Wendy –

House E&C is holding its first Obamacare hearing NEXT WEDNESDAY, March 1.

Committee staff is asking each member to obtain a letter from their Governor, pointing out pitfalls, problems, with Obamacare.

Here's what they sent:

In preparation for next week's hearing on the impact of Obamacare on the states, we're planning a comprehensive communications plan. One tactic includes asking Republican governors to write your boss a letter outlining some concerns they have with Obamacare on your state. Will Kinzel from the Speaker's office is going to reach out to your state's DC director, asking if they might be willing to get their governor to write such a letter.

It's not going to be a hard push and we don't really need you to do anything...just wanted to make you aware this was going on. If your governor doesn't want to do it, this is not a high pressure deal.

The idea would be to have any Member of the Committee who secures a letter from their governor mention it when they begin their questioning, "Mr. Chairman I want mention that I just received a letter from my Governor yesterday, expressing concern about Obamacare on my state and want to include the letter in the record." Or something like that.

Would it be possible to have someone on your staff prepare such a letter for our office?

Thanks, Wendy!

Dana,

This is a very interesting telephone call from a neurosurgeon in Chicago discussing the 'ethics/treatment' panels to be formed to dictate care that will be resulting from PPACA (Obama Care). Please listen to the call. I thought Governor Fallin would be interested in hearing this and I am sending to you hoping you will be able to forward it to her. Thank you very much; I certainly appreciated your assistance in the scheduling process for the Governor to speak at our recent EXPLORE: OK Healthcare Summit presented by PLICO August 9, 10. She helped make it an overwhelming success for 375 registrants and 60+ exhibitors attending this first time Summit.

Sincerely,

Carl Hook, M.D.
President and CEO

As Sarah Palin and others asserted, it appears under Obamacare there will indeed be "Death Panels".

While our shared abhorrence of such a practice is almost unanimous, the idea of making certain cost/benefit decisions regarding healthcare should not necessarily be completely ruled out. Of course even if we agree there are times when "withholding" care would save both money and pain and misery, we'd still have to think hard about who sits on these panels.

I've personally known dozens of people who were 100% certain to die of cancer in the near term, but they were still given very expensive chemotherapies and other interventions that, not only would not save them, but would make them horribly ill and debilitated for the short time they had left to live. Some argue that even when it's certain that a person is going to die from his illness, we should not remove all hope from him. But of course this only postpones the day when the patient must end his denial and come to acceptance of his demise. So I've always had bad feelings about cases where patients were placed on debilitating chemotherapy and given other treatments that only made them too ill to enjoy what few weeks or months they had left. This change in thinking/ethics (I think it's unethical to do this to people)...but this change with cancer patients alone would save billions of dollars. And of course the same is true with other terminal illnesses as well. Too frequently continuing painful, debilitating medical care just prolongs suffering while doctors, hospitals and especially pharmaceutical and high tech medical equipment companies make profits.

Also there's the data showing that frequently 80% of the cumulative costs for an individual's healthcare occur during the last 90 days of life. Does that make sense?

Here's a call from a neurosurgeon who had just attended a symposium on how Obamacare will work, a preview of what's coming. It's really scary to think that a panel, probably consisting of doctors with administrative mindsets and corporate bean counters, will be deciding whether a patient receives the surgery that would normally be provided or just given palliative care so he'll be comfortable while he's waiting to die.

But I suppose this will drive the costs of Medicare down, since all that can afford to go the private insurance route will leave Medicare.

Secretary Cline will join me for the 11 am meeting. I have also invited Val Schott from the OSU Center for Rural Health. This is for the meeting with me that will take place prior to the lunch. Please let me know if you would like either of them to attend the lunch.

Governor Musgrove is chair of the National Advisory Committee on Rural Health and Services. He wants to speak with Governor Fallin regarding rural health and any possible help the committee can provide with health insurance exchanges.

National Advisory Committee on Rural Health & Human Services

The National Advisory Committee on Rural Health and Human Services (NACRHHS) is a 21-member citizens' panel of nationally recognized rural health experts that provides recommendations on rural issues to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services. The Committee was chartered in 1987 to advise the Secretary of Health and Human Services on ways to address health care problems in rural America. It was expanded to 21 members in 2002 and charged with focusing on both health and human service issues in rural areas.

The Committee is chaired by former Mississippi Governor Ronnie Musgrove. The Committee's private and public-sector members reflect wide-ranging, first-hand experience with rural issues -- in medicine, nursing, administration, finance, law, research, business, public health, aging, welfare and human service issues.

The Committee is currently composed of 21 members, including the chairman, who serve overlapping four-year terms. The members represent expertise in the delivery, financing, research, development, and administration of health and human services in rural areas. Several members are involved in training rural health professionals. Others are representatives of state government, provider associations and other rural interest groups. Each year, the Committee selects one or more topics upon which to focus during the year. Background documents are then prepared for the Committee by both staff and contractors to help inform members on the issue. The Committee then produces a report with recommendations on that issue for the Secretary by the end of the year. In addition to the report, the Committee may also produce white papers on select policy issues. The Committee also sends letters to the Secretary after each meeting. The letters serve as a vehicle for the Committee to raise other issues with the Secretary separate and apart from the report process.

The Committee meets three times a year. The first meeting is held during the winter months in Washington. The Committee then meets twice in the field (in June and September). The Washington meeting often coincides with the opening of a Congressional session and serves as a starting point for setting the Committee's agenda for the coming year. The field visits include ongoing work on the yearly topics with some time devoted to site visits and presentations by the host community.

The Committee then produces a report with recommendations on that issue for the Secretary by the end of the year. In addition to the report, the Committee may also produce white papers on select policy issues. The Committee also sends letters to the Secretary after each meeting. The letters serve as a vehicle for the Committee to raise other issues with the Secretary separate and apart from the report process.

The Committee meets three times a year. The first meeting is held during the winter months in Washington. The Committee then meets twice in the field (in June and September). The Washington meeting often coincides with the opening of a Congressional session and serves as a starting point for setting the Committee's agenda for the coming year. The field visits include ongoing work on the yearly topics with some time devoted to site visits and presentations by the host community.

National Advisory Committee on Rural Health & Human Services

The National Advisory Committee on Rural Health and Human Services (NACRHHS) is a 21-member citizens' panel of nationally recognized rural health experts that provides recommendations on rural issues to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services. The Committee was chartered in 1987 to advise the Secretary of Health and Human Services on ways to address health care problems in rural America. It was expanded to 21 members in 2002 and charged with focusing on both health and human service issues in rural areas.

The Committee is chaired by former Mississippi Governor Ronnie Musgrove. The Committee's private and public-sector members reflect wide-ranging, first-hand experience with rural issues -- in medicine, nursing, administration, finance, law, research, business, public health, aging, welfare and human service issues.

The Committee is currently composed of 21 members, including the chairman, who serve overlapping four-year terms. The members represent expertise in the delivery, financing, research, development, and administration of health and human services in rural areas. Several members are involved in training rural health professionals. Others are representatives of state government, provider associations and other rural interest groups. Each year, the Committee selects one or more topics upon which to focus during the year. Background documents are then prepared for the Committee by both staff and contractors to help inform members on the issue. The Committee then produces a report with recommendations on that issue for the Secretary by the end of the year. In addition to the report, the Committee may also produce white papers on select policy issues. The Committee also sends letters to the Secretary after each meeting. The letters serve as a vehicle for the Committee to raise other issues with the Secretary separate and apart from the report process.

Governor Fallin,

Oklahoma resoundingly rejected ObamaCare last week. Fully two-thirds of Oklahoma voters voted against President Obama. That is why we need to stand up to the federal government and reject Obamacare completely.

Two things are required for the implementation of ObamaCare:

1) Health Insurance Exchanges – This is the process that the federal government uses to take over every private health plan in the state.

2) Medicaid Expansion – Medicaid was created to provide health care to the poorest of the poor, but this expansion would expand this coverage to most Americans.

Last year you, Governor Fallin, returned Federal monies earmarked to implement ObamaCare. That was great! Now we have have the chance to do it again.

the U.S. Supreme Court's recent decision prevents the federal government from forcing states to implement ObamaCare's Medicaid expansion by withholding all Medicaid funding from any State that refused to do so.

Contrary to what some special interest groups are trying to say, we are not going to be in trouble if we don't implement ObamaCare.

The Supreme Court actually said the states have a duty to resist the federal government:

The Framers thus ensured that powers which "in the ordinary course of affairs, concern the lives, liberties, and properties of the people were held by governments more local and more accountable than a distant federal bureaucracy. The independent power of the States also serves as a check on the power of the Federal Government: 'By denying anyone government complete jurisdiction over all the concerns of public life, federalism protects the liberty of the individual from arbitrary power' ... In the typical case we look to the States to defend their prerogatives by adopting 'the simple expedient of not yielding' to federal blandishments when they do not want to embrace the federal policies as their own. The States are separate and independent sovereigns. Sometimes they have to act like it."

So, if a State simply refuses to accept federal mandates (and the associated "bribe" money) to implement ObamaCare health exchanges, then the entire law falls flat on its face.

Do not cave to the pressure from groups such as Big Insurance, Big Hospital chains and Big Government bureaucrats to ignore the people and foist this upon us.

We must refuse the implementation of ObamaCare in Oklahoma immediately!

It is YOUR responsibility as Governor under the 10th Amendment to stand up to the over-reaching power of the federal government and protect the citizens of Oklahoma.

Please prevent the implementation of ObamaCare now.

Sincerely,
Dutch Harbert

As predicted, OETA asking for constituent correspondence on Medicaid expansion and insurance exchange. I would like to be able to get these documents to him as quickly as possible, given all our other Open Records woes. If its possible to get them to him today, lets do that.

He is baffled that we cannot store thousands of voicemails and give them to him. I wrote:

We have had hundreds, if not thousands, of voice messages on the issue of health insurance exchanges and Medicaid expansion (as the chart I sent you shows). Does your voicemail system allow you to store thousands of voicemails? Ours does not. We must listen to them and then delete them, otherwise no one else can leave voicemails.

Thank you for the statistics. I have to also say I know of no voice mail system that allows you to listen to a message and determine what the caller had to say that then cannot save that message to be listened to again. Even the most primitive answering machine could do that. I have to ask then what kind of system are you using because otherwise it sounds like you listened to the messages and then made the decision to erase them. That would be contrary to the Open Records Law. I realize you have had recent issues with the law and do not want to add to those problems but I have to tell you, your explanation so far falls short of explaining why citizen messages to the chief executive of the state of Oklahoma cannot be maintained as required by the Open Records Law.

How about emails, I would consider those to be an Open Record also so are those available instead?

Thank you for your assistance so far

Bob – talked to our public affairs people. They do not save the voicemails so we can't offer that record. However they did create a "support or oppose" spreadsheet for all voicemails, calls and letter concerning the expansion of Medicaid and the creation of an exchange. that is included below.

Alex:

Today is our last chance for an on camera interview concerning the Health Care decisions. If we can't do them today we will probably use the interview the Governor did with Fox news to represent her side in this matter.

On the open records request. I need a response no later than tomorrow preferably today.

Open records request received.

I'll let you know about the interview (we did hold a press conference to announce the decision and take questions from reporters at the time).

It is not true that opinion pages and blogs have all been negative. The response, especially from conservative corners of the mediasphere, has been positive.

Alex:

Since the governor had time for Fox news, how about her own statewide public television network. I am asking for an interview for her reasons behind refusing expansion of Medicaid and not setting up a health care exchange. Would it be possible to do this interview sometime over the next three days?

I would also like to ask her about the public reaction to her decision. Opinion pages and blogs have almost all been negative to the decision. What about the calls to your office and by the way if they were recorded, I would believe them to be open records and if such I am now making a formal request for copies of those recordings.

Thank you for your time

Hi Alex. This is Clifton Adcock at the Oklahoma Gazette. You will find three Open Records requests attached. The first is for e-mails, memos, or other documents related to both Gov. Fallin's rejection of the $54 million in federal "early innovator" funding regarding health care exchanges. The second is regarding Gov. Fallin's decision on the state not setting up a health care exchange and the Governor's decision not to expand medicare. The third request is seeking memos, e-mails or other written communication regarding the decision to deny earlier open records requests for the previous two items. If possible, let me know about how long you anticipate it will take to fill these requests. Thank you.

Pelosi on Obamacare: I Knew Ted Kennedy 'Would Go to Heaven and Help Us Pass the Bill'

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) (CNSNews.com/Penny Starr)

(CNSNews.com) – House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) said Thursday that “It’s pretty exciting” that the Supreme Court upheld the health-care law’s individual mandate as a tax, saying now Sen. Ted Kennedy can “rest in peace.”

“I knew that when he left us he would go to heaven and help pass the bill,” Pelosi said of the late Massachusetts Democratic senator.

“Now I know he was busily at work until this decision came down, inspiring one way or another. And now he can rest in peace.”

Pelosi, who had previously predicted a 6-3 victory for Obamacare, said the decision was “no surprise.” The Minority Leader cited “interstate commerce” in defending the constitutionality of the law, despite the Supreme Court’s ruling that the mandate is not justified under the Commerce Clause.

“We thought—we knew we were on solid ground in terms of interstate commerce, solid ground in terms of the constitution, it was just a question of what the vote would be,” she said. “And with that confidence we happily embraced the decision that came down.”

“Now it can move forward with the full implementation of the law and when that happens for the American people the best is yet to come,” Pelosi said.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., poses for a picture with his son, Rep. Patrick Kennedy, D-R.I., at the inauguration of President Barack Obama on Jan. 20, 2009. (AP File Photo/Sen. Patrick Leahy) Congressional Democrats utilized the slogan, “Win one for Teddy,” when trying to pass healthcare reform in 2009 after Kennedy died of brain cancer that August. Kennedy was a longtime champion for health-care reform.

“I want to say a word about Senator [Ted] Kennedy,” Pelosi said. “I spoke to Vicki Kennedy this morning and Patrick Kennedy before coming here, thanking them for the important role that he played a lifetime of commitment to making healthcare a right, not a privilege in our country. He called it the great unfinished business of our country, our society.”

In a Supreme Court decision Thursday, Chief Justice John Roberts wrote that the individual mandate is not justified under the Commerce Clause but could be justified under the Congress’ power to tax and spend.

“The Court today holds that our Constitution protects us from federal regulation under the Commerce Clause so long as we abstain from the regulated activity. But from its creation, the Constitution has made no such promise with respect to taxes,” he wrote in the 5-4 majority opinion.

“I knew that when he left us he would go to heaven and help pass the bill,” Pelosi said of the late Massachusetts Democratic senator.

“Now I know he was busily at work until this decision came down, inspiring one way or another. And now he can rest in peace.”

Pelosi, who had previously predicted a 6-3 victory for Obamacare, said the decision was “no surprise.” The Minority Leader cited “interstate commerce” in defending the constitutionality of the law, despite the Supreme Court’s ruling that the mandate is not justified under the Commerce Clause.

“We thought—we knew we were on solid ground in terms of interstate commerce, solid ground in terms of the constitution, it was just a question of what the vote would be,” she said. “And with that confidence we happily embraced the decision that came down.”

“Now it can move forward with the full implementation of the law and when that happens for the American people the best is yet to come,” Pelosi said.

Congressional Democrats utilized the slogan, “Win one for Teddy,” when trying to pass healthcare reform in 2009 after Kennedy died of brain cancer that August. Kennedy was a longtime champion for health-care reform.

“I want to say a word about Senator [Ted] Kennedy,” Pelosi said. “I spoke to Vicki Kennedy this morning and Patrick Kennedy before coming here, thanking them for the important role that he played a lifetime of commitment to making healthcare a right, not a privilege in our country. He called it the great unfinished business of our country, our society.”

In a Supreme Court decision Thursday, Chief Justice John Roberts wrote that the individual mandate is not justified under the Commerce Clause but could be justified under the Congress’ power to tax and spend.

“The Court today holds that our Constitution protects us from federal regulation under the Commerce Clause so long as we abstain from the regulated activity. But from its creation, the Constitution has made no such promise with respect to taxes,” he wrote in the 5-4 majority opinion.

OMES was able to find a solution to all the we discussed. We will have options to help answer calls in the intern suite after Monday. An auto answer with the options we discussed below with the approved language will be in place start Monday. This is temporary and can be removed at our request. A test was done at 5 today on the system to see how it will work and all worked well. Today was interesting with all the calls, thank you both for approving these options—it will greatly help with the high call volume.

Something very interesting that we found today thru the calls is that most people were opposed to Obamacare, but when asked if they would like the state to be in control of the health care exchange they quickly answered yes. Also, most of the public thinks the governor has the ability to completely opt out of Obamacare. Just a reminder of what

I don't think we can do that, if mail box is full, they need to go back to a person. Can we have an extra line added, so an intern can answer main line from mail desk? And then you guys or interns can work to empty to comment line a couple times a day?

I understand. The word poll is not being used at all. If people ask about the 'poll' we tell them we can mark down their comment but there is not a poll being conducted.

What I was trying to convey with the auto phone system was that the system would calculate the number of callers so it could produce a number for us internally , not that we would be conducting a poll. None of this the public would be hearing or seeing. Attached is just some example language of what it would say. Sorry if this was confusing!! I will not move forward with it.

No, don't think so. People will have to be paying, and perhaps we change the message on voicemail to tell people due to the high volume of calls, may have to try back later. Or even leave a MSG after hours to register your opinion. I don't want anyone to use e word poll...that's not what we're doing

I just spoke to OMES about options to help with the massive amounts of calls. They said there is an auto system we can put in place temporarily that would help route the calls to log them as a poll and then business callers to the switch board to be routed to staff. Wanted to see if I can go ahead and proceed to see if we can get something like that in place today?

I spoke with Mr. Sands. He is busy working on another story that will air this week, so he will not make it to our office to review the constituent letters until Friday.

Attached is the agreement that we are asking him to sign in order to review the documents. I plan on sending this over to him this afternoon. Please let me know if you have any questions/concerns.

Thanks.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
November 19, 2012

Governor Fallin: Oklahoma Will Not Pursue a State-Based Exchange or Medicaid Expansion

OKLAHOMA CITY – Governor Mary Fallin today released the following statement announcing that Oklahoma will not pursue the creation of a state-based exchange or participate in the Medicaid expansion in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA):

“For the past few months, my staff and I have worked with other lawmakers, Oklahoma stakeholders and health care experts across the country to determine the best course of action for Oklahoma in regards to both the creation of a health insurance exchange and the expansion of Medicaid under the Affordable Care Act. Our priority has been to ascertain what can be done to increase quality and access to health care, contain costs, and do so without placing an undue burden on taxpayers or the state. As I have stated many times before, it is my firm belief that PPACA fails to further these goals, and will in fact decrease the quality of health care across the United States while contributing to the nation’s growing deficit crisis.

“Despite my ongoing opposition to the federal health care law, the state of Oklahoma is legally obligated to either build an exchange that is PPACA compliant and approved by the Obama Administration, or to default to an exchange run by the federal government. This choice has been forced on the people of Oklahoma by the Obama Administration in spite of the fact that voters have overwhelmingly expressed their opposition to the federal health care law through their support of State Question 756, a constitutional amendment prohibiting the implementation of key components of PPACA.

“After careful consideration, I have today informed U.S. Secretary of Health Kathleen Sebelius that Oklahoma will not pursue the creation of its own health insurance exchange. Any exchange that is PPACA compliant will necessarily be ‘state-run’ in name only and would require Oklahoma resources, staff and tax dollars to implement. It does not benefit Oklahoma taxpayers to actively support and fund a new government program that will ultimately be under the control of the federal government, that is opposed by a clear majority of Oklahomans, and that will further the implementation of a law that threatens to erode both the quality of American health care and the fiscal stability of the nation.

“Furthermore, I have also decided that Oklahoma will not be participating in the Obama Administration’s proposed expansion of Medicaid. Such an expansion would be unaffordable, costing the state of Oklahoma up to $475 million between now and 2020, with escalating annual expenses in subsequent years. It would also further Oklahoma’s reliance on federal money that may or may not be available in the future given the dire fiscal problems facing the federal government. On a state level, massive new costs associated with Medicaid expansion would require cuts to important government priorities such as education and public safety. Furthermore, the proposed Medicaid expansion offers no meaningful reform to a massive entitlement program already contributing to the out-of-control spending of the federal government.

“Moving forward, the state of Oklahoma will pursue two actions simultaneously. The first will be to continue our support for Oklahoma Attorney General Scott Pruitt’s ongoing legal challenge of PPACA. General Pruitt’s lawsuit raises different Constitutional questions than previous legal challenges, and both he and I remain optimistic that Oklahoma’s challenge can succeed.

“Our second and equally important task will be to pursue state-based solutions that improve health outcomes and contain costs for Oklahoma families. Serious reform, for instance, should be pursued in the area of Medicaid and public health, where effective chronic disease prevention and management programs could address the trend of skyrocketing medical bills linked to avoidable hospital and emergency room visits. I look forward to working with legislative leaders and lawmakers in both parties to pursue Oklahoma health care solutions for Oklahoma families.”

