed before President Obama, then-Speaker Pelosi, and Senate Majority Leader Reid forced through a bill to raise hundreds of billions of dollars in taxes, cut Medicare spending, and create yet another entitlement program we cannot afford will still exist.

The American health care system has many well documented flaws, but reminds me of Churchill's description of democracy as the "worst form of government, except for all those other forms that have been tried." Surely, our health care system is too expensive, leaves too many families without coverage, and is plagued by redundant paperwork and procedures. Yet, at its best, there is no better. When your child or parent is sick, you don't wish they could be treated elsewhere. But, you might be worried about how you are going to pay for the medical bills after they get better.

The President often promised that he would bend the health care cost curve down, and I just wish he had succeeded, or even really tried, and had done so in a way that maximizes our freedom. Health care reform is filled with confusing acronyms and large numbers, but really comes down to one simple question: Who do we want making our health care decisions? Do we want doctors and their patients in charge or do we want government bureaucrats in charge? Since health care is such a personal matter – impacting us when we are the most vulnerable - and also expensive – consuming an increasingly larger share of our economy, how we answer this question may be one of the most important domestic policy decisions we make.

President Obama has made it clear his answer involves a top down government run approach that, as President Reagan famously said, “would have the efficiency of the Postal Service and the compassion of the I.R.S.” I was no great fan of the late Senator Ted Kennedy’s policies or politics, but did admire his philosophical consistency and dogged determination to get to a single payer system. I only wish more of our Republican members of Congress displayed those same traits in defense of a consumer based system. Senator Kennedy would pursue incremental steps or huge leaps towards government run health care, depending on the political circumstances, but he always worked to move the system in his direction. We need Republicans in Washington to stop viewing health care as simply a Democratic issue and to stop thinking they have achieved victory when they merely adopt a cheaper version of the Democratic plan. Over the years, Republican members of Congress have slowed down the other side, but have not prevented government from taking over more and more of our health care system. Indeed, the government is soon expected to pay for half of all health care spending, with that portion continuing to increase.

So, what next? How do we strengthen and improve a consumer based health care system? Let’s consider three main purchasers of health care – Medicare, Medicaid, and private insurance.

Medicare

The recent trustees report confirms what everyone already knows, but most in Washington want to ignore. Medicare is going broke, based on solvency of the hospital trust fund, percentage of GDP spent, growth in spending versus revenues, etc. The program today wastes billions of taxpayer dollars each year in fraud and waste, while trapping seniors in a system drowning in what the Mayo Clinic once counted as 130,000 pages of rules and regulations. Len Nichols described the program as the federal government trying to set 10,000 prices in 3,000 counties, making the Pentagon’s $400 hammers and $600 toilet seats look quaint by comparison. The Left wants to raise payroll taxes, while Congress and the bureaucrats continue to make political decisions on how much services should cost, which treatments are covered, and how often patients can visit their providers. The consumer based alternative is to adopt a premium support model, similar to the one used for federal employees, Members of Congress, and many in the private sector, to subsidize the majority of the premiums paid by seniors free to choose their own health care plan which best meets their needs.

Medicaid

The Medicaid program, jointly financed and overseen by the states and the federal government, continues to overwhelm state budgets, consuming more scarce tax dollars and threatening funding for schools and roads, while failing to deliver health care efficiently. While welfare reform continues to stand as one of the most impressive recent domestic policy accomplishments to come from Washington, not exactly a high bar, liberal advocacy groups pressured Congress to inexplicably exclude Medicaid. States need to be freed from the D.C. bureaucracy. The same local flexibility, accountability based on outcomes not process, and an emphasis on helping the poor to thrive in the mainstream that succeeded in transforming welfare will work with Medicaid. There is no excuse for a continued “separate but equal” health care system in this day and age. Democrats have blocked various Republican attempts to block grant the Medicaid program for years, while ignoring the pleas of governors from both parties for regulatory relief and an end to the unfunded mandates.

At the very least, Congress should allow states to opt-in to a more flexible long-term funding arrangement; the Obama Administration could accomplish this through waivers, but won't. States would receive guaranteed federal funding, adjusted on a per capita basis to account for economic cycles, and would agree to predictable federal funding caps set lower than current predicted growth rates in exchange for relief from federal regulations. States would have the freedom to design programs that best meet their people's needs, combined with an incentive to lower costs rather than game the system. Instead of the federal government designing one size fits all eligibility requirements and micromanaging benefit designs and copayment rules, states would be required to focus on improving health outcomes for their vulnerable populations. At the very least, Washington should allow states to start such a program for the able bodied populations, i.e., those who qualify for Medicaid primarily due to income and not health status, which comprise the majority of Medicaid beneficiaries, while considering special protections for the elderly and disabled.

Here is a radical thought – why not free the states to focus their efforts and spending on helping beneficiaries get better paying jobs so they can afford their own health care and break the cycle of dependence? Why not use more Medicaid spending to subsidize private coverage, rather than building public bureaucracies, as a transition to the independence envisioned in welfare reform?

Private Coverage

The American health insurance marketplace simply does not work as it should today. It actually does not resemble any reasonably functioning insurance system. The idea of insurance should be to pool risk over large populations and time to protect individuals against unpredictable and potentially overwhelming risk. Obviously, different people with different income, assets, and medical conditions will have different levels of overwhelming risk. Yet, health insurance, especially individual coverage, today often effectively screens out the sick, offering coverage when we least need it, and too often simply offers prepaid health care coverage.

A good way to understand the failings of the marketplace is to compare health care insurance with other insurance. For example, most of us don't file claims with our auto insurers for every ding our car doors get in the parking lot, knowing the resulting increase in premiums and hassle in paperwork aren't worth the payout. We either pay to fix the car door ourselves or live with the scratches. Yet, we have been trained to expect first dollar coverage for minor procedures, while more and more employers and plans are capping coverage with episodic, annual, or lifetime limits. Also, most of us aren't frustrated at the end of the year that our homes haven't flooded or burned down, expecting refunds for our property insurance premiums. We don't set fire to a bedroom at the end of the year to ensure we get our money's worth! Yet, many patients flood their doctors' offices or refill prescriptions early towards the end of the year once they have exceeded their deductibles, determined to get their money's worth.

Part of the problem is that our health insurance system has evolved over time almost by accident in response to wage controls, tax policies, and other pressures so that most Americans get their coverage through their employers. The resulting subsidy and economies of scale are important benefits, but it is time to modernize our health care system since neither the status quo nor the President's prescribed fix is acceptable.

Just as technology is transforming our society and empowering the individual, our health care system must also evolve from a top down approach, run by either insurance or government bureaucrats, to a bottom up system where patients make decisions. We need more transparency, where individuals have access to pricing and easily understandable and comparable outcomes and quality data via the internet and also have portable electronic health care records, so that patients can easily navigate what could otherwise be a confusing, potentially scary, and highly technical array of options. Consumers should share in the savings of best practices and have more, not less, access to health savings accounts and other tax advantaged financing mechanisms that reward them for seeking care in cost-effective settings, reducing the likelihood of chronic disease, complying with medical regimens, and applying savings towards future health care costs. Insurance must be made portable across state lines and jobs, and accompanied by policies that reduce the dangers of adverse risk selection with the least amount of intrusion into the markets and our lives (e.g., reinsurance, high-risk pools, fixed open enrollment periods). Consumers, including those working for or owning a small business, must have the opportunity to purchase coverage through voluntary pools, whether through trade associations or churches or unions or whatever, to enjoy the same benefits of scale currently offered to those receiving care through large employers or the government. Payment should be for performance, not activity, rewarding integrated networks offering coordinated care, disease management, and preventative care. Frivolous lawsuit reform is a critical component of a reformed health marketplace that will save billions of dollars while also reducing overutilization. Finally, those needing help to afford their care should get that help via refundable tax credits to subsidize the cost of private coverage rather than building another government-run health plan.

Churchill also said about the American people, "We can always count on the Americans to do the right thing, after they have exhausted all the other possibilities." With Obamacare, we have certainly exhausted all the other possibilities; now is the time to do the right thing and reform our health care system to empower the patient instead of the bureaucrats.

SCOTT: Florida will not implement Obamacare

Health law treats symptoms, not the disease

By Gov. Rick Scott
Friday, July 6, 2012

Obamacare, in its effort to force everyone into a health insurance plan, is attempting to treat a symptom - the uninsured - rather than the cause of the problem.

I think everyone agrees there are far too many who want health insurance and can't get it. But the truth is, the real problem isn't with health insurance. The underlying cause is the rapidly increasing cost of health care.

Instead of forcing people into another big-government program that eliminates natural incentives to keep costs down, we should be focused on free-market reforms that make health care more affordable. With costs lowered, more people would have access to medical doctors and services, and we wouldn't have to place another heavy burden on taxpayers to make it work.

After the U.S. Supreme Court's stunning pronouncement on Obamacare, all 50 governors face two big decisions:

1. Do we let the federal government impose a massive Medicaid expansion on us?
2. Do we establish a state insurance exchange or let the federal government come in and run it?

My answer is simple. No. We just can't afford it.

Medicaid is the fastest-growing part of our state budget. And unlike the federal government, which isn't required to balance its budget, we could only pay for expanding Medicaid by increasing taxes or cutting from other parts of the budget. Expanding Medicaid puts other vital government functions, such as education, public safety and infrastructure, at risk. That is not something I am willing to do.

History repeatedly has shown that the costs of many government health care programs far exceed early projections. This daunting reality is not unique to Florida. Washington acts as if it's doing states a favor by covering the first few years of expanded Medicaid payments, but where does it think those tax dollars are coming from? Floridians, as well as taxpayers from every other state, are the ones footing the bill. Furthermore, once the responsibility begins to shift away from the federal government, states will be left to start picking up the tab, putting too much pressure on state budgets.

We already have safety-net programs that cover the needs of the most vulnerable in our state. But if we don't implement a real solution to our health care and economic problems, there will never be enough programs to meet the demand. Since 2009, I've advocated a solution that implements four pillars of free-market reforms: choice, competition, accountability and personal responsibility.

Choice: Patients should be able to choose their own doctors. Providers should not force families to buy a plan with services they don't intend to use. By giving every American a choice, providers are naturally forced to compete if they want to stay in business.

Competition: People should be allowed to buy a health insurance product across state lines, and they also should know the prices upfront. You wouldn't buy a car or groceries without knowing the price, and you shouldn't have to choose your health care services and providers without knowing how much it's going to cost you. Patients should be able to easily find out the cost for services before they receive them.

Accountability: Government should be giving the same health insurance tax breaks to individuals that they give to employers. People should be able to own their own health plans.

Personal responsibility: Let's reward people for taking care of themselves. Good drivers are rewarded with lower auto insurance policy rates. Life insurers give preferred rates for healthy lifestyles. The same should apply for health insurance.

As governor of the great state of Florida, I am committed to breaking the cycle of dependence on public assistance. As a person who lived in public housing as a child, I know that cycle can be broken. And I want all of us to have the chance to live our version of the American dream.

For this to happen, we need to focus on the real problem with our health care system, the costs. We need to reduce the high price of health care and help the unemployed get jobs so more people can afford the care they need and more employers can afford to offer health insurance. That's what I'm focused on in Florida. The more opportunity we provide for people to get a quality education and a job, without raising their cost of living, the more we can improve the quality of life for everyone.

A RGPPC Governors' Only conference call will be held on Tuesday, July 3rd: 11:30 AM - 12:00 PM (EDT) to discuss the PPACA Supreme Court decision. A copy of this email is being sent to your schedulers. On this call, a brief summary of the decision will be provided, and governors will discuss what the decision means for their state as well as next steps. Please have your schedulers RSVP for your governor to Larissa Ziemann at LZiemann@rga.org. A conference line and agenda will be provided at that time.

A reminder that it is likely that a SCOTUS PPACA decision will occur on Thursday. Your communication teams have been provided talking points and information regarding our rapid response communication line. In addition, RGPPC will forward materials and interpretations of the decision as we get them.

As previously noted, please make every accommodation possible to have your governor join the July 3rd call with other governors. As always, don't hesitate to contact us if you need more information.

President Barack Obama
The White House
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. President:

The undersigned governors hereby express our strong support for an expedited appeal of the Virginia and Florida health care lawsuits recently decided in favor of the states. We respectfully ask that you direct the United States Department of Justice to support an expedited appellate process for each case to reach the United States Supreme Court as soon as possible in order to resolve the significant constitutional issues presented, which we all agree are of national importance.

Regardless of our respective positions on the merits of the policies in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA), every state faces significant challenges and expenses implementing PPACA over the next several years. Additionally, there is little doubt that the cases will ultimately be decided by the Supreme Court. This request for expedited review takes no position on PPACA, but seeks only to obtain the Supreme Court's final determination as soon as possible.

Given the daunting and costly financial and regulatory burdens that our states and the private sector will face in implementing PPACA over the coming years, particularly during this unprecedented budgetary time, public interest requires expediting a final resolution of the litigation to give certainty as soon as possible. We should not endure years of litigation in the circuit courts, when the Supreme Court can promptly provide finality. This resolution can help prevent the states and the private sector from undertaking potentially unnecessary measures and expenses. More importantly, our businesses, health care providers, and citizens of our great nation need to know as soon as possible whether all or part of the law will be upheld or stricken, so they know their options and obligations.

To that end, we respectfully ask that you promptly support an expedited appellate process for each of the pending cases to achieve quick resolution by the United States Supreme Court and to encourage the United States Department of Justice to join these efforts.

Thank you for your consideration and prompt attention to this important national matter.

Subject: Daniels Op-Ed on State Flexibility

In case you hadn't seen it, Indiana's Governor Mitch Daniels has an op-ed in the Wall Street Journal this morning discussing how the current health care law impedes on states' ability to manage their Medicaid programs and insurance markets – along with a list of potential solutions that could yield more productive outcomes than Washington-based mandates and diktats. Also of note: The article makes Daniels the second governor to warn about states “dumping” their employees into the new insurance Exchanges (thus forcing federal taxpayers to subsidize more participants in same), following the concerns articulated in an October op-ed in the Journal by Tennessee's then-Governor, Democrat Phil Bredesen.

An ObamaCare Appeal From the States

Twenty-one governors representing more than 115 million Americans have written to Kathleen Sebelius asking for more flexibility on health-care reform.

By MITCH DANIELS

Unless you're in favor of a fully nationalized health-care system, the president's health-care reform law is a massive mistake. It will amplify all the big drivers of overconsumption and excessive pricing: "Why not, it's free?" reimbursement; "The more I do, the more I get" provider payment; and all the defensive medicine the trial bar's ingenuity can generate.

