Mini-med plans have lower limits than allowed under the Affordable Care Act. While mini-med plans do not provide security in the event of serious illness or accident, they are unfortunately the only option that some employers offer. In order to protect coverage for these workers, the Affordable Care Act allows these plans to apply for temporary waivers from rules restricting the size of annual limits to some group health plans and health insurance issuers.

Waivers only last for one year and are only available if the plan certifies that a waiver is necessary to prevent either a large increase in premiums or a significant decrease in access to coverage. In addition, enrollees must be informed that their plan does not meet the requirements of the Affordable Care Act. No other provision of the Affordable Care Act is affected by these waivers: they only apply to the annual limit policy.

As of today, a total of 733 waivers have been granted for 2011. Key facts about annual limits waivers:

- There was an increase in the number of applications received at the end of 2010 because December 1 was the final day to apply for a waiver for a plan or policy year that begins on January 1 – as many plans do. Over 500 waivers were granted in December. While the number of approved waivers increased by more than 200 percent, the total number of enrollees in plans receiving waivers has increased by only 48 percent since the previous posting.
- Of all the waivers granted to date:
  - Employment-Based Coverage: The vast majority – 712 plans representing 97 percent of all waivers – were granted to health plans that are employment-related.
    - Self-Insured Employer Plans Applicants: Employer-based health plans received most of the waivers – 359.
    - Collectively-Bargained Employer-Based Plan Applicants: Most of the other health plans receiving waivers are multi-employer health funds created by a collective bargaining agreement between a union and two or more employers, pursuant to the Taft-Hartley Act. These “union plans” are employment based group health plans and operate for the sole benefit of workers. They tend to be larger than other typical group health plans because they cover multiple employers. There are also single-employer union plans that have received a waiver. In total, 182 collectively-bargained plans have received waivers.
    - Health Reimbursement Arrangements (HRAs): HRAs are employer-funded group health plans where employees are reimbursed tax-free for qualified medical expenses up to a maximum dollar amount for a coverage period. In total, HHS has approved 171 applications for waivers for HRAs.
  - Health Insurers: Sixteen waivers were granted to health insurers, which can apply for a waiver for multiple mini-med products sold to employers or individuals.

- State Governments: Four waivers have gone to State governments. States may apply for a waiver of the restricted annual limits on behalf of issuers of state-mandated policies if state law required the policies to be offered by the issuers prior to September 23, 2010.
- The number of enrollees in plans with annual limits waivers is 2.1 million, representing only about 1 percent of all Americans who have private health insurance today.

Improving Transparency

HHS periodically posts the list of the plans that have been granted waivers to ensure the public is aware of the waiver process and stakeholders understand how they are affected. Also, on December 9, 2010 HHS issued new rules requiring that health insurers offering mini-med plans must notify consumers in plain language that their plan offers extremely limited benefits and direct them to www.HealthCare.gov where they can get more information about other coverage options. The rules require health plans with waivers to tell consumers if their health care coverage is subject to an annual dollar limit lower than what is required under the law. This way, enrollees know when their coverage is limited.

Annual limits waivers are temporary. In 2014 annual dollar limits will be prohibited and mini-med plans will no longer be necessary.

Approved Applications for Waiver of the Annual Limits Requirements

Updated January 26, 2011

All Applicants Listed have had 1 or more plans/policies approved.

Approved State applicants are listed separately below

Applications for waivers from annual limit requirements are reviewed on a case by case basis by Department officials who look at a series of factors including whether or not a premium increase is large or if a significant number of enrollees would lose access to their current plan because the coverage would not be offered in the absence of a waiver. More detailed information on specific criteria can be found at: http://www.hhs.gov/ociio/regulations/11-05-2010annual\_limits\_waiver\_bulletin.pdf. Approved applicants are granted an annual limit waiver for one year. ## State-Mandated Policies: Approved Applications for Waiver of the Annual Limits Requirements

Updated 1/26/2011

In some states, issuers offer policies with annual limits below the minimum requirements in order to comply with state laws. These state laws require issuers to market a standardized policy that includes an annual limit well below the restricted annual limits. In such instances, states may apply for a waiver of the restricted annual limits on behalf of issuers of state-mandated policies if state law required the policies to be offered by the issuers prior to September 23, 2010. Although the state may apply on the issuers' behalf, the application must still satisfy the standard that compliance by the issuers would result in a "significant decrease in access to benefits" or a "significant increase in premiums."

Good afternoon - -

Today, the Middle Class Tax Relief & Job Creation Act was introduced in the House and we will vote on this bill next week. Below is a summary of the bill's provisions, including pay-fors and spending cuts to ensure that this bill is fully paid for and does not raise taxes.

The text of the bill can be found here:

Middle Class Tax Relief & Job Creation Act

GOP Plan Extends Current Payroll Tax Relief, Protects Social Security, Reforms and Extends Unemployment Insurance & Includes Key Jobs Initiatives

Next week, the GOP-led House of Representatives will vote on the Middle Class Tax Relief & Job Creation Act to help create thousands of new American jobs while helping Americans struggling with the consequences of President Obama's failed economic policies. The bill extends current payroll tax relief, protects Social Security, reforms and extends unemployment insurance, and extends pro-growth tax relief for businesses of all sizes – while also advancing several bipartisan measures that will directly support the creation of private-sector jobs, including the Keystone XL energy pipeline. Everything in the House bill is offset by spending cuts, rather than through tax increases that would hit small businesses and destroy jobs, as proposed in Senate Democrats' bill.

Extends Current Payroll Tax Relief, Protects Social Security

The bill provides a one-year extension of the temporary payroll tax relief enacted in 2010 and allows Americans to keep more of their own money, rejecting the Democrats' plan to increase taxes on job creators. The measure protects the Social Security Trust Fund from being harmed by cutting government spending and directing those savings to replenish the trust fund. Specifically, the measure:

- Extends the current lower payroll tax rate for employees, which was reduced from 6.2 percent of wages to 4.2 percent, for one year.
- Ensures that taxes will stay lower for the nearly 170 million Americans who pay payroll taxes, with the average working family saving $1,000 in 2012.
- Rejects the Democrats' proposed tax increase on job creators.

Reforms UI Program & Extends Benefits for Americans Struggling in Obama Economy

The bill permanently reforms the federal unemployment insurance (UI) program and extends benefits to those who are struggling in President Obama's economy. Recognizing that unemployment services should focus on helping Americans get back to work, the bill uses a two-step process to gradually reduce current maximum weeks of benefits from 99 to 59 weeks, a common-sense level that is in line with past recessions and economic downturns (President Obama's own plan recognizes that American taxpayers cannot subsidize benefits for an unprecedented, unending period of time by reducing the maximum weeks by 20 next year).

The measure permanently reforms unemployment insurance to reduce waste, cut costs, and increase state flexibility – consistent with the Jobs, Opportunities, Benefits & Services (JOBS) Act approved by the Ways & Means Committee in May. For example:

- The bill requires all state and federal UI recipients to, as a condition of eligibility, search for work, be in a GED program if they have not finished high school (with common-sense exceptions such as for older workers), and participate in reemployment services to help them get back to work.
- The measure increases state flexibility to test and evaluate innovative state-based solutions.
- The bill targets waste, fraud, and abuse by improving the accuracy and administration of UI benefits.
- The measure allows states, if they desire, to perform drug screening and testing as a condition of providing UI benefits in order to improve prospects for future employment.

Job Creation Initiatives

As part of Republicans' continuing focus on jobs, including the GOP's Plan for America's Job Creators, the measure includes several key jobs initiatives:

- The bill accelerates a decision on the Keystone XL energy pipeline, requiring, within 60 days, for the permit to be granted unless the president determines the project is not in the national interest. The measure will create thousands of American jobs and increase America's energy security. Similar legislation passed the House with bipartisan support earlier this year.
- The measure extends 100 percent business expensing through 2012 to make it easier for employers, small and large, to invest now in new machinery and equipment, grow their businesses, and create jobs.
- The bill includes Rep. Morgan Griffith's (R-VA) EPA Regulatory Relief Act (H.R. 2250) to stop the onerous new boiler rule and require the Obama administration to develop a more sensible alternative that balances the need to protect both jobs and the environment. The measure, which would protect more than 200,000 American jobs, was passed by the House on a bipartisan basis on October 13.
- The measure includes spectrum auctions to advance wireless broadband service, bring interoperable broadband communications to public safety officials, spur billions in private investment, and create thousands of jobs – consistent with Rep. Greg Walden's (R-OR) Jumpstarting Opportunity with Broadband Spectrum (JOBS) Act.

Includes Two-Year “Doc Fix,” Further Defunds ObamaCare

The bill provides a two-year “doc fix” and savings to offset the cost, including further defunding the President’s health care law. A two-year “doc fix” extension is longest stretch of time in nearly a decade. Bringing this level of stability to physicians will pave the way for a permanent fix. Specifically, the bill:

- Extends certain Medicare payment policies, including a two-year “doc fix” to protect Medicare physicians from large reimbursement cuts scheduled to take place next year.
- Repeals $8 billion in ObamaCare mandatory funding from the unaccountable “prevention and public health fund,” which the House voted to defund earlier this year (saves $8 billion).
- Forces greater repayment of improper taxpayer-funded subsidies in ObamaCare to reduce waste, fraud and abuse in the Democrats’ health care law (reduces deficit by $13.4 billion).
- Updates certain provider payment methodologies to reduce wasteful spending (saves $21.5 billion).

Reforms & Extends Temporary Assistance for Needy Families Program

The Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) program, which replaced the prior open-ended welfare entitlement with a fixed federal block grant as part of the 1996 welfare reform law, expires December 31, 2011. The bill extends the $16.5 billion TANF block grant at its current funding levels through the remainder of FY 2012, and makes two reforms to (1) improve program administration by standardizing data elements to improve integrity and collaboration; and (2) close the current “strip club loophole” to ensure that welfare funds cannot be accessed in strip clubs, liquor stores, and casinos by blocking welfare electronic benefit transfer (EBT) cards from working in ATMs there.

Spending Cuts – Not Tax Hikes on Job Creators – to Offset Payroll/UI Extension

The bill includes spending cuts in government programs – not tax increases on job creators – to fully pay for extending current payroll tax relief and unemployment insurance benefits. This includes extending the current pay freeze for federal workers, including Members of Congress, eliminating government benefits for millionaires & billionaires, targeting fraud and abuse, and reforming entitlement programs – many ideas for which President Obama has already expressed support. Specifically, the bill:

- Extends the current pay freeze for federal workers (including Members of Congress) through FY 2013 (saves $26 billion).
- Changes the co-pay structure for civilian federal retirees (saves $36 billion).
- Raises Government Sponsored Enterprise (GSE) guarantee fees to better price the risks GSEs cover and reduce their unfair advantages over the private sector (saves $38 billion).
- Includes spectrum auctions and other reforms to bring in significant revenues for taxpayers by making more efficient and effective use of the public's airwaves (saves $16 billion).
- Reforms the National Flood Insurance Program by eliminating the premium subsidy for certain properties (saves $4 billion).
- Better coordinates with states and localities to prevent Social Security overpayments (saves $3 billion)
- Ensures that illegal immigrants who are not eligible to work in the U.S. do not get checks from the IRS (saves $9.4 billion).
- Gradually increases Medicare premiums for high income beneficiaries (saves as much as $31 billion).
- Prohibits millionaires from receiving unemployment insurance and food stamp benefits (saves $20 million).

CBO Director Says Obamacare Would Reduce Employment by 800,000 Workers

By Jeffery H. Anderson

THE WEEKLY STANDARD

Feb 10, 2011

Testifying today before the House Budget Committee, Congressional Budget Office (CBO) Director Doug Elmendorf confirmed that Obamacare is expected to reduce the number of jobs in the labor market by an estimated 800,000. Here are excerpts from the exchange:

Chairman [Paul] Ryan: “[I]t’s been argued...that the new health care law will create jobs and increase labor force participation. But if I recall from your analysis, it was quite the opposite. Is that not the case?”

Rep. [John] Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, we’ll -- and Dr. Elmendorf -- and we’ll continue this conversation right now. First on health care, before I get to -- before I get to broader issues, you just mentioned that you believe -- or that in your estimate, that the health care law would reduce the labor used in the economy by about 1/2 of 1 percent, given that, I believe you say, there’s 160 million full-time people working in '20-'21. That means that, in your estimation, the health care law would reduce employment by 800,000 in '20-'21. Is that correct?

Director Elmendorf: Yes. The way I would put it is that we do estimate, as you said, that...employment will be about 160 million by the end of the decade. Half a percent of that is 800,000.

Katie and Andrew,

Attached is a list of potential vendors to fulfill the RFP requirements as set forth in our scope of work. Nicole and I contacted other Planning States and we have included there selected vendors (first two on the list). The other companies listed have talked with Craig Knutson (former OID Chief of State) about providing consultant work.

We have looked into these companies and believe any number of these could fulfill the scope of work requirements.

Respectfully,
Derek & Nicole

Getting to 'Yes'

By James C. Capretta

NRO: The Corner

July 25, 2011

With the collapse of the Boehner-Obama talks, it looks as if something closer to "regular order" in the legislative branch will probably be needed to produce the final deal to raise the debt limit. The House is moving toward taking up a plan drafted by the speaker and his lieutenants, and Senate majority leader Harry Reid is drafting a competing version for his chamber.

This is a good development. Because it's been clear for some time now that President Obama has been the real roadblock.

The president and his advisers wanted to take what looked on its surface like a potential problem for them — the need to raise the debt limit — and turn it into an opportunity. They have had three primary objectives in this fight. First, the president has wanted to force congressional Republicans to agree to a large tax hike. Such a hike would partially mask the government's spending problem for a time (though not permanently), and thus ease the pressure for spending cuts. It would also badly divide the conservative coalition going into an election year. In other words, it would be a real "twofer" for the president and his party and would certainly be trumpeted as such by the mainstream press.

Second, the president has wanted to further advance the Obamacare vision for health care. That has meant no meaningful move toward repeal and replace, and in fact further changes in Medicare and Medicaid that are in the spirit of Obamacare's central-planning philosophy.

The president's third objective has been to reposition himself politically. His first two years in office were dominated by the so-called "stimulus" proposal and Obamacare — efforts that cemented the electorate's perception of him as a big-spending, big-government liberal. Heading into 2012, the president and his advisers desperately want to change his image, especially among independent voters, and they were hoping that a "$4 trillion" deficit-cutting plan would do the trick.

Unfortunately for the president, as the details of his talks with Speaker Boehner have spilled out into the press, it hasn't helped him shed his well-earned reputation as a big spender. The dominant story line that has emerged is that the president has insisted on a $1.2 trillion tax hike to get a deal, and Republicans have said no, especially given the president's insistence that a serious rewrite of the health-care entitlements, including Obamacare, is "off the table." By holding firm, Republicans have — so far — denied the president the ability to shift political blame onto them for the tax hikes he wants to impose on working Americans. Consequently, as matters stand today, the debt-limit talks have only further exposed the president as a big-government liberal.

So Republicans have acquitted themselves remarkably well to date. The question is, what should they do now?

First, House Republicans must realize that, at this stage, they have to pass a credible plan through their chamber. Having rejected the Obama "grand bargain," they need to show the country they are willing to pass a debt-limit increase on reasonable terms to avoid the real, if sometimes exaggerated, risks associated with a debt-limit crisis. The two-step process that Speaker Boehner outlined to his colleagues today looks like it should do the trick in that regard. It would impose discretionary spending caps for a decade, thus producing real restraint on domestic appropriations. The savings — about $1.2 trillion over ten years — would be accompanied by a substantial and immediate increase in the debt limit.

In addition, the Boehner plan would empower a special bipartisan joint committee of House and Senate members to draft further budget-cutting reforms, including entitlement changes. The target would be an additional $1.8 trillion in deficit reduction over ten years. The recommendations of this committee would go to an up-or-down vote in both the House and the Senate, probably sometime in early 2012.

Senator Reid and his Democratic colleagues are objecting to the Boehner plan on the grounds that it would force another debt-limit showdown in 2012, almost certainly with the same disputes about taxes and entitlements. Fair enough. House and Senate Republicans should be open to a reasonable counter-offer from Senator Reid, especially if it is an offer that could actually pass in the Senate.

The details of course matter immensely here. The legislation to raise the debt limit needs to include real spending restraint, not gimmicks or smoke and mirrors. But if the cuts in a Reid counter-offer are real, and if they are of a size to comfortably allow an even larger bump up in the debt limit, Republicans should be open to moving in that direction if doing so would produce a final deal with Senate Democrats.

Because, from a strategic point of view, even a resolution of the kind Reid is pursuing — one giving the president a debt-limit hike into 2013 — would give Republicans all they need from this fight, if they spending cuts are indeed real and not focused on defense. There would be no “grand bargain” for the president, and no “Gang of Six” plan. There would be sizeable, even historic spending cuts, with no accompanying tax increase. There would be no tacit approval of Obamacare. And there would be no political fallout from the unpredictable economic turmoil that could accompany a hiatus in federal borrowing.

It’s true that such a deal would also mean giving up on entitlement reform before 2013. But, given what’s happened over the past two months, it’s obvious that genuine entitlement reform isn’t going to happen with this president in the Oval Office.

Republicans have successfully dodged several bullets to this point. It’s now time for them to see that they are in a good position to close a deal on their terms — and then move on.

FFIS Weekly Update – July 3, 2012

LEGISLATIVE UPDATE

July 3, 2012: Appropriations Continue in the House Last week, the full House passed its version of the fiscal year (FY) 2013 Transportation-Housing and Urban Development (HUD) appropriations bill (H.R. 5972). The House Appropriations Committee also approved its FY 2013 Interior-Environment spending measure last week. FFIS will be releasing a budget brief today examining the latest major developments for states across the FY 2013 appropriations process.

June 29, 2012: President Signs Two-Year Surface Transportation Reauthorization In its first action to provide long-term authorizing legislation for federal transportation programs since the expiration of SAFETEA-LU on September 30, 2009, the House and Senate passed the conference agreement for H.R. 4348 on Friday, which was then signed into law by the president. According to the American Association of State Transportation Officers, this bill authorizes $105 billion for surface transportation programs through FY 2014. The conference agreement provides funding for the federal-aid highway program at current levels with a small inflationary adjustment and focuses on consolidating the number of programs within the federal-aid highway system. Included in the agreement was a five year reauthorization of the National Flood Insurance Program, which extends the program through September 30, 2017. The bill would also extend the current interest rate of 3.4% on subsidized Stafford loans for an additional year. Finally, the conference report also extends the Secure Rural Schools program through FY 2012. Further FFIS analysis of this bill is forthcoming.

June 28, 2012: House Committee Moves Forward on Digital Goods Bill The House Judiciary Committee approved H.R. 1860, the Digital Goods and Services Tax Fairness Act. The bill is designed to provide a framework for state taxation of digital goods and services provided over the internet. States have expressed concern over H.R. 1860, primarily because it fails to grant jurisdictions with the authority to tax in exchange for sourcing rules. The chairman of the committee committed to work with states to modify the bill before it is considered by the full House. More information can be found at: http://judiciary.house.gov/hearings/Markups%202012/mark\_06282012.html

EDUCATION

June 29, 2012: ED Approves NCLB Waivers for Five More States The Department of Education (ED) approved waivers from certain accountability provisions included in No Child Left Behind (NCLB, P.L. 107-110). The five new states receiving waivers are Arkansas, Missouri, South Dakota, Utah, and Virginia. To read ED's announcement, click here: <http://www.ed.gov/news/press-releases/obama-administration-approves-five-more-states-nclb-waivers>

For more information on the waiver process, see Issue Brief 12-23.

June 29, 2012: ED Awards $5.9 Million in HEP and CAMP Grants ED announced more than $5.9 million in grants for nine states under the High School Equivalency Program (HEP) and the College Assistance Migrant Program (CAMP). A complete list of grantees can be found here:

<http://www.ed.gov/news/press-releases/us-department-education-awards-more-59-million-grants-help-migrant-students>

ENERGY

June 27, 2012: DOE Releases Weatherization Incidental Repair Measure Guidance The Department of Energy has provided new guidance on incidental repair measures (IRMs) allowable under the Weatherization Assistance Program (WAP). This guidance follows recent reviews and comments indicating inconsistency in interpretation of DOE policy concerning IRMs. Access the guidance here:

http://waptac.org/data/files/website\_docs/government/guidance/2012/wpn12-09-incident-repair-measure.pdf

A set of frequently asked questions came along with this new guidance:

June 27, 2012: DOE Releases Weatherization Guidance on Returning Interest Earned

DOE has provided new guidance on options for grantees and recipients returning interest earned on advanced federal funds under WAP. Grantees and recipients are required to remit interest earned on advances of federal funds to the government. However, recent WAP financial oversight indicates that grantees and recipients are not returning or not following proper procedures to remit this interest. Access the guidance here:

ENVIRONMENT

July 2, 2012: GAO Releases Report Calling for Greater Oversight of Sec. 319 Nonpoint Source Grant Program The Government Accountability Office (GAO) reports that since 2000, 28% of Sec. 319 Nonpoint Source projects did not achieve all objectives originally identified in the project proposal, while many that did so still faced considerable challenges. About half of these challenges could have been identified and mitigated before projects were proposed and selected for funding, such as gaining access to desired properties. GAO recommends, among other things, that EPA provide Sec. 319 oversight guidance to its regional offices and that USDA analyze data to determine if measures were taken to mitigate water quality impacts in Sec. 319 project areas. ## HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

July 2, 2012: ACF Posts TANF Report to Congress The Administration for Children and Families (ACF) posted to its website the ninth annual report to Congress on the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) program. The report covers a variety of topics including caseloads, TANF expenditures and balance, work participation rates, and performance measures. Click here to access the report:

July 2, 2012: CDC Awards $971 million for Public Health Disaster Preparedness The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), Centers for Disease Control (CDC) awarded more than $971 million in grants under the Hospital Preparedness Program (HPP) and the Public Health Emergency Preparedness (PHEP). Awards were made to all 50 states, eight territories, and Chicago, the District of Columbia, Los Angeles, New York City. HHS's announcement can be found here: <http://www.hhs.gov/news/press/2012pres/06/20120702a.html>

June 29, 2012: HRSA Publishes Designated Health Professional Shortage Areas The Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) published lists of all geographic areas, population groups, and facilities designated as primary medical care, mental health, and dental health professional shortage areas. Many federal programs utilized these designations for funding and eligibility. Click here for more information: <http://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2012-06-29/pdf/2012-15819.pdf>

June 28, 2012: ACF Announces State Systems Interoperability and Integration Project ACF released information about a new competitive funding opportunity for state human service agencies designed to improve interoperability and integration in eligibility and enrollment, business process and workflows, case management, and other related functions across human services information technology systems. ## States May Face Showdown With Feds Over Cutting Medicaid Rolls

KHN Staff Writers, Jan 30, 2011

Financially strapped governors, Congress and the Obama administration could be headed for a showdown over the Medicaid health care program that covers 48 million poor, disabled and elderly people nationwide.

Arizona's governor has already asked for permission to drop people from the joint federal-state program, which states say is eating up huge portions of their budgets. But to do so, they need the green light either from Congress or the Obama administration.

If they don't get one? States warn they may need to slash payments to doctors and hospitals and make deep cuts in other programs such as education. They could even thumb their nose at the law and cut eligibility, which would force the Obama administration to decide whether to cut all federal Medicaid funding to those states.

The new health care law requires states to maintain their Medicaid eligibility levels for adults until 2014, when much of the law kicks in. In the meantime, federal funds that helped most states maintain their Medicaid programs – part of the 2009 stimulus package --comes to an end in June, even as enrollment remains at an all-time high while the nation struggles to recover from the recession.

Republicans in the House generally want to allow states more leeway, but their only hope is to get some members of the Democratic-controlled Senate on board.

Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., who chairs the Senate Finance Committee, said in an interview he is aware that states are under pressure to cut eligibility and that he will "look at" options. Still, he said, any such effort should "find a way to maintain as much coverage as we can."

He and other Democrats, including Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin, chairman of the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee, and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi of California, said they would like to extend the expiring Medicaid aid until 2014.

The odds are against making such a move. Republicans have complained bitterly about the stimulus funding. Now that they control the House, they're stressing the need to narrow the ballooning federal budget deficit.

Arizona, which says its Medicaid spending has gone from 17 percent of its general fund in 2007 to nearly 30 percent this year, recently asked the administration for permission to drop coverage for 280,000 Medicaid recipients. The state argues it's already more generous than most states – it's one of only 7 states that cover childless adults -- and says Medicaid costs are jeopardizing other priorities.

Other states also are likely to seek waivers. "The states are reaching a crisis point fiscally," said Dan Mendelson, CEO of Avalere Health, a consulting firm. Still, allowing states to drop coverage "runs directly counter to the goals" of the Obama administration, he said, adding that it would lead to "an erosion of coverage before the next (presidential) election."

Earlier this month, the National Governors Association and the Republican Governors Association urged congressional leaders to let them downsize their programs. Matt Salo, director of the Health and Human Services Committee at the NGA, said that some governors' staff members are warning congressional offices that, unless they get help, they might have to ignore the law and change their eligibility rules anyway.

If that occurred, the federal government would have to decide whether to stop sending Medicaid money to those states. Even without the extra stimulus aid, the federal government, on average pays 57 percent of the cost of the joint program; in some states it is as much as 75 percent.

The health law – and the stimulus program – both require states to maintain eligibility, just as do other agreements between the states and Congress where matching federal funds are involved. Without such rules, there "isn't a mechanism that the states will use funding the way it is intended by Congress," says Mendelson. "States have taken a lot of federal money over the past couple of years with strings attached and these are the strings."

Under the law, Medicaid will expand sharply in 2014 when 16 million more people are expected to become eligible for the program. The federal government will pick up the full tab for the newcomers for the first three years. By 2020, the federal share ratchets down to 90 percent.

When asked whether he would support loosening the eligibility rules for states, Donald Berwick, the administrator for the federal Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, said that he was sensitive to the states' situation. His solutions, however, were to point states to funding that he said is already available to them, such as subsidies to establish insurance exchanges. Moreover, he added, his agency plans to make recommendations to states on ways to lower costs by improving care. One example is reducing hospital admissions, said Cindy Mann, director of the federal Center for Medicaid and State Operations.

Democrats in Congress have additional ideas, but most have little chance of moving forward because they go against Republican priorities of reducing federal spending and control.

Harkin, for example, said he also plans to look into an idea that has surfaced in the past to turn Medicaid over entirely to the federal government. "Maybe the federal government should take over the whole thing, and in exchange states would do other things," he said.

Mendelson points to another past proposal for the federal government to pick up the nursing home costs for Medicaid enrollees who are also eligible for Medicare, the federal health program for the elderly.

The elderly and disabled account for the majority of Medicaid spending, with a good chunk of that being used for long term care. Medicaid payments represent 40 percent of all nursing home spending, according to the Kaiser Commission on Medicaid and the Uninsured. (KHN and the Kaiser Commission on Medicaid and the Uninsured are both part of the Kaiser Family Foundation.)

While AARP's state policy director JoAnn Lamphere says the idea is "intriguing," it is "a long term policy discussion that not going to save the states right now."

Agenda

- Stakeholder Engagement: the Utah Experience
- What States Face in the Wake of PPACA
- Exchanges: A Look at State Actions
- Takeaways & Lessons Learned

The Utah Health Exchange

- Governance
  - Operates within the Governor's Office of Economic Development (GOED)
- Structure
  - Market organizer; not a selective contractor
- Purpose
  - On-line comparison, application, enrollment, and premium aggregation
  - Standardizes plan information; not the plans themselves
  - Facilitates the Utah Defined Contribution Market
    - Small Group
      - Limited Launch, August 2009
      - Full launch, September 2010

Similarities

Massachusetts

- State-based solution designed to be responsive to state-specific issues, customs, business practices, etc.
- Consumer-centered approach
- Achieved broad, bipartisan consensus supporting the basic reform elements

Utah

- State-based solution designed to be responsive to state-specific issues, customs, business practices, etc.
- Consumer-centered approach
- Achieved broad, bipartisan consensus supporting the basic reform elements

Differences (I)

Massachusetts

- Individual mandate
- Employer mandate
- Government role is contracting agent
- Established Massachusetts Connector Authority with broad regulatory responsibilities
- Efforts began in individual market
- Acted first on public sector reforms; now rolling out private insurance market reforms

Utah

- No individual mandate
- No employer mandate
- Government role is market facilitator
- Regulatory authority strictly limited to establishment of electronic data standards
- Efforts began in small group market
- Began by implementing private market reforms first; public sector reforms to follow

Differences (II)

Massachusetts

- No risk adjustment mechanism included
- Upfront appropriation of $25 million; ongoing funding through retention of a portion of premium
- Staff of approximately 45 employees

Utah

- Risk adjustment mechanism established to deal with adverse selection issues
- Upfront appropriation of $600,000; ongoing funding through annual appropriation and technology fees; self-sustaining threshold
- Staff of 3 employees

Utah Health Exchange Status Report

- 100% employer renewal rate from Limited Launch
- Average 42% growth rate every month since full launch
- 130 employers currently participating
- 20% of employers currently participating previously offered no coverage
- 24% of the business groups participating in the Exchange previously offered coverage with an insurance carrier not participating in the exchange
- 92% of the businesses participating in the Exchange use a broker
- ~3500 covered lives

Stakeholder Engagement

2. How will the Exchange be governed?
3. How will the Exchange be structured?
4. What functions will the exchange perform?
5. What implementation time line will the state follow?

Exchange Capabilities and Services Fall Into Three Categories

- Core Functions—essential to select and enroll in a plan
- Ancillary Functions—non-core, non-mandated capabilities
- Mandated Functions—required to satisfy PPACA

Takeaways

- Most states will initiate efforts to build an exchange, though largely on their own terms
- Exchanges will be used as tools to reform Medicaid
- Fully functioning, PPACA compliant exchanges by 2014 is questionable

Lessons Learned

1. Support and cooperation within and across state government is key
2. Define your vision; begin with the end in mind
3. Identify specific problems to be addressed
4. Demography is destiny
5. Develop a general timeline; include aggressive but reasonable deadlines
6. Implement in phases
7. Leverage existing resources
8. Commit to systemic change
9. Engage stakeholders early and often and in a cooperative dynamic
10. Measure and report progress on a regular basis

HHS and USDA Announce New Flexibilities to Aid in Eligibility Determinations

Yesterday, the Departments of Health and Human Services (HHS) and Agriculture (USDA) announced new flexibilities for states to integrate eligibility determination systems for health and human services programs. As states develop new systems required to operate health insurance exchanges and implement other aspects of the Affordable Care Act by January 2014, they are encouraged to pursue an integrated eligibility system strategy that would allow other human services programs to be included at a later date. In a letter to states, HHS and USDA indicated that states may receive a time-limited exemption from federal cost allocation requirements to allow programs such as Temporary Assistance for Needy Families and the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program to utilize systems developed specifically for determining an individual's eligibility for health programs without sharing in the common system development costs. The exception will expire on December 31, 2015.

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR
ATLANTA 30334-0900

Nathan Deal
GOVERNOR

February 28, 2011

The Honorable Phil Gingrey
U.S. House of Representatives
442 Cannon House Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Congressman Gingrey:

I am writing with regard to the Maintenance of Effort (MOE) requirement with respect to Georgia's Medicaid program and the significant challenge that this federal requirement is placing on the state of Georgia.

At a time when governors across the country are struggling to balance their budgets, the federal government is insisting on tying our hands as it relates to management of one of our state's most costly programs. State and federal governments must work together to remedy this situation; Secretary Sebelius, the Congress and President Obama should remove Maintenance of Effort requirements currently in place. Ensuring our ability to provide healthcare services to our most vulnerable population in the state of Georgia requires flexibility, and that is not provided under current law.

As a result of current MOE requirements, my SFY 2012 Budget Recommendation includes a reduction in Medicaid provider reimbursement of 1% and the elimination of coverage of "optional" benefits, including adult dental, vision and podiatry coverage. Additionally, my recommendation increases member co-pay amounts for covered services to the allowable nominal amount as a result of the limited options under current law. These very difficult decisions stem from austere budget times and stringent federal regulations. Provision of flexibility in our Medicaid program would significantly improve the budgetary landscape and would help us avoid these cuts in service.

As Governor, I call upon members of the Georgia Delegation, the Energy and Commerce Committee, the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services and the President to remove the deleterious MOE requirements on Georgia's Medicaid program that are hampering our ability to manage the program effectively.

As the former Chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee's Subcommittee on Health, I look forward to the opportunity to testify on the challenges my state faces with management of our Medicaid program.

Respectfully,

THE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE

INTERNAL MEMORANDUM

March 29, 2011

To: Subcommittee on Health

From: Majority Staff

Re: Subcommittee Markup on March 31, 2011

On March 31, 2011, at 10:00 a.m. the Energy and Commerce Committee Subcommittee on Health will meet in open markup session to consider five pieces of legislation that would repeal mandatory spending created under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA). The five bills are as follows:

1. H.R. 1217, a bill to repeal the Prevention and Public Health Fund.

The Prevention and Public Health Fund, Section 4002 of PPACA, is a $17.75 billion account (FY12-FY21) administered by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) to provide for “expanded and sustained national investment in prevention and public health programs to improve health and help restrain the rate of growth in private and public sector health care costs.” The Secretary has full authority to spend funds in this account on any program or activity under the Public Health Service Act the Department chooses.

Section 4002 appropriates $1 billion for FY 2012; $1.25 billion for FY 2013; $1.5 billion for FY 2014; $2 billion for FY 2015 and each fiscal year thereafter. The proposed legislation would repeal Section 4002 and rescind any unobligated funds.

It is important to note that eliminating this fund does not cut any specific program. The fund was designed to provide the Secretary funds to spend at her discretion above whatever spending amount Congress appropriates. The House-passed health reform bill in the last Congress, H.R. 3962, did create a public health trust fund at a cost of $34 billion over 10 years. However, this fund would have been subject to Congress appropriating the funds.

2. H.R. 1216, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to convert funding for graduate medical education in qualified teaching health centers from direct appropriations to an authorization.

Section 5508 of PPACA authorizes the Secretary to award grants to establish new accredited or expanded primary care residency programs in teaching health centers. PPACA appropriates $230 million for these activities for the period of fiscal years 2011 through 2015. The proposed legislation would convert the mandatory appropriation into an authorization subject to the annual appropriations process. The legislation would also rescind any unobligated funds.

In her testimony before the Committee, the HHS Secretary stated that the President's FY 2012 budget eliminates duplication. Specifically, she cites eliminating spending on Children's Hospitals Graduate Medical Education. While the President's budget proposed eliminating discretionary funding for training at children's hospitals, PPACA provides a $230 million direct appropriation for medical education at teaching health centers. The legislation converts the mandatory appropriation given to teaching health centers into an authorization so Congress can evaluate the relative value of medical education programs and fund them accordingly.

3. H.R. 1215, a bill to amend title V of the Social Security Act to convert funding for personal responsibility education programs from direct appropriations to an authorization of appropriations.

Section 2953 of PPACA establishes state grants for personal responsibility education programs to educate adolescents about adulthood preparation, including education regarding financial literacy, goal-setting, stress management, contraception use, and development of health attitudes regarding body image. Section 2953 appropriates $75 million for each of fiscal years 2010 through 2014. The discussion draft would convert the appropriation into an authorization so Congress can determine funding through the normal appropriations process. The legislation would also rescind any unobligated funds.

This provision appears to duplicate existing government programs. For example, the Effective Teaching and Learning for a Well-Rounded Education program provides funding for financial literacy education (the President's FY 2012 Budget requests $246 million for the program).

4. H.R. 1214, a bill to repeal mandatory funding for school-based health center construction.

Section 4101(a) of PPACA authorizes the Secretary to award grants to support the construction of school-based health centers. PPACA provided $200 million in direct appropriations for the period of FY2010-FY2013. The proposed legislation would eliminate this subsection and rescind any unobligated funds.

It is important to note the funds made available under 4101(a) are limited to expenditures for facilities and there is an express prohibition on using the funds for personnel or to provide health services. $1.5 billion was also made available to community health centers in the 2009 stimulus bill for construction, renovation, and equipment, for which school-based health centers were also eligible.

Section 4101(b) of PPACA also created a grant program for school based health centers to provide health care services. This grant program is subject to annual appropriations. The President's budget did not request funds for this grant program. H.R. 3962 from last Congress did have a discretionary grant program for school based health centers similar to section 4101(b) of PPACA but it did not include the mandatory spending grant program for construction of school based health centers.

5. H.R. 1213, a bill to repeal mandatory funding provided to States in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to establish American Health Benefit Exchanges.

Section 1311(a) of PPACA provides the Secretary of HHS a direct appropriation of such sums as necessary for grants to states to facilitate the purchase of qualified health plans in newly created Exchanges. The size of the direct appropriation is solely determined by the Secretary. The Secretary can determine the amount of spending and spend the funds without further Congressional action. The proposed legislation would strike the unlimited direct appropriation and rescind any unobligated funds.

Section 1311(a) funds could be used by states for activities related to developing state insurance exchanges which could include hiring and retaining hundreds of employees to establish their state Exchanges, such as brokers, advertisers, and customer service agents. Grants under this language can be used to “facilitate enrollment” into exchange plans. However, this term is undefined in the statute and could allow the funds to go towards any activity the Secretary determines could “facilitate” enrollment.

In a January 31, 2011, article by Kaiser Health News detailing state budget issues related to Medicaid, an official at the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) pointed to funds available to states under Section 1311(a) as a “solution” to state budget deficits and mitigate the burden of new federal Medicaid requirements.

FFIS Weekly Update – March 6, 2012

LEGISLATIVE UPDATE

March 6, 2012: House and Senate Continue Surface Transportation Reauthorization Work The current surface transportation authorization expires March 31, 2012. Congressional leadership has begun to discuss the idea of another short-term authorization, since long-term reauthorization attempts have been stalled. House leadership has announced that an 18-month reauthorization bill would now provide a fallback option if the House is unable to approve H.R. 7, a five-year reauthorization proposal. The House is scheduled to resume consideration of that bill today. Senate leadership is also likely to meet today to discuss strategy on moving forward with their two-year surface transportation reauthorization proposal. That proposal is now available in its entirety here.

February 28, 2012: House Repeals Higher Education Regulations The House passed the Protecting Academic Freedom in Higher Education Act (H.R. 2117), which repeals two higher education regulations set forth by the Department of Education (ED) last year. Specifically, the bill repeals the federal definition of a credit hour and ends the federal requirement that colleges comply with state authorization laws in every state in which they operate. Legislative text of H.R. 2117 can be found here: <http://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/BILLS-112hr2117rfs/pdf/BILLS-112hr2117rfs.pdf>

February 28, 2012: House Committee Approves Final ESEA Reauthorization Bills The House Committee on Education and the Workforce approved the final two bills aimed at reauthorizing the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA; P.L. 107-110). The Student Success Act (H.R. 3989) and the Encouraging Innovation and Effective Teachers Act (H.R. 3990) would reauthorize and make changes to Title I funding, accountability standards, and the teacher quality provisions of ESEA. While drafts of both bills were released earlier this year, the committee approved an amendment during the markup process reducing the number of staff employees at ED. For more information on both of these bills, click here: <http://edworkforce.house.gov/News/DocumentSingle.aspx?DocumentID=282370>

GENERAL

February 29, 2012: OMB Seeks Comment on Cost Principles and Administrative Requirements Reforms The Office of Management and Budget (OMB) published an advanced notice of proposed guidance in the Federal Register on its reform ideas to standardize information collection across agencies, adopt a risk-based model for single audits, and provide new administrative approaches for determining and monitoring the allocation of federal funds. More information on the reforms are available at: <http://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2012-02-28/pdf/2012-4521.pdf>

February 28, 2012: GAO Releases 2012 Annual Report on Federal Program Duplication, Overlap, Fragmentation The Government Accountability Office (GAO) released its second annual report to Congress identifying federal programs, agencies, offices, and initiatives, either within departments or government-wide, which have duplicative goals or activities. This annual report for 2012 presents 51 areas where programs may be able to achieve greater efficiencies or become more effective in providing government services. The full report can be found here: <http://www.gao.gov/products/GAO-12-342SP#mt=summary>

AGRICULTURE

March 2, 2012: USDA Announces Awards to 18 States for More Kids in the Woods Grants The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) announced over $1 million in grants to 18 states for the More Kids in the Woods grants, which will help fund programs to enhance children's outdoor programs. USDA's announcement can be accessed here: <http://tinyurl.com/6tc6ghc>

EDUCATION

March 2, 2012: ED Extends Deadline for Upward Bound (UB) FY 2012 Applications ED is extending the deadline and accepting amended applications for the FY 2012 UB competition. ED is providing an extension due to an error contained in the department's materials outlining the competitive preference priorities. Healthcare Advisors and Action Officers:

The governors had a productive call this morning. We will recap today at 5 PM EDT.

Attached you will find

- 1) A list of Tax Provisions in PPACA- (requested by the governors)
- 2) A list of our current "Cost to States" for the Medicaid expansion- please make sure your analysis is still current to continue using in your remarks(requested by the governors)
- 3) A list of "unanswered questions" to be included in a letter to the President. Please take a look at this list and be prepared to comment/provided edits and additions. Some of you have already notified us of your governor's additions.

We look forward to chatting at 5 PM EDT. A great way to kick off your fourth of July holiday.....:)

Best,
Marie

Healthcare Advisors and Action Officers:

Before we head into a holiday, we'd like to host a call today, Tuesday at 5 PM EDT to recap the governors-only call today and talk about states decisions heading into next week. Please join us for a brief call at 5 PM to discuss moving parts. If you are unable to join, please feel free to follow up with us at another time this afternoon.

As the Action Officers heard yesterday, the governors will consider writing a letter to the President asking a host of questions regarding unanswered questions for PPACA post SCOTUS decision. Everything from exchanges to MOE to Medicaid to financing mechanisms.

If they decide to head down that trail, we'll work with all of you on content. As an FYI, NGA wrote the Secretary last week. Attached is their letter.

We'll be providing you more communication materials for next week as many of you head into NGA in Williamsburg.

Please don't hesitate to call us if you have ideas/questions/ suggestions.

Best,
Marie

Good morning,

Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman Fred Upton and RGA Chairman Virginia Governor Bob McDonnell have an op-ed in Investor's Business Daily today arguing that ObamaCare's uncertainty cripples states and providers. Please see the link and article below.

ObamaCare's Uncertainty Cripples States And Providers

By GOV. BOB MCCONNELL AND REP. FRED UPTON
Posted 10/17/2012 06:49 PM ET

Without repeal or delay, the full implementation of ObamaCare is now less than 15 months away. Yet citizens and policymakers face a mounting level of questions, fears and frustrations.

Unfortunately, the administration's continuing silence on its plans leaves patients, states and Congress with more anxiety than answers and taxpayers on the hook for it all

In June, the Supreme Court held as unconstitutional ObamaCare's mandatory expansion of Medicaid. That decision brought some relief to states concerned about this unprecedented expansion of the program at a time when they are already struggling to sustain their current Medicaid rosters.

Yet with relief came more uncertainty regarding the administration's alternative plans to implement key components of the president's health care law.

In July, more than half of the nation's governors sent a letter to Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius requesting information from the department on its plans to implement the now-optional Medicaid expansions and health insurance exchanges nationwide.

Rather than collaborating with states on their important questions, the secretary left these serious and substantive questions generally unaddressed and unanswered.

In a follow-up letter to Sebelius, the governors expressed disappointment with the Obama administration's unwillingness to work together, noting, "With the challenging and detailed work ahead for our nation to address the issues of health care, the letter

(from HHS) was wholly inadequate."

A similar letter requesting greater certainty from HHS was also sent by the National Association of Medicaid Directors — a bipartisan group representing all 50 states. It also went unanswered.

Unfortunately, silence and lack of certainty are not just isolated to state requests. The department's tactic of dodging questions and delaying responses has also been applied to congressional oversight letters seeking greater clarity from this administration.

In August, the House Energy and Commerce Committee sent a letter to Sebelius pressing for a response to the states' urgent request for information, noting, "While it seems the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services intends to delay any major announcements until after November, states do not have the luxury of procrastination."

Dodges and delays are not prescriptions for improving health care; they don't help citizens and policymakers seeking to better understand ObamaCare's real impact and its true costs.

The administration may want to continue to play politics by hiding the ball until after November when it comes to these official information requests, but taxpayers deserve answers. The regulatory uncertainty has crippled states and health providers in their ability to plan.