We are excited that Governor Romney will now be joining us in Aspen next week. Due to his attendance, there are going to be a few changes to the RGA schedule that I wanted to make you aware of as well as an additional ask that we'd like your Governor to attend. I've pasted below our schedule, and highlighted where we would now like your Governor to join Governor

Romney. His attendance is not public, but we wanted the Governors to know. Can you please review this and let me know if your Governor will participate in these new events?

Please let me know if you have any questions!

Sincerely,
Monica

9:45 AM – 10:45 AM

Panel Discussion I: Obamacare After the SCOTUS Decision:
What's Next?

On June 28, the Supreme Court ruled on the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) upholding the individual mandate as a tax, but limiting the power of the federal government to coerce state Medicaid expansions. Regarding the Medicaid expansion, the court ruled that the government could not compel states to expand Medicaid by threatening to withhold federal money to existing Medicaid programs. This presents an opportunity for governors to opt out of the expansion without losing their existing share of federal Medicaid funding. Within hours of the decision, Republican governors in several states said they were likely to oppose expanding the program. In addition to the Medicaid piece, governors must also decide whether to establish a state-administered health insurance exchange. This panel examines the decisions confronting governors, along with the remaining political, regulatory and legal uncertainties surrounding the law and its impact on businesses.

Location: The St. Regis Aspen Resort – Astor II

Speakers: Governor Gary Herbert, Utah

Governor Bobby Jindal, Louisiana

Michael Neidorff, Chairman and CEO, Centene Corporation, St. Louis, MO

Dr. George Rapier, Chairman and CEO, WellMed

Medical

Management, Inc., San Antonio, TX

11:00 AM – 12:00 PM

Panel Discussion II: State Solutions: Economic Growth in the Obama Era

Republican governors are providing a clear contrast to the failed economic policies of the Obama administration. Under President Obama, the nation has endured 41 consecutive months with the unemployment rate over 8 percent and the most recent quarter was the worst quarter of job creation in 2 years. Despite the national headwinds, GOP-led states are experiencing economic success. States with Republican governors are adding jobs at a faster pace than their Democratic counterparts and states that elected new Republican governors in 2010 have seen their unemployment rates drop nearly 50 percent more than states with new Democratic governors. In July, CNBC released its annual list of best states for business, and Republican governors led the way. CNBC found that 12 of the 15 top states for business have GOP governors. Instead of emulating the policies of Republican governors which encourage entrepreneurship and job creators, the Obama administration continues to impede upon the states with overregulation and the threat of higher taxes. This panel explores how governors can work with business leaders to ensure the private sector adds jobs despite the federal government's overreach.

Speakers: Governor Bob McDonnell, Virginia, RGA

Chairman

Governor Mary Fallin, Oklahoma

Governor Rick Perry, Texas

Ross Perot, Jr., Chairman, Hillwood Development Company,
Dallas, TX

12:15 PM – 1:15 PM

Luncheon: Governors' Races and the 2012 Battlegrounds

With 11 states holding governors' races this November, the RGA is in position to expand its majority and make a major impact on the 2012 elections. Many of the states where RGA will engage are also critical Presidential and Senate battleground states. As shown in the Wisconsin recall election, the RGA and ideologically-aligned groups are able to work together, and their efforts benefit candidates up and down the ballot. This panel will explore the 2012 political landscape and the interplay between gubernatorial and federal races.

aware of as well as an additional ask that we'd like your Governor to attend. I've pasted below our schedule, and highlighted where we would now like your Governor to join Governor Romney. His attendance is not public, but we wanted the Governors to know. Can you please review this and let me know if your Governor will participate in these new events?

Please let me know if you have any questions!

Sincerely,
Monica

Panel Discussion I: Obamacare After the SCOTUS Decision:
What's Next?

On June 28, the Supreme Court ruled on the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) upholding the individual mandate as a tax, but limiting the power of the federal government to coerce state Medicaid expansions. Regarding the Medicaid expansion, the court ruled that the government could not compel states to expand Medicaid by threatening to withhold federal money to existing Medicaid programs. This presents an opportunity for governors to opt out of the expansion without losing their existing share of federal Medicaid funding. Within hours of the decision, Republican governors in several states said they were likely to oppose expanding the program. In addition to the Medicaid piece, governors must also decide whether to establish a state-administered health insurance exchange. This panel examines the decisions confronting governors, along with the remaining political, regulatory and legal uncertainties surrounding the law and its impact on businesses.

Management, Inc., San Antonio, TX

11:00 AM – 12:00 PM

Panel Discussion II: State Solutions: Economic Growth in the Obama Era

Republican governors are providing a clear contrast to the failed economic policies of the Obama administration. Under President Obama, the nation has endured 41 consecutive months with the unemployment rate over 8 percent and the most recent quarter was the worst quarter of job creation in 2 years. Despite the national headwinds, GOP-led states are experiencing economic success. States with Republican governors are adding jobs at a faster pace than their Democratic counterparts and states that elected new Republican governors in 2010 have seen their unemployment rates drop nearly 50 percent more than states with new Democratic governors. In July, CNBC released its annual list of best states for business, and Republican governors led the way. CNBC found that 12 of the 15 top states for business have GOP governors. Instead of emulating the policies of Republican governors which encourage entrepreneurship and job creators, the Obama administration continues to impede upon the states with overregulation and the threat of higher taxes. This panel explores how governors can work with business leaders to ensure the private sector adds jobs despite the federal government's overreach.

Luncheon: Governors' Races and the 2012 Battlegrounds

With 11 states holding governors' races this November, the RGA is in position to expand its majority and make a major impact on the 2012 elections. Many of the states where RGA will engage are also critical Presidential and Senate battleground states. As shown in the Wisconsin recall election, the RGA and ideologically-aligned groups are able to work together, and their efforts benefit candidates up and down the ballot. This panel will explore the 2012 political landscape and the interplay between gubernatorial and federal races.

On Jobs and Economy:

Making Oklahoma a prosperous place is a top priority and we have been presented with a unique opportunity to achieve that goal, by taking a thoughtful and aggressive approach on reduction of the state's income tax. We will identify and eliminate ineffective tax credits. We will consider the recommendations made by Mazzei's tax reform task force."

The workers comp system has work that is not completed and we will continue to work on that.

On education:

"We will honor our commitment to teachers that are National Board Certified by keeping the promises we made to the teachers. We will work on the quality of types of education while promoting greater parental choice in education. We must increase the number of well educated individuals with college degrees, advanced degrees, and industrial certifications."

On Health and Human Services:

"We will continue to protect and advocate for the unborn. We also plan to address the challenges involved in reducing the infant mortality rate. The Senate GOP will also find solutions to address the shortage of doctors and health care professionals in undeserved areas throughout Oklahoma. Senate GOPs opposes ObamaCare (PPACA) but we recognize that it is the law of the land and we will continue to find Oklahoma alternatives."

Senator Jolley on Government:

"We believe in limited government through the continual efforts of modernizing the government and by reducing the scope of the Oklahoma Government. We will revisit Oklahoma water plans by thoughtfully debating programs to make sure that the needs of all citizens in Oklahoma are met. Senate GOP Caucus believes that it is important to maintain all state properties and assets as they all belong to the people of Oklahoma and they deserve to have the best buildings."

On Transportation Infrastructure:

"We will continue to be committed to ODOT's 8 year plan."

Please join us for a conference call for state leaders

with Utah Governor Gary Herbert

Friday, September 7, 11:30am EDT

Utah Gov. Gary Herbert is warning other governors of the high cost of Medicaid expansion through ObamaCare. Please join us for a conversation with Gov. Herbert this Friday where he will talk about the importance of repealing ObamaCare and putting states back on track so statehouses, not the White House, are in charge. "It is time to reset the health reform conversation, and repeal and replace PPACA with state-driven, people-centered and market-oriented innovations. States simply cannot afford the Affordable Care Act, and neither can the American people," he wrote in a recent Washington Times article.

"Governor Fallin believes the Open Records Act exists to provide public access to the vast majority of information and documents produced by Oklahoma's state government. She supports both the letter and spirit of that law, and has made internet access to more state information available than at any time in Oklahoma history. However, Governor Fallin does not believe the law is intended to allow access to conversations between executive branch employees working on draft documents, brainstorming on public policy ideas, offering advice and counsel to the governor, or otherwise acting in an advisory role. Reducing the privacy of those communications is outside of the scope of the Open Records Act and would prevent the governor and her staff members from having open, candid conversations about public policy. Eliminating the possibility of private dialogue inside the executive branch would damage the ability of the governor to design and implement good policy and would harm the public interest." - alex weintz

Alex:

Also, the governor pledged to support both the law and intent of the Oklahoma Open Records Act, but her general counsel has made clear, citing the U.S. Supreme Court and federal law, that your office will likely not release "deliberative process" material or "executive privilege" material. Neither of these citations come from Oklahoma law or Oklahoma court decisions. So is she violating that pledge?

Subject: Tribal Concerns Re: ACA

Hello Jacque:

As requested by phone yesterday, Oklahoma tribal nations want to provide meaningful input into any decisions that are made in Oklahoma regarding the ACA, especially because they are directly impacted by the outcome of decisions made.

They are wanting a Medicaid waiver to be more inclusive of their people.

Tribes and Tribal Organizations have expressed that they should be engaged to resolve issues related to the following topics:

Any decisions made regarding health insurance exchanges.

Network Adequacy – requiring all QHPs to offer contracts to all I/T/U providers with an Indian Addendum.

Essential Health Benefits –reviewing the scope and duration of services and providers covered, and offering pediatric oral and vision services in the QHP versus a separate plan.

Eligibility – identification of individuals who are eligible for special protections and provisions as AI/AN in the eligibility process and at the provider level to assure that deductibles and co-pays are waived. Utilization of existing databases or development of new databases to expedite eligibility determinations. Identifying how additional documentation will be requested and reviewed and eligibility determinations will be made when individuals are not included in approved data systems.

Enrollment – enrollment processes must accommodate not only special provision for AI/AN in Exchanges (monthly enrollment, waiver of cost sharing, exclusion of certain sources of income), but also in Medicaid, Medicaid Expansion, Child Health Insurance Programs, and Basic Health Plans, if there are any in the State.

Enrollment Assistance - carve outs for navigator contracts for the I/T/Us and other enrollment assistance funding, such as Medicaid Administrative Match (MAM).

Tribal Sponsorship – allow aggregate payment of premiums and other policies to encourage Tribal sponsorship of individuals to enroll in Exchange plans.

Outreach and Education – provide outreach and education that is culturally appropriate and assures that AI/AN know which QHPs have I/T/U providers in their networks and informs them of the special protections and provisions for AI/AN.

Call Centers – decide whether it is most appropriate to have an Indian desk to handle questions and resolve problems regarding AI/AN and I/T/Us, or whether everyone who works at a call center should receive training about Tribes in the State, the Indian health care delivery system and special provisions in the law, regulations and systems for AI/AN.

Website – ensure that the design of the website includes information specific to AI/AN and the I/T/U and is easy to access by consumers, as well as those assisting with enrollment.

Waiver of Penalties for AI/AN without Insurance -- develop the system to assure that individuals are not penalized and to communicate who is covered by this provision in the law.

Enforcement of Section 206 of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act (IHCIA) -- assure that the I/T/U is paid in a sufficient and timely way for services delivered to individuals who are enrolled in QHPs if the I/T/U is not a network provider.

Reimbursements for Waived Cost Sharing --process to assure that the I/T/U receives payment for the co-pays and deductibles that are waived for AI/AN.

Referrals through Contract Health Services (CHS) --rules and processes to assure that AI/AN who are enrolled in a QHP and referred through an I/T/U CHS program are not charged a co-pay or deductible for services they receive outside the I/T/U.

Let me know if you have any questions or need more information.

Best Regards, Sally

Carol, I hate to say this but this is not a win for WE THE PEOPLE. This is not a Win and it is not just think how far we have come! We should not even be here if we had proper representation. Therefore I DO NOT agree with this analogy!

In matter of fact all they have done is increased our debt ceiling and put a much bigger burden on us trying to make a living! There are about (6) six million businesses in this country and they have just signed most of these business a slow death certificates by passing this bill!

There is only one way to fix the problem and that is to quit spending! I am not going point out all the ills of this because it was discussed so heavily before the vote. Bottom Line all of the U.S. Representatives who voted for this did not do this country justice!

We just need to clean out the ones who think printing money and putting us on the road to be (20) Twenty Trillion in debt by 2020 is a good idea! How can they even think this was a good idea? They need to GO!

They have failed the U.S. Citizens terribly again!

Go to the PENNY PLAN by Connie Mack from Florida! He has a plan to stop this and balance the budget. I am insulted/offended that these representatives have stole all our children's futures and the American Public future!

Let's get them out of office! In my opinion 2012 will be another cleaning house and senate time!

Brian

And after all the urgency to avoid the issue of August 2nd deadline..... the markets are unchanged, they have not responded favorably even with the event today. Still, if we had not had the Republican led House standing in the gap for some efficiency – can you imagine where this nation would be right now? The battle has been won and the People are ready for the war to be won as well. We may think this bill fell somewhat short, but it was the catalyst needed to whet America's appetite for more cuts. A potentially huge blessing in a small package. Our Oklahoma contingent represents us well and will push even harder now that Dems have been pushed into the corner – the People will demand further action because they know that it can be achieved. Power will shift in 2012 if we continue to have faith, exercise strong opinions and encourage our conservative leaders to press onward. At the polls, we must come out in force as a unified block to topple the stranglehold the liberal machine (press included) has held on us. The Senate, The Presidency and all cabinet positions via appointment, must be restored into capable hands.

See below and support the effort!

Subject: YOU Stopped the Obama Tax & Borrow Bailout

---

Dear Carol,

Do you remember where America was just one year ago?

The Pelosi-Reid-Obama agenda was doing a daily dose of damage to our American economy, destroying jobs with crippling regulations, oppressive spending and brand new taxes.

If that wasn't enough, the Democrats passed a government takeover of healthcare, spending record amounts of money we didn't have on a program we didn't want.

And to top it off, they raised taxes on hardworking taxpayers to pay for an $800 billion dollar stimulus -- claiming that they should have spent even more.

Maybe they thought they could get away with it. For two years, they did.

But on Election Day 2010, you stood up -- millions strong -- and said enough is enough.

You -- and millions of other Americans like you -- held them accountable. The Tea Party and millions of Conservatives led the charge from all 50 states right into the heart of Washington.

You didn't just change the debate in Washington. You changed the results. Today's passage of the Budget Control Act shows the impact you've already had... and how important it is to keep the pressure on Washington for the next 15 months.

Without you, Nancy Pelosi would still be Speaker Pelosi. She would have delivered President Obama exactly what he demanded: a blank check for unlimited spending, new taxes on American families, new regulations on job creators, and a debt ceiling increase with no strings attached.

Make no mistake: President Obama wanted hardworking American taxpayers to bail him out once again. He wanted YOU to pay for his failed stimulus and Obamacare, borrowing more money on your back to pay for them. He wanted you to sacrifice so that Washington wouldn't have to.

But because you kept the heat on Washington, Republicans in the House and Senate had the backup they needed to stand up and say NO to the Obama Tax & Borrow Bailout.

While the Budget Control Act is far from perfect, it is a step forward. The bottom line is that until we vote President Obama and his Democratic allies in the Senate out of power, we won't be able to truly change the culture in Washington and deliver the results Americans like you demand.

But think about how far we've come. Rather than trampling on the taxpayers, as the Democrats did when they controlled the House, this bill showed real respect to hardworking taxpayers. The legislation:

- Stopped ALL of the tax increases Obama, Reid, and Pelosi demanded;
- Forced the Senate to pass its first budget in two years, delivering Harry Reid a dose of accountability;
- Held every politician accountable to vote yes or no on a balanced budget amendment; and
- Protected the economy while demonstrating a commitment to reducing the debt.

This isn't the end of bringing spending discipline to Washington. It's just the beginning - and it wouldn't have happened without you.

Just yesterday, Joe Biden called the Tea Party "terrorists."

So today, I am writing to thank you for being a patriot. I have so much respect for you. I respect the work you do day by day, year by year, to defend freedom and promote opportunity. Your dedication to our cause is saving America.

Keep it up. Don't quiet down. Your voice cannot be ignored. Demand more from Washington. Demand more from those who represent you. At the RNC, we hear you - and we want to amplify your voice in Washington.

Over the next 15 months, all conservatives need to come together and focus on the only way to really fix what's wrong with Washington: voting Obama out of office and taking back the Senate. We are ready for battle. Are you?

Usually this is the part where we ask for money. Not today. In the last 24 hours you have given America something much more important than a donation. You have helped America take a step away from servitude and a step closer to freedom. We are proud of you. You are our heroes. You are true patriots.

You are Great Americans.

God bless you.

Sincerely,

Reince Priebus

REFUSING STATE EXCHANGES HALTS OBAMACARE WHATEVER SUPREME COURT DECIDES

STATES CAN BLOCK INSURANCE EXCHANGES AND DEFEAT OBAMACARE! BUT BEWARE – ROMNEY'S ANOINTED CHIEF OF STAFF MIKE LEAVITT IS AN EXCHANGES RENT-SEEKER

URGENT: With ObamaCare under deliberation in a split and politicized Supreme Court; Kagan NOT recused or removed but VOTING with Obama; and TWO years of endless redistributive scheming, coercion, contention and economic disaster since the "healthcare reform" bill was rammed through Congress – time to reverse course is short!

HERE'S SOMETHING WE THE PEOPLE CAN DO!

Thanks to the Democrats' sloppy legislation writing, States can block ObamaCare just by refusing to implement the State-level Health Insurance Exchanges!

And according to Congressional hearings and CBO scoring – America cannot afford to do anything else! Cost estimates for ObamaCare have DOUBLED heading to $2 TRILLION, and Obama's latest budget estimates for subsidizing these State pay-offs, oops, exchanges, is already up $111 billion from last year's budget – and they don't even kick in until 2014! STOP THEM NOW!

STOP OBAMACARE IN ITS TRACKS – FAX THE STATES TODAY!

It's true they can, and should, be refused! Sections 1311 and 1322 of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act authorizes Federal subsidies to State run insurance exchanges. But due to a "massive legislative defect" created by sloppy Democrat bill writers working in haste to force this odious legislation upon America, there is NO provision for the Federal government to make essential subsidy payments to Federally established exchanges. In the absence of a State insurance exchange and with NO CONGRESSIONAL AUTHORIZATION to fund Federal exchanges, any State that REFUSES to form an exchange will effectually ensure that within its State boundaries, ObamaCare cannot be implemented!

Here's why: ObamaCare offers "premium assistance" – tax credits and Federal taxpayer dollar subsidies – to households purchasing coverage through new State health insurance exchanges. Democrats knew this assistance was essential to hide much of the law's cost and reduce the vast premium hikes Americans will face after ObamaCare goes into effect in 2014. If consumers had to directly absorb the full cost of nationalizing one sixth of our economy, the already strong support for repeal would skyrocket!

So ObamaCare authorizes premium assistance in State-run exchanges (Section 1311) but in a glaring failure, not Federal ones (Section 1321). In other words, a State refusal to create an exchange will act as a clear mechanism to block much of ObamaCare's spending and paralyze implementation of the law. By NOT laundering Federal tax dollars (and MORE DEFICIT SPENDING) through State mechanisms, it also helps expose to the otherwise propagandized American electorate just how unaffordable ObamaCare really is!

The States can stop ObamaCare in its tracks just by refusing to establish insurance exchanges!

NO STATE HEALTH INSURANCE EXCHANGES = NO OBAMACARE
FAX THE STATES NOW!

But guess who thinks HALTING ObamaCare by REFUSING these "camel-nose-under-tent exchanges is "a dumb idea"? Former Bush HHS Secretary Michael Leavitt – Mitt Romney's best friend, his transition chief for Executive Branch Personnel, and the heir presumptive to be White House Chief of Staff in a Romney administration. Leavitt just happens to have already made a fortune off of state exchanges as a national lobbyist and head of a consulting firm that has won contracts to "help states set up exchanges" funded with YOUR tax dollars!

No wonder Leavitt thinks these exchanges are great; working the few states that have gotten on board, he is getting rich off of them while we are all getting poorer. There are hundreds of millions of taxpayer dollars in grants potentially up for grabs, all coming out of YOUR pockets. The size of his firm, Leavitt Partners, doubled in the year after the bill was signed. Leavitt and his consultancy represent the most prominent figures in the Republican Party urging states to bow to Big Government Washington.

Leavitt's unscrupulous, unprincipled state exchanges advocacy is known as "rent-seeking" and is incompatible with free market philosophy. Thankfully, most Republican legislatures and governors ARE rejecting Leavitt's approach. Opponents of ObamaCare exchange implementation are winning the battle; WE need to keep the pressure on and ensure that any adverse decision coming out of the Supreme Court does not give Leavitt and the rent-seekers an opportunity for new mischief.