All claims made for it were false. It will add trillions to the federal deficit. It will lead to a de facto government takeover of health care faster than most people realize, and as millions of Americans are added to the Medicaid rolls and millions more employees (including, watch for this, workers of bankrupt state governments) are dumped into the new exchanges.

Many of us governors are hoping for either a judicial or legislative rescue from this impending disaster, and recent court decisions suggest there's a chance of that. But we can't count on a miracle—that's only permitted in Washington policy making. We have no choice but to prepare for the very real possibility that the law takes effect in 2014.

For state governments, the bill presents huge new costs, as we are required to enroll 15 million to 20 million more people in our Medicaid systems. In Indiana, our independent actuaries have pegged the price to state taxpayers at $2.6 billion to $3 billion over the next 10 years. This is a huge burden for our state, and yet another incremental expenditure the law's authors declined to account for truthfully.

Perhaps worse, the law expects to conscript the states as its agents in its takeover of health care. It assumes that we will set up and operate its new insurance "exchanges" for it, using our current welfare apparatuses to do the numbingly complex work of figuring out who is eligible for its subsidies, how much each person or family is eligible for, redetermining this eligibility regularly, and more. Then, we are supposed to oversee all the insurance plans in the exchanges for compliance with Washington's dictates about terms and prices.

The default option if any state declines to participate is for the federal government to operate an exchange directly. Which got me thinking: If the new law is not repealed by 2013, what could be done to reshape it in the direction of freedom and genuine cost control?

I have written to Kathleen Sebelius, secretary of Health and Services (HHS), saying that if her department wants Indiana to run its program for it, we will do so under the following conditions:

- We are given the flexibility to decide which insurers are permitted to offer their products.
- All the law's expensive benefit mandates are waived, so that our citizens aren't forced to buy benefits they don't need and have a range of choice that includes more affordable plans.
- The law's provisions discriminating against consumer-driven plans, such as health savings accounts, are waived.
- We are given the freedom to move Medicaid beneficiaries into the exchange, or to utilize new approaches to the traditional program, instead of herding hundreds of thousands more people into today's broken Medicaid system.
- Our state is reimbursed the true, full cost of the administrative burden to be imposed upon us, based on the estimate of an auditor independent of HHS.
- A trustworthy projection is commissioned, by a research organization independent of the department, of how many people are likely to wind up in the exchange, given the large incentives for employers to save money by off-loading their workers.

Obviously, this is a very different system than the one the legislation intends. Health care would be much more affordable, minus all the mandates, and plus the consumer consciousness that comes with health savings accounts and their kin. Customer choice would be dramatically enhanced by the state's ability to allow more insurers to participate and offer consumer-driven plans. Through greater flexibility in the management of Medicaid, the state might be able to reduce substantially the hidden tax increase that forced expansion of the program will impose.

Most fundamentally, the system we are proposing requires Washington to abandon most of the command-and-control aspects of the law as written. It steers away from nanny-state paternalism by assuming, recognizing and reinforcing the dignity of all our citizens and their right to make health care's highly personal decisions for themselves.

So why would Ms. Sebelius and HHS agree to this de facto rewrite of their treasured accomplishment? A glance at the recent fiasco of high-risk pools provides the answer. When a majority of states, including Indiana, declined to participate in setting up these pools, which cover those with high-cost, existing conditions, the task fell to HHS. As widely reported, it went poorly, with costs far above predictions and only a tiny fraction of the expected population signing up.

If the feds can't manage this little project, what should we expect if they attempt it on a scale hundreds of times larger and more complex? If it were only Indiana asking, I have no doubt that HHS would ignore us. But Indiana is not alone. So far, 21 states—including Pennsylvania, Texas and Louisiana—have signed the same letter. We represent more than 115 million Americans. Washington's attempt to set up eligibility and exchange bureaucracies in all these places would invite a first-rate operational catastrophe.

If there's to be a train wreck, we governors would rather be spectators than conductors. But if the federal government is willing to reroute the train to a different, more productive track, we are here to help.

COMMONWEALTH of VIRGINIA

Office of the Governor

February 14, 2011

Robert F. McDonnell
Governor

The Honorable John Boehner
Office of the Speaker
H-232 The Capitol
Washington, DC 20515

The Honorable Mitch McConnell
361-A Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Speaker Boehner and Senator McConnell:

Congratulations on your efforts to begin restoring the American people's confidence in our representative democracy. The nation's desire to return to its values of individual responsibility, competitive markets, and limited and more effective government is clear. Applying these principles in the legislative process will lead to significant economic growth and job creation.

In Virginia, as I have said publicly many times through multiple venues, including recent testimony before Congress, we firmly believe that the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) is flawed and sections are unconstitutional. I signed legislation prohibiting mandates on individuals to purchase health insurance, and the Commonwealth was the first state to file suit challenging the constitutionality of PPACA. As you know, we were also the first state to have a successful ruling to that effect by a federal District Court. There has now been a second in Florida. We are joining with the majority of states to urge the Administration to seek a quick review and ultimate resolution of this issue by the United States Supreme Court in order to save time and money, and create finality and certainty.

While Virginia is opposed to PPACA, we also recognize that our health care system can be improved. Virginia, like all states, does not get the full value that we should from our health care expenditures. This results in a decrease of access to care which in-turn increases the burden on the safety net and taxpayers. Additionally, it adds expense for our businesses, limits our ability to attract international business, and makes our products more expensive. Our economic viability depends in part on reining in the costs associated with health care.

The complex web of new programs, agencies and bureaucracies created by PPACA is stifling. The lack of flexibility, rigid maintenance of eligibility (MOE) requirements, and flood of mandates will drive the cost of Medicaid up an additional $2 billion by 2022. This is on top of a program in Virginia that has already grown 1600% since 1985, from about $230 million to $3.4 billion, and now consumes 20% of the total state General Fund budget. Governors around the country, in both parties, are grappling with the unsustainable, unfunded burdens PPACA will put on the states if it is not stricken or repealed.

As we look ahead to your stated goal of repeal and replacement of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, we must remember that health system reform remains a critical issue for states. Virginia, along with her sister states, needs certainty about what is both expected and permitted in order to plan carefully and invest wisely. Any federal health system reform must provide states maximum flexibility in order to carry out reforms consistent with their own values, financial climate, and needs of their citizens. The best national framework for health reform will improve the health of our country and strengthen the competitive position of our businesses while saving our taxpayers resources.

For these reasons, I created the Virginia Health Reform Initiative (VHRI). The purposes of VHRI are to implement PPACA in the least burdensome and bureaucratic manner for Virginia, while recommending other innovative healthcare solutions that meet the needs of Virginia's citizens and government. The Initiative will ensure that meaningful reform is achieved throughout the Commonwealth. There is a desire to see that the health care delivery system as a whole is positively impacted as a result of the work accomplished through the initiative. From insurance and payment reforms to how care is delivered, the initiative will work with stakeholders to reduce costs and improve quality. Just as Virginia is leading the opposition to PPACA, we believe we can also help lead the nation by establishing a model of innovative state based health reform.

The initial work of Virginia's Health Reform Initiative suggests a way forward for Congress. Our country must change how it purchases both insurance and health care if we are to make sustainable improvements in our delivery system.

Health Care as a Marketplace

From Adam Smith, we learned that markets require willing buyers and sellers, price transparency, and few barriers to entry into the marketplace. Health care is probably the sector of our economy in which market forces are most limited. Rather than continuing towards a single payer system that is the inevitable result of the requirements, incentives, and penalties in the PPACA, Congress should focus on enabling individuals and organizations to both purchase and provide services with full knowledge of pricing and value provided.

Congress could offer individuals tax deductions equivalent to employer deductions and allow them to select their own healthcare funding plan without financial penalty. The relentless increase in demand and cost for health care is caused by the separation between the buyer and the payer both in purchasing insurance and care. An important opportunity to increase accountability is to encourage individual markets for the purchase of products to fund health and health care services. When individuals choose for themselves, there is less need for "protection" in the form of regulation and mandates on employers. Giving business the option of moving healthcare costs off their balance sheets should improve their competitive position. Employees should see an increase in their wages and the knowledge of the full cost of their insurance policy will encourage healthier behavior.

Market-based reform must encourage development of markets in insurance products. Individuals should be able to aggregate in a number of ways to obtain their policies. The health benefit exchange concept has some merit, but should not necessarily be an exclusive franchise in each state. Each state should have maximum flexibility to develop or encourage the development of private sector exchanges or use some other mechanism to create a better insurance market. In Virginia, it is possible that more than one exchange may arise in order to meet the needs of various markets.

Congress must break the stranglehold of the federal payment system by transforming the payment mechanisms mandated for Medicare and Medicaid by the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS). Price controls stifle innovation and do not work in any area of the economy. Many options for payment reform exist. To the extent that the federal government purchases services, it must pay for value and not volume. Moving away from price controls and toward a defined contribution methodology would allow for implementation of best practices and reward the effort and increased expense of adding value at every stage of the health care delivery and financing system. Providers must be rewarded for the value they produce. Continuing the current top down system in both Medicare and Medicaid will drive the nation towards an ineffective, "lowest common denominator single payer system."

Medicaid Concerns

Virginia's Medicaid program is the second largest program in Virginia's state general fund budget. The non-stimulus federal match rate for Virginia is 50 percent (this rate goes back into effect on July 1, 2011). In state fiscal year 2012, the Medicaid budget is 20.7 percent of the state only portion of the budget of $16.0 billion. In state fiscal year 2010, the total Medicaid expenditures were $6.55 billion (both state and federal funds) which provided health care to a monthly average of over 800,000 Virginians and more than one million individuals over the entire year.

Over the past ten years, the number of people enrolled in the Virginia Medicaid program has increased more than 39 percent and spending has grown by nearly $4 billion (state and federal). The three key drivers have been a concerted outreach to enroll more children, increases in the number of aged and disabled individuals enrolled in home and community based waiver programs, and most recently, the cyclical impact of economy. This enrollment growth has occurred despite the fact that Virginia's eligibility criteria are among the strictest in the nation.

Even prior to the passage of PPACA, Medicaid growth was unsustainable. If implemented as currently written, both in numbers of beneficiaries and in size of expenditures, Virginia Medicaid will expand significantly. New enrollees is estimated to be between 270,000 (lower bound estimate) to 425,000 (upper bound estimate) at an increased cost of $1.5 billion to $2.2 billion in state funds between 2010 and 2022.

Until the Supreme Court strikes down PPACA or Congress successfully repeals it, states have a need for specific and immediate relief from certain provisions in the PPACA. Such relief is related to Medicaid requirements and numerous other federal regulations that inhibit competition in the insurance and health care markets.

First, among these needs is an easing of the requirements for Maintenance of Eligibility (MOE). During the 2010 session, Virginia's General Assembly enacted changes to the eligibility determination process. PPACA was enacted before those necessary changes became effective. For example, Virginia also needs to address loopholes in the Medicaid "spend down" process. PPACA provides no flexibility for these reasonable changes. With excessive restrictions on what must "stay the same," one of the only places in which Virginia can achieve Medicaid savings is through cuts to Medicaid providers. We value the providers who accept Medicaid as a payment source. Flexibility within MOE requirements and broader waivers would afford all states the opportunity to innovate, try new deliveries, options, and protect identify other cost savings measures.

Moreover, the methodology for determining Medicaid eligibility is expensive and time consuming. PPACA has complicated what already exists in requiring different methodologies for eligibility determination for those who are currently eligible and those who will be newly eligible January 1, 2014. This is cumbersome and wasteful yet could be corrected if there was only one set of criteria. This issue is further complicated by the need to integrate Medicaid eligibility with the proposed health benefit exchanges.

One potential proposal to increase efficiency and reduce fraud and abuse in Medicaid is to standardize and automate the eligibility processes for Medicaid and other social service functions. Permitting states to receive a 90% administrative match for expanding consumer facing portals for identity verification, eligibility determination, and case management will be useful so long as the systems follow the Medicaid Information Technology Architecture (MITA) and are interoperable.

Finally, current regulation limits the amount of cost sharing that can be required of individuals who receive Medicaid. Given that economic incentives play an important role in controlling human behavior and choices, states should have the flexibility to use appropriate cost sharing methods in the form of copayments and deductibles in all plans.

Other Areas of Concern and Consideration

PPACA seemingly attempted to provide tax deductions for small businesses who aim to purchase health insurance for their employees. The bill falls extremely short in defining "small business" yet it identifies an algorithm that is so complex it fails to incentivize small businesses from hiring outside of the family or paying a competitive wage for those that they do. It is likely that the deduction will be overlooked by most small business owners as there is no incentive for businesses to seek qualification for the tax deduction.

Congress should encourage states to develop innovations in service delivery to meet the needs of individuals through both the public and private sectors. Opportunities should be made available for states to develop effective and efficient solutions that fit local needs and best utilize local capacity. The budgeted CMS Innovation Funds should be available for state projects and not simply limited to existing organizations. In what might be the best option to keep states the laboratories of democracy, states could receive a block grant to create and maintain their own programs without penalty. Over time this would save the federal government money.

Existing rules and regulations concerning Medicare and Medicaid need to be reassessed to consider their impact on availability and cost of services. Requirements related to site of care and when, how, and by whom services can be delivered create barriers to entry into the market. This hinders innovation in service delivery and payment reform. Appropriateness and safety should be assessed from outcomes obtained and not so often by regulation of inputs.

Insurance reforms are a major component of PPACA. Unfortunately, states have already been asked to enforce provisions without the opportunity for their legislatures to consider their appropriateness. Implementation of insurance reforms should be delayed until states have an opportunity to bring their laws into conformity and new mandates should be delayed until the issue of constitutionality is resolved. Significant costs are now being incurred that may be wasted if the law is stricken or changed. Individuals and employers are already seeing an increase in premiums due to PPACA.

Medical loss ratio requirements should likewise be delayed until the regulations are well established and no unintended consequences can be assured. States should be given the flexibility to determine if and how to regulate insurers in their jurisdictions. As it exists, this mandate will inevitably limit the ability of insurers to provide new and innovative programs that are necessary to help “bend the curve” of healthcare costs.

The concept of health benefit exchanges may have merit, but the timeline in PPACA is too aggressive. Even if the federal rules were established (they are not) and states knew how best to proceed, it is unrealistic to expect that exchange technology will be perfected by January of 2014. The two exchanges that exist today are extremely different and neither is likely to be the optimal solution. Federal funding is essential if states are to avoid defaulting into the undesirable “federal option” but it is equally important that the regulations be issued as soon as possible if a delay is to be avoided.