These issues are neither simple nor inexpensive. According to the Congressional Budget Office, a nationwide expansion of Medicaid could cost more than $900 billion over the next decade, contributing to the $5 trillion in federal Medicaid spending over the same time period. Most shocking is that if ObamaCare is fully implemented, more than one in four Americans could become Medicaid enrollees and millions more could be forced into coverage through a federal or state exchange.

Americans are tired of Washington spending money it doesn't have and equally frustrated with a federal government so big it can't find its way out of the regulatory maze it created. They, and we, see the irony in this administration consistently touting its commitment to transparency.

In fact, Obama has said, "My administration is committed to creating an unprecedented level of openness in government. We will work together to ensure the public trust and establish a system of transparency, public participation and collaboration."

The silence coming from his administration over the last several months doesn't match that stated goal.

The American people and policymakers charged with implementing the law need more than gauzy promises and feel-good rhetoric. And they certainly deserve better than a stiff arm when it comes to clarifying informational requests. We need information.

The governors, Congress and health professionals are fulfilling their duties by attempting to gain clear answers to serious questions about a complicated public policy that will have a direct impact on the citizens. The administration needs to provide those answers. Detaining details in Washington for the next several months may serve political interests, but it's an indulgence policymakers and citizens cannot afford.

- McDonnell is governor of Virginia and chairman of the Republican Governors Association. Upton, R-Mich., is chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

All:

As a reminder, attached is a letter Senator Hatch and Chairman Upton sent to the Administration in July regarding their "blended rate" proposal. The letter remains unanswered but the "blended rate" issue still poses a threat to states' Medicaid funding. Highlights from the Press Release are pasted below and the full text can be found here.

Additionally, here is a link to an analysis by Drew Gonshorowski at the Heritage Foundation on how implementing the Medicaid expansions could be even more costly to states that they realize. Gonshorowski notes that the President's "blended rate" proposal, "is an average of a state's current Medicaid match, its enhanced match rate for the Children's Health Insurance Program, and the expansion match rate. The result of this scheme is a drastic reduction in federal spending at the expense of the states."

As always, please let us know if you have any questions, comments, or concerns.

All the best,

Hatch, Upton Echo Governors' Concerns About Unreliable Funding for Medicaid Expansion

Leaders Push Obama Administration to Explain Impact of "Blended Federal Medicaid Rate"
WASHINGTON — Senate Finance Committee Ranking Member Orrin Hatch (R-UT) and House Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman Fred Upton (R-MI) today echoed the recent concerns expressed by governors across the nation about the uncertain future of Medicaid funding and pressed Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius to outline all legislative and policy specifications on the president's Medicaid "blended rate" proposal.

In the letter to Sebelius, Hatch and Upton wrote, "Under the Obama administration, the federal debt has reached an all-time high of nearly $16 trillion – levels that when considered as a percentage of our total economic output clearly hurt economic growth and stability. With the Medicaid program expected to contribute to that debt by more than $5 trillion over the next 10 years – not to mention trillions more in taxpayer spending at the state level - it is understandable that governors are concerned about the federal government's ability to maintain its commitment to such a high federal match for the long term.

As one governor recently noted: 'This is just another government program where the federal government will run out of money and they'll put it on the states again.'

Hatch and Upton have expressed concern in the past about the Medicaid expansion and its implications for both federal and state budgets. While the program was enacted with a promise that the federal government would pick up much of the added cost of adding millions more Americans to the Medicaid rolls, their letter explains why more of these costs may eventually be passed along to the states. In either case, such an expansion is projected to cost over a trillion dollars and further exacerbate the fiscal strain on the program.

The House and Senate leaders continued, "The president's FY2013 Budget proposal reinforces those concerns from the governors. In his FY2013 Budget plan, the president outlined a provision that would ultimately decrease the federal match for the newly eligible Medicaid beneficiaries. The president calls for the application of a single blended rate to Medicaid and CHIP that would save nearly $18 billion over 10 years. A similar policy was included in the president's deficit reduction recommendations in 2011, which called for up to $100 billion in federal Medicaid savings over 10 years.

"As you know, a blended federal Medicaid rate that reduces Medicaid spending over time is a policy that would reduce federal funding to states through a reduced federal match, notably a reduction to the enhanced match to States for the newly eligible Medicaid beneficiaries. This policy could have a dramatic effect on how much a Medicaid expansion could cost state governments after 2014. We believe the administration should release all the legislative and policy specifications for its blended rate proposal as governors and State legislatures prepare to make a decision on whether or not to implement the largest expansion of Medicaid in history."

Medicaid expansion a tough sell to governors of both parties

By N.C. Aizenman and Karen Tumulty, Thursday, July 12, 8:12 AM

While the resistance of Republican governors has dominated the debate over the health-care law in the wake of last month's Supreme Court decision to uphold it, a number of Democratic governors are also quietly voicing concerns about a key provision to expand coverage.

At least seven Democratic governors have been noncommittal about their willingness to go along with expanding their Medicaid programs, the chief means by which the law would extend coverage to millions of Americans with incomes below or near the poverty line.

"Unlike the federal government, Montana can't just print money," Gov. Brian Schweitzer (D) said in a statement Wednesday. "We have a budget surplus, and we're going to keep it that way."

The law would add an estimated 84,000 people to Montana's Medicaid program, doubling its size, the governor said. Although the federal government would pay the vast majority of the additional costs, Montana's health and human services department estimates the state's share would reach $71 million in 2019. Outside groups say the costs would be far lower than that.

The range of state leaders expressing unease suggests that implementing the law could be rough going, with divisions not always breaking along party lines. The topic is likely to factor prominently in this week's meeting of the National Governors Association in Williamsburg, Va. And it has been fueled by a long list of unanswered questions about the choice now before states.

In particular, it is unclear how the court's pronouncement that states cannot be penalized for refusing to adopt the law's more generous eligibility standards for Medicaid in 2014 changes the rules governing the expansion.

Will states that opt in have the option of scaling back in future years? If a state that opts out decides it wants to participate at some later point, will the federal government still pay nearly the full cost of covering those who become newly eligible for Medicaid? And can a state participate only partially — for instance, by raising the income cutoff for its program to a level lower than the ceiling envisioned in the law, which is set at 133 percent of the federal poverty line?

Asked at a forum Wednesday to describe state reactions to the Supreme Court ruling, Dan Crippen, executive director of the National Governors Association, offered a one word reply: "confusion."

The association was one of several — along with the Republican Governors Association and the National Association of Medicaid Directors (NAMD) — to send a letter to Secretary of Health and Human Services Kathleen Sebelius this week with a voluminous list of queries.

"The answers to these questions are key," said NAMD Director Matt Salo. "States need to be making these decisions now, and it's hard to make them if you don't have clarity."

At least one governor, Mike Beebe (D) of Arkansas, has also tried contacting the Obama administration directly.

According to spokesman Matt DeCample, Beebe is "leaning toward" the Medicaid expansion, which he said would add between 200,000 and 250,000 Arkansans to the Medicaid rolls in a state whose population is around 3 million. Not only would it bring a significant injection of federal funds to the state, but it would be a boon to Arkansas hospitals, which are currently treating many poor people for free.

However, DeCample said, the governor has concerns that there be "state flexibility down the line." So last week, Beebe asked officials at the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid whether, in the event of an unforeseen future fiscal calamity, Arkansas would be able to tighten its eligibility rules and still get the full federal match for those who continued to qualify for its Medicaid program.

To date, Beebe has received no answer.

In a letter to the governors Tuesday, Sebelius assured them, "I appreciate that states have questions."

However, she offered little in the way of specific guidance, promising instead to address their concerns at a series of meetings scheduled in various cities across the country beginning July 31.

Wisconsin's secretary of health services, Dennis G. Smith, was skeptical. "I don't think we'll have answers any time soon," said Smith, who directed federal Medicaid operations under President George W. Bush and was appointed to his current post by Republican Gov. Scott Walker, a vocal critic of the health-care law.

"People [in the Obama administration] are putting a brave face on all of this. But they have a mess on their hands."

Smith predicted that many states will ultimately interpret the rules in ways that conflict with the administration's position.

"I suspect that judges are going to be hearing a lot of new cases as a result of this ruling," he said. "I see legal challenges in the future."

The earliest could be brought by the state of Maine.

Last spring, Maine's legislature voted to eliminate Medicaid coverage for about 21,000 state residents. At the time, this unquestionably required the governor to seek a federal waiver from a “maintenance-of-effort” requirement in the health-care law that bars states from tightening their eligibility rules for Medicaid before 2014.

The Obama administration has signaled that it considers the maintenance-of-effort provision separate from the law’s expansion of Medicaid and therefore untouched by the Supreme Court’s ruling.

However, Adrienne Bennett, a spokeswoman for Maine Gov. Paul LePage (R), said the state attorney general has determined that the court’s ruling means Maine is no longer bound by the maintenance-of-effort mandate.

Bennett said that within a few weeks, the governor will file what effectively amounts to a pro-forma notice informing the Obama administration of Maine’s plan to alter its Medicaid program.

And if Obama officials object?

“The governor has indicated that he is willing to proceed with legal action,” she said.

Reminder: The NGA Center for Best Practices is hosting a meeting on exchanges September 8-9 in Arlington, Virginia. Below please find the original invitation that was sent to all offices as well as a draft agenda. If you are interested in attending, please register as soon as possible via the link highlighted below. If you have any questions regarding meeting registration or the agenda, please contact Maria Schiff at mschiff@nga.org or (202)624-5395.

Please also mark your calendars for an HHS Committee meeting next Wednesday, August 24 at 3:00 pm EST in the governors room to discuss the latest proposed rules on health insurance exchanges. Call-in information: [REDACTED]; passcode [REDACTED]

*****

The National Governors Association Center for Best Practices is pleased to invite each governor to send a state team to a workshop entitled: "Health Insurance Exchange Implementation: Timelines, State Options and Federal Regulations." This workshop is designed to offer state teams the opportunity to discuss issues related to the various paths forward envisioned by the statute and recently-issued HHS proposed regulations regarding Exchanges.

The workshop will cover the timelines and state obligations under the different Exchange models. A substantial portion of the workshop will be reserved for state-only discussions. Topics will include Medicaid integration, Exchange operations, risk mitigation and financial issues. Each topic will be introduced by a subject matter expert, followed by small group discussions among similarly situated states.

Additional details can be found in the attached agenda. At the end of the meeting, states will have the opportunity to speak to and hear from representatives from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

This meeting will be held in Arlington, Virginia. On-site registration begins at 8:00 AM on Thursday, September 8, 2011. The meeting will conclude at 3:00 PM on Friday, September 9, 2011. The NGA Center will reimburse up to two people from each state for travel and lodging expenses. The state may send up to two additional people at state expense (there is no meeting registration fee). HHS has indicated that Exchange Planning Grant funding can be used toward travel for state-funded participants.

The NGA Center will reimburse you for your airfare, hotel, and some other travel related costs. Please note, NGA has strict travel guidelines requiring pre-approved waivers for any exceptions. Please review the guidelines when you register, and if you are traveling under circumstances outside of the norm (to and from different location, different travel dates, etc), please contact Leslie Donaldson, ldonaldson@nga.org, for prior approval.

Subject: Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act: Health Insurance Exchange Planning and Establishment Grants

---

Health Insurance Exchanges

ACA requires health insurance exchanges to be established in every state by January 1, 2014, either by the state itself or by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS).<sup>2</sup> ACA provides general direction regarding the establishment and administration of health insurance exchanges and directs federal agencies, particularly HHS, to promulgate regulations that provide further guidance. For example, section 1321 requires the HHS Secretary to promulgate regulations relating to the establishment and operation of exchanges, the offering of health insurance plans through an exchange, the establishment of programs created by the ACA to mitigate risk in the exchanges, and any other requirements the HHS Secretary deems appropriate. Recently, federal agencies have promulgated a number of final regulations related to exchanges (see Table 1).

<sup>1</sup> ACA was signed into law on March 23, 2010 (P.L. 111-148, 124 Stat. 119). A week later, on March 30, 2010, the President signed the Health Care and Education Reconciliation Act (HCERA; P.L. 111-152, 124 Stat. 1029), which amended multiple health care and revenue provisions in ACA. Several other bills that were subsequently enacted during the 111th and 112th Congresses made more targeted changes to specific ACA provisions. All references to ACA in this memorandum refer to the law as amended.

Health Insurance Exchange Grants

Section 1311 of ACA appropriated indefinite (i.e., unspecified) amounts for planning and establishment grants for health insurance exchanges, which must be operational by the beginning of 2014. For each fiscal year, the HHS Secretary is to determine the total amount that will be made available to each state for exchange grants. However, no grant may be awarded after January 1, 2015. As summarized in Table 3, HHS has awarded the following three types of exchange grants.

Exchange Planning Grants

Exchange planning grants were given to 49 states, the District of Columbia, and four territories.<sup>3</sup> These grants of up to $1 million each were intended to provide resources to states to help them plan their health insurance exchanges. Three states have returned all (Florida and Louisiana) or a portion (New Hampshire) of their exchange planning grants (see Table 3).

Exchange Establishment Grants

There are two levels of exchange establishment grants. Level one establishment grants provide up to one year of funding to states that have made some progress under their exchange planning grants. States may seek an additional year of level one funding in order to meet the criteria necessary to apply for level two funds. Level two establishment grants are designed to provide funding through December 31, 2014, to states that are farther along in the establishment of an exchange. States applying for level two establishment grants must meet specific eligibility criteria regarding the structure and governance of the exchange they are developing. There are a series of deadlines through 2011 and 2012 for applying for the level one and level two exchange establishment grants.

HHS has announced four rounds of exchange establishment grant awards, the most recent of which was on May 16, 2012.<sup>4</sup> To date, 34 states and DC have received a total of $856 million in exchange establishment grant funding. Within that group, two states—Rhode Island and Washington—have received both level one and level two funds (see Table 3).

Early Innovator Grants

On February 16, 2011, HHS announced that it was awarding seven grants to help a group of “early innovator” states design and implement the information technology (IT) infrastructure needed to operate health insurance exchanges.<sup>5</sup> The goal is for these states to develop exchange IT models that can be adopted and implemented by other states. Six states and a consortium of New England states received a total of $249 million in early innovator grant funding. Three states—Kansas, Oklahoma, and Wisconsin—have since returned their early innovator grants (see Table 3).

Subject: Messaging re GOVERNORS' EFFORTS TO REIN IN UNIONS AT THE STATE LEVEL

MESSAGING REGARDING GOVERNORS' EFFORTS TO REIN IN UNIONS AT THE STATE LEVEL

The President calls it an "assault on unions" when governors like Scott Walker seek to reduce collective bargaining rights, but if that's so, the President is himself presiding over such an "assault" on unions at the federal level. The almost two million civilian federal employees do not get to bargain collectively over wages, retirement benefits, or medical benefits -- the terms of employment about which workers care the most. For example, the President's recent unilateral decision to freeze the pay of federal employees shows how little bargaining power they have.

The federal government is also a "right to work" zone. No federal employee is required to join or pay dues to a union, even if that union has been elected by his co-workers as their legal representative to management.

During the health care debate, the President, union bosses and other proponents of ObamaCare often argued that all Americans should have the sort of health care that federal employees enjoy. If the treatment of federal employees is to be the gold standard for how other American workers should be treated, then the President and union bosses should not complain that state governments want to treat their workers as federal workers are treated when it comes to collective bargaining. Nor should they complain when elected leaders want to give employees the freedom to choose whether they want to join a union and pay union dues.

Follow up from this AM:

Leader McConnell Rep:

First, we welcome Brandi White from Leader McConnell's office while Lanier is out for a while. Lanier, we will miss you but welcome Brandi. If you need to get in touch with Brandi, her email is Brandi\_White@McConnell.senate.gov.

Energy letter:

Energy letter forthcoming to the entire group. Please watch your email as we are cleaning up edits right now. Goal would be to complete signatures from the entire caucus by COB WED. We are working on a separate nuclear energy graph we will dual track for your approval to insert.

Healthcare strategy:

1 Year Anniversary for PPACA is next week. We are working on plans. If you have ideas or know your boss would like to do something/ is planning to do something, please let us know. Please begin compiling information/data/ stats which would be good to use in a press release or op-ed. We'll have another mtg/conference call mid week to discuss our strategy. This will not be a command performance, rather useful for those of you interested. Watch for email on this mtg.

Press:

As noted in the mtg, we are beefing up our RGPPC services to you via our new Policy and Press emails and a website we are creating. In order to better serve you by sending you regular updates about best practices in the states, please add Lindsey and Seth to your press releases where appropriate. Please also send Lindsey, Seth and I any white papers, policy initiatives or data you think would be useful for other governors to see-- and learn from you.

Subject: Mitt Romney's Health Care plan
Date: Wednesday, June 20, 2012 4:42:00 PM

Good afternoon,

Per our staff only discussion in today's meeting in Scottsdale, please see below for Mitt Romney's current Health Care plan.

<http://www.mittromney.com/issues/health-care>

Mitt's Plan

On his first day in office, Mitt Romney will issue an executive order that paves the way for the federal government to issue Obamacare waivers to all fifty states. He will then work with Congress to repeal the full legislation as quickly as possible.

In place of Obamacare, Mitt will pursue policies that give each state the power to craft a health care reform plan that is best for its own citizens. The federal government's role will be to help markets work by creating a level playing field for competition.

Restore State Leadership and Flexibility

Mitt will begin by returning states to their proper place in charge of regulating local insurance markets and caring for the poor, uninsured, and chronically ill. States will have both the incentive and the flexibility to experiment, learn from one another, and craft the approaches best suited to their own citizens.

- Block grant Medicaid and other payments to states
- Limit federal standards and requirements on both private insurance and Medicaid coverage
- Ensure flexibility to help the uninsured, including public-private partnerships, exchanges, and subsidies
- Ensure flexibility to help the chronically ill, including high-risk pools, reinsurance, and risk adjustment
- Offer innovation grants to explore non-litigation alternatives to dispute resolution

Promote Free Markets and Fair Competition

Competition drives improvements in efficiency and effectiveness, offering consumers higher quality goods and services at lower cost. It can have the same effect in the health care system, if given the chance to work.

- Cap non-economic damages in medical malpractice lawsuits
- Empower individuals and small businesses to form purchasing pools
- Prevent discrimination against individuals with pre-existing conditions who maintain continuous coverage
- Facilitate IT interoperability

Empower Consumer Choice

For markets to work, consumers must have the information and the power to make decisions about their own care. Placing the patient at the center of the process will drive quality up and cost down while ensuring that services are designed to provide what Americans actually want.

- End tax discrimination against the individual purchase of insurance
- Allow consumers to purchase insurance across state lines
- Unshackle HSAs by allowing funds to be used for insurance premiums
- Promote "co-insurance" products
- Promote alternatives to "fee for service"
- Encourage "Consumer Reports"-type ratings of alternative insurance plans

Two cheers for Boehner's two-step plan

James Pethokoukis

<http://blogs.reuters.com/james-pethokoukis/2011/07/26/two-cheers-for-boehners-two-step-plan/>

July 26, 2011 10:26 EDT

Now is not time to let the perfect be the enemy of the good. Neither the Reid budget plan nor the Boehner budget plan packs the fiscal wallop of Cut, Cap and Balance. But significant progress on cutting debt can still be made before the Aug. 2 (or is it Aug. 8 or 10 or ...) debt ceiling deadline. And by that measure, the Boehner plan is not only far better than the Reid plan, it is a pretty darn good plan in and of itself. While both plans would cut some $1.2 trillion in discretionary spending over a decade, Reid would then close up shop until 2013. The only other major cuts would be to future defense spending that no one really expects to happen.

I can't believe S&P and Moody's would find the Reid plan a compelling reason to keep the U.S. debt rating at AAA. While it is better than not cutting spending at all — as President Obama originally intended — and doesn't raise taxes, Americans should expect and demand more from Washington.

Boehner, on the other hand, would keep the debt cutting process going and more likely result in substantive spending cuts of $3 trillion, nearly three times the Reid plan. (And if you tack on the Reid defense cuts, you suddenly have a $4 trillion plan, including interest savings. The raters would like that.) I don't think spending hawks should fear the Boehner debt commission if it has real teeth and doesn't create a trigger for higher taxes.

But wouldn't financial markets be upset by the continued uncertainty of having to address the debt limit issue again in a matter of months? Goldman Sachs doesn't sound particularly alarmed in a new report:

“A short-term increase, with another shot at deficit reduction later this year? A two-stage process continues to look like the most likely agreement, since it is very difficult to generate savings of the magnitude being discussed without developing more complex policy reforms in a number of areas, including health programs and potentially tax policy, and those would take time.”

And after that, both parties can use the upcoming election season to make their respective cases to the American public for sweeping entitlement and tax reform. I think Boehner’s plan will pass the House and become the core of the budget bill that actually gets signed by Obama. And the sooner, the better.

Boehner’s Achievement

By Yuval Levin

<http://www.nationalreview.com/corner/272730/boehner-s-achievement-yuval-levin>

July 26, 2011

I’ve been relatively optimistic about how the debt ceiling fight would end up throughout the process, but not until the last day or two could I have imagined it could end with as significant a win for Republicans as now seems to be within their grasp.

As the details of the Boehner bill become clearer, it’s increasingly apparent that the bill is just what the moment calls for: significant cuts achieved through statutory sequestration caps, no tax increase, no backsliding on entitlement reform or implicit acceptance of Obamacare, a path to another process that could lead to more cuts without tax increases, and the setting of a precedent that from now on increases in the debt ceiling must be accompanied by proportional spending cuts. It’s far from perfect, of course—meaningful entitlement reform is the only way to really address the debt problem, and even short of that some more significant discretionary cuts would be good—but Republicans don’t control Washington, and given their limited formal power, an end to this process that looks something like this bill would be pretty remarkable.

Even the Reid bill, though its cuts are less real, would be a better conclusion than has seemed plausible throughout much of this process, and there is nothing particularly important about a “short-term” rather than a “long-term” increase, provided a long-term one maintains the one-for-one ratio of spending cuts to debt-ceiling increase. Something between the two bills, which is now perhaps the most that Democrats can hope for, would be an extraordinary win for Republicans.

But frankly, it’s not clear Reid can even get his bill through the Senate. If Boehner can get his through the House, the Senate would have to take up that bill (perhaps with modest amendments) and Republicans would set themselves up for a pretty stunning victory. Either way, if the Boehner bill passes then things will have turned fairly dramatically in favor of the Republicans, and the Democrats will have no one to blame but themselves, and above all the president.

An Open Letter to the House GOP: Accept the victory and move on.

By Fred Thompson

July 26, 2011

<http://www.nationalreview.com/articles/272744/open-letter-house-gop-fred-thompson>

As someone who understands the pressures and difficulties you have been going through, I want to say, “Congratulations.” You won, and so did the country.

Absent some major miscalculations, within the next few days there will be official acknowledgement of what has already happened.

At the beginning of the debt-ceiling debate, a realistic, optimistic outcome essentially would have been this: The Republicans would take the initiative and put their plan before the American people. The debt-ceiling increase would be accompanied by corresponding spending cuts. There would be no new taxes. You would drive a hard bargain in the face of unrelenting presidential and Democratic demagoguery — some of it on national television — drawing the attention and focus of the American people to the truth about our country’s fiscal and economic situation. Sure, people would initially ask, “Why are the Republicans now willing to take this thing to the wire when a debt-limit increase has usually been pro forma?” But at the end of the day, more Americans than ever before would understand what is going to happen to us as a country if we continue our current path.

In this optimistic scenario, President Obama’s duplicity would become apparent, and he’d be politically diminished as a result. With his eyes firmly fixed on his own reelection, his political journey would take him from first, calling for a budget with billions in new spending, to second, demanding a “clean” debt-limit bill with no cuts, to third, a proposal for a “big deal,” including vague promises of trillions in spending cuts, to fourth — in order to ensure that such a deal was never accepted — making a demand for billions in additional “revenues” over and above what he previously agreed to accept.

Still, you would stand firm. The president would have miscalculated, a strategic blunder that, along with his petulance, left him marginalized. Obama would make a transparent scramble to get back to the head of the parade. There would be last-minute plans and rejections, but, at the end of the day, the president and the Senate Democrats would reveal that they are willing to do almost anything to push the debt-ceiling limit past the next election, thereby avoiding having to face the electorate again on this issue.

My friends, within the next few days, all of this will have happened. I respectfully suggest that you rake in your chips, stuff them in your pockets, and tell the dealer to deal the next hand.

There is only so much you can do in this deal. Put it into perspective. Right now we are on a path to a $26 trillion debt in ten years, and this is using bogus assumptions about growth and interest payments. The federal government spends over $10 billion a day. We have over $70 trillion in unfunded Medicare liabilities. A problem of this size can be dealt with only by persuading the American people what must be done on a consistent basis over a long period of time. It can't be done with fits and starts and silver bullets. The issue is not where we will be when the debt-ceiling bill is done, it is where we will be in ten years.

We will never achieve entitlement or tax reform with a doctrinaire liberal in the White House. Any agreements to do so in "out years" would probably be unenforceable even if agreement were achieved. And we can only do so much while controlling one half of one branch of government. Ladies and Gentlemen of the House Republicans, you have laid some great groundwork to rectify both of those situations. Now it is the time to accept a well-won victory and move on.

Sincerely,

Your friend,

Fred Thompson

RGA Chair Bob McDonnell:

“Today’s ruling crystallizes all that’s at stake in November’s election. The only way to stop Barack Obama’s budget-busting health care takeover is by electing a new president. Barack Obama’s health care takeover encapsulates his Presidency: Obamacare increases taxes, grows the size of government and puts bureaucrats over patients while doing nothing to improve the economy. It’s never been more important that we elect a President who understands the marketplace and will make job creation his top priority. By replacing Barack Obama with Mitt Romney, we will not only stop the federal government’s healthcare takeover, but will also take a giant step towards a full economic recovery.”

Christie (NJ):

“I’ve been clear from the very beginning that I do not believe a one-size-fits-all health care program works for the entire country and that each governor should have the ability to make decisions about what works best for their state. Today’s Supreme Court decision is disappointing and I still believe this is the wrong approach for the people of New Jersey who should be able to make their own judgments about health care. Most importantly, the Supreme Court is confirming what we knew all along about this law – it is a tax on middle class Americans.”

Jindal (LA):

“Ironically, the Supreme Court has decided to be far more honest about Obamacare than Obama was. They rightly have called it a tax. Today’s decision is a blow to our freedoms. The Court should have protected our constitutional freedoms, but remember it was the President that forced this law on us. The American people did not want or approve of Obamacare then, and they do not now. Americans oppose it because it will decrease the quality of health care in America, raise taxes, cut Medicare, and break the bank. All of this is still true. Republicans must drive hard toward repeal, this is no time to go weak in the knees.”

Scott (FL):

“The Justices have declared that the central provision of ObamaCare is a judicially mandated tax. A new tax pure and simple. This is just another burden the federal government has put on American families and small businesses, while the economy struggles to recover.”

Haley (SC):

“What a shame for South Carolina and our country on the Court’s ruling of the healthcare mandate.”

Fallin (OK):

“Oklahomans have voiced their opposition to the federal health care bill from the very beginning, having approved a constitutional amendment to block the implementation of this bill in our state. We believe that, rather than Big Government bureaucracy and one-size-fits-all solutions, the free-market principles of choice and competition are the best tools at our disposal to increase access to health care and reduce costs. “I’m extremely disappointed and frustrated by the Supreme Court’s decision to uphold the federal health care law. President Obama’s health care policies will limit patients’ health care choices, reduce the quality of health care in the United States, and will cost the state of Oklahoma more than a half billion dollars in the process. “Today’s decision highlights the importance of electing leaders who will work to repeal the federal health care law and replace it with meaningful reform focused on commonsense, market based changes.”

Bentley (AL):

“I am deeply disappointed by today’s Supreme Court decision. The health care law is an overreach by the federal government that creates more regulation, bureaucracy, and a dramatic increase in costs to taxpayers. The ACA is the single worst piece of legislation to come out of Congress. This law must be repealed. People need more choices, not fewer choices. Bigger government is not the answer. Market-based solutions are the best solutions to giving the public the most affordable options.”

Branstad (IA):

“Today, the Supreme Court handed down a disastrous decision to uphold President Obama’s destructive health care law, which means a future of higher costs, higher taxes, and increasing debt for lowans. The current health care system is nothing but a federal takeover and continues to exceed its budgeted amount every day. But, as Governor Romney has said many times, no matter what may happen in Court, the American people must remain vigilant in their fight to repeal the law. Our goal is for Iowa to become the healthiest state in the country and to do so lowans will need to take ownership of their own health to reduce health care costs and lead healthier lives.”

Brownback (KS):

“Stopping ObamaCare is now in the hands of the American people. It begins with electing a new president this fall.”

Obamacare Is Still Vulnerable

By Michael F. Cannon
November 9, 2012 4:00 A.M.

President Obama has won reelection, and his administration has asked state officials to decide by Friday, November 16, whether their state will create one of Obamacare's health-insurance "exchanges." States also have to decide whether to implement the law's massive expansion of Medicaid. The correct answer to both questions remains a resounding no.

State-created exchanges mean higher taxes, fewer jobs, and less protection of religious freedom. States are better off defaulting to a federal exchange. The Medicaid expansion is likewise too costly and risky a proposition. Republican Governors Association chairman Bob McDonnell (R., Va.) agrees, and has announced that Virginia will implement neither provision.

There are many arguments against creating exchanges.

First, states are under no obligation to create one.

Second, operating an Obamacare exchange would be illegal in 14 states. Alabama, Arizona, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Missouri, Montana, Ohio, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Utah, and Virginia have enacted either statutes or constitutional amendments (or both) forbidding state employees to participate in an essential exchange function: implementing Obamacare's individual and employer mandates.

Third, each exchange would cost its state an estimated $10 million to $100 million per year, necessitating tax increases.

Fourth, the November 16 deadline is no more real than the "deadlines" for implementing REAL ID, which have been pushed back repeatedly since 2008.

Fifth, states can always create an exchange later if they choose.

Sixth, a state-created exchange is not a state-controlled exchange. All exchanges will be controlled by Washington.

Seventh, Congress authorized no funds for federal "fallback" exchanges. So Washington may not be able to impose Exchanges on states at all.

Eighth, the Obama administration has yet to provide crucial information that states need before they can make an informed decision.

Ninth, creating an exchange sets state officials up to take the blame when Obamacare increases insurance premiums and denies care to the sick. State officials won't want their names on this disastrous mess.

Tenth, creating an exchange would be assisting in the creation of a "public option" that would drive domestic health-insurance carriers out of business through unfair competition.

Eleventh, Obamacare remains unpopular. The latest Kaiser Family Foundation poll found that only 38 percent of the public supports it.

Twelfth, defaulting to a federal exchange exempts a state's employers from the employer mandate – a tax of $2,000 per worker per year (the tax applies to companies with more than 59 employees, but for such companies that tax applies after the 30th employee, not the 59th). If all states did so, that would exempt 18 million Americans from the individual mandate's tax of $2,085 per family of four. Avoiding those taxes improves a state's prospects for job creation, and protects the conscience rights of employers and individuals whom the Obama administration is forcing to purchase contraceptives coverage.

Finally, rejecting an exchange reduces the federal deficit. Obamacare offers its deficit-financed subsidies to private health insurers only through state-created exchanges. If all states declined, federal deficits would fall by roughly $700 billion over ten years.

For similar reasons, states should decline to implement Obamacare's Medicaid expansion. The Supreme Court gave states that option. All states should exercise it.

Medicaid is rife with waste and fraud. It increases the cost of private health care and insurance, crowds out private health insurance and long-term-care insurance, and discourages enrollees from climbing the economic ladder. There is scant reliable evidence that Medicaid improves health outcomes, and no evidence that it is a cost-effective way of doing so.

My colleague Jagadeesh Gokhale estimates that expanding Medicaid will cost individual states up to $53 billion over the first ten years. That's before an emboldened President Obama follows through on his threats to shift more Medicaid costs to states.

Neither the states nor the federal government have the money to expand Medicaid. If all states politely decline, federal deficits will shrink by another $900 billion.

Now is not the time to go wobbly. Obamacare is still harmful and still unpopular. The presidential election was hardly a referendum, as it pitted the first person to enact Obamacare against the second person to enact it. Since the election, many state officials are reaffirming their opposition to both implementing exchanges and expanding Medicaid.

If enough states do so, Congress will have no choice but to reopen Obamacare. With a GOP-controlled House, opponents will be in a much stronger position than they were when this harmful law was enacted.

NY Times: Reluctance in Some States Over Medicaid Expansion

By ROBERT PEAR and MICHAEL COOPER

WASHINGTON — Millions of poor people could still be left without medical insurance under the national health care law if states take an option granted by the Supreme Court and decide not to expand their Medicaid programs, state officials and health policy experts said Friday.

Republican officials in more than a half-dozen states said they opposed expanding Medicaid or had serious doubts about it, even though the federal government would pick up all the costs in the first few years and at least 90 percent of the expenses after that.

While upholding the most hotly debated part of the health care overhaul law — a requirement that most Americans have health insurance or pay a penalty — the Supreme Court said in its ruling on Thursday that states did not have to expand Medicaid as Congress had intended — leaving a huge question mark over the law's mechanism for providing coverage to 17 million of the poorest people.

In writing the law, Congress assumed that the poorest uninsured people would gain coverage through Medicaid, while many people with higher incomes would receive federal subsidies to buy private insurance. Now, poor people who live in a state that refuses to expand its Medicaid program will find themselves in a predicament, unable to obtain either Medicaid or subsidies.

That potential gap will probably lead to ferocious statehouse battles in the coming year, as states weigh whether to accept billions of dollars in federal aid to pay for expanded coverage. The health care industry, sensing the skepticism in some states, is preparing a campaign to persuade state officials to accept the money for coverage of the uninsured.

But already, governors in Kansas, Nebraska and South Carolina, among other states, have said they would have difficulty affording even the comparatively small share of costs that states would eventually have to pay.

Gov. Dave Heineman of Nebraska, a Republican who is chairman of the National Governors Association, indicated that he was against expanding Medicaid eligibility.

"As I have said repeatedly, if this unfunded Medicaid expansion is implemented, state aid to education and funding for the University of Nebraska will be cut or taxes will be increased," Mr. Heineman said.

In South Carolina, Rob Godfrey, a spokesman for Gov. Nikki R. Haley, said, "We're not going to shove more South Carolinians into a broken system that further ties our hands when we know the best way to find South Carolina solutions for South Carolina health problems is through the flexibility that block grants provide."

In New Hampshire, State Representative Andrew J. Manuse said he and other Republicans were already working to block the expansion of Medicaid. "We can't afford it," Mr. Manuse said. "It's as simple as that. Thank God the Supreme Court gave us an option."

Obama administration officials played down such concerns. Michael Hash, a senior official at the federal Department of Health and Human Services, said he believed that all states would eventually decide to expand Medicaid. Democratic governors like Pat Quinn in Illinois and Christine Gregoire in Washington welcomed the opportunity to help more of their constituents through Medicaid.

Republican governors in Wisconsin and Louisiana said they would wait to see the results of November's elections before deciding whether to expand Medicaid, in the hope that Mitt Romney will be elected president and undo the health care law. "That's why we have refused to implement the Obamacare health exchange or the Medicaid expansion," said Gov. Bobby Jindal of Louisiana.

Under the law, subsidies are available to people with incomes from the poverty level up to four times that amount, but not to people with incomes below the poverty level ($23,050 for a family of four).

The federal government would initially pay all the cost of expanding Medicaid to 133 percent of the poverty level. The state share would slowly rise to 10 percent of the cost by 2020.

“Because the expansion is such a good deal for states, they should move forward and cover low-income adults in their states,” said Judith Solomon, a health policy analyst at the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, a liberal-leaning research and advocacy group. “But what happens in states that do not go ahead and provide coverage? The poorest adults — primarily parents and other adults working for low wages — will be left out in the cold.”

While states typically leapt at such offers of federal largess in the past, a growing number of Republicans have declined federal aid in recent years — turning down billions of dollars in federal money to build railroads in Wisconsin, Ohio and Florida, for instance, and initially balking at accepting some of the money in the 2009 stimulus law.

In Ohio, where Gov. John R. Kasich has expressed concern about the added health care costs, officials said that they were anticipating higher Medicaid expenses quite apart from the expansion in eligibility. The new requirement for people to have health insurance, they said, could bring several hundred thousand people who are already eligible for Medicaid into the state’s program, at a cost of $940 million in the first two years.

Lt. Gov. Mary Taylor, a Republican who is director of the Ohio Department of Insurance, said in an interview that even though the federal government would pick up all of the costs in the first few years of expanded coverage, “our concern is we can’t make decisions for the short term.”

And in New Jersey, Gov. Chris Christie, a Republican, called the ruling giving states the choice of whether to expand Medicaid “a ray of sunshine in an otherwise cloudy day.”

Another Republican governor, Phil Bryant of Mississippi, also cast doubt on the expansion, saying. “I would resist any expansion of Medicaid that could result in significant tax increases or dramatic cuts to education, public safety and job creation.”

Health care providers who treat low-income patients strongly support the expansion of coverage.

Richard J. Umbdenstock, the president of the American Hospital Association, said that hospitals around the country would lobby for the Medicaid expansion. “If states do not avail themselves of this opportunity,” he said, “the federal money will go to other states, and hospitals will be left with large numbers of the uninsured.”

Nancy M. Schlichting, chief executive of the Henry Ford Health System in Detroit, said she “absolutely will lobby” for the expansion of Medicaid. She said she expected Gov. Rick Snyder, a Republican, to support the expansion, but she added, “he may have trouble” getting it through the Michigan Legislature.

Congress has repeatedly expanded Medicaid in the last 25 years, and states often had new sources of revenue, like money from the settlement of lawsuits against major tobacco companies. “But this time is different,” said Dennis G. Smith, secretary of the Wisconsin Department of Health Services. “Virtually all states are struggling to sustain their current Medicaid programs.”

Illinois, facing severe financial problems, has already delayed Medicaid payments to some health care providers.

“Many hospitals are not being paid for six months or more after they provide services and file claims,” said Danny Chun, a spokesman for the Illinois Hospital Association. “Illinois is dead broke.”

RED STATES' MEDICAID POWER PLAY | POLITICO

The Supreme Court ruling left the Democratic health care law intact — but it also left Republicans in a stronger bargaining position when it comes to Medicaid.

The ruling gives them the right to opt out of the Medicaid expansion envisioned under the law. But they know one thing: President Barack Obama wants them to stay in, and so many might just go along and take the money — after they’ve squeezed out as many other concessions as they can get from the feds.

(See also: Full coverage of the health care reform decision)

One of the most health care-savvy governors, Louisiana’s Bobby Jindal, is already wondering whether this creates a backdoor way to achieve the Holy Grail for Republican governors — turning his federal Medicaid dollars into a block grant.

“I believe [the feds] can go to the states and negotiate” to convert their Medicaid dollars into unrestricted lump payments “for states that want to do this,” Jindal said Friday in a call with reporters.

There’s a long road to get from Thursday’s ruling to serious negotiations, of course.

(Also on POLITICO: 6 SCOTUS takeaways)

Several governors immediately responded to the ruling by hinting they won’t expand their Medicaid program — though most have been careful to leave themselves an out in case they decide it’s to their advantage.

“I would resist any expansion of Medicaid that could result in significant tax increases or dramatic cuts to education, public safety and job creation,” Mississippi Gov. Phil Bryant said in a statement.

Even Texas Gov. Rick Perry isn’t saying “never” to a Medicaid expansion. “The governor’s office will be working with Attorney General Abbott and appropriate state agencies to determine the impact of yesterday’s Supreme Court decision on the state of Texas, and the appropriate course of action moving forward,” Perry spokesman Josh Havens said in an email. “Gov. Perry will stand up and do what is right for Texas, based on the priorities of fiscal responsibility and the best interests of Texas taxpayers.”

Of course, there’s a lot of political pressure on Republicans to take advantage of a court-sanctioned escape from a major health reform provision.

Republicans on Capitol Hill are sending signals to their governors that they should use it if they know what’s good for them.

“The more states that would do that, I think the better,” said Florida Rep. Tom Rooney. “Anything that a state can do to try to water [health reform] down, the better.”

But if Republicans don’t sweep Washington in the fall and manage to repeal the health care law, governors could have very different pressures weighing on them when budget time comes around.

That’s why many experts believe that states could still come to the table. And digging in their heels now may actually strengthen their bargaining position when negotiations begin.

“You have two sets of calculus, the fiscal calculus and the political calculus,” said Diane Rowland, executive director of the Kaiser Commission on Medicaid and the Uninsured. Bypassing expansion not only means leaving “money on the table,” she said — it also means the states would have to pay the price tag for leaving millions uninsured.

The federal government will pick up all of the extra costs of insuring everyone who joins Medicaid under the expansion, at first, and then phase down to covering 90 percent of the costs. Under the health reform law, the program — now targeted at poor kids and the low-income disabled — will cover everyone under 133 percent of the federal poverty line starting in 2014.

The Congressional Budget Office estimated that if all 50 states enacted the expansion, they would spend 2.8 percent more between 2014 and 2022 than they would spend by leaving their programs as they are.

But this actually overstates the cost to states, according to an analysis by the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities. States pick up some of the expenses for hospitals that treat people who have no insurance — and they will save these funds if they allow the Medicaid program to insure them almost entirely on the federal government’s dime.

And the hospitals will be pushing hard to get their governors to sign up. They still are left on the hook for much of the care they provide to the uninsured, and they want as many of their poor patients enrolled in Medicaid as possible.

Not everyone agrees with this math, of course. Many state lawmakers, who have been struggling with the costs of their Medicaid programs since the recession began, worry that the additional burden is more than they can bear.

“Medicaid is already crushing state budgets all over America,” said Virginia Gov. Bob McDonnell, who chairs the Republican Governors Association. “This is a colossal expansion of Medicaid spending.”

But if they play the game right, states might be able to benefit from the increased federal dollars and get to make some of the changes to their existing programs that they believe will bring down costs.

These include some market-driven reforms favored by conservatives, which might give them a way to harmonize the “political and fiscal calculus.” They can say to their critics on the right that they only took “Obamacare” dollars to make their Medicaid programs more market-driven.

While Jindal’s hope of getting HHS to remove all strings to federal Medicaid dollars may be ambitious, there are other options that may be more realistic for Republican governors dealing with a Democratic administration.

For example, they could expand a pilot program begun in five Florida counties to allow beneficiaries to choose between competing private health care plans instead of enrolling in government-run Medicaid. They also could ask for the authority to let Medicaid beneficiaries set up health savings accounts and charge them copayments, so that they are more sensitive to the cost of their care.

And both conservative and liberal experts predict HHS will be satisfied if they only agree to cover people with incomes under 100 percent of the federal poverty level, instead of 133 percent as the health reform law requires. Those between 100 percent and 133 percent will be able to get heavily subsidized private insurance in the exchanges, though beneficiary advocates worry that people at this income level won't be able to afford even modest premiums and out-of-pocket spending in private plans.

"They want Medicaid reform — they don't want to expand the program as is," said Douglas Holtz-Eakin, who has advised President George W. Bush and Sen. John McCain.

With the Supreme Court's help, they now stand a better chance of getting their way.

From NBC's Chuck Todd and Domenico Montanaro

President Obama is endorsing a plan to let states ask for waivers on mandates in the health-care law earlier, starting 2014, instead of 2017. The news was first reported by the New York Times <http://www.nytimes.com/2011/03/01/us/politics/01health.html?\_r=1&hp%20> . Some bullet points:

-- This doesn't mean states can opt-out of hitting specific coverage targets, but if they have other ideas that would still cover as many people, they can circumvent some of the health-care law's requirements.

-- He will endorse the concept of the Ron Wyden-Scott Brown legislation, which moves up the start date when states can seek waivers from the health-care law from 2017 to 2014, they are called "innovation waivers" - if they can come up with ways to incentivize people to buy insurance rather than require it.

As the law currently stands, an individual state can basically seek a waiver from any part of the law starting in 2017, if they can prove they will meet the coverage and affordability options stated in the president's health-care law.

This allows states to:

- introduce new options for coverage
- have some flexibility in choosing whether to make some Medicaid recipients purchase insurance through exchanges
- seek a waiver from the individual mandate

This new plan would move that start date up to 2014.