Just to be clear: Rent-seeking behavior is distinguished in economic theory from profit-seeking behavior, in which entities seek to extract value by engaging in mutually beneficial transactions. Profit-seeking is the creation of wealth, while rent-seeking is the use or manipulation of social institutions, such as the power of government, to redistribute wealth among select persons or groups without creating new wealth. Sound familiar?

STOP OBAMACARE IN ITS TRACKS – FAX THE STATES TODAY!

The need to TAKE ACTION and STIFFEN RESOLVE in the STATES is URGENT – ObamaCare could well be wrongly decided by the Supreme Court in favor of Obama – and Obama has already attacked the Court's authority in case it decides against him! This fight MUST BE DECIDED BY WE THE PEOPLE!

And just recently the factual refutations to three more gigantic ObamaCare lies were exposed, showing the destructive power of this unconstitutional "law":

Lie #1: "Now, add it all up, and the plan I'm proposing will cost around $900 billion over 10 years." – Barack Obama, September 2009 address to joint session of Congress

The Congressional Budget Office's updated report, and the estimated cost of ObamaCare over a decade is now scored at a crippling $1.76 trillion, or nearly twice what Democrats told us in 2009. Worse, this estimate won't "true up" until next year's 10-year cost estimate, which will certainly exceed $2 trillion.

Lie #2: "If you like your health care plan, you can keep your health care plan." – Barack Obama, August 2009 address and repeated countless times thereafter

According to The Hill, "Four million Americans can expect to lose their employer-provided healthcare by 2016, according to the revised figures, far more than the 1 million people estimated last year." That is 4 million more people and rising than Obama promised in his 2009 speech. By 2022, the CBO says that number could reach 20 million Americans.

The most recent CBO updates and the findings of recent Congressional hearings confirm a sharp, uninterrupted trend-line of ObamaCare becoming increasingly expensive and decreasingly effective with each new scoring adjustment – the numbers just keep getting worse and worse.

ObamaCare means socialized, government-run, rationed healthcare that will bankrupt America!

The States MUST resist!

NO STATE HEALTH INSURANCE EXCHANGES = NO OBAMACARE
FAX THE STATES NOW!

Lie #3: "Under our plan, no federal dollars will be used to fund abortions, and federal conscience laws will remain in place." – Barack Obama, September 2009 address to joint session of Congress

The Department of Health and Human Services finalized its rule that establishes state healthcare exchanges. In direct violation of the promise of Obama's vaunted Executive Order 13535, those State exchange plans will collect from every premium payer every month a mandated $1 surcharge to fund abortions. Since it is Federal funds subsidizing the State exchanges, Obama's HHS will use accounting gimmicks to circumvent the Hyde Amendment, which prohibits direct taxpayer funding of abortion.

THIS IS ANOTHER INDISPUTABLE BLACK EYE FOR LEAVITT AND ROMNEY ON THE "STATE EXCHANGES ARE GOOD" FRONT! The State exchanges bring evil and corruption in their "lifeline" to ObamaCare – and MUST BE REFUSED!

As Senator Jim DeMint has stated regarded the grassroots campaign for repeal of ObamaCare, "This is not a partisan issue. This is an American issue... We cannot wait for the courts; the will of the people must be respected..." Conservatives should affirm these certitudes: First, legislating according to the consent of the governed is what our republic is all about. Second, ObamaCare – contrary to Democrats' expectations – has only grown more unpopular since it was passed, as its ugly details have emerged and offended. Third, ObamaCare is not an indirect, gimmicky campaign issue but a direct, concrete, firable offense the president and Democrats in Congress committed against our will and in plain view."

Former Democrat Rep. Bart Stupak of Michigan made a deal with Obama over the issue of coerced religious conscience in 2010, refusing to vote for ObamaCare until Obama included a "ban" on funding abortion, but Obama lied then – and he and his administration continue to lie about ObamaCare's mandatory Federal funding of abortion with taxpayer money now.

So now, TAXPAYERS are going to be FORCED by the millions into ObamaCare against their will, and FORCED to pay for abortion against their will.

Unless...

STOP OBAMACARE IN ITS TRACKS – FAX THE STATES TODAY!

Remember what Nancy Pelosi said about having to "pass the bill so that you can find out what is in it"? It turns out that was probably the truest thing said about this monstrosity!

I'll be honest with you, after two long years of fighting against this monstrosity, I never dreamed we would find a weapon this potentially lethal to defeat ObamaCare. Frankly, I am a bit chagrined that it took this long to find such a major, damaging loophole in implementation. But weeding through 2,000 plus pages of sloppy language, manipulations and downright creepy coercions – all designed to force our compliance while obfuscating the horrible truths about socialized medicine – is one heck of an onerous task.

Fortunately, the work was apparently just as daunting to the Obama-cons and Pelosi-bots who, in their quest to shove ObamaCare down our throats, forgot to check their own work for errors and omissions. And oh my, what a major omission they made!

Again, if the States REFUSE to create Insurance Exchanges, the Administration has NO WAY to fund the implementation of ObamaCare.

This is a major strategy YOU NEED TO GET YOUR STATE TO PURSUE! Now we know how to stop ObamaCare, no matter how corrupt, spineless and craven a Republican-majority Congress or a Mitt Romney administration may prove to be. Our task now is to fax our State officials, enlighten them to Pelosi's massive mistake and demand that our States flatly REFUSE to establish health insurance exchanges. IT REALLY IS THIS SIMPLE.

THE CONGRESSIONAL FUNDING AUTHORIZATION IS NOT IN THE LAW. IF THE STATES WILL HOLD FIRM, OBAMACARE CAN BE KILLED! FAX YOUR STATE NOW! MAKE SURE YOUR STATE REFUSES OR REVOKES ANY HEALTH INSURANCE EXCHANGE!

[NO STATE HEALTH INSURANCE EXCHANGES = NO OBAMACARE
FAX THE STATES NOW!](#)

The problem is, many States think they are going to get a pot of Federal gold to fund these "State exchanges" and help take enrollees off their Medicare rosters. Guess what? Just the opposite! Cost estimates are skyrocketing, there's NO MONEY (just deficit spending): they are (surprise, surprise) already running BILLIONS and BILLIONS over budget in Obama Funny Money!

In a recent budget hearing, the Republican chairman of the U.S. House tax-writing committee questioned why Obama administration spending estimates for State insurance subsidies for the exchanges were up by $111 billion from a year ago.

Obama's fiscal 2013 budget request, released Feb. 13, projected that subsidies for low-income and working-class people to buy individual policies through the State exchanges would total $478 billion through 2021. But the administration pegged the cost at $367 billion over the same period in its fiscal 2012 budget proposal.

Kathleen Sebelius of HHS could not explain the huge increase, saying the estimate appears in the Treasury Department's budget. According to Congressional experts, the increase "cannot be explained by legislative changes or new economic assumptions, and therefore must reflect substantial changes in underlying assumptions" about the way the subsidies would work. Or is that NOT work?

STOP OBAMACARE IN ITS TRACKS – FAX THE STATES TODAY!

Ranking members on both sides of the aisle queried whether the Obama administration believes insurance premiums would be more expensive than Treasury's earlier predictions, or if more workers would lose coverage through their employers than expected.

Medicaid systems, meanwhile, are in disarray. The exchange subsidies and Medicaid are related because people who seek insurance through the exchanges will be automatically enrolled in Medicaid if they earn poverty-level wages or are unemployed. Welcome to the ObamaCare fast track to universal coverage / single payer / 100% government run socialist healthcare!

Changes Congress has made to the healthcare law since it was enacted in 2010 were supposed to militate against this pressure, and contain Medicaid enrollment and costs. But Kentucky, New Hampshire, Kansas and Louisiana have moved aggressively toward mandatory managed care during the past six months in order to address rapidly expanding state Medicaid budget burdens. Other states, including Florida and Georgia, are poised to move quickly down the same path. These dramatic policy shifts in the name of "integration" and cost savings are already causing major controversy and public outcry, provider and service disruptions, and reductions in quality of care. THERE IS NO TIME TO WASTE! YOU NEED TO TELL THE STATES – JUST SAY NO; REFUSE STATE EXCHANGES – STOP OBAMACARE COLD!

Dr. Coburn Applauds Governor Fallin's Decision Regarding Obamacare

(WASHINGTON, D.C.) – U.S. Senator Tom Coburn, M.D. (R-OK) released the following statement today regarding Governor Mary Fallin's announcement that Oklahoma will not institute a health care exchange nor expand Medicaid under the Patient's Protection and Affordable Care Act.

"I applaud Governor Fallin's decision. Obamacare's Medicaid expansion and exchange would have, in the long run, hurt Oklahoma patients by increasing their costs, reducing their choices and placing an unsustainable fiscal burden on our state," said Dr. Coburn.

Dr. Coburn Calls Federal Student Financial Aid Program 'Welfare for the Wealthy'

New study confirms high-income earners could receive a windfall in federal aid

(WASHINGTON, D.C.) – U.S. Senator Tom Coburn, M.D. (R-OK) released the following statement today regarding a new study by the New America Foundation entitled "Safety Net or Windfall?" that exposes costly flaws in the federal Income Based Repayment (IBR) program, which was expanded by Obamacare. Congress created the IBR program in 2007 to help borrowers who struggle most to repay their federal student loans in their first years out of college by limiting payments to a percentage of their income, then discharging any balance after a certain number of payments.

New America Foundation's analysis shows that, if left unchanged, the IBR program will be a windfall for the well-off while providing scant help to the less fortunate. For example, while low-income borrowers will see "minimal new benefits" under IBR, a law school graduate with a starting salary of $70,000 could have $100,000 in debt discharged.

"While well-intentioned, the IBR program is yet another example of a program providing government assistance to those who do not need it, and paying for it with the taxes of the less fortunate. As I noted in my recent report 'Subsidies of the Rich and Famous,' providing welfare to the wealthy undermines aid programs for those who need them the most while burdening future generations with senseless debt," Dr. Coburn said.

"Taxpayers need to ask hard questions about not just the equity of programs like IBR but also their effectiveness. Throughout government we see this principle at work: The best way to make something expensive is for government to make it affordable. That principle is particularly true in two areas of the economy – health care and education. Government's attempts to control college costs have caused those costs to skyrocket by creating an incentive for colleges and university to increase tuition along with so-called federal aid," Dr. Coburn said.

Obamacare enriched the terms of the IBR program by reducing payments to 10 percent of a borrower's income and discharging any remaining loan balance after 20 years of payments. The enriched version of IBR could become available to borrowers as early as this year if pending regulations are finalized.

"Government welfare for the well-off is unacceptable at a time when we are drowning in debt," said Senator Tom Coburn. "I commend the New America Foundation for drawing attention to a flawed student aid policy that, if left unchanged, will provide huge financial windfalls to people who are among the most financially well-off graduates in today's job market. It's time for Congress to reform this program."

Congressman Frank Lucas Reacts to Supreme Court's Decision to Uphold ObamaCare

Washington D.C. – Congressman Frank Lucas today made the following statement after the Supreme Court of the United States reached the decision to uphold President Obama's Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, commonly referred to as ObamaCare.

"I am disappointed by the Supreme Court's decision to uphold the president's health care law," said Lucas. "Americans have spoken loudly in opposition to this unworkable law, and it is discouraging the court has found it constitutional. Families should have the freedom to make their own health care decisions, and ObamaCare takes that freedom away, while in-turn costing our nation trillions of dollars without addressing our health care problems.

"I will continue to work with my colleagues in the House of Representatives to fully repeal the law and enact reforms to our nation's health care system that protect Americans' access to health care. We need to refocus our efforts to make efficient and cost effective changes to the system, while also ensuring health care treatments are never rationed by government officials."

Lucas Votes for Passage of H.R. 6079, the Repeal of Obamacare Act

Washington, D.C. – Congressman Frank Lucas today joined his colleagues in the House of Representatives in voting for passage of H.R. 6079, the Repeal of Obamacare Act. This legislation repeals the Patient Protection Affordable Care Act of 2010, and it was passed in the House today with a 244 to 185 vote.

"I am pleased this legislation to repeal the president's health care law passed the House today," said Lucas. "This vote reassures my constituents in the Third District of Oklahoma that we remain committed to real health care reform and we will not stand for the president's flawed law.

"Americans have spoken loud and clear in opposition to Obamacare, which drives up health care costs. I will continue to work with leaders of Congress to repeal and replace Obamacare with commonsense reforms that will lower the cost of health care, and allow patients the right to choose a plan that best fits their needs."

REMARKS BY PRESIDENT OBAMA
AND PRESIDENT CLINTON
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Waldorf Astoria Hotel
New York, New York

8:40 P.M. EDT

PRESIDENT CLINTON: Thank you. (Applause.) Thank you very much. I am the warm-up act for the President. (Laughter.) And I will attempt to bring him on while you're still warm. (Laughter.)

I want to thank Eric Schneiderman for his lucid statement of the case of what's at stake in this election, and for his exceptional service to the state of New York. Thank you, Assemblyman Keith Wright, and thank you, Syracuse Mayor Stephanie Miner, for co-chairing this dinner. And, Representative Carolyn Maloney, thank you very much for your friendship and everything you've done. (Applause.) And I believe on his last day as chairman of the New York State Democratic Party -- thank you, Jay Jacobs, for being one of the best Democratic chairmen in the entire nation. (Applause.)

I want to thank my longtime friend, Jon Bon Jovi, for performing and for always being there for us. (Applause.)

Now, here's what I want to say to you. Most of my life now has nothing to do with politics. You know that. I work on my foundation; I work around the world; I work in America. I work with Democrats and Republicans and independents, and half the time I don't know who I'm working with, politically. But I do spend two hours a day still studying the economic trends around the world and studying what is going on in America. And I care about the long-term debt of the country a lot. Remember me? I'm the only guy that gave you four surplus budgets out of the eight I sent. (Applause.) So I hope what I say to you will have some weight, because I want you to say it to everybody you see between now and November.

I don't think it's important to reelect the President; I think it is essential to reelect the President -- (applause) -- if we want this country to have the kind of future that our children and grandchildren deserve. And here's why.

When I left office, we returned to the trickle-down policies -- big tax cuts, mostly for people of my income group -- I love saying this because I never had any money until I got out of the White House. (Laughter.) Maybe that's why I don't mind paying those taxes -- since I never had it before I don't know what it was like. (Laughter.)

And we doubled our debt of the country again. And then, after totally anemic growth for seven years and eight months, on the day before the financial collapse, median family income was $2,000 lower than it was the day I left office, while the cost of health care had gone up three times the rate of inflation, college twice the rate of inflation.

Then all of a sudden, September 15th comes and goes and poof! The good news was for President Obama is that he was elected President on September 15, 2008. He's the only person in the history of the country ever to be elected President before the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November. (Laughter.)

The bad news is he was elected President on September 15, 2008 -- (laughter) -- in the teeth of the worst recession since the Great Depression, a financial collapse of enormous proportion. In the last 500 years, such financial collapses have taken on average five to 10 years to get over -- and when they're deep and big and accompanied by mortgage collapse, almost always 10 years.

He set about to try to keep his original dream, to return broad-based prosperity, to return the reality of the American Dream to our country, and to do it in a way that made a world with more partners and fewer adversaries. And he did it under unimaginably difficult circumstances -- 800,000 jobs were lost the month he was sworn in as President. And it is my opinion that he has performed extremely well under very, very difficult circumstances. (Applause.) And I want to tell you why. (Applause.)

So he set about to do what was necessary to prevent a financial collapse again, to put a floor under the recession and to begin to create jobs again, to save a million or more state and local jobs of teachers and health care workers and people who work for fire and police departments. He set about to bring American manufacturing back, to make America a leading nation in the green energy revolution -- which is sweeping the globe and which only the American Republican Party seems to deny is necessary.

And he set about to reform health care, knowing it was a moral, a health, and an economic issue because we are now spending almost 18 percent of our income on health care. None of our major competitors is over 11.8 percent. That's $1 trillion a year that could be going to pay-raises for the middle class. It could be going for small businesses to hire new people.

And he did it while trying to make college more affordable, because we had dropped from first to 15th in the world in the last decade in the percentage of our young adults graduating with degrees. And while doing that, he presented a plan to deal with the long-term debt of the country, understanding that when you have a total financial collapse -- interest rates are zero, no private demand, no private investment -- you can't have austerity now.

You remember those surplus budgets? They came about for three reasons -- spending control, adequate revenues and economic growth. If you do not have economic growth, no amount of austerity will balance the budget, because you will always have revenues go down more than you can possibly cut spending. (Applause.)

And so what he did was to say growth today, restraint in a big way tomorrow; here's my 10-year budget. So growth in jobs today, build the economy, then take the burden of the debt off our children's future, and avoid the exploding interest rates and the declining living standards that it would impose on their future.

So where are we? Oh, and by the way, he offered a politics of cooperation. He said, you Republicans start off with that individual mandate. We'll do health care reform that way. All of a sudden, they weren't for it anymore. He said, let's have a bipartisan deficit reduction commission. And when it came to a vote in the Senate, all the Republicans who co-sponsored the bill were forced to vote against it by their party. It's the first I ever saw somebody sponsor a bill and vote against it.

And I could give you lots and lots of other -- he said, let's have an infrastructure bank so we can have private and public capital like other countries do. It's a great return on investment. It's always been a bipartisan area. Once he was for it, they were all against it. Besides, it might put somebody to work and help him get reelected. (Laughter.)

So where are we in spite of that? In the last 27 months, this economy has produced 4.3 million private sector jobs. (Applause.) That is about what it produced on a monthly basis during my two terms, coming back. Why did the numbers show 3.7 million? Because the Congress refused to pass his bill to send money to states and localities to keep the teachers on the job, to keep the firefighters and the police officers on the job. I was in Wisconsin a couple of days ago -- 73 percent of the school districts have laid teachers off.

That's the austerity policy. It isn't good economics. The Obama policy is. That 4.3 million private sector jobs is -- listen to this -- 60 percent more private jobs than came into this economy in the seven years and eight months of the previous administration before the financial meltdown. And you need to tell people that. (Applause.)

And what happened with manufacturing? It's growing again for the first time since the '90s. There was an article in the paper today that said, oh, we're going to have 2 or 3 million manufacturing jobs within three more years. In seven or eight or nine areas, jobs flooding back into this country.

What happened in clean energy? Governor Romney goes out to a company that had a loan that didn't work out and says, oh, this is a whole bust. Here's what I know. We ranked first or second in the world in every major scientific survey in the capacity to generate electricity from the sun and the wind. During the worst of the meltdown, clean-energy jobs grew twice as fast as the rest of the economy, paid 35 percent more.

This weekend, Germany became the first country in history to generate 22 gigawatts of electricity from the sun. That doesn't mean much to you, so I'll tell you in plain language what it means. That's as much as 20 big nuclear power plants. (Applause.) And they have generated over 300,000 new jobs out of it. They're a fourth our size, and only half as capable to generate solar energy. If we did what they did, that's a million jobs alone. Now, that's what President Obama has done on the jobs front. (Applause.)

And where he could cooperate with people -- the automakers, management and labor -- they restructured the auto industry and what happened? We have 80,000 more people working making cars today than we did the day he took office, and we saved 1.5 million jobs that would have gone right down the tubes if those two companies had failed. (Applause.) America is back in the car business. (Applause.)

And then labor, management, the environmental groups and the government got together and agreed on a schedule to raise the car mileage standards, to double them, and guess what -- it will create 150,000 new high-tech jobs.

In health care -- just before you roll over and play dead on this issue, let me just give you two or three issues -- facts here. For the last few years, for the first time in 50 years, health care inflation has been at 4 percent. Hasn't been that low in 50 years. It's been killing people, economically. (Applause.) Americans got $1.3 billion in refunds on their insurance policy -- because you've got to spend 85 percent of your premium on your health care now -- and that's not counting California, they're not reported in yet -- 2.6 million young people 26 years of age or younger are on their parent's policy now, all because of the health care bill the President signed. (Applause.)

I spend a lot of time with people in the health care business -- with doctors and people who manage medical practices, with people who manage hospitals, and people who manage insurance plans. I don't know anybody that wants to repeal Obamacare. Not anybody. I don't know anybody who doesn't believe that we shouldn't start paying for performance, not for procedure in health care, and improve our quality and bring our costs in line with our competitors. And that's what people in the health care business are doing today because that law passed. (Applause.)

And finally, never a day goes by I don't see some article about the burden of student loans. But when President Obama's student loan reform is fully implemented, the cost of the loans will go down and no one will ever have to drop out of college again because of the cost. Because now everybody will be able to pay their loans back as a small, fixed percentage of their income for up to 20 years. Do you understand what that means? That one bill can take us back to number one in the world in college graduates again because nobody -- nobody -- will ever have to drop out again. (Applause.)

And his plan to reduce the debt has extraordinary spending restraint -- including in Medicare -- has modest tax increases, and is phased in as we grow the economy.