As you consider the repeal and replace strategy for PPACA in Washington, this letter has highlighted the following items that need immediate modification to reduce cost, confusion and bureaucracy in the states.

The Honorable John Boehner
The Honorable Mitch McConnell
February 14, 2011

1. States must be permitted to expand Medicaid in their own way via innovative programs to provide high value programs to their citizens.
2. Relief from the strict Medicaid Maintenance of Eligibility (MOE) requirements is essential to allow states to provide an equitable benefit.
3. Replacement of the new and old eligibility determination with one standard process which will increase efficiencies in the system.
4. Ensure that federal funds are available to support the federal mandates that are not repealed.
5. Delay Medical Loss Ratio requirements until regulations are well established and unintended consequences can be identified.
6. Delay the implementation of health benefit exchanges in order for federal rules to be established prior to states proceeding with the development of their own system without specific guidance.

The Virginia Health Reform Initiative is already moving down a road that is seeking how to shift the health care paradigm towards one that values individual responsibility, competitive markets, and realizes limited but effective government. I encourage you to use the opportunity ahead of you to make positive steps for the great people of our Commonwealth and Nation. You hold the power to help restore sound principles and effective governance to Congress. We must reform our health care delivery system and I encourage you to take the ideas presented in this letter as a few steps toward achieving that goal.

I along with the Secretary of Health and Human Resources, Dr. William A. Hazel, Jr., MD, will be happy to answer any questions you may have. Thank you for taking the time to read this letter and I look forward to working with you in the days ahead.

Sincerely,

Robert F. McDonnell

Health Care: Decision Points for States Meeting Summary

On July 19-20, 2012, the National Governors Association (NGA) convened 40 states and territories in Washington, D.C. to discuss a range of critical decision points and considerations related to addressing health system challenges. Over the course of two days, state officials exchanged ideas, lessons learned, and potential promising practices. Many states confirmed they are in different phases of implementation of two widely discussed provisions of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA) – Medicaid expansion and Health Insurance Exchanges. However, there is a high degree of uncertainty about the next steps for many states. Before committing to a particular course, states are weighing their options, factoring in additional guidance from the United States Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), and in some cases, awaiting the results of the next presidential election. Meeting participants also noted the need for greater state flexibilities and opportunities to guide the implementation of the ACA. Moving forward, states are interested in continuing to engage in meaningful discussions with HHS. Following are some of the issues that arose at the meeting. Appendix A contains a full list of state questions.

Medicaid

- Many states commented on the number and wide range of estimates “floating around” about how much expanding Medicaid would cost. Stakeholders with disparate interests have published data using varying methodologies that have produced an array of estimates. States are interested in building assessments of future costs of their Medicaid programs that include appropriate assumptions, such as those about the size of the woodwork effect, and the appropriate measure of state-only program spending that could be shifted to Medicaid, such as uncompensated care pools, mental health and substance abuse programs, high risk pools, and treatment of those who are incarcerated. That also includes measuring the cost if states are allowed to expand only to 100 percent of the federal poverty line (FPL) or somewhere below 133 percent of the FPL.
- Questions were raised about the ability of states to lower the eligibility level from 133 percent of FPL in the future if they encounter issues balancing the state budget. Does expanding to 133 percent of FPL mean staying at that level permanently?
- Questions arose about the uncertainty of continued federal funding of Medicaid, specifically about future reductions in the federal medical assistance percentage (FMAP) that might be part of a deficit-reduction deal.
- States want flexibility in program management. The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) wants further clarity about the kinds of flexibility states are seeking.
- There is uncertainty related to the overlap of existing Medicaid waivers or renewal of waivers with the Medicaid expansion and other requirements in 2014.
- A few states will be rolling back Medicaid eligibility that they had previously expanded and will therefore have residents who could face less affordable coverage even with tax credits and cost sharing subsidies.

Exchanges

- Questions were raised about ability to meet existing deadlines, and the need for pending guidance from CMS to be issued.
- Questions remain around Essential Health Benefits (EHB) and a desire for the publication of the proposed CMS regulation. States will need extra time after the regulation is published to choose a plan, but December is late to work out the details of the EHB with carriers.
- Clarity is needed on what the benefit package will be in the multistate plans. States are concerned that differentiation between the EHB for states and the multistate plans may lead to adverse selection.
- Clarification and further analysis are needed on cost, funding sustainability, and the level of effort needed from states interested in pursuing the Partnership and federally-facilitated Exchange (FFE) options.
- Recognition and further discussion related to how the insurance market reforms will impact the market both inside and outside of the Exchange is needed. Aligning the requirements placed on plans operating in both markets is important, including consistent open enrollment periods and coverage effective dates. There was further discussion related to the impact of premium increases as a result of the insurance market reforms.

State Exchange Discussion

- Overall, states pursuing a state-based Exchange felt that CMS was generally working cooperatively with them.
- Continuing concerns about timelines exist. States are concerned that the federal government may amend existing rules, thereby making it increasingly difficult to meet the new expectations, particularly states that are not entirely sure they should pursue a state-based Exchange.
- Staffing the Exchange was an issue of concern, specifically recruiting people with the right mix of skills.
- There is anxiety from territories about the need for more federal guidance if they are to meet deadlines.

Partnership Exchange Discussion

- Discussion and further research were requested to help states determine how to financially sustain a Partnership Exchange. Can states share the user fee with the FFE? If states are responsible for consumer outreach and plan management, part of the fee should be passed back to the state.
- Insight is needed around how the FFE will be governed. Since the FFE will not have a Board, how will the state voice be represented? What will be the process for input from state and local stakeholders into the operation of the FFE?
- Clarity is needed about how the technical interface between a state's Medicaid program and the Exchange will function. States requested guidance and information about when they can expect to start negotiations with the federal government on a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU). States would also like to be informed of what information the federal government needs before they can start working on the technical interface.

- Guidance is needed on what the expectations are if a state realizes they cannot do a Partnership Exchange. Will there be a transition period to a full FFE?

Federal Exchange Discussion

- Questions exist about the capacity of the federal government to implement a FFE.
- Questions exist about the MOU between the state and the federal government. What will be required of the state? Will the federal government subcontract with the state for pieces of the Exchange? What is the timeline on the MOU given that it will take time to negotiate?
- Some confusion exists about building the technical interface between the state Medicaid program and the FFE. Who is required to conform their programming language to the other program in order to link the systems?
- Clarity is needed on what costs states may incur by opting for a FFE.

Considerations for Eligibility and Enrollment Systems Procurement

- Clarification is needed on a definition of “real time” with regard to eligibility determination.
- There are questions around Advance Planning Documents (APD) and the technical aspects of building an interface platform to support the connection between Medicaid and the Exchange.
- Clarification is needed on the minimum level of requirements in the Blueprint that must be met in order to build a state-based or Partnership Exchange. The metaphor was used of building a bicycle with simple components as opposed to building a car with complex infrastructure.
- There is agreement among states regarding the need for a detailed and thorough Request for Proposal (RFP) with language that reflects the fiscal uncertainty that exists, such as a need for exit clauses, and frustration of purpose clauses.

Conclusion

State officials are working amidst continuing policy and political uncertainties to determine the best course for their state. Remaining unanswered questions from CMS, and political uncertainties have made it difficult for states to fully assess their options and choose a path forward. NGA will continue to work with states and HHS to determine answers to operational and regulatory questions in order to better assist states as they weigh their options.

HHS Considering Models for State-Federal Partnership on Health Exchanges

The Department of Health and Human Services is considering several models for state-federal partnership for states that choose not to run their own health insurance exchange as required by the Accountable Care Act. Several models being considered include one in which the state would establish and operate a small business health options program (SHOP) exchange and the federal government would operate an individual exchange. Other proposals include allowing the state to maintain responsibility for governance and policy decisions while allowing the federal government to operate the exchanges or allowing the state to create and operate the exchanges while having the federal government or a third party perform a variety of functions. It is anticipated that these proposals will be discussed next month at the NGA Center workshop on health exchanges as well as at a later meeting hosted by the Department of Health and Human Services.

Good afternoon,

By now, you should have received an invitation to participate in a meeting during the National Governors Association Annual Meeting with senior staff from the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services to discuss the establishment of health insurance exchanges and changes to the Medicaid program.

If you or anyone on the Governor's staff is interested in scheduling a meeting, please contact Jim Mason at james.mason@hhs.gov or 202-401-5639 to set up a time on Saturday, July 16.

Barbour RGPPC testimony for Senator Finance Field hearing, attached.

ICYMI (mentions our exchange letter from Jan led by Governor Daniels)

WSJ:

'Exchange' You Can't Believe In

The HHS rule for state health markets will mean fewer choices.

Maybe the most unknowing moment from President Obama's debt-limit press conference the other day was when he said that "I'd rather be talking about stuff that everybody welcomes, like new programs." Define everybody—and, please, let us know when the new programs are going to stop.

The latest to roll out are ObamaCare's insurance "exchanges," which will go live in 2014. On Monday the Health and Human Services Department released draft regulations telling the states how they must run these organizations, which are the core of the new entitlement and are where people will receive heavily subsidized coverage. HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius and the rest of the Obamacrats are using the language of choice and flexibility to sell their handiwork, but this is the triumph of euphemism over reality.

In principle, an exchange isn't the worst idea, and a transparent clearinghouse might even command bipartisan support. The individual and small-business insurance markets in the states are often patchy and opaque. A portal like an exchange could help restore price discovery to health care by allowing consumers to weigh costs against benefits and encouraging competition on insurance value. Utah built a pilot exchange on this model in 2009, though the results so far are mixed and the rules are still being fine-tuned.

HHS, unsurprisingly, envisions the exchanges as 50 (or more) new regulatory agencies designed to let politics run health markets, while letting Washington give orders to the states. The word "require" appears 811 times in the 244-page rule and its 103-page supplement. "Must" shows up 580 times—and this is merely HHS's first batch of exchange mandates.

Speaking of unknowing, try to decipher this passage: "The intent of this proposed rule is to afford States substantial discretion in the design and operation of an Exchange. Greater standardization is proposed where required by the statute or where there are compelling practical, efficiency or consumer protection reasons." Guess which of the impulses in those contradictory sentences won out?

The draft rules command that the structure of every exchange needs federal approval, much as in Medicaid, which in practice means an HHS veto of market-based innovation. State standards for the "certification, recertification, and decertification of health plans" will also be subject to HHS. This means Washington will dictate rules about which insurers are allowed to sell plans in the exchange, and thus which insurers will continue to exist as viable commercial concerns. It also looks as if HHS will require the exchanges to enforce de facto price controls on premiums.

This is the exchange model that prevails in Massachusetts, where Mitt Romney's "connector" has become a tool for controlling the insurance industry and picking health-care winners and losers. But at least the Bay State adopted the connector voluntarily, if unwisely. HHS is conscripting the states as its agents, directing their resources and making them complicit in the insurance disruptions to come.

Ms. Sebelius's false gesture toward federalism—states can do whatever they want, as long as they want to do exactly what she wants—also comes with a killer caveat: If states don't set up an exchange, or the exchange they create doesn't clear HHS scrutiny, HHS will impose its own version. The details of this federal fallback will come in a future regulation, timetable indefinite.

Many of our right-leaning friends are encouraging Republicans to refuse to set up an exchange, as an act of civil disobedience. In that sense HHS's delusions of competence could be a gift: As the agency has been implementing this defective law over the last year, it has made things even worse than they needed to be.

The dilemma for Governors is that their states are full of real insurance businesses and customers, and thus they have a responsibility to try to mitigate some of the regulatory damage. A posture of indifference is tempting, but it also means an all but certain death warrant for businesses and jobs when HHS eventually takes over.

A poorly designed exchange could send many insurers into a death spiral of unpayable claims, hastening consolidation, reducing competition, and increasing the political demand for government to run everything. This was precisely the goal of many Democrats who wrote the Affordable Care Act, and we suspect it is also HHS's motivation.

A better option is to resist strangulating federal control by fighting HHS over the shape and role of the exchange. Indiana's Mitch Daniels and 21 other governors specifically asked HHS for more exchange flexibility in February, though their letter went unanswered and the substance, obviously, went unheeded.

Today more than ever, rationalizing U.S. health care means fighting on many fronts, and the GOP doesn't have a chance if it walks off the field. Governors—and Republicans in Congress—should be telling voters how bad the new HHS rule is and the damage it will do if it is implemented.

As a follow up to our call on Friday, attached is a PPACA timeline from Deloitte Consulting. As mentioned on the phone, RGPPC will be working to provide you all a memo, based on the scenario we are facing, in November. If you have specific questions where you are seeking guidance or would like to provide input, please shoot me a note with those questions/comments.

Also discussed on the call Friday was the need for some states to have a more in-depth conversation on healthcare exchanges. If you'd like to participate in that conversation, it has been scheduled for Wednesday, Oct 24, at 11 PM ET.

Please RSVP to me for that call.

Thanks,
Marie

Good afternoon,

Due to tomorrow's holiday and the large number of people traveling we will be cancelling our RGPPC Health Care Task Force meeting this afternoon.

As the RGPPC moves forward from the "A New Medicaid: A Flexible, Innovative and Accountable Future" document we are excited to start taking on specific issues that are important to individual states. As is evident from the staff only meeting at Health Care Summit, Exchanges are becoming increasingly important as well as controversial.

Many of our states are taking very different approaches to Exchanges. The RGPPC realizes that there is an important commonality between states which is that states need flexibility to deal with their own unique populations. As that relates to exchanges, one document that makes specific commentary or a single path forward on exchanges seems to be difficult at this time; however it appears all of our states oppose an "Obamacare Exchange".

The RGPPC continues to strive to be a service driven entity to our states. Please tell us what you want from us on exchanges. We can do anything from aiding in writing individual op-ed to contributing to strategic messaging, research, and logistical assistance. We greatly appreciate everyone who has already touched- base with us regarding their governor's needs and wants.

There is a plethora of exchange information and research available. The challenge is keeping up with the constant state changes and movement. Attached is a good, but dated presentation from the Leavitt Group. Also, please see below for some good interactive websites that have some fairly updated and accurate information. Please note that RGPPC is not endorsing any business/firm or policy method on exchanges at this time; rather, we are seeking to share information with you as we locate it. RGPPC action officers may refer to RGPPC.com on our staff only page for this information as well.

Heath Care Seminar, The Heritage Foundation, Washington D.C., April 12th, 2010

Dr. Robert Moffit, Head of Heath Care Policy, Heritage

This will be a long, contentious implementation process. The opportunity is to re-frame the debate as regards the basic relationship between the state and its citizens as to health care.