The Times frames this as Obama "seeking to appease disgruntled governors." More from the Times:

Senior administration officials said Mr. Obama would reveal to the National Governors Association in a speech on Monday morning that he backs legislation that would enable states to request federal permission to withdraw from the law's mandates in 2014 rather than in 2017. The earlier date is when many of the act's central provisions take effect, including requirements that most individuals obtain health insurance and that employers of a certain size offer coverage to workers or pay a penalty.

The announcement is the first time Mr. Obama has called for changing a central component of his signature health care law, although he has backed removing a specific tax provision that both parties regard as onerous on business. The shift comes as the law is under fierce attack in the courts and from Republicans on Capitol Hill and in statehouses around the country.

Guys, we need to prepare messaging for what the White House announced today. Below you will find background on the Wyden Brown legislation as well as the White House announcement. Let's starting thinking about our coordinated response. Thanks.

The Wyden-Brown legislation is a date change from the waiver in PPACA (2017 to 2014). It does nothing to address PPACA's major structural flaws:

- 1) Under the waivers, states would still have to provide insurance coverage that is at least as comprehensive as provided under PPACA, so states would not be able to change the benefit mandates in order to make coverage more affordable.
- 2) States would still have to provide insurance coverage that maintains PPACA's cost-sharing and out-of-pocket spending restrictions. So there would be little, if any, flexibility to encourage HSAs or other consumer-directed plans.
- 3) The way the PPACA waiver is drafted, it would be nearly impossible for states to roll back the individual and employer mandates as they still have to get the insured numbers that PPACA gets through its onerous mandates and unsustainable spending.
- 4) The waiver concept does nothing to address the new spending under PPACA.
- 5) The waiver does nothing to give states flexibility from Washington's rigid Medicaid rules.

Subject: FACT SHEET: The Affordable Care Act: Supporting Innovation, Empowering States

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Fact Sheet

The Affordable Care Act: Supporting Innovation, Empowering States

On February 28, President Obama reiterated his belief that States should have the power and flexibility to innovate and find the health care solutions that work best for them and announced his support for accelerating State Innovation Waivers and allowing states to apply for them starting in 2014.

Beginning in 2017, the law allows States the flexibility to receive a State Innovation Waiver so they may pursue their own innovative strategies to ensure their residents have access to high quality, affordable health insurance. These strategies – which must provide affordable insurance coverage to at least as many residents as the Affordable Care Act and must not increase the federal deficit – could include allowing large employers to purchase coverage through State Exchanges or increasing the number of benefit levels to provide more choices for individuals and small businesses.

Under the bipartisan "Empowering States to Innovate Act" introduced by Senators Ron Wyden, Scott Brown, and Mary Landrieu, State Innovation Waivers would be available three years earlier than under current law, so long as States meet certain criteria, including certifying that their proposals would cover at least as many of their residents as the policies in the Affordable Care Act would have covered.

The proposal offers States more flexibility while ensuring that all Americans, no matter where they live have access to affordable, accessible health insurance. Additionally, the proposal includes built-in protections to ensure that these waivers do not increase the Federal budget deficit.

The Affordable Care Act already creates a critical role for States. It provides them with the flexibility and resources necessary to innovate and implement reform in the manner that works best for them. The law has already made nearly $2.8 billion available to states and every State has taken steps – and, in some cases, bold actions – to implement the law and improve health insurance accountability and affordability for their citizens. States can design their own Exchanges, shape their Medicaid programs, and take the lead in enforcing patient protections and reviewing rates increases of private insurers.

Empowering States to Innovate

Under the Affordable Care Act, State Innovation Waivers allow States to propose and test alternative ways to meet the shared goals of making health insurance affordable and accessible to all Americans, including those living with pre-existing conditions. Specifically, State Innovation Waivers are designed to allow States to implement policies that differ from the new law so long as they:

- Provide coverage that is at least as comprehensive as the coverage offered through Exchanges – a new competitive, private health insurance marketplace.
- Make coverage at least as affordable as it would have been through the Exchanges.
- Provide coverage to at least as many residents as the Affordable Care Act would have provided.
- Do not increase the Federal deficit.

State Innovation Waivers are provided for up to five years, with the option of renewal. If a State's innovation fails to meet the criteria outlined above, the policies outlined in the Affordable Care Act would take effect.

Potential State-Based Innovations

The Affordable Care Act offers considerable flexibility to States without waivers. It also recognizes that new, creative effective ideas may emerge. While States have the freedom to develop their own proposals that may qualify for a State Innovation Waiver, some proposals that could qualify include:

- * A streamlined system that links tax credits for small businesses with tax credits for low-income families.
- * Alternatives to the individual responsibility provision – such as automatically enrolling individuals in health plans – that achieve similar outcomes.
- Alternative health plan options to increase competition and provide consumers with additional choices.
- * An increase in the number of benefit levels to provide more choices for individuals and small businesses.
- * Immediately allowing large businesses interested in doing so to purchase health insurance through the new private marketplace, the State-based health insurance Exchange.

The law also allows States to submit a single application that includes Medicaid waiver requests which could, for example, seek to give people eligible for Medicaid the choice of enrolling in Exchange plans.

Maintaining Important Consumer Protections

The Affordable Care Act ends the worst insurance company abuses and gives Americans more freedom and control over their health care choices. Already, under the law, most insurance companies:

- Cannot impose lifetime limits on the dollar amount they will spend on health benefits.
- Must offer young adults without access to job-based coverage the option of remaining on their parent's plan until their 26th birthday.
- Must cover recommended preventive services without cost sharing.
- Must allow patients to choose their own doctor in their network.
- Cannot drop your coverage solely due to your getting sick.
- Must spend at least 80 percent of premium dollars on health care, rather than executive salaries and administrative costs.

Starting in 2014, insurance companies cannot charge more, carve-out benefits, or deny coverage because of a pre-existing condition. States that receive a State Innovation Waiver would be required to maintain these important consumer protections that prevent insurance companies from denying, capping or limiting care.

Waiver Evaluation

Under the Affordable Care Act, the Secretaries of Health and Human Services and Treasury are responsible for evaluating State Innovation Waiver applications and ensuring proposals will meet the shared goals of making health insurance affordable and accessible to all Americans, including those with pre-existing conditions. Under the proposed legislation, the Secretaries would continue to play this role and be empowered to grant waivers beginning in 2014. Once complete, State Innovation Waiver applications must be reviewed within 180 days of being received. The Departments of Health and Human Services and Treasury will issue proposed regulations outlining the process for applying for a State Innovation Waiver this spring. The Departments will accept public comment, including comments from States, on this proposed regulation.

President's Plan to Cut Red Tape, Give States Flexibility

President Obama will also take an additional important step to help States, improve outcomes, and lower costs for the American taxpayer. This week, the President will issue a memorandum directing Executive Departments and Agencies to work with State, Tribal, and local governments to reduce unnecessary regulatory and administrative burdens in order to focus resources on achieving better outcomes at lower cost. In this memorandum, the President is:

- * Instructing the Director of OMB to lead a collaborative process of Federal agencies, State, Tribal, and local governments to coordinate and streamline procedures that cut across agency, program and geographic bounds.

- * Requiring agencies to work closely with States, Tribes, and local governments to identify administrative, regulatory, and legislative barriers in Federally-funded programs that currently prevent them from efficiently using tax dollars to achieve the best results for their constituents.

MYTH VS. FACT: The Bipartisan Agreement to Cut Spending to Support Job Creation

April 13, 2011 | Posted by Speaker Boehner Press Office | Permalink

MYTH: "Most of the cuts in the agreement aren't real cuts. Many are cuts that were already scheduled to happen, and were proposed in the president's budget."

The spending cuts in the legislation are real cuts that help to clear a path for Chairman Paul Ryan's landmark Path to Prosperity budget. The agreement includes a gross spending cut of nearly $45 billion – a net spending cut of nearly $40 billion, as a result of the $5 billion increase for the Defense Department that Speaker Boehner fought for and won. Democrats accurately note that some of the spending cuts in the agreement were proposed in the president's budget, but disingenuously fail to note that many of those cuts were used in the president's budget to offset additional or new spending elsewhere. In the context of the agreement, those cuts are now real cuts – chopping billions of dollars off the baseline, rather than being used to offset other Washington spending sought by the administration. As Chairman Ryan said Tuesday, the agreement "[secures] tens of billions of dollars in spending cuts, forcing the President and his party's leaders to retreat from their reckless spending spree. The historic spending cut turns the page from Washington's pervasive culture of spending, sending a welcome signal to job creators and cleaning up the unprecedented budget mess left by the last Congress."

MYTH: "President Obama got most of what he wanted."

The agreement is imperfect, but it's hardly a "win" for President Obama or the Democratic Party agenda of bigger government and increased spending. As a result of the agreement, the federal government will spend $78.5 billion less than President Obama proposed spending this year. The agreement eliminates one Obamacare program, cuts a second nearly in half, and eliminates four of the Obama Administration's controversial "czars" – including the president's health czar charged with overseeing his government takeover of health care, his auto czar responsible for managing the federal government's takeover of U.S. auto manufacturers, and his climate change czar tasked with implementing the president's job-crushing national energy tax. The agreement secures Senate votes and debate on de-funding of two presidential priorities – Obamacare and Planned Parenthood – while saving the successful D.C. school choice program Democrats have been trying to eliminate for years.

MYTH: "The cuts in the agreement will have no impact on the long-term trajectory of government spending."

The agreement will chop an estimated $315 billion out of the federal budget over the next 10 years, setting the table for Chairman Paul Ryan's Path to Prosperity budget, which cuts trillions. The notion that cuts in mandatory spending are not "real" cuts is a potentially lethal misconception for conservatives to accept. Dramatic reductions in both discretionary and mandatory ("autopilot") spending are essential to help reduce uncertainty in our economy and create a better environment for job growth, and the agreement makes historic cuts in both types of spending -- just months after President Obama and his Democratic allies in Congress called for zero cuts and claimed spending cuts would hurt the economy.

MYTH: "The agreement is just more of the same. It doesn't really signal any kind of shift in the direction of our government."

While imperfect, the agreement marks the beginning of a major shift in economic policy – a shift that defined clearly by the GOP budget for which it sets the table, Chairman Ryan's Path to Prosperity. As late as a few months ago, President Obama was calling for zero spending cuts, clinging to his trademark Keynesian arguments and insisting that spending cuts would hurt the economy. With the agreement, the White House has unceremoniously abandoned that "stimulus" argument. Liberals have slammed President Obama for the agreement, noting it means the White House has, in effect, admitted the "stimulus" spending binge is over. "Princeton University professor Paul Krugman noted that by agreeing to this level of budget cuts, Obama had accepted the premise that the economy has recovered enough to withstand the withdrawal of federal spending. Despite the fragile economic recovery, the economy is still not strong enough, Krugman argued," according to Politico. And it's notable that the agreement includes zero earmarks – a stark contrast to two years ago, when President Obama accommodated a Democratic House and Senate and signed into law a massive omnibus spending bill containing an estimated 9,000 earmarks.

MYTH: "The agreement really only cuts about $14 billion in spending. Most of the cuts are from non-discretionary spending, which doesn't change the baseline."

Discretionary spending cuts account for more than half of the nearly $45 billion in gross spending cuts that are made in the agreement. As previously noted, the agreement will chop an estimated $315 billion out of the federal budget over the next 10 years, setting the table for Chairman Paul Ryan's Path to Prosperity budget, which cuts trillions. The notion that cuts in mandatory spending are not "real" cuts is a potentially lethal misconception for anyone to accept. Dramatic reductions in both discretionary and mandatory ("autopilot") spending are essential to help reduce uncertainty in our economy and create a better environment for job growth, and the agreement makes historic cuts in both types of spending -- just months after President Obama and his Democratic allies in Congress called for zero cuts and claimed spending cuts would hurt the economy.

MYTH: "The provisions eliminating President Obama's 'czars' for health care, climate change and other topics are meaningless. The administration has already vacated these posts or scheduled them for elimination."

The agreement means these posts won't be coming back – good news for Americans discomforted by the Obama Administration's agenda of government takeovers and bailouts. And perhaps more importantly, the provisions establish a precedent that Congress can deny the president funding for such positions -- effectively challenging their constitutionality.

MYTH: "The agreement is a win for President Obama because it includes a mix of discretionary spending cuts and mandatory spending cuts, rather than just discretionary spending cuts."

The bill passed by the House in February, H.R. 1, also included mandatory spending cuts. Like H.R. 1, the agreement makes real cuts in discretionary spending and includes no tax increases. After initially opposing any spending cuts, the White House and Congressional Democrats abandoned that position during negotiations and tried to cut their losses by demanding tax increases and trying to prevent virtually any cuts to discretionary spending. Republican negotiators rebuffed this gambit and forced the White House to accept an agreement with a mix of cuts from both discretionary and mandatory spending programs, and zero tax hikes. As noted previously, dramatic reductions in both discretionary and mandatory spending are needed to help reduce uncertainty in our economy and create a better environment for job growth. The agreement makes historic cuts in both types of spending -- just months after President Obama and his Democratic allies in Congress called for zero cuts and claimed spending cuts would hurt the economy.

MYTH: "The agreement just nicks a few programs; it doesn't actually eliminate anything."

The agreement terminates more than 40 ineffective programs at the U.S. Department of Education alone, including Educational Technology State Grants, Even Start, Advanced Credentialing, Mental Health Integration, Exchanges with Historic Whaling Partners, Women's Educational Equity, Tech-Prep Education State Grants, Smaller Learning Communities, Legal Assistance Loan Repayment Program, Thurgood Marshall Legal Opportunity Scholarships, and B.J. Stupak Olympic Scholarships. For a full list of federal programs that are cut or eliminated by the agreement, go here. The bill also eliminates the ability of students to draw down two Pell Grant awards at the same time, saving an additional $35 billion over the next 10 years.

NCSL PPACA Conf. Call

Supreme Court upheld major provisions of PPACA in its opinion. Individual mandate constitutional under Article 1 taxing authority. Court did not agree that Commerce Clause was a reason to uphold the individual mandate due to the fact that there is no regulation commerce. Mandate does not go to regulate existing commerce activity, but instead compelled others to participate in commerce.

Court ruled that Medicaid expansion is coercive. Court held that this exceeds Congressional spending clause authority. Congress can attach conditions to grants, but states must knowingly accept the terms. Incentives are ok, but compelling participation is beyond the scope of Congressional authority. Court held that Medicaid expansion is a new program with a new funding stream. If states don't participate, they won't lose all funding, just new funding.

Scalia, Kennedy, Alito, and Thomas believe the entire act is unconstitutional. When states have no choice but to administer federal programs, that is unconstitutional. Individual mandate violates taxing authority. Agreed with majority that the power to attach conditions to states regarding Medicaid is limited. Also felt that because Congress didn't devise a backup scheme, its intent was to force states to comply. Believe that because the individual mandate and Medicaid expansion were so intrusive the entire statute must fall.

States have until Nov. 16th to send to the feds a document indicating whether they will operate a state exchange, partner with the feds in an exchange, or if they want the fed government to set up an exchange. State doesn't need legislation passed by then, but they have to declare their attention. By Jan. 2013, HHS Sec. will approve or disapprove the submitted plan. States must also decide whether to operate the risk adjustment plan. States must change laws regarding pre-existing conditions, etc. or their laws will be pre-empted by the fed govt.

Much of the decision making on Medicaid will need to be made at HHS in the coming weeks. HHS Sec. cannot impose statutory penalty if states choose not to go forward with the expansion. The expansion is now voluntary. Not sure if parts of the expansion can be treated separately. There are now essentially two separate Medicaid programs: existing program and expansion program.

The primary people in the expansion are single, childless adults under age 65 with income below 133% of the poverty level. A 5% income disregard is applied to every individual effectively making it 138% of poverty. Important to note that individual mandate has some exemptions: people who qualify for religious/conscience exemption, members of health sharing ministries (church sponsored health plans), incarcerated individuals, & members of an Indian tribe. There is an affordability exemption. If their premium exceeds 8% of household income, they would not be required to purchase health insurance because it would be deemed unaffordable. Taxpayers with income below the filing threshold are exempt.

What's next for states behind schedule in compliance?

It's based on what the state wants to do. State based exchanges may be difficult at this point, but there is federal funding available. Processes have been developed for states that want to meet the minimum standard. If states can't get an exchange ready for 2013, they can partner with the feds and then operate their own exchange in 2014.

If a state chooses not to accept new Medicaid funding, must it create an insurance exchange?

States don't have to create an exchange, but if they do not, the feds would operate it. An exchange will be implemented, it's just a matter of who does it.

What is the cost to states if the feds operate the exchange and what is the cost to states if they do it?

Haven't received that information from the feds. The feds will make assessments on the plans in order to offset the cost of operating the exchange. If the feds are operating the exchange, they only have the authority to charge assessments on the insurance plans operating in the exchange.

When do states have to decide if they will expand Medicaid?

Not sure. HHS still has to determine the date. Anticipate that there will be a template for a state plan amendment that will allow states to detail what they plan to do in 2014. Nothing received from HHS in terms of how they plan to move forward.

If states have passed law forbidding participation in exchanges, what will happen?

While the individual mandate is compulsory, how it is done is not something the Court talked about. The state laws would most likely be pre-empted. Federally facilitated exchange may not be able to work on its own without some cooperation with the state due to the Medicaid provisions. How the state proceeds in working with HHS is up to the state. Nobody in the state can receive a subsidy unless they work through an exchange.

Health Insurance Exchanges

Remarks, As Prepared for Delivery:

Good afternoon.

The State of Nebraska faces several difficult dilemmas regarding the Affordable Care Act. As you know, the majority of Nebraskans oppose the new federal health care law. This has been a highly politicized issue. However, the elections are over. It's now time to focus on the policy.

All fifty governors will be making a decision on the operation of an exchange based upon what they think is best for their state. Some governors will choose a federal exchange and some will opt for a state exchange. The State of Nebraska has been studying and evaluating how to comply with the law for more than two years.

On September 6, I sent a letter to Secretary Sebelius asking her for more detailed information about the Affordable Care Act, and I have never received a response from her. The federal government has not completed its rules and regulations process, yet they are demanding the states make a decision about the exchange by tomorrow.

I want to note that the United States Supreme Court ruled that the insurance exchanges were constitutional, but when it comes to the Medicaid expansion, the Supreme Court ruled that the federal government could not force the states to expand Medicaid. I've made it very clear that I am opposed to this massive, unfunded Medicaid expansion because it would cost the State of Nebraska hundreds of millions of dollars. If implemented, this Medicaid expansion would lead to reduced funding for the education of Nebraska's children or higher taxes on middle class Nebraskans.

The other issue is what to do about an insurance exchange. The current law requires the states to choose between a federal exchange and a state exchange. Like many Nebraskans, my initial thoughts were we would prefer a state exchange because Nebraska would be in control of the exchange. As we conducted our review and analysis of the new federal health care law and the regulations from the federal Department of Health and Human Services, it became apparent that the Affordable Care Act contains one federal mandate after another.

On the key issues, there is no real operational difference between a federal exchange and a state exchange. A state exchange is nothing more than the state administering the Affordable Care Act with all of the important and critical decisions made by the federal government.

The Affordable Care Act is being totally dictated and totally controlled by the federal government.

In addition to our concerns that the State of Nebraska would not have any significant control of a state exchange, I am even more concerned about the cost of an exchange. Whether the State of Nebraska chooses a federal or state exchange, there are costs associated with that decision.

Based upon the best information that the Department of Insurance and the Department of Health and Human Services have, the cost of a state insurance exchange for Fiscal Years 2013-2020 is $646 million; while the cost of a federal insurance exchange is $176 million. The cost of a state exchange to Nebraska taxpayers is $470 million more than a federal exchange.

It is simply too expensive to do a state insurance exchange.

Just like the Medicaid expansion, building a state exchange controlled by the federal government will result in reduced state aid to education for Nebraska's public schools, reduced funding for the University of Nebraska and other higher education institutions or higher taxes on hard-working, middle class Nebraskans. Building a state exchange would result in reduced funding for key state priorities.

The bottom line is a state insurance exchange is really controlled by the federal government, and the cost of operating a state insurance exchange is very expensive.

Finally, I want to share with Nebraskans that I have listened to all sides of this issue. It is a very polarizing issue but my focus now is on implementing the Affordable Care Act in the most efficient and cost effective manner for Nebraskans and their families. Reasonable people will disagree on this issue, but one thing is very clear – a state exchange is too costly to our citizens. Therefore, the State of Nebraska will comply with the Affordable Care Act by being part of the federal exchange.

Dear Secretary Sebelius:

I am writing to notify you that I have elected to have the State of Nebraska participate in the federally-facilitated health insurance exchange. After extensive analysis and planning for a state-based exchange for my state, I have determined that the fiscal cost differential is too great to warrant the establishment of a separate state-based health insurance exchange.

I have directed Bruce Ramage, Director of the Nebraska Department of Insurance, and Vivianne Chaumont, Director of the Medicaid Division, Nebraska Department of Health and Human Services, to contact your staff in order to facilitate a smooth and timely transition on issues related to the implementation of a federally-facilitated health insurance exchange in Nebraska.

Washington, D.C. 20201

Dear Secretary Sebelius:

I am writing you today regarding the federal health care law. The State of Nebraska has many unanswered questions that we hope your Department can answer.

Our questions are as follow:

- As a result of the United States Supreme Court ruling, which Medicaid provisions still apply and which do not? Please address maintenance of effort, modified adjusted gross income, consolidation of eligibility groups, no wrong door and additional eligible populations such as children to 138% and former foster children to age 26.
- Nebraska has a single application for all public assistance programs. The new federal health care requirements for a streamlined application for the exchange and Medicaid will make our entire process more burdensome and less consumer friendly. Will your Department grant us a waiver from the new federal health care law so that we can maintain a single application for all public assistance programs?
- If a state chooses not to expand its Medicaid program, is a state exchange still expected to do a Medicaid assessment and determination?
- If a state chooses not to expand its Medicaid program, is a state exchange still expected to use a single application for the exchange and Medicaid?
- Will your Department provide enhanced funding for non-systems related, ACA-required, operational changes to the Medicaid program?

The Honorable Kathleen Sebelius
U.S. Department of Health and Human Services
September 6, 2012

- What will the charges for a state exchange be to use the federal data hub, advance premium tax credit/cost-sharing reduction service, risk adjustment and transitional reinsurance programs?
- When will the states learn sufficient details about a federal exchange in order to compare its costs to building a state exchange?
- Many grant deadlines have been extended. Will the implementation date for enrollment be extended from October 1, 2013 to some future date?

Thank you.

Sincerely,

New Report: ObamaCare Will Eliminate Health Coverage, Cost American Jobs

June 7, 2011 | Posted by Katie Boyd | Permalink

The President's promise that "if you like your health care plan, you can keep it" has once again been proven false because ObamaCare is forcing job creators to stop offering health coverage. As businesses begin planning for the onslaught of ObamaCare taxes, mandates, regulations, and penalties coming down the pike, many are left with two untenable choices: stop offering health care for their employees, or eliminate full-time jobs and keep wages low. According to a survey released yesterday by McKinsey & Company:

- 30 percent of employers – and 28 percent of large employers – “will definitely or probably stop offering” coverage after 2014.
- Employers who are more aware of ObamaCare's provisions are more likely to consider dropping coverage – “upward of 60 percent will pursue some alternative” to their existing plans.
- “At least 30 percent of employers would gain economically from dropping coverage even if they completely compensated employees for the change through other benefit offerings or higher salaries.”

Just as troubling, the McKinsey & Company analysis also discussed ways in which companies can force more of their health care costs onto the government, at the expense of taxpayers and employees, to deal with higher costs associated with ObamaCare. This analysis says employers could:

- Replace full-time workers with more part-time workers to avoid triggering the employer mandate.
- Restructure companies into two parts: one comprising management and corporate employees who would receive employer-sponsored coverage, and the other with lower-wage employees who would not.
- Keep premiums above 9.5 percent of household income for lower-wage workers to force these employees into government-run exchanges.

The findings of the report should come as no surprise to the Obama Administration, which has already been forced to issue more than 1,300 waivers exempting employers from the law - a tacit admission that ObamaCare destroys jobs, threatens economic growth and jeopardizes coverage for millions of Americans. In a post on National Review Online today, Jim Geraghty explains how ObamaCare is already costing American jobs:

“While many of its rules have yet to take full effect, Obama health care plan’s impact on businesses can be seen in at least two ways right now. In the not-too-distant future, companies with more than 50 employees will face a penalty of at least $2000 per employee if any worker is collecting federally-subsided insurance through an exchange. If you have less than 50 employees, this rule is moot. If you’re a company with 40 something employees, how eager are you to hire more, cross the threshold, and take on those additional potential costs?”

“Secondly, a business or union or other entity can avoid all of these mandates if the Secretary of Health and Human Services likes them and grants them a waiver. Somehow it is less than surprising to learn half the waivers are to unions and 20 percent have been given to Nancy Pelosi’s district in San Francisco. The lesson of this waiver system is that expensive regulatory burdens are waived for the politically well-connected – another element of risk and a diversion of business energy, attention and funds from their true job (serving their customers and shareholders) to somehow buttering up Kathleen Sebelius.”

The new House majority has already voted to repeal ObamaCare, and is working to replace the law with commonsense reforms that will lower costs and protect jobs. That was our Pledge to America, and we intend to keep it.

Legislative Focus: Small Business Tax Relief, Health Care Repeal Legislation, Water Projects, Minerals Regulations

Lawmakers return from the July 4 recess today to work on small business tax legislation and a repeal of the health care law.

The Senate will hold a vote on the motion to proceed to the Small Business Jobs and Tax Relief Act (S. 2237) early in the week. The bill would create a 10 percent income tax credit, capped at $500,000 per employer, for employers who grow their payroll in 2012. The measure also would extend 100 percent bonus depreciation on qualified capital expenditures through 2012 for all employers in an effort to encourage investment. Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.) filed cloture June 29. If cloture is invoked, the Senate could possibly vote on Reid's measure and on a Republican alternative, likely the text of a House-passed bill (H.R. 9), which would reportedly give a 20 percent deduction to small businesses with less than 500 employees, but would limit the value of the deduction of W-2 wages to 50 percent.

The Senate is also scheduled for an executive session July 10 to consider the nomination of John Thomas Fowlkes Jr., to be a U.S. district judge for the Western District of Tennessee.

The House is expected to start the July 9 week with votes on seven measures under suspension of the rules, including a pair of veterans' jobs bills and the Hydropower Regulatory Efficiency Act (H.R. 5892), which would authorize nearly 300 water projects at various stages of study or construction along the East coast. Tuesday, the House is scheduled to begin consideration of the Repeal of Obamacare Act, sponsored by House Majority Leader Eric Cantor (R-Va.). The bill would repeal the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act and health care-related provisions in the Health Care and Education Reconciliation Act of 2010. Wednesday, the House is expected to take up the National Strategic and Critical Minerals Production Act (H.R. 4402), which would streamline regulations on the development of minerals that are considered critical to energy, domestic industries, and national defense.

Senate Floor. The Senate convenes at 2:00 p.m. today to take up a one-year payroll tax credit. No roll call votes are expected. Tuesday, and for the remainder of the week, the Senate will consider the payroll tax credit bill and judicial nominations.

House Floor. The House convenes at 2:00 p.m. today to take up seven measures under suspension of the rules. Tuesday, the House is scheduled to consider one measure subject to a rule. Wednesday and Thursday, the House will take up two measures subject to a rule. The House is not in session on Friday.

U.S. Supreme Court to Review Health Care Reform

The U.S. Supreme Court yesterday announced that it would review the constitutionality of the Affordable Care Act this spring during an historic five and one-half hours of arguments. The Court will hear arguments on the mandate requirement, severability, limits on challenges by public and private parties under the Anti-Injunction Act (26 USC 7421(a)) to the mandate requirement, and whether the Act's expansion of Medicaid oversteps the Spending Clause. The questions come from these cases accepted for review: National Federation of Independent Business v. Sebelius (No. 11-393); Florida, et al. v. HHS (No. 11-400); and, HHS, et al. v. Florida, et al. (No. 11-398).

Spending Bill with CR Clears Conference

House and Senate appropriators cleared a conference report for a bill to fund the departments of Agriculture, Justice, Commerce, Transportation and Housing and Urban Development. The bill also includes a continuing resolution to fund the government through December 16. The current CR ends this Friday. Leaders in the House and Senate are hopeful that the additional time will allow Congress to wrap up all spending bills before adjourning for the holiday break. The first spending “minibus” made it out of conference Monday night and is set for passage by Friday.

Unemployment Insurance Extension Bills Introduced

Senator Jack Reed (D-R.I.) and Representative Lloyd Doggett (D-Tex.) recently introduced companion bills, the Emergency Unemployment Compensation Extension Act of 2011 (S.1804 and H.R. 3346). The legislation would extend the Emergency Unemployment Compensation (EUC) program and 100% federal funding for the Extended Benefits (EB) program through the end of 2012. Current extensions to both programs are set to expire at the end of December. States with outstanding federal Unemployment Insurance (UI) Trust Fund loans would be relieved from interest payments due by September 2012, contingent upon their agreement to maintain the amount, duration and access to state funded unemployment compensation.

Agreement to this “non-reduction clause” would also apply to Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) employer tax increases that are due in January 2012 in states with outstanding UI Trust Fund loans. States without an outstanding federal UI Trust Fund loan would receive a 2 percent increase on the interest paid on their trust fund balances in 2012.

Appropriations Moving Forward

The two houses are likely to conference the recently passed minibus appropriations bill passed by the Senate earlier this week. That bill, which includes funding for Agriculture, Commerce-Justice-Science and Transportation and Housing and Urban Development, passed the Senate 69-30. If an agreement can be reached, the minibus may form the basis for a continuing resolution (CR) to keep the government running past November 18 when the current CR expires. The Senate meanwhile may take up a second minibus next week that includes funding for Energy and Water programs, Financial Services and State Department and foreign operations.

Senate to Vote on Competing Transportation Bills

Today, the Senate will consider two transportation and infrastructure bills (S. 1769, S. 1786). One measure would provide $60 billion for transportation spending, offset with a 0.7 percent increase in taxes on certain incomes in excess of $1 million. It would also provide $50 billion for spending on roads, bridges, airports, railroads and transit systems, plus $10 billion in seed money to create a national infrastructure bank. The other proposal, introduced Wednesday by Orrin G. Hatch, (R-Utah) would extend certain surface transportation programs through the end of fiscal 2012. The proposal is paid for by rescinding $40 billion in unobligated discretionary funds.

Legislative Focus: 3 Percent Withholding, Health Care Programs Eligibility, EU Emissions Reduction

The House returns from recess this week to take up a number of measures, including a bill to repeal a law that requires 3 percent withholding on payments for government contractors, and legislation related to eligibility for health insurance exchange subsidies, Medicaid and the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP).

The House is expected to begin the week with consideration of several measures under suspension of the rules, including a bill (H.R. 2594) to prohibit operators of U.S. civil aircraft from participating in the European Union emissions schemes, and six other bills, including public lands transfers measures. The House will also consider additional legislation under suspension of the rules, including IRS code legislation and an Arizona land conveyance bill (H.R. 1904).

Wednesday, the House is scheduled to take up a bill that would modify adjusted gross income levels for the purpose of determining eligibility for certain health care-related programs. The House Ways and Means Committee approved the bill on a vote of 23-12. The measure would modify the definition of income for determining eligibility for health insurance exchange subsidies, Medicaid, and CHIP. The provision is the same as one included in President Obama's deficit reduction plan. The bill would amend Section 36B of the tax code to include the non-taxable portion of Social Security benefits in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act's definition of modified adjusted gross income for determining eligibility.

The House is expected to vote on the 3 percent withholding repeal legislation (H.R. 674) at 9:00 a.m. on Thursday. That bill was approved by the House Ways and Means Committee on October 13. The House Rules Committee is expected to meet October 25 to discuss floor debate for both H.R. 674 and H.R. 2576.

Senate Floor. The Senate is in recess this week.

House Floor. The House convenes today at 2:00 p.m. for legislative business and to take up 7 measures under suspension of the rules. Tuesday, and for the remainder of the week, the House will take up three measures under suspension of the rules and three measures subject to a rule. The House is not in session on Friday.

September’s State and Regional Unemployment Rates Released

On Friday, the U.S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that 25 states experienced unemployment rate decreases in September, while 14 states recorded rate increases and another 11 states saw no change. One territory saw its jobless rate drop 0.9 percent to 15.1 percent in September. The national jobless rate remained at 9.1 percent for the third month in a row and was 0.5 percentage points lower than a year earlier. The regional jobless rate was highest in the West at 10.4 percent, despite a 0.2 percent drop over the previous month. Unemployment rates in both the South (9.1 percent) and the Midwest (8.7 percent) remained unchanged for the second month in a row, while the Northeast recorded the lowest rate of 8.2 percent, which is unchanged since July. #### House CR Clarifies Full-Year Cuts to WIA Statewide Activities Funding

The House proposed FY2012 continuing resolution (H.J. Res. 79) amends a provision in the Department of Defense and Full-Year Continuing Appropriations Act of 2011 to clarify the congressional intent of a two-thirds reduction to the 15 percent set-aside for statewide activities under the Workforce Investment Act (WIA). The original language in the FY2011 bill was unclear, and the U.S. Department of Labor subsequently applied the cut to only a single quarter of the program year, pending further congressional action. The clarifying language in the proposed CR reduces funds for statewide activities under WIA from 15 percent to 5 percent for the entire 2011 fiscal year, amounting to approximately a $206 million reduction of funds for states. Under the bill, the funds that would have gone to states would be used in part to fund a new federal competitive grant program called the "Workforce Innovation Fund". The remaining savings would be passed down to local workforce areas. The state is required to perform certain mandated activities with the remaining 5 percent of the funds. To view the provision in H.J. Res. 79 see page 14, Sec. 134:

HHS Releases Information Regarding Partnership Options on Insurance Exchanges

The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) released additional information yesterday regarding opportunities for states to partner with the federal government to operate health insurance exchanges as required by the Affordable Care Act. Under the proposed partnership model, states may choose to perform health plan management, consumer assistance or both functions. If choosing to perform plan management, the state would conduct plan analysis, monitoring and data collection while the federal government would assist with consumer complaints and enrollment reconciliation. The consumer assistance model would allow the state to oversee in-person consumer assistance, manage the Navigator program to help individuals sign up for insurance and conduct outreach and education. The federal government would assist with functions that can be centralized such as call center operations and website management. These proposals were discussed yesterday during a meeting hosted by HHS for state health officials. HHS is seeking feedback on these proposals as states submit comments to the proposed rule on health exchange establishment for which the comment period closes on September 28, 2011.

Dept. of Ed Opens Statewide Data Systems Grant Competition

The U.S. Department of Education is calling for state education agencies that did not receive a fiscal year 2009 American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) grant to apply for a new Statewide Longitudinal Data Systems (SLDS) Grant Program. Grants will range from $1 million to $5 million for a three-year grant period. Although the basic requirements for the program are specified in the America COMPETES Act, this year's competition will require states to focus on one of three priority areas: early childhood data, K-12 or postsecondary and/or workforce data. Within each priority area, states must use grant funds to address minimum capacity requirements in three categories: governance and policy requirements, technical requirements and data use requirements. State applications are due by December 15, 2011. To view the grant solicitation visit:

President Unveils Jobs Plan Before Joint Session of Congress

Last night the President presented his plan to boost the economy and create jobs during a special joint-session of Congress. The plan calls for $447 billion in tax reductions and spending and is to be fully paid for by adding the amount to the total deficit reductions that are to be identified by the Select Committee. Highlights of the plan include reductions in employer payroll taxes and incentives for hiring new workers, an extension of the 100% expensing provisions for new capital investments in 2012; $35 billion for states to hire or rehire teachers and first responders; $30 billion to modernize schools; $50 billion for surface transportation and funds to establish an infrastructure bank. The proposal also includes reforms to the unemployment system and extends benefits and encourages wireless communications deployment and the creation of a nationwide, interoperable wireless system for first responders. #### Virginia Court Rejects Challenges to Health Reform Law

Yesterday, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit threw out two challenges to the federal health reform law by the State of Virginia and Liberty University. Both cases argued that the mandate in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) that requires nearly all Americans to buy health insurance is unconstitutional. In the case of Virginia ex rel. Cuccinelli v. Sebelius, the Court ruled that the state did not have standing to challenge PPACA because “the sole provision challenged here – the individual mandate – imposes no obligations” on the state itself. In the case of Liberty University Inc. v. Geithner, the court said the legal challenge was premature. ### Senate Approves Patent Reform Bill

The Senate yesterday approved 89-9 the House-passed version of the America Invents Act (H.R. 1249). The bill will shift the U.S. from a "first to invent" to a "first to file" standard, establish a first window post grant review, and allow third parties to provide information on pending applications. The Senate defeated three amendments that would have required all Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) fees be used for PTO purposes, removed a provision to establish a new review process for business-method patents and changed the way patent extensions are calculated. The bill now heads to the President's desk for signature.

President Urges Infrastructure Investments; FAA Extension Bill Introduction Expected in the House; THUD FY12 Appropriations Approved by House Panel

During last night's speech on the American Jobs Act, the President urged Congress to support an infrastructure bank aimed at attracting private capital to make loans for projects based on need and benefits to the economy, referencing the BUILD Act (S. 652) introduced by Senators John Kerry (D-Mass.) and Kay Bailey Hutchison (R-Tex.) in March. In other transportation news, text of a Federal Aviation Authorization (FAA) extension bill could be released by House Transportation and Infrastructure Chair John Mica (R-Fla.) as early as today. Finally, the House Appropriations Transportation-Housing and Urban Development (THUD) Subcommittee approved by voice vote fiscal year (FY) 2012 appropriations for THUD programs. The bill would cut federal-aid highways obligation limitation from $41.107 billion in FY11 to $27 billion in FY12 and mass transit obligation limits from $8.343 billion in FY11 to $5.2 billion in FY12, which is consistent with the House-passed Ryan (R-Wis.) budget plan and House Transportation and Infrastructure Chair Mica's reauthorization bill outline. The bill also would cut Amtrak operating funding, would eliminate TIGER discretionary surface transportation grants, and would not provide additional funding for high-speed rail or for a new National Infrastructure Bank. Text of the appropriations bill is available at:

USDA Announces School Meal Pilot Opportunity

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has announced an invitation to state agencies that administer the National School Lunch Program and School Breakfast Program to apply to participate in demonstration projects that will evaluate the effectiveness of directly certifying students eligible for free meals using the Medicaid program. The demonstration and evaluation projects will begin July 1, 2012, and will be phased in over a three year period in a limited number of LEAs and States across the country. To participate, states must notify USDA of their intent to apply by October 5, 2011 and applications will be due December 5, 2011. For more information, visit:

Administration Announces Efforts to Reduce Red Tape

Yesterday, the White House Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs announced that its efforts to reduce regulatory red tape could yield $10 billion in savings over the next five years. Earlier this year the Administration announced efforts to review all regulations with an objective of streamlining or eliminating regulations that are overly burdensome and not cost effective. Several agencies have proposed rules to make changes within their jurisdiction. Details of the agency plans are available at www.whitehouse.gov/21stcenturygov/actions/21st-century-regulatory-system.

HHS Considering Models for State-Federal Partnership on Health Exchanges

The Department of Health and Human Services is considering several models for state-federal partnership for states that choose not to run their own health insurance exchange as required by the Accountable Care Act. Several models being considered include one in which the state would establish and operate a small business health options program (SHOP) exchange and the federal government would operate an individual exchange. Other proposals include allowing the state to maintain responsibility for governance and policy decisions while allowing the federal government to operate the exchanges or allowing the state to create and operate the exchanges while having the federal government or a third party perform a variety of functions. It is anticipated that these proposals will be discussed next month at the NGA Center workshop on health exchanges as well as at a later meeting hosted by the Department of Health and Human Services.

The Departments of Health and Human Services (HHS) and Agriculture (USDA) announced new flexibilities for states to integrate eligibility determination systems for health and human services programs on Wednesday. As states develop new systems required to operate health insurance exchanges and implement other aspects of the Affordable Care Act by January 2014, they are encouraged to pursue an integrated eligibility system strategy that would allow other human services programs to be included at a later date. In a letter to states, HHS and USDA indicated that states may receive a time-limited exemption from federal cost allocation requirements to allow programs such as Temporary Assistance for Needy Families and the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program to utilize systems developed specifically for determining an individual's eligibility for health programs without sharing in the common system development costs. The exception will expire on December 31, 2015.

As states develop new systems required to operate health insurance exchanges and implement other aspects of the Affordable Care Act by January 2014, they are encouraged to pursue an integrated eligibility system strategy that would allow other human services programs to be included at a later date. In a letter to states, HHS and USDA indicated that states may receive a time-limited exemption from federal cost allocation requirements to allow programs such as Temporary Assistance for Needy Families and the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program to utilize systems developed specifically for determining an individual's eligibility for health programs without sharing in the common system development costs. The exception will expire on December 31, 2015.

NGA Correspondence/News Releases

1. August 4, 2011 letter (from Governor Heineman and Governor Markell) to House Judiciary Committee Chairman Lamar Smith and Ranking Member John Conyers urging Congress to oppose H.R.1439, the "Business Activity Tax Simplification Act of 2011". As with similar bills in previous Congresses, this bill represents an unwarranted federal intrusion into state affairs that will harm states' ability to manage their finances and assist in recovery.

FAA Shutdown Resolved This Morning

During today's pro forma session, the Senate approved under unanimous consent the House-passed Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) extension (H.R. 2553) through September 16, 2011, to end the FAA shutdown that began on July 23. H.R. 2553 includes provisions that would reduce Essential Air Services subsidies to some rural airports, but U.S. Department of Transportation Secretary LaHood is expected to use his authority to waive many of the targeted airports from the subsidy cuts.

FCC Requests Additional Comments on Universal Service Fund and Intercarrier Compensation Reform Proposals

The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) on Wednesday issued a further notice of inquiry in its federal Universal Service Fund (USF) and intercarrier compensation (ICC) reform proceeding after the agency voted in February to begin reforming the systems. The notice requests public comment on reform proposals the agency has received including the "America's Broadband Connectivity Plan" submitted last week by six major telecommunications firms, which proposes to establish two new universal service programs, the Connect America Fund and an Advanced Mobility/Satellite Fund, to subsidize broadband in high cost rural areas where broadband is unavailable. The FCC's inquiry includes questions on the state role in a new universal service structure, such as if states should collect information regarding customer complaints and whether states could assess certain eligibility triggers that would determine if a provider is eligible for universal service support under a new right-of-first-refusal model for incumbent providers. To view America's Broadband Connectivity Plan, please go to: <http://americasbroadbandconnectivity.org/the-plan/>. For more information on the FCC's inquiry, please go to:

Legislative Focus: Export-Import Bank, Defense Authorization, Mobile Workforce, Violence Against Women Act

The House is set to take up defense authorization the May 14 week, while the Senate is expected to continue work on legislation to reauthorize the Export-Import Bank.

The Senate is expected to begin the week with votes on several judicial nominations, including that of George Levi Russell III to be a U.S. district judge for Maryland, and John J. Tharp Jr. to be a U.S. district judge for the Northern District of Illinois. Once these votes are complete, the Senate will vote on a cloture motion on the Export-Import Bank reauthorization bill (H.R. 2072), which the House approved last week on a vote of 330-93. The bank's current charter is set to expire May 31.

If the Export-Import Bank legislation is approved, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.) has said he may bring up the Small Business Jobs and Tax Relief Act (S. 2237) this week. The bill would provide a temporary 100 percent depreciation credit for small businesses and offer a 10 percent tax credit for small firms that increase their payrolls through either new hires or wage increases during 2012. The maximum credit per employer would be capped at $500,000.

The House will spend most of the week on the FY 2013 Defense authorization bill (H.R. 4310), which cleared the House Armed Services Committee May 10. The measure authorizes $554 billion in funding for national defense activities of the Department of Defense and defense-related programs in the Department of Energy. An additional $88 billion in funding was authorized for overseas contingency operations, bringing the total authorization level to $642 billion. The House Rules Committee is scheduled to meet May 15 to consider a rule for the floor debate of the DOD bill.