Now, his opponent, who says that he's got a better idea, was the governor of the state that was 47th in the country in job growth. He promised that if elected he would grow the economy and reduce the debt, and when he left office the debt of the state was going up. And his plan -- his plan is to go back to the Bush program, except on steroids. (Laughter.) Cut out everything that helps middle-class people, cut out everything that helps poor people work their way to the middle class.

And all of the objective analyses, the non-partisan analyses, say that every Republican plan, including the nominee for the President's plan, would add $1 trillion to $2 trillion to what the debt is going to be over the next 10 years if we don't do anything. And all of the objective plans say that if the President's plan were implemented, it would reduce the debt by several trillion dollars over what it's going to be if we don't do anything.

But he's got the order right, President Obama does. Growth now; restraint later. The Romney/Republican plan is austerity and more unemployment now, and blow the lid off later, just at the time when we'll be worried about high interest rates.

What's the difference here? Shared prosperity versus continued austerity and high unemployment. A politics of cooperation versus constant conflict and divide and conquer.

Listen, this is a big, clear election. Also, for me, it's important to say, in my opinion, he's done an amazing job making our country more secure, more safe, more peaceful, and building a world with more partners and fewer adversaries. And that is very, very important. (Applause.)

And he's had to get all this done while people as recently as last week were still saying he wasn't born in America. (Laughter.) He's had to get all this done with a House of Representatives that had one of the tea party members claim that 78 to 81 members of the Democratic caucus were members of the Communist Party. And neither the presidential nominee, nor any of the leaders rebuked him for saying that. This is not the 1950s. At least Joe McCarthy could skate on the fact that there was one or two living Communists walking around. (Laughter.) Nobody has seen a Communist in over a decade. (Laughter and applause.)

No criticism is too vicious and too fact-free. You have to take the facts out there -- take the facts on the economy, the facts on health care, the facts on energy, the facts on education. And the fact is we've got an economic policy that has a real chance to bring America back. Why do you think long-term interest rates -- remember the Republicans said, oh, that Obama, he's such a big spender, we're going to have a weak dollar and interest rates are going to go through the roof. You know what the 10-year Treasury note interest rate was today? One-quarter of 1 percent. We ought to all go buy one. They're giving away the money. (Laughter.)

Now, you're laughing. But why are they doing that? Because people believe America has a solid economic strategy for the long run. And who would have ever thought that the Republicans would embrace the austerity and jobless policies of what they used to derisively call "old Europe." I never thought I'd live to breathe and see, here they are saying, let's do the eurozone's economic policy -- they got 11 percent unemployment; we can get up there if we work at it. (Laughter.)

We're laughing, folks, this is serious. Too much of politics is fact-free. Just think about the world you want your children and your grandchildren to live in. Think about what the 21st century can be. Remember there is nothing wrong with America that can't be fixed, and our inherent advantages including our diversity, our relative youth, the strength of our system are there. But you got to have the right captain of the ship. And I am depending on you to take care of future generations by making sure that that captain is President Barack Obama.

Bring him on. (Applause.)

PRESIDENT OBAMA: I love New York! (Applause.) Thank you! Well, thank you, everybody. (Applause.) Thank you. Thank you so much. Thank you. (Applause.) Everybody have a seat.

AUDIENCE: Four more years!

PRESIDENT OBAMA: Thank you. I plan on getting four more years -- because of you. (Applause.)

Let me just say some thank-yous at the front here. First of all, you've got an outstanding Attorney General -- please give Eric Schneiderman a big round of applause. (Applause.) He is doing the right thing on behalf of consumers and working people all across this great state and having an influence all across the country.

I want to thank my dear friend, Jon Bon Jovi, who has -- (applause) -- been a great supporter for a long, long time. I have to say that the only thing worse than following Jon is following Jon and Bill Clinton. (Laughter.)

I want to acknowledge -- Congresswoman Carolyn Maloney is here. Where is Carolyn? (Applause.) Thank you, Carolyn. Party Chair Jacobs, thanks for the great work you've done. I want to thank all of you who helped to make this event possible tonight.

And most of all, I want to thank the guy behind me here. President Clinton and I had a chance to talk over dinner before we came out, and we talk about a lot of things. We talk about basketball. (Laughter.) We talk about our daughters, and agree that you can't beat daughters. (Applause.) Sons who are out there, we love you, too -- (laughter) -- but I'm just saying, we bond on that front. We both agree that we have improved our gene pool because we married outstanding women. (Applause.)

But whatever the topic, whatever the subject, what I was reminded of as I was talking to President Clinton is just how incredibly passionate he is about this country and the people in it. You don't talk to Bill without hearing at least 30 stories about extraordinary Americans who are involved in clean energy, or starting a whole new project to teach kids math, or figuring out how to build some new energy-efficient building, or you name it. And it's that passion and connection that he has to the American people that is infectious. And it's a curiosity and a love for people that is now transforming the world.

And so I could not be prouder to have called him President. I could not be prouder to know him as a friend. And I could not be more grateful for him taking the time to be here tonight. (Applause.) And I thank him for putting up with a very busy Secretary of State. (Laughter and applause.)

Now, the reason I'm here tonight is not just because I need your help. It's because the country needs your help. If you think about why we came together back in 2008, it wasn't about me. It wasn't even necessarily just about the Democratic Party. It was about a common set of values that we held dear; a set of beliefs that we had about America -- a belief that if you're willing to work hard, in this country you should be able to make it. You should be able to find a job that pays a living wage. You should be able to own a home, send your kids to college, retire with dignity and respect, not go bankrupt when you get sick; that everybody in this country -- regardless of what you look like, where you come from, whether you're black, white, gay, straight, Hispanic, disabled, not -- doesn't matter, if you're willing to put in the effort this is a place where you make dreams happen. And by you putting in that effort, not only do you do well for yourself but you build the country in the process.

And we had seen that those values were eroding, a sense that that bedrock compact that we make with each other was starting to diminish. We had seen a surplus, a historic surplus, wasted away on tax cuts for folks who didn't need them and weren't even asking for them. Suddenly surpluses turned to deficits. We had seen two wars fought on a credit card. We had seen a recklessness of a few almost bring the entire system to collapse. And there was a sense that, although a few of us were doing really, really well, that you had a growing number of folks who were struggling just to get by no matter how hard they worked.

So what we set out to do in 2008 was reclaim that basic American promise. And it wasn't easy, and many of you who supported me certainly -- you guys didn't do it because it was easy. When you support a guy named Barack Hussein Obama for the presidency you know that's not a sure thing. (Laughter.) But you did it because you sensed that the country was ready for change.

Now, we didn't know at the time -- we knew that there had been a decade of problems, that since this man had left office we had been going in the wrong direction. We didn't realize how this would culminate in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression. As Bill said, the month I was sworn in, 800,000 jobs lost. We had lost 3 million before the election had even taken place.

But we didn't give up. We didn't quit, because that's not what the American people do. And so all across this country, you had folks who just dug in. They focused on what was necessary. And I do believe we implemented the right policies. When folks said that we should let Detroit go bankrupt, we said, no, we're not going to let over a million jobs go. We're not going to let an iconic industry waste away. (Applause.)

And so we brought workers together and management, and now GM is back on top, and we've seen more growth in the U.S. auto industry and more market share than we've seen in a very, very long time. And manufacturing is coming back. (Applause.) Even though that decision wasn't popular, we made the right decision.

We made the right decision in starting to free up credit again so that companies could borrow and small businesses could keep their doors open. We made the right decision when it came to ensuring that all across this country states got help to keep teachers and firefighters and police officers on the job. We made the right decision in making sure that we used this opportunity to rebuild big chunks of America -- our roads and our bridges and our rail lines.

So we made a lot of good policy decisions. But the reason we came back is ultimately because of the American people, because of their resilience and their strength. They made it happen. They decided, you know what, maybe I'll retrain for school. A small business decided, I'm going to keep my doors open even though it's very hard to make payroll right now.

One of the great privileges of being President is you go to every corner of the country and you see people from every walk of life, and it makes you optimistic about the American people. Even over these last three and a half years, as tough as things have been, it made me more optimistic about the American people, that we have all the ingredients for success.

It's because of them that we've seen more than 4 million jobs created, more than 800,000 jobs just this year alone. It's because of them that we're seeing more manufacturing jobs coming back than any time since the 1990s.

But -- and this is where you come in -- all that work that we've done, all that effort, that stands to be reversed because we've had an opposition that has had a fundamentally different vision of where we should take America. They had it from the day I was sworn in. They made a determination that politics would trump what was needed to move this country forward. And they have tried to put sand in the gears in Congress ever since.

And now they've got a nominee who is expressing support for an agenda that would reverse the progress we've made and take us back to the exact same policies that got us into this mess in the first place. And the reason we're here today is because we're not going back. We're going forward. (Applause.) We have worked too hard and too long to right the ship and move us in the right direction. We're not going backwards, we're going forwards. (Applause.) That's what we're doing, New York. And we're going to do it with your help! (Applause.)

Now, the reason that they think they may be able to pull this off is because things are still tough. There are a lot of folks still hurting out there; too many folks still looking for work, too many people whose homes are still underwater. So we know we've got more to do. That's why I'm running again, because our job isn't finished yet. And this election in some ways is going to be even more consequential than 2008, because the choices are going to be starker this time.

Keep in mind, when I ran in 2008, I was running against a Republican who believed in climate change, believed in immigration reform, believed in campaign finance reform, had some history of working across the aisle. We had profound disagreements, but even during the midst of the financial crisis there was an agreement of the need for action -- to create jobs and create growth early.

We don't have that this time. My opponent, Governor Romney, is a patriotic American. He has seen enormous financial success, and God bless him for that. He has got a beautiful family. But his vision of how you move this country forward is what Bill Clinton said -- the same agenda as the previous administration, except on steroids. So it's not enough just to maintain tax cuts for the wealthy, we're going to double tax cuts. We're going to do even more of the same. It's not enough just to roll back the regulations that we put in place to make sure that, for example, the financial system is transparent and working effectively so we don't have taxpayer bailouts anymore, we're going to do even more to eliminate regulations that have kept our air clean and our water clean and protected our kids for 20, 30 years.

When you look at the budget that they've put forward, they're not just talking about rolling back Obamacare; they're talking about rolling back the New Deal. (Laughter.) And that's not an exaggeration.

And so there's an enormous amount at stake. And we're going to have to make sure that in this election, we are describing clearly what's at stake. And we shouldn't be afraid of this debate, because we've got the better argument. We have got the better argument.

It's not just a matter of being able to say the change that we brought about in lifting the auto industry back, that's something we're proud of. It's not just the 4.3 million jobs. It's not just the fact that 2.5 million young people have health insurance that didn't have it before. It's not just the fact that, as a consequence of our policies, millions of young people are getting Pell grants and have the capacity to go to college who didn't have it before. It's not just the track record I've amassed over the last three-and-a-half years that I am proud of. But it's also the fact that when you look at our history, America has not grown, it has not prospered, it has not succeeded with a philosophy that says, "you're all on your own."

That's not how we built this country. The reason we became an economic superpower is because for all our individual initiative, all our entrepreneurship, all our belief in personal responsibility, despite all those things, what we've also understood is there's certain things we do better together. Creating a public school system that works so that everybody gets educated -- we understand that. (Applause.)

The first Republican President understanding we built a Transcontinental Railroad to stitch this country together -- he understood that there's certain things we do better together. Investments in the National Academy of Sciences, investment in land grant colleges. Eisenhower building the Interstate Highway System. My grandfather and his generation going to college on the GI Bill. Building the Hoover Dam, building the Golden Gate Bridge -- these things we did together. And it created a platform where everybody had a chance, everybody got a fair shot, everybody did their fair share, everybody played by the same rules.

If you look at our history, the reason why we have the best capital markets in the world, the reason why Wall Street is the center of finance -- because we had rules in place that made us the most transparent, where investors could trust if they put their money there they weren't going to be cheated. You had a strong SEC. You had FDIC. You had an entire infrastructure that allowed our capital markets to thrive. That's been a strength; not a weakness.

Throughout our history, there have been certain things that we have to do together. And what was true in the past is true now as well. So that's what's at stake in this election. I'm not going to go back to the days when suddenly our young people can't afford to go to college just to pay for tax cuts for me and Bill Clinton.

We're not going to go back to the day where 30 million people can't get health insurance despite working two jobs; where young people can't stay on their parent's policies, or seniors suddenly find prescription drugs more expensive again. We're not going to go back to the days when suddenly women don't have preventive care, or we eliminate funding for Planned Parenthood. We're not going back to those days. I want my daughters to have the same opportunities as our sons. And I want our women to have the same ability to control their health care decisions as anybody else. We're not going backwards. (Applause.)

We're not going to go back to the days when you couldn't serve in our military and at the same time admit who it is that you loved. (Applause.) We're moving forward with an agenda of dignity and respect for everybody.

We're not going to go back to the days when folks thought somehow there was a conflict between economic growth and looking after our environment and good stewardship for the next generation. We're not going back to those days. (Applause.)

But we're going to have to fight for it. This is not going to be an easy race. Because of the Citizens United decision we're seeing hundreds of millions of dollars spent, unprecedented numbers. We haven't seen this kind of spending. There's never been this amount of negative spending before. There was a brief -- a newspaper just printed somebody had evaluated negative ads -- 70 percent of our ads have been positive; 70 percent of their ads have been negative. And I suspect that ratio could become even more pronounced as the weeks go by.

And as I said, folks out there are still anxious and they're still scared about the future. And so what the other side is counting on is fear and frustration, that hat in and of itself is going to be good enough -- because they're sure not offering any new ideas. All they're offering is the same old ideas that didn't work then and won't work now.

Even when it comes to their big issue of deficits and debt, as President Clinton just mentioned, the truth is, is that the two Presidents over the last 30 years, 40 years, who've had the lowest increases in government spending, you're looking at them right here. (Applause.) They're on this stage. They are on this stage. (Applause.)

And the agenda that we've put forward -- which says let's put people to work right now rebuilding our roads and our bridges and putting teachers back in the classroom to accelerate growth now at the same time as we couple it with long-term spending restraint -- that's a recipe that works. We've seen it work before. We saw it work in the '90s. There's no reason why it wouldn't work now. And that will allow us to make sure that we can still invest in our future.

As I travel around the world -- and I know President Clinton does, as well -- you talk to people; nothing gets me more frustrated when I hear sometimes reports in the press about America's decline, because around the world there's nobody who wouldn't trade places with us. (Applause.) We've got the best universities, the most productive workers, the best entrepreneurs, the best scientists. We've got all the ingredients we need to make it work. Now we just need the best politics. Now we just need the best politics. (Applause.) And that's what this election is going to be all about.

So the bottom line is this: All of you, you're going to have to work not just as hard as we did in 2008, we're going to need you to work harder. One of the things we learned in 2008 is for all the negative ads, for all the rough-and-tumble of politics, for all the distortions and just plain nonsense that you sometimes hear, when folks come together, when citizens come together and insist that it's time for a change, guess what -- change happens.

And what was true then is just as true now. And I want you guys to know that it is true that my hair is grayer -- I haven't quite caught up to Bill yet -- (laughter) -- but I'm getting there. Those of us who have this awesome privilege of holding this office, we end up showing a few dings and dents along the way. That's inevitable. But I am more determined now than I was in 2008. (Applause.) I am more inspired by America now than I even was then, because I've seen more of this country, and I've seen its strength and I've seen its passion. I've seen what's possible.

I've seen the changes we've already brought. And it shouldn't make us complacent, but it should make us confident about the changes that we can bring about in the future. (Applause.) It means that we're going to be able to do even more to double clean energy. It means we're going to be able to do even more to bring back manufacturing. We're going to be able to do more to put people back to work. We're going to be able to make sure that we're a nation of laws and a nation of immigrants.

All those things on our checklist that we haven't yet gotten done we will get done. But we're only going to get it done because of you. I'm only going to get it done because of you. (Applause.)

You know, I used to say that I'm not a perfect man -- Michelle will tell you -- and I'll never be a perfect President. No President is. But I promised you I would always tell you what I thought, I'd always tell you where I stood, and I'd wake up every single day just thinking about how I can make the lives of the American people a little bit better, and I'd work as hard as I knew how to make that happen. And I have kept that promise. I have kept that promise because I still believe in you. And I hope you still believe in me. (Applause.)

Because if you're willing to join me this time out, and knock on doors, and make phone calls, and get out there and talk to your friends and talk to your neighbors, I promise you we will finish what we started in 2008. (Applause.) We will not go backward. We will go forward. And we will remind the entire world just why it is the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

Thank you, New York. I love you. God bless you. God bless America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
TO THE WHITE HOUSE PRESS CORPS

James S. Brady Press Briefing Room

1:27 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, everybody.

MR. CARNEY: Looks like there's a surprise guest here.

THE PRESIDENT: Jay tells me that you guys have been missing me. (Laughter.) So I thought I'd come by and just say hello.

Before I take some questions, let me just mention, since Medicare has been a little bit in the news lately, I thought it would be useful to start with some actual facts and news about the program.

Today, HHS announced that thanks to the health care law that we passed, nearly 5.4 million seniors with Medicare have saved over $4.1 billion on prescription drugs. That's an average savings of more than $700 per person. This year alone, 18 million seniors with Medicare have taken advantage of new preventive care benefits like a mammogram or other cancer screening at no extra cost.

These are big deals for a lot of Americans, and it represents two important ways that the improvements we made as part of the Affordable Care Act has strengthened Medicare and helped seniors everywhere get better care at less cost. That's been our goal from the very beginning, and I'm going to continue to do everything I can to make sure that we keep our seniors healthy and the American people healthy.

So with that, let me start off with Jim Kuhnenn.

Q Thank you, Mr. President. Thank you for being here. You're no doubt aware of the comments that the Missouri Senate candidate, Republican Todd Akin, made on rape and abortion. I wondered if you think those views represent the views of the Republican Party in general. They've been denounced by your own rival and other Republicans. Are they an outlier or are they representative?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, let me, first of all, say the views expressed were offensive. Rape is rape. And the idea that we should be parsing and qualifying and slicing what types of rape we're talking about doesn't make sense to the American people and certainly doesn't make sense to me.

So what I think these comments do underscore is why we shouldn't have a bunch of politicians, a majority of whom are men, making health care decisions on behalf of women.

And so, although these particular comments have led Governor Romney and other Republicans to distance themselves, I think the underlying notion that we should be making decisions on behalf of women for their health care decisions - - or qualifying forcible rape versus non-forcible rape -- I think those are broader issues, and that is a significant difference in approach between me and the other party.

But I don't think that they would agree with the Senator from Missouri in terms of his statement, which was way out there.

Q Should he drop out of the race?

THE PRESIDENT: He was nominated by the Republicans in Missouri. I'll let them sort that out.

Nancy Cordes.

Q Yes, Mr. President, thank you. As you know, your opponent recently accused you of waging a campaign filled with "anger and hate." And you told Entertainment Tonight that anyone who attends your rallies can see that they're not angry- or hate-filled affairs. But in recent weeks, your campaign has suggested repeatedly, without proof, that Mr. Romney might be hiding something in his tax returns. They have suggested that Mr. Romney might be a felon for the way that he handed over power of Bain Capital. And your campaign and the White House have declined to condemn an ad by one of your top supporters that links Mr. Romney to a woman's death from cancer. Are you comfortable with the tone that's being set by your campaign? Have you asked them to change their tone when it comes to defining Mr. Romney?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, first of all, I'm not sure all those characterizations that you laid out there were accurate. For example, nobody accused Mr. Romney of being a felon.

And I think that what is absolutely true is, if you watch me on the campaign trail, here's what I'm talking about. I'm talking about how we put Americans back to work. And there are sharp differences between myself and Mr. Romney in terms of how we would do that. He thinks that if we roll back Wall Street reform, roll back the Affordable Care Act -- otherwise known affectionately as Obamacare -- that somehow people are going to be better off.

I think that if we are putting teachers back to work and rebuilding America and reducing our deficit in a balanced way, that's how you put people back to work. That is a substantive difference. That's what I talk about on the campaign.

When it comes to taxes, Governor Romney thinks that we should be cutting taxes by another $5 trillion, and folks like me would benefit disproportionately from that. I think that it makes a lot more sense and have put out a detailed plan for a balanced approach that combines tough spending cuts with asking people like me -- millionaires and billionaires -- to do a little bit more. That's a substantive difference in this campaign.

Whether it's on wind energy, or how we would approach funding education, those are the topics that we're spending a lot of time talking about in the campaign.

Now, if you look at the overall trajectory of our campaign and the ads that I've approved and are produced by my campaign, you'll see that we point out sharp differences between the candidates, but we don't go out of bounds. And when it comes to releasing taxes, that's a precedent that was set decades ago, including by Governor Romney's father. And for us to say that it makes sense to release your tax returns, as I did, as John McCain did, as Bill Clinton did, as the two President Bushes did, I don't think is in any way out of bounds.

I think that is what the American people would rightly expect -- is a sense that, particularly when we're going to be having a huge debate about how we reform our tax code and how we pay for the government that we need, I think people want to know that everybody has been playing by the same rules, including people who are seeking the highest office in the land. This is not an entitlement, being President of the United States. This is a privilege. And we've got to put ourselves before the American people to make our case.