The key point that has been washed out is that there is a real separation between the States and the Fed as to enumerated powers. The states must take a leadership role in the next 8 years to shape the debate and the implementation of whatever health system ends up evolving. We need to make sure we aggressively look to the interests of our constituents.

Sen Orrin Hatch, Utah

Utah is a shining example of why the States should be put in charge of developing health care policy and not the Fed.

We have never seen anything like what we are dealing with right now in our history. The line between the public and private sector has never been more blurred. The 10 year fiscal outlook is bleak. Largest national debt since 1945. We are looking at debt reaching 90% of GDP by 2020.

Majority of Americans know that that this bill will increase costs and deficits and that is reflected consistently in public opinion.

Most major spending provision in this bill don't kick in until after the 2014 presidential election. The 10 year cost of this bill is estimated at 2.5 trillion dollars.

Democrat experts at CBO: The key point is that any saving in this bill are one time savings that cannot be repeated.

Utah's Medicaid costs will increase by 50%.

He believes that the individual mandate is unconstitutional. The Constitution allows the Congress to regulate interstate commerce, but the Courts have never ratified that Congress can require participation in commerce. If this is allowed, then there is no limit to Congress' powers. Liberty itself is what is at stake. A liberal constitutional scholar, Jonathan Turley, recently admitted that this bill will seriously compromise basic liberty.

He said he knows he is preaching to the choir, but that the Democrats have truly put themselves at odds with the American people and passed this bill in a very bad exercise in government.

He believes that the Democrats will use the higher costs created by this bill to blame the private sector and further rationalize a single payer system.

The Heritage foundation is very important. They are constantly trying to find ways to bring common sense to government. The Republicans up here pay a great deal of attention to the Heritage Foundation and their publications are worth reading.

Many Democrats are becoming terrified about all of the spending.

Seventeen union states have been exempted from the “Cadillac tax”, which, in any event will not be implemented until 2018. He doesn’t think it will be implemented at all.

The reason he left the Democratic party because, years ago, that there was this unholy belief that the Federal Government will solve all problems.

Ed Haislmaier, Heritage Health Specialist – Introducing Panelists

This man is brilliant. Take him very seriously.

We have an official crisis in health care because the Fed has set the clock running. Real leadership comes when you change when there is not a crisis. He saw this when he was at Pfizer Pharmaceuticals, who changed their successful sales force b/c they saw it wasn’t going to work in 10 years. That is what David Clark did with health care in Utah.

In Utah, they did risk assessment first, unlike Mass, which did community rating and mandatory issue.

Ed thinks that the Health Care Bill could be repealed, having said that, the Feds don’t have insurance experience, so the States have a huge opportunity to change this thing over the next several years. He thinks it is hugely likely that the controversial parts will be defunded in the coming years.

Rep. David Clark, Speaker of the Utah House

They also passed their Exchange in 09, like Oklahoma, but they have totally implemented in under a year. They passed legislation and implemented in 5 months. No joke.

They went to Heritage for help.

They tried to emulate Mass, but Utah didn’t have the money. They wanted to have quality health care for every citizen. In Mass, 70% of all lives there were covered by Fortune 500 companies. They have the opposite: 750,000 small businesses. He is grateful to Mass for jumping in first to put together and Exchange.

The brain trust is here: Dan Schuyler, Cheryl Smith, Cathy Dupont, David Jackson, Don Garlitz, Brian Somers.

They leveraged with the private sector. BSwift and HealthEquity. They did not have to develop, in house, the expertise to implement.

They have high quality health and low cost health care. They measure twice and cut once. They looked at the small businesses and their needs. But health care and wage inflation was making costs unsustainable. This thing was born out of financial necessity to stay competitive on rising health care costs.

First year: health task force three years ago – its still going. TF identified the 6 key areas to work on. They figured it would take 10 years to reverse the problematic trends.

First of all they determined that personal responsibility had to be emphasized in creating a plan. Second it had to be market based. I.e. when having a heart attack, you are not shopping around, but you can when looking for total knee replacement. When crafting policy, when you can reflect, how can you encourage “shopping around?” He believes that the Exchange is the only viable option out there right now for achieving these two goals.

He said 15 years ago GM was one of the largest company in the world, now we call them Government Motors. The point is: you can't bet against the market. They got killed by health care costs.

They have a variety of demonstration projects on : electronic medical records, diabetes, Clinical Health Information Exchange, All-Payer Database: they have accumulated over a million people's medical records for electronic storage.

The largest philosophical issues they dealt with was going from a defined benefit health paradigm to a defined contribution paradigm. They went to the “Coburn” model on a state level and allowed citizens to deduct health care individually from taxes, not just businesses – something the Fed's steadfastly refuse to do.

They have a universal enrolment form. There are only 2 functioning plans in the US right now, Utah and Mass – both at the polar opposite ends of the spectrum. Mass: big government, mandates and a huge entitlement. Utah: all market based. Mass: $25 million to run their plan. Utah: $600,000. No joke.

He does not believe that we will be able to repeal and replace the Heath Care Bill. He thinks the opportunity is for the States to, de-facto, write the regulations and hand them to the Feds. He thinks we have, as states, failed in the past in doing this. He says we have to be aggressive in propagating the rules that will be coming in the next decade. We must be cohesive and work together in doing it.

This will be a series of battles in the regulatory environment.

Dan Schuler, Utah's Two Exchange Employees

One of two of employees running their exchange. Yeah, you read that right – two.

How does it work:

- 1) Employer registers. (Small employers, under 50)
- 2) Employee enters information. Universal health application.
- 3) Turned over to insurance companies who evaluate risk: Premium Generated.
- 4) Employee compares and shops for plans.
- 5) Enrollment is Finalized.
- 6) Plans go into effect on designated dates.

All done on a web site.

They are working on a large employer plan.

Premium aggregation is unique to the exchange. If you or your spouse are working for two employers, you can combine benefits to buy what you want.

They have an “optimizer filter” that lets you look at your past health care spending practices and gives a boatload of information based on various factors, ie. total out of pocket vs total cost, etc.

You can compare up to 4 plans to see what is important to you. About 16 categories you can drill down on or you can just look at plan basics. Ie., prescription drugs or mental health.

There are no mandates whatsoever. They anticipated launching in 2012 they were approached by employers and asked to implement early. They have 85% of their insurance companies participating in Utah’s exchange. (This is the way Ed Haislmaier envisioned it being implemented in the first place, and what he talked about when he flew to OK and held a two day seminar at the Capitol back in Aug of 07).

Q & A

How did switching to a defined contribution work? If you want to participate in the Exchange, you must use defined contribution. First, they do a typical underwriting, or risk adjustment for the population of the business. The Employer has X dollar value that they allocate to the employee to shop for what plan suits them best, instead of selecting a plan for the employee. An allowance. There are a number of ways to do this as an employer. Two main things that drive the premiums: family size and age range (age banding). Really, every employer already is doing defined contribution, they just offer one plan. They contemplate that the employer could “break up” the contributions, spending more on their older employees.

Did Utah start out with several mandates? They have very few benefit mandates. They also created Utah’s homegrown “COBRA” where there are very few mandates.

Utah has a high risk pool. 3800 people. Guarantee issue for the High Risk Pool. All this has only been done with the employer market, not the individual market.

Prospective risk assessment has really helped. The insurers have to stay engaged. Between 75,00 to 250,000 they share risk. Most insurers have already done their catastrophic risk assessment and have for years.

When switching to a buyer based market the insurers will complain “oh we’ll get all the diabetics” but when everyone has to play in the high risk pool, they all worked it out together. The state facilitated the conversation. They got all the insurance big shots in a room and had one of their experts check their various statements for accuracy.

My question: how does the tax credit for employer's work in Utah.? Utah created a tax credit against their state income tax for those in the individual market only. About 190, 000 people. This may also not be implemented immediately because of the budget crunch. Pretty small sub set and if they don't pay much state tax, is it really that helpful? I think we should do it, but....

Utah now has 3 technical advisory committees. Industry has contributed 10,000 man hours of work in hammering out the details. Working groups...why does that sound familiar?

Who were the biggest barriers? Everyone is resistant to change. Senate / House : conservative, not conservative enough. It all went back to economics. Three large insurers cover 80% of Utah. Biggest mistake was putting them all in a room – it became divide and conquer. But he had to get them on board. The most spears he has pulled out of his back have come from the broker community. Brokers get commissions from insurance sold through the Exchange. The resistance comes from paranoia that the Exchange will make them irrelevant. The stereotypical broker does not work very hard, and they saw this change as a challenge to their lifestyle. It actually takes work to sort through what is best for 20 different families in a given company. Ed was blunt: most brokers look at this job as easy money: get people on board and just keep them indefinitely. You get a 9% increase in their premiums, hey great. If you now shop on the Exchange, you could lose them. In Utah, most of the thinking brokers now know they stand to benefit from the Exchange. Utah created a broker advisory group to give them a higher comfort level. The legislation that was passed was comprehensive, so the Speaker tried not to make it look like they were picking on one party. The transparency was key, and that had to affect everyone: brokers, health care providers. The business community is an ally because they want a better insurance system. Speaker Clark said this was the most complicated thing he ever did. They had to find key people they could rely on and give them cover. He said his vendors were keys. He learned about how insurance companies price.

Speaker Clark thinks that we'll see employers are going to dump employees. Medicaid now covers everyone at 133% of the FPL.

Clark wants to work harder and faster to make sure their market based system gets cemented as a model.

Matt Towery, Non Polling Guy, Syndicated Columnist, Author, Former Newt Staff

731 respondents. Margin of error 3.7%. Scientifically designed. Properly weighted. Properly queried: What is your opinion of the Health Care Legislation. 51% do not support. 53% of independents oppose. Those who disapproved, why?

Gave several reasons: the runaway winner: People don't like government period. They are increasingly resistant to pro-active government. This is the thing. There is no other thing. Washington is an insular town. They get caught up in the minutia. America says: don't tread on me.

Of those who said they supported it gave: cover the uninsured and preexisting conditions, something that could be fixed at the state level.

When they gave a loaded question about whether we should have dealt with deficits and spending first, 57% of independents agreed.

One thing the American public is experiencing is fear. Health care was the touchstone, but the underlying concern is the overwhelming size of government and the swelling deficits.

Extremely low confidence numbers in state and federal leadership.

Message: don't regulate, provide opportunity. Opportunity is what people want right now. And people are interested in themselves and their own well being.

When trying to implement the Exchange, do not appear to regulate. Be incremental.

Dr. Moffit -Reflections on the Exchange:

The real problem is with Small Businesses being able to provide insurance. The tax code is the 800 lb gorilla. If you don't get insurance thru your employer, you essentially pay a huge 30 to 50% tax on insurance, b/c you pay for it with after tax dollars.

Heritage was the first organization to put pen to paper and sketch out the Exchange: It is not a regulator, it simply processes paperwork for premium payments and facilitates assignment of premiums. A key principal: because the employer facilitates the insurance, the defined contribution that is provided to employees is tax free and the benefits are tax free. This is still group insurance. Employees have a property right in the insurance. It achieving personal ownership of the insurance.

The Massachusetts Plan

Tim Murphy, Michael Widmer, Jim Stergios, Cindy Gillespie.

Tim Murphy, Worked on Romney's staff on their current Health System "Romneycare."

Mass wanted to insure their 10% of uninsured. They had a number of funding sources to fund the "unfunded care pool" doled out to HCP like hospitals. 800 to 900 million dollars. Byzantine. Untenable.

Health care costs were growing 7 to 9% a year. Health care costs are 2X bigger than the State's ability to generate tax revenue. They finally got disallowed on a waiver they were using. They were going to lose about 385 million dollars from the Fed. So viola, Romneycare.

They took a very wholistic approach. They identified by income cohort. Kensyan assumption: if you don't have insurance you must be poor. Untrue. First group: Fully 20% of the uninsured were not signing up for Medicaid although they qualified. Fully half earned 300% of the FPL: $31,000 or more. Why aren't they buying insurance? Final group, less than 300% of FPL but not eligible for Medicaid (about 200,000).

Mass was (is) heavily regulated insurance market. The dysfunctional market was the non-group market. Average age 56. Female. Guaranteed issue. Cadillac plan. The people who did sign up were older and sicker. Younger wouldn't sign up. Wouldn't allow HMO's and HAS's. Mass merged the small group and non-group market. For individuals, it cut the individual market premium way down (over 30%) and raised the small group premium about 2%. The mandate forced people into the pool who were making rational economic decisions to not buy insurance.

For their “slip thru the crack” folks (under 300% of FPL but no Medicaid) they created a sliding scale subsidy (my commentary: this is the part that has been criticized for the escalating costs).

They also have the Exchange or Connector. This was the big market based part of the overhaul. The first Exchange program in the US. They chose to make the Exchange administer their new subsidy.

Individual mandate. Very controversial. The original idea: over 18, buy a catastrophic plan or post a bond showing financial wherewithal. The rationale: the uninsured’s costs get socialized when they do need care. Of course, the Mass legislature messed it up and made the baseline plan loaded up with all the goodies and therefore expensive. He thinks it was a big mistake.

Two things that Mass did b/c of the new subsidy: If the employer offers insurance – you have to buy it. If you are an employer who wants to dump your low wage employees, you can’t offer an insurance plan to higher wage earners that you don’t offer to your low wage workers.

Michael Widmer

The estimate for the new subsidy for the 150,000 uninsured “crack slippers” + 750 million per year or $5000 per person.

They calculate the cost to the state of employers not getting insurance was $295 per employee per year. That is where they got the penalty from.

He contests the assertion of the State Treasurer that the new health care system is a budget buster. See WSJ article. He asserts that many have an interest in showing that “Mass has failed.” He said there has been a reduction in benefits, mainly to illegal immigrants. He says this is due to the general financial downturn effecting the budget.

Their “uncompensated care pool” money is now more rationally distributed.

He did mention that the cost of premiums have been a problem for businesses. He says costs are going to have to be addressed.

Jim Stergios

Highlights of the Mass plan.

Putting the Connector together with a Board filled by people who have agendas to make the plans look the way they want is not working in Mass. Have to make this a market thing. It’s very top down in Mass. They have a lot of power. It’s not the way to get it done. Huge issue in the Governor’s race. Still a lot of people in the poverty band not in the system. Some concern that there is crowd out. There is a lack of information on several issues coming out of the Connector. He says that ER utilization has not really gone down like they thought it would.

Cindy Gillespie

Important elements of the Health Care Bill. (Mass and Utah become very important). The first ones to engage HHS will have the ability to influence the regs.

The Exchange envisioned in the Health Care Bill is NOT what Mass and Utah have. This is not a State based exchange. It is a State administered Exchange.