The House is also expected to consider several measures under suspension of the rules, including a bill (H.R. 365) that would create a stronger nationwide network for "blue alerts," public announcements made when law enforcement officers are either injured or killed in the line of duty. In addition, the House will take up the Mobile Workforce State Income Tax Simplification Act (H.R. 1864), which would limit the authority of states to tax the income of non-resident employees who work for a limited amount of time in the state, allowing such individuals to be taxed only if they work in the state for 31 days or more.

The House also plans to take up the Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act (H.R. 4970), depending on action by the House Rules Committee.

Senate Floor. The Senate convenes at 2:00 p.m. today and is expected to consider Export-Import Bank reauthorization legislation and several judicial nominations.

House Floor. The House is not in session today but will convene at 2:00 p.m. Tuesday to take up 11 measures under suspension of the rules, including the Mobile Workforce bill (H.R. 1864). Wednesday, and for the remainder of the week, the House is scheduled to consider two measures subject to a rule, including the Defense authorization bill.

House Passes CJS Appropriations Bill

The House of Representatives passed H.R. 5326, the Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2013 last week by a vote of 247-163. The bill provides $24.9 billion for the Department of Justice, an increase of approximately $11 billion above the FY 2012 level. State and local law enforcement assistance programs would receive $962.5 million, including $392 million for the Byrne JAG program and $165 million for the State Criminal Alien Assistance Program. Ahead of final passage, an amendment offered by Rep. Michael Grimm (R-N.Y.) was approved that increased funding for the Community Oriented Policing Services hiring program to $166 million, the same as the FY 2012 levels. A second amendment offered by Rep. Jon Runyan (R-Mich.) increased funding for the Office of Violence Against Women to $420 million, an increase of approximately $8 million above the FY 2012 level. The Senate is expected to take up its bill in the next few weeks. A final version of the House passed bill can be found here.

1. House Passes Department of Energy Appropriations Bill

House Passes Department of Energy Appropriations Bill

Last week, the House approved the Energy and Water appropriations bill which funds the Department of Energy (DOE), the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Land Management. The overall cost of the bill is $1 billion less than fiscal year 2011 levels. The proposal would reduce $141 million from the Weatherization Assistance Program (WAP) for a total of $33 million. The Committee report stated that the DOE has the authority to alter the WAP funding formula to give the funds to states that spent all of their Weatherization funds provided in the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA). The House passed by voice vote an amendment by Representative Todd Young (R-Ind.) to prohibit the use of funds to pay DOE employees for implementation of WAP funds received through ARRA. The bill proposes to reduce funding to the State Energy Program by half for a total of $25 million. Overall the office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy (EERE) would receive $491 million less than fiscal year 2011; fossil energy research would receive an increase of $32 million over fiscal year 2011 levels and the DOE Loan Guarantee program would receive an increase of $160 million. The Corps of Engineers would receive an increase of $706 million for its Operations and Maintenance and a decrease of $47 million for construction. With the exception of an amendment by Representative Marcy Kaptur (D-Ohio) to increase the EERE budget by $10 million with an offset to Departmental Administration, the House defeated a series of amendments that would have alternately reduced or increased funding to the EERE account. Many of the amendments would have transferred the savings to the spending reduction account. The House agreed to an amendment by Representative Adam Schiff (D-CA) that would increase funding for the Advanced Research Projects Agency-Energy program by decreasing funding for the Departmental Administration. The House defeated an amendment by Representative Jim Moran (D-Va.) to strike language that prohibits funds from being used by the Corps to implement new guidance related to the definition of Waters of the U.S. The House passed by voice vote an amendment by Representative Bill Flores (R-Tex.) to prohibit the use of funds to enforce a law that prohibits federal agencies from procuring synthetic fuel unless its life-cycle greenhouse gas emissions are less than those for conventional petroleum sources. The House also passed an amendment by Representative Brad Sherman (D-CA) to prohibit the use of funds to be used for any portion of EERE's international activities in China.

Yesterday, the House Appropriations Committee, Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Appropriations Subcommittee held a hearing on the Department of Labor's budget request for fiscal year 2013. Chairman Rehberg (R-Mont.) questioned Secretary of Labor Solis specifically about the governor's set-aside under the Workforce Investment Act. Secretary Solis indicated that set-aside funds have been moved to support other programs. Rehberg noted that reducing the set-aside from 15% to 5% was not intended to be permanent, and that the subcommittee would be closely examining the status of the set-aside during this year's appropriation's deliberations.

The justices considered three positions: (1) if the mandate goes the entire law must be struck down, (2) if the mandate is unconstitutional other sections of the law must be struck down too, or (3) if the mandate is struck down the rest of the law still stands. *National Federation of Independent Business, et al. v. Sebelius and Florida, et al. v. #### House Budget Released

House Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan (R-Wisc.) released the House FY 2013 budget proposal yesterday calling for changes to the tax code and entitlement programs along with cuts in spending. The plan calls for $3.530 trillion in spending for 2013 and $2.734 trillion in revenues, generating a deficit of $797 billion for the fiscal year. Non-defense domestic spending is set at $1.028 trillion, which is below the $1.047 limit put in place by the Budget Control Act. The plan also calls for six House committees to come up with $261 billion in spending cuts over the next 11 years, block grants the Medicaid program and reduces the number of individual income tax brackets from six to two.

Senate Votes On JOBS Amendment, Export-Import Bank Reauthorization

The Senate yesterday failed to approve two amendments relating to the House-passed JOBS Act (H.R. 3606). The first was a Democratic substitute to address concerns regarding investor protections in the JOBS Act. The second was an amendment by Senator Cantwell (D-Wash.) that would have reauthorized the Export-Import Bank through 2015 and gradually increase its current loan limit from $100 billion to $140 billion. The Senate is scheduled to proceed to a cloture vote today on the underlying JOBS Act, which is a package of six bills designed to help startups and entrepreneurs access capital and create jobs. NGA Contacts: David Parkhurst, 202-624-5328; Rachael Mason, 202-624-5376

Workforce Investment Act Reauthorization Bill Introduced

Yesterday, U.S. Representatives John Tierney (D-Mass.), Ruben Hinojosa (D-Tex.), and George Miller (D-Calif.) introduced a bill to reauthorize the Workforce Investment Act (WIA) of 1998. According to the bill sponsors, the Workforce Investment Act of 2012 aims to streamline workforce programs and will require states to establish unified plans to coordinate job training, adult education and postsecondary education programs. The legislation also establishes performance measures for WIA programs and expands access for adults, youth and disabled individuals. The bill comes one week prior to Secretary of Labor Solis' scheduled appearance before the Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee on proposed fiscal 2013 appropriations.

President Obama Signs Payroll Tax Bill

President Obama yesterday signed the "Middle Class Tax Relief and Job Creation Act", which extends the payroll tax holiday through the end of the year. The bill also extends Unemployment Insurance benefits, prevents the scheduled cut in Medicare payments to doctors, and includes the reallocation of the D-block to public safety; a long-time priority of NGA. In addition, the bill extends through the end of 2012 the Medicare qualified individual (QI) programs for states to cover Part B premiums for qualifying seniors, and transitional medical assistance (TMA) for low-income families who are transitioning into employment. The bill also extends the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) program for one year. The House and Senate approved the bill February 17.

CMS Releases Two Final Rules

Yesterday, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services released two final rules pursuant to the Affordable Care Act of 2010 (ACA). The first rule codifies requirements to increase transparency of the Medicaid waiver development and approval processes at the state and federal levels. The second rule outlines the steps states may pursue in order for a state to receive a state innovation waiver to provide comprehensive, affordable health insurance under section 1332 of the ACA. The final rule for Section 1115 may be found here. The final rule for Section 1332 may be found here.

HHS Announces Affordable Insurance Exchange Grants

Yesterday, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) announced nearly $229 million in Affordable Insurance Exchange awards to help create Health Insurance Exchanges (Exchanges) in Arkansas, Colorado, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Tennessee. HHS anticipates these awards will give recipients increased resources and flexibility in developing their respective Exchanges. For the HHS press release, visit this link.

Supreme Court Issues Opinion in Medicaid Case

The U.S. Supreme Court yesterday in a 5-4 decision sidestepped whether, under the Supremacy Clause, private parties may pursue legal action against a state law that the parties believe federal law preempted, even if the underlying federal law does not create a direct right to take legal action. Douglas v. Independent Living Center of Southern California (No. 09-958, consolidated) involved new California laws that reduced the reimbursement rates paid to Medicaid providers and beneficiaries. Those providers and beneficiaries argued that the California statutes violated federal Medicaid law and secured temporary injunctions blocking implementation. Before the Court heard the case last October, however, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) in an administrative action held that the California statutes did not violate federal Medicaid law. The Court's opinion yesterday vacated the injunctions and remanded the cases back to the Ninth Circuit for the parties to argue the legality of the California laws subject now to the HHS administrative decision. This would change the legal standard of review and increase judicial deference to the HHS decision, making it very difficult for the parties to win. Chief Justice Roberts, in dissent, argued that there was no private right of action permitted under federal Medicaid law and that the Supremacy Clause does not provide a default right of action. NGA filed an amicus curiae brief in support of California in this case.

Also yesterday, the U.S. Supreme Court, in a unanimous opinion, reversed a Montana Supreme Court decision that a power company owed the State nearly $41 million in rent for eight years of riverbed use (PPL Montana, LLC v. Montana [No. 10-218]). In 2003, parents of Montana schoolchildren filed a federal suit claiming that the power company's dam facilities were on riverbeds that were state-owned and part of Montana's school trust lands. The Court held that the Montana Supreme Court misinterpreted its rules of navigability-in-fact for title under the "equal footing"

2012 NGA Winter Meeting Information

Advance Registration for the NGA 2012 Winter Meeting closed at Noon (EST) on Wednesday, February 22, 2012. You may register onsite at the JW Marriott Hotel beginning at 8:00 a.m. Saturday, February 25. Contact the hotel (202-393-2000) directly if you need housing; however, you may find the hotel is sold out on some nights during the meeting and if rooms are available, they may be at a rate higher than the NGA meeting rate.

Program Information

The websites contain information on the business agenda for the meeting. Be sure to check again during the coming weeks for program updates.

Housing Information

Special reduced rates are available through the NGA housing block at the JW Marriott Hotel. Attendees are encouraged to book their hotel rooms online through the NGA websites. By using the Marriott room block reserved for NGA attendees, you are helping the association better manage meeting costs.

Special Registration and Security Notice

Each meeting attendee must present two forms of identification, including a current, government issued photo id (driver's license or passport), to have photo ID credentials made and receive meeting materials. The second form of identification must confirm the individual's business affiliation (business card or organizational ID); personal credit cards are not a valid form of identification. Security personnel will be stationed throughout the meeting facility, and NGA meeting credentials will be required to access the meeting room floors. No exceptions will be made.

President Obama Denies Keystone Permit

Yesterday, the Obama Administration declined to issue a permit for the Keystone XL pipeline which was to carry oil from Canada's tar sands to the U.S. Gulf of Mexico. The President had a Congressionally-mandated deadline of February 21 to make the decision. TransCanada, the pipeline company, can reapply for the permit with an alternative route that must be negotiated with the State of Nebraska.

Yesterday, in a 236 to 176 vote, the House passed H.J. Res. 98 disapproving the $1.2 trillion increase in the debt limit to $16.394 trillion. The resolution is not expected to pass in the Senate. Should the resolution pass in the Senate, it is not likely that either house could get the two-thirds majority needed to override President Obama's expected veto.

House to Call for Conference on Payroll Tax Extension

The House Rules Committee approved two rules last night to govern today's debate on extending the payroll tax cut. H.Res.501 supports passage of the House version of H.R.3630. H.Res.502 rejects the Senate version of H.R. 3630 and calls for a conference with the Senate. The Rules Committee defeated an amendment to allow for an up or down vote of the Senate's two-month extension. Votes are expected this morning after 10:30 a.m.

HHS Releases Bulletin on Essential Health Benefits for Insurance Exchanges

Last week, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) released a bulletin outlining proposed policies for “essential health benefits” to ensure that health insurance plans offered in the individual and small group markets provide a comprehensive scope of benefits and services, both inside and outside of health insurance exchanges. States must ensure the essential health benefits package covers at least ten categories of care (including preventive care, emergency services, maternity care, hospital and physician services and prescription drugs) or be equal in scope to the benefits and services covered by a typical employer plan in their state. For benchmarking, states would choose one health insurance plan (from the three largest small group plans in the state by enrollment; the three largest state employee health plans by enrollment; the three largest federal employee health plan options by enrollment; or the largest HMO plan offered in the state’s commercial market by enrollment). The default benchmark health insurance plan would be the small group plan with the largest enrollment in the state. The benefits and services included in the benchmark health insurance plan would be the essential health benefits package for the state. Plans could modify coverage within a benefit category so long as they do not reduce the value of coverage. States would defray the cost of benefits required by state law in excess of essential health benefits for individuals enrolled in any plan offered through an exchange. To view the HHS bulletin, visit http://cciio.cms.gov/resources/files/Files2/12162011/essential\_health\_benefits\_bulletin.pdf. #### D Block Legislation Released in the House

The House Energy and Commerce Committee released draft spectrum legislation yesterday that will be marked up by the Communications and Technology Subcommittee tomorrow. The draft legislation -- the "Jumpstarting Opportunity through Broadband Spectrum Act of 2011" (JOBS Act) -- is sponsored by Subcommittee Chairman Greg Walden (R-Ore.) and would reallocate the D block to public safety, provide up to $6.5 billion to help states construct the nationwide public safety broadband network and establish a national Administrator and National Planning Board to govern the nationwide network. The bill would also require public safety to give back the 12 MHz of narrowband spectrum they currently hold in the 700 MHz band once standards are developed to allow public safety voice communications over broadband networks. The narrowband spectrum is adjacent to the public safety broadband spectrum and is currently used for interoperable voice communications. Also yesterday, Representatives Waxman (D-Calif.) and Eshoo (D-Calif.), the ranking members of the full committee and subcommittee, respectively, introduced spectrum legislation. Their legislation, the "Public Safety Broadband and Wireless Innovation Act of 2011", is very similar to the bipartisan Senate legislation that passed the Senate Commerce Committee this summer. The Waxman-Eshoo bill would reallocate the D block, provide $11 billion to construct the network and establish a national corporation to help govern the nationwide network and ensure nationwide coverage and interoperability.

HHS Announces Affordable Insurance Exchange Grants

Yesterday, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) announced nearly $220 million in Affordable Insurance Exchange awards to help create Health Insurance Exchanges (Exchanges) in Alabama, Arizona, Delaware, Hawaii, Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Michigan, Nebraska, New Mexico, Rhode Island, Tennessee and Vermont. HHS anticipates these awards will give recipients increased resources and flexibility in developing their respective Exchanges. As part of this announcement, HHS also released Frequently Asked Questions (FAQ) to address common questions states may have as they continue to develop policies to support Exchange implementation. The FAQ addresses a number of concerns, including costs states may incur, the use of a Federally-managed data services hub, and processes for Medicaid eligibility determination. #### House Approves Senate-Amended Three Percent Withholding Repeal

By a 422-0 vote, the House last night approved H.R. 674, as amended by the Senate last week, to repeal the 3 percent withholding requirement on government payments to vendors that provide goods and services. The Senate amendments provided employer incentives to hire military veterans. President Obama is expected to sign the bill. First enacted in 2006, implementation of the 3 percent provision was delayed by a series of temporary postponements.

House Passes Conceal-and-Carry Legislation

The House passed H.R. 822, the National Right-to-Carry Act of 2011, on Wednesday on a vote of 272-154. Under the legislation, states that issue conceal-and-carry weapons permits would be required to recognize permits issued by other states. Jurisdictions that prohibit the issuance of concealed weapons permits are exempt from the bill. Any conditions and limitations concerning the carry of concealed weapons set by a state would apply to both residents and non-residents. Individuals unable to obtain a permit in their home state would not be able to carry a concealed weapon by obtaining a permit in another state. Currently, no similar legislation to H.R. 822 has been introduced in the Senate.

EPA and DOT Propose New Fuel Economy Standards

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and the Department of Transportation (DOT) announced yesterday a joint proposal to increase fuel economy and greenhouse gas standards for model year 2017-2025 passenger cars and light trucks. The proposal will require fleet wide fuel efficiency of 54.5 mpg by 2025, an increase of about 5 percent annually for passenger cars. Light trucks will have a lower target of 44 mpg by 2025, while passenger cars will have to meet a 62 mpg target. According to DOT/EPA estimates, by 2025 the new standards are expected to save drivers $1.7 trillion, nearly $8,000 per vehicle, and reduce oil usage by 12 billion barrels. Current fuel efficiency standards stand at just over 27 mpg and are scheduled to rise to 35.2 mpg by 2016. The proposal has a 60-day comment period. A final rule is expected next July. LEGISLATIVE FOCUS: FY 2012 APPROPRIATIONS, ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION, PATENT REFORM

The Senate is slated to spend the week on bills related to the Economic Development Administration while the House returns from recess to take up appropriations bills.

The Senate this week will take up the Economic Development Revitalization Act of 2011 (S. 782), which would authorize EDA programs for five years, extending funding for programs that fund infrastructure investments in economically distressed communities. The Senate began consideration of the bill last week, rejecting an amendment that would have delayed new Federal Reserve rules on debit card interchange fees. The Senate is scheduled to resume consideration of the bill June 14, with several additional amendments still pending.

The Senate also plans to consider the nominations of Claire C. Cecchi and Esther Salas, both to be U.S. district judges for New Jersey.

The House is expected to spend most of the June 13 week working on FY 2012 appropriations measures. The House will first resume consideration of the Military Construction, Veterans Affairs and Related Agencies bill (H.R. 2055), which includes $72.5 billion in discretionary funding, a decrease of $615 million compared to last year's funding level and $1.2 billion below the president's FY 2012 budget request. The proposed reduction in spending comes from declined funding for the Base Realignment and Closure process and projected savings in construction costs. The House is also scheduled to take up Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act (H.R. 2112), which includes $125.5 billion in funding for the Department of Agriculture and its related agencies. The version of the bill approved May 31 by the House Appropriations Committee cuts discretionary spending by approximately $2.7 billion from FY 2011, and is $5 billion less than the president's request. The agriculture bill could come to the House floor by June 15.

The House is also slated to consider the America Invents Act (H.R. 1249) this week, which would amend federal patent law by awarding patents for claimed inventions to the first person to file an application for a patent. The current system awards patents to the first inventor.

SENATE FLOOR. The Senate is set to convene at 2:00 p.m. today with no roll call votes expected. Tuesday, and for the balance of the week, the Senate is scheduled to take up two judicial nominations and economic development programs legislation.

HOUSE FLOOR. The House convenes at 2:00 p.m. today to take up the Military Construction-VA spending bill, subject to a rule. Tuesday, and for the balance of the week, the House is scheduled to consider the Agriculture appropriations bill, subject to a rule, and patent law overhaul legislation. The House is not in session Friday.

Legislative Focus: Continuing Resolution, FISA Extension, Veterans Job Corps

Congress returns from a five-week break today for a brief but busy session before recessing again for campaign season in early October. Both the House and Senate this week are expected to work on a stopgap spending measure this month, as well as a number of other “must-do” bills including drought relief, tax extenders, Cybersecurity and Russia trade relations.

House leadership is expected to bring a continuing resolution to the floor this week that would fund most federal programs through March 31. Under a deal reached prior to the August recess, the bill is expected to reflect provisions in the Budget Control Act, with a funding level at $1.047 trillion. However, the agreement only addressed the overall funding amount and length of the extension; exact program funding levels and other details have yet to be worked out. Senate staff have indicated that, based on the Congressional schedule, House and Senate leadership must work out the details of the bill by September 14 for the House to approve the bill next week and send it to the Senate for consideration by the September 30 deadline.

The House is also set to debate 33 measures under suspension of the rules, which are expected to take up the first half of the week. Among the measures is the SAFE WEB Act (H.R. 6131), which would extend spam and spyware control regulations and allow the Federal Trade Commission to share cross-border fraud information with foreign consumer protection agencies; a bill to create an electronic tracking system to track hazardous waste shipments (S. 710); and a federal campaign finance measure (H.R. 406). The House may take up legislation (H.R. 5949) to reauthorize the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) Amendments Act for five years. The statute is slated to expire at the end of this year.

The Senate will begin the week considering the nomination of Stephanie Marie Rose to be a U.S. district court judge for the Southern District of Iowa. Tuesday, the Senate is scheduled to hold a cloture vote on the motion to proceed to a bill (S. 3457) that would direct the secretary of veterans affairs to create a veterans job corps.

Action on many other items is likely to be postponed until the lame-duck session, including a farm bill and legislation to reform the U.S. Postal Service, as well as decisions to address the “fiscal cliff”.

Senate Floor. The Senate convenes at 2:00 p.m. today with roll call votes expected on a judicial nomination. Tuesday, and for the remainder of the week, the Senate is expected to consider a veterans’ jobs bill.

House Floor. The House convenes at 2:00 p.m. today to take up 11 measures under suspension of the rules. Tuesday, and for the balance of the week, the House is set to 21 measures under suspension of the rules and five measures subject to a rule.

Re: The Transfer of Information Technology Systems for the Federally-Facilitated Exchange to State Exchanges

Issue

The National Governors Association (“NGA”) recently requested a legal analysis on the issue of whether the Department of Health and Human Services (“HHS”) may provide to a state information technology (“IT”) systems that private contractors are currently building (or have built) for a “Federally-facilitated Exchange.”<sup>1</sup> In other words, the NGA would like to confirm whether there is a legal path through which HHS can “transfer” these IT systems to the states. Currently, there is question as to whether Federal procurement law prohibits HHS from transferring to the states property of the Federal government acquired through private contracts.

Executive Summary

Based on the following, in general, HHS is not prohibited from transferring to a state any or all of the IT systems built for the Federally-facilitated Exchange. Unless otherwise specified in the contract with a private vendor or in cases where the IT systems are developed at private expense, HHS owns, and has unlimited rights to, the IT systems created for the Federally-facilitated Exchange. As a result, HHS is permitted to allow others to use the IT systems, including the states.

Under the law, an effective way of transferring the IT systems to the states is through a grant. It is important to emphasize that a grant may be in the form of property (instead of money). The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act,<sup>2</sup> as amended by the Health Care and Education Reconciliation Act<sup>3</sup> (“ACA”) gives HHS grant making authority to make awards to states to help states “establish” a State-based Exchange. In this case, HHS may grant the IT systems to the states that are seeking such capabilities as they work toward establishing their Exchange.

<sup>1</sup> See 45 C.F.R. § 155.105(f) (providing that if a state chooses not to establish an Exchange or a state does not have an approved or conditionally approved Exchange by January 1, 2013, the Department of Health and Human Services (“HHS”) must establish and operate an Exchange within the state (i.e., a Federally-facilitated Exchange)); see also, Developing the Federally-Facilitated Exchange, HHS, Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, Center for Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight, State Exchange Grantee Meeting, September 19-20, 2011.

Analysis

The contract between HHS and a private contractor to build IT systems for a Federally-facilitated Exchange is a procurement contract.

It has been reported that HHS recently contracted with private vendors to create and support the integral IT systems for the Federally-facilitated Exchange. In this case, it appears that any contract to build IT systems for the Federally-facilitated Exchange would be considered a “procurement contract” as defined under the Federal Grants and Cooperative Agreements Act.<sup>4</sup> Specifically, a procurement contract is used when “the principle purpose of the instrument is to acquire (by purchase, lease, or barter) property or services for the direct benefit or use of the United States Government.”<sup>5</sup> In the case of the IT systems for the Federally-facilitated Exchange, the principal purpose of awarding a contract to a private vendor is to acquire the IT systems so that the United States Government (i.e., HHS) can use this property for the benefit of HHS (i.e., to operate the Federally-facilitated Exchange). Thus, it is reasonable to characterize this type of contract as a procurement contract.

HHS has “unlimited rights” to the IT systems for the Federally-facilitated Exchange.

In general, a procurement contract between HHS and a private vendor is governed by HHS Acquisition Regulations<sup>6</sup> and the Federal Acquisition Regulations (“FAR”).<sup>7</sup> Under the FAR, the Federal government generally retains unlimited rights in all “data” produced and delivered in the performance of a contract with the Federal government at public expense (as compared to private expense).<sup>8</sup> Data is defined as recorded information, technical data, or computer software.<sup>9</sup> Computer software means computer programs, computer databases, and related documentation.<sup>10</sup> Technical data means data other than computer software which are of a scientific or technical nature.<sup>11</sup> In cases where the Federal government has unlimited rights to such data, the government may use, disclose, reproduce, and prepare derivative works in any manner and for any purpose and to have or permit others to do so.<sup>12</sup> Conversely, data developed at private expense confers fewer rights to the Federal government and will typically require the Federal government to pay a license fee.

Based on the facts as we know them, the IT systems for the Federally-facilitated Exchange will be developed solely with funds provided by the Federal government and the contract terms do not confer proprietary rights to the private vendor. As a result, because HHS's contracts to build IT systems for the Federally-facilitated Exchange are governed by the FAR, and because it is reasonable to conclude that the IT systems for the Federally-facilitated Exchange would constitute "data," "computer software," and/or "technical data" (as those terms are defined under the FAR), HHS generally has unlimited rights to the IT systems. Therefore, HHS has the ability to use these systems in any manner HHS deems appropriate without being subject to a license fee. HHS may also allow others to, for example, use the IT systems. Specifically, HHS could, in its discretion, permit states to use the IT systems.

HHS can "transfer" the IT systems for the Federally-facilitated Exchange to the states through grants.

The Federal government and states enter into agreements or other contractual arrangements for a myriad of reasons. One such reason is for the Federal government to provide "assistance" to the states. Federal assistance to the states can come in many forms. One such form of assistance is a "grant." A grant is a contractual arrangement where "the principal purpose of the relationship is to transfer a thing of value to [a] State or local government or other recipient to carry out a public purpose of support or stimulation authorized by a law of the United States...and substantial involvement is not expected between the executive agency and the State...when carrying out the activity contemplated in the agreement."<sup>13</sup> The Intergovernmental Cooperation Act defines a grant as "money, or property instead of money, that is paid or provided by the United States Government under a fixed annual or total authorization, to" an eligible beneficiary, which includes state and local governments.<sup>14</sup> Thus, a Federal grant that may be made to a state may include property.<sup>15</sup>

While Federal agencies generally have "inherent" authority to enter into contracts to procure goods or services for their own use, there is no comparable inherent authority to enter into assistance relationships, that is, to give away the government's money or property, either directly or by the release of vested rights, to benefit someone other than the government.<sup>16</sup> To do so, the assistance relationship must be authorized under Federal legislation.<sup>17</sup> Under the ACA, the Secretary of HHS has authority to make grant awards out of appropriated funds in amounts determined by the Secretary to be used by the states "for activities (including planning activities) relating to establishing an [Exchange]."<sup>18</sup> The authorizing language makes no specification that the grant award cannot be property.

In the case of the IT systems owned by HHS and used for the Federally-facilitated Exchange (i.e., property), HHS may enter into a grant agreement with a state to “transfer” a “thing of value” (i.e., the IT systems) “to carry out a stimulation authorized by a law of the United States” (i.e., establish a State-based Exchange as required under the ACA).<sup>19</sup> It is not expected that HHS will have substantial involvement in establishing a State-based Exchange, provided the state meets the statutory deadline for receiving “approval” to operate a State-based Exchange.<sup>20</sup> HHS may value the IT systems (i.e., place a dollar amount on such systems) and debit that amount from the appropriations set aside for providing assistance to states to “establish” a State-based Exchange.

<sup>19</sup> An argument can also be made that the grant is being made to “carry out a public purpose,” which is establishing a State-based Exchange to meet the public policy goal of expanding health insurance coverage.

GOP on health care: Repeal quickly, replace slowly

By David Espo Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional Republicans intend to seek quick repeal of any parts of the health care law that survive a widely anticipated Supreme Court ruling, but don't plan to push replacement measures until after the fall elections or perhaps 2013.

Instead, GOP lawmakers cite recent announcements that some insurance companies will retain a few of the law's higher-profile provisions as evidence that quick legislative action is not essential. Those are steps that officials say Republicans quietly urged in private conversations with the industry.

Once the Supreme Court issues a ruling, "the goal is to repeal anything that is left standing," said Sen. John Barrasso, R-Wyo., a member of the party's leadership.

Beyond that, "we ought to go step by step to lower the cost" of health care, he added, a formula repeated by numerous other Republicans interviewed in recent days.

Across the political aisle, neither President Barack Obama nor congressional Democrats have said how they will react to a high court ruling that could wipe out the legislation they worked so hard to enact.

"We're not spending a whole bunch of time planning for contingencies," Obama said this spring at the annual meeting of The Associated Press. He expressed confidence the court would uphold the law, and neither he nor his aides have said what fallback plans are under discussion. "We will be prepared in any eventuality," White House aide David Plouffe said Sunday on ABC's "This Week," although he declined to elaborate.

Among Republicans, aides to Speaker John Boehner, Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell and other key lawmakers have convened a series of meetings in recent weeks to plan a post-ruling strategy.

A Supreme Court ruling is expected within the next two weeks on a challenge to the law, which has drawn fierce opposition among most Republicans for its requirement that most individuals carry health insurance.

While three big insurance companies announced plans this past week to retain certain protections for an estimated 40 percent of all individuals who receive their coverage through work, there has been no advance word from the drug industry on how prescription costs for older people might be affected by a finding that the law is unconstitutional.

Even so, Republicans say they have no plans for assuring continuity of a provision that reduces out-of-pocket costs for seniors with high drug expenses. This coverage gap is known as "doughnut hole."

"I don't think anybody intends to get involved" in the portion of Medicare that provides prescription drug coverage. The program is "working better than we designed it," said Sen. Richard Burr, R-N.C., referring to studies that show the program's cost is lower than was originally estimated.

The drug industry has yet to disclose its plans.

House Republicans have voted 30 times to eliminate, defund or scale back parts or all of the health law, most recently approving a measure to wipe out a tax on medical devices.

Senate Democrats have blocked nearly all of the previous attacks. Forcing another vote would allow Republicans to signal a continued commitment to supporters of repeal, while simultaneously requiring Democrats to take another stand on a measure that has failed to generate significant public support and might by then also have been found deficient by the Supreme Court.

"Democrats don't want to talk about health care between now and the election, especially Obamacare," said Don Stewart, a spokesman for McConnell, referring to the law signed in 2010.

Many members of the GOP rank and file campaigned on a motto of "repeal and replace" in 2010 when it came to the law. But now, nearly two years later, they express no urgency to replace a law drafted by Democrats, and one they hope the court will kill, with a different one of their own.

"We're not going to repeat the mistakes made by the Democrats who run Washington when they passed a 2,700-page bill that no one had actually read," said Michael Steel, a spokesman for Boehner, R-Ohio.

While Republicans say the recent insurance industry announcements eased the political pressure on them to act, some cited other reasons for moving carefully on replacement legislation.

With the party united around repeal of the existing law, they said they want to avoid an internal squabble over the details of any replacement legislation, at least until after the elections this fall.

In addition, they want to wait until they know whether GOP presidential candidate Mitt Romney wins the White House in November.

Romney has provided few details about his plans for health care legislation. He supports repeal of the current law, in part citing a requirement for individuals to obtain coverage, even though as governor of Massachusetts he signed a law with a similar provision.

On one big-ticket item, Romney and House Republicans already have parted company.

Both criticize Obama and Democrats for cutting Medicare by $500 billion over the next decade as part of the health care law.

But Romney's aides say he wants to restore the money to Medicare, while the budget that the Republicans pushed through the House would instead put the money toward deficit reduction.

In interviews, several Republicans drew attention to recent announcement from a few insurers pledging to retain some recent changes regardless of a court ruling.

UnitedHealth Group, Humana and Aetna said that regardless of the court's ruling, they will continue to cover preventive care such as immunizations and screenings without requiring a copayment. They also said children up to age 26 may be covered through their parents' insurance plans.

Additionally, UnitedHealth Group Inc. and Humana Inc. said they will not reimpose lifetime dollar limits on benefits, a provision most important for patients with cancer and other expensive-to-treat diseases.

The actions left in question the fate of other provisions in the health care law, including a requirement for new coverage for children up to age 19 with existing medical conditions.

Nor do the voluntary announcements cover everyone.

United Health and Humana said their announcements would affect customers with individual policies and those who receive small-group coverage through work.

Workers and families who receive coverage from large employers that pay their own medical claims are unaffected. Those employers will make their own decisions how to respond to the court's ruling.

Neither company provided an estimate of how many of their customers would be affected by their announcement.

The nonpartisan Kaiser Family Foundation estimates that 60 percent of covered workers are in plans that are self-funded by their employers.

Obama Administration Policies Weakening Economy; GOP Plan Will Help Create More American Jobs

This week's headlines say it all: "Report: Private sector job market sluggish in May," "Home prices hit lowest level since April '09 in double dip," "U.S. economy: manufacturing slowdown the latest sign the recovery is faltering," "Signs point to an economy growing more slowly."

The Obama Administration's failed economic policies have piled more debt on the backs of our kids and grandkids, while failing to deliver on the 'stimulus' promise of more American jobs and stronger economic growth. Here's what news outlets and experts are saying about the impact the Obama Administration's policies – from the job-crushing ObamaCare law, to the mountain of debt, to the miles of red tape coming out of Washington – are having on the struggling economy:

- “Strong-Performing Economies Need Clarity. [President] Barack Obama Has Given Ours Indecision Stretching to the Horizon.” “It is sometimes unfair to tag presidents with blame for an underperforming economy. Not this time. This president made conscious policy choices during a deep recession to reorder vast swaths of American industry. Strong-performing economies need clarity. Barack Obama has given ours indecision stretching to the horizon. And economic growth, like a long gray day, sits still below 3%.” (Daniel Henninger, op-ed, "Obama's Cloud Economy," The Wall Street Journal, 6/2/11)

- President Obama's 'Stimulus' "Was a Complete Bust." "Aside from his explosion of federal deficits, Obama's economic policies to date have consisted of bullying businesses to help union allies, undermining economic confidence with ferocious, personal attacks on business lenders, and rolling out hundreds of suffocating new regulations. His $800 billion economic stimulus package was a complete bust. ... When will Obama acknowledge ownership of the economic problems he has mismanaged for the past 28 months, and try something different?" (Editorial, "Obama Has Only Himself to Blame for Economic Doldrums," The Washington Examiner, 6/2/11)
- "Extraordinarily Reckless Fiscal Profligacy Is Hurting Our Recovery." "Economists also widely believe that our extraordinarily reckless fiscal profligacy is hurting our recovery. From 2008 to 2010, the U.S. borrowed over $3.1 trillion. It will borrow another $1.5 trillion this year. At the same time, the Fed has added $2 trillion to its balance sheet, mostly to buy all that new debt. As Michael Pento, senior economist at Euro Pacific Capital, noted Wednesday, 'genuine government stimulus comes from low taxes, stable prices, reduced regulation and low debt. Our economic policymakers have scrupulously avoided such remedies.' Bingo." (Editorial, "U.S. Is Already in a Growth Recession," Investor's Business Daily, 6/2/11)
- "What's Lacking Here is Confidence." "If there was a serious pro-growth movement in Washington to accelerate tax-reform overhaul and pin-back regulatory barriers like the National Labor Relations Board war with Boeing, the EPA war against energy and the Obamacare threats that are too numerous to count, that just might revive the animal spirits. But what we know for sure is that small businesses are barely hiring today, and that brand new startups are few and far between. What's lacking here is confidence." (Larry Kudlow, "Boneheaded Stimulus Never Works," National Review, 6/1/11)

The new House majority has put forth A Plan for America's Job Creators that will help spur private-sector job creation and bolster the sluggish economic recovery. The plan builds on the GOP's Pledge to America and includes proposals to simplify the tax code for families and small business, boost American energy production, and rein in the red tape that is making it harder to create jobs. President Obama's solicitor general, defending the national health care law on Wednesday, told a federal appeals court that Americans who didn't like the individual mandate could always avoid it by choosing to earn less money.

Neal Kumar Katyal, the acting solicitor general, made the argument under questioning before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in Cincinnati, which was considering an appeal by the Thomas More Law Center. (Listen to oral arguments here.) The three-judge panel, which was comprised of two Republican-appointed judges and a Democratic-appointed judge, expressed more skepticism about the government's defense of the health care law than the Fourth Circuit panel that heard the Virginia-based Obamacare challenge last month in Richmond. The Fourth Circuit panel was made up entirely of Democrats, and two of the judges were appointed by Obama himself.

During the Sixth Circuit arguments, Judge Jeffrey Sutton, who was nominated by President George W. Bush, asked Kaytal if he could name one Supreme Court case which considered the same question as the one posed by the mandate, in which Congress used the Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution as a tool to compel action.

Kaytal conceded that the Supreme Court had “never been confronted directly” with the question, but cited the Heart of Atlanta Motel case as a relevant example. In that landmark 1964 civil rights case, the Court ruled that Congress could use its Commerce Clause power to bar discrimination by private businesses such as hotels and restaurants.

“They’re in the business,” Sutton pushed back. “They’re told if you’re going to be in the business, this is what you have to do. In response to that law, they could have said, ‘We now exit the business.’ Individuals don’t have that option.”

Kaytal responded by noting that there's a provision in the health care law that allows people to avoid the mandate.

“If we’re going to play that game, I think that game can be played here as well, because after all, the minimum coverage provision only kicks in after people have earned a minimum amount of income,” Kaytal said. “So it’s a penalty on earning a certain amount of income and self insuring. It’s not just on self insuring on its own. So I guess one could say, just as the restaurant owner could depart the market in Heart of Atlanta Hotel, someone doesn’t need to earn that much income. I think both are kind of fanciful and I think get at...”

Sutton interjected, “That wasn’t in a single speech given in Congress about this...the idea that the solution if you don’t like it is make a little less money.”

The so-called “hardship exemption” in the health care law is limited, and only applies to people who cannot obtain insurance for less than 8 percent of their income. So earning less isn't necessarily a solution, because it could then qualify the person for government-subsidized insurance.

Throughout the oral arguments, Kaytal struggled to respond to the panel's concerns about what the limits of Congressional power would be if the courts ruled that they have the ability under the Commerce Clause to force individuals to purchase something.

Sutton said it would be “hard to see this limit” in Congressional power if the mandate is upheld, and he honed in on the word “regulate” in the Commerce clause, explaining that the word implies you’re in a market. “You don’t put them in the market to regulate them,” he said.

In arguments before the Fourth Circuit last month, Kaytal also struggled with a judge's question about what to do with the word “regulate,” to the point where the judge asked him to sit down to come up with an answer. (More on that exchange here). Kaytal has fallen back on the Necessary and Proper clause, insisting that it gives broader leeway to Congress.

Judge James Graham, a Reagan district court appointee who is temporarily hearing cases on the appeals court, said, “I hear your arguments about the power of Congress under the Commerce Clause, and I’m having difficulty seeing how there is any limit to the power as you’re defining it.”

Kaytal responded by referencing the United States v. Morrison, in which the Supreme Court struck down parts of the Violence Against Women Act, and United States v. Lopez, which struck down gun free school zones. In those cases, Kaytal responded, the Supreme Court set the limit that the Commerce Clause had to regulate economic activities.

The health care market is unique, Kaytal responded, because everybody will eventually participate. With the mandate, Kaytal said, “What Congress is regulating is not the failure to buy something. But failure to secure financing for something everyone is going to buy.”

Graham acknowledged Kaytal's arguments, yet reiterated that he was “having trouble seeing the limits.”

The problem with the “health care is unique” argument – and this is me talking – is that it just creates an opening for future Congresses to regulate all sorts of things by either a) arguing that a particular market is also special or b) finding a way to tie a given regulation to health care.

For instance, the example that's come up often is the idea of a law in which government forces individuals to eat broccoli.

During the Sixth Circuit argument, Kaytal said that such an example doesn't apply, because if you show up at a grocery store, nobody has to give you broccoli, whereas that is the case with health care and hospital emergency rooms.

Yet that argument assumes that Congress passes such a law as a regulation of the food market. What if the law was made as part of a regulation of the health care market? It isn't difficult to see where that argument can go.

The broccoli example is really a proxy for a broader argument about whether the government can compel individuals to engage in healthy behavior – it could just as well be eating salad, or exercising. There's no doubt that a huge driver of our nation's health care costs are illnesses linked to bad behavior. People who are overweight and out of shape cost more because they have increased risk of heart disease, diabetes, and so on. Those increased costs get passed on to all of us, because government pays for nearly half of the nation's health care expenses, a number that's set to grow under the new health care law. Is it really unrealistic to believe that future Congresses, looking for ways to control health care costs, could compel healthy behavior in some way? More pertinently, is there any reason why that would be unconstitutional under the precedent that would be set if the individual mandate is upheld?

With most experts expecting the case to go before the Supreme Court, it seems the biggest obstacle for the Obama administration is figuring out where power would be limited if the mandate were upheld. Those challenging the law have made a clear and understandable limit by drawing a distinction between regulating activity and regulating inactivity (i.e. the decision not to purchase insurance). But simply saying the health care market is unique doesn't actually create a very clear or understandable limit to Congressional power.

The 11th Circuit hears the case next week brought by 26 states led by Florida.

ObamaCare a Factor in Bleak Jobs Report

By Grace-Marie Turner

Creation of new jobs has hit a wall, with employers creating just 18,000 jobs last month and sending the unemployment rate to 9.2%. The numbers would have been even worse had so many Americans not simply given up hope looking for work.

I talked about this on FOX News this morning in the context of health care, of course. Here is the clip:

In every meeting, speech, and media interview where I have a chance to talk with business owners, it is clear that the mandates in the health law are an important factor in depressing job creation. Small business is the engine for job growth in America, but a recent survey found that 70% of them have no plans to increase hiring in the next year.

There are many reasons they aren't hiring -- they don't have enough customers to justify expansion, they can't get credit from the banks, and they are uncertain about the future tax, regulatory, and economic climate. But the ObamaCare mandates are a big factor:

- Some businesses are worried that hiring more workers would put them over the 50-employee limit and expose them to the expensive employer mandate.
- Small businesses that already have more than 50 workers worry about the cost of providing new government-mandated coverage for their workers or the fines they would have to pay if they don't comply.
- And larger companies are doing everything they can to pare back on hiring and automate entry-level jobs to avoid the added cost of mandatory health insurance. McDonald's is putting in electronic ordering kiosks, and CVS drug stores are putting in electronic checkout systems to replace live people, for example. Is it any wonder that youth unemployment is at an all-time high as these entry-level jobs vanish?

Unemployment is a tragedy. It weakens our country when people who are willing and want to work simply can't find jobs. It weakens families because of the terrible pressures of financial stress. And it weakens our future as young people can't get the jobs to get their foot on the economic ladder and learn the skills they need to move on.

It's not just the fear of ObamaCare, of course. Tax policy must be reformed and modernized. Regulations must be lifted so businesses can focus on customers, not federal agents. And federal spending must be controlled to avoid the tsunami of red ink that threatens to destroy any chance of future prosperity.

We can do this. The American spirit is alive, and people WANT to work.

When I get discouraged, I go back to a conversation I had with my good friend, economic guru Art Laffer, when I spoke at one of his company's seminars recently.

"This economy is ready to soar," he said. But for that to happen, he said, we must lift the burdens of outdated and oppressive tax, regulatory, and trade policies.

Art is right. We believe in America. But politicians must undo the damage of decades of burdensome public policies so the people can turn this ship aright.

IPAB: And tune in to CSPAN this coming Tuesday morning. I will be testifying before the House Budget Committee's hearing on the Independent Payment Advisory Board (IPAB).

There is growing bi-partisan opposition to giving 15 unelected, unaccountable appointees unprecedented power over hundreds of billions of dollars in Medicare spending. I will argue that the Constitution gives the power of the purse to Congress so that elected representatives can be accountable to the voters for their decisions. The IPAB would turn this principle upside down.

We will have a link to my testimony in next week's newsletter.

Speaking on the Senate floor during his open, Senator Reid claimed that "It's very clear that private sector jobs have been doing just fine"; it's the public sector jobs where we've lost huge numbers."

Unfortunately, private sector jobs have NOT been doing just fine – employment numbers haven't even kept up with population growth – and Obamacare is one of the major reasons. Analysts at UBS have stated that Obamacare is "arguably the biggest impediment to hiring, particularly hiring of less skilled workers," and that the law "has the added drawback of straining state and federal budgets," leading to the public sector job losses Sen. Reid talked about. And the President of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta has said that he has "frequently heard strong comments to the effect of '**my company won't hire a single additional worker until we know what health insurance costs are going to be.**'"

Government intervention in the form of Obamacare is one of the reasons private sector firms haven't been hiring. So why does Senator Reid think that yet more government intervention – this in the form of new "stimulus" spending, coupled with a tax on job creators – will do anything different?