Q Well, why not send a message to the top super PAC that's supporting you and say, I think an ad like that is out of bounds? We shouldn't be suggesting that --

THE PRESIDENT: So let's take that particular issue, as opposed to -- because you lumped in a whole bunch of other stuff that I think was entirely legitimate. I don't think that Governor Romney is somehow responsible for the death of the woman that was portrayed in that ad. But keep in mind this is an ad that I didn't approve, I did not produce, and as far as I can tell, has barely run. I think it ran once.

Now, in contrast, you've got Governor Romney creating as a centerpiece of his campaign this notion that we're taking the work requirement out of welfare, which every single person here who's looked at it says is patently false. What he's arguing is somehow we have changed the welfare requirement -- the work requirement in our welfare laws. And, in fact, what's happened was that my administration, responding to the requests of five governors, including two Republican governors, agreed to approve giving them, those states, some flexibility in how they manage their welfare rolls as long as it produced 20 percent increases in the number of people who are getting work.

So, in other words, we would potentially give states more flexibility to put more people back to work, not to take them off the work requirement under welfare. Everybody who has looked at this says what Governor Romney is saying is absolutely wrong. Not only are his super PACs running millions of dollars' worth of ads making this claim; Governor Romney himself is approving this and saying it on the stump.

So the contrast I think is pretty stark. They can run the campaign that they want, but the truth of the matter is you can't just make stuff up. That's one thing you learn as President of the United States. You get called into account.

And I feel very comfortable with the fact that when you look at the campaign we're running, we are focused on the issues and the differences that matter to working families all across America. And that's exactly the kind of debate the American people deserve.

Jake Tapper.

Q Mr. President, a couple questions. One, I'm wondering if you could comment on the recent spate of green-on-blue incidents in Afghanistan, what is being done about it, why your commanders tell you they think that there has been an uptick in this kind of violence; and second, with the economy and unemployment still the focus of so many Americans, what they can expect in the next couple months out of Washington, if anything, when it comes to any attempt to bring some more economic growth to the country.

THE PRESIDENT: On Afghanistan, obviously we've been watching with deep concern these so-called green-on-blue attacks, where you have Afghan individuals, some of whom are actually enrolled in the Afghan military, some in some cases dressing up as Afghan military or police, attacking coalition forces, including our own troops.

I just spoke today to Marty Dempsey, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who happens to be in Afghanistan. He is having intensive consultations not only with our commander, John Allen, on the ground, but also with Afghan counterparts. And I'll be reaching out to President Karzai as well -- because we've got to make sure that we're on top of this.

We are already doing a range of things, and we're seeing some success when it comes to better counterintelligence, making sure that the vetting process for Afghan troops is stronger. And we've got what's called the Guardian Angel program, to make sure that our troops aren't in isolated situations that might make them more vulnerable. But obviously we're going to have to do more, because there has been an uptick over the last 12 months on this.

Part of what's taking place is we are transitioning to Afghan security, and for us to train them effectively, we are in much closer contact -- our troops are in much closer contact with Afghan troops on an ongoing basis. And part of what we've got to do is to make sure that this model works but it doesn't make our guys more vulnerable.

In the long term, we will see fewer U.S. casualties and coalition casualties by sticking to our transition plan and making sure that we've got the most effective Afghan security force possible. But we've got to do it in a way that doesn't leave our guys vulnerable.

So we are deeply concerned about this from top to bottom. And hopefully, over the next several weeks, we'll start seeing better progress on this front.

In terms of the economy, I would love to say that when Congress comes back -- they've got a week or 10 days before they go out and start campaigning again -- that we're going to see a flurry of action. I can't guarantee that. I do think that there's some specific things they could do that would make a big difference. I'll give you a couple of examples.

First of all, just making sure that we've got what's called a continuing resolution so that we don't have any disruptions and government shutdowns over the next couple months, that's important. It appears that there's an agreement on that, but we want to make sure that that gets done.

Number two, we have put forward an idea that I think a lot of Americans think makes sense, which is we've got historically low interest rates now, and the housing market is beginning to tick back up but it's still not at all where it needs to be. There are a lot of families out there whose homes are underwater. They owe more than the house is worth because housing values dropped so precipitously, and they're having trouble refinancing.

We're going to be pushing Congress to see if they can pass a refinancing bill that puts $3,000 into the pockets of the average family who hasn't yet refinanced their mortgage. That's a big deal. That $3,000 can be used to strengthen the equity in that person's home, which would raise home values. Alternatively, that's $3,000 in people's pockets that they can spend on a new computer for their kid going back to school, or new school clothes for their kids, and so that would strengthen the economy as well.

Obviously, the biggest thing that Congress could do would be to come up with a sensible approach to reducing our deficit in ways that we had agreed to and talked about last year. And I continue to be open to seeing Congress approach this with a balanced plan that has tough spending cuts, building on the trillion dollars' worth of spending cuts that we've already made, but also asks for additional revenue from folks like me, from folks in the top 1 or 2 percent, to make sure that folks who can least afford it aren't suddenly bearing the burden, and we're providing some additional certainty to small businesses and families going forward.

Alternatively, they could go ahead and vote for a bill that we've said would definitely strengthen the economy, and that is giving everybody who's making $250,000 a year or less certainty that their taxes aren't going to go down [sic] next year. That would make a big difference.

Now, obviously the Republicans have voted that down already once. It's not likely, realistically, that they're going to bring it back up again before Election Day. But my hope is after the election, people will step back and recognize that that's a sensible way to bring down our deficit and allow us to still invest in things like education that are going to help the economy grow.

Chuck Todd.

Q Mr. President, could you update us on your latest thinking of where you think things are in Syria, and in particular, whether you envision using U.S. military, if simply for nothing else, the safe keeping of the chemical weapons, and if you're confident that the chemical weapons are safe?

I also want to follow up on an answer you just gave to Nancy. You said that one of the reasons you wanted to see Mitt Romney's tax returns was you want to see if everybody is playing by the same set of rules. That actually goes to the question she asked, which is this implication, do you think there's something Mitt Romney is not telling us in his tax returns that indicates he's not playing by the same set of rules?

THE PRESIDENT: No. There's a difference between playing by the same sets of rules and doing something illegal. And in no way have we suggested the latter. But the first disclosure, the one year of tax returns that he disclosed indicated that he used Swiss bank accounts, for example. Well, that may be perfectly legal, but I suspect if you ask the average American, do you have one and is that part of how you manage your tax obligations, they would say no. They would find that relevant information, particularly when we're going into a time where we know we're going to have to make tough choices both about spending and about taxes.

So I think the idea that this is somehow exceptional, that there should be a rationale or a justification for doing more than the very bare minimum has it backwards. I mean, the assumption should be you do what previous presidential candidates did, dating back for decades. And Governor Romney's own dad says, well, the reason I put out 10 or 12 years is because any single year might not tell you the whole story. And everybody has, I think, followed that custom ever since.

The American people have assumed that if you want to be President of the United States, that your life is an open book when it comes to things like your finances. I'm not asking him to disclose every detail of his medical records -- although we normally do that as well -- (laughter.) You know? I mean, this isn't sort of overly personal here, guys. This is pretty standard stuff. I don't think we're being mean by asking him to do what every other presidential candidate has done -- right? It's what the American people expect.

On Syria, obviously this is a very tough issue. I have indicated repeatedly that President al-Assad has lost legitimacy, that he needs to step down. So far, he hasn't gotten the message, and instead has double downed in violence on his own people. The international community has sent a clear message that rather than drag his country into civil war he should move in the direction of a political transition. But at this point, the likelihood of a soft landing seems pretty distant.

What we've said is, number one, we want to make sure we're providing humanitarian assistance, and we've done that to the tune of $82 million, I believe, so far. And we'll probably end up doing a little more because we want to make sure that the hundreds of thousands of refugees that are fleeing the mayhem, that they don't end up creating -- or being in a terrible situation, or also destabilizing some of Syria's neighbors.

The second thing we've done is we said that we would provide, in consultation with the international community, some assistance to the opposition in thinking about how would a political transition take place, and what are the principles that should be upheld in terms of looking out for minority rights and human rights. And that consultation is taking place.

I have, at this point, not ordered military engagement in the situation. But the point that you made about chemical and biological weapons is critical. That's an issue that doesn't just concern Syria; it concerns our close allies in the region, including Israel. It concerns us. We cannot have a situation where chemical or biological weapons are falling into the hands of the wrong people.

We have been very clear to the Assad regime, but also to other players on the ground, that a red line for us is we start seeing a whole bunch of chemical weapons moving around or being utilized. That would change my calculus. That would change my equation.

Q So you're confident it's somehow under -- it's safe?

THE PRESIDENT: In a situation this volatile, I wouldn't say that I am absolutely confident. What I'm saying is we're monitoring that situation very carefully. We have put together a range of contingency plans. We have communicated in no uncertain terms with every player in the region that that's a red line for us and that there would be enormous consequences if we start seeing movement on the chemical weapons front or the use of chemical weapons. That would change my calculations significantly.

All right, thank you, everybody.

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT TO BLOGHER CONFERENCE

Via Telephone

4:35 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Well, thank you. And thanks for inviting me to speak today. And Michelle says hi. I know that at some point she'll have a chance to be with all of you. And I just want to congratulate everybody on what I hear is your biggest conference yet.

Even though I couldn't be with you in person, I wanted to say thank you. As like every father, I think about the role models that are out there for my daughters -- and I worry about what they'll run into online, honestly -- so the fact that Sasha and Malia can go to places like BlogHer and find thousands of women who are writing about subjects from health to family and food and politics and careers -- it means a lot to me and it means a lot to Michelle.

Now, some of you may have heard there's an election coming up. And women's issues are front and center, as they should be. But I think the conversation has been oversimplified a little bit. I bet anyone who spends a little time at your conference would realize pretty fast that women are not a monolithic bloc, you're not an interest group. You make up more than half of our country and nearly half of our workforce -- not to mention 80 percent of my household if you count my mother-in-law.

So, for me, any discussion of the issues women face begins with my own life story and the women in my own life. There was my mom, who was a single mother who put herself through school and made sure my sister and I earned our educations, too. There was my grandmother, who worked her way up from a secretary to vice president at her local bank -- even though she hit a glass ceiling and watched men she once trained pass her by.

When Michelle and I got married and had our girls, we were giving it our all to balance raising a family and pursuing our careers, and we wished we had a machine that would let us be two places at one time. And, of course, as a father, the highlight of my day is asking my girls about their days.

So, when I think about what's been most important in my life, it's these amazing relationships that I've had with my mother and grandmother, my wife and my daughters. And what drives me when I step into the Oval Office, every decision that I make is making sure that all of our daughters -- just like all of our sons -- are growing up in a country that gives them the chance to be anything they set their minds to, and a country where more doors are open to them than were open to the previous generation.

That's why the first bill I signed was the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act -- to help protect your right to equal pay for equal work. Now I want to strengthen those protections. And that's why we've extended more loans to women-owned businesses. That's why we've cut taxes for small business owners 18 times.

I also want to keep small business taxes low in the future. That's why we've enacted education reform that's helped more than 2.3 million more young women afford to pursue higher education. And now I want to make sure even more can afford to go.

And because of the new health care reform law -- Obamacare -- I happily accept the term -- millions of young women are going to have coverage through their parent's plans. Children with preexisting conditions can't be denied insurance. Tens of millions of women with private insurance now have access to preventive care like mammograms, and are beginning to gain access to contraception at no additional cost. And pretty soon, insurance companies will no longer be able to deny you coverage because of preexisting conditions like cancer or pregnancy, or charge you higher premiums just for being a woman. I'm not going to give any ground to those who would deny women their own health care choices.

Behind every one of these policies is a pretty simple idea: You, women, should have control over the decisions that affect your health, your lives, your careers. And if you share that belief, then I think you'll agree that the choice women face right now in this election could not be bigger. On the one hand, you have folks who plan to turn back the clock. They promise to take away access to health care and contraception. They talk about getting rid of vital services like Planned Parenthood. They're planning to spend trillions of dollars on new tax cuts weighed towards millionaires and billionaires.

And just yesterday, an independent, nonpartisan organization ran the numbers. They found that in order for my opponent to pay for his tax plan he'd have to cut tax breaks that middle-class families depend on to pay for your home, or your health care, or to send your kids to college -- which means the average middle-class family with children would be hit with a tax increase of more than $2,000.

On top of that tax increase, my opponent plans to also gut education programs that help low-income mothers, student aid that disproportionately benefits young women.

So this, overall, is what I consider a wrong approach. It's not how we're going to grow this economy. It's not how we're going to build the middle class. We can't afford to re-fight the battles of the past few years -- or the past century, for that matter.

And that's why my plan would move us forward, by cutting taxes for the middle class, investing in education, protecting equal pay, and making sure your health care is there for you when you need it. And I pay for my plan by asking people like me to go back to the same tax rates we paid during the Clinton years.

So that's the choice we face as a country. And even though we're dealing with some big challenges right now, I've never been more confident that the ability to solve our problems is entirely within our grasp. If we choose the right path, I'm absolutely confident we're going to restore the sense of economic security that ought to be at the center of American life.

We'll create an economy that works for everybody. We'll open up new doors of opportunity for our daughters as well as our sons. We'll build our middle class. We'll grow this economy not from the top down, but from the middle out and from the bottom up. And that's not just good for women; that's good for all of us.

So thank you so much for the opportunity. We appreciate you. Michelle says hi. The girls say hi. Bo does, too. I hope you guys have a wonderful conference that remains.

September 21,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
TO AARP CONVENTION VIA SATELLITE

G. Richard Pfitzner Stadium
Woodbridge, Virginia

11:18 A.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you, Jane. (Applause.) Thank you, AARP. (Applause.) I want to thank Barry, and the entire AARP, for everything you do on behalf of America's seniors. (Applause.)

And today is especially poignant for me I think because I can't help to think about my grandmother, Madelyn Dunham. During World War II, she worked on a bomber assembly line, with a baby at home, while her husband was off serving his country. And in the postwar years, she worked her way from a secretary to vice president at her local bank. And later, she helped raise my mother, and then obviously helped raise me and my sister.

She was a great citizen who lived up to her responsibilities. And after a lifetime of hard work, what she hoped for in return was to be able to live out her golden years with dignity and security, and to see her grandchildren and her great grandchildren have a better life.

And she was fiercely independent, so she didn't want a lot of help from me or anybody else. She just wanted to make sure that the work she had put in was going to pay off. And I'm thinking a lot about her these days because we lost my grandmother three days before I was elected to this office, back in 2008. But rewarding those hopes that she and so many other Americans shared -- restoring the basic bargain that says if you work hard, that work will pay off -- is one of the reasons I ran for this office in the first place. The values that she taught me are part of what has driven me over the last four years

Now, we've come a long way, but we're not there yet. And that's why I'm asking you for a second term as President. (Applause.)

There's been a lot of talk about Medicare and Social Security in this campaign, as there should be. And these are bedrock commitments that America makes to its seniors, and I consider those commitments unshakeable. But given the conversations that have been out there in the political arena lately, I want to emphasize Medicare and Social Security are not handouts. (Applause.) You've paid into these programs your whole lives. You've earned them. And as President, it's my job to make sure that Medicare and Social Security remain strong for today's seniors and for future generations.

It probably won't surprise you, though, that there's a lot of talk about Medicare and Social Security that hasn't been completely on the level over the last several months. So here's what you need to know:

I have strengthened Medicare as President. (Applause.) We've added years to the life of the program by getting rid of taxpayer subsidies to insurance companies that weren't making people healthier. And we used those savings to lower prescription drug costs, and to offer seniors on Medicare new preventive services like cancer screenings and wellness services.

In fact, the health reform law we passed has already saved more than 5.5 million seniors and people with disabilities nearly $4.5 billion on their prescription drugs. (Applause.) Seniors who received a discount have saved an average of more than $600 this year alone. And over the next 10 years, we expect the average Medicare beneficiary to save nearly $5,000 as a result of this law.

Now, my opponents have pledged to repeal these savings and benefits in their first day on the job, which means billions in new profits for insurance companies, but also would mean immediately increased costs for seniors and would bankrupt the Medicare trust fund in just four years. And what would they replace it with? Their plan replaces guaranteed Medicare benefits with a voucher that wouldn't keep up with costs.

And when they tell you that their plan lets you keep your doctor, they're leaving out one thing -- and that's the facts. A new study says that under their plan, if just 5 percent of seniors switch to private plans, 40 percent of doctors who currently take Medicare would stop accepting it. So think about that. Millions of seniors would be forced to change doctors.

I don't consider this approach bold or particularly courageous, I just think it's a bad idea. No American should ever spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies. They should retire with the care and the dignity that they have earned. (Applause.)

Now, we do have to reform and strengthen Medicare for the long haul, but we're going to do it by reducing the costs of care -- not by asking seniors to pay thousands of dollars more while we're giving millionaires and billionaires a massive new tax cut. (Applause.)

And when it comes to Social Security, we've got to keep the promise of Social Security by taking responsible steps to strengthen it, not by turning it over to Wall Street. (Applause.) The last time the other side was in charge, my opponent's running mate wrote a bill that would have privatized Social Security. And after what happened on Wall Street just four years ago, does anybody actually think that's a good idea? (Laughter.)

Most seniors rely on Social Security for most of their income. It keeps 20 million Americans out of poverty each and every year. And while it's not the cause of today's deficits, we do need to strengthen the program for the coming decades. And that means folks on both sides need to come together around a balanced plan. (Applause.)

My opponent claims that to pay for a new $5 trillion tax cut skewed towards the very top, he'd just close tax loopholes for the very wealthy. But independent experts say there's no way to do that without also cutting deductions that the middle class relies on, and that includes taxing things like Social Security benefits. And this could mean higher taxes for seniors on Social Security, including taxing benefits for seniors who make less than $32,000 a year for the first time ever. Nearly 30 million seniors could see their taxes go up by hundreds of dollars.

So I want you all to know at AARP I'm not going to let that happen. (Applause.) My plan calls for both parties to come together and take responsible steps to preserve Social Security for the long run. And we'll do it in a way that ensures a lifetime of hard work is rewarded with dignity and security for generations to come.

So you guys have a big choice in this election and these are the paths -- the two paths our country can take. We can spend trillions of dollars on tax cuts targeted towards the wealthiest Americans, which could result in cuts to benefits that you've worked a lifetime to earn. Or we can take a balanced approach to invest in the middle class and strengthen Medicare and Social Security for you and your children and your grandchildren. That's the choice in this election and that's why I'm asking for your vote. (Applause.)

So thanks so much, AARP, for having me. And with that, Jane, I'm ready to take some questions. (Applause.)

Q Mr. President, Jane Pauley here again. I'm back in the hall with our members, and they do have some questions for you. I'd like to explain here in the hall that -- what a satellite delay is. When I ask a question, it goes up there, and then it comes down. There's about a second and a half delay between my delivering a question and the President hearing it. Just so you know the drill and a little inside stuff on television.

Mr. President, we are so grateful that you can stay with us a few minutes longer.

Mike, from Brier, Washington, asks: "How will you reduce the federal debt and not gut Social Security and Medicare?"

THE PRESIDENT: Well, it's a great question, Mike, and I appreciate it. We have a genuine challenge in bringing our deficit down and reducing our debt, and I think it's important for folks to know that 90 percent of the debt and deficits that we're seeing right now are the result of choices that were made over the course of the last decade -- two wars that weren't paid for; tax cuts skewed towards the wealthy that were not paid for. So we made some decisions, and then when the Great Recession hit, that meant more money was going out and not as much money was coming in, and that has blown up our deficit and our debt.

The key to reducing it is to do it in a balanced, responsible way. So I've put forward a $4 trillion, deficit-reduction plan which would bring our deficits down to a manageable level and begin the work of bringing our debt down, and it involves making some tough choices. So I've already signed a trillion dollars' worth of cuts, programs that we don't need, programs that, frankly, are not helping people get more opportunity or creating pathways for success for middle-class families or those who are striving to get into the middle class.

But after those cuts are made and some additional cuts are made, the only way to reach that $4 trillion target to also ask the wealthiest among us to do a little bit more. So what I've suggested is that we go back for people whose incomes are above $250,000 to go back to the tax rates that existed when Bill Clinton was President, which, by the way, was a time when we created 23 million new jobs, went from a deficit to a surplus, and created a whole lot of millionaires to boot. (Applause.)

Now, this contrasts with the plan that my opponent is putting forward for deficit reduction. And some of you may have seen President Clinton speak at the convention -- (applause) -- what's missing from it is arithmetic, because what they're proposing is not only to extend the Bush tax cuts for the wealthy, but then they want to add another $5 trillion tax cut on top of that, and $2 trillion in additional defense spending that our Joint Chiefs of Staff say doesn't make sense at a time when we're winding down two wars.