What Exchange Does:

- 1) To certify health plans for sale. Requirements set by HHS. No one knows yet. There are broad categories of coverage, she'll come back with specifics.
- 2) Offer them to employers and help people enroll.
- 3) Exchange will facilitate eligibility for any state subsidized plan. Single eligibility and access to subsidies portal.
- 4) Refundable tax credits will be paid directly to the insurer. Feds don't have a Premium Aggregator. Evidently, the Premium Aggregator is real important.
- 5) Exchange for individuals and Exchange for Small Business.

First decision a State must make: Establish and exchange or let HHS do it.

Second decision: What will the Exchange be? Nonprofit? What branch of government? In Mass, it is on its own. In Utah, it's in the Dept of Econ Development or something like it. Mass really focused on individual market.

States get to decide how much gets to be privatized. How much can the exchange contract out for services? Utah extensively uses vendors.

What other functions do you want the Exchange to do? Do you want a Premium Aggregator?

How aggressively do you want to implement heading to January 2014? Mass did phased implementation over a year instead of going live on day one? THERE IS MONEY FOR STATES TO PHASE IN THE EXCHANGE.

THE EXCHANGE HAS TO BE CERTIFIED AS FUNCTIONAL BY JUNE 2013 OR HHS WILL COME IN AND DO IT FOR YOU.

States have until 2012 session at the latest to get this passed. Some states will want liberal versions, and some states will want more market based Exchanges.

HHS will certify a minimum list of benefits that must be offered in any plan. Any additional benefits offered, and so drive up premiums, will have to be picked up by the States.

A small business will ultimately be calculated as 100 employees or less.

All states must monitor premium increases by Jan 2014. Funds available to begin monitoring.

Wow. This really is a big government deal. The reality is, this is coming.

Dennis Smith, Former Director of Medicaid under Bush

Evidently, this guy is a super Medicaid guru.

It is alarming to him the extent to which the Health Care Bill marginalizes the States. It is absurd and comical at the same time.

The States are going to have to fight for their sovereign role. The States are being treated as so much bother.

State Legislators need to bone up on their state Medicaid Program.

Who will the Insurance Commissioner work for? The State or HHS?

There will need to be a Committee set up to filter all of this information in a transparent way.

If the Legislatures don't have all the facts in front of them, we are going to get rolled. Do you want an agency or advocacy groups determining eligibility for Medicaid or the Exchange?

He says the new Medicaid eligible's are eligible at a real, adjusted 140% of the FPL. Most of whom are healthy young adults.

Getting transparency out of the agencies will need to be a priority. Agencies tend to state "we're doing the best that we can" and they will tend to obscure transparency. He stated, for example, that enrollment error rates in one study to be at 20%.

The Legislature may need to begin to play hardball with agencies and counties. The Bill gives the States the authority to outsource the entire Exchange and what to include in it. Can use this for leverage to push the agency's to be transparent.

Demand the Feds come, immediately, to our states and begin to testify on how this is going to work. They are already taking the term "State" out of the program names, ie. S-CHIP is now just CHIP. Same for the official name of the Medicaid program. We should be outraged.

When the Exchange starts, the SCHIP kids should, by definition, not qualify for the new entitlement.

Cost sharing is an important part of this. There are new inequities across families. Definitions of families have changed with this. Ie. 26 year olds are now covered under parents insurance. Third party liability is going to be more important.

HHS said that states cannot change their cost sharing, without any authority.

The states are going to have to look for fights to pick.

Benchmark plans are going to be the standard. If we pass a plan then we can defend it in Federal court.

When this Bill was passed many states were looking at Exchanges. This isn't the foreign idea. It would be foreign to turn this over to an outside entity that the State has no control over. Where are the opportunities to privatize and outsource?

All state expenditures in 2008 totaled 1 trillion dollars. So health care costs are 2X the entire cost of all state expenditures.

State Legislatures are going to have to work hard to find ways to keep from raising taxes.

To all of our colleagues who don't want to be bothered with health care minutia, they are going to have to get engaged. This is a huge deal that will dramatically affect the budget.

He says that the Feds can't pull Medicaid funding if they pass the Freedom of Healthcare Act.

Get actuarials to certify benchmark plan equivalents, so that HHS will have a hard time pushing back against it.

Find a better way to better manage our dual eligibles. CMS is evidently interested in this. 83% of all Medicaid spending is on people with 3 or more chronic conditions.

He says its crazy for 20 something graduate students to be Medicaid eligible.

1115 waivers are closed for business.

States should be hollering at CMS for playing favorites with certain states. Why can New York put their SSD in managed care but not us?

Don't wait for the regulations. Get aggressive. Bring your "A" team.

IMPORTANT: Get a State Plan Amendment (Benchmark Plan) on the Books as soon as possible. CMS has to approve it if it complies with the Law, and we can litigate the decision in Federal Court.

Take a hard look at who is actually running Medicaid in OK. Get someone in there with an insurance background. Root out fraud.

Look at the high users at try and get them in managed care. Better to manage their chronic problems. Find your find high users. We are doing some of this in OK. In OK, 58% of Medicaid Expenditures are on Blind, Aged and Disabled.

They coordinate payments. Hmm. An opportunity for our banks in OK to help with all this. He commented that Utah reached out to the private sector to get help. We are here, use us.

Who were the uninsured: a lot are young, healthy and in and out of the work force. They look a lot more like small business than typical Medicaid. The one area where they used higher health care was behavioral health: up to 3 times higher in this category. Typically they are childless adults who can't hold a job b/c of their behavioral health problems. If these people get dumped into Medicaid, they will sink you. Once they get on prescription drugs it gets expensive. You need to really think about how to manage this populations. Hmm.

The states and municipalities that are moving forward with these requirements' are getting AAA ratings b/c they are starting to put money aside and prepare. You can cut your liability in half if you pre-

A State Lawmaker's Guide to Health Insurance Exchanges

Edmund F. Haislmaier

Abstract: Health insurance exchanges are a good idea—if they are used to implement patient-centered and market-based health reforms that enhance choices and value for customers. The exchanges prescribed by Obamacare will have the opposite effect. Given the considerable uncertainty surrounding if, when, or how the exchange provisions of Obamacare will be implemented, governors and state policymakers opposed to the sweeping federal legislation have difficult decisions to make. While state lawmakers, like everyone else, would prefer to have more certainty, the reality is that they cannot expect it any time soon. They must focus on finding ways to better manage the new uncertainty that Obamacare has injected into the health care system. Pending further changes at the federal level, state lawmakers must determine the best approach in their respective states for advancing their own positive “counter reforms,” and decide whether they will also try to block federal interference by creating a limited, “defensive” Obamacare exchange—and they must do so now. Heritage Foundation health policy expert Edmund F. Haislmaier provides a hands-on guide for state lawmakers.

Governors and state legislators opposed to the misnamed Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) face a dilemma. Trying to shoehorn patient-centered, market-based reforms into the bureaucratic architecture of Obamacare's health insurance exchanges is not a viable strategy, neither practically nor politically. But refusing to create an Obamacare state exchange, while politically appealing, would leave state health insurance markets vulnerable to

Talking Points

- The best strategy for state lawmakers who oppose the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act is to adopt their own reforms—separate from, and independent of, Obamacare's exchange design.
- State policymakers should augment their “counter reform” with defensive measures that minimize federal interference while the ultimate fate of Obamacare is debated in Congress and litigated in federal courts.
- A defined-contribution health-insurance market can create more consumer-oriented competition—attractive for state lawmakers concerned that Obamacare's new federal insurance regulations will result in insurer consolidation that further reduces choice and competition.
- Offering health benefits on a defined-contribution basis can give state and local governments better budget control, and give workers greater choice and portability of coverage.
- State lawmakers need to determine now the best approach for their own positive “counter reforms” while protecting their constituents from the adverse effects of this deeply flawed and misguided federal legislation.

even more federal interference and disruption over the next two years.

The best strategy for state lawmakers is to adopt their own reforms—separate from, and independent of, Obamacare’s exchange design. State policymakers should then consider augmenting their “counter reform” initiatives with defensive measures designed to minimize federal interference, while the ultimate fate of Obamacare is debated in Congress and litigated in federal courts. Taking such an approach will give state lawmakers a strategy that has both offensive and defensive components.

Enacting their own reforms enables states to take the lead in advancing the kinds of patient-centered, pro-market reforms that should replace Obamacare; offers Americans concrete examples of a positive, alternative vision of real health reform; and reinforces congressional efforts to repeal this deeply flawed and misguided federal legislation.

Given the uncertain environment, state lawmakers need strategies that support the goal of repealing Obamacare at the federal level, and that also promote alternative reforms that will shield their states from the PPACA’s destabilizing effects until repeal is achieved.

---

In particular, state initiatives that create a “defined-contribution” market for employer-sponsored health coverage and that streamline state health insurance regulations will promote increased choice, competition, and value—in stark contrast to Obamacare’s design that further restricts choice and competition while increasing costs. Such moves will also restore state health insurance exchanges to their original purpose as non-regulatory, administrative mechanisms for implementing a competitive, patient-centered, market-based health system within the constraint of current federal tax law, which provides greater tax relief for employer-sponsored coverage than for individually purchased coverage.

This is in stark contrast to Obamacare’s perversion of exchanges into a bureaucratic tool for implementing sweeping new federal regulations.

At the same time, state lawmakers can also take a defensive approach to Obamacare’s exchanges in their states so as to preserve state control and limit federal interference.

Understanding Obamacare’s Exchange Provisions

The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act provides for the establishment of health insurance exchanges in every state that conform to federal standards and requirements,<sup>1</sup> authorizes the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) to provide grants to states to create exchanges,<sup>2</sup> and specifies that the Secretary is to establish and run exchanges in states that do not, or cannot, do so by January 1, 2014 (with the Secretary further required to make such determinations by January 1, 2013).<sup>3</sup>

The PPACA specifies two types of health insurance exchanges: the American Health Benefit (AHB) and the Small Business Health Options Program (SHOP). The legislation contains various requirements for the structure, functions, and operations of AHB exchanges, but provides no specifications for SHOP exchanges. Instead, the PPACA simply states that SHOP exchanges are “to assist qualified employers in the State who are small employers in facilitating the enrollment of their employees in qualified health plans offered in the small group market in the State.”<sup>4</sup> Thus, the relevant “exchange” provisions are really only those that relate to the AHB exchanges.

Under Obamacare, the AHB exchanges are designed to implement the federal regulation and standardization of private health insurance, administer a new program of federal health care subsidies for tens of millions of Americans, and enroll millions of additional Americans in state Medicaid programs.

The problem is that state lawmakers have no certainty about when, how, or even whether the PPACA’s exchange provisions will go into effect. The

3. PL 111-148 § 1321(c)(1).

4. PL 111-148 § 1311(b)(1)(B).

Obama Administration faces significant technical challenges in merely implementing this complex legislation. At the same time, a majority of the public remains opposed to Obamacare, more than half the states are challenging its constitutionality in federal courts, and either the current Congress or the next one could repeal, alter, delay, or defund all or parts of it. Given this uncertain environment, state lawmakers need strategies that support the goal of repealing Obamacare at the federal level, and that also promote alternative reforms that will shield their states from the PPACA's destabilizing effects until repeal is eventually achieved.

Consumer-Centered Exchanges vs. Obamacare Exchanges

The first point to understand is that the entire design for health insurance exchanges in the PPACA is a perversion of the core concept of what is an otherwise sound approach to improving health insurance markets.

The true purpose of a state health insurance exchange is to act as a purely administrative mechanism for implementing a defined-contribution health insurance alternative for employer-sponsored coverage. Allowing employers to offer health benefits on a defined-contribution basis gives workers the ability to choose the coverage that best suits them and their families from a wide menu of options, creates new incentives for insurers and medical providers to compete for customers, and encourages greater diversity and experimentation in health plan design and benefits.

By enacting a defined-contribution health insurance option for employment-based coverage, states can create a more consumer-driven health care market while continuing to let workers benefit from the favorable federal tax treatment of employer-sponsored health benefits. Of course, such an approach would not be necessary if Congress were to enact health care tax reforms that provide the same tax treatment regardless of whether coverage is purchased directly or through an employer—reforms that have long been advocated by numerous health policy experts. Since Obamacare does not include tax reforms and it is uncertain if or when Congress might undertake them, state-level defined-contribution options for employer-sponsored coverage are still the most effective way to advance patient-centered, market-based health reform.

Within that construct, the function of a state health insurance exchange is simply to serve as a common mechanism for administering the transactions entailed in buyers and sellers offering and choosing coverage and paying and collecting premiums—much like a stock exchange provides a common administrative mechanism for transactions associated with buying and selling securities. Thus, an exchange gives employers, no matter how small, the opportunity to offer their workers health benefits in a market characterized by consumer choice from among numerous and varied plan options.

As with a stock exchange, a properly designed state health insurance exchange does not exercise regulatory powers. Rather, any regulatory functions remain the province of applicable government agencies—security regulators, in the case of stocks; insurance regulators, in the case of health insurance. Indeed, such an administrative—not regulatory—purpose is what the term “exchange” was originally intended to convey.

What Congress did in the PPACA, however, was to merely keep the word “exchange,” while designating the purpose as something very different. Rather than serving as a mechanism for expanding health insurance choice, variety, and competition, and for spurring plans and providers to innovate and offer customers better value, Obamacare exchanges will impose new regulations, administer new subsidies, standardize coverage, and restrict consumer choice and insurer competition more than it is already. Thus, in the PPACA Congress has perverted the exchange concept into a bureaucratic tool for federal subsidization, standardization, and micromanagement of health insurance coverage by the Department of Health and Human Services.

It is important to recognize that it is Obamacare's perversion of exchanges, not the original concept itself, that is the problem. What matters is not the label on the box, but the contents. Consequently, the PPACA's misappropriation of the term “health insurance exchange” should not deter state lawmakers from pursuing their own defined-contribution, market-based reforms that employ state exchanges to perform purely administrative functions. If state lawmakers want to further clarify this important distinction, they can use another term—such as “clearinghouse” or “administrator”—to distinguish their approach from the one in Obamacare.

Why States Should Enact their Own Health Insurance Reforms

State lawmakers should pursue reforms of the health insurance market now, independently of the PPACA, not only to increase access to coverage and provide incentives for better value in the near term, but also as a longer-term hedge against the uncertainties surrounding the timing of the eventual disposition of the federally mandated exchange provisions, related insurance market regulations, and the new federal subsidy program that the Obamacare exchanges are to administer.