Date: Tuesday, April 17, 2012 10:58:09 AM

Amidst continuing record-high unemployment and economic stagnation, it's worth looking at the one area of the economy that HAS succeeded in creating jobs under President Obama – the federal government. According to Office of Personnel Management statistics, from September 2008 (just before President Obama was elected) through December last year, the Department of Health and Human Services grew by 9,424 employees. That's a double-digit increase in the number of HHS bureaucrats in just a three-year period.

Judging from the data, it's very clear that those new bureaucrats are being used to implement Obamacare. For instance, employment in the Office of the Secretary went up by more than 3,000 (a 22% jump), and the number of bureaucrats at the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services increased by over 800 (nearly a 20% increase). The Office of the Secretary and CMS are two offices most responsible for implementing Obamacare's stifling new regulations and mandates.

These 9,000+ new bureaucrats have certainly earned their keep. Through the two-year anniversary of Obamacare just last month, the federal government issued a whopping 12,307 pages of regulations and notices in the Federal Register. But while writing all these regulations has created thousands of new jobs for government bureaucrats, the regulations themselves have stifled employment for businesses. A survey released yesterday by the US Chamber of Commerce found that nearly three in four (73%) small businesses believe Obamacare is an obstacle to growing their businesses and hiring additional workers.

So in fairness, Obamacare is creating many thousands of new jobs. It's just that those jobs are the wrong kind of jobs – new taxpayer-funded government bureaucrats that hinder private sector economic growth and new hiring.

HHS just released part of its Exchange regulations – a 244-page regulation regarding the establishment of Exchanges, and a separate 103-page regulation regarding risk adjustment. While the Administration is trying to sell Exchanges as providing competition and flexibility, the 347 pages of regulations contain the word “require” a whopping 811 times (628 instances in the Exchange regulation, and 183 in the risk adjustment regulation). It's worth asking: How flexible can a piece of regulation that has 811 separate references to mandates and requirements be?

As noted previously, the documents just released comprise only *part* of the regulations necessary for states to implement health insurance Exchanges under Obamacare. Page 11 of the Exchange rule notes that most of the critical elements of Exchanges are NOT included in today's regulations:

Subjects included in the Affordable Care Act to be addressed in separate rulemaking include but are not limited to: (1) standards for individual eligibility for participation in the Exchange, advance payments of the premium tax credit, cost-sharing reductions, and related health programs and appeals of eligibility determinations; (2) standards outlining the Exchange process for issuing certificates of exemption from the individual responsibility requirement and payment under section 1411(a)(4); (3) defining essential health benefits, actuarial value and other benefit design standards; and (4) standards for Exchanges and QHP issuers related to quality.

So in other words, states will NOT have all the information they need to decide whether and how to construct their Exchanges after today's release. Moreover, if you think the 811 references to federal mandates and requirements included in today's regulation will place an onerous burden on states and individuals, just wait until ALL of Obamacare's regulations are released...

RSC Policy Brief: Update on the Florida Obamacare Lawsuit

Late Tuesday afternoon, the Department of Justice (DOJ) filed their appeal in the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals of Judge Roger Vinson's January 31, 2011 declaratory judgment striking down as unconstitutional the entirety of Obamacare in the case, State of Florida v. U.S. Department of Human Services. This legal challenge is just one of many all over the country making their way through the federal courts, yet it has garnered the most attention. This is because the parties bringing the case include over half of all of the states (26 states), as well as the National Federation of Independent Business and two private individuals. More importantly, however, it is the only legal challenge to date to completely invalidate President Obama's signature health care reform law. This policy brief highlights a few recent updates to this landmark legal challenge, which according to most observers, will undoubtedly be decided by the U.S. Supreme Court sometime in the spring of 2012.

Breaking down the "Motion to Clarify"

Instead of filing a timely appeal or seeking an immediate stay pending an appeal, the federal government waited 17 days to file an "untimely and unorthodox" Motion to Clarify ("Motion") the judgment. While Judge Vinson believed that his order was "as clear and unambiguous as it could be" (i.e., that Obamacare is unconstitutional and void), he granted the federal government's Motion.

He conditioned the Motion upon the federal government appealing his judgment to the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals, or directly to the Supreme Court, within seven calendar days and seeking an expedited appellate review because the nation will be "better off" the sooner this issue is finally decided by the Supreme Court. The federal government met these two conditions by filing their appeal and a motion to expedite the case late Tuesday afternoon.

Despite Judge Vinson granting the federal government's Motion and staying his judgment pending appeal, he issued some compelling statements worthy of taking notice:

→ Judge Vinson declared the individual mandate in section 1501 of Obamacare is unconstitutional and cannot be "severed" from the law because of its centrality to the entire insurance market reform schemes Obamacare created. In deciding the severability issue, he noted:<sup>1</sup>

- “At the time the Act passed, Congress knew for certain that legal challenges to the individual mandate were coming”;
- “Congress’ own Research Service had essentially advised that the legal challenges would have merit (and therefore might result in the individual mandate being struck down) as it could not be said that the individual mandate had “solid constitutional foundation”;
- “And yet, Congress specifically (and presumably intentionally) deleted the ‘severability clause’ that had been included in the earlier version of the Act.”
- “...the conspicuous absence of a severability clause—which is ordinarily included in complex legislation as a matter of routine—could be viewed as strong evidence that Congress recognized that the Act could not operate as intended if the individual mandate was eventually struck down by the courts.”

→ Judge Vinson also found the federal government’s own arguments in defense of the individual mandate undermined its argument for severability:<sup>2</sup>

- “...the [federal government] consistently and repeatedly highlighted the ‘essential’ role that the individual mandate played in the regulatory reform of the interstate health care and health insurance markets, which was the entire point of the Act.
- The federal government argued”:<sup>3</sup>
  - “[The individual mandate] is essential to the Act’s comprehensive scheme to ensure that health insurance coverage is available and affordable [and it ‘works in tandem’ with the health benefit exchanges, employer incentives, tax credits, and the Medicaid expansion].”
  - “[The absence of an individual mandate] would undermine the ‘comprehensive regulatory regime’ in the Act.”
  - “[The individual mandate] is essential to Congress’ overall regulatory reform of the interstate health care and health insurance markets...[it] is ‘essential’ to achieving key reforms of the interstate health insurance market...[and it is] necessary to make the other regulations in the Act effective.”
- “In light of the defendant’s own arguments...and dozens of similar representations that they made throughout this case, I had no choice but to find that the individual mandate was essential to, and thus could not be severed from, the rest of the Act.”

→ Judge Vinson on the role of the federal judicial branch

- By refraining from legislating from the bench, he expressed that “...because the Act was extremely lengthy and many of its provisions were dependent (directly or indirectly) on the individual mandate, it was improper of me (a judge) to engage in the quasi-legislative undertaking of deciding which of the Act’s several hundred provisions could theoretically survive without the individual mandate (as a technical or proper matter) and which could not—or which provisions Congress could have arguably wanted to survive.”<sup>4</sup>

→ Judge Vinson’s reasoning for not granting the States’ request for an injunction to halt implementation of Obamacare:<sup>5</sup>

- “...there is a long-standing presumption ‘that officials of the Executive Branch will adhere to the law as declared by the court. As a result, the declaratory judgment is the functional equivalent of an injunction.’”
- “There is no reason to conclude that this presumption should not apply here [in this case]. Thus the award of declaratory relief is adequate and separate injunctive relief is not necessary.”
- Even though this language “seems to be plain and unambiguous...the [federal government] have indicated that they ‘do not interpret the Court’s order as requiring them to cease [implementing and enforcing the Act].’”
- “...the [federal government] expressly assured the court that, in light of the ‘long-standing presumption that a declaratory judgment provides adequate relief as against an executive officer, as it will not be presumed that that officer will ignore the judgment of the Court...’ which is exactly what the federal government did for 17 days.

→ Judge Vinson highlighting his concern about the powers of Congress:

- “Even the district courts that have upheld the individual mandate seem to agree that ‘activity’ is indeed required before Congress can exercise its authority under the Commerce Clause. They have simply determined that an individual’s decision not to buy health insurance qualifies as activity. For example, in the most recent case, Mead v. Holder,--F. Supp. 2d--,2011 WL611139 (D.C.C. Feb. 22, 2011), the District Court for the District of Columbia concluded that “[m]aking a choice is an affirmative action, whether one decides to do something or not do something,” and, therefore, Congress can regulate ‘mental activity’ under the commerce power.”<sup>6</sup>
- “Although I strongly believe that expanding the commerce power to permit Congress to regulate and mandate mental decisions not to purchase health insurance (or any other product or service) would emasculate much of the rest of the Constitution and effectively remove all limitations on the power of the federal government, I recognize that others believe otherwise.”<sup>7</sup>
- “...two days after my [January 31, 2011] order was entered, the Senate Judiciary Committee held a hearing to explore the Constitutionality of the individual mandate. The possibility of a “broccoli mandate” was discussed at this hearing. Former Solicitor General and Harvard law professor Charles Fried testified (during the course of defending the Constitutionality of the individual mandate) that under this view of the commerce power Congress could, indeed, mandate that everyone buy broccoli.<sup>8</sup> This testimony only highlights my concern because it directly undercuts the defendants’ principal argument for why an economic mandate is justified here.”

Key Takeaway

As noted earlier in this briefing, it is widely accepted that the Supreme Court will be the ultimate arbiter of Obamacare's constitutionality in this case (and the other related ones). The question is when not if the high court weighs in. Many Americans are disappointed that Judge Vinson did not dismiss the federal government's Motion, and therefore, halt implementation of Obamacare in its tracks. His decision to grant a stay leaves many observers pondering how he could initially void the entire law, and then allow it to continue being implemented pending appeal. Some speculate that Judge Vinson figured the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals would have granted the stay of his ruling anyway, and therefore, simply sought to speed up the case.

On the bright side for those who are rooting for a Supreme Court victory, Judge Vinson's makes a strong case for the appeals and high court to affirm his declaratory judgment. At least three-quarters of his order on the federal government's quixotic Motion clarified his opinion to the question at issue: the individual mandate is unconstitutional and so is the entire government takeover of our health industry.

CBO: ObamaCare Tax Hits Middle Class

New CBO Data Shows That 80 Percent Of Those Paying ObamaCare's Mandate Tax Will Be Families Earning Less Than $123K

New CBO Data: 'The Middle Class — Will Have To Pay'

"Congressional budget analysts are now estimating that nearly 6 million Americans — most of them in the middle class — will have to pay a tax penalty for not getting health insurance once President Barack Obama's health care law is fully in place. That's 2 million more than a previous estimate found..." ("Tax Penalty To Hit Nearly 6M Uninsured People." AP, 9/19/12)

- "The average penalty will be nearly $1,200." ("Tax Penalty To Hit Nearly 6M Uninsured People," AP, 9/19/12)
- Four out of five who will pay penalty have an adjusted gross income of less than $123,000. ("Payments Of Penalties For Being Uninsured Under The Affordable Care Act," CBO, P.2, 9/12)

BROKEN PROMISE: 'Absolutely Not A Tax Increase'

STEPHANOPOULOS: "Under this mandate, the government is forcing people to spend money, fining you if you don't. How is that not a tax?" ... PRESIDENT OBAMA: "No. That's not true, George. The — for us to say that you've got to take a responsibility to get health insurance is absolutely not a tax increase. What it's saying is, is that we're not going to have other people carrying your burdens for you anymore than the fact that right now everybody in America, just about, has to get auto insurance. Nobody considers that a tax increase." ("Obama: Mandate Is Not A Tax," ABC News, 9/20/09)

SEN. BARACK OBAMA (D-IL): "And if you're a family making less than $250,000 a year, my plan won't raise your taxes one penny -- not your income taxes, not your payroll taxes, not your capital gains taxes, not any of your taxes." (Barack Obama, Remarks, Orlando, FL, 8/3/08)

Household Income Down: 'Middle Class Lost Ground Again Last Year'

The Washington Post: "The middle class lost ground again last year, falling to an all-time low in their share of how much income they take in, new census data released Wednesday showed." ("Census: Middle Class Shrinks To An All-Time Low," The Washington Post, 9/12/12)

U.S. Census Bureau: "Real median household income in the United States in 2011 was $50,054, a 1.5 percent decline from the 2010 median and the second consecutive annual drop." ("Income, Poverty And Health Insurance Coverage In The United States: 2011 Press Release" U.S. Census Bureau, 9/12/12)

- Household income down $777. "2010 Median income, All households: $50,831 ... 2011 Median income, All households: $50,054." ("Income, Poverty And Health Insurance Coverage In The United States: 2011 Press Release" U.S. Census Bureau, P.6, 9/12/12)
- "In 2011, real median household income was 8.1 percent lower than in 2007, the year before the most recent recession..." ("Income, Poverty And Health Insurance Coverage In The United States: 2011 Press Release" U.S. Census Bureau, 9/12/12)

ObamaCare: One Year of Broken Promises

March 23, 2011 | Posted by Speaker Boehner's Press Office | Permalink

"If there's a constant in the story of ObamaCare, it's broken promises," House Speaker John Boehner says in a new video marking one year of the job-crushing health care law, and all its fewer jobs, higher costs, and reduced coverage. Watch Boehner here:

As Boehner says in the video, "Instead of creating jobs, employers have been handed more uncertainty and more headaches. Instead of lower costs, families and small businesses are being squeezed even further. Instead of keeping what they like, millions are being forced off their coverage."

It's no wonder that a majority of Americans opposed the law a year ago -- and still oppose it today. Republicans are listening and made a Pledge to America to repeal ObamaCare and replace it with common-sense reforms that lower costs and protect jobs.

Since January, the House has worked to keep that pledge and voted to fully repeal the \$2.6 trillion health care law; to defund the law as part of H.R. 1; and to repeal the job-destroying 1099 small business mandate. And last week, Speaker Boehner announced the House will soon vote to eliminate mandatory spending slush funds in ObamaCare.

To stay up to date on the fight to repeal and defund this job-crushing law, stay connected with the Office of the Speaker on Facebook, Twitter, and on Speaker.gov.

- Speaker Boehner's Press Office

P.S. Scrapping ObamaCare is just one part of our pledge to end the uncertainty facing small businesses so they can start hiring again. Republicans are also cutting spending to address our job-crushing debt burden, reining in excessive government regulations, and promoting the American Energy Initiative -- an ongoing effort to address rising gas prices and create new jobs by expanding American energy production and implementing an all-of-the-above energy strategy. Per the request of the Steering Committee.

This is the direct link to the RFP: <http://www.dcs.state.ok.us/Solicitations.nsf> Bid Number 3400000941

The RFP has been posted to the DCS website. A copy of the Project Preferred Vendor List is attached. The document itself is now open to the public and may be shared with any partners. Please note that all contact with vendors regarding this RFP must be coordinated with DCS. If you are contacted by a vendor regarding the RFP, please document the date, time, company name, individual name, and the content of the conversation and forward this information to me. Information provided to a vendor should be limited to directing them to contact the DCS Contracting Officer identified in the solicitation (Jan Hall) with any questions.

The deadline for vendors to submit questions regarding the RFP is March 8. We will have 48 hours to respond in writing and for DCS to issue an amendment with our response to the questions. The RFP will close on March 17, at which time DCS will hold a public bid opening. DCS will then tabulate the responses and we will hopefully be able to pick up our copies on the 18th for evaluation. The evaluation process should be concluded as quickly as possible, to allow sufficient time for negotiation (if necessary) an award by the 1st.

Let me know if you have any questions or concerns regarding the bid process and I'll speak with the Contractor Division here at OSDH.

Derek

RE: Oklahoma Healthcare Exchange – ADVISORY WORK GROUP Signup Information

Greetings Oklahoma Healthcare Exchange Stakeholders & Interested Parties:

In follow up to the previous email you were sent advising you of the public meeting to be held on January 26th, 10:30 a.m.-12:00 p.m. at the ODMHSAS Training Center in the Shepherd Mall, this email contains information regarding Advisory Work Groups to be formed.

Developing a common understanding of what an Oklahoma State Healthcare Exchange must do is a critical first step in the creation of a strategic road map for the Exchange. To accomplish this step, Key Advisory Work Groups and sub-groups will be formed to develop recommendations on Exchange related issues. Each Work Group and sub-group will be responsible to meet, discuss and perform research to develop recommendations and advise on language to be used for the development of a strategic plan for the Exchange. Advisory Work Group participation will require an estimated 3 month commitment.

Following are Key Issues, around which Advisory Work Groups and sub-groups will be created:

1. Governance & Administrative Structure
2. Eligibility Process & Infrastructure
3. Enrollment
4. Information Technology
5. Carrier & Plan Selection
6. Financial Management
7. Education & Marketing

Attached to this email is a spreadsheet listing questions and considerations for each of the seven Key Issues. The spreadsheet also identifies the Project Manager who will act as liaison for each Advisory Work Group. Please keep in mind that the list of questions and considerations is not intended to be exhaustive and is provided as a tool which can be used by the Advisory Work Groups to initiate and focus group discussions. Each Advisory Work Group will be provided additional resources by the Project Managers as well as be responsible to perform independent research on its assigned Key Issue.

In preparation of our meeting next Wednesday, please review the attached list and take careful consideration as to which Advisory Work Group(s) you would like to participate. Advisory Work Group and sub-group participation will be assigned based upon the knowledge, demonstrated leadership experience and areas of expertise of each participant as well as each participant's ability to commit the time, effort and resources needed to adequately address the assigned Key Issue. In most cases participants will be assigned to the Advisory Work Group(s) of their choice.

Your active participation will be a deciding factor in determining Oklahoma's success in the development of an Exchange. Additional information about the formation and requirements of the Work Groups will be provided at the January 26th, 10:30am -12:00pm, General Stakeholder meeting. We look forward to seeing you then to further discuss your participation in an Advisory Work Group.

Thank you!

Exchange Project Managers,

Change direction of federal spending

By Rep. John A. Boehner

POLITICO

April 13, 2011 11:47 PM EDT

Six months ago, shortly before the election, the Democrats who run Washington were preparing an “omnibus” spending bill loaded with earmarks and job-crushing tax hikes on small businesses. Today, the people’s House is due to vote on a bill that cuts $315 billion from the federal budget over the next 10 years — the largest non-defense spending cut in our history, earmark-free and with zero tax hikes. These are real cuts.

It isn’t cause for celebration or back-patting. It’s what happens when the American people speak out. It’s what government should be doing.

This agreement isn’t perfect. But it is exactly what we need to pave the way for the “Path to Prosperity” budget offered by Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan (R-Wis.), which moves the debate from cutting billions of dollars to cutting trillions. It also cleans up the budget mess left by the last Congress — sending a signal to job creators nationwide that we have begun to end Washington’s spending binge.

“This first step,” the Stanford economist John B. Taylor wrote, “helps establish the credibility needed for the budget strategy to increase economic growth and encourage private investment.”

Specifically, House Republicans – up against a Democratic-run Senate and Democratic-controlled White House – forced an agreement that cuts nearly $40 billion, compared to FY 2010 spending levels. This means the federal government will spend $78.5 billion less this year than President Barack Obama proposed.

The total spending cut would have been even higher – nearly $45 billion – had we not fought for and secured a $5 billion increase in defense spending. This ensures that our troops have the tools they need to accomplish their multiple missions.

The American people are concerned not just about how much we’re spending, but how we’re spending it. One Obamacare program is eliminated altogether in this agreement; a second is cut nearly in half.

Four of the Obama administration’s controversial “czars” are eliminated – and the president is prohibited from replacing them. These include the “czars” charged with overseeing his government takeover of health care and tasked with implementing the president’s job-crushing national energy tax. They’re gone. The administration is signaling it will challenge the constitutionality of these provisions. We say: Bring it on.

The agreement also secures Senate votes and debates on de-funding two of the president’s top priorities – his job-crushing health care law and Planned Parenthood. It saves the successful D.C. school choice program that Democrats have been trying to eliminate for years.

The Environmental Protection Agency, considered a prime source of government overregulation, is to have its budget cut by 16 percent. Students will no longer be able to draw two Pell Grant awards at the same time — saving taxpayers $35 billion over the next 10 years.

More than 40 other ineffective Department of Education programs will also be eliminated — including Educational Technology State Grants, Even Start, Advanced Credentialing, Mental Health Integration, Exchanges with Historic Whaling Partners, Women’s Educational Equity, Tech-Prep Education State Grants, Smaller Learning Communities, Legal Assistance Loan Repayment Program, Thurgood Marshall Legal Opportunity Scholarships and B.J. Stupak Olympic Scholarships.

This is all happening just months after the president and his Democratic allies called for zero cuts – and claimed spending cuts would hurt the economy.

Liberals like the economist Paul Krugman have slammed the president for the agreement — noting it means the White House has, in effect, admitted the “stimulus” spending binge is over.

They’re right. No matter how imperfect the agreement may be, we’re poised to make historic cuts to both discretionary and mandatory “autopilot” spending. For anyone who believes Washington should be spending more, taxing more and borrowing more — this is a defeat.

It's true that many of the cuts in the agreement were proposed in the president's budget — but those cuts were used by the president to offset additional or new spending elsewhere. Now those cuts are real cuts. We're chopping billions of dollars off the baseline rather than allowing the Obama administration simply to shift the savings toward other spending.

Think of it this way: You have $100 in your wallet that you were going to use to buy new clothes. You haven't spent it yet, because you haven't found shirts you like or decided you didn't need them. Then someone comes along and takes away your $100.

Now you can't spend it — not on clothes or anything else you were considering. The money's gone — your budget's been cut. We're taking away tens of billions of taxpayer dollars from the Obama administration.

The new Republican majority began this Congress armed with a pledge: to create a better environment for private sector job growth by cutting spending and removing barriers that make it harder for small businesses to hire new workers.

That's exactly what we're doing, one step at a time. The spending cut agreement to be voted on today isn't perfect — not by a long shot. But it's an important step toward getting Washington spending under control and eliminating some of the barriers that are hurting job growth. There are many more steps, more cuts, and more reforms to come.

Say Yes to the CR Mess

Don't be distracted from the main fight.

By William Kristol

WEEKLY STANDARD

April 14, 2011 9:11 AM

http://www.weeklystandard.com/blogs/say-yes-cr-mess\_557400.html

Let's assume for the purpose of argument that our friends at National Review <http://www.nationalreview.com/articles/264599/strike-one-editors> are at least partly right in their analysis of the deal on the continuing resolution (CR) that's to be voted on today in the House of Representatives (but see John McCormack's post http://www.weeklystandard.com/blogs/budget-confusion\_557395.html for some context). In their recommendation of a No vote, they seem to me misguided.

Even if the savings from the CR are a "pittance," and the deal is "shot through with gimmicks and one-time savings;" even if it's "a dog's breakfast of budgetary legerdemain" that was "oversold and dependent on classic Washington budget trickery" and that embodies "business as usual"—even so, NR is wrong, I think, to conclude, "We'd vote 'no,' even if we understand the impulse to move on to more important matters and to avoid a leap into the dark that might include a politically damaging shutdown."

I'd vote yes.

The CR may well be a mess. It's certainly a sideshow. Perhaps John Boehner could have gotten a better deal, but it wouldn't have made much difference in the big-picture budget fight anyway. That fight is now underway, and the 2011 CR will be little noted, nor long remembered--unless the squabble over the CR fractures Republicans, and unless it prevents them from being able to focus the nation on what NR admits are "more important matters." The fact is the only way the 2011 CR will end up making much difference is if the deal is defeated in the Republican House, and the rejection leads to NR's "politically damaging shutdown" which then endangers future conservative prospects this year, and next.

So don't let the CR make a difference. Pass it. Don't risk a shutdown for a trifle. Forget about sniping at John Boehner. Help defeat Barack Obama in the major struggle that's now been joined on the budget <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=AnNOX-fi5ds> --and the future. Focus on Obama's unbelievable irresponsibility, not Boehner's alleged negotiating deficiencies. Figure out what big things (Medicaid reform?) can be added to the upcoming debt limit vote. Educate the public so as to improve the current only slightly better than even split in public opinion <http://i2.cdn.turner.com/cnn/2011/images/04/12/rel6d.pdf> on the GOP budget.

Conservatives who seek to govern this country will have a better chance of success if we behave as adults working towards victory in an important cause, rather than reveling in our incorruptible purity over on stage right, while neglecting what's happening at center stage.

Payroll Tax Holiday Agreement

Payroll Tax Holiday Extended Through 2012

- The payroll tax holiday is extended through December 31, 2012.
- The amount of revenue that is foregone to the Social Security Trust Funds as a result of the payroll tax reduction is fully replaced with savings from Treasury's General Fund.
- Over the course of the year, a typical middle-class worker earning $50,000 would see his or her take-home pay increase by $1,000 as a result of this tax holiday.

Reforms & Extends the Unemployment Program

Reforms to the unemployment program

- Job Search Requirements: Requires those receiving unemployment benefits at both the state and federal level actually look for a job.
- Drug Screening & Testing: Overturns a 1960s-era Department of Labor ban on States' screening and testing UI applicants for illegal drugs. Specifically, the agreement allows every state to drug screen and test anyone who (1) lost their job because they failed or refused an employer drug test, or (2) is seeking a job that generally requires a drug test.
- Re-employment Programs: Allows waivers for up to 10 states for innovative re-employment programs like Georgia Works.

Reduces the number of weeks to levels typically seen in a recession

- Eliminates 20 Weeks of EB: Effectively eliminates the "Extended Benefits" program, which allowed states to receive an additional 20 weeks of federal benefits.
- 63 weeks vs. 93 Weeks: Ensures that by the end of the year the vast majority of states (36) receive a maximum of 63 weeks of benefits, compared to 46 states currently receiving 93 weeks of benefits – a reduction of 30 weeks. This is a level comparable to prior recessions.

No More Welfare Benefits At Strip Clubs & Liquor Stores

- Extends Welfare Benefits: The agreement extends the nation's primary welfare program, Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, through Fiscal Year 2012.
- Closes the "Strip Club" Loophole: The legislation ensures that welfare funds cannot be accessed at ATMs in strip clubs, liquor stores, and casinos.
- Data Standardization: Improves data matching and program integrity by requiring standardized data and Health and Human Services coordination of exchanges across State TANF programs.

Protects Seniors & Reforms Certain Medicare Programs

- Eliminates 27.4% Cut to Doctors: The agreement averts a 27.4 percent cut to physician payment rates and ensures seniors and the disabled have continued access to the physicians serving our Medicare beneficiaries.
- Doc Fix Through End of 2012: The agreement extends through the end of the year payment rates for Medicare doctors.
- Eliminates & Reforms Certain Medicare Programs: The Senate had sought to blindly extend all Medicare extenders. The agreement eliminates two of those programs (mental health add-on payments and an ObamaCare provision that increased payments for bone density scans). The agreement phases-out two programs: Section 508 hospitals and special pathology payments, while providing time for these providers to adapt to these changes. Extends and reforms the therapy cap exception process by requiring greater accountability, which will eliminate wasteful spending.
- Extends Certain Medicare Programs with Greater Oversight: Ambulance add-on payments, physician work floor, and outpatient hospital hold harmless payments are all extended, but the agreement requires GAO, MedPAC and CMS to report to Congress on their effectiveness and ways to better protect taxpayer dollars.

No Tax Increases & Government Spending Is Fully Offset

Rejects Senate's insistence on higher taxes for higher spending

- No job-killing tax hikes to pay for more government spending.
- All government spending is fully offset with spending cuts and government reforms.

Unemployment benefits are fully paid for

- Firmly establishes that extensions of unemployment benefits must be paid for. Democrats added nearly $200 billion to our nation's debt by extending an unprecedented level of unemployment benefits.
- The agreement offsets all unemployment program spending through:
  - Spectrum Auctions, which spur innovation, investment and job creation in the high-tech field.
  - Requiring new civilian federal employees and Members of Congress to contribute more towards their defined benefit pension programs.

Repeals key parts of ObamaCare and includes other health savings

- Cuts to ObamaCare pay for more than half ($11.6 billion) of the health spending in the agreement.
- Cuts an ObamaCare slush fund (the Harkin Prevention Fund) by $5 billion.
- Eliminates an ObamaCare giveaway to Louisiana saving $2.5 billion.
- Reduces Medicaid spending (DSH rebase) by more than $4 billion.
- Other health savings total $9.6 billion and include reductions to Medicare "bad debt" ($6.9 billion) and clinical laboratory payments ($2.7 billion).

INTERNATIONAL/NATIONAL EVENTS AND ISSUES
OVERHANG ON PRESIDENTIAL/CONGRESSIONAL CAMPAIGNS
As of 07/11/2012

Political And Economic Issues That Will Help Determine The Outcome Of The Presidential And Congressional Campaigns:

1. The Congressional Legislative Collision Of The "Fiscal Cliff", "Taxmageddon", "The Sequester".
2. What Happens In The European Union
  - Unemployment in many countries is over 11%, in Spain it's over 24%
  - Five euro-zone countries have requested a bailout. The amount totals €489 billion Euro, or $611.3 billion USD. They are Greece, Ireland, Portugal, Spain and Cyprus.
  - Nine countries have experienced a change in government: France, Italy, Greece, Spain, Great Britain, Ireland, Portugal, Denmark, and Finland. There will be a vote in Romania on presidential impeachment by the end of the month.
  - 26% of U.S. Trade is with Europe
3. Fallout from the Supreme Court Decisions:
  - The ACA decision upheld (5-4) the health insurance mandate under the taxing power of Congress. The rest of the law survives intact. The Medicaid expansion provision was upheld on the interpretation that Congress could not strip a state of all Medicaid funding for failure to expand coverage.
  - In the Arizona immigration law case the Supreme Court unanimously upheld the provision requiring state law enforcement to determine the immigration status of anyone they stop or arrest with reason to suspect the individual maybe undocumented. The Court held the other three provisions void as preempted, or trumped, by federal law.
4. The Middle East Stability/Uncertainty
  - Israel vs. Iran - Nuclear Issues
  - Iran vs. Europe/U.S. - Oil Issues
  - Egypt, Syria, Libya - Instability Issue
5. Super PACs
  - As of 07/10 there are 653 groups organized as Super PACs, and, according to Forbes, there are 390+ billionaires in the U.S.

Government Spending Reductions That, Because Of The Budget Control Act Of 2011, Are Mandated To Occur Through A Sequester Process. The Law Requires A Sequester Of $1.2 Trillion Of Reductions Over 10 Years. On January 2, 2013 The Required Cuts By Sequester Will Begin (Approximately $109 Billion) For FY2013 (October 1, 2012 - September 30, 2013)

- CBO releases a preliminary sequestration update report on August 15, then OMB releases a preliminary sequestration update report (done on an account-by-account basis) by August 20
  - Obama can't use the savings from the drawdown in Iraq to protect other programs.
- 10 days after the end of the Congressional Session the CBO releases their final sequestration report, OMB follows 5 days later with their final sequestration report.
- The final sequestration report will be published on the same day that the reductions in discretionary spending for FY 2013 are implemented - January 2, 2013.
  - All reductions are for a period of the 9 months that remain in FY 2013, which means a higher effect on account-by-account reductions.
- The BCA's formula for establishing specific cuts begins by reducing the $1.2 trillion by 18% ($216 billion) to account for interest savings that will flow from the spending cuts. This leaves $984 billion that must be achieved through equal amounts of spending cuts in each of the nine years between fiscal year 2013 and 2021, or about $109 billion per year. (For FY-13 sequester will cut approximately $12.11 billion per month. For other years, the sequester will cut approximately $9.08 billion per month.)
- The total annual spending cut of about $109 billion is divided as follows:
  - 50% of the cuts from the Department of Defense
  - 48% of the cuts from all other non-defense programs (not listed below)
  - 2% of the cuts from Medicare

- The sequester cannot touch the following programs (from the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 as amended):
  - Pell Grants
  - Social Security
  - Medicaid
  - The Postal Service
  - Class Act (Voluntary long-term health care benefits created in ObamaCare)
  - Most unemployment benefits
  - VA benefits
  - Supplemental Security Income (SSI)
  - Federal Retirement
  - SNAP (the food stamp program)
  - SCHIP (State Children's Health Insurance Program)
  - TANF (Temporary assistance to Needy Families)
  - Child Tax Credit
  - Earned Income Tax Credit
  - Railroad retirement benefits
  - Farm Credit Insurance Fund
  - Comptrollers general retirement system
  - Pensions for former presidents
  - Grants-in-Aid for Airports
  - US Treasury Check Forgery Insurance Fund
  - Black Lung Disability Trust Fund
  - Geothermal Resources Development Fund
  - Payments to widows and heirs of deceased Members of Congress
  - All "emergency designations"
  - All "unanticipated circumstances"
  - Congressional concessions for disaster relief

"HMO With A Twist" Perspective

The ultimate health care reform for job growth and job creation
[moving fast, seizing momentum and not letting it go]

CADILLAC health care policy for all:

There will be three universal health plans, which can be replicated in every state in the United States. These are State Plan, Employers' Plan, and Medicare Plan. Expanded universal coverage is the Cadillac health care policy for all at no extra cost. All three plans will cover acupuncture, ambulance, chiropractic services, dental care, doctor visits, family planning services, hearing, hospital and emergency care, laboratory, maternity and newborn care, mental health services, radiology, prescription drugs, preventive health care, specialty care and vision care. The State Plan will cover all those who are unemployed or employed [and their dependents] whose employers do not provide health insurance. Funding will principally come from Medicaid [Medi-Cal in California]. In addition, it is proposed that 1% from the sales tax from the state would be earmarked for this plan. All those who are employed and whose employers provide health insurance for their employees and their dependents will be covered by the Employers' Plan. All those eligible for Medicare benefits will be under the Medicare Plan. Medicare is federal health insurance coverage for people 65 and older, certain disabled people, and those with end-stage renal disease [ESRD]. With fewer employers subsidizing health coverage for their current retirees and their spouses, the Medicare Plan can provide health insurance coverage for those older workers - the age group that has the hardest time buying individual policies. There are 54 million Medicare beneficiaries throughout the United States.

NEXT TO NOTHING:

All three plans will have low co-payments and no deductible except for Medicare patients where CMS [Center for Medicaid and Medicare Services] will determine and retain control over individual premiums and deductible for Part A and B. There will be no out-of-pocket cost for Part D except for co-pay since prescription drugs will be covered under the three plans.

FISCAL IMPACT:

- The plan will bring about a change in consumer spending. It is proposed that 1% from the total sales tax generated from the state should be earmarked for one of the plans, the State Plan. The sales tax will definitely make a direct impact on every American.
- Every time one makes a purchase, the thought that a fraction of the transactions will help support the health insurance coverage for a segment of the society is enough incentive to boost the sale and purchase of any product or services. If the buying spree stimulates the sagging economy, so much the better. As membership in the HMO/medical facility increases, more jobs will be created. This might even help bring unemployment down.
- The program will generate monthly income to every state. The HMO/medical facility will have to pay $1.00 good will fee to the state for each member enrolled in its organization. In California alone, this translates to approximately $38.5 million a month, $462 million a year.
- Disbursement of the collected funds from the good will fee will rest solely on the discretion of the Governor of the state as he/she deems it fit and proper.
- The HMO/medical facility will have to exercise due diligence in keeping track of its members and at the same time providing an accurate monthly roster to the three payers [Medicaid/Medical in California, the employers and Medicare].

Southern governors secede from Medicaid

By: Jonathan Allen and Kathryn Smith
July 10, 2012 08:18 PM EDT

House Republicans are lining up to repeal the Affordable Care Act on Wednesday, but GOP governors in the South have a real plan to gut the law.

Govs. Rick Perry in Texas and Rick Scott in Florida have both said they won't expand Medicaid to more of the working poor in their states — rejecting a central part of the law designed to cover 15 million more Americans.

The governors can do it because the Supreme Court ruled last month that states can opt out of the expansion without paying a penalty.

Unlike the symbolic votes in the House this week, the governors' tough talk has real-world consequences: Texas and Florida are among five hell-no states, meaning 3 million of the potential Medicaid beneficiaries — or about 1 in 5 nationwide — won't get coverage through President Barack Obama's health care law, according to a POLITICO analysis of data compiled by the Urban Institute. The governors of Mississippi, Louisiana and South Carolina also have said Washington can keep its Medicaid money and the new requirements that come with it.

"The bottom line here is that Medicaid is a failed program," Perry said in a Monday appearance on Fox News. "To expand this program is not unlike adding a thousand people to the Titanic."

Dave Carney, a New Hampshire-based GOP operative who advised Perry for more than a decade, said that it's a smart move for governors to come out against Obama on Medicaid because it fits with the GOP message of cutting government.

"It's good politics because it's good economics," he said. "Ultimately, it's a winning argument. It's something that will go hand in hand with the rest of the campaign in terms of congressional, gubernatorial and presidential."

But not all Republican governors are convinced and most have taken a more measured approach. The Medicaid expansion is still in doubt in at least eight other states with GOP governors who are leaning no. Among the big-state governors who have still yet to make a decision: Wisconsin's Scott Walker, New Jersey's Chris Christie, Virginia's Bob McDonnell and Georgia's Nathan Deal.

Some may join what Perry calls the “growing chorus” rejecting the expansion. The National Governors Association has a meeting in Williamsburg, Va., beginning Friday, and Perry already has been a ringleader for the anti-expansion forces. He and the other governors in that camp — Scott, Bobby Jindal of Louisiana, Phil Bryant of Mississippi and Nikki Haley of South Carolina — have discussed their positions with each other, according to a source in Perry's camp.

Come November, all the governors will have a better idea of what the right political call was. But for now, five are out on their own.

The reluctance of other GOP governors suggests they're not at all sure that rejecting a big infusion of Medicaid cash makes for good policy or good politics. In fact, they're trying to recast the problem as one that Obama must solve.

In a letter sent to the president on Tuesday, McDonnell, the chairman of the Republican Governors Association, posed 30 questions to Obama about the implementation of the Medicaid expansion and the health care law's insurance exchanges.

“While we continue to believe the best option is to fully repeal and replace the [law], states now confront numerous deadlines and face major policy decisions in the wake of the Supreme Court decision,” McDonnell wrote. “Before making any final policy decisions, governors must carefully consider the short and long-term implications of an expanded entitlement program and the consequences of significantly increasing the size of government to manage these programs.”

In contrast to the governors who raced to reject the Medicaid expansion, McDonnell raised concerns about the human pain of cutting off the Medicaid expansion in addition to the economic cost.

“If states determine that a Medicaid expansion is not in the best interests of its citizens, it is likely that there will be a significant gap in coverage for low-income individuals who do not qualify for tax credits,” he wrote.

HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius responded to McDonnell saying her agency would give states “as much flexibility” as necessary to implement the law.

“I am hopeful that state leaders will take the opportunity provided to insure their poorest working families with the unusually generous federal resources while dramatically reducing the burden of uncompensated care on their hospitals and other health care providers,” Sebelius wrote.

Utah Gov. Gary Herbert, a Republican, told POLITICO that his state won't rush to judgment.

“I think we're wise to kind of wait and see what the results of the November election are before we jump,” Herbert said. The election will determine “what's going to be the face of health care reform going forward.”

The Obama administration says the expansion is a great deal for states: The federal government is funding 100 percent of the expansion for the first three years, and will eventually scale back to match $9 to every $1 spent by states. According to the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, the federal government would pay $931 billion of the cost of the Medicaid expansion to all 50 states through 2022 — while the states would be asked to chip in $73 billion, or about 7 percent.

But governors, even some who may end up accepting the expansion, say it's still too expensive for them. Perry said the expansion would just “enlarge a broken system that is already financially unsustainable.”

And Mississippi's Gov. Phil Bryant says aside from the cost of providing coverage, the administrative costs of setting up the expansion would prove to be too much for his budget. “Simply put, Mississippi cannot afford a Medicaid expansion,” his spokesman said. However, CMS says has offered help in that area — last year, it announced it would provide 90 percent of funding for states that need to overhaul their IT systems to prepare for the Medicaid expansion, separate from the funding for coverage.

Texas is second only to California in the size of its eligible populations for the expansion — without it, about 1.3 million people who were expected to get insurance through Obamacare will be left uncovered. In Florida, almost a million people will find themselves without options through the law.

Subject: PPACA Proposed Rules
Date: Monday, December 03, 2012 2:16:22 PM

All:

As you know, late Friday evening, the Obama Administration released two major rules regarding implementation of the Affordable Care Act, CMS issued a fact sheet on FFEs (with no new info – just links to earlier guidance), and HHS announced a new application deadline of 12/28/2012 for states to apply for level I and level II exchange grants.

Below you will find a few key provisions of the aforementioned proposals, links to more detailed synopses, and highlights from the press:

PPACA; HHS Notice of Benefit and Payment Parameters for 2014 (HHS)

- User fees to finance Federally-facilitated Exchanges are proposed to be set at a rate of 3.5% of premiums. This fee will be levied on insurers who sell in the marketplace and is subject to change.
  - “For the 2014 benefit year, we propose a monthly user fee rate equal to 3.5 percent of the monthly premium charged by the issuer for a particular policy under the QHP. Because we seek to align this rate with rates charged by State-based Exchanges, we may adjust this rate to conform with State-based Exchange rates in the final Payment Notice.”
- The pre-existing conditions provision of the PPACA is implemented with this proposed rule.
  - “...prohibiting the use of factors such as health status, medical history, gender, and industry of employment to set premium rates...”
- The proposal addresses the parameters that will be used for “premium stabilization” programs – the risk-adjustment, reinsurance and risk corridor programs.

For a more detailed synopsis of this proposed rule click here.

PPACA; Establishment of the Multi-State Plan Program for the Affordable Insurance Exchanges (Office of Personnel Management)

- The proposed rule implements the Multi-State Plan Program (MSPP) pursuant to the PPACA.
- The OPM, which runs the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program, will contact with at least two insurers (one must be a non-profit) to offer multi-state plans in at least 31 states initially and all 50 states by the end of four years.
  - “In the first year the MSP is offered, it must be offered in at least 60 percent of the States (31 States),” and “[By the fourth year], the MSPP issuer must offer the MSP in all States and District of Columbia”.

Speaker of the House John Boehner

President Obama's Failure to Address Debt Crisis Would Guarantee Benefit Cuts for Seniors

March 22, 2011 | Posted by Don Seymour | Permalink

President Obama's congressional campaign arm is out today accusing Republicans of proposing "radical benefit cuts" to programs like Social Security when - in fact - it is the president's own budget that by doing nothing would lead to "radical benefit cuts" for seniors and future retirees, while piling more debt onto the backs of our kids and grandkids.

Is this President Obama's idea of an "adult conversation?" Consider:

President Obama's budget proposal fails to address our job-crushing debt-crisis and ignores the need to protect entitlement programs for future generations...

- "On tax and entitlement reform, the Obama budget does nothing at all." (Obama wimps out on the budget deficit, Houston Chronicle, 2/20/11)
- "He [Obama] says he refuses to pass the problem on to another generation of Americans,' said Riedl. 'And this in his budget he did just that and ignored the biggest budget issue of our era." (Obama fails to include cuts to entitlement spending in budget proposal, The Daily Caller, 2/15/11)
- "The president wants us to believe that the way he is going to fix the most pressing problem facing the nation is -- presto -- to do nothing about it!" (Not-so-tough choices: Behind Bam's budget punt, New York Post, 2/16/11)

But doing nothing to protect and preserve America's biggest entitlement programs will itself lead to automatic benefit cuts for seniors and future retirees...

- "...if we dither long enough, ultimately we will indeed face the threat of benefits being 'slashed' by a full 22%, according to last year's Social Security Trustees' report. It's not a reformed Social Security system that threatens to cut benefits, but the status quo—and our elected leaders would do well to acknowledge this reality." (Nobody Is Proposing to 'Slash' Social Security Benefits, Wall Street Journal, 2/3/11)
- "...keep in mind, if nothing is done, when those trust funds are exhausted, benefits would have to be cut by 22 percent in 2037, and more each year after that, according to the most recent report of the system's trustees. By 2084, the system will generate only enough revenue to pay for 75 percent of promised benefit levels." (Democrats Deny Social Security's Red Ink, FactCheck.org, 2/25/11)
- "The drastic reductions in Medicare reimbursements under ObamaCare will create havoc and chaos in health care for seniors. ... [S]eniors are not going to get the health services, treatment and care they expect." (How ObamaCare Guts Medicare, Wall Street Journal, 9/9/10)
- "Chuck Blahous, one of two public trustees for Social Security and Medicare, says that doing nothing will ultimately result in benefits being cut by a full 22 percent." (Americans Are Ready for Entitlement Reform, Politicians Aren't, US News, 3/17/11)

At a time when Washington is already borrowing 42 cents for every dollar it spends, Politico reports that "[e]ighty-one percent of those surveyed for a Washington Post-ABC News poll... said they think that if no changes are made to Social Security, the program will be in trouble." And they're right.