So before they even start digging us out of the hole that we're in, they just added to the hole with $7 trillion in additional spending on tax cuts or on defense. Now, they haven't explained how they would pay for that, but independent analysts who have looked at it have said the only way you pay for this is not only to gut investments in education, in basic research that could help find cures for cancer or Alzheimer's, to not invest in our infrastructure, but it also means that you're going to have to impose a higher tax burden on middle-class families -- up to $2,000 a year for families with children.

And as I mentioned in my opening remarks, if you're looking at figuring out how to pay for that $5 trillion tax cut, part of what you would also start looking at is taxing Social Security benefits, or turning Medicare into a voucher program. And that is not the right approach to take.

My attitude is that if we're going to work together to bring down our deficit, everybody has got to do their fair share, everybody has got to do their part. (Applause.) And for us to have new tax cuts for millionaires and billionaires to pay for cuts in Social Security or Medicare or education is just not the right way to go.

Q Mr. President, from Washington D.C, Paulette (ph) asks a question. She says, "If one makes $106 [thousand] a year or less, they pay Social Security taxes on 100 percent of their income; a millionaire pays 10 percent or less. Will you try to get the cap removed for Social Security taxes?"

THE PRESIDENT: I do think that looking at changing the cap is an important aspect of putting Social Security on a more stable footing. (Applause.) And what I've said is, is that I'm willing to work with Republicans and examine all their ideas, but what I'm not going to do as a matter of principle is to slash benefits or privatize Social Security and suddenly turn it over to Wall Street. Because we saw what can happen, back in 2008/2009, when the stock market crashed. And we're still recovering from that.

Q Mr. President, James from Derry, Pennsylvania says, "I haven't heard you say much about out-of-control prescription drug costs facing those of us retired and living on fixed incomes. What are you plans to bring down these costs?"

THE PRESIDENT: Well, the good news is, I'm not just talking about it, we've actually done something about it. (Applause.) The health care bill that we passed, Obamacare, which, by the way, I don't mind the term because I do care, that's why we passed the bill -- (applause) -- one of the things that we did was to begin closing the notorious doughnut hole that so many seniors suffer from.

So starting this year already, what we're seeing is a 50 percent discount for seniors who are in the doughnut hole. Each year they're going to get additional discounts until the doughnut hole is completely closed. That's already saving millions of seniors around the country an average of $600 to $650 a year. That's on top, by the way, of the preventive care that is now provided without additional charge, under Medicare, as a consequence of what we did with Obamacare.

And there's more that we can do on prescription drugs. One of the things that I've proposed in my budget is that Medicare recipients should get some of the same deep discounts that Medicaid receives. That would save additional billions of dollars for seniors. (Applause.) And there's work that we can also do in terms of accelerating the use of generics and making sure that the process for seniors getting access to cheaper prescription drugs is obtained.

But this is critically important because I meet too many families where they tell me a story of their parents having to cut their pills in half because they just can't afford the prescriptions that have been given to them.

Q Mr. President, a question for you from Hawaii, from Richard: "What would you do to guarantee the future of Medicare?"

THE PRESIDENT: Well, again, it turns out that contrary to what you've heard and what you may hear from subsequent speakers, Obamacare actually strengthened Medicare. So what we did was extend the Medicare trust fund by eight years. In addition, we dealt with prescription drugs in a way that is helping seniors now and in the future. The preventive care that we're doing is going to ensure that seniors stay healthier, which reduces costs.

And one thing that I want to point out is, when you hear this notion of -- that we somehow took $716 billion, robbed it from Medicare beneficiaries and seniors, I want you to know that is simply not true. (Applause.) What we did was we went after waste and fraud, and overcharging by insurance companies, for example. Those savings do come out to $716 [billion], and those savings are part of what allows us to close the doughnut hole, provide the preventive care, and is actually going to extend the life of Medicare over the long term. It also, by the way, helps to reduce the increase in the premiums that seniors pay under Medicare.

And that points to what we need to do with Medicare generally. What we need to do is to go after the waste, the fraud, and reduce health care costs overall. (Applause.) So part of what we're doing through this new health care law is using the power of -- the purchasing power of Medicare to say to doctors and hospitals and insurance companies, you guys need to work smarter -- instead of having five different tests that you're charging us for, do one test and then email it to everybody. (Applause.) Instead of having all kinds of administrative costs and paperwork, let's make sure that we're using health IT -- information technologies -- to do a better job. Let's coordinate care better. Let's engage in more preventive care. (Applause.)

Because this is not just a Medicare problem. Medicare actually is a very efficient program relative to the private insurance programs. The problem is health care costs generally are going up. So we've got to bring down health care costs; that's what we're focused on. And I just want to point out that the other side's approach to saving Medicare -- and you'll be hearing about this, I gather, after I speak -- is to turn Medicare into a voucher program and essentially transfer those costs onto seniors.

Congressman Ryan's original plan that was put forward -- independent analysis showed that, as a consequence, seniors could expect to pay over $6,000 more for their Medicare once they were under a voucher program. Now, that was his original plan. I want to be fair here. He then modified it -- because obviously there was a lot of pushback from seniors on that idea -- so he said, well, we're going to have traditional Medicare stand side by side with the voucher program, and no current beneficiaries will be affected.

The problem is that insurance companies, once they're getting vouchers, they're really good at recruiting the healthier, younger Medicare recipients, and weeding out and leaving in traditional Medicare [to] the older, sicker recipients. And over time what happens is that, because there are older, sicker folks in the traditional Medicare plan, premiums start going up, they start going through the roof. And the entire infrastructure of traditional Medicare ends up collapsing, which means that all seniors at some point end up being at the mercy of the insurance companies through a voucher program. That's what we're trying to prevent. And the reason that AARP supported Obamacare and does not support this voucher approach is because they have looked at these independent experts and the analysis that they've put forward, and they know that a voucher program is not going to be a good deal for Medicare over the long haul. (Applause.)

Q Mr. President, from Sandwich, Massachusetts. Kathy (ph) has the following question for you: "What would your administration do to make sure age discrimination laws are enforced so we have an even playing field to get a job?"

THE PRESIDENT: Well, this is a great question, and obviously one of the challenges that we've seen as a consequence of this terrible recession we went through was a lot of workers in their 50s and early 60s found themselves suddenly laid off, and it's very hard for them to get their foot in the door despite all the incredible experience that they have and the skills and training that they've got. So there are a couple of things that we need to do.

Number one, we just have to make sure that we're enforcing nondiscrimination laws effectively. And the Attorney General knows that that's always a top priority for me. In some cases, part of what we're trying to do is to see if we legislatively can overturn some bad Supreme Court rulings that have made it harder to prove age discrimination. (Applause.)

Q Using the --

THE PRESIDENT: And that's something that we're really focused on.

Q Forgive me for interrupting the President of the United States. Sorry. (Laughter.)

Mr. President, you used the word "legislation" which will ring a bell with Joe from Fort Atkinson, Wisconsin, who asks: "What can you do about this gridlock between both sides of the aisle in Congress?"

THE PRESIDENT: Well, Jane, let me just say this -- first of all, before I go to the gridlock issue, I did want to emphasize that in addition to dealing with age discrimination, the work that's being done between the SBA and the AARP around the Encore Entrepreneur's Program, helping thousands of seniors across the country start their own small businesses, if in fact they're not getting hired, to provide them a source of income and use their incredible skills -- I just wanted to give a shout out to AARP because that program is really doing great work. (Applause.)

But when it comes to gridlock, look, I came in in 2008 and I said, even though I got 53 percent of the vote and 47 percent of the country voted against me, that I'd be the President for everybody, and I'd listen to everybody's voices. (Applause.)

And every idea that I put forward and all the work that we have done has been to draw on the best ideas from both parties. In fact, Obamacare now owes a debt to what was done in Massachusetts by my opponent Mr. Romney, even though sometimes he denies it. (Applause.)

So I am always going to be looking to find common ground and solve problems for the American people. The one thing I won't do, though, is to go along with bad ideas that are not helping the middle class, not helping people who have worked hard all their lives, not helping to provide ladders of opportunity to people who are still looking to succeed in this great country of ours. And so, if I hear that the only way that Republicans in Congress are willing to move forward is to voucherize Medicare, I'll say no. (Applause.) If the only thing that they're willing to offer in terms of deficit reduction is to do it on the backs of seniors or our children who need to get a great education, or middle-class families who can't afford another tax increase, I'm going to say no.

So part of what I think you want from your President is somebody who is working hard to bring people together, but is also willing to stand up to bad ideas that would end up tilting the playing field further in favor of those who have already made it instead of also thinking about folks who are trying to make it who worked hard all their lives, like my grandmother. And that's exactly why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

Q Mr. President, on behalf of everyone here in the hall and listening online, we are so grateful that you could spend some time with us this morning. Thank you very much. (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you so much, Jane. Take care, everybody.

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Lions Park
Golden, Colorado

11:03 A.M. MDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Golden! (Applause.) Thank you! (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.)

You know, this is just too pretty. (Laughter.) I don't know how you guys get any work done around here. (Laughter.) It is spectacular today. (Applause.) Spectacular. And I notice there's kind of like a water slide in there -- I wanted to try it out, but -- (laughter) -- Secret Service said no. (Laughter.) They would not let me do it.

It is great to be back in Colorado. Can everybody please give Lisa a big round of applause for that great introduction? (Applause.) Not only does she deserve a great introduction -- or applause because of the introduction, but also having three kids and one more coming -- (laughter) -- that deserves some applause. (Applause.) To all the moms out there. (Applause.) That is some work. And once you get to three, then you've got to play zone defense -- (laughter) -- I don't even know what to do with four. (Laughter.)

I am so grateful to be here, and I'm so grateful that Lisa took the time to do this. I've got a couple other friends who are here -- first of all, your former senator and outstanding Secretary of the Interior, looking after the natural resources of America -- Ken Salazar is in the house. (Applause.) Your Mayor, Marjorie Sloan, is here. (Applause.)

Marjorie, she could not be sweeter. I mean, she gave me such a nice welcome hug, and informed me that I am the first President to visit this county since Ulysses S. Grant. Is that correct? (Applause.) Now, that's pretty impressive. That's a long time ago, Ulysses S. Grant. (Laughter.) Back then you couldn't even vote. You guys were still a territory. (Laughter.) So I'm glad to put down my marker here. (Applause.) Absolutely.

Let me say at the outset that obviously our hearts are heavy this week -- we had a tough day a couple of days ago, for four Americans were killed in an attack on our diplomatic post in Libya. Yesterday I had a chance to go over to the State Department to talk to friends and colleagues of those who were killed. And these were Americans who, like so many others, both in uniform and civilians, who serve in difficult and dangerous places all around the world to advance the interests and the values that we hold dear as Americans.

And a lot of times their work goes unheralded, doesn't get a lot of attention, but it is vitally important. We enjoy our security and our liberty because of the sacrifices that they make. And they do an outstanding job every single day without a lot of fanfare. (Applause.)

So what I want all of you to know is that we are going to bring those who killed our fellow Americans to justice. (Applause.) I want people around the world to hear me: To all those who would do us harm, no act of terror will go unpunished. It will not dim the light of the values that we proudly present to the rest of the world. No act of violence shakes the resolve of the United States of America. (Applause.)

And I've directed my administration to do whatever is necessary to protect all Americans who are serving abroad. It's one of my highest priorities as President. And we're also in contact with other governments to underscore that they've got an obligation to cooperate with us to protect our citizens. That's part of their job.

Now, I know that it's difficult sometimes seeing these disturbing images on television, because our world is filled with serious challenges. This is a tumultuous time that we're in. But we can, and we will, meet those challenges if we stay true to who we are, and if we would remind ourselves that we're different from other nations. We're different not only because of the incredible landscape that God has given us; we're different because we're a nation that's bound together by a creed. We're not made up of a single tribe or a single religion or a single race. We're a collection of people from all around the world who came here because of a certain set of principles -- the idea that all men and women are created equal; that we are all endowed by our Creator with certain inalienable rights. (Applause.) That's what binds us together. That's what our flag means.

But we also believe that these are not just American rights. We believe these are universal aspirations, and they're held by people who live in tiny villages in Libya, prosperous cities in Europe. That's our light to the world. And our task, as the most powerful nation on Earth, is to defend and protect and advance our people, but also to defend and protect and advance those values at home and around the world. That's what our troops do. That's what our diplomats do. That's what our intelligence officers do. That's what our citizens do. That's what we believe. Those are the values that we hold to. (Applause.)

And here in America, there is no more fundamental part of our democracy than the fact that all of you get a say in the decisions that are made about our country's future. (Applause.) And that's why we're here today.

Over the past few weeks, Colorado, you've been offered two very different paths for our future. You've seen their convention, you've seen ours, and now you face one big choice.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We're with you! (Laughter and applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Our vision, our fight is to restore the basic bargain that built the largest middle class and the strongest economy the world has ever known -- (applause) -- the promise that says hard work will pay off; if you work hard you can make it; that responsibility will be rewarded; that in this country of ours, everybody gets a fair shot and everybody does their fair share and everybody plays by the same rules -- from Wall Street to Main Street to Washington, D.C. (Applause.)

And that basic bargain is why I ran for President in the first place -- because I had watched a decade in which too many jobs were being shipped overseas; in which too many families were struggling with costs that kept on going up but paychecks that didn't; people having to try to cover basic expenses with credit cards and home equity loans just to pay tuition for college or put gas in the car or food on the table. And then we saw that house of cards that had been built up collapse in the worst recession since the Great Depression, and millions of innocent Americans, including folks here in Colorado, lost their homes and their jobs, their life savings. And for the last three and a half years, we've been fighting to recover from the body blow that we took.

And we've made progress. We've made progress. (Applause.) We were losing 800,000 jobs a month; we've created jobs now for the past 30 months. (Applause.) We saved an American auto industry on the brink of going under. (Applause.) Manufacturing is starting to come back here in the United States. (Applause.) But we've got so much more work to do, because there's still a lot of folks out there hurting.

And here's the thing. I don't think the best answer for today's new challenges are the same old sales pitches. And frankly, that's what you heard mostly in Tampa. You heard a long litany of what folks thought was wrong with America, but they didn't tell you much about what they'd do to make it right. They wanted your vote, but they didn't tell you their plan. (Applause.) Because basically their plan was one that you had heard before: If we cut more taxes, everybody is going to be okay -- especially if we cut taxes at the top. Tax cuts in good times. Tax cuts in bad times. Tax cuts when we're at peace. Tax cuts when we're at war. You need to make a restaurant reservation, you don't need the new iPhone -- here's a tax cut for that. (Laughter.) You want to learn a new language? Try a tax cut. Tax cut to lose a few extra pounds. (Laughter.) Whatever ails you.

Now, I've cut taxes for folks who need it -- middle-class families, small business owners. (Applause.) That's who needs them. The typical family has seen their federal income taxes go down -- their income tax burden go down by $3,600 since I came into office, because it was important to provide folks who need it relief. (Applause.) Small businesses -- we cut their taxes 18 times. (Applause.)

So I want to give tax relief to folks who need it, but I don't believe another round of tax cuts for millionaires are going to bring good jobs back to our shores. They're not going to bring down our deficits. Just like I don't believe that firing teachers or kicking students off of financial aid is going to grow our economy, especially when we've got to compete with the scientists and engineers that are coming out of China.

And I've got to say, Colorado, after all we've been through, the idea that we would roll back regulations that we finally put in place on Wall Street to make sure they don't act recklessly again and bring the economy back to its knees -- I don't think rolling back regulations are going to help the small businesswoman in Jefferson County, or laid-off construction workers that are trying to get back to work.

Golden, we have been there, we've tried that, it didn't work. We're not going back. We are not going back. (Applause.) We don't believe in a top-down, trickle-down economy that says to everybody, "you're on your own." We believe that we're all in this together. (Applause.) We believe that the economy grows from the middle class out, from the bottom up. (Applause.) That's how we move forward.

And I won't pretend that the path I'm offering is easy. Bill Clinton reminded us last week, it's going to take a few more years to deal with all the challenges that we built up over decades. But when I hear some folks, I guess just for political reasons, saying how America is in decline, they are wrong. (Applause.) We still have the world's best workers in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best researchers and scientists in the world. We've got the best colleges and universities in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best entrepreneurs in the world. We've got the best democracy in the world. There is not a country on Earth that wouldn't trade places with the United States of America. (Applause.)

Our problems can be solved, and our challenges can be met. And the path I offer may be harder, but it leads to a better place. (Applause.) I'm asking -- (sneezes) -- I'm getting all choked up. (Laughter.) I'm getting all choked up here.

I'm asking you to choose that future. I am asking you, Colorado, to rally around a set of goals -- concrete, achievable goals -- to create new manufacturing jobs and new energy sources, to improve education, to bring down our deficit in a balanced, responsible way, to turn a page on a decade of war. That's what we can do in the next four years. (Applause.) That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, let me talk about this plan, because you need to know what you're voting for. Number one, I've got a plan to export more products and outsource fewer jobs. (Applause.) After a decade of decline, this country has created over half a million new manufacturing jobs in the last two and a half years. We reinvented a dying auto industry that's back on top of the world.

So now you've got a choice. You can follow the other side's advice and keep giving more tax breaks to companies that ship jobs overseas, or we can start rewarding companies that open new plants and train new workers and create new jobs right here in America. (Applause.) We can help big factories and small businesses double their exports. We can create a million new manufacturing jobs in the next four years. We can continue to invest in basic science and research so that we maintain our technological edge and commercialize those advances.

That's how we stay on top. That's how we stay number one. You can make that happen. That's what we're fighting for. (Applause.) That's why I want a second term. (Applause.)

I've got a plan to control more of our own energy. After 30 years of inaction, we raised fuel standards so that by the middle of the next decade, your cars and trucks will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.) That saves you money. It helps our national security. And it helps to preserve this incredible, beautiful landscape that we've got. (Applause.)

We've doubled the amount of renewable energy that we generate from sources like wind and solar power. Thousands of Americans here in Colorado and all across the country have jobs today building wind turbines and long-lasting batteries, solar panels. And today, the United States of America is less dependent on foreign oil than any time in nearly two decades. (Applause.) That's what we've done.

So now you've got a choice. We can reverse this progress, like the other side has talked about, or we can build on it. (Applause.) Now, unlike my opponent, I'm not going to let the oil companies write our energy plan. (Applause.) I'm not going to get rid of the wind energy tax credit that is helping to spur this incredibly dynamic sector of our economy. We're going to build on this progress. We need to keep investing in wind and solar -- (applause) -- and make sure our farmers and scientists are harnessing new biofuels.

Let's put our construction workers back to work building energy-efficient homes and factories. (Applause.) Let's develop a hundred-year supply of natural gas that's right beneath our feet. We can cut our oil imports in half by 2020 and create hundreds of thousands of new jobs all across this country. That's the path forward. That's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

I've got a plan to give Americans a greater chance to gain the skills they need to compete. Education was a gateway of opportunity for me. Let's face it, a mixed kid from Hawaii born to a single mom is not likely to become President of the United States. (Applause.) But in America it can happen because of education, because somebody gave me opportunity. (Applause.)

You know, a little black girl from the South Side of Chicago, whose mom is a secretary and dad is a blue-collar worker -- not likely to become First Lady of the United States. (Applause.) But it happens because she got a great education, even though her folks didn't have a lot of money.

It's the gateway of opportunity for middle-class families, for those who are willing to work hard to get into the middle class and stay there. And because of the work we've done over the last three and a half years, millions of students are paying less for college today because we took out billions of dollars that was being wasted using banks and lenders as middlemen; we started giving these loans directly to students. (Applause.) And now millions more are qualified to get help. (Applause.)

We set up a tuition tax credit so that middle-class families can get a $10,000 tuition credit over four years to help their kids go to school.

Now we've got to build on that progress. And you've got a choice. The other side, they're proposing to gut education to pay for more tax breaks for folks like me.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo, now -- vote. (Applause.) Vote. (Applause.)

I think we've got a better path. We can decide that in the United States of America, no child should have her dream deferred because of an overcrowded classroom or a crumbling school or outdated textbooks. And no family should have to set aside a college acceptance letter just because they don't have the money. No company should have to look for workers in China because they couldn't find the right skills for folks here in the United States.

So I'm asking you to help me recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers, and improve early childhood education, and get 2 million more workers the chance to go to community colleges to get the skills they need for the jobs that are out there right now. (Applause.) And let's help bring down college and university tuition costs over the next several years. (Applause.)

We can meet that goal. You can choose that future for America. Yes, we can.

AUDIENCE: Yes, we can.

THE PRESIDENT: You remember that. (Applause.)

Now, we can do all this and we can reduce our deficit without sticking it to the middle class. So I put forward a plan that will reduce our deficit by $4 trillion. That's not my opinion; there's independent analysis that's been done, this will reduce the deficit by $4 trillion. I've worked with Republicans in Congress already to cut a trillion dollars' worth of spending, and I'm willing to work with them to do more. Everybody talks about how partisan everything is. Listen, I am happy to work with Republicans. I want their cooperation. (Applause.) If they want me, I'll wash the car, I'll walk the dog for them -- (laughter) -- to get a deal done for the American people.