In particular, states should create a defined-contribution option for their employer-sponsored health insurance market. Lawmakers should also review their state’s existing benefit mandates and insurance rating rules to determine if those laws should be changed to make coverage more affordable. Beyond the near-term benefit of reducing premiums, such state reforms will also serve as a hedge against the uncertainty of the PPACA’s effects while the fight over its repeal plays out in Congress and federal courts. Enacting their own “counter reforms” can better position states against the negative effects of Obamacare in several ways:

- Expanding or Preserving Health Insurance Choice and Competition. One advantage of a defined-contribution market for employer-sponsored coverage is that it offers insurers a more level competitive playing field. In a properly structured defined-contribution market all insurers—whether they are large or small, new entrants or longstanding players, selling new or traditional coverage designs—can offer their plans on the same terms on a single “menu” to a large number of potential customers. Thus, competition among plans and insurers is more appropriately focused on those aspects that matter most to individual consumers—plan design, value, and customer service.

States with smaller populations or a single dominant carrier can collaborate with neighboring states to create a regional defined-contribution market to provide more choice and competition for their employers and residents.

competition is likely to be particularly attractive to states whose lawmakers are already concerned about inadequate choice and competition in their existing markets. It will also be attractive to state lawmakers justifiably concerned that the PPACA’s new federal insurance regulations will result in insurer consolidation that further reduces choice and competition in their state. A number of those regulations have already taken effect, such as several new federal benefit mandates, new “minimum loss ratio” regulations (which specify how insurers are to spend premium dollars), and new federal premium rate reviews. These regulations will increase health insurance costs and lead some insurers to exit the market.

In addition, states with smaller populations or a single dominant carrier can collaborate with one or more neighboring states to create a regional defined-contribution market to provide more choice and competition for their employers and residents. States can implement such an approach through “cross-licensing” or “reciprocity” agreements and shared administrative duties without federal approval for a formal “interstate compact,” though such a compact might be an option.

- Putting Countervailing Pressure on Federal Officials. Reducing state insurance benefit mandates or reforming rating rules not only makes coverage more affordable now, but will also make it politically more difficult for the federal government to later impose costly coverage requirements through the PPACA’s “essential benefits” regulations and restrictive rating rules, which will sharply increase premiums for younger adults (both of which are also scheduled to take effect in 2014).<sup>5</sup>
- Creating an Alternative Market. Creating a defined-contribution market also provides states with the infrastructure for organizing and offering alternative, “non-qualified” coverage and health care financing arrangements for individuals and employers who refuse to comply with the PPACA's mandates to buy coverage, should Congress fail to repeal those mandates before 2014, when they are scheduled to go into effect. Such alternative products would be subject to state regulation, but designed to be exempt from federal regulation.

Advantages of Defined Contributions

In a traditional "defined-benefit" program the payer (an employer or government) determines the form of coverage (such as a PPO, HMO, or high-deductible plan with an HSA), specifies the benefits offered, determines the share of premium that enrollees pay, and sets the schedule of patient co-payments. Thus, in a defined-benefit program it is the payer who makes the key decisions and it is the payer who bears most of the risk for the cost of those decisions.

By contrast, in a defined-contribution program, the payer offers the enrollee a contribution to help fund the cost of the insurance—pre-tax compensation to workers if the payer is an employer, or a subsidy if the payer is a government. Each enrollee then chooses the coverage he prefers from a menu of plans—with different plan designs, benefits, and cost-sharing—offered by competing insurers, and pays for the coverage with whatever mix of contributions he receives from employers and government (along with the enrollee's own funds, if the available contribution from the payer does not cover the full cost of an individual's chosen plan). A defined-contribution option for health benefits offers a number of advantages:

- Because it reduces the effort and risk to employers associated with offering health benefits, it creates a way for more firms, particularly smaller ones, to offer coverage.
- Because workers can choose coverage from a varied menu of plans, it increases the likelihood that more workers will be able to find a plan that they like and can afford.

- It provides a practical way for employers to offer part-time or seasonal workers prorated coverage contributions, with the reasonable expectation that those workers can obtain coverage by combining the employer's contribution with funds from other sources.
- It creates positive new incentives for health plan providers to collaborate with medical providers so that both get more business by offering consumers and patients better service at lower prices. When individuals and families choose their own coverage, they tend to prefer plans that offer better value—better care at lower prices—over plans that rely on crude cost-control strategies, such as limiting patient access to providers or simply paying doctors and hospitals less, regardless of performance.
- Over time, as more employers elect the defined-contribution option, portability of health benefits—with workers keeping their coverage when they change employers—becomes possible for more individuals and families.
- The same infrastructure can be used by states and local governments to provide health benefits to their own workers on a defined-contribution basis, and to "mainstream" recipients of public assistance by using Medicaid and Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP) funding to provide them with better-quality private coverage.

Creating a Defined-Contribution Option

The principal goal of a defined-contribution option is to empower consumers to become the ultimate decision makers about their own health care. Following are key design issues that state lawmakers will need to consider:

5. For further discussion of the effects of the PPACA's rating rules, see Edmund F. Haislmaier, "Obamacare and Insurance Rating Rules: Increasing Costs and Destabilizing Markets," Heritage Foundation WebMemo No. 3111, January 20, 2011, at <http://www.heritage.org/Research/Reports/2011/01/Obamacare-and-Insurance-Rating-Rules-Increasing-Costs-and-Destabilizing-Markets>. For further discussion of the PPACA's benefit mandates, see Edmund F. Haislmaier, "Obamacare and Insurance Benefit Mandates: Raising Premiums and Reducing Patient Choice," Heritage Foundation WebMemo No. 3110, January 20, 2011, at <http://www.heritage.org/Research/Reports/2011/01/Obamacare-and-Insurance-Benefit-Mandates-Raising-Premiums-and-Reducing-Patient-Choice>.

1. Insurance plan standards. State lawmakers will need to ensure that all plans offered through the defined-contribution option qualify as employer-sponsored coverage under both state and federal tax laws so that premiums can be paid on a pre-tax basis.

If a state intends to use its defined-contribution alternative to provide coverage for Medicaid and CHIP enrollees on a “premium support” basis—as it should—state lawmakers will also need to ensure that at least some of the plans offered meet the federal “benchmark equivalent” standards for those programs.

A state’s defined-contribution option should also operate on an “any willing plan” basis—meaning that the state’s insurance department is instructed to approve any plan that meets the state’s standards for the defined-contribution market.

2. Rating rules. State lawmakers must ensure that the same rules for rating and pricing policies apply to the new defined-contribution coverage as well as the traditional defined-benefit employer group coverage. The specific rules themselves are less important than the fact that the same rules must apply to both subsets of the employer insurance market, to avert potentially destabilizing selection behaviors by carriers or customers. As long as the rules are applied uniformly, lawmakers can allow insurers to vary premiums on the basis of factors, such as age, geography, and family status.

While the specific provisions are not as important as ensuring uniformity, there are some additional, practical considerations that state lawmakers will want to keep in mind when setting or modifying rating rules, particularly with respect to varying premiums by age and geography.

With respect to age-rating of premiums, the natural age variation in medical costs is about five to one—meaning that among adults, the oldest (non-Medicare) group consumes about five times as much medical care as the youngest group. Incomes also generally increase with age. Thus, if the state allows insurers to adjust plan prices to reflect the age of the enrollee, premiums will be lower for younger adults—who on average are healthier but have lower incomes—and higher for older adults—who generally consume more medical care but tend to have higher incomes. Letting premiums vary by age will be particularly important if the state intends to subsidize coverage for low-income individuals, since it means that any subsidies can be better targeted to a relatively small number of older, low-income individuals, with less need to subsidize coverage for a large number of lower-income, younger—and healthier—individuals, since the latter group will be able to buy coverage at cheaper rates.

With respect to geographic variations in premiums, lawmakers will want to consider whether any proposed variation reflects underlying differences in salary scales for health care workers, or simply differences in provider practice patterns. Allowing premium variations that reflect differences in local economies, such as wage rates and living costs, is appropriate. But permitting variations in rates that are attributable primarily to differences in provider practice patterns will serve mainly to protect higher-cost, less-efficient providers. For guidance on the extent to which geographic variation in premiums is appropriate, lawmakers should look to their state’s economic data on wage rates and living costs, not to data on provider charges or practice patterns.

3. Structure and operations. The states will need to create health insurance exchanges—or a similar “clearinghouse” mechanism—to handle the administrative tasks associated with offering the defined-contribution option. Utah has pioneered a quick and low-cost design that relies on contracting private-sector vendors to provide the necessary information technology and related infrastructure, funded by modest user fees paid by participants. States can adopt a variant of this approach, customized to fit their own particular needs and circumstances.<sup>6</sup>

4. State and local employee plans. The same advantages offered by defined-contribution options for private-sector firms and their employees can also be made available to state and local governments and their workers. As with private employers, offering health benefits on a defined-contribution basis can give state and local governments better budget control over compensation costs, while at the same time giving their workers greater choice and portability of coverage.

Indeed, America's largest and longest-running defined-contribution health benefit program is the Federal Employee Health Benefits Program (FEHBP), operated by the U.S. government's Office of Personnel Management (OPM) for approximately 9 million federal workers, retirees, and their dependents.

Another major advantage of providing health benefits to state and municipal workers through the defined-contribution option, is that those public-sector plans will serve as "anchor" clients—that is, large, stable employers with a large, stable pool of covered individuals—and thus make participation in the defined-contribution option more attractive to both insurers and private-sector employers.

5. Role of risk adjustment. States will also need to establish a risk-adjustment mechanism that enables insurers to manage any selection effects that result from consumers having a wider choice of plans in the defined-contribution market. Rather than viewing selection effects as an undesirable outcome to be suppressed, lawmakers should see them as a potentially positive phenomenon to be managed.

For example, the existence of an adequate risk-adjustment mechanism makes it possible for insurers to offer plans that specialize in collaborating with providers to provide better care for individuals with specific medical conditions. Even though current federal law for employer-sponsored plans prevents carriers from varying premiums based on enrollee health status, insurers should be more willing to offer coverage designs that are likely to attract less healthy individuals if they know that the extra cost of those enrollees can be spread—through the risk adjuster—across all policyholders in the market.

Because health insurance risk adjustment is a highly technical issue best handled by actuaries, state lawmakers should not attempt to design a risk-adjustment mechanism themselves.<sup>7</sup> Rather, they should focus on authorizing the creation of a risk-adjustment mechanism for their employer market within the following parameters:

- The state requires, as a condition of selling coverage in the state, that all carriers issuing employer-sponsored plans—on either a defined-benefit or defined-contribution basis—participate in the risk adjuster.
- The enabling legislation should specify that the risk-adjustment system will be collectively designed and operated by the participating insurers—without outside interference—under the regulatory supervision of the state's insurance department.
- While the state may provide funding for the start-up or administrative costs of the risk adjuster, the state will not provide any funding to the risk adjuster for claims costs. The risk adjuster is to function as a "closed loop" within which participating insurers adjust among themselves for selection effects, not as a "backdoor" subsidy to carriers for higher cost enrollees.
- If the state intends to also offer health benefits to state and municipal employees on a defined-contribution basis—as it should—then its current state and municipal plans should also be participating "insurers" in the risk adjuster. That way, lawmakers can allow those existing plans to continue to offer their coverage to state and municipal workers as options on a greatly expanded menu of coverage choices, without the risk of those plans being destabilized by selection effects.

6. For a further discussion of Utah's defined-contribution health reforms, see Gregg Girvan, "Utah's Defined-Contribution Option: Patient-Centered Health Care," Heritage Foundation Background No. 2445, July 30, 2010, at <http://www.heritage.org/Research/Reports/2010/07/Utahs-Defined-Contribution-Option-Patient-Centered-Health-Care>, and Gregg Girvan, "Consumer Power: Five Lessons from Utah's Health Care Reform," Heritage Foundation Background No. 2453, August 19, 2010, at <http://www.heritage.org/Research/Reports/2010/08/Consumer-Power-5-Lessons-from-Utah-s-Health-Care-Reform>.

7. For a further discussion of risk adjustment, see Edmund F. Haislmaier, "State Health Care Reform: A Brief Guide to Risk Adjustment in Consumer-Driven Health Insurance Markets," Heritage Foundation Background No. 2166, July 28, 2008, at <http://www.heritage.org/Research/Reports/2008/07/State-Health-Care-Reform-A-Brief-Guide-to-Risk-Adjustment-in-Consumer-Driven-Health-Insurance-Markets>.

While the main purpose of the risk adjuster will be to facilitate greater individual choice in the defined-contribution market segment, it should also apply to the traditional defined-benefit employer-group market segment as well, for two reasons. First, doing so will minimize the possibility of selection effects between the two market segments. Second, it will help stabilize premiums in the traditional group coverage market, so that employers who offer defined-benefit coverage no longer face “experience rating” premium spikes when one employee incurs a major illness.

6. Role of agents and brokers. For businesses that decide to offer health benefits on a defined-contribution basis, insurance agents could not only help the business make the necessary arrangements, but could also counsel individual employees on making coverage choices that best suit their particular needs and preferences, and “service” their policies—such as by helping them should they experience a problem or seek to appeal a claim or coverage decision by their insurer. The availability of such advice from a trained and knowledgeable professional benefits the employer as well as its workers, since business owners generally feel uncomfortable giving their employees personal advice and are naturally wary of any possible legal ramifications.

The key change for insurance brokers is that in a defined-contribution market, they will act as “buyer’s agents,” instead of their more traditional role of “seller’s agents.” This is similar to the business model shift that has occurred in recent years with many real estate agents. State lawmakers can facilitate such a shift by providing for a per-enrollee, fee-based compensation structure for agents in which the broker is paid the same amount regardless of which plan the worker (client) chooses.

While some brokers welcome such a change, seeing it as a way to expand their client base and establish relationships with new customers who might also be interested in other products the brokers offer—such as life, disability, or property insurance—others have so far been resistant.

However, another change resulting from the PPACA is likely to make more insurance agents consider shifting from representing carriers to representing buyers. Specifically, the PPACA’s new

In a defined-contribution market, agent compensation can take the form of a fee paid by the buyer, which is therefore separate from any minimum loss ratio calculation applied to insurer premium income.

“minimum loss ratio” regulations, which apply to all commercial major medical policies and took effect on January 1, 2011, will count commissions paid by carriers to agents against the share of the premium that insurers are allowed to retain to cover administrative costs and for profit. Thus, health insurers will have a strong, new incentive to reduce, or even eliminate, sales commissions to agents, since those payments will now directly reduce insurer profits.