So while the president's political arm pitches misleading attacks and the White House pushes a status quo budget plan that would guarantee future benefit cuts, House Republicans have pledged to lead where the president has failed and introduce a budget that addresses our job-crushing debt crisis. Failing to address our debt crisis means more uncertainty for our small businesses who create jobs, and more uncertainty for every American who counts on programs like Medicare and Medicaid. Without a real plan to protect these programs, they simply won't be there for future generations. And that's unacceptable.

President Who Began 2011 Saying "No Cuts" Now Poised to Sign Largest Spending Cut Since WWII

White House spin merchants are in overdrive this week, contending that their boss – who just months ago called for a spending freeze that would result in no cuts to federal spending levels – will be getting most of what he asked for from Congress when he signs into law the largest non-defense spending cut in American history. The White House-spun yarn goes something like this: "Despite his January call for zero spending cuts, the president has actually always been in favor of spending cuts, as long as they are cuts in mandatory spending. And since the final agreement contains significant cuts in mandatory spending along with significant cuts in discretionary spending, it means the president won."

Here are the facts:

* Republicans believe dramatic reductions in both discretionary and mandatory ("autopilot") spending are essential to help reduce uncertainty in our economy and create a better environment for job growth, and the agreement makes historic cuts in both types of spending -- just months after President Obama and his Democratic allies in Congress called for zero cuts and claimed spending cuts would hurt the economy.

* Democrats note that some of the spending cuts in the agreement were proposed in the president's budget, but disingenuously fail to note that many of those cuts were used in the president's budget to offset additional or new spending elsewhere. In the context of the agreement, those cuts are now real cuts – chopping billions of dollars off the baseline, rather than being used to offset other Washington spending sought by the administration.

* As Chairman Paul Ryan said Tuesday, the agreement "[secures] tens of billions of dollars in spending cuts, forcing the President and his party's leaders to retreat from their reckless spending spree. The historic spending cut turns the page from Washington's pervasive culture of spending, sending a welcome signal to job creators and cleaning up the unprecedented budget mess left by the last Congress."

* The agreement cuts nearly $40 billion compared to FY 2010 spending levels (nearly $38 billion compared to the March 4 continuing resolution) – the largest non-defense spending cut in American history – and will cut $315 billion from the federal budget over the next decade, clearing a path for the landmark Path to Prosperity budget offered by Chairman Ryan, which cuts trillions more over the next decade. The bill also eliminates the ability of students to draw down two Pell Grant awards at the same time, saving an additional $35 billion over the next 10 years.

* The gross spending cut in the bill is nearly $45 billion. The total spending cut would be nearly $45 billion had the Speaker not fought for – and won – a $5 billion increase in defense spending, which is included in the agreement.

* As a result of the agreement, the federal government will spend $78.5 billion less than President Obama proposed spending this year.

* The agreement eliminates one Obamacare program, cuts a second nearly in half, and eliminates four of the Obama Administration's controversial "czars" – including the president's health czar charged with overseeing his government takeover of health care, his auto czar responsible for managing the federal government's takeover of U.S. auto manufacturers, and his climate change czar tasked with implementing the president's job-crushing national energy tax.

* The agreement secures Senate votes and debate on de-funding of two presidential priorities – Obamacare and Planned Parenthood – while saving the successful D.C. school choice program Democrats have been trying to eliminate for years.

* The agreement includes zero earmarks – a stark contrast to two years ago, when President Obama accommodated a Democratic House and Senate and signed into law a massive omnibus spending bill containing an estimated 9,000 earmarks.

* The agreement makes real cuts in discretionary spending and includes no tax increases. After initially opposing any spending cuts, the White House and Congressional Democrats abandoned that position during negotiations and tried to cut their losses by demanding tax increases and trying to prevent virtually any cuts to discretionary spending. Republican negotiators rebuffed this gambit and forced the White House to accept an agreement with a mix of cuts from both discretionary and mandatory spending programs, and zero tax hikes.

* The agreement terminates more than 40 ineffective programs at the U.S. Department of Education alone, including Educational Technology State Grants, Even Start, Advanced Credentialing, Mental Health Integration, Exchanges with Historic Whaling Partners, Women's Educational Equity, Tech-Prep Education State Grants, Smaller Learning Communities, Legal Assistance Loan Repayment Program, Thurgood Marshall Legal Opportunity Scholarships, and B.J. Stupak Olympic Scholarships.

A staff report compiled for U.S. Senator Jim DeMint

REPORT HIGHLIGHTS

- AARP functions as an insurance conglomerate with a liberal lobbying arm on the side. Independent experts and former AARP executives admit that the organization's billions of dollars raised from its business enterprises – most notably the sale of health insurance plans – have compromised the organization's mission and independence.
- AARP depends on profits, royalties, and commissions to make up over 50% of its annual budget. Membership dues from seniors account for only about 20% of AARP's revenue.
- AARP's $458 million in health insurance revenue in 2011 would rank it as the nation's sixth-most profitable health insurer.
- The health care law, which AARP lobbied heavily for, could lead to over $1 billion in new AARP health insurance profits over the next decade by forcing seniors off Medicare Advantage plans into Medigap supplemental coverage.
- AARP earns more profit the higher premiums rise on seniors in Medigap plans, charging a "royalty fee" of 4.95% of every premium dollar paid by seniors on these plans.
- In 2011, AARP failed to disclose to its senior membership that it lobbied Congress to oppose Medigap reform, legislation that could lower senior premiums by as much as 60%, and save seniors $415 per year on average.
- AARP could lose as much as $1.8 billion in revenue over ten years if Medigap reforms pass and successfully lower senior premiums.
- Documents show close coordination between Obama Administration and AARP, including efforts to deceive the public. In November 2009, a senior AARP executive wrote to the White House saying "we will try to keep a little space between us" on health care – because AARP's "polling shows we are more influential when we are seen as independent, so we want to reinforce that positioning....The larger issue is how best to serve the cause."
- AARP has benefitted by supporting the Obama Administration's unpopular health care law. Unlike other forms of insurance, AARP's Medigap insurance plans were exempted from many of the health care law's mandates, including the ban on pre-existing condition discrimination.
- The Obama Administration has not publicly criticized AARP's business practices, even though it has publicly attacked other insurance companies with much smaller profit margins than those generated by AARP's Medigap insurance.
- Democrats continue to praise AARP – HHS Secretary Sebelius called them the "gold standard" for "accurate information" – even though AARP earns more profit the higher Medigap premiums rise for seniors.
- Even though President Obama has criticized Republicans for placing seniors at the mercy of insurance companies, the health care law he signed allows organizations like AARP to continue discriminating against Medigap applicants with pre-existing conditions.

INTRODUCTION

The AARP bills itself as the nation's premier senior advocacy group, but has opposed important reforms to Medigap supplemental insurance that would save seniors, on average, hundreds of dollars a year.

Why? There are $1.8 billion reasons.

The reforms currently being proposed to Medigap would drastically reduce the "royalty fees" AARP generates by peddling insurance to its members by an estimated $1.8 billion over ten years. If AARP supported these reforms, which are sure to save seniors money, the lobbying group would lose billions.

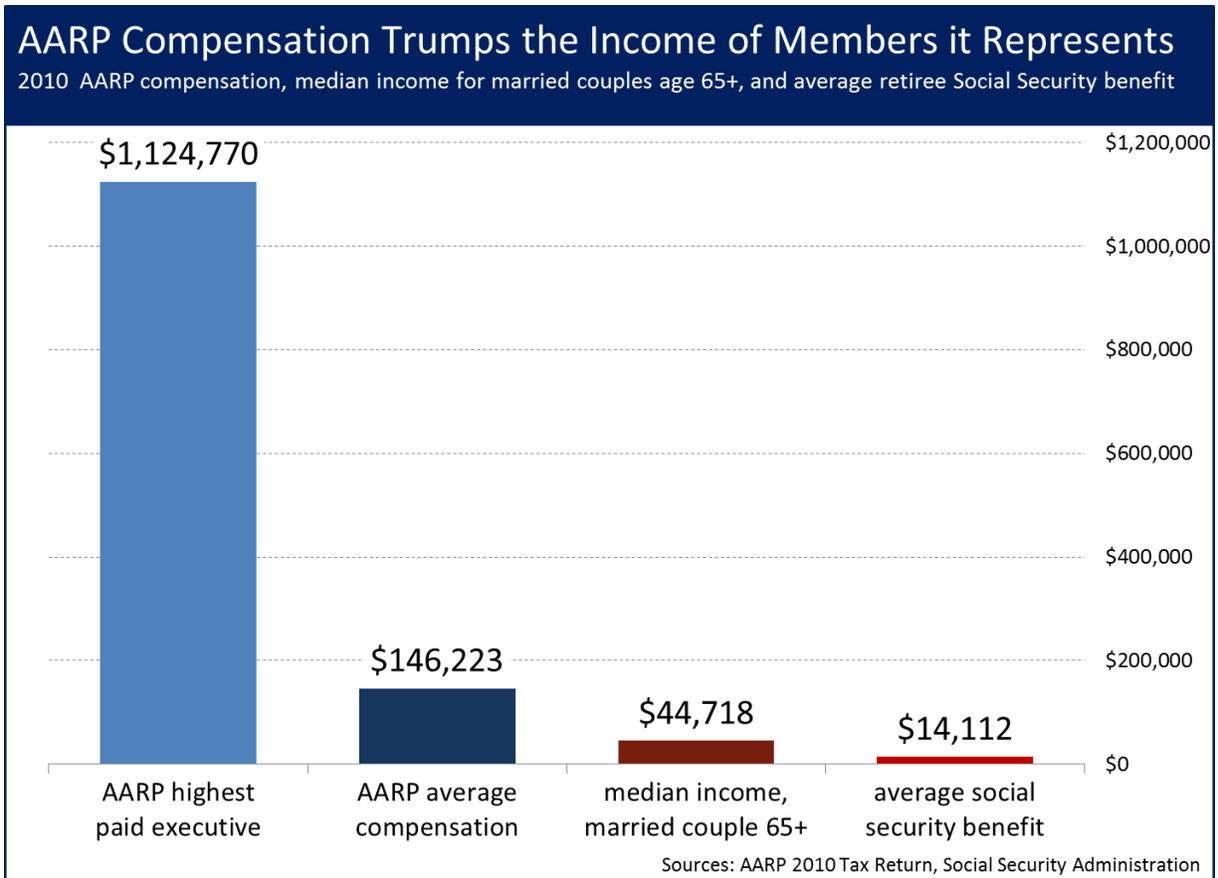

This report shows how the AARP has a history of being compromised by its lucrative insurance businesses. The pressure group's opposition to Medigap reform is just the latest instance where its financial enterprises have trumped the well-being of its members.

AARP is mounting a "You've Earned a Say" campaign to solicit member viewpoints about how to reform entitlements, but our examination of the organization's actions over the years shows AARP executives, who seek to boost their bottom lines, always have the biggest say.

THE AARP EMPIRE

Founded in 1958, AARP is now an organization with an annual budget exceeding $1 billion. The organization spent $206 million to acquire its headquarters building in Washington, DC more than a decade ago.<sup>1</sup> According to its most recently filed tax returns, AARP spent more than $246 million on postage, and over $280 million on compensation in 2010.<sup>2</sup> In that same year, AARP provided compensation of over $100,000 to 543 separate employees, including one senior executive who received nearly $1.2 million in compensation.<sup>3</sup>

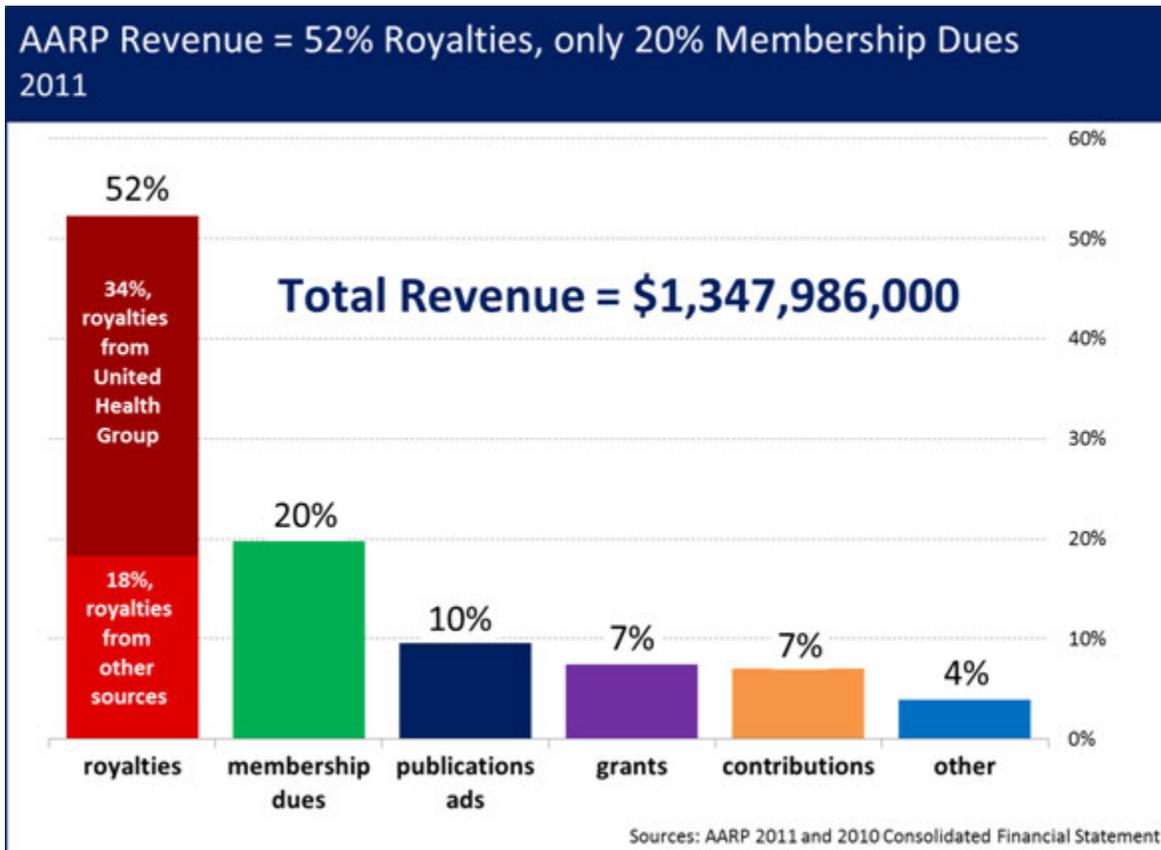

While AARP claims to be a membership-driven organization, in reality most of its revenue comes not from member dues but from “royalty fees” generated from the sale of other products, namely health insurance. “Royalty fees” are payments AARP receives for putting its brand name on certain products and services. So while insurance companies provide a tangible product and service in exchange for the premiums they charge, AARP receives more than half a billion dollars per year for essentially playing the middle man.

According to its 2011 financial statements, more than half of AARP’s revenue came from royalty fees – over $704 million of its $1.35 billion in total revenue last year.<sup>4</sup> Revenues from health insurer United Health Group comprised nearly two-thirds of AARP’s total “royalty fee” revenue, or $457.6 million.<sup>5</sup> By comparison, in 2011 AARP generated only $265.8 million from membership dues – just over half the amount received from the sale of AARP-branded insurance products.<sup>6</sup>

AARP’s royalty fees have risen significantly in recent years, making the organization ever more dependent on the sale of insurance policies to fund AARP’s massive payroll. Between 2001 and 2011, AARP’s total royalty fees rose by more than 350% – from $196.7 million in 2001 to over $704 million last year.<sup>7</sup> Much of this increase comes from additional health insurance-related revenue. Over the past five years, AARP has generated over $2 billion in revenue from United Health Group alone – $284 million in 2007,<sup>8</sup> $414 million in 2008,<sup>9</sup> $427 million in 2009,<sup>10</sup> $441 million in 2010,<sup>11</sup> and $458 million in 2011.<sup>12</sup>

AARP's $458 million in insurance revenue in 2011 would rank it as the nation's sixth-most profitable insurer, based on data collected by Fortune magazine.<sup>13</sup> For instance, insurer Health Net generated only $204 million in net revenue last year – on over $13.6 billion in total revenue.<sup>14</sup> By contrast, AARP's $458 million in insurance-based "royalty fees" go directly to the organization's bottom line.

AARP'S QUESTIONABLE INSURANCE PRACTICES

Even as it claims to be a non-profit advocacy organization, AARP has received criticism from many quarters for its heavy reliance on revenue from insurance sales. Marilyn Moon, a former AARP executive, said “there’s an inherent conflict of interest” because AARP is “very dependent on sources of income.”<sup>15</sup>

AARP’s dependence on “royalty fee” income has resulted in numerous controversies over the years. For instance, in 2008 a congressional inquiry<sup>16</sup> found that AARP was using potentially misleading language in its marketing materials; seniors thought they were buying comprehensive health insurance, but in reality purchased policies covering only a limited amount of health costs. Following a public outcry, AARP ordered an investigation,<sup>17</sup> and eventually stopped selling these types of limited benefit plans.<sup>18</sup>

More recently, the tax implications of AARP’s significant “royalty fees” have come under scrutiny. An investigation by several members of the House Ways and Means Committee last year raised questions about whether or not AARP's licensing revenue should be considered "royalty fees" or "commissions."<sup>19</sup> If the revenue in question should in fact be classified as "commissions," then AARP could owe significant amounts of back taxes on billions of dollars in revenue. The Ways and Means members referred the matter to the Internal Revenue Service, and requested an IRS investigation.<sup>20</sup>

THE MEDIGAP CASH COW

The Ways and Means member investigation also made clear that one of AARP's prime sources of revenue is the sale of Medigap-branded supplemental insurance plans. AARP does license Medicare Advantage plans, along with a Medicare Part D prescription drug plan. However, AARP receives a flat financial payment from United Health Group for its Medicare Advantage and Part D plans, regardless of the number of people enrolled in each plan. Conversely, AARP receives a percentage of total Medigap premiums paid – meaning that while AARP receives no financial benefits if its Medicare Advantage or Part D plan enrollment rises, it will receive a windfall if its Medigap plan generates additional customers, or those customers pay higher premiums.

The health care law includes more than $300 billion in cuts to Medicare Advantage.<sup>21</sup> As a result of these payment reductions, enrollment in Medicare Advantage plans will be cut in half, with 7.4 million fewer seniors enrolled.<sup>22</sup> Many of these 7.4 million seniors will need supplemental coverage through Medigap, to fund catastrophic expenses not covered by Medicare.

Because the health care law will have the effect of migrating millions of seniors from Medicare Advantage plans – which are less lucrative financially to AARP – to more-lucrative Medigap supplemental coverage, the Ways and Means member report concluded that the organization could receive a windfall exceeding $1 billion over the next ten years thanks to the law.<sup>23</sup>

A 2011 report by House Ways and Means Committee members found that AARP stands to gain over $1 billion in profits thanks to the health care law.

MEDIGAP REFORM WITH BIPARTISAN APPEAL

The potential Medigap-related windfall for AARP resulting from the health care law is not the only instance in which the organization's financial interests have coincided with its policy positions. In recent months, a renewed focus on reforming entitlements, and making Medicare more sustainable, has prompted new attention to various proposals to reform Medigap plans. While these plans would benefit most seniors financially, they would harm AARP's financial interests – so perhaps not surprisingly, AARP has decided to oppose them.

Under the proposals being discussed, the traditional Medicare program would be reformed to provide catastrophic coverage, while Medigap would provide limited supplemental coverage. For the first time in the program's history, seniors would know their Medicare costs would not exceed a set amount. In exchange, Medigap supplemental coverage, which covers co-payments and deductibles, would also be reformed, so that seniors would face an out-of-pocket deductible not covered by insurance.

“I was kind of shocked. They’re making money on the backs of the old people. I don’t think AARP is looking out for me.” – AARP member Bill Cochran, quoted in Bloomberg

Reform to Medigap insurance plans has generated bipartisan appeal. Versions of this reform have been proposed by the Simpson-Bowles Commission,<sup>24</sup> the Rivlin-Domenici commission on debt and deficits,<sup>25</sup> Sens. Tom Coburn (R-OK) and Joe Lieberman (D-CT),<sup>26</sup> and even President Obama’s most recent budget.<sup>27</sup> Policy-makers in both parties believe that, by limiting first-dollar coverage of medical expenses through Medigap, seniors would serve as smarter purchasers of health insurance, such that overall spending in Medicare might decline modestly.

Although some seniors might pay slightly more out-of-pocket under these changes, a study from the Kaiser Family Foundation said that “the savings for the average beneficiary” under Medigap reform “would be sufficient to more than offset his or her new direct outlays for Medicare cost sharing.”<sup>28</sup> According to Kaiser, nearly four in five Medigap policyholders would receive a net financial benefit from this reform – with those savings averaging $415 per senior each year – because creating a new deductible for all Medigap plans will cause premiums to fall.<sup>29</sup>

Under Medigap reform, seniors would spend much less money on premiums. Just as with automobile insurance, or with Health Savings Account policies for individuals under age 65, adopting a higher deductible would yield significant premium savings for Medigap policies. The Kaiser study found that under one proposed reform, Medigap premiums would plummet by an average of over 60%, from nearly $2,000 per year to only $731.<sup>30</sup> Because less money from Medigap policy-holders would be diverted to administrative overhead, seniors would be able to keep their own money to finance their own health care.

AARP WINS WHEN SENIORS LOSE

The overall premise of Medigap reform is simple: Less money going to insurance companies means greater financial savings for most seniors.

Unfortunately for AARP, things are not that simple. As one independent financial adviser has said, AARP’s sales tactics are a “dirty little secret” that are “all about fattening the coffers of the organization.” And the biggest “dirty little secret” of all is that AARP has a major financial incentive to keep premiums high for seniors.<sup>31</sup>

The House Ways and Means Committee members’ investigation last year found that AARP receives a percentage of each senior’s Medigap premium dollar.<sup>32</sup> The organization’s “royalty fee” totals 4.95% of every premium dollar paid. So, similar to a salesman pushing the most expensive product in order to receive a higher commission, regardless of the customer’s needs, AARP has an incentive to sell more Medigap policies – and to sell the most expensive Medigap policies – even if seniors do not need the insurance. The higher the cost of seniors’ Medigap policies, the more money AARP makes.

Based on AARP’s existing contractual arrangements and the Kaiser Family Foundation study projections, it is relatively simple to calculate the projected financial loss to AARP under Medigap reform.<sup>33</sup> If premiums decline by more than $1,200 per year, as the Kaiser study predicted, AARP stands to lose an average of $62 in “royalty fees” for every senior enrolled in its Medigap insurance. With nearly 3 million seniors enrolled in AARP’s Medigap plan, those numbers add up – over $181 million in one year, and $1.8 billion over the course of a decade.<sup>34</sup> With the organization generating total revenue of $1.35 billion in 2011, Medigap reform would result in an immediate loss of over 13% of AARP’s annual revenue.<sup>35</sup>

AARP’S COVERT CAMPAIGN TO KILL MEDIGAP REFORM

Given its financial interest in keeping Medigap premiums high, it is perhaps unsurprising that AARP engaged in a covert lobbying campaign designed to kill Medigap reform, and keep its existing “royalty fee” regime in place. Last year AARP wrote to members of the congressional “supercommittee” on deficit reduction, asking them not to include Medigap reforms – which, as noted above, would benefit four out of five Medigap policyholders, but significantly harm AARP’s financial interests.

AARP published excerpts of their letter to the “supercommittee” on its website.<sup>36</sup> But AARP has yet to put anything on its website indicating that the organization has been privately contacting Members of Congress, asking them not to reform Medigap – and preserve AARP’s lucrative Medigap commissions.

Two years ago, an AARP spokesman told CNN that the organization doesn’t lobby Congress on Medigap issues “at all.”<sup>37</sup> While the organization is apparently trying to keep its actions secret, the fact remains that AARP is lobbying Congress against Medigap reform, opposing changes that will just so happen to save AARP members tens of billions, but that would also cost AARP billions.

AARP WORKS AGAINST ITS MEMBERS

Whereas last year AARP actively lobbied against Medigap reforms that would help its members but hurt AARP financially, three years ago the organization did NOT lobby for Medigap reforms that would help its members but could hurt AARP financially. Specifically, even after enactment of the health care law, Medigap plans are still permitted to impose waiting periods on senior citizen applicants with pre-existing conditions. AARP, despite its stated support for ending pre-existing condition restrictions,<sup>38</sup> imposes waiting periods on its own members applying for Medigap coverage<sup>39</sup> – and stood idly by as an attempt to end this practice within Medigap was stricken from the health care bill before it became law.

Section 1234 of House Democrats' June 2009 health care discussion draft would have prohibited pre-existing condition discrimination for certain Medigap applicants – achieving one of AARP's chief goals.<sup>40</sup> However, last year the Washington Post claimed that the Medigap provision “was dropped from the legislation during congressional negotiations because it would have increased Medicare costs, according to a House Democratic congressional aide.”<sup>41</sup>

The Congressional Budget Office scored provisions eliminating pre-existing condition discrimination in Medigap as costing about $400 million per year.<sup>42</sup> However, AARP had previously stated that the organization “would gladly forego every dime of revenue to fix the health care system.”<sup>43</sup> As noted above, its $700 million in “royalty fees” last year far exceeds the $400 million annual cost of ending Medigap pre-existing condition discrimination. It remains unclear why this provision was dropped from the bill, if AARP was so interested in foregoing profits in order to help its members.

In addition to allowing AARP to continue imposing waiting periods on Medigap applicants, the law enacted in March 2010 also exempted AARP's lucrative Medigap policies from several other new insurance regulations.<sup>44</sup> At a December 2009 hearing,<sup>45</sup> AARP's Board Chair claimed to have no idea that legislation that she and the AARP had previously endorsed included numerous exemptions for Medigap plans, including an exemption from the ban on pre-existing condition discrimination.<sup>46</sup>

“AARP has a conflict of interest between selling insurance and helping senior citizens. Until it decides which one is more important, the $$$ or the people, it is deceiving old folks into thinking it works for their benefit.” – AARP member from Oklahoma

After the numerous Medigap-related exemptions included in the health care law were publicly exposed, AARP eventually endorsed legislative changes to end some of the exemptions.<sup>47</sup> However, despite this public turn-around, AARP has yet to explain to the public why it allowed these exemptions to be enacted in the first place – if the organization is not motivated by its own financial interests, as it claims. Moreover, the organization has not apologized to its members for failing to act and end pre-existing condition discrimination in Medigap plans two years ago, and the impact such failure has had on AARP's own members.

MEMBERS REVOLT

Documents released by a House Energy and Commerce Committee oversight investigation reveal just how strongly AARP members opposed their organization's behavior during the health care debate three years ago. The files show overwhelming opposition from AARP members to the legislation, based on summaries of AARP call center activity:

July 23, 2009 – 77 members support; 1,031 oppose

July 28, 2009 – 36 members support; 4,174 oppose

July 29, 2009 – 23 members support; 2,656 oppose<sup>48</sup>

On a single day (July 28, 2009) during the height of the debate, 1,897 individuals cancelled their membership in AARP to protest its position on the health care bill.<sup>49</sup>

The documents also reveal that AARP members were well aware of the organization's financial conflicts, and believed that these conflicts were influencing AARP policy. One member from Oklahoma called in and complained that:

AARP has a conflict of interest between selling insurance and helping senior citizens. Until it decides which one is more important, the $$$ or the people, it is deceiving old folks into thinking it works for their benefit. Actually it works for the insurance companies [sic] benefit and interests, which is why it is so gung-ho on the health care reform bill....Not OK with me.<sup>50</sup>

Members also complained about “perceived partisanship on AARP’s part” – and the documents reveal this to be an accurate concern. In November 2009, a senior AARP executive wrote to the White House saying “we will try to keep a little space between us” on health care – because AARP’s “polling shows we are more influential when we are seen as independent, so we want to reinforce that positioning....The larger issue is how best to serve the cause.”<sup>51</sup> In other words, the organization was attempting to protect its image by publicly deceiving its members – acting detached in public, even as AARP was frantically lobbying behind the scenes to ram the legislation through for the good of the liberal cause.

AARP'S MISGUIDED POLITICAL FOCUS

It is perhaps unsurprising that AARP would focus on “serv[ing] the cause” of liberalism, because many of its senior executives have strong liberal connections. When the organization hired its current CEO, Barry Rand, one Capitol Hill publication noted that “New AARP Chief Gave Big to Obama.”<sup>52</sup> Indeed, Mr. Rand has given tens of thousands of dollars in contributions to liberal Democrats over the years.<sup>53</sup> Many other members of AARP’s executive team also have strong connections to liberal causes; the head of AARP’s government relations and advocacy program was a senior adviser in the Clinton Administration,<sup>54</sup> while other AARP key executives have worked for Sen. Ted Kennedy,<sup>55</sup> Rep. Geraldine Ferraro,<sup>56</sup> and the National Wildlife Federation, a liberal environmental group.<sup>57</sup>

AARP CEO Barry Rand has contributed tens of thousands of dollars to Barack Obama and liberal Democrats.

The political philosophy of the organization’s leadership results in AARP mounting advocacy campaigns trumpeting liberal talking points that frequently have little basis in fact. For instance, in September 2011 AARP released an advertisement with seniors claiming that “I paid into my Medicare,” and decrying any efforts to “cut our benefits.”<sup>58</sup> However, the ad did not acknowledge what an Urban Institute study makes clear: Most seniors receive more in Social Security and Medicare benefits than they paid in taxes during their lifetime.<sup>59</sup> An Associated Press story based on the Urban Institute study – “What You Pay for Medicare Won’t Cover Your Costs” – was initially placed on aarp.org, but was later removed from the website, perhaps because its conclusions represent inconvenient truths to AARP.<sup>60</sup>

Other ads run by the AARP during last year’s debt limit debate were also debunked as false and misleading. In June 2011, the Washington Post’s “Fact Checker” column awarded an AARP ad four “Pinocchios” for “perpetuat[ing] the worse stereotypes about how easy it would be to balance the budget. At a time when the nation’s fiscal crisis – amid the looming retirement of the baby-boom generation – demands informed and reasoned debate, the AARP misinforms its members about the choices the nation faces.”<sup>61</sup>

Of course, AARP has a financial interest in misinforming its members – because the organization derives much of its revenue from preserving the status quo. In launching a “multi-million dollar” ad campaign featuring misleading claims, AARP made clear it wanted no changes to the existing Medicare benefit structure.<sup>62</sup> As outlined above, changes to the Medicare benefit – such as Medigap reform – would cost AARP billions, while saving many seniors hundreds of dollars per year. By blocking reforms that would dent its profits, AARP hurts seniors two ways – first, by preventing seniors from saving hundreds of dollars in Medigap premiums, and second, by leaving the Medicare program less solvent for future generations.

DEMOCRATS ENCOURAGE AARP'S ABUSES

Even as AARP racks up billions of dollars in insurance profits by overcharging seniors for Medigap plans, Democrats encourage these abuses by giving AARP special favors, and ignoring its questionable sales tactics. As noted above, the health care law exempted AARP's lucrative Medigap insurance plans from the ban on pre-existing condition discrimination, thus allowing AARP to continue to impose waiting periods on individuals applying for coverage. However, that's not the only exemption that Medigap coverage received in the law; Medigap insurance was also exempted from:

- The law's $500,000 cap on executive compensation for insurance industry executives.<sup>63</sup> Thanks to this exemption, AARP can continue to pay its senior executives more than $1 million in annual compensation.<sup>64</sup>
- The tax on insurance companies that will total more than $14 billion per year.<sup>65</sup> Medigap insurance received this exemption even though AARP generates more money from insurance industry "royalty fees" than it received from membership dues, grant revenues, and private contributions combined.<sup>66</sup>
- The requirement imposed on other health insurance plans to spend at least 85 percent of their premium dollars on medical claims.<sup>67</sup> Medigap policies are currently held to a far less restrictive 65 percent standard, and the difference can be used to fund higher profits to AARP paid out of the pockets of its senior citizen members.<sup>68</sup>

In addition to these numerous exemptions for Medigap insurance provided in law, the Administration provided a further exemption for Medigap coverage during the rulemaking process. The Department of Health and Human Services' rule on insurance rate review exempted Medigap plans from further scrutiny of their premium increases.<sup>69</sup> In arriving at this determination, HHS concluded that insurance plans like Medigap coverage "do not appear to be a principal focus of the Affordable Care Act" – meaning that because Medigap plans were exempted from the law's other regulatory requirements, they should be exempted from rate review as well.<sup>70</sup>

OBAMA ADMINISTRATION HYPOCRISY

The frequent exemptions given to Medigap insurance – a product line where AARP holds the largest market share – directly contradict the claims made by Democrats about the 2,700 page health care law. For instance, Department of Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius' official biography claims that she “is implementing reforms that end many of the insurance industry’s worst abuses.”<sup>71</sup> However, with respect to Medigap insurance, that claim is entirely false. Because Medigap plans were exempted from the law’s new requirements, organizations like AARP can continue to discriminate against applicants with pre-existing conditions, and overcharge seniors in order to generate greater profits.

Even as the Obama Administration fails to acknowledge that the health care law exempts Medigap insurance from all of its new requirements, it has attacked conservatives’ Medicare reform proposals for granting too much power to insurers. In her speech to the 2012 Democratic National Convention, Secretary Sebelius criticized Republicans for “let[ting] insurance companies continue to cherry-pick who gets coverage and who gets left out, priced out, or locked out of the market.”<sup>72</sup> And in his speech to the same convention, President Obama said that “no American should have to spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies.”<sup>73</sup>

Given that the legislation President Obama signed into law exempted Medigap coverage for seniors from virtually all of its new regulatory requirements, it is more than a little hypocritical for his Administration to criticize others for leaving seniors to the mercy of insurers.

The Administration has yet to answer a basic question at the heart of the numerous exemptions granted to Medigap insurers in their 2,700 page health care law: If the law’s protections are so good, then why are seniors left out of its supposed benefits when it comes to their supplemental insurance? Unfortunately, the answer could be that AARP has been unwilling to forfeit its profits, and so the Obama Administration has looked the other way as the organization continues to take advantage of seniors.

KATHLEEN SEBELIUS: WATCHDOG OR LAPDOG?

Even as it has been willing to politically strong-arm insurance companies with whom it disagrees, the Obama Administration’s Department of Health and Human Services has failed to confront AARP about its questionable business practices. In March 2010, as the Administration was gearing up to ram through its health care law, Secretary Sebelius asked other insurers to “give up some short-term profits” for the nation’s good.<sup>74</sup> At the time, estimates by Fortune magazine indicated that health insurer profits averaged about 2.2 percent.<sup>75</sup> Yet Secretary Sebelius made no such request of AARP to give up some of its revenues – even though its Medigap profit margin was 4.95 percent, more than double that of the insurance industry as a whole.

Shortly after the health law passed, Secretary Sebelius undertook a publicity campaign to “encourage” insurance companies to ban rescissions and extend coverage to young adults under age 26 earlier than was required under the law. While the Secretary made very public efforts to have insurance companies “abandon...efforts to rescind health insurance coverage from patients who need it most,” she made no attempt to encourage AARP and other Medigap insurers to stop discriminating against applicants with pre-existing conditions.<sup>76</sup> At an implementation briefing to Congress shortly after the law passed, Senate Republican staff asked HHS officials why the Department was asking other insurers voluntarily to change their business practices, but was not asking AARP to stop discriminating against Medigap applicants. While Jeanne Lambrew, head of the Department’s Office of Health Reform, promised to look into the matter, the Department never took action.

Rather than ask AARP to reform its business practices, Secretary Sebelius instead has blindly offered the organization praise. In an October 2010 speech to the AARP convention, she hailed the organization as “the gold standard in cutting through spin and complexity to give people the accurate information they need to make the best choices.”<sup>77</sup> Even though AARP has a strong financial conflict-of-interest in its Medigap insurance – because the organization earns more profit when seniors pay more in premiums – Secretary Sebelius still claimed that AARP constituted “the gold standard” in giving “accurate information.”

Secretary Sebelius Says AARP Unbiased; Former AARP Employee Disagrees

“[AARP] is the gold standard in cutting through the spin and complexity to give people accurate information they need to make the best choices.” –Secretary of Health and Human Services Kathleen Sebelius, in an October 2010 speech to the AARP

“There’s an inherent conflict of interest...[AARP is] becoming very dependent on sources of income.” –Former AARP executive Mariyn Moon, quoted in Bloomberg.

The National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) has previously expressed strong concerns about the percentage-based compensation model under which AARP receives much of its revenue. In fact, Section 18 of NAIC’s Producer Model Licensing Act recommends that states require explicit disclosure by insurers, and clear written acknowledgement by consumers, of any percentage-based compensation arrangement, due to the potential for abuse. As a former insurance commissioner, Secretary Sebelius should be well aware of the financial conflicts inherent when an organization like AARP receives a percentage of every Medigap dollar paid by seniors. Yet the Secretary apparently ignored these concerns, and went on to praise AARP as a source of impartial advice, even though even former AARP executives have criticized the organization as hopelessly compromised by financial conflicts-of-interest.

In her time heading HHS, Secretary Sebelius has undertaken clearly political actions, including those that violated the law. Just last week, the Office of the Special Counsel publicly released a report concluding that the Secretary engaged in political activity that violated the Hatch Act prohibitions on federal officials campaigning for partisan political causes.<sup>78</sup> It is therefore quite reasonable to ask whether Secretary Sebelius has also engaged in a pattern of politically-motivated selective enforcement – attacking other insurers when convenient, but failing to examine AARP’s questionable business practices, because AARP supports the President’s liberal causes.

As noted above, AARP executives e-mailed the White House in November 2009 stating that “the larger issue is how best to serve the cause.” It would thus appear that both AARP and the Administration recognize their political interests are aligned. Certainly the Administration’s actions – exemptions for Medigap coverage included both in statute and in rulemaking; attacks on insurers with smaller profit margins than AARP; failure to criticize AARP’s percentage-based compensation model – are consistent with a governing philosophy that permits AARP to engage in questionable and abusive behavior towards seniors, so long as AARP funnels the profits from said behavior back into supporting the Administration’s liberal causes.

“Either you’re a voice for the elderly or you’re an insurance company – choose one.” -- Independent consultant Dean Zerbe, quoted in the Washington Post

In April 2010, Secretary Sebelius wrote to insurers to stop rescinding insurance policies earlier than required under the law, encouraging them “not to wait until the fall to do the right thing.”<sup>79</sup> America’s seniors have been waiting for years for Secretary Sebelius, and the entire Obama Administration, to do the right thing – to apply the law fairly, without regard to political persuasion. Unfortunately, the facts suggest that the Administration has knowingly looked the other way, and failed to take on AARP over its business practices – because political advantage outweighs the need for impartial enforcement, or extending the supposed benefits of the health care law to senior citizens.

CONCLUSION

Though it purports to be a seniors advocacy organization, AARP functions in many respects as an insurance conglomerate with a liberal lobbying arm on the side. Independent experts and even former AARP executives have admitted that the organization’s billions of dollars raised from its business enterprises – most notably the sale of health insurance plans – have compromised the organization’s mission and independence. As one consultant put it: “Either you’re a voice for the elderly or you’re an insurance company – choose one.”<sup>80</sup>

As this report has demonstrated, AARP has acted against its members’ interest, but in its own financial interests, on several occasions during the major health care debates of the past several years. First AARP endorsed a health care law that gave its most lucrative product offering – Medigap insurance – a major opportunity to solicit new members, exempted those Medigap plans from the law’s regulatory regime, and allowed AARP to continue imposing waiting periods on the sickest seniors looking to buy Medigap coverage. More recently, AARP has engaged in a covert lobbying campaign designed to kill Medigap reforms that would benefit nearly four in five policy-holders and improve Medicare's solvency – but could cost AARP billions.

This year, AARP has embarked upon a “You’ve Earned a Say” campaign, purportedly designed to solicit members’ opinions on ways to reduce the deficit. However, the organization has yet to solicit members’ viewpoints about its own actions. For instance:

1. How many members know that senior AARP executives have received over $1 million in compensation from the organization – and that 543 individuals received over $100,000 in compensation last year?
2. How many members know that AARP has generated over $2 billion in revenue from selling health insurance plans in the past five years?
3. How many members know that AARP imposes waiting periods on Medigap applicants with pre-existing conditions – and stood idly by as provisions to eliminate Medigap pre-existing condition discrimination were stricken from the health care law?
4. How many members know that nearly four in five Medigap plan holders would financially benefit from reforms, to the tune of several hundred dollars per year?
5. How many members know that Medigap reforms that would help seniors could cost AARP billions of dollars in lost revenue?

At the very least, AARP should be up-front and honest with its members about the massive financial stake it has in this debate. Better yet, the organization should start thinking less about its bottom line and more about its members, and endorse reforms that will help the vast majority of Medigap policy-holders.

All,

Please see Will's report below:

Hello all - -

Sorry to miss this morning's call, which seemed to conclude in record time.

It's the last week in August and here is what is on the schedule in the House:

- Tax Week: the House will consider two tax bills this week. The first (HR 8) will extend current rates for a year, preventing a massive tax hike proposed by the President that will cause 700K people to lose their jobs. When we consider that bill, we intend to allow the Democrats to offer a substitute which will be the President's plan (which, again, will kill 700K jobs). Also absent from the Democrat alternative will be any extension of the estate tax or any extension of the payroll tax relief.

The second tax bill (HR 6169) will set the stage for fundamental tax reform in the next Congress, providing for expedited consideration and benchmarks for what fundamental tax reform will look like.

- Farm Bill: currently, we expect the House to take up a one-year extension of farm programs coupled with a relief package for livestock, possibly on Wednesday.

- PNTR: nothing will happen this week, and thus nothing will happen prior to the August recess.

- Sequestration: House Armed Services will have a hearing on Wednesday morning with Administration officials from OMB and DOD to discuss how sequestration would be implemented. This hearing will provide a good opportunity for any messaging on this issue, both making Governors positions known prior to the hearing and reacting to OMB/DOD testimony after the hearing. I know Governor McDonnell and others have been raising sequestration in the media on a regular basis.

As always, feel free to let me know if there are any questions.

Will

WHERE EACH STATE STANDS ON ACA'S MEDICAID EXPANSION

A roundup of what each state's leadership has said about their

Medicaid plans

July 05, 2012

Last updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.

The Supreme Court's ruling on the Affordable Care Act (ACA) allows states to opt out of the law's Medicaid expansion, leaving each state's decision to participate in the hands of the nation's governors and state leaders.

Based on lawmakers' statements, press releases, and media coverage, the Daily Briefing and American Health Line editorial teams have rounded up where each state currently stands on the expansion.

Learn more about the Court's ruling, discuss takeaways with our experts, and model the impact on your organization.

The following information was last updated on July 5 at 10:30 a.m. ET. We will continue to update this map and list as more information becomes available. Send us news, tips, and feedback by commenting below or emailing dailybriefing@advisory.com.

**Italics indicate a state's participation in the multistate lawsuit against ACA*

Will not participate (5 states)

- Florida: Gov. Rick Scott (R) said, “Florida will opt out of spending approximately $1.9 billion more taxpayer dollars required to implement a massive entitlement expansion of the Medicaid program.” In addition, the governor said the state will not establish an insurance exchange (Pear, New York Times, 7/2).
- Louisiana: In an interview on NBC’s “Meet the Press,” Gov. Bobby Jindal (R) said, “Every governor’s got two critical decisions to make. One is do we set up these exchanges. And, secondly, do we expand Medicaid. And, no, in Louisiana, we’re not doing either one of those things” (Barrow, New Orleans Times-Picayune, 7/2).
- Mississippi: Gov. Phil Bryant (R) does not plan to participate in the Medicaid expansion, according to Bryant spokesperson Mick Bullock, Bloomberg reports (Niquette/Wayne, Bloomberg, 7/5).
- South Carolina: Gov. Nikki Haley (R) on Sunday announced via Facebook that South Carolina “will NOT expand Medicaid, or participate in any health exchanges” (Hawkins, TheDigitalCharleston, 7/2; Dudley, Charleston Post and Courier, 6/29).