I want to reform our tax code so that it's simple and so that it's fair. There are areas where we should be able to agree. But here's the thing I can't do. I can't ask millionaires to do nothing, and then ask everybody else to do a whole lot. (Applause.)

So I've asked, under my plan, the wealthiest households to 0pay a slightly higher rate on their income taxes after the $250,000 threshold -- so they'd still get a tax cut for the first $250,000. That would apply to 100 percent of Americans. But for that dollar after $250,000 you pay a little bit more -- the same rate that you paid under Bill Clinton, the same rate that was in force when our economy created nearly 23 million new jobs, went from deficit to the biggest surplus in history, and we created a lot of millionaires to boot. (Applause.)

And by the way, I want you to understand why this is important. If we take that approach where folks like me and Governor Romney are paying a little bit more, then we can keep taxes low for middle-class families -- 98 percent of American families make $250,000 or less. And so we can keep your tax cuts in place and we can still invest in our future. And here's the thing -- when you've got some tax relief, when the firefighter or the teacher or the construction worker or the receptionist -- when you guys -- when the small businessperson -- because 97 percent of small businesses make less than $250,000 -- when you have money in your pockets, what do you do?

AUDIENCE: Spend it. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: Because you have to -- right? Your car is 10 years old, and you've got a boiler in the house you got to fix -- right? So there are things you do with the money. That means, then, businesses have more customers. That means businesses make more profits and businesses hire more workers, which means, then, the economy gets that much stronger. That's how you grow an economy. Not from the top down; from the bottom up, from the middle out. That's how we do it. (Applause.) That's how we've always done it.

Now, in fairness, the other side does have a plan also. But as President Clinton pointed out, it doesn't have arithmetic in it. (Laughter.) Now, keep in mind these are folks who say that their biggest priority is reducing the deficit. This is a generational obligation, we've got to do right by our kids, et cetera. So what's their first proposal? They think that we're going to lower our deficit by spending trillions of dollars more on new tax breaks for the wealthy. That doesn't add up.

When you try to pay for $5 trillion in new tax cuts, there are only so many places you can go. First of all, you can gut education investments, and investments in research and technology, and we can stop rebuilding our infrastructure. But even if you do all that, you haven't come close to $5 trillion. So eventually, what independent analysis says is that middle-class families are going to have to pay for it. Or, alternatively, the deficit blows up.

And if you don't see that math, then you've got to go see your teacher after school. (Laughter.) You got to go talk to Lisa and get a tutorial. (Laughter.)

And on top of the $5 trillion tax cut they're talking about that would give the average person making $3 million a year a $250,000 tax cut, in addition they want to add $2 trillion in new military spending without increasing -- they say they're not going to increase the deficit. Well, your calculator is going to go out on you if you try to add all that stuff up. (Laughter.)

So listen, Golden, I refuse to ask middle-class families to pay more so that I pay less. I refuse to ask students to pay more for college, or kick children out of Head Start programs, or eliminate health insurance for millions of Americans who are poor, or elderly, or disabled, just to pay for tax cuts to the wealthy that we cannot afford. (Applause.)

And I will not turn Medicare into a voucher just to give tax cuts to the wealthy. (Applause.) No American should ever have to spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies. They should retire with dignity and respect. And we're going to reform and strengthen Medicare for the long haul, but we do it by reducing the cost of health care, by making the health care system smarter so that instead of five tests you get one test, and then it's emailed everywhere. And we reduce all the paperwork because we're enhancing information technologies in the health care system. And we're doing more preventive care. Those are the things that are going to reduce the cost of care.

But we don't just shift those costs on to seniors and ask them to pay thousands of dollars more. That's not right.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: And we are certainly going to make sure that we keep the promise of Social Security. (Applause.) We'll take responsible steps to strengthen it -- but we're not going to turn it over to Wall Street. (Applause.)

So we're going to rebuild our economy. But our prosperity at home is linked to what we do abroad. And this week's events remind us of that. Four years ago, I promised to end the war in Iraq -- and we did. (Applause.) I said we'd wind down the war in Afghanistan -- and we are. (Applause.) And while a new tower rises above the New York skyline, al Qaeda is on the path to defeat, and Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.)

But we see on our televisions that there are still threats in the world, and we've got to remain vigilant. That's why we have to be relentless in pursuing those who attacked us this week. That's also why, so long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. (Applause.)

And that's why when our troops take off their uniform, we will serve them as well as they've served us -- because nobody who has fought for us should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. That is a solemn oath that we have to keep. (Applause.)

And we will use the money we're no longer spending on war to pay down our debt, and to put more people back to work rebuilding roads and bridges, schools and runways, helping local communities hire firefighters and police officers and first responders. Because after a decade of war, it's time to do some nation-building right here in Colorado, right here in the United States of America. Let's put Americans back to work. (Applause.)

We can do all this. And the power to do it is where it has always been -- in your hands. I said this at the convention -- the election four years ago wasn't about me; it was about you. You were the change. You're the ones who made it happen.

You're the reason that there's a teacher and her husband in Pueblo who can now buy their first home with the help of new tax credits. (Applause.) You're the reason that a woman outside Durango can get the treatment she needs for her breast cancer, now that there are affordable plans to cover preexisting conditions. (Applause.)

You're the reason seniors across Colorado are saving an average of nearly $600 every year on prescription drugs because of Obamacare. And it's true, I do care. That's why we pushed it. You care. That's why we made it happen. (Applause.)

You're the reason that a young immigrant who grew up here and went to school here and pledged allegiance to our flag will no longer be deported from the only country she's ever called home. (Applause.) You're the reason why a selfless soldier won't be kicked out of the military because of who they are or who they love -- we ended "don't ask, don't tell." (Applause.) You're the reason why thousands of families have finally been able to say to their loved ones who served us so bravely: "Welcome home." You made that happen. (Applause.)

And the only way America keeps moving forward is if you don't stop. You can't buy into the cynicism that the other side is selling. You can't let them convince you somehow that change isn't possible. If you give up on the idea that your voice makes a difference, then other people rush in to fill the void -- the lobbyists, the special interests, the folks who are writing the $10 million checks to run all those negative ads, the folks who are trying to make it harder for you to vote, the Washington politicians who want to decide for you who you can marry or what kind of health care women should get.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: We can't let that happen, Colorado. And that's why I need your help -- because we've come too far to turn back now. We've got more good jobs to create. We've got more clean, homegrown energy to generate. (Applause.) We've got more good schools to build and more great teachers to hire. (Applause.) We've got more troops to bring home and more veterans to care for. (Applause.) And we've got more doors of opportunity to open to everybody who is willing to work hard and walk through them -- everybody, black, white, Hispanic, Asian, Native American, young, old, gay, straight, able -- everybody. That's what I'm asking -- (applause) -- that you keep going forward.

That's why I'm asking for a second term, Colorado. (Applause.) And if you're willing to work with me, and knock on some doors with me, and make some phone calls for me, and vote for me in November, we will win Colorado. We will win this election. We will finish what we started. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you, and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Morningside College
Sioux City, Iowa

5:40 P.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: How's it going, Iowa? (Applause.) It is good to be back in Sioux City! (Applause.)

Please give Rob a big round of applause for that great introduction. (Applause.) It's good to be with my outstanding Secretary of Agriculture, your former governor, Tom Vilsack. (Applause.) It is great to see your Mayor, Bob Scott. (Applause.) And it is great to see all of you. (Applause.)

And the only thing that I'm not going to do, though, is get in the middle of an argument between Hawkeye and Huskers fans. (Laughter.) I'm not going to go there.

Now, Iowa is our first stop this week on the road to our convention in Charlotte, North Carolina. (Applause.) And it was important for me to begin that journey right here in Iowa because this is where it all began for us four years ago -- right here in Iowa. (Applause.) Because it was you, Iowa, who kept us going when all the pundits had written us off. It was in your living rooms and backyards and VFW halls and diners where our movement for change began. And it will be you, Iowa, who is going to make all the difference in the world in this upcoming election. (Applause.)

Now, last week, the other party, they gave their pitch at the convention in Florida.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. (Applause.)

I've got to say, that convention, it was something. (Laughter.) Despite all the challenges that we face in this new century, what they offered over their three days was an agenda that was probably a little better suited for the last century. (Applause.) They were going so far backwards you might as well have watched it on black-and-white TV. (Laughter and applause.) Put some rabbit ears on the convention hall. (Applause.)

Now, in case you didn't DVR it, let me give you a simple recap: The economy is not where it needs to be, and it's Obama's fault, and only Mitt Romney knows the secret to creating jobs and growing the economy.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: And there was a lot of talk about speaking "hard truths" and making "bold choices," but the interesting thing was nobody ever bothered throughout the three days to tell you what these tough choices were going to be. They didn't really explain what they were going to do.

When Governor Romney had his chance to let you in on his secret sauce -- (laughter) -- he didn't offer you a single new idea. It was just a retread of the same old policies that have been sticking it to the middle class for years. (Applause.)

So you heard them talk a lot about me. You heard them talk a lot about Mitt. They didn't talk a lot about you. They didn't talk about the challenges you face and how we could actually solve some of these challenges. They spent less time talking about their plan than just about anything else. Not just because they know you don't like it -- now, the truth is if I had their plan I probably wouldn't talk about it a lot either. (Laughter and applause.) And they know you're not going to buy it because we've tried it, you saw what happened, you lived through it and you don't want to repeat it. (Applause.)

We know that making the middle class, for example, pay for another budget-busting $250,000 tax cut for folks making $3 million a year or more is not going to translate into jobs and prosperity for working families all across Sioux City. We know that. (Applause.)

We know that families aren't going to be better off if we roll back financial reform that's there to prevent another financial crisis. We know we're not going to be better off if suddenly we roll back the protections for our air and our water, and protections to make sure that if you get sick there's going to be health care there for you.

We're sure not going to be better off if suddenly, instead of having Medicare that you can count on, we've got some sort of voucher program that Mr. Romney and Mr. Ryan are proposing that leaves seniors to pay any additional costs out of their own pocket.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: They have been trying to sell us these tired, trickle-down, you're-on-your-own policies before. They did not work. They didn't work then, they won't work now. They won't create jobs. They won't lower our deficit. They're not going to strengthen the middle class. They're not a plan to move our country forward.

We believe in something better. (Applause.) We believe in an America that says our economic strength has never come from the top down; it comes from the middle out and the bottom up. (Applause.) It comes from students and workers and small business people, and a growing, thriving middle class. That's what built this country. (Applause.)

We believe in an America that doesn't let how much money you've got determine whether or not you can afford good health care, or send your kids to get a good higher education. (Applause.)

We believe in an America that maintains the strongest, most disciplined, most effective military in the history of the world, but that we also lead with the strength of our ideas and the power of our example. And we believe in an America where no matter who you are, or what you look like, or where you come from or who you love -- you can pursue your own happiness, and you can make it if you try. That's what we believe here in America. (Applause.)

That's what these last four years have been about. That's what this campaign is about. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, on Thursday night -- this coming Thursday night -- not last Thursday night -- (laughter) -- this coming Thursday night, I will offer you what I believe is a better path forward -- a path that will grow this economy and create more good jobs, and strengthen our middle class, and create ladders for everybody who is willing to work hard to get into the middle class. And the good news is you're going to get to choose which path we take.

You can go with what you heard last Thursday.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: You can choose their plan to give massive new tax cuts to folks who've already made it. Or you can go with my plan, which is to keep the tax cuts on every American who is still trying to make it. (Applause.)

Back in 2008, I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families. And I've cut taxes by a total of about $3,600 for the typical family. And now I'm running to make sure that taxes aren't raised a single dime on your family's first $250,000 of income -- which, by the way, means for 98 percent of Americans and 97 percent of small businesses, they won't see their income taxes go up. (Applause.) That's my path. That's a different choice than where these other guys want to go.

You can choose whether we give up new jobs and new industries to China and India and Germany and other countries, or whether we fight to keep those jobs here in Iowa. (Applause.) My opponent's experience -- he likes to talk about his private sector experience -- well, a lot of it was investing in companies that were called "pioneers" in the business of outsourcing jobs. I don't believe in outsourcing. I believe in insourcing. (Applause.)

When the America auto industry was about to go under, he said, "let Detroit go bankrupt."

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: I bet on American workers and American manufacturing, which is why the American auto industry has come roaring back. (Applause.)

I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. I want to start rewarding companies that are creating jobs right here in Sioux City, right here in Iowa, right here in the United States of America. That's the path I want to travel on. (Applause.)

And at a moment when homegrown energy is creating new jobs all across this state and other states across the Midwest, my opponent would put those jobs at risk -- the jobs that Rob was talking about -- he'd put them at risk by ending tax credits for wind energy producers.

Rob told you, he said these new sources of energy are "imaginary." And Mr. Ryan called them a "fad." You just saw Rob. He looks pretty real to me. (Laughter.) I wasn't imagining him up here talking, was I? (Laughter.) He has been in the wind energy business for nearly 20 years. He and his wife Tara now have 27 employees. Nearly 7,000 jobs in Iowa depend on the wind industry. (Applause.) These jobs aren't fads; they're our future. (Applause.)

It's time to stop giving a $4 billion taxpayer subsidy to oil companies that are making money every time you go to the pump. (Applause.) And let's give some tax breaks to wind energy and homegrown energy and biofuels that are creating jobs right here in Iowa. That's the choice in this election. That's what we're fighting for. (Applause.)

We've got a different view when it comes to higher education. We're at a great small college here in Iowa. (Applause.) Well, a young person asked my opponent, hoping to go to college, how he could help. He said, you know what, borrow money from your parents. (Laughter.) That's not an answer. That's not -- I guess it is an answer; it's not a good answer -- (laughter) -- to young people who are hoping to go to college or start a business.

My view is America has to lead once again when it comes to educating our kids and training our workers for the jobs of tomorrow. (Applause.) So let's help more young people afford the kind of education they can get here at Morningside. (Applause.) Let's help more young people and some not-so-young people go to community colleges, and get trained in the skills that employers are looking for right now. (Applause.)

We created a tax credit for middle-class families trying to send their kids to college -- up to $10,000 over four years in college tuition -- because I believe that in America, higher education is no longer a luxury. It's a necessity that every family should be able to afford. (Applause.) That's the path we should be following.

And you know what, it is up to you whether we go back to a health care system that lets insurance companies decide who to cover, when to cover it, whether they can drop you of your coverage whenever you need it most, or whether we keep moving forward with a law that is already cutting costs and covering more people and saving lives. (Applause.) They call it Obamacare. I like that name, because I do care. (Applause.) I care about all the people that are being helped, all the folks who are going to be helped.

And maybe they want to run on their "don't care" plan. But because of this law, nearly 7 million young people are able to stay on their parent's plans. Your grandparents are saving money on their medicine. Women have gained access to preventive care like mammograms and contraception. (Applause.) We don't need to refight the battles of the last four years. We need to go forward. (Applause.) We need to go forward.

Now, this November, you get to decide the future of this war in Afghanistan. Governor Romney had nothing to say about Afghanistan last week -- didn't mention it, didn't offer a plan in terms of how he might end the war or if he's not going to end it. He's got to let the American people know -- because by the end of this month, we will have brought 33,000 of our troops home. (Applause.)

When I ended the war in Iraq, he said it was "tragic." But you know what, I promised I was going to end that war -- and we did. (Applause.) I said we'd take out al Qaeda and go after bin Laden -- and we did. (Applause.) I put forward a specific plan to bring our troops home from Afghanistan by the end of 2014. We are in the process of doing that right now. And when I say I'm going to bring them home, you know they're going to come home. (Applause.)

And as long as I am Commander-in-Chief, when they get home, they know that we will serve our veterans as well as they've served us, because nobody who fights for this country should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads, or decent health care when they come home. (Applause.) That's a promise we will keep.

On issue after issue, Governor Romney and Congressman Ryan, they're going to take us backwards. The story of America is going forward. That's what we do. We go forward. (Applause.)

You will have the opportunity in two months to choose a path that will lead us to a better future. But I have to tell you over the next two months the other side will spend more money than we have ever seen in our lifetimes. And it's basically the same thing they said a few nights ago -- the economy is doing bad, it's Obama's fault. They won't tell you their plan because they know their plan won't work. Go figure that raising taxes on middle-class families to pay for a tax cut for me and Mr. Romney is not going to fly too well.

So what they're counting on is if they can just feed enough negative information out there, you will get so discouraged that at some point you'll decide your vote doesn't matter, that you can't compete with the $10 million checks from wealthy donors.

But you know what, I'm counting on something different. I'm counting on you. I need your help. (Applause.) I need your help Sioux City. I need your help, Iowa. (Applause.)

First of all, if you're not already registered, I need you to register to vote. Young people who are in the audience -- you know who you are -- you need to go to GottaRegister.com. Now, that is not "got to," it's "gotta" -- g-o-t-t-a-register.com. Make sure you register to vote. Then you can go to GottaVote.com -- that's not "got to" vote, "gotta" vote -- to find out how to cast your ballot early. Because in Iowa you don't have to wait until November 6th to vote. You can be among the first to vote in this election, starting on September 27th. (Applause.) So that's GottaRegister and that's GottaVote.

And the reason you've got to register and you've got to vote is because we've got more work to do. (Applause.) We've got more good jobs to create. We've got more homegrown energy to generate. We've got more young people to send to great colleges like this one. We've got more great teachers we've got to hire. (Applause.) We've got more good schools that we've got to build. We've got more troops we've got to bring home. We've got more veterans we got to take care of. (Applause.) We've got more doors of opportunity that we have to open to every single American that's willing to work through them. (Applause.) And we have come too far to turn back now. (Applause.)

That's why I'm asking for your vote. That's why I'm working for a second term. (Applause.) And if you are willing to stand with me and work with me and make phone calls with me and knock on some doors with me -- if you're willing to vote for me this November, we're going to win Woodbury County. (Applause.) We will win the state of Iowa. We will win this election. We will finish what we started, and we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you. And God bless the United States of America.

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Henry Gonzalez Convention Center
San Antonio, Texas

12:45 P.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, San Antone! (Applause.) Hello, Texas! (Applause.) Well, thank you so much. Everybody have a seat. Have a seat. It is good to be with all of you, good to be back in San Antonio. (Applause.)

A couple of people I want to acknowledge who helped to make this day possible. First of all, your outstanding Mayor, Julian Castro. (Applause.) Somebody whose name I know you're familiar with because we are in the Henry Gonzalez Convention Center -- a great friend, outstanding leader, great Congressman -- Charlie Gonzalez is in the house. (Applause.) Another fighter for working people -- Lloyd Doggett is here. (Applause.) One of my national co-chairs and just a great friend and a great advocate -- and a really good actress, too -- Eva Longoria. (Applause.) And finally, our FuturoFund co-chair and a wonderful friend and supporter -- Henry Muñoz. (Applause.)

Now, this is my last campaign. It's true, I'm term-limited up. (Laughter.) And that got me thinking about some of my first campaigns. I know that Charlie and Julian and others, they think back to your first campaigns. And back then, I didn't have Air Force One. (Laughter.) Didn't have a motorcade, no helicopter. I did the driving myself, and we didn't even have MapQuest -- (laughter) -- I'd have to unfold the maps. And Illinois, like Texas, is a big state, so I'd have to travel all across the state, and you'd go from urban neighborhoods to rural communities, suburbs. You'd meet folks from every walk of life -- black, white, Latino, Asian, Native American.

And wherever I traveled, what I discovered was that there was a common theme to everyone's story. If I met an elderly couple, I'd think back to my grandparents, and how my grandfather fought in Patton's Army in World War II, and my grandmother worked on a bomber assembly line. And when my grandfather came back home, he was able to attend college on the GI Bill, and they were able to buy their first home with an FHA loan. And I'd think about the distance they'd traveled from the small towns in Kansas, where they had been born.

And if I met a single mom I'd think about my mother, who had to raise me and my sister basically by herself, with some help from my grandparents, because my father had left, so that I didn't even know him, and how she had to work and go to school and look after her kids. But with the help of grants and scholarships, she was able to get an outstanding education and, more importantly from her perspective, give me and my sister a great education. And I thought about how much that would be possible in some other place.

And if I met a working family, I'd think about Michelle's family. Her dad had multiple sclerosis, so by the time I met him, he could barely walk, had to use two canes, and had to wake up an hour earlier than everybody else to get dressed before going to work. He worked at a water filtration plant, blue-collar worker. And Michelle's mom stayed at home when the kids were young, and then worked as a secretary. But Michelle's dad, despite his disability, never missed a day of work, and went to every dance recital and every basketball game, and had just a great joy about him.

And so all across the state of Illinois, I would be traveling and I'd meet people, and I'd say, you know what, their story is my story. And then when I began to run for President I traveled all across the country, including here in Texas -- I'd realize, well, the stories I've been hearing in Illinois, those are America's story. And at the heart of that story was a basic idea, which is, in this country, unlike any other, the basic bargain that binds us together is the idea that if we work hard, if we're responsible, then you can get ahead; that you're endowed by our Creator with certain inalienable rights like liberty, but also the pursuit of happiness -- not a guarantee, but the chance to get ahead if you work hard.