In a defined-contribution market, however, agent compensation can take the form of a fee paid by the buyer, which is therefore separate from any minimum loss ratio calculation applied to insurer premium income. This also means that agents can offer their clients all the plan options available in the defined-contribution market, not just those from insurers with whom they currently have contracts. State insurance regulators can help facilitate this transition by providing licensed brokers with additional training, information, and comparison tools for the state’s new defined-contribution market.

Preserving State Authority in the Face of Obamacare

Some state lawmakers may decide it is in the best interest of their state to simply refuse to implement an American Health Benefit exchange and instead focus solely on their own state-based reforms that counter Obamacare. That view is understandable, and consistent with the strong opposition to Obamacare among many of their constituents.

Others, however, may also want to shield their states from the legislation’s harmful effects and minimize federal interference in addition to advancing their own counter reforms at the state level. Those state lawmakers can enact defensive measures that slow, block, or restrict federal implementation of Obamacare in their states—at least until such time as the legislation is either repealed by Congress or voided by the Supreme Court.

One such defensive component is for state lawmakers to protect the independence and integrity of their state insurance departments by refusing to accept (or returning, if already received) federal “premium review” grant funding. This funding was included in the PPACA in order to co-opt states into helping implement the legislation’s new system of arbitrary and politically manipulated health-insurer rate regulation by HHS. State lawmakers need to reassure the citizens they represent that their state insurance departments will continue to apply appropriate financial requirements so that premiums are sufficient to cover claims costs, and will not acquiesce to the Administration’s agenda of politicized rate regulation—which could threaten insurer solvency and potentially leave policyholders liable for unpaid claims.

Similarly, when it comes to the Obamacare AHB exchanges, state lawmakers should also consider taking a defensive strategy.

As noted, the PPACA effectively gives state governments a “right of first refusal” to design and operate AHB exchanges within federal guidelines. If a state does not exercise that right in a timely manner, the HHS Secretary is required to establish an exchange in that state. There are two important considerations that state lawmakers should take into account.

First, a state refusing to create an AHB exchange raises the prospect of HHS—or an organization picked by HHS—controlling access to the state’s Medicaid program. That is because the legislation requires the AHB exchange to enroll any individuals it determines Medicaid-eligible in the state Medicaid program, instead of giving them the new federal coverage subsidies.<sup>8</sup> It also requires states to accept such individuals into their Medicaid programs without any further eligibility determination, leaving states unable to reject even erroneous eligibility determinations.<sup>9</sup> The combined result of those two provisions is effectively to transfer control over enrollment in state Medicaid programs to AHB exchanges beginning in 2014. From that point on, whoever controls the AHB exchange becomes the de facto gatekeeper for both the state’s Medicaid program and the new federal subsidy system.

Second, depending on how it is implemented, an AHB exchange can also become a de facto health insurance regulator that is in competition, or conflict, with the state’s insurance department. If a state creates the AHB exchange itself, state lawmakers can take steps to avoid or limit potentially duplicative or conflicting insurance market regulation. But if the state lets HHS create the AHB exchange, then, in order to meet the requirements of the PPACA with respect to participating insurance plans, the exchange will need to exercise the full range of insurance regulatory powers available to it under the legislation, since it will be unable to rely on the state’s insurance department. Thus, a state that declines to set up an AHB exchange can expect the exchange established by HHS to act as a duplicative, and likely conflicting, insurance regulator, further disrupting the state’s health insurance market.

Furthermore, the timing of this second risk is more immediate. While the Medicaid changes are not scheduled until 2014, a number of insurance regulations have already gone into effect. Thus, the sooner a state declares “non-compliance” with the PPACA, the sooner HHS will build an exchange in that state to act as a federal insurance regulator, and the sooner insurers will gravitate toward answering to HHS rather than to the state’s insurance department.

The alternative to not creating an AHB exchange is for state lawmakers to establish a narrowly limited and closely controlled AHB exchange within the parameters of the federal legislation. Such a “defensive” approach lets state lawmakers who oppose Obamacare, or who are at least wary of its effects, avoid the risk of losing control over their Medicaid programs or insurance markets by letting HHS operate AHB exchanges in their states.

The strategy behind this approach is for state lawmakers to tailor the design of their state’s AHB exchange to maximize state government control, restrict the potential for federal interference, minimize market disruptions, limit the associated costs and risks to the state, and preserve the state's options for responding to potential future changes in federal law.

Structuring a “Defensive” AHB Exchange

For a state that elects to take a “defensive” approach, the best way to proceed is by disaggregating the functional components of the AHB exchange, determining the best solution for each function, and then networking the components into a whole, along the following lines:

1. Corporate form and governance. The state should set up a “shell” AHB exchange and “sub-contract” its various functions to a combination of state agencies and private-sector vendors, based on relevant expertise. While the PPACA allows the exchange to be housed within a state government (either as a new agency or as a subset of an existing one), state lawmakers will likely prefer the alternative PPACA option of establishing their AHB exchange as a specially chartered, state-government-sponsored, independent entity—but without any regulatory powers.<sup>10</sup>

There are three reasons for doing so. First, regulatory powers are retained within the applicable agencies of state government—not delegated to a quasi-independent entity over which state lawmakers have limited control and which will be more inclined to take direction from federal officials. Second, the state government avoids directly managing or funding the exchange's purely administrative functions, with those tasks instead contracted to private-sector vendors and funded by user fees. Third, the state has more flexibility to set governance of the exchange by a board composed of whatever mix of public officials and stakeholder representatives it deems most appropriate.

2. Certification of insurers and health plans. Lawmakers should vest their state's insurance department with responsibility for determining which carriers and health plans “qualify” under state and federal law to be offered through the AHB exchange. They should then stipulate that the exchange is to accept, without modification, those determinations by the insurance department and fulfill its requirement under the PPACA to “certify” participating insurers and plans by simply forwarding the state insurance department's determinations to HHS.

Such an arrangement has several advantages. First, it preserves state authority and accountability with respect to insurance regulation. Second, it avoids the potential for duplication and confusion in market regulation. Third, it keeps insurance regulation in the hands of those with the most extensive technical expertise—existing state insurance regulators. Fourth, it enables the state to more effectively challenge or contest any HHS regulation or interpretation of the PPACA with which the state disagrees. Should such disputes arise, the state will be positioned to deploy in support of its case the data and technical expertise of its insurance department, augmented by the legal resources of the state's Attorney General, if necessary.

As a related measure, state insurance law should be amended to stipulate that the certification of carriers and plans to participate in the exchange is to be implemented by the state's insurance department on an “any willing plan” basis. Meaning, that any plan that meets the applicable federal and state standards in effect at that time—as determined by the state's insurance department—will be automatically certified as eligible to be offered in the exchange. Such a move ensures a level competitive playing field for insurers, avoids the problems that arise when governments try to pick winners and losers, and helps preserve maximum consumer choice in the market.

Lawmakers should also instruct their state insurance department to apply state insurance law until such time as federal law preempts state law, and not to make any preemptive regulatory changes to accommodate federal laws or regulations that have not yet taken effect. In addition to preserving state sovereignty, such an approach has the practical advantages of limiting confusion in the market and serving as a “hedge” against the possibility that one or more of Obamacare's new federal insurance requirements may be postponed, repealed, or significantly altered prior to their statutory effective dates.

3. Eligibility determination. State lawmakers should require the exchange to subcontract eligibility determinations to the state's Medicaid program in order to maintain state control. This also gives state lawmakers an opportunity to review their current program eligibility determination process and make improvements. For example, states that currently allow local governments to make program eligibility determinations might want to use this opportunity to consolidate that function at the state level, so as to achieve more consistent and accurate decisions. Under Obamacare, it will be necessary to determine if individuals are eligible for Medicaid under either pre-PPACA rules or under the PPACA Medicaid expansion provisions—with different federal match rates for the two eligibility categories. Also, a much larger share of the state's population that does not qualify for Medicaid or CHIP will be eligible for the new federal subsidies through the exchange, so lawmakers will need to plan for increased funding and system upgrades as well.

4. Certification of agents and “navigators.” As with certification of insurers and health plans, state lawmakers should require the exchange to simply accept the determinations of the state's existing professional licensure system when it comes to certifying agents or organizations as “navigators” who assist individuals with enrolling in the exchange and choosing a health plan. State lawmakers will at some point need to amend the applicable state licensure statute and compensation regulations as necessary to conform them to whatever standards HHS eventually issues to implement these provisions of the PPACA.

States will still be able to specify different licensure standards for agents selling health coverage outside of the exchange—if they so choose—though this would be a good opportunity for lawmakers to review those existing statutes and regulations to determine if other changes should be made to them as well.

5. Administrative functions. When it comes to the various administrative functions that Obamacare requires the exchange to perform—such as providing a Web site for enrollment, plan comparison and plan selection, toll-free telephone assistance, an online calculator for determining plan costs to enrollees, information transmission to the U.S. Treasury to calculate and pay enrollee subsidies—the best course of action is for the exchange to simply hire private-sector vendors to provide the necessary software and operational support.

If, at some point, either Congress rescinds funding or the Supreme Court voids Obamacare, then the vendors will stop their work. In the event that Obamacare is still in place when the exchanges are scheduled to begin operation, a state's enabling legislation should require the exchange to fund its subsequent ongoing operations with user fees. Because of the PPACA's minimum loss ratio regulations, the enabling legislation should further specify that the exchange is to charge such user fees to enrollees, not to participating insurers.

In contracting for these administrative and technical services, state lawmakers can either require the exchange to follow existing state government contracting procedures, or permit the exchange's governing board to adopt alternative procedures.

6. State legislature oversight. A state that takes this approach should also establish special oversight committees of its legislature to supervise the AHB exchange and the interactions between the exchange and relevant state government agencies and departments. The oversight committees should pay particularly close attention to the state's insurance department, its Medicaid and CHIP programs, and its tax and revenue department (which may be affected by the need to verify income in connection with eligibility determinations for Medicaid and the new federal subsidies).

States will want to vest this oversight responsibility with new special committees—one for each legislative chamber, or, a single bicameral special committee—because implementation will involve several executive branch agencies and the jurisdictions of more than one standing committee. State legislatures typically have standing insurance committees to handle insurance matters, as well as standing health committees with jurisdiction over the state's Medicaid and CHIP programs. Thus, the state's legislative leadership will want to ensure that a special exchange oversight committee includes both members with experience and expertise in insurance law and members with experience and expertise in Medicaid and CHIP. Leadership may also want to ensure that members with experience and expertise in other areas, such as tax or appropriations, serve on the special oversight committee.

Furthermore, states whose legislatures meet in time-limited sessions will want to authorize any oversight committee as an “interim” committee so that it continues to function between the regular sessions of the legislature. Should an interim oversight committee identify issues that need immediate legislative attention, those states can use their established procedures for calling the full legislature back for a “special” session to consider any relevant legislation.

7. Sunset provision. The state’s enabling legislation should also include a sunset provision that automatically terminates the state’s AHB exchange should a Supreme Court ruling void the legislation or should subsequent federal legislation be enacted that repeals the authority granted to the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish AHB exchanges in states that do not establish such exchanges on their own. Specifically, the sunset provision should be triggered by any future federal repeal or nullification of Section 1321(c) of Public Law 111-148.

Conclusion

State lawmakers now face important decisions about whether they will pursue their own health insurance market reforms—separate and different from Obamacare—and whether they will create defensive AHB exchanges to shield their states and minimize federal interference while they await the ultimate disposition of Obamacare by Congress or the Supreme Court. State lawmakers should understand that these decisions, while related, are in fact severable. They can opt to pursue their own reforms, create a defensive AHB exchange, do both, or do neither.

State lawmakers should pursue health insurance market reforms of their own design now, independent of the PPACA, not only to increase access to coverage and provide incentives for better value in the near term, but also as a longer-term hedge against the uncertainties surrounding the timing of the eventual disposition of Obamacare’s exchange provisions, related insurance market regulations, and the new federal subsidy program that the exchanges are intended to administer.

While there are good reasons why some states may decide not to establish AHB exchanges, it is important that state lawmakers inclined toward that option carefully consider its implications for their state’s Medicaid program and insurance market. State lawmakers who feel more comfortable with a strategy that protects their state as much as possible until Obamacare’s fate is decided by Congress or the Supreme Court can instead pursue the alternative approach of adopting a limited, defensive AHB exchange design.

Given the considerable uncertainty surrounding if, when, or how the exchange provisions of the PPACA will be implemented, the wisest course for state lawmakers is to adopt responses that position their states for a range of possible outcomes. While state lawmakers, like everyone else, would obviously prefer to have more certainty regarding Obamacare, the reality is that they cannot expect to obtain such certainty any time soon. Consequently, they will instead need to focus in the near term on finding ways to better manage the new uncertainty that Obamacare has injected into the health care system. Pending further changes at the federal level, state lawmakers need to determine now the best approach in each of their respective states for advancing their own positive “counter reforms” while also protecting their constituents from the disruption and adverse effects of this deeply flawed and misguided federal legislation.

Hey, Big Spenders: A Memo to Washington Democrats

July 12, 2011 | Posted by Michael Ricci | Permalink

MEMO

TO: The Democrats Who Run Washington

CC: The American People

RE: Your Recent Spending Binge

DATE: July 12, 2011

The American people are still asking 'where are the jobs?' and they know the spending spree going on here in Washington is part of the problem, not the solution. If it were, unemployment would be below eight percent today, as per your 'stimulus' promises. Instead, it's more than nine percent and still rising.

Spending in Washington has been out of control for years, and Republicans certainly could have done more to stop it. But we have never presided over a spending binge of the magnitude seen under President Obama – from the 'stimulus' to ObamaCare to the explosion in discretionary spending. It's his economy that is faltering, failing to produce the jobs and the growth needed to keep us from descending deeper and deeper into debt. That's why on May 3, Republicans asked the president to send a plan to Congress that would raise the debt limit while cutting spending at the same time.

We have yet to see such a plan.

In the absence of this plan, Americans are left to assume you are proud of – or at least, content with – this record:

- A 24 percent increase in non-defense discretionary spending over the first two years of the Obama Administration, for a total of $734 billion in new Washington spending over the next 10 years. This will be the third year in a row of \$1 trillion deficits.
- A $3.7 trillion increase in the national debt since President Obama took office. The debt is on track to exceed the size of our entire economy this year.
- A 'stimulus' that now carries a $830 billion price tag – $43 billion more than originally estimated – despite mounting evidence it failed to work as promised.
- $1.4 trillion in new Washington spending on a government takeover of health care, which continues to be subject to revelations it will cost our economy jobs. The fact that it contains "the largest tax increase since 1993" may have something to do with that.