- Wisconsin: Gov. Scott Walker (R) issued a statement following Thursday’s ruling saying that “Wisconsin will not take any action to implement ObamaCare” (Office of Gov. Walker release, 6/28; Radnofsky et al., Wall Street Journal, 7/2).

Leaning toward not participating (6 states)

- Iowa: Gov. Terry Branstad (R) announced at a Des Moines news conference that while his staff is still assessing the Supreme Court ruling on the ACA, he expects to forgo the federal funding that would allow an estimated 150,000 low-income Iowans to enroll in the state Medicaid program. Branstad said, “Here’s the problem: The federal government has done this again and again: ‘Buy into our program, and we’re going to do all these things for you,’ and then it doesn’t happen, and then the taxpayers of the state get stuck with it,” Branstad said on Monday (Totland, Washington Times, 7/2; Wisner, Waterloo Cedar Falls Courier, 7/3).
- Missouri: Moments after the ruling, Republican leaders in Missouri “closed the door... on expanding Medicaid eligibility,” the Associated Press reports. Republican Lt. Gov. Peter Kinder said the Medicaid expansion would be “a break-the-bank provision for the state of Missouri.” House Budget Committee Chair Ryan Silvey (R), said, “I just don’t see any way we will be expanding Medicaid at the expense of things like education and public safety.” By rejecting Medicaid expansion the state would be “turning down an estimated $8.4 billion windfall from the federal government” but could save up to “$431 million of its own” (Blank, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28; Crisp, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, 7/1).
- Nebraska: Gov. Dave Heineman (R) on June 28 pledged to block any effort to expanded Nebraska’s Medicaid program, telling reporters that an expansion would remove money from other priorities or require a tax increase, AP/BloombergBusinessweek reports. In a statement on his website, Heineman said, “As I have said repeatedly, if this unfunded Medicaid expansion is implemented, state aid to education and funding for the University of Nebraska will be cut or taxes will be increased. If some state senators want to increase taxes or cut education funding, I will oppose them.” However, the governor noted that the Supreme Court’s decision on Medicaid was unexpected, adding, “Again, I want to emphasize that reviewing this decision in a detailed, thoughtful and responsible manner will take time before a complete determination can be made on what this ruling means for Nebraska” (Schulte, AP/BloombergBusinessWeek, 6/29; Heineman statement, 6/28).

- Nevada: After the Supreme Court ruling, Gov. Brian Sandoval (R) said the impact of the decision on was not immediately clear but indicated that he is leaning toward not expanding the state’s Medicaid program. Sandoval’s press secretary, Mary-Sarah Kinner, said in a statement, “The governor does not intend to automatically accept the Medicaid expansion” (Haynes et al., Las Vegas Review-Journal, 6/28).
- New Jersey: on Fox News’ “Fox and Friends” on July 3, Gov. Chris Christie (R) said he is leaning toward not accepting federal funding to expand the state’s Medicaid program. He noted, “Medicaid is pretty well expanded in our state already because of the legacy of previous Democratic governors. So I don’t know if there’s a lot more to do in New Jersey in that regard” (“Fox News Insider,” Fox News, 7/3; San Francisco Chronicle, 7/3; Friedman, Newark Star-Ledger, 7/3).
- Texas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Lucy Nashed—deputy press secretary for Gov. Rick Perry (R)—said Perry will be working with Attorney General Greg Abbott (R) "and appropriate state agencies to determine the impact of the Supreme Court decision on the state of Texas," adding that "the governor has previously made clear, he has no interest in fast tracking any portion of this bankrupting and overreaching legislation. We will continue to call for the full repeal of the bill" (Nashed email, 7/5). [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]

Leaning toward participating (3 states)

- Arkansas: Gov. Mike Beebe (D) said he is inclined to proceed with Medicaid expansion for his state given the “opportunity to pay for it with taxes that are coming from ... the federal government,” he said at a news conference in Washington, D.C. “I don’t want to send [tax money] to Massachusetts or California and ignore our own people,” he added (Lyon, Arkansas News, 7/2).
- Oregon: Gov. John Kitzhaber (D) said he is confident that the Oregon legislature will approve a state Medicaid expansion, and State Sen. Alan Bates (D) has expressed similar confidence, the Associated Press reports. In an interview last week, Kitzhaber said, “We’ll make a decision on whether or not to expand the Medicaid program really based on, I think, the resources we have available in the general fund for that purpose going forward” (Budnick, The Oregonian, 7/3; Wong, Statesman Journal, 6/28; Cooper, AP/Real Clear Politics, 6/28).
- Rhode Island: In statement on his website, Gov. Lincoln Chaffee (I) said, “I have fully committed to ensuring Rhode Island is a national leader in implementing health reform whatever the Supreme Court decision, and this just reinforces that commitment.” According to Steven Costantino, the state’s secretary of health and human services, “The expansion is easy to do and makes sense” (Chaffee statement, 6/28; Radnofsky et al., Wall Street Journal, 7/2).

Participating (10 states and District of Columbia)

- California: California got a head start on expanding its Medicaid program in November 2010, shortly after

Obama signed the Affordable Care Act into law. After the high court's ruling, Gov. Jerry Brown (D) issued a statement, "Today's dramatic Supreme Court ruling removes the last roadblock to fulfilling President Obama's historic plan to bring health care to millions of uninsured citizens." Duane Dauner, president of the California Hospital Association, said in separate statement that he expects "California will comply with the Medicaid expansion in the law, even though it will increase the state's costs in future years" (Office of Gov. Brown release, 6/28; California Hospital Association release, 7/3).

- Connecticut: Gov. Dannel Malloy (D) was among the first to sign his state up for Medicaid expansion when Obama signed the law in 2010. Following the Supreme Court's ruling preserving the legislation, he responded, "it's great ... [and a] very important decision for the people of Connecticut. 500,000 people would have lost coverage if Republicans had their way" (Davis, WTNH, 7/28).
- Delaware: Gov. Jack Markell—chair of the Democratic Governors Association—said in a statement, "The Supreme Court's ruling enables Delaware to continue to implement provisions of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to provide access to health care benefits for Delawareans," adding, "On the Medicaid front, Delaware already voluntarily expanded the state's Medicaid coverage program in 1996 to cover many Delawareans not previously covered" (Office of Gov. Markell release, 6/28).
- District of Columbia: "The District is not at risk of losing any Medicaid funding as a result of this ruling, because District officials have already begun implementation of the ACA's Medicaid-expansion provisions and will continue to implement the expansion," according to a statement from the office of D.C. Mayor Vincent Gray (D) (Executive Office of the Mayor release, 6/28).
- Hawaii: Gov. Neil Abercrombie (D) said in a statement after the ruling, “The Affordable Care Act is our ally” in the effort to “support a healthcare system that ensures high quality, safety and sustainable costs.” Pat McManaman, the state’s director of the Department of Human Services, said starting next month Hawaii’s Medicaid eligibility requirements will be in line with federal guidelines under the overhaul, meaning an additional 24,000 people will be eligible for the program by 2014 (Office of Gov. Abercrombie release, 6/28; Garcia, AP/CBS News, 6/29).

- Illinois: Gov. Pat Quinn (D) on Thursday praised the court’s decision and said he “will continue to work with President Obama to help working families get the healthcare coverage they need,” including expanding Medicaid (Office of the Governor release, 6/28; Thomason, Rock River Times, 7/3).
- Maryland: Gov. Martin O’Malley (D) in a statement said the Supreme Court’s decision “gives considerable momentum to our health care reform efforts here in Maryland,” adding that the state will move forward to implement the overhaul (Office of the Governor release, 6/28).
- Massachusetts: Gov. Deval Patrick (D) said Massachusetts is “an early expansion state as you know and we’re expecting further resources from federal government to sustain the experiment here in Massachusetts.” Patrick said the ruling is “good news for us” Patrick said (Walker, YNN, 6/28).
- Minnesota: “Today’s ruling will be met with relief by the Minnesotans whose lives have already been improved by this law,” Gov. Mark Dayton (D) said in a statement on Thursday. Dayton in 2011 used federal money to expand Medicaid early to 84,000 adults with annual incomes below $8,400 (Lohn, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Vermont: Gov. Peter Shumlin (D) said Vermont’s Medicaid program already meets the requirements under the health reform law’s Medicaid expansion, WCAX reports (Steimle, WCAX, 7/1).

- Washington: Gov. Chris Gregoire (D) "supports the Medicaid expansion—and Washington will move forward," Karina Shagren—a deputy communications director in Gregoire's administration—said in an email to American Health Line (Shagren email, 7/5). [updated on July 5 at 1:35 p.m.]

Undecided/no comment (26 states)

- Alabama: As of June 29, Gov. Robert Bentley (R) had not decided whether Alabama will opt out of the Medicaid expansion, according to Jennifer Ardis, Bentley's press secretary, AP/CBS News reports. In a statement on his website, Bentley said, "I am deeply disappointed by today's Supreme Court decision," but he did not address the court's ruling on the Medicaid expansion (AP/CBS News, 6/29; Bentley statement, 6/28).
- Alaska: As of Tuesday, Gov. Sean Parnell (R) has not made a statement regarding Alaska's intent to participate in the Medicaid expansion, only saying in a release that "now with no penalty we need to rethink what we're going to do with Medicaid" and the "expansion costs that are mandated" (Office of Gov. Parnell release, 6/28; Coyne, Alaska Dispatch, 7/1).
- Arizona: Gov. Jan Brewer (R) in a statement following the Supreme Court ruling repeated her call for the entire law to be repealed but did not directly address the expansion. House Speaker Andy Tobin (R), however, said budgetary issues in the state and a conservative political climate will make expanding Medicaid difficult. "We're going to have to sit down and weigh carefully what is reasonable to expect of our political leaders," he said. "I don't see us going along with the expansion if it's not mandated," Tobin added. "It's an ever-expanding cost, so it continues to put pressure on the state budget when we're barely recovering as it is" (Brewer statement, 6/28; Reinhart, Arizona Central, 6/28; Young, Huffington Post, 7/2).
- Colorado: Gov. John Hickenlooper (D) at a press conference on June 28 gave only a lukewarm nod to the Medicaid expansion. He said, “Well, we’ll see. We’re certainly looking at that. We’re probably a little bit premature, but we’re certainly looking at it and trying to figure out a way we can do that and still live within our means” (McCrimmon, Health Policy Solutions, 7/2; AP/CBS’ “Moneywatch,” 6/29).

- Georgia: As of July 2, Gov. Nathan Deal (R) had not yet decided whether Georgia would opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Chattanooga Times Free Press reports. Over 10 years, the expansion is projected to cost Georgia about $4.5 billion, “money we don’t have,” Deal spokesperson Brian Robinson said (Sher, Chattanooga Times Free Press, 7/2).
- Idaho: Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter (R) this week did not indicate his preference on whether Idaho would widen Medicaid coverage (AP/KTVB, 7/1; Messick, StateImpact Idaho, 6/29).
- Indiana: In a press release Gov. Mitch Daniels (R) said, “Any decision to expand Medicaid in 2014 is entirely the province of the next General Assembly and governor.” On Thursday Daniels told reporters “If it’s optional as I’m advised that it is, that’ll be a decision for future legislators to make” (Office of Gov. Daniels release, 6/29; AP/Lafayette Journal and Courier, 7/2; “Moneywatch,” AP/CBS News, 6/29; Wilson, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Kansas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Sherriene Jones-Sontag—communications director and press secretary for Gov. Sam Brownback (R)—said Brownback believes “this is now a political issue that will be resolved by the American people in the November elections” and “he will wait until after the November elections before making any decisions related to ObamaCare.” [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]
- Kentucky: Gov. Steve Beshear (D) on June 28 said, “We continue to review the Supreme Court’s opinion, particularly on the Medicaid portion of the Affordable Care Act to determine what our options may be.” He also noted that he soon would issue an executive order to create a health insurance exchange (Office of Gov. Beshear release, 6/28; AP/Evansville Courier & Press, 6/28).

- Maine: Gov. Paul LePage (R) said in a statement on June 28, “It is a sad day, and it is now up to the American people to demand full repeal of Obamacare.” The governor did not directly address the Medicaid expansion in his statement. The state Legislature and LePage approved reductions in Medicaid spending earlier this year, and Maine Department of Health and Human Services Commissioner Mary Mayhew said the state “will follow federal procedures and submit state plan amendments within the coming weeks that will outline the Medicaid reductions that were enacted by the Maine Legislature” (Office of Gov. LePage release, 6/28; Farwel, Bangor Daily News/Lewiston Sun Journal, 6/29).
- Michigan: As of July 1, Gov. Rick Snyder (R) had not decided to whether Michigan will opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Lansing State Journal reports. Snyder spokesperson Sara Wurfel said the administration wants to examine the cost of the expansion to assess the “best course of action” for the state. Meanwhile, Republican lawmakers, who control both chambers of the state legislature, have not committed to the expansion (Davis, Lansing State Journal, 7/1).
- Montana: Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer (D), through a spokeswoman, declined to comment on the court’s decision. Schweitzer expressed deep reservations about the Medicaid expansion and effect on Montana’s budget. “Here’s what I know,” Schweitzer in February 2011 said, “that unless we challenge the underlying costs of health care ... it will bankrupt the states because there’s no way of decreasing the cost of health care under the current system” (Dennison, Gazette State Bureau, 6/28; Drake, Montana Watchdog, 7/2).
- New Hampshire: As of July 1, Gov. John Lynch (D)—who in the past has voiced concern over how the government would pay for the Medicaid expansion—had made no statement on whether New Hampshire would opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Nashua Telegraph reports. In a June 28 statement on his website, Lynch noted that the state has “been preparing to implement the Affordable Care Act and will continue doing so in a way that best fits New Hampshire” (Landrigan, Nashua Telegraph, 7/1; Lynch statement, 6/28).

- New Mexico: Gov. Susana Martinez (R) has not decided whether the state will expand Medicaid, according to spokesperson Scott Darnell. He said, “The governor is reviewing today’s Supreme Court decision and will proceed in a manner that best protects the safety net for the most vulnerable New Mexicans in a responsible and sustainable manner” (Massey, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- New York: As of July 2, Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) had not made a statement on whether New York would participate in the Medicaid expansion. In a release last week, the governor said, “I am pleased the Supreme Court upheld this law,” adding that he looked forward to working with the “Obama administration to ensure accessible, quality care for all New Yorkers (Office of Gov. Cuomo release, 6/28; The Journal News, 6/29; Caruso, San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- North Carolina: As of July 3, Gov. Beverly Perdue (D) had not made any public statement about her state’s participation in the Medicaid expansion. However, in a statement responding to the Supreme Court’s decision, Perdue said she is “committed to continuing to move forward ... to ensure that all North Carolinians have affordable, reliable health coverage.” Meanwhile, a spokesperson for Perdue said the governor has been in contact with HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius about the Medicaid expansion and will review the Supreme Court’s ruling to determine how it might affect North Carolina (Office of Gov. Perdue release, 6/28; Dalesio, CBS News, 6/28; Jarvis/Bonner, Winston-Salem Journal, 6/29).
- North Dakota: As of Tuesday, Gov. Jack Dalrymple (R)

had not made a statement about his state's intent to participate in the Medicaid expansion. However, in a statement responding to the Supreme Court's ruling, Dalrymple said the health reform law "is wrong for North Dakota," adding that its "citizens want the freedom to make their own decisions about their health-care coverage." Dalrymple has said that his staff is analyzing the court's ruling, but it is unclear whether the state will participate in the Medicaid (Office of Gov. Dalrymple release, 6/28; MacPherson, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).

- Ohio: Gov. John Kasich (R) on Monday said he has not decided whether his state will participate in the Medicaid expansion and he does not plan to set a "deadline" to make his decision. The head of the state's Office of Health Transformation also said the state must first determine how to cover the additional Medicaid costs the state would incur even if the state does not participate in the expansion. In a statement on the Supreme Court's ruling, Kasich said, "We are very concerned that a sudden, dramatic increase in Medicaid spending could threaten Ohio's ability to pursue needed reforms in other areas" (Office of Gov. Kasich release, 6/28; Tribble, Cleveland Plain Dealer, 7/2; Columbus Business First, 7/3; Candisky, Columbus Dispatch, 7/3).
- Oklahoma: Gov. Mary Fallin (R) has not yet decided whether Oklahoma will opt of the Medicaid expansion, Tulsa World reports. Fallin said, "Certainly I am hoping that we'll elect a new president and we'll be able to change faces ... in the (Democratic-controlled) U.S. Senate that we can once and for all overturn the federal health care bill" (McNutt, The Oklahoman, 6/29; Greene, Tulsa World, 7/3; McGuigan, Tulsa Today, 7/2).
- Pennsylvania: Gov. Tom Corbett (R) has not yet announced whether Pennsylvania will opt out of the Medicaid expansion. He said in a statement, "I think we can all agree there are Pennsylvanians who need our help. However, expanding government bureaucracy, government programs and government spending is not the answer” (Office of the Gov. Corbett release, 6/28, LoBasso, “PhillyNow,” Philadelphia Weekly, 7/3).

- South Dakota: South Dakota: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Joe Kafka—press secretary in Gov. Dennis Daugaard’s (R) administration—said Daugaard “has made no decision on [the] Medicaid expansion, which will be costly for South Dakota, and he won’t make any decision on it until after the election” (Kafka email, 7/5). [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]
- Tennessee: As of July 2, Gov. Bill Haslam (R) had not yet decided whether Tennessee would opt out of the Medicaid expansion. After the Supreme Court ruling, Haslam told reporters, “We don’t really know what we’re going to do ... but the cost impact to the state is very significant” (Sher, Chattanooga Times Free Press, 7/2).
- Utah: Gov. Gary Herbert (R) said his administration is conducting a thorough legal and policy review of the Supreme Court ruling, but he did not comment on whether the state would expand its Medicaid program (Stewart, Salt Lake Tribune, 6/29; AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Virginia: Gov. Bob McDonnell (R) has made statements indicating that he is against the Medicaid expansion, but has declined at this point to comment definitively on whether Virginia will opt out of it. McDonnell said he will review the state’s options in the upcoming weeks (Martz, Richmond Times-Dispatch, 7/1; Millman, Politico, 6/29).
- West Virginia: Gov. Earl Ray Tomblin (D) has not yet announced whether West Virginia will proceed with the Medicaid expansion. In a statement, Tomblin said, “We know what the law is but as I’ve said before, I will continue to do what is best for West Virginia... We’re going to review the Supreme Court’s ruling, and work with our federal delegation on how we move forward” (Smith, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28; Office of Gov. Tomblin statement, 6/28).
- Wyoming: Gov. Matt Mead (R) in a statement said he will study the Supreme Court's ruling and the health reform law more carefully before making any implementation plans for Wyoming, but he believes "the ACA is not a good fit" for the state (Office of Gov. Mead release, 6/28; Wolfson, Billings Gazette, 6/28).

HEALTHCARE

I jumped in on the call in the middle of healthcare discussion. But they are wanting us to verify the cost of Obamacare to our state and get back with them soon on that. Apparently CMS is desperate and pushing the states to take the next round of funding, the deadline is mid-August and would lock us into the mandate. We will get an update no later than Wednesday on Obamacare.

USA Today is asking all the governors 6 questions relating to Medicaid expansion, mandate enrollment, support of Romney, etc., might want to check with press on that.

UPCOMING NGA MEETING

No changes to the meeting schedule have been made.

Governor Martin O'Malley of Maryland and DGA chairman, will be having a press conference on Thursday. There is no inside information as to what the press conference will be about.

President Obama is going to be in Virginia on Friday and Saturday.

The democratic governors are trying to reserve the Williamsburg Community Building on Friday morning around the same time as the RGA opening press conference. There is speculation that they are trying to reserve the building so the Democratic Governors and President Obama can discuss various issues, mostly healthcare. Don't know if it will be an open forum with the press being included, but if it is, it would result in the press not showing up to the RGA press conference. All governors should be expected to be hit up by the press at various events.

On Saturday, President Obama will be in Richmond, which is where the Governor spouses will be spending the day.

Occupy Williamsburg will be coming out in full force the NGA conference. Here is a posting from their Facebook page:

"From Thursday July 12 through Sunday July 15, the Governors from around the United States of America will be convening for the 2012 National Governors Association Annual Meeting.

“And Occupy Williamsburg will be here to welcome them.

“On the morning of Friday the 13th at 9:15am we will assemble at the Old Capitol off of Duke of Gloucester Street in Colonial Williamsburg to welcome and publicly red...ress the Governors at their press conference.

“We will meet together again at the parking lot of the Jamestown Settlement at 2110 Jamestown Road at 5pm, where the Governors will attend their evening's festivities.

“Be prepared to let America's governors know how you feel about how they have done in fighting against ALEC's onslaught, stopping the War on Women, keeping Americans in our homes, and making a conducive economic climate for good jobs and green jobs!

“*** Interested in Planning Events to Welcome the NGA? ***

“Please join us at 11am on Saturday morning July 7th in the Ukrops Cafe in the Martin's in Monticello Marketplace, 4660 Monticello Avenue 23188. (mike)”

There will be a conference call sometime mid-week to further discuss the upcoming NGA confre

SENATE UPDATE

Senate will convene at 2 pm today. Will vote on a Judge tomorrow morning and there will be a cloture vote tomorrow afternoon on Sen. Reid's stimulus proposal.

There is not a great outlook on this month's work, which is scheduled to conclude on August 7.

OTHER NOTES

No update on the House.

Energy report was not heard.

It is okay to sign the letter that is circulating about Russia, however the RGA has not taken a position.

WHERE EACH STATE STANDS ON ACA'S MEDICAID EXPANSION

A roundup of what each state's leadership has said about their Medicaid plans

July 05, 2012

Last updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.

The Supreme Court's ruling on the Affordable Care Act (ACA) allows states to opt out of the law's Medicaid expansion, leaving each state's decision to participate in the hands of the nation's governors and state leaders.

Based on lawmakers' statements, press releases, and media coverage, the Daily Briefing and American Health Line editorial teams have rounded up where each state currently stands on the expansion.

Learn more about the Court's ruling, discuss takeaways with our experts, and model the impact on your organization.

The following information was last updated on July 5 at 10:30 a.m. ET. We will continue to update this map and list as more information becomes available. Send us news, tips, and feedback by commenting below or emailing dailybriefing@advisory.com.

Will not participate (5 states)

- Florida: Gov. Rick Scott (R) said, “Florida will opt out of spending approximately $1.9 billion more taxpayer dollars required to implement a massive entitlement expansion of the Medicaid program.” In addition, the governor said the state will not establish an insurance exchange (Pear, New York Times, 7/2).
- Louisiana: In an interview on NBC’s “Meet the Press,” Gov. Bobby Jindal (R) said, “Every governor’s got two critical decisions to make. One is do we set up these exchanges. And, secondly, do we expand Medicaid. And, no, in Louisiana, we’re not doing either one of those things” (Barrow, New Orleans Times-Picayune, 7/2).
- Mississippi: Gov. Phil Bryant (R) does not plan to participate in the Medicaid expansion, according to Bryant spokesperson Mick Bullock, Bloomberg reports (Niquette/Wayne, Bloomberg, 7/5).
- South Carolina: Gov. Nikki Haley (R) on Sunday announced via Facebook that South Carolina “will NOT expand Medicaid, or participate in any health exchanges” (Hawkins, TheDigitalCharleston, 7/2; Dudley, Charleston Post and Courier, 6/29).
- Wisconsin: Gov. Scott Walker (R) issued a statement following Thursday’s ruling saying that “Wisconsin will not take any action to implement ObamaCare” (Office of Gov. Walker release, 6/28; Radnofsky et al., Wall Street Journal, 7/2).

Leaning toward not participating (6 states)

- Iowa: Gov. Terry Branstad (R) announced at a Des Moines news conference that while his staff is still assessing the Supreme Court ruling on the ACA, he expects to forgo the federal funding that would allow an estimated 150,000 low-income Iowans to enroll in the state Medicaid program. Branstad said, “Here’s the problem: The federal government has done this again and again: ‘Buy into our program, and we’re going to do all these things for you,' and then it doesn't happen, and then the taxpayers of the state get stuck with it,"

Branstad said on Monday (Totland, Washington Times, 7/2; Wisner, Waterloo Cedar Falls Courier, 7/3).

- Missouri: Moments after the ruling, Republican leaders in Missouri "closed the door... on expanding Medicaid eligibility," the Associated Press reports. Republican Lt. Gov. Peter Kinder said the Medicaid expansion would be "a break-the-bank provision for the state of Missouri." House Budget Committee Chair Ryan Silvey (R), said, "I just don't see any way we will be expanding Medicaid at the expense of things like education and public safety." By rejecting Medicaid expansion the state would be "turning down an estimated $8.4 billion windfall from the federal government" but could save up to "$431 million of its own" (Blank, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28; Crisp, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, 7/1).
- Nebraska: Gov. Dave Heineman (R) on June 28 pledged to block any effort to expanded Nebraska's Medicaid program, telling reporters that an expansion would remove money from other priorities or require a tax increase, AP/BloombergBusinessweek reports. In a statement on his website, Heineman said, "As I have said repeatedly, if this unfunded Medicaid expansion is implemented, state aid to education and funding for the University of Nebraska will be cut or taxes will be increased. If some state senators want to increase taxes or cut education funding, I will oppose them." However, the governor noted that the Supreme Court's decision on Medicaid was unexpected, adding, "Again, I want to emphasize that reviewing this decision in a detailed, thoughtful and responsible manner will take time before a complete determination can be made on what this ruling means for Nebraska" (Schulte, AP/BloombergBusinessWeek, 6/29; Heineman statement, 6/28).
- Nevada: After the Supreme Court ruling, Gov. Brian Sandoval (R) said the impact of the decision on was not immediately clear but indicated that he is leaning toward not expanding the state's Medicaid program. Sandoval's press secretary, Mary-Sarah Kinner, said in a statement, "The governor does not intend to automatically accept the Medicaid expansion" (Haynes et al., Las Vegas Review-Journal, 6/28).

- New Jersey: on Fox News' "Fox and Friends" on July 3, Gov. Chris Christie (R) said he is leaning toward not accepting federal funding to expand the state's Medicaid program. He noted, "Medicaid is pretty well expanded in our state already because of the legacy of previous Democratic governors. So I don't know if there's a lot more to do in New Jersey in that regard" ("Fox News Insider," Fox News, 7/3; San Francisco Chronicle, 7/3; Friedman, Newark Star-Ledger, 7/3).
- Texas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Lucy Nashed—deputy press secretary for Gov. Rick Perry (R)—said Perry will be working with Attorney General Greg Abbott (R) "and appropriate state agencies to determine the impact of the Supreme Court decision on the state of Texas," adding that "the governor has previously made clear, he has no interest in fast tracking any portion of this bankrupting and overreaching legislation. We will continue to call for the full repeal of the bill" (Nashed email, 7/5). [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]

Leaning toward participating (3 states)

- Arkansas: Gov. Mike Beebe (D) said he is inclined to proceed with Medicaid expansion for his state given the "opportunity to pay for it with taxes that are coming from ... the federal government," he said at a news conference in Washington, D.C. "I don't want to send [tax money] to Massachusetts or California and ignore our own people," he added (Lyon, Arkansas News, 7/2).
- Oregon: Gov. John Kitzhaber (D) said he is confident that the Oregon legislature will approve a state Medicaid expansion, and State Sen. Alan Bates (D) has expressed similar confidence, the Associated Press reports. In an interview last week, Kitzhaber said, "We'll make a decision on whether or not to expand the Medicaid program really based on, I think, the resources we have available in the general fund for that purpose going forward” (Budnick, The Oregonian, 7/3; Wong, Statesman Journal, 6/28; Cooper, AP/Real Clear Politics, 6/28).

- Rhode Island: In statement on his website, Gov. Lincoln Chaffee (I) said, “I have fully committed to ensuring Rhode Island is a national leader in implementing health reform whatever the Supreme Court decision, and this just reinforces that commitment.” According to Steven Costantino, the state’s secretary of health and human services, “The expansion is easy to do and makes sense” (Chaffee statement, 6/28; Radnofsky et al., Wall Street Journal, 7/2).

Participating (10 states and District of Columbia)

- California: California got a head start on expanding its Medicaid program in November 2010, shortly after Obama signed the Affordable Care Act into law. After the high court’s ruling, Gov. Jerry Brown (D) issued a statement, “Today’s dramatic Supreme Court ruling removes the last roadblock to fulfilling President Obama’s historic plan to bring health care to millions of uninsured citizens.” Duane Dauner, president of the California Hospital Association, said in separate statement that he expects “California will comply with the Medicaid expansion in the law, even though it will increase the state’s costs in future years” (Office of Gov. Brown release, 6/28; California Hospital Association release, 7/3).
- Connecticut: Gov. Dannel Malloy (D) was among the first to sign his state up for Medicaid expansion when Obama signed the law in 2010. Following the Supreme Court’s ruling preserving the legislation, he responded, “it’s great ... [and a] very important decision for the people of Connecticut. 500,000 people would have lost coverage if Republicans had their way” (Davis, WTNH, 7/28).

- Delaware: Gov. Jack Markell—chair of the Democratic Governors Association—said in a statement, “The Supreme Court’s ruling enables Delaware to continue to implement provisions of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to provide access to health care benefits for Delawareans,” adding, “On the Medicaid front, Delaware already voluntarily expanded the state’s Medicaid coverage program in 1996 to cover many Delawareans not previously covered” (Office of Gov. Markell release, 6/28).
- District of Columbia: “The District is not at risk of losing any Medicaid funding as a result of this ruling, because District officials have already begun implementation of the ACA’s Medicaid-expansion provisions and will continue to implement the expansion,” according to a statement from the office of D.C. Mayor Vincent Gray (D) (Executive Office of the Mayor release, 6/28).
- Hawaii: Gov. Neil Abercrombie (D) said in a statement after the ruling, “The Affordable Care Act is our ally” in the effort to “support a healthcare system that ensures high quality, safety and sustainable costs.” Pat McManaman, the state’s director of the Department of Human Services, said starting next month Hawaii’s Medicaid eligibility requirements will be in line with federal guidelines under the overhaul, meaning an additional 24,000 people will be eligible for the program by 2014 (Office of Gov. Abercrombie release, 6/28; Garcia, AP/CBS News, 6/29).
- Illinois: Gov. Pat Quinn (D) on Thursday praised the court’s decision and said he “will continue to work with President Obama to help working families get the healthcare coverage they need,” including expanding Medicaid (Office of the Governor release, 6/28; Thomason, Rock River Times, 7/3).
- Maryland: Gov. Martin O’Malley (D) in a statement said the Supreme Court’s decision “gives considerable momentum to our health care reform efforts here in Maryland,” adding that the state will move forward to implement the overhaul (Office of the Governor release, 6/28).

- Massachusetts: Gov. Deval Patrick (D) said Massachusetts is “an early expansion state as you know and we’re expecting further resources from federal government to sustain the experiment here in Massachusetts.” Patrick said the ruling is “good news for us” Patrick said (Walker, YNN, 6/28).
- Minnesota: “Today’s ruling will be met with relief by the Minnesotans whose lives have already been improved by this law,” Gov. Mark Dayton (D) said in a statement on Thursday. Dayton in 2011 used federal money to expand Medicaid early to 84,000 adults with annual incomes below $8,400 (Lohn, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Vermont: Gov. Peter Shumlin (D) said Vermont’s Medicaid program already meets the requirements under the health reform law’s Medicaid expansion, WCAX reports (Steimle, WCAX, 7/1).
- Washington: Gov. Chris Gregoire (D) “supports the Medicaid expansion—and Washington will move forward,” Karina Shagren—a deputy communications director in Gregoire’s administration—said in an email to American Health Line (Shagren email, 7/5). [updated on July 5 at 1:35 p.m.]

Undecided/no comment (26 states)

- Alabama: As of June 29, Gov. Robert Bentley (R) had not decided whether Alabama will opt out of the Medicaid expansion, according to Jennifer Ardis, Bentley’s press secretary, AP/CBS News reports. In a statement on his website, Bentley said, “I am deeply disappointed by today’s Supreme Court decision,” but he did not address the court’s ruling on the Medicaid expansion (AP/CBS News, 6/29; Bentley statement, 6/28).
- Alaska: As of Tuesday, Gov. Sean Parnell (R) has not made a statement regarding Alaska’s intent to participate in the Medicaid expansion, only saying in a release that “now with no penalty we need to rethink what we’re going to do with Medicaid” and the “expansion costs that are mandated” (Office of Gov. Parnell release, 6/28; Coyne, Alaska Dispatch, 7/1).

- Arizona: Gov. Jan Brewer (R) in a statement following the Supreme Court ruling repeated her call for the entire law to be repealed but did not directly address the expansion. House Speaker Andy Tobin (R), however, said budgetary issues in the state and a conservative political climate will make expanding Medicaid difficult. “We’re going to have to sit down and weigh carefully what is reasonable to expect of our political leaders,” he said. “I don’t see us going along with the expansion if it’s not mandated,” Tobin added. “It’s an ever-expanding cost, so it continues to put pressure on the state budget when we’re barely recovering as it is” (Brewer statement, 6/28; Reinhart, Arizona Central, 6/28; Young, Huffington Post, 7/2).
- Colorado: Gov. John Hickenlooper (D) at a press conference on June 28 gave only a lukewarm nod to the Medicaid expansion. He said, “Well, we’ll see. We’re certainly looking at that. We’re probably a little bit premature, but we’re certainly looking at it and trying to figure out a way we can do that and still live within our means” (McCrimmon, Health Policy Solutions, 7/2; AP/CBS’ “Moneywatch,” 6/29).
- Georgia: As of July 2, Gov. Nathan Deal (R) had not yet decided whether Georgia would opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Chattanooga Times Free Press reports. Over 10 years, the expansion is projected to cost Georgia about $4.5 billion, “money we don’t have,” Deal spokesperson Brian Robinson said (Sher, Chattanooga Times Free Press, 7/2).
- Idaho: Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter (R) this week did not indicate his preference on whether Idaho would widen Medicaid coverage (AP/KTVB, 7/1; Messick, StateImpact Idaho, 6/29).
- Indiana: In a press release Gov. Mitch Daniels (R) said, “Any decision to expand Medicaid in 2014 is entirely the province of the next General Assembly and governor.” On Thursday Daniels told reporters “If it’s optional as I’m advised that it is, that’ll be a decision for future legislators to make” (Office of Gov. Daniels release, 6/29; AP/Lafayette Journal and Courier, 7/2; “Moneywatch,” AP/CBS News, 6/29; Wilson, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).

- Kansas: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Sherriene Jones-Sontag—communications director and press secretary for Gov. Sam Brownback (R)—said Brownback believes “this is now a political issue that will be resolved by the American people in the November elections” and “he will wait until after the November elections before making any decisions related to ObamaCare.” [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]
- Kentucky: Gov. Steve Beshear (D) on June 28 said, “We continue to review the Supreme Court’s opinion, particularly on the Medicaid portion of the Affordable Care Act to determine what our options may be.” He also noted that he soon would issue an executive order to create a health insurance exchange (Office of Gov. Beshear release, 6/28; AP/Evansville Courier & Press, 6/28).
- Maine: Gov. Paul LePage (R) said in a statement on June 28, “It is a sad day, and it is now up to the American people to demand full repeal of Obamacare.” The governor did not directly address the Medicaid expansion in his statement. The state Legislature and LePage approved reductions in Medicaid spending earlier this year, and Maine Department of Health and Human Services Commissioner Mary Mayhew said the state “will follow federal procedures and submit state plan amendments within the coming weeks that will outline the Medicaid reductions that were enacted by the Maine Legislature” (Office of Gov. LePage release, 6/28; Farwel, Bangor Daily News/Lewiston Sun Journal, 6/29).
- Michigan: As of July 1, Gov. Rick Snyder (R) had not decided to whether Michigan will opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Lansing State Journal reports. Snyder spokesperson Sara Wurfel said the administration wants to examine the cost of the expansion to assess the “best course of action” for the state. Meanwhile, Republican lawmakers, who control both chambers of the state legislature, have not committed to the expansion (Davis, Lansing State Journal, 7/1).

- Montana: Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer (D), through a spokeswoman, declined to comment on the court’s decision. Schweitzer expressed deep reservations about the Medicaid expansion and effect on Montana’s budget. “Here’s what I know,” Schweitzer in February 2011 said, “that unless we challenge the underlying costs of health care ... it will bankrupt the states because there’s no way of decreasing the cost of health care under the current system” (Dennison, Gazette State Bureau, 6/28; Drake, Montana Watchdog, 7/2).
- New Hampshire: As of July 1, Gov. John Lynch (D)—who in the past has voiced concern over how the government would pay for the Medicaid expansion—had made no statement on whether New Hampshire would opt out of the Medicaid expansion, the Nashua Telegraph reports. In a June 28 statement on his website, Lynch noted that the state has “been preparing to implement the Affordable Care Act and will continue doing so in a way that best fits New Hampshire” (Landrigan, Nashua Telegraph, 7/1; Lynch statement, 6/28).
- New Mexico: Gov. Susana Martinez (R) has not decided whether the state will expand Medicaid, according to spokesperson Scott Darnell. He said, “The governor is reviewing today’s Supreme Court decision and will proceed in a manner that best protects the safety net for the most vulnerable New Mexicans in a responsible and sustainable manner” (Massey, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- New York: As of July 2, Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) had not made a statement on whether New York would participate in the Medicaid expansion. In a release last week, the governor said, “I am pleased the Supreme Court upheld this law,” adding that he looked forward to working with the “Obama administration to ensure accessible, quality care for all New Yorkers (Office of Gov. Cuomo release, 6/28; The Journal News, 6/29; Caruso, San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).

- North Carolina: As of July 3, Gov. Beverly Perdue (D) had not made any public statement about her state’s participation in the Medicaid expansion. However, in a statement responding to the Supreme Court’s decision, Perdue said she is “committed to continuing to move forward ... to ensure that all North Carolinians have affordable, reliable health coverage.” Meanwhile, a spokesperson for Perdue said the governor has been in contact with HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius about the Medicaid expansion and will review the Supreme Court’s ruling to determine how it might affect North Carolina (Office of Gov. Perdue release, 6/28; Dalesio, CBS News, 6/28; Jarvis/Bonner, Winston-Salem Journal, 6/29).
- North Dakota: As of Tuesday, Gov. Jack Dalrymple (R) had not made a statement about his state’s intent to participate in the Medicaid expansion. However, in a statement responding to the Supreme Court’s ruling, Dalrymple said the health reform law “is wrong for North Dakota,” adding that its “citizens want the freedom to make their own decisions about their health-care coverage.” Dalrymple has said that his staff is analyzing the court’s ruling, but it is unclear whether the state will participate in the Medicaid (Office of Gov. Dalrymple release, 6/28; MacPherson, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).
- Ohio: Gov. John Kasich (R) on Monday said he has not decided whether his state will participate in the Medicaid expansion and he does not plan to set a “deadline” to make his decision. The head of the state’s Office of Health Transformation also said the state must first determine how to cover the additional Medicaid costs the state would incur even if the state does not participate in the expansion. In a statement on the Supreme Court’s ruling, Kasich said, “We are very concerned that a sudden, dramatic increase in Medicaid spending could threaten Ohio's ability to pursue needed reforms in other areas" (Office of Gov. Kasich release, 6/28; Tribble, Cleveland Plain Dealer, 7/2; Columbus Business First, 7/3; Candisky, Columbus Dispatch, 7/3).

- Oklahoma: Gov. Mary Fallin (R) has not yet decided whether Oklahoma will opt of the Medicaid expansion, Tulsa World reports. Fallin said, "Certainly I am hoping that we'll elect a new president and we'll be able to change faces ... in the (Democratic-controlled) U.S. Senate that we can once and for all overturn the federal health care bill" (McNutt, The Oklahoman, 6/29; Greene, Tulsa World, 7/3; McGuigan, Tulsa Today, 7/2).
- Pennsylvania: Gov. Tom Corbett (R) has not yet announced whether Pennsylvania will opt out of the Medicaid expansion. He said in a statement, "I think we can all agree there are Pennsylvanians who need our help. However, expanding government bureaucracy, government programs and government spending is not the answer" (Office of the Gov. Corbett release, 6/28, LoBasso, "PhillyNow," Philadelphia Weekly, 7/3).
- South Dakota: South Dakota: In an email responding to a query by American Health Line, Joe Kafka—press secretary in Gov. Dennis Daugaard's (R) administration—said Daugaard "has made no decision on [the] Medicaid expansion, which will be costly for South Dakota, and he won't make any decision on it until after the election" (Kafka email, 7/5). [updated on July 6 at 9:30 a.m.]
- Tennessee: As of July 2, Gov. Bill Haslam (R) had not yet decided whether Tennessee would opt out of the Medicaid expansion. After the Supreme Court ruling, Haslam told reporters, "We don't really know what we're going to do ... but the cost impact to the state is very significant" (Sher, Chattanooga Times Free Press, 7/2).
- Utah: Gov. Gary Herbert (R) said is administration is conducting a thorough legal and policy review of the Supreme Court ruling, but he did not comment on whether the state would expand its Medicaid program (Stewart, Salt Lake Tribune, 6/29; AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28).

- Virginia: Gov. Bob McDonnell (R) has made statements indicating that he is against the Medicaid expansion, but has declined at this point to comment definitively on whether Virginia will opt out of it. McDonnell said he will review the state's options in the upcoming weeks (Martz, Richmond Times-Dispatch, 7/1; Millman, Politico, 6/29).
- West Virginia: Gov. Earl Ray Tomblin (D) has not yet announced whether West Virginia will proceed with the Medicaid expansion. In a statement, Tomblin said, "We know what the law is but as I've said before, I will continue to do what is best for West Virginia... We're going to review the Supreme Court's ruling, and work with our federal delegation on how we move forward" (Smith, AP/San Francisco Chronicle, 6/28; Office of Gov. Tomblin statement, 6/28).
- Wyoming: Gov. Matt Mead (R) in a statement said he will study the Supreme Court's ruling and the health reform law more carefully before making any implementation plans for Wyoming, but he believes "the ACA is not a good fit" for the state (Office of Gov. Mead release, 6/28; Wolfson, Billings Gazette, 6/28).

<http://aspe.hhs.gov/daltcp/reports/estreccol.htm>

Background information:

The Government Accountability Office reports “State Medicaid programs have, by default, become the major form of insurance for long-term care.” Since 1995, the costs of Medicaid long-term care has grown at an average annual rate of 6.5 percent. Medicaid spending has already put a strain on state budgets, surpassing outlays for K-12 education programs. Future costs will rise. More than six out of ten Americans will need long-term care services. Demographers project that the number of Americans who are 85 or older – the group most likely to need long-term care – will increase by more than 250 percent between 2000 and 2040.

With this challenge in mind, the National Governors' Association called for policy solutions that “encourage personal responsibility and discourage the reliance on Medicaid financed long-term care.” Unfortunately, federal rules weaken Medicaid's program integrity by forcing states to exempt more than half-a-million dollars in home equity and the entire value of a Rolls Royce when determining an individual's eligibility for these welfare benefits. As you know, states often find it difficult to recover Medicaid spending from the estates of people with significant financial assets and home equity. In total, states recovered .78 percent of Medicaid spending for nursing homes in 2004.

Questions:

As a governor who manages a Medicaid budget, we respectfully request your comments on the following questions.

1. Should the federal government give states greater flexibility to consider assets, including substantial home equity, when determining eligibility for long-term care coverage through the Medicaid program? Why or why not?
2. Please provide examples of barriers to effective Medicaid estate recovery programs and tools that might help states in this area.
3. Should state and federal governments encourage middle-income Americans to anticipate and plan for their future long-term care needs, instead of relying on Medicaid, a safety net for the poor? Why or why not?
4. Do you consider Medicaid estate planning to be a significant problem that takes resources from the truly needy in your state? Please explain and provide examples.

We appreciate your attention to this matter. Please provide a response to this letter by October 17, 2012. In the meantime, if you have any questions, please have a member of your staff contact Mike Thompson in Rep. Charles Boustany's office at 202-225-2031."

Importance: High

All:

Please find the updated Amicus Brief documents. A summary and initial draft is attached.