Republicans recognized we had lost our way. We put forward not just a plan to turn things around – but a pledge to America that we would do things differently than they had been done in the past under both parties. We've worked hard to make good on our pledge, cutting our own budgets, making it harder to increase spending, enacting real spending cuts, and reining in red tape. We passed a jobs budget that would spur private-sector job growth and pay down our debt over time. And we've built on the Pledge with a Plan for America's Job Creators designed to remove government barriers to private-sector job growth – the kind of growth the 'stimulus' promised but failed to deliver.

At every turn, however, you have fought for more of the same – more spending, more taxes, and more debt – trying to soak families and small businesses to pay for big government. Again, if that Washington-knows-best approach worked, Americans wouldn't still be asking 'where are the jobs?'

Republicans have led on these issues, and Americans are still waiting for President Obama to step up and do the same. A response to Republicans' May 3 letter would be a good start.

Subject: HHS Allows Governor "Designee" To Make Exchange Declaration
Date: Wednesday, August 22, 2012 2:07:57 PM

Healthcare Advisors and Action Officers:

The final healthcare exchange blueprint released last week allows for designees other than Governors to sign the blueprint and obligate the state to a specific course of action. This is new in the final rule. Upon first reading, it appears HHS is attempting to usurp governors and/or legislatures. Lindsay and I will be looking into this but welcome your expert thoughts and ideas at any point. Should we need to message as a group, we'll get ready to do so.

Thanks,
Marie

HHS Allows Governor 'Designee' To Make Exchange Declaration

Posted: August 22, 2012

HHS in the final health insurance exchange "blueprint" guidance allows governor designees, such as elected state insurance commissioners, to declare the type of exchange states intend to create. HHS previously told Inside Health Policy that in some states, insurance commissioners, not governors, sign off on exchanges, but the earlier draft blueprint stated that governors had to sign declarations.

The National Association of Insurance Commissioners affirms that its members think state Department of Insurance (DOI) or other designees may sign exchange declaration letters and no additional guidance is necessary.

In the draft blueprint that was released in May, HHS wrote that exchange declaration letters would require the "Signature of Governor or Designee of the State," and that without exception the declaration letter must be signed by the governor. The final blueprint changed that to, "Signature of Governor Designee of the State," and HHS acknowledged that in some states governors might not have the authority to declare partnership exchanges. States in that position should contact CCIIO to work out details, HHS said.

A source tracking exchange implementation says there are 12 or 13 states that have elected insurance commissioners who would be able to make such a declaration. The source says that Kansas is an interesting state to watch because elected Commissioner Sandy Praeger supports creating a state exchange, and Republican Gov. Sam Brownback and the state's legislature oppose implementation the health care law.

Praeger said at a July 30 Bipartisan Policy Center forum that it would not be wise for her to oppose her governor and legislature. However, she said she hopes to enter into a partnership exchange with the federal government “so our insurance department can continue to approve insurance rates, as well as approve policies offered on the exchange and assist consumers with their complaints.”

HHS encourages states considering a state-based or partnership exchange model to send in their declaration letters as soon as possible. States planning to operate state-based or partnership in 2014 must submit their blueprints to HHS by Nov. 16 so the department can approve the exchanges by Jan. 1. So far, 13 states have formally said that they would move forward with a state-based exchange. In a partnership exchange, a state can oversee plan management, consumer assistance, or both of those functions.

It is unclear which other non-governor state officials might be considering the option of declaring their exchange model. -- Amy Lotven (alotven@iwpnews.com)

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES (HHS) GUIDANCE ON FEDERALLY-FACILITATED EXCHANGES

BACKGROUND

The Affordable Care Act (ACA) provides for the establishment of a Health Insurance Exchange (Exchange) in each state to help individuals and small employers purchase health insurance coverage offered by qualified health plans. Each state may elect to establish an Exchange, rely on the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to establish an Exchange or partner with HHS to establish an Exchange for that state.

On May 16, 2012, the Center for Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight (CCIIO) released General Guidance on Federally-Facilitated Exchanges (“guidance”) which discusses how HHS will operate a Federally-Facilitated Exchange (FFE) in each state where a state-based Exchange is not established. The 19-page document provides additional details on how states can partner with HHS to implement selected functions in an FFE, policies of key Exchange functions, and how HHS will consult with stakeholders to implement an FFE.

Contrary to previous speculation, states that do not establish their own Exchanges will be able to select which pieces of the Exchange establishment and operation they want to implement.

States must submit their Exchange blueprint applications by November 16, 2012. A draft application is available at <http://cciio.cms.gov/resources/files/Exchangeblueprint05162012.pdf>. States that do not intend to operate an Exchange are invited to submit a declaration letter but do not need to submit an application.

HHS intends to propose a regulation for further comment to consider amending the final rules regarding Medicaid eligibility determinations made by Exchanges.

STATE OPTIONS IN A FEDERALLY-FACILITATED EXCHANGE

States will have two options to work with an FFE to support administration and operation of selected functions, depending on whether they are fully FFE or a partnership exchange.

Federally-Facilitated Exchange. Under the FFE, the federal government will take on all Exchange responsibilities, including offering qualified health plans (QHPs), providing consumer assistance (including a website and call center), operating a Small Business Health Options Program (SHOP) for small businesses and conducting eligibility determinations for affordability programs. Through agreements, the FFEs will operate and regulate in areas traditionally and exclusively governed by state insurance departments.

States may elect to perform or may use the federal government to perform the following activities:

- Reinsurance program; and

- Medicaid and Children’s Health Insurance Program (CHIP) eligibility assessment or determination (in coordination with the Center for Medicaid and CHIP Services).

The federal government intends to support the operations of the FFE by developing and implementing a system to calculate and collect user fees from participating issuers of QHPs. The details on these payments are due to be released in Fall 2012.

Partnership Exchange. Under the partnership Exchange, the state must operate either or both of the following activities for the individual and small group markets:

- Plan management, with responsibility for the following activities:
  - Certification, recertification and decertification of QHPs;
  - Data collection and transmission; and
  - Issuer oversight and management (subject to federal law and oversight).
- in-person consumer assistance, to assist individuals in the following:
  - Completing and submitting an application;
  - Comparing and selecting a QHP; and
  - Enrolling in coverage.

Additional details on the minimum functions of a Partnership Exchange are available in Chart 1, Summary of State Partner Functions in Plan Management, Consumer Assistance, on page 6 of the guidance.

States may elect to perform or may use the federal government to perform the following activities:

- Reinsurance program; and
- Medicaid and CHIP eligibility assessment or determination (in coordination with the Center for Medicaid and CHIP Services).

The federal government is ultimately responsible for the operation of the Exchange.

KEY EXCHANGE FUNCTIONS IN A FEDERALLY-FACILITATED EXCHANGE

Plan Management. The plan management function includes all aspects of QHP certification, monitoring, oversight and management, to include the following:

- Reconsiderations of FFE certification decisions: Each FFE will provide a process for issuers to request reconsiderations of QHP certification decisions.
- QHP agreements: HHS will enter into agreements with QHP issuers to memorialize certification and procedural requirements. This process will take place after the end of the QHP certification process.

- Plan data display on the FFE Web site: Each FFE will allow issuers to view and validate plan data before public display on the FFE Web site.
- Recertification and the annual process for plan review: An FFE will establish a process for recertification. At a minimum, each FFE will annually ensure compliance with issuer licensure, solvency, accreditation data, review network adequacy and plan-level rate and benefit data, and consider changes to service areas and changes in ownership, mergers or acquisitions.
- Decertification: Each FFE will establish a process for decertification of QHPs that fall out of compliance with QHP certification standards.
- User fees: HHS will support the ongoing operations of FFEs by developing and implementing a system to calculate and collect user fees from participating issuers. HHS will include detailed information about FFE user fees in the draft notice of payment and benefit parameters that HHS plans to release this fall.

With respect to the QHP certification process, each FFE will limit its role and authority to the certification and management of participating QHPs, which does not extend beyond the Exchange or affect otherwise applicable state law governing which health insurance products may be sold in the individual and small group markets. Where possible, QHP certification standards will rely on reviews that state departments of insurance (DOI) currently conduct. Otherwise, HHS will perform the review to evaluate each potential QHP against all applicable certification standards.

Accreditation and Quality Reporting. HHS intends to address accreditation and quality reporting as part of future rulemaking. In the interim, FFEs will display selected Consumer Assessment of Healthcare Providers and Systems results from existing accreditation data.

Eligibility Determination. States will have two options related to Medicaid and CHIP eligibility determination.

- Option 1: FFE performs Medicaid and CHIP eligibility determination; or
  - The FFE will determine Medicaid and CHIP eligibility based on modified adjusted gross income (MAGI) and other state policies.
  - The FFE will electronically submit all information for an eligible applicant to the state Medicaid and CHIP agency.
  - The state Medicaid and CHIP agency will accept the FFE's determination and provide Medicaid or CHIP enrollment and coverage.
- Option 2: FFE performs Medicaid and CHIP eligibility assessments.
  - FFE will conduct assessments of Medicaid and CHIP eligibility based on MAGI and other state policies as part of the determination for advance premium tax credits and cost-sharing reductions.
  - FFE will electronically submit all information for a potentially eligible applicant to the state Medicaid and CHIP agency, which will make the final determination and notify the FFE if the state Medicaid and CHIP agency finds that the applicant is ineligible.

Agents and Brokers. Each FFE will offer an agent and broker portal, which would allow an agent or broker to assist individuals in enrolling in QHPs using the FFE website. HHS will develop an Application Programming Interface (API) to allow a web-based broker to assist individuals in comparing and selecting QHPs using the broker's website. Agents and brokers will be required to meet certain consumer protection standards.

Federally-Facilitated SHOP (FF-SHOP). For the purpose of SHOP participation, FF-SHOPs will use the upper threshold (50 or 100 employees). Each qualified small employer will choose from among FFE-approved coverage options and select a contribution scheme. The qualified small employer decides whether employees pay individualized or composite rates. Through the FF-SHOP website, qualified small employers can model different coverage scenarios before making choices. The FF-SHOP will provide each qualified small employer with a single monthly bill and collect a single aggregate payment.

STAKEHOLDER INPUT

HHS will conduct extensive outreach and education on FFE policy and operations through technical assistance to stakeholders and by soliciting stakeholder/consumer input on FFE implementation in their states.

LEGISLATIVE UPDATE SEPTEMBER 2011

HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES COMMITTEE

NGA Staff Contact: Heather Hogsett, 202/624-5360

Implementation of the Affordable Care Act. The passage of health care reform legislation in March 2010 set up a series of changes to the U.S. health care system at both the state and federal level, culminating in a significant expansion of the Medicaid program and the creation of 50 state insurance exchanges, both scheduled to take effect January 1, 2014.

The health reform law continues to be a hotly debated subject in the 112th Congress. The dynamic of a Democratic controlled Senate and a Republican controlled House of Representatives, however, means that legislative action in this area is unlikely. The bulk of the actual activity around health reform over the next year will be implementation at the state level and within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) as it develops and finalizes detailed guidance and regulations regarding implementation. Thus far, HHS has issued several proposed rules regarding the establishment of health exchanges, Medicaid eligibility, exchange eligibility and employer standards, and eligibility for premium tax credits.

Special Disability Workload. Special Disability Workload (SDW) refers to a project to address the federal government's liability for the cost of health care provided by state Medicaid programs that was the responsibility of Medicare. It is estimated that states spent over four billion dollars of their own funds to cover care that should have been provided by the federal government. NGA sent a letter to Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius on July 1, 2011, requesting that HHS reimburse states for their expenditures by issuing a credit to be used against the state share of current Medicaid expenditures. NGA continues to work with HHS and the Administration to resolve this long standing issue.

TANF Reauthorization. The Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) program is the federal block grant to states to provide cash welfare benefits and other time-limited work supports for low-income families. Created in 1996 to replace the old welfare entitlement program, the TANF program's authorization is currently set to expire September 30, 2011. Full reauthorization would involve a complex discussion of funding levels, allowable uses of program dollars, re-examining the effectiveness of various state approaches, and debates about whether TANF is a work support program, or an anti-poverty program. These contentious issues are unlikely to be resolved in the divided 112th Congress, and as a result, it is highly likely that Congress will simply extend the current authorization temporarily, although the lack of long term stability will make efficient administration of the program difficult at the state level.

THE SECRETARY OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

WASHINGTON, D.C. 20201

November 15, 2012

The Honorable Bob McDonnell
The Honorable Bobby Jindal
Republican Governors Public Policy Committee
Republican Governors Association
1747 Pennsylvania Avenue NW, Suite 250
Washington, DC 20006

Dear Governor McDonnell and Governor Jindal:

Thank you for your recent letter regarding the implementation of the Affordable Care Act. Giving states the flexibility they need has been a critical principle in our work to implement the Affordable Care Act since it was signed into law more than two years ago. Our team has worked closely with Governors from across the country to answer their questions and gather their input.

States have and will continue to be partners in implementing the health care law and we are committed to providing states with the flexibility, resources, and time they need to deliver the benefits of the health care law to the American people. We will continue to work directly with individual states to address their particular questions and concerns.

You recently requested additional time to declare whether states will elect to run a State-based Exchange. Under the law, we are required to certify states' plans to run their own Exchange in 2014 by January 1, 2013. While receiving a letter of intent now will help us assist states in finalizing their application, a state may submit both a letter of intent and an application to operate its own Exchange by December 14. States may also apply to operate their Exchange in partnership with the federal government by February 15, 2013. And a state may apply at any time to run an Exchange in future years.

As we have worked to implement the Affordable Care Act, we have issued information and guidance to states regarding provisions of the health care law. Additional guidance will be released in the coming days and weeks and our team will do everything possible to answer questions and provide technical assistance to state leaders.

We are confident Governors will have enough time to decide whether they want to establish an Exchange, work in partnership with the federal government or have a federally- facilitated Exchange in their state. We look forward to working with Governors as we continue to implement the law.

Sincerely,

Helping Americans Keep the Coverage They Have and Promoting Transparency

Helping Consumers Keep their Coverage

The Affordable Care Act is designed to provide Americans with affordable, high-quality coverage options – while ensuring that those who like their current coverage can keep it. Unfortunately, today, limited benefit plans, or “mini-med” plans are often the only type of insurance offered to some workers. In 2014, the Affordable Care Act will end mini-med plans when Americans will have better access to affordable, comprehensive health insurance plans that cannot use high deductibles or annual limits to limit benefits. In the meantime, the law requires insurers to phase out the use of annual dollar limits on benefits. In 2011, most plans can impose an annual limit of no less than $750,000.