This will be discussed by Martin Kent, COS to Gov. McDonnell on today's Chief of Staff RGPPC COS call at 3 PM EDT.

To confirm on process, the goal is for RGPPC to be named as joining the amicus, as will Governor McDonnell individually. Duncan Getchell of the VA AG office will sign as a SCOTUS admitted attorney. The case will be styled as shown in the attached summary.

What we need from you:

1. Legal teams and General Counsels: Sign off that a majority of our governors are comfortable with RGPPC being named as joining the amicus. Questions or concerns regarding the legal brief should be directed to Martin Kent, COS to Gov Bob McDonnell, or Matt Conrad, Deputy COS to Gov McDonnell. Please respond to Marie at MSanderson@rgppc.org once you are comfortable from your state.

Matt Conrad: Matt.Conrad@governor.virginia.gov and is (804) 692-2573

2. Healthcare advisors and Action Officers: We need additional data. Please find attached a document summarizing state mandates and burdens from PPACA. Additional thoughts are welcome and data is encouraged. You may send that information to Marie to be incorporated at [REDACTED]

Thanks in advance for your attention to this matter. About twice a year we have an important issue we need to turn around quickly—this is one of them. We appreciate your patience.

I wanted to make you aware of the following letter that is being drafted on Capitol Hill to governors asking them not to implement state exchanges. I've asked this group to provide rgppc with a copy as soon as it is ready so none of you- or your bosses- are blindsighted. Please see text below.

-MTS

Congresswoman Bachmann and Congressman Jordan will be sending a letter (found below) to the National Governors Association urging each governor not to implement the state exchanges found in ObamaCare. Senator DeMint is spearheading the exact same letter in the Senate and we will be sending the House and Senate version together today (current co-signers in the Senate: DeMint, Lee, Ron Johnson, Graham, Cornyn, Coburn, Sessions, Thune, Vitter, Paul).

June 29, 2012

National Governors Association
Hall of States
444 N. Capitol St., Ste. 267
Washington D.C. 20001-1512

Dear Governors:

The Supreme Court has ruled significant parts of the Medicaid expansion of the President's health care law unconstitutional as well as ruling that the individual mandate violated the Commerce Clause and will therefore be implemented as a punitive tax on the middle class. This presents us with a critical choice: Do we allow this reprehensible law to move forward or do we fully repeal it and start over with commonsense solutions? The American people have made it clear that they want us to throw this law out in its entirety.

As members of the U.S. Congress, we are dedicated to the full repeal of this government takeover of healthcare and we ask you to join us to oppose its implementation.

Most importantly, we encourage you to oppose any creation of a state health care exchange mandated under the President's discredited health care law.

These expensive, complex, and intrusive exchanges impose a threat to the financial stability of our already-fragile state economies with no certainty of a limit to total enrollment numbers. Resisting the implementation of exchanges is good for hiring and investment. The law's employer mandate assesses penalties - up to $3,000 per employee - only to businesses who don't satisfy federally-approved health insurance standards and whose employees receive "premium assistance" through the exchanges. The clear language of the statute only permits federal premium assistance to citizens of states who create a state-based exchange. However, the IRS recently finalized a regulation that contradicts the law by allowing the federal government to provide premium assistance to citizens in those states that have not created exchanges. The IRS had no authority to finalize such a regulation. By refusing to create an exchange, you will assist us in Congress to repeal this violation which will help lower the costs of doing business in your state, relative to other states that keep these financially draining exchanges in place.

State-run exchanges are subject to all of the same coverage mandates and rules as the federally-run exchange. Clearing the hurdles of crafting an exchange that complies with the 600 plus pages of federal exchange regulations will only result in wasted state resources and higher premiums for your constituents.

Implementation of this law is not inevitable and considering more than half of the American people oppose the law, it is improbable. Join us in resisting a centralized government approach to health care reform and instead focus on solutions that make health care more affordable and accessible for every American. Let's work to create a health care system of, for, and by the people, not government or special interests.

Sincerely,

Dana,

Below is the current schedule for our event in Aspen that is coming up. Could you please review this and let me know when your Governor will arrive and depart? Also, what events can we expect her to attend? Will the Governor participate in any of the optional activities? Will the Governor agree to co-host one of the parlors? I've highlighted the panel we would like the Governor to speak on, can you confirm she will speak on that?

I have a hotel room for the Governor (is the First Gentleman coming?), Scott Mason, Glenn Coffee, and [REDACTED] all arriving on 08.01.12 and departing on 08.03.12. And of course [REDACTED] arriving on 07.31.12 and departing on 08.03.12 As an FYI, this is a much more intimate event than any of our others, and we will have specific tables for staff to use at all of the meals or panels.

Thank you for your help!

Let me know if you need anything else!

Sincerely,
Monica

Decision

On June 28, the Supreme Court ruled on the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) upholding the individual mandate as a tax, but limiting the power of the federal government to coerce state Medicaid expansions. Regarding the Medicaid expansion, the court ruled that the government could not compel states to expand Medicaid by threatening to withhold federal money to existing Medicaid programs. This presents an opportunity for governors to opt out of the expansion without losing their existing share of federal Medicaid funding. Within hours of the decision, Republican governors in several states said they were likely to oppose expanding the program. In addition to the Medicaid piece, governors must also decide whether to establish a state-administered health insurance exchange. This panel examines the decisions confronting governors, along with the remaining political, regulatory and legal uncertainties surrounding the law and its impact on businesses.

Panel Discussion II: State Solutions: Economic Growth in the Obama Era

Republican governors are providing a clear contrast to the failed economic policies of the Obama administration. Under President Obama, the nation has endured 41 consecutive months with the unemployment rate over 8 percent and the most recent quarter was the worst quarter of job creation in 2 years. Despite the national headwinds, GOP-led states are experiencing economic success. States with Republican governors are adding jobs at a faster pace than their Democratic counterparts and states that elected new Republican governors in 2010 have seen their unemployment rates drop nearly 50 percent more than states with new Democratic governors. Instead of emulating the policies of Republican governors which encourage entrepreneurship and job creators, the Obama administration continues to impede upon the states with overregulation and the threat of higher taxes. This panel explores how governors can work with business leaders to ensure the private sector adds jobs despite the federal government's overreach.

*Speakers: Governor Mary Fallin, Oklahoma (requested)
Governor Rick Perry, Texas (requested)*

12:15 PM – 1:15 PM

Luncheon: Governors' Races and the 2012 Battlegrounds

With 11 states holding governors' races this November, the RGA is in position to expand its majority and make a major impact on the 2012 elections. Many of the states where RGA will engage are also critical Presidential and Senate battleground states. As shown in the Wisconsin recall election, the RGA and ideologically-aligned groups are able to work together, and their efforts benefit candidates up and down the ballot. This panel will explore the 2012 political landscape and the interplay between gubernatorial and federal races.

1:45 PM – 4:45 PM

Optional Activities with Governors

Participants will have the opportunity to participate in one of three optional activities: clay target shooting with Wyoming Governor Matt Mead, fly fishing with Texas Governor Rick Perry, or a wilderness hike with RGA Chairman, Virginia Governor Bob McDonnell. Please note: activities will be available at an additional cost to participants. Please refer to the separate Optional Aspen Activities Response Form to reserve your place.

Location: Off-site; Departing from The St. Regis Aspen Resort

5:45 PM – 6:30 PM

Governors Parlors

Please join our Republican governors for a newly created reception opportunity to mix and mingle in a more intimate setting before we depart for Pine Creek Cookhouse. Each of the two parlors will host three to four governors, and attendees are welcome and encouraged to visit both parlors.

Location: The St. Regis Aspen Resort

7:00 PM

Reception & Dinner

Executive Roundtable members and governors will enjoy a farewell cocktail reception and dinner at the third Executive Roundtable Quarterly Meeting of the year.

I think got a call from your number this evening. Sorry if I missed your call.

One thing I may just share with you –

When Derek and Buffy scoured the budget to estimate the cost of Exchange for Oklahoma, including Medicaid enhancements and building the Exchange, the number was about half of what we had in the Early Innovator grant (roughly $27 million...very rough). Now the OHCA can get up to a 90/10 split on the Medicaid enhancements (if integrated with the Exchange) so the pure Exchange funding would be around $27 million less the Medicaid improvements. I don't see an estimate in Buffy and Cindy's slides from last week so I can't get a closer estimate this evening.

JUST A REMINDER~

Coordinated RGPPC Effort

The RGPPC in conjunction with the RGA would like to put out a press release of our own on Wednesday. We envision the document to have a quote from every Republican Governor about the effects that Obamacare has had on each individual state. You can lift or prepare such quotes from the actions you are already considering for next week. Please email to Mike Schrimpf by tomorrow close of business. Mike's email is mschrimpf@rga.org. Please feel free to call or email me with any questions you have regarding this request.

Thank you for your time!

Guys—

In an effort to make you guys aware of moving parts for the Governors' meeting in Las Vegas, below is a summary of your subcommittee's report. I expect most of the policy portion to be dedicated to Obamacare and the conversations as of late, and I do not expect governors to be asked to make a subcommittee report. Nevertheless, I wanted to share with you what we have prepared for your committee. Let us know if you have any questions.

Best,
Marie

Federalism (Fallin and Brownback)

- This subcommittee worked with the other committees to weave themes of Federalism throughout the language used in reports, letters and press releases.
- This subcommittee also has investigated potential partnerships with other organizations, such as the National Association of Counties to evaluate unfunded mandates.

Nope, very different. However, it is the same process. This report is actually going to be about a replacement strategy if obamacare is overturned. Last year's principals were only on Medicaid.

Hope this is helpful,

All:

Per our call this evening, the following email contains all the information in one place for your convenience:

As the end of March quickly approaches, so does the second anniversary of Obamacare. Thank you for joining our conference call today to discuss our potential united efforts. RGPPC is working with the American Action Forum to provide talking points and communications assistance with op-eds/other materials. Note: RGAs communications' team will be contacting your press teams separately.

Key Dates and Info Needed below--- What we'll request from you is in red. Given the quick turnaround on much of this material, we will make ourselves available over the weekend should anyone wish to discuss.

KEY DATES

March 19-23 (23rd actual anniversary) Obamacare Anniversary and Release of RGPPC Healthcare report principles

March 28- Medicaid Expansion SCOTUS Oral Arguments

- o 26th Anti-injunction arguments
- o 27th individual mandate arguments
- o 28th Medicaid expansion arguments

INFO NEEDED

- OBAMACARE STATE COSTS NEEDED: DUE Fri, MARCH 16 The RGPPC, in partnership with Congressional leadership would like to use this opportunity to reiterate just how costly

Obamacare has and will continue to be on states. To aid in this effort attached is a document we used last year to describe those cost (see pages 6-13). Please take just a few moments to read over last year's comments and make edits and updates. We need these edits completed by Friday March 16-COB. Please send your data in "talking point form" approved by your press team and boss, as demonstrated in the 1/7/11 letter, attached. We also will accept other data from your states (in addition to your amended quotes)- as each of you have highlighted the costs to obamacare in your own unique ways. A list of mandates from PPACA also is attached and other examples are below such as:

1. Cost of Medicaid Expansion
  2. Cost of Conducting Eligibility for Medicaid expansion and Insurance Entitlement up to 400% FPL
  3. Estimated # of employees who will lose employee coverage and cost estimates
  4. Unworkable nature of timelines/no final rules/complexity of building IT systems to ensure program integrity, limit fraud and abuse
- BLOCK GRANT SUPPORT QUOTES: Due Fri, MARCH 16 We anticipate that his budget will support block grant funding again this year. If your governor supports block grant funding and would like to support this concept in writing, we'd like to coordinate quotes from supportive states. Last year we wrote a leadership (TX, VA, MS, NJ) letter supporting block grants; this year we ask for individual statements.
  - APPROVAL OF HEALTHCARE STEERING COMMITTEE PRINCIPLES: Edits Due Wed, MARCH 14. Approval Due Fri, MARCH 16 We will need your states approval of the healthcare steering committee's principles, which will guide our report writing process. We will release a letter from leadership highlighting these principles. We need general consensus that states are comfortable with these principles.

Please let me or Marie know if you have any questions, comments/concerns or suggestions. We'll talk in more detail Monday afternoon about our comprehensive effort.

- BLOCK GRANT SUPPORT QUOTES: Due Fri, MARCH 16 We anticipate that his budget will support block grant funding again this year. If your governor supports block grant funding and would like to support this concept in writing, we'd like to coordinate quotes from supportive states. Last year we wrote a leadership (TX, VA, MS, NJ) letter supporting block grants; this year we ask for individual statements.
- APPROVAL OF HEALTHCARE STEERING COMMITTEE PRINCIPLES: Edits Due Wed, MARCH

14. Approval Due Fri, MARCH 16 We will need your states approval of the healthcare steering committee's principles, which will guide our report writing process. We will release a letter from leadership highlighting these principles. We need general consensus that states are comfortable with these principles.

Please let me or Marie know if you have any questions, comments/concerns or suggestions. We'll talk in more detail Monday afternoon about our comprehensive effort.

More from the Hill:

Growing number of waivers a rallying cry for healthcare repeal

By Jason Millman

The Hill

03/11/11 @ 06:00 AM ET

<http://thehill.com/homenews/administration/148891-waivers-become-rallying-cry-for-healthcare-repeal->

The 1,000-plus waivers granted by the Obama administration to a portion of the healthcare reform law have become a political liability for the White House.

Republicans are accusing the administration of rewarding Democratic allies in the labor movement with the waivers, which exempt recipients from the reform law's annual coverage limits.

They say the large number of waivers granted so far — 1,040 as of Thursday — is proof that the law is unworkable and should be repealed.

"The fact that over 1,000 waivers have been granted is a tacit admission that the healthcare law is fundamentally flawed," said House Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman Fred Upton (R-Mich.), one of two House chairmen using their oversight powers to probe the waivers.

The drumbeat of GOP criticism has grown louder as the waiver awards have increased. Approval of waiver requests has jumped from 222 to almost 730 in December, and another 300 have been approved since then.

The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), which is in charge of implementing the healthcare reform law, says waiver requests have slowed during the past two months, but that hasn't quelled the GOP outcry.

Rep. Mike Rogers (R-Mich.) says the waivers should be made available to anyone. On Thursday he introduced legislation that would let individuals apply for exemptions to any part of the healthcare law.

"If the SEIU gets a waiver and McDonald's gets a waiver," Rogers said, "shouldn't the average person who's impacted by this get a waiver, too?"

The administration and Democratic lawmakers have rejected the Republican criticism, pointing out that the law provides HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius the ability to offer the waivers. Democrats also deny the charges of favoritism in the process, noting that that a large number of businesses — and not just unions — have received the exemption.

The one-year waivers are typically granted to organizations that offer limited health insurance, known as “mini-med plans,” that sometimes provide as little as $2,000 in annual coverage. The waivers are meant as a stopgap measure until new state-run health insurance exchanges open up, when the mini-med insurance plans will be phased out, HHS says.

“We don’t want to take away people’s health insurance before they have some realistic other choices,” Sebelius said in an interview with The Hill earlier this year.

The law requires a phase-out of annual dollar limits on benefits, with a minimum limit of $750,000 in 2011. The limits gradually rise until they are completely eliminated in 2014.

The administration touts the waivers as evidence that they are showing flexibility in the implementation of the reform law. On Thursday, HHS detailed plans to let states opt out of the law to create their own reforms, and earlier this week, the department gave Maine insurers an exemption from a reform provision that restricts administrative spending.

The attempts to provide flexibility aren’t winning over Republican critics.

“Lawsuits, exemptions and exceptions are not healthcare reform,” House Ways and Means Republicans said Thursday.

The GOP scrutiny has forced Democrats into the politically awkward position of defending health plans that the law aims to eliminate. They say even the worst insurance is still better than no insurance at all.

“We’re saying until we get to the full implementation of the Affordable Care Act, we’re going to let these go, because the other option is nothing,” said Rep. Jan Schakowsky (D-Ill.).

The leader of Families USA, one of the White House’s strongest healthcare allies, isn’t worried about the rising number of waivers. As long as the administration is clear on waiver standards and decisions, said Families USA executive director Ron Pollack, it can continue to make the case for them.

“What’s ironic is if there were disruption [in the insurance market] ... the Republicans would complain that the legislation is too rigid,” Pollack said.

But House Republicans with significant oversight powers contend the process hasn’t been transparent. The House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform this week accused HHS of stalling the committee’s probe into why dozens of organizations have been denied waivers.

“The current lack of transparency lends credence to the perception that bureaucrats are picking winners and losers in a politicized environment where the winners are favored constituencies of the administration,” the Oversight panel wrote.

For its part, HHS says it already provided most of the documents to the Energy and Commerce Committee, which launched its own waiver investigation in January.

The waivers cover approximately 2.6 million people, or less than 2 percent of privately insured individuals, according to HHS.

Subject: Fwd: State "Flexibility???" Governors Still Waiting for An Answer...

HHS has issued a notice for a press conference this afternoon on “state flexibility in implementing” the health care law. Politico reports that the news conference will discuss the release of Section 1332 waivers under the health care law. (We’ve previously outlined the non-flexibility in the health law in blog postings here and elsewhere.)

But today’s announcement misses the point in several respects. Under current law the “flexibility” being discussed would only begin in 2017 – nearly six years from now. But governors face significant problems with the health care law TODAY – yet the Secretary has failed to respond to the requests from Washington for relief.

The specific issue relates to maintenance of effort mandates in the health care law that prevent states from modifying or restricting their Medicaid eligibility criteria. Governors have made multiple requests for flexibility from such mandates – the earliest of which came on January 7 this year. On February 3 Secretary Sebelius wrote to them saying she was “continu[ing] to review what authority, if any, I have to waive the maintenance of effort” requirements under the health care law. However, five weeks later – and nearly 10 weeks after governors sent their initial letter – the Secretary has yet to respond substantively to this issue, notwithstanding the serious budget crises affecting many states.

The Secretary’s silence raises obvious questions:

- Why is the HHS so focused on implementing a waiver program that won’t start until 2017 – rather than addressing governors’ request for flexibility to solve their budget crises NOW?
- It’s been more than two months since governors first wrote HHS asking the Secretary to waive the health care law’s Medicaid mandates – how much time does the Secretary need to figure out what her authority is on this issue? (By point of comparison, it only took twelve days for the Secretary to respond to Chairman Baucus’ letter about the impact of H.R. 1 on Medicare Advantage – even though Democrats admitted that that bill had no chance of passing.)

States are facing massive budget deficits, and new unfunded mandates totaling at least \$118 billion thanks to the health care law. Our nation’s governors need more action from Washington than news conferences about provisions taking effect in six years – they need an end to the months-long dithering within HHS about whether or not the Secretary has the authority to offer them the assistance they seek, and they need it yesterday.

Subject: Statement of Republican Policy on HR 1473

H.R. 1473, Department of Defense and Full Year Continuing Appropriations Act, 2011
Rep. Harold Rogers (R-KY)

HR 1473 provides appropriations for the Department of Defense and all other federal agencies through the remainder of fiscal year 2011. The bill implements the agreement between the House, Senate and the Administration for completing action on all FY 2011 appropriations.

Total non-emergency discretionary budget authority for Fiscal Year 2011, as scored by the Congressional Budget Office will be $1 050 trillion. This is $38 billion below the level provided in the continuing resolution enacted by the Democrats at the end of last year. It includes $13 billion in reductions already enacted into law since March 4, 2011, plus nearly $27 billion in additional new spending cuts. Total Budget Authority will be $78.5 billion below President Obama's discretionary budget request for Fiscal Year 2011. The Congressional Budget Office score for the bill is available here: <http://www.cbo.gov/ftpdocs/121xx/doc121473.pdf>

HR 1473 turns around the trajectory of Washington's unsustainable spending binge best symbolized by the Democrats' failed stimulus bill of 2009. By demonstrating that our political system is capable of reining in uncontrolled spending, it sends a signal to job creators in the private sector that government will not continue to grow at a rate crowding out private investment and making tax increases inevitable. It also sets the table for reducing spending in the future. Removing nearly $40 billion in spending from the federal ledger in FY 2011 compounds to $315 billion in savings over the next decade compared to CBO's baseline projections for discretionary spending, according to the Republican staff of the Senate Budget Committee.

At the account level, the bill challenges the notion that government programs are immortal by terminating more than 55 of them, including 40 ineffective programs at the Department of Education. The bill cuts spending at the Environmental Protection Agency by 16 percent, and reduces spending on Congressional staff and office expenses in the House of Representatives by 5 percent. The bill cuts $2.9 billion from high-speed rail projects. Other cuts include $377 million from the U.S. contribution to the United Nations and other international organizations, and a $130 million cut to international banks and financial institutions. A list of all the cuts may be viewed here: <http://appropriations.house.gov/files/41211ProgramCutsListFinalFY2011ICR.pdf>

In addition to these important savings, the bill also ensures that our troops will be paid. The bill provides base funding for the Department of Defense of $513 billion, a $5 billion increase over last year's level. The bill also provides $157.8 billion in emergency funding for the Global War on Terror, supporting our operations in Afghanistan, Iraq, and other places where American troops are facing hostile fire.

Important policy provisions will also be enacted under HR 1473. The Administration will be blocked from closing the detention facility at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and from bringing any of the detainees there to the Continental United States. The District of Columbia will be prevented from using any congressionally appropriated funds (no matter what the original source) to pay for abortions, and the Senate and House will hold separate votes on ending federal funding for Planned Parenthood and its affiliates.

The bill begins to repeal elements of Obamacare, rescinding $2.2 billion of the $6 billion in startup funds provided to the Consumer Operated and Oriented Plan (CO-OP) program that some observers have characterized as "a back door to a public plan flying under a different flag." The bill also repeals section 10108 "free choice" vouchers subsidizing insurance purchases on government-created health care exchanges for persons with incomes up to 400% of poverty. It also blocks increased hiring by the IRS requested by the President to enforce Obamacare's individual mandate and other revenue provisions. In addition, the House and Senate will also take a separate vote on defunding the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PL 111-148) and the health care provisions of the related reconciliation act, PL 111-152.

Adoption of HR 1473 will demonstrate that elections have consequences, and that our government is finally listening to the American people. Members are urged to support HR 1473.

Provided by House Republican Leadership and the House Appropriations Committee.

Good afternoon –

I wanted to share with you a draft release that the RGA will send out tomorrow, when the Supreme Court focuses on the Medicaid portions of the health care law. The draft below is still missing a number of states' stats, but we expect most every state to send us their numbers by COB today.

Please let me know if you have any questions or concerns.

GOP Governors Detail the Cost of Obamacare on the States

As the Supreme Court today hears arguments about the impact upon the states of expanding Medicaid, the Republican Governors Association released information from X states highlighting the costs of expanding Medicaid and implementing the health care law.

“President Obama’s federal health care takeover was enacted by Democrats in Congress over the objection of governors and with little regard for the costs to the states,” said RGA Chairman Bob McDonnell. “The federal health care law shifts billions of dollars in unfunded, long-term costs to state governments while restricting the ability of governors to craft Medicaid solutions for the citizens of their states. This one-size-fits-all approach is yet another reason why the health care law needs to be replaced, and Republican governors have offered a blueprint for true reform. The current law is simply unaffordable, unsustainable and unworkable.”

Costs to the States:

Alabama

The implementation of Obamacare will increase the costs of state government immediately and in the near future.

The overall Medicaid budget alone is expected to increase from $6.3 Billion in 2012 to $13.2 Billion at the beginning of the 2020 fiscal year.

Medicaid Expansion Details

- By 2014, Alabama expects to add up to 534,000 new enrollees to Medicaid. This is due to mandated eligibility to anyone under age 65 who has an income of less than 133% of the federal poverty level.
- Alabama is also required to provide subsidies to adults earning between 134% and 400% and children with incomes between 301% and 400%. This expansion would increase Medicaid eligibility from the current 21% of the state’s population to about 40% of the population.
- Nearly 1,000 new primary care physicians will be needed to care for this new population.
- This cost of services for the new eligibles would initially be borne by the federal government, but that support would fade to 90% of the cost by 2020.
- HCR legislation does not provide any additional funds to the state to certify enroll and manage the new recipients.
- Administrative costs alone will require an estimated $389 million in state funds. Eligibility system changes will be required to add new enrollees, to differentiate between those eligible under new vs. previous rules (each with different matching rates) and to allow information to flow back and forth between subsidy plans and Medicaid.

Alaska

Alaska continues to be hampered in its efforts to manage the costs of its Medicaid program and continues to see Medicaid population increases. For the first time in recent history the Budget of the Department of Health and Social Services (Medicaid Authority) has surpassed that of the Department of Education and is projected to continue to grow ahead of inflation.

For FY2013 it is projected that Alaska will need an additional $45 million in state general funds to cope with program growth and another $129 million in state general funds to offset the loss of enhanced federal Medicaid funding. Alaska continues to be faced with substantial growth in Medicaid caseloads and utilization and forecasts an over 20 percent increase in Medicaid state general fund expenditures.

The State of Alaska continues to narrow projections on estimating the total cost of the ACA over the long term. However, a June 2010 preliminary analysis of the Medicaid impacts reflects that cumulative state general fund spending will increase by $100M million, through 2020. While direct care spending in the early years is offset by increased federal match rates, spending in later years paints an even more concerning picture for Alaska's future and the ever increasing impact of Medicaid expansion on the State budget while oil throughput continues to decline.

Georgia

The projected impact of the Medicaid expansion in Georgia is significant. In January 2014, an estimated 650,000 additional members will be added to our state Medicaid and CHIP programs. This federally mandated expansion will increase state spending by at least $2.4 billion between FY2010-FY2020 alone. That said, the cost could soar substantially higher because there are more federal regulations to come and initial spending could spike because of the pent-up demand of new members. The Georgia Department of Community Health is continually reassessing the impact of the Medicaid expansion mandate.

Idaho

Idaho estimates between 150,000 and 200,000 new eligibles could be added to the Medicaid caseload when new expansion rules are implemented which could mean a 40-percent increase in participation compared to Idaho's current caseloads. The overall Medicaid benefit cost attributed to PPACA Medicaid provisions in the State of Idaho is conservatively estimated to be $228 million in State funds by 2020. In preparation for the PPACA 2014 changes, Medicaid system readiness is estimated to cost $34.8 million, of which Idaho's share will be $3.48 million.

Idaho is purposely holding off on changes related to the Medicaid expansion requirement because of the uncertainty surrounding the Supreme Court's decision, 2012 elections and State legislative decisions which could drastically impact how Medicaid expansion is implemented and designed. The State anticipates the cost to meet the new Medicaid expansion requirement will be approximately $9 million. That does not include the cost of operational and personnel needs related to the expansion.

In addition, the limited nature of the federal timelines and lack of final rules has forced Idaho to design a phased approach to accommodate the uncertainty surrounding Medicaid. Idaho is working on modernization, expansion and connection phases – all of which depend on the Supreme Court decision and 2012 elections.

Iowa

As recently as eight years ago, Iowa spent less than $2.5 billion in total Medicaid expenditures. Total Medicaid spending in Iowa now approaches $4 billion and accounts for more than 15% of Iowa General Fund expenditures.

When we entered office in January 2011, we were faced with replacing $540 million in one-time money that was used to fund the on-going Medicaid entitlement. Medicaid remains a complex funding source for health care that we manage very carefully.

It is anticipated that the federal takeover of health care under the Affordable Care Act will increase Medicaid enrollment by at least 150,000 people in Iowa. In 2014, the first year of implementation, our Medicaid population will grow from 400,000 to more than 550,000 covered lives in a state where our population is just over 3 million people. The total cost of this expansion is estimated to be between $180 to $818 million (with mid-point estimate of $255 million) in the first year, with the state picking up an increasing share of this cost over time. The uncertainty surrounding the wide range of potential costs is alone cause for concern.

Despite the federally mandated expansion of the Medicaid program, Iowa and other states will have less flexibility than ever before to effectively and efficiently manage this entitlement that is vital for so many of our vulnerable citizens. Federal maintenance of effort (MOE) requirements continue to tie the hands of state policymakers, forcing a continual squeeze on health care providers and diverting benefits from those who need them most.

Kansas

Without flexibility to reform Medicaid to improve outcomes and reduce costs, Kansas will continue to see increases in Medicaid spending. Kansas' Medicaid budget has ballooned from $2.4 billion in 2008, at the onset of federally mandated maintenance of effort (MOE) requirements, to what will reach nearly $3 billion in 2013 without reforms. In the same period, enrollment will have increased from 293,000 to almost 400,000 -- all before the mandated PPACA expansion.

An example of the rigidity of the MOE requirements in the ARRA, and extended by PPACA, is the federal response to the Kansas Legislature's move in 2010 to adjust family premiums in the CHIP program by $40 a month. CMS did not approve it, citing MOE. Instead, HHS offered an option to raise premiums that would have amounted to about 50 cents per month on a typical premium.

Kansas has proposed to acquire the flexibility it needs to remake Medicaid in a two-track Section 1115 demonstration project. The first track will address authorities needed to implement KanCare, an integrated, person-centered care coordination model that will incorporate nearly all Medicaid and CHIP populations and services, including long term services and supports. The second track proposes a global waiver, more specifically an outcomes-based Medicaid and CHIP program under a per capita block grant, fundamentally redefining the federal-state relationship in Medicaid and providing a model for reform that honors the program's statutory goal of improving the health of Americans in the greatest need.

Maine

! Maine's Medicaid program has experienced an increase in enrollment from 314,000 in June 2009 to 336,000 in June, 2010, and total spending in Maine's Medicaid program has increased by over one billion dollars since 2002. Over the last several years, Medicaid rates for healthcare providers have also been repeatedly cut to address the ongoing financial shortfalls in Medicaid as a result of increasing enrollment and utilization. As a result of these reductions, some Maine physicians have closed their practices to Medicaid patients significantly reducing access to primary care services for Medicaid beneficiaries. All of the above challenges will be exacerbated by ACA. As Maine struggles to confront a shortfall of more than $800 million in the next biennial budget and the requirement to adopt a balanced budget, it is imperative that the Governor and the Legislature have the necessary flexibility to comprehensively manage the Medicaid program and to make necessary changes to effectively reduce total spending in the program.

Michigan, Gov Snyder

Will not be responding or providing any information

Mississippi

The overall cost to implement PPACA in Mississippi is estimated to be $1.7 billion over the next ten years, including an additional $443 million in year ten.

Nebraska

In addition, based upon preliminary professional consultant projections, the State of Nebraska estimates that it will cost anywhere from $61.4 million to $86.9 million to build a Health Insurance Exchange in Nebraska. Due to the changing nature of the health insurance exchange project and the instability of the federal government's promulgation of final rules and regulations, the State projects that a state exchange annual operating budget would be $17.5 million per year starting in 2016.

Medicaid enrollment will increase by 54% or 510,000 individuals in 2015 as a result of the Affordable Care Act. 176,000 of these persons will drop private insurance to go on Medicaid. The additional costs to state taxpayers between State Fiscal Year 2014 and State Fiscal Year 2020 ranges from $1.15 billion to $2.5 billion dollars depending on assumptions of participation rate and increases in physician fees resulting from physician shortages created by the new law.

South Dakota

Paragraph information has not changed

Tennessee

Tennessee's Medicaid program is continuing to experience budgetary challenges in the coming fiscal year, as state revenues continue their slow climb back to pre-recession levels. Unfortunately, the MOE requirements limit the flexibility needed to make important changes to the program as we deal with such issues. For instance, TennCare could save $16 million alone just by modifying nursing facility level of care requirements that would bring Tennessee in line with the criteria of other states and rebalance its long-term care system in order to serve more people with lesser levels of need in more cost-effective home and community-based settings while targeting the more expensive long-term care services to persons with higher acuity of need. However, we have yet to receive approval to make such a change.

At a time when Tennessee is already facing budget difficulties and the ACA is expected to cost the state in excess of $1.5 billion over five years, we must have the flexibility necessary to make common sense adjustments to the program.

Texas

Medicaid is consistently one of the biggest expenses all states face. It accounts for a quarter of the state budget in Texas. The Affordable Care Act expands Medicaid without reforming the program.

ACA will increase Medicaid enrollment in Texas by nearly 2 million people and cost the state $27 billion over 10 years.

States have received little federal guidance on key ACA provisions, including the primary care rate increases which is required starting in 2013. Additionally, guidance is needed on Medicaid Benchmark Benefits, eligibility changes, FMAP methodology and numerous other provisions.

Lack of timely guidance makes it impossible for states to effectively plan for the mushrooming Medicaid caseloads that the law will create. HHSC needs final, detailed guidance from the federal government to determine the full impact of certain ACA provisions on the Texas

Medicaid and CHIP programs, and to make federally-required changes.

ACA does not recognize states' unique needs and prevents each state from tailoring its Medicaid and CHIP programs in accordance with the intent of its elected and appointed representatives.

Utah, Gov Herbert

Virginia

The Commonwealth of Virginia has estimated the Medicaid cost of federal health reform to the State to be between $1.5 and $2.2 billion through 2022. These estimates have not been updated since August 2010, but because of the length of the recession and the current pace of economic growth, along with other developments in our understanding of the full impact of PPACA, the higher end of the cost range seems more realistic. For example, in a study completed for Medicaid Health Plans of America, Milliman, Inc. has estimated that the PPACA-mandated tax on health insurance companies, which did not exclude Medicaid health plans, will cost Virginia, a heavily managed Medicaid state, approximately $430 - $500 million through 2023; this was not included in Virginia's 2010 estimates of the PPACA cost, meaning this $430 - $500 million would be in addition to the $1.5 to $2.2 billion already estimated. Virginia is in the process of re-estimating impacts in preparation for the 2012 Medicaid forecast due in the fall of 2012. At that time, the estimates should better reflect the current economic environment in Virginia, and reflect a better understanding of the PPACA impact based on subsequent analysis and federal guidance that was not available for the 2010 estimates."

Wisconsin, Gov Walker

Pending

Wyoming

The costs of maintaining our Medicaid program are fast becoming a serious threat to our state general funds. The 2013-2014 biennial budget for Medicaid in Wyoming includes $560 million in state general fund dollars. This is just the cost to provide care to the current population of approximately 76,000 enrollees. A study of Wyoming impacts from PPACA conducted by The Lewin Group in 2010 estimates an additional 31,000 enrollees due to the Medicaid expansion in 2014 – an increase of over 40%. It is difficult to estimate what the fiscal impact of this huge bolus of new enrollees will be. The State legislature commissioned a Medicaid Cost Study in 2011 and we expect findings in mid-2012. We do know, however, that the cost of implementing a new eligibility and enrollment system for Medicaid will cost over $3.5 million in state general funds after the 90/10 federal match.

The larger and more detrimental impact of the implementation of PPACA is likely to be to our private health insurance markets. An actuarial study of our small group and individual markets conducted by Gorman Actuarial, LLC in 2011 indicates that we can expect premiums to go up an average of 30% to 40% in the individual market due solely to new insurance regulations effective in 2014. When you add the projected impact of higher morbidity of new entrants into the market and essential benefit mandates, we can expect overall 40% to 60% increases in premiums in the individual market.

Given that Wyoming already has a higher percentage of small employers that self-insure than other states, it's not unreasonable to expect a number of small employers to stop providing insured coverage and either move their employees to the individual market or to self-insure to avoid regulation. During recent town hall meetings, a number of small employers indicated that it would be cheaper for them to pay the PPACA penalties for not providing coverage than it will be to continue to provide coverage. The Lewin Group estimates a net loss of over 8,000 covered lives in the employer sponsored insurance market.

With all the changes in PPACA, Gorman Actuarial estimates over 41,000 people in Wyoming will remain uninsured by 2016. This represents about half of the 83,000 people currently uninsured in our state.

All,

As a further follow up to this discussion, attached is a letter from Governor Herbert to each of your bosses explaining his strong support of the Cut, Cap and Balance pledge. Governor Herbert also mentioned this on Saturday morning at the RGA business meeting as a way for us to make a stand on this issue. We're looking at the possibility of circulating a letter from the Governors to Congress to enact a Cut, Cap and Balance type provision into the negotiations. I'll be working with Marie to develop this and I'd welcome your thoughts about the best way to push this forward.

Thanks,
Robert

Subject: Understanding Cut, Cap, & Balance

Hello all,

Following up on our conversation this morning about the Debt Ceiling and Cut, Cap, and Balance here is a nice primer from Keith Hennessey, a senior White House economic advisor during the Bush administration-

Understanding Cut, Cap, and Balance <<http://clicks.aweber.com/y/ct/?l=5Zi37&m=JslBfQTYiC2beS&b=dbyR.48.T0C9WiLxaXCw9g>>

Sometime this week the House of Representatives will consider Rep. Jason Chaffetz <http://clicks.aweber.com/y/ct/?l=5Zi37&m=JslBfQTYiC2beS&b=lwGy7HygZfje\_3ZhoE8j3w>' H.R. 2560, the "Cut, Cap & Balance Act" <<http://clicks.aweber.com/y/ct/?l=5Zi37&m=JslBfQTYiC2beS&b=CNP0xAJConxdmqh0vVOPIQ>>."

We are entering the arcane world of budget process, so this could be tough sledding. I will do my best to distill the essential elements and simplify it.

The key to understanding this bill is that it focuses on government spending, rather than on taxes or deficits. The bill would achieve significant deficit reduction through cutting and limiting spending, and all of its mechanisms use spending rather than deficit targets.

Surprise, surprise: the bill consists of three parts.

1. Cut - The bill provides specific numbers to limit both discretionary and mandatory spending for FY12. These numbers would drive further Congressional action this year or else force a Presidential sequester. (I explain a sequester below.) The intent of this section is to force Congress and the President to cut spending immediately.
2. Cap - The bill would establish a new enforceable limit on total federal spending as a share of the economy. The new caps are designed to phase federal spending down to just below 20% of GDP by FY17 and then hold it there through the end of a 10-year budget window in FY21. Put more simply, this is a new enforceable aggregate spending cap.
3. Balance - The bill would increase the debt limit by $2.4 trillion after the House and Senate have passed a Balanced Budget Amendment (of a certain type).

What is a sequester?

A sequester is an automatic across-the-board proportional spending cut written into law and implemented by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB). It is usually combined with some kind of budget target and designed as a backup measure to force legislative action to hit that target.

Example

Imagine there are 10 government programs that spend $50 each. Congress passes and the President signs a law that includes a spending target of $490, a deadline of December 31st, and an across-the-board sequester.

If new laws are not enacted by December 31 to reducing spending to $490, then the sequester kicks in. OMB cuts all 10 programs by whatever percentage is needed to hit the target. In this case, each $50 program is cut by 2%, to $49, to hit the aggregate spending target.

If the new law were to exempt five of the 10 programs from the sequester, then the remaining programs would be subject to a 4% cut to hit the same spending target.

If Congress doesn't like the results of an anticipated sequester, they can and should enact a new law before December 31 which hits $490 in a different way. They could cut one program by 20% ($10) and leave the other 49 programs untouched, for example.

Types of sequesters

There are discretionary sequesters which apply to programs that face annual appropriations.

There is a mandatory sequester, which is designed to apply to mandatory/entitlement spending.

Or you could do a spending sequester which applies to both discretionary and mandatory spending.

In March the President floated the idea of a sequester that would raise taxes as well as increase spending.

The challenge: exemptions

The hard part of designing a sequester mechanism is rounding up the votes for a bill that includes an automatic across-the-board cut. Members of Congress will say, "I support your spending target, and I support the hammer of creating a sequester, but I can't vote for it if the sequester would cut X. Give X an exemption from the sequester and I'll vote for your bill."

The exemptions to the sequester are the key that shapes subsequent Congressional negotiations. If your spending priorities are exempted from the sequester, then you have less incentive to cut a deal after this new law is in effect. You have leverage in the negotiations.

In addition, Members expose themselves to political risk when they vote for the creation of an across-the-board sequester. This is why all mandatory sequesters enacted so far have exempted Social Security, even though Social Security is the largest component of mandatory spending.

The spending limits in Cut and Cap

I support the numeric spending targets in the Cut and Cap sections. For me the most important number is "below 20% of GDP" in the cap section. I think that's the right target, and it is the primary reason I support this bill.

For comparison:

- * Federal spending in the 50 years preceding the Obama Administration averaged 20.2% of GDP.
- * Federal spending in 2009 hit an all-time post-WWII high of 28.5% of GDP.
- * Under the President's original budget, it would be 23.6% this year, 22.7% in 2013, and then begin a steady climb to 24.5% of GDP at the end of the decade in 2021. Since the President didn't provide detail with his second round budget, I can't provide parallel figures for that.
- * The 23.6% figure means federal spending will be 15% larger, measured as a share of the economy, than it has historically been.

Those extreme spending shares are the result of several factors: higher automatic stabilizer payments in a weak economy, government actions like stimulus laws and ObamaCare, and long-term entitlement spending trends that build gradually over time.

Anticipating the replies from my left-of-center friends, yes, I am willing to make whatever changes are needed to the big 3 entitlements to stay within this cap. I would rather change the nature of future government benefit promises than see the private sector shrink.

The sequesters in Cut and Cap

Most Members of Congress complain that automatic sequester mechanisms include programs they don't want to cut. I have the opposite complaint - the sequesters in this bill exempt too much. In particular, both the mandatory sequester in the Cut section and the across-the-board sequester in the Cap section exclude Social Security, Medicare, military personnel, and interest costs. While military personnel costs would rank high on my list of spending priorities, I think the best sequester mechanisms apply to all non-interest spending.

In particular, we need to address spending trends in the big three entitlements. By exempting Social Security and Medicare from the sequester, this bill makes it that much harder for Congress to bite the bullet and make needed changes in both programs. It is easy to understand the legislative necessity that drove this decision, but it's a big policy mistake nonetheless.

At the same time, these sequester mechanisms are much better than past ones enacted into law, which exempted hundreds of programs from the across-the-board cut. A well-designed sequester is not supposed to be the mechanism that cuts spending. It is supposed to be the forcing mechanism that convinces Congress to make decisions to cut spending. If you exempt too much, then the incentive placed on Congress is even weaker.

Debt limit - Balanced Budget Amendment

It is important to understand that the debt limit increase in this bill is not just tied to any Balanced Budget Amendment to the Constitution, but to one which meets certain parameters. The BBA must not just guarantee a balanced budget. It must also limit spending as a percent of GDP as in the Cap section of this bill, and it must raise the legislative bar for tax increases to a two-thirds vote of both the House and Senate.

It might therefore be more appropriate to think of this as a "Balanced Budget through Spending Cuts Amendment."

I support balancing the budget through cutting spending rather than raising taxes. I don't feel strongly either way about whether or not this should be enshrined in the Constitution. I lean a little against, because I hate messing with the Constitution.

All that is irrelevant, however, because even if this kind of BBA did pass both Houses of Congress, it would take many years for three-fifths of the States to ratify it as an amendment to the Constitution. Federal budget problems are upon us now - we can't wait for a Balanced Budget Amendment to be ratified. While this part of the bill is useful to make a point, I fear it serves as a distraction from actually cutting spending.

Since Congress will not pass a Balanced Budget Amendment through both Houses in the next two weeks, and since this section makes a debt limit increase contingent upon such passage, I have a big problem here. That problem is solved as long as some other bill becomes law soon to increase the debt limit.

Summary of my views on Cut, Cap, and Balance

I recommend supporting this bill even with its significant imperfections. I place enormous value on the creation of an enforceable cap on total government spending.

Good

- * Focuses on the problem I think needs to be solved: too high and too rapidly growing government spending;
- * Cuts spending 2012 and creates a sequester to enforce those cuts;
- * Caps federal spending below 20% of GDP and phases down to that over a few years;
- * Creates a sequester mechanism to force spending cuts to hit those levels;
- * The mandatory spending sequesters are far broader and therefore superior to those enacted in the past; and
- * The form of the Balanced Budget Amendment, which would drive spending cuts rather than tax increases, is good.

Bad

* The sequester exempts too much, and in particular it exempts the two largest entitlement spending programs, Social Security and Medicare. If enacted, this bill might make it legislatively harder to reform these two programs. That's a huge problem.

* While it appears to increase the debt limit, it sets conditions that won't be met in time. This problem is solved as long as some other bill becomes law soon to increase the debt limit.

* I lean against amending the Constitution, even for a Balanced Budget Amendment whose form I like. And the legislative reality means time spent on a BBA could be better spent trying to cut spending.

No bill is perfect. In my view, the good far outweighs the bad in this bill.