And so generation after generation, parents, grandparents, great-grandparents toiling against all odds, understanding that at some point this hard work would pay off and they could climb their way into a middle class. And that middle class didn't just have to do with how much money you had in your bank account. It had to do with the idea that you could always find a job that supported a family, and you wouldn't go bankrupt when you got sick, and you could buy a home to call your own, and you could make sure your kids had a good education. Maybe you take a vacation once in a while -- nothing fancy, but time to spend with those you love. And you could retire with dignity and respect. And most of all, you could expect that your children could aspire to things that you never even imagined.

That was the heart -- that is the heart of the American idea. This basic idea that no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter what your last name is, here in America, you can make it if you try.

And in 2008, when I ran for President and so many of you supported me, we ran because we believed in that idea and we believed that that basic bargain had been fraying. We had seen a decade in which hard work wasn't paying off for too many people. So people were working harder than ever, but the cost of living, gas, college, health care, all were going up; incomes, wages flat-lining. We'd gone from surplus to record deficits, job growth stagnant.

And so what compelled us together to make this effort was specific issues, but it was also, how do we get that idea back for the vast majority of Americans? And what we didn't know at the time was, is that we were looking at the worst financial crisis in a generation -- the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression. And so millions of people were losing their jobs even as I was wrapping up the campaign. And people lost their homes, and more and more folks struggled, and it felt as if that dream was slipping even further away.

But we have not been deterred. As much work as we still have to do, over the last three and a half years that focus on how do we build a middle class that is strong and secure and growing, that has remained my central focus. (Applause.) And even as we've created 4.5 million new jobs and 500,000 jobs in manufacturing, and stabilized the financial system -- all the steps we've taken without much cooperation from the other side -- that's still been our North Star.

And what's always helped me every single day move forward is the recognition and the belief and the understanding that although the times have been tough, the American people have been tougher -- (applause) -- and that for everything that happened during that financial crisis and the recession that followed, America's fundamental character did not change. (Applause.) People's willingness to work hard did not change. People's ability to bounce back from adversity had not changed. (Applause.)

And now, as we look out at the future, the question is, how do we best fulfill that goal, that aim that we set for ourselves in 2008? For all the progress we've made, we did not embark on this journey just to get back to where we were in 2007. We worked hard because we want a country where everybody gets a fair shot and everybody is doing their fair share and everybody is playing by the same set of rules. (Applause.) That's why I ran for President in 2008. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, as we think about this election, understand that the challenges we face are solvable. Sometimes it's fashionable among the pundits to say, well, America is in decline, or our best days are behind us. You hear that periodically. This isn't the first time we've heard that about America. And I could not disagree more, because there's not a problem out there that we can't solve. The problem is not that we don't have technical solutions or big ideas to tackle these challenges. The problem is we've got a stalemate in Washington right now. And it's more than just a difference between two candidates, more than just a difference between two political parties. It is two fundamentally different visions about how to move America forward.

My opponent and his allies in Congress, they believe that prosperity comes from the top down. They believe that if we keep in place the Bush tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans and then we add on top of that another $5 trillion of tax cuts -- most of which would go to people who don't need tax cuts and, frankly, aren't even asking for them -- if we do all that, even if it means gutting education investments, even if it means slashing transportation, even if it means that we're not able to take care of our veterans as effectively, even if it means that we're not investing in basic science and research, even if it means that Medicare we've got to voucherize -- even if we do all those things, they still believe that those tax cuts that benefit folks at the top will result in everybody being better off. That's their basic economic theory. It's not complicated.

They've got one other element to it, in fairness. They also say they want to eliminate regulations on insurance companies and Wall Street banks -- regulations we put in place to protect consumers from unscrupulous mortgage practices, and that take regulations off of polluters. If we do those things along with the tax cuts, the market will be freed up, government is out of the way, and happy days are here again. That's their theory.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: And don't take my word for it -- go to their websites. Look at the budget that was passed by the House Republicans. That's their theory. That's what it boils down to.

Now, it is a theory -- (laughter) -- and some of you might be persuaded by this theory if it hadn't been for the fact that we just tried it. (Laughter and applause.) We spent almost a decade doing what they prescribed. And how did it turn out? We didn't see greater job growth. We didn't see middle-class security. We saw the opposite. And it all culminated in the worst financial crisis in our lifetimes -- precisely because there were no regulations that were adequate to the kinds of recklessness that was being carried out.

So I don't know about you, I don't know how you guys operate in your life, but my general rule is if I do something and it doesn't work -- (laughter) -- I don't go back to doing it. (Applause.) We don't go backwards, we go forwards.

So I've got a different idea. I don't believe in top-down economics; I believe in middle-out economics. I believe in bottom-up economics. (Applause.) I believe in fighting on behalf of working families and giving them opportunity and putting some money in their pockets -- because when we do that, everybody does better, folks at the bottom, folks in the middle and folks at the top.

That's not a Democratic idea. That's an American idea. (Applause.) That's what built this country. That's what made us into an economic superpower. (Applause.)

So let's just be more specific about some contrasts here. My opponent thought it was a good idea to "let Detroit go bankrupt." With a million jobs at stake, I disagreed. I wanted to make a bet on America's workers and American industry and American manufacturing. And three and a half years later, the auto industry is back. GM is number one; Ford and Chrysler are selling cars. (Applause.) That's my vision for America.

And this is not unique to the auto industry. I want advanced manufacturing locating here in San Antonio. (Applause.) I want us to be making things here in the United States of America, so I want to end tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Let's give tax breaks to companies that are investing right here in Texas, right here in the United States of America. (Applause.) Let's put American workers back to work selling goods stamped with three proud words: Made in America. That's my vision for America. (Applause.)

My opponent has a different idea. His main calling card for wanting to be President is his private sector experience. So we asked the voters to examine that experience. He invested -- made money investing in companies that had been called "pioneers" of outsourcing. I don't want pioneers of outsourcing in the White House; I want somebody who believes in insourcing. Let's bring those jobs back home. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

In 2008, I made a promise we'd end the war in Iraq -- we ended it. (Applause.) I promised to go after bin Laden -- we got him. (Applause.) We're transitioning out of Afghanistan and starting to bring our troops home. And what I've said is, as we wind down these wars, let's take half the money that we spent on war to pay down the deficit; let's use the other half to do some nation-building here at home. (Applause.)

Now, Mr. Romney disagrees with me on this -- said it was "tragic" the way I ended the war in Iraq -- the way I ended the war in Iraq, doesn't want to set a timetable for ending the war in Afghanistan. But, you know, I'm looking around this country and I know from our history, from world history, that no nation has always been stronger than its economy. That's an issue of our national defense.

And so because of our outstanding men and women in uniform, we know that we've got the greatest military on Earth, but we also have to have the best economy on Earth to support those troops. (Applause.) And that means, let's start investing, rebuilding roads and rebuilding bridges and laying broadband lines into rural communities. Let's rebuild schools that are overcrowded and give them state-of-the-art science labs. (Applause.) And let's rebuild our ports and our runways. (Applause.)

That's what America is about, is rebuilding. And we've got thousands of construction workers out there that are ready to get to work. Let's put them to work. (Applause.) That will be good for our economy, and over the long term will be good for our strength. That's a difference between myself and my opponent.

As long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we're going to make sure that our veterans are properly cared for. (Applause.) And we have expanded our funding and improved how we are working with our veterans. But we've got more work to do and that requires resources. We're sure not going to spend that money better on tax cuts for me. (Laughter.) I want to make sure that a young man or woman who has served our country, who has fought for us, they shouldn't have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. (Applause.)

I'm running to make sure that America has the best education system on Earth -- (applause) -- from pre-K all the way to post-graduate. And that means hiring new teachers, especially in math and science. And it means building on the work we've already done to make sure that student loan rates don't double, to make sure that middle-class families are getting tuition tax credits. Now we've got to reduce the cost of college, make it more affordable to everybody. (Applause.) I want to expand opportunities for 2 million young people to go to community colleges so they can get trained on the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. (Applause.) Because today education is not a luxury, today a higher education is an economic imperative for the 21st century. And I want to make sure that the United States of America once again has the highest percentage of college graduates, because that is going to help determine who wins the race in this global economy in the 21st century. (Applause.) And I want America to be number one. That's why I'm running for President of the United States. (Applause.)

On almost every issue, there's a stark contrast between my vision and my opponent's. When it comes to housing, he wants to just let foreclosure bottom out. I don't think that's a solution; that's part of the problem. So I want to actually help families all across Texas and all across the country refinance -- at these historically low rates, the average family could save $3,000 a year, in your pockets. That will not just be good for you, that will not just be good for the housing market; that will be good for the economy. But we need to get

I don't want to go back to the days when whether you could serve your country or not depended on who you loved. We ended "don't ask, don't tell," and I want to make sure that it stays ended because it was a bad idea. (Applause.)

I don't want to go back to the day when women didn't have control of their health care choices. (Applause.) I've got two daughters, and I want them to have the same control over their health care as anybody's sons out there. I believe that's the right thing to do. (Applause.)

And we don't need another four years of arguments about health care.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: The Affordable Health Care Act -- otherwise known as Obamacare -- was the right thing to do. (Applause.) And you know what, they're right, I do care. I care about folks who get sick and go bankrupt. I care about parents who don't know whether or not they're going to be able to get treatment for their kids. It was the right thing to do. (Applause.)

And for all the misinformation out there, it's very simple to describe what's going to happen. If you already have health care, the only thing that you have to do is enjoy the fact that now insurance companies can't jerk you around because of the small print. (Applause.) You have rights. Your kids can stay on their parent's plan until they're 26 years old. (Applause.) Senior citizens are seeing reductions in prescription drug costs.

If you don't have health insurance, we're going to help you get it. (Applause.) And, yes, it's true we expect everybody to act responsibly, so for the 1 percent or 2 percent of people who still don't get health insurance even though they can afford it, we're going to say to them, you can't pass off those costs on to somebody else in the form of higher premiums. (Applause.) You've got to take responsibility, as well.

It was the right thing to do. We are not going backwards, we're going forwards. And 30 million people are going to get health insurance because of it. (Applause.)

We're not going backwards when it comes to immigration. My opponent says the Arizona law should be "a model for the nation."

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: I believe we are a nation of laws and a nation of immigrants. (Applause.) I believe we can secure our borders and give opportunities to people who are striving and working hard -- especially young people who have been raised in this country and see themselves as Americans. That was the right thing to do. We're not going backwards, we're going forwards. (Applause.)

And we're going to get control of our deficit and debt, but not with the plan that these folks are promoting. They say this is the most important issue, the thing they care about most, and then, they propose a $5 trillion tax cut that would mostly benefit folks who don't need it, and would blow a hole a mile wide through our budget.

Now, I don't believe government can solve every problem. Not every government program works. We've already cut a trillion dollars out of our federal budget, and we can do more. But we've got to do it smartly and responsibly. I don't believe that government can help somebody that doesn't want to help themselves, but for all those folks who are working hard every day, I want to make sure that we continue to invest so that young people can go to college; that we continue to take steps so that we've got a great transportation system to move people and goods and services across the country. I want to make sure that we're investing in basic research and science that has given us this technological lead that allowed us to grow and become the economic superpower that we are.

So what I've said is, yes, we'll make some more cuts, but let's ask folks who have been incredibly blessed to do a little bit more, to go back to the rates we had under Bill Clinton. (Applause.) And you know what, that theory has been tested as well -- because when Bill Clinton did it, we had surpluses instead of deficits. (Applause.) We created 23 million new jobs -- and people at the top did really well also.

Like I said, that's been our history -- when middle-class folks are doing well and those striving to get into the middle class are doing well, everybody does well.

And that maybe is what is at the heart of the difference in this debate. See, I believe in individual initiative and entrepreneurship and risk-taking. And I believe that the free market is the greatest system on Earth to create wealth and prosperity. But just like Abraham Lincoln said, there are some things we do better together than we do on our own. (Applause.)

When my grandfather came back home and that generation got the GI Bill that was great for everyone because it upgraded the skills of all of our workers, that wasn't just good for some, that was good for all. When we invested in the Hoover Dam or the Golden Gate Bridge or the Trans-Continental Rail System, or when we sent a man to the moon or invented the Internet, that was good for everybody.

There are some things we do better together. And we rise or fall as one nation. (Applause.) That's what I believe. That's what our history tells us. That's what our future demands. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

So let me just say this. In the next four months -- you guys won't see them because you're not considered one of the battleground states, although that's going to be changing soon -- (applause) -- but there's going to be more money spent than we've ever seen before. Folks writing $10 million checks to try to beat me, running ads with scary voices -- (laughter) -- and basically one message. I mean, it's a very simple message. Their message is: The economy is not where it needs to be and it's Obama's fault. So there will be various -- there will be variations on the theme, but it will be the same message over and over again.

That's what they're banking on -- because they can't sell their actual economic plan, so their goal is to see if they can knock us down. More money than we've ever seen before. And it's understandable that some folks get cynical about the political process as a result.

But what you taught me in 2008 is the same thing that I learned in my first campaigns, as I traveling around in my car, going from town to town, talking to people in their living rooms or VFW halls or diners, and trying to get their votes -- and hearing stories about people's parents and grandparents and great-grandparents, some who came as immigrants, some who were brought here not of their own accord, some who worked in mills or mines, some worked on farms, ranches. The thing I learned was that there is a core decency and grit and faith in the American people. And when the American people decide what's true and what's right, and they join together to bring about change, to make this country more responsive to the hopes and dreams of ordinary people -- when that happens, it doesn't matter how much money the other side spends, it can't be stopped. I cannot be stopped. (Applause.)

You showed that in 2008, and I believe you're going to show it again in 2012. (Applause.) I tried to make promises in 2008 that I knew I could keep, and one of those promises was that I wasn't a perfect man and I wouldn't be a perfect President, but I'd always tell you what I thought and I'd always tell you where I stood, and I'd spend every waking minute fighting as hard as I knew how for you -- (applause) -- making sure that every single day I was thinking about how to make your lives a little bit better.

And I knew I could keep that promise because I saw myself in you. And when I saw your grandparents, I saw my grandparents. And when I saw your kids, I saw my kids. And I've kept that promise. And I still believe in you. (Applause.)

And if you still believe in me, and you're willing to stand up, and knock on doors and make phone calls, and get out there and fight on behalf of a vision in which every Americans has opportunity to pursue their dreams -- (applause) -- I promise you, we will finish what we started in 2008. We will not be going backwards, we will be going forwards. We will win this election. (Applause.) And we will remind the world just why it is that the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. God bless the great state of Texas and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

October 9,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

The Ohio State University
Columbus, Ohio

5:08 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Buckeyes! (Applause.) O-H!

AUDIENCE: I-O!

THE PRESIDENT: O-H!

AUDIENCE: I-O!

THE PRESIDENT: O-H!

AUDIENCE: I-Q!

THE PRESIDENT: Well, can everybody please give Sonia a big round of applause for that great introduction? (Applause.) And it is good to see my friend and one of the finest United States senators we've got today -- your Senator, Sherrod Brown, is in the house. (Applause.) Your Mayor, Michael Coleman, is here. (Applause.) Your next congresswoman, Joyce Beatty, is here. (Applause.)

will.i.am is in the house. (Applause.) A man who sometimes looks like he's been to outer space. (Laughter.) I am so grateful -- he has been such a great friend for a long time. And we also have a man who has actually been to outer space -- John Glenn in the house! (Applause.)

Now, before I begin, Buckeyes, I've got a question for you -- are you registered to vote?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Because if you're not, today is the last day you can register. Now, I know it's easy to procrastinate in college. I procrastinated a lot. But we've made it easy. You go to Vote.BarackObama.com to register yourself. And you've got until 9:00 p.m. tonight. No extensions. No excuses. I know you guys are up at 9:00 p.m. (Laughter.) As you get older you start thinking about sleeping around 9:00 p.m., but you guys are just getting started.

If you are registered, you can vote right now, today. Just go to Vote.BarackObama.com to find out where. All right? (Applause.) All right?

AUDIENCE: All right!

THE PRESIDENT: All right. Now, even better, grab your friends, grab everybody in your dorm, grab your fraternity or sorority -- (applause) -- join will.i.am right after this event because he's heading to an early vote location where you can register and vote in the same place right now. (Applause.) There are buses around the corner that can get you there and back. So don't wait. Do not delay. Go vote today. What do you think? (Applause.)

All right, Buckeyes, we need you. (Applause.) We need you fired up --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back, but I need you voting. (Applause.) I need you fired up. I need you ready to go to vote. Because we've got some work to do. We've got an election to win. Everything that we fought for in 2008 is on the line in 2012. And I need your help to finish what we started.

Four years ago, I told you I'd end the war in Iraq -- and we did. (Applause.) I said I'd end the war in Afghanistan -- and we are. (Applause.) I said we'd refocus on the people who actually attacked us on 9/11 -- and today, Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I promised to cut taxes for middle class families -- and we have, by $3,600. (Applause.) I promised to cut taxes for small business owners -- and we have, 18 times. We got back every dime we used to rescue the banks, and we also passed a law to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts permanently. (Applause.)

We passed health care reform -- also known as Obamacare, because I do care -- (applause) -- I don't want insurance company jerking you around anymore. (Applause.) I don't want somebody without health care when they've got a preexisting condition.

We repealed "don't ask, don't tell" as I promised we would. (Applause.) Today no outstanding soldier or Marine or Coast Guardsman, sailor, airman -- none of them can be kicked out of the military because of who they are or who they love. (Applause.)

And when you think about, Ohio, when Governor Romney said that we should just let the auto industry go bankrupt, we said no, we're not going to take your advice.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. (Applause.)

And we reinvented a dying auto industry that supports 1 in 8 Ohio jobs and has come roaring back to the top of the world. (Applause.)

Four years after the worst economic crisis of our lifetimes, our businesses have created more than 5 million new jobs. This past Friday, we found out that the unemployment rate had fallen from a high of 10 percent down to 7.8 percent -- the lowest level since I took office. (Applause.) Manufacturing is coming back to America. Home values are back on the rise.

Now, we're not there yet. We've still got too many Americans who are looking for work and too many families who can't pay the bills. There are too many homes that are still underwater and there are too many young people who are burdened by too much debt after they graduate.

But if there's one thing I know, Ohio, it's this -- we have come too far to turn back now. The American people have worked too hard. And the last thing we can afford to do right now is to go back to the very same policies that got us into this mess in the first place. I cannot allow that to happen. I will not allow it to happen. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Over the last four years, I've seen a lot of folks hurting. I've seen a lot of struggle. And I am not going to make -- I'm not going to have us go back to another round of top-down economics. But that's what my opponent is offering. The centerpiece of Governor Romney's economic plan is a new $5 trillion tax cut that favors the wealthiest Americans. He has been pitching that plan for an entire year, stood up onstage in one of his primary debates, proudly promised that his tax cuts would include the "top 1 percent."

But most of the economists who've actually crunched the numbers said that paying for Governor Romney's tax plan either means blowing up the deficit or raising taxes on middle-class families -- one or the other, pick your poison.

Then, last week, Mitt Romney actually said, "There's no economist who can say Mitt Romney's tax plan adds $5 trillion if I say I will not add to the deficit with my tax plan." So he said if he says it's not true, then it's not true. (Laughter.) Okay.

So if it's true that it's not going to add to the deficit, that leaves only one option -- and that's asking middle-class families to foot the bill by getting rid of the deductions they rely on for owning a home or raising their kids or sending them to college.

And as it turns out, most folks don't like that idea, either. So just last week when we were onstage together, Governor Romney decided that instead of changing his plan, he'd just pretend it didn't exist. (Laughter.) What $5 trillion tax cut? I don't know anything about a $5 trillion tax cut. Pay no attention to that tax cut under the carpet, behind the curtain. (Laughter.)

When he's asked how he'll cut the deficit, he says he can make the math work by eliminating local public funding for PBS.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, by the way, this is not new. This is what he's been saying every time he's asked the question -- well, we can cut out PBS. So for all you moms and kids out there, don't worry -- somebody is finally getting tough on Big Bird. (Laughter.) Who knew that he was driving our deficit? (Laughter.) So we're going -- he's decided we're going after Big Bird and Elmo is making a run for the border and Oscar is hiding out in a trash can. (Laughter.) And Governor Romney wants to let Wall Street run wild again, but he's going to bring down the hammer on Sesame Street. (Laughter.)

Look, that is not leadership -- that's salesmanship. We can't afford it. We can't afford to double down on top-down economics. We can't afford another round of tax cuts for the wealthy. We can't afford to roll back regulations on Wall Street banks or on insurance companies. We can't afford to gut our investments in education or clean energy or research or technology. (Applause.) That is not a jobs plan. That is not a plan to grow the economy. That is not change. That is a relapse.

We have been there. We have tried that. We are not going back. We are moving forward. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Look, we've got a different view about how you create jobs and prosperity in America. A strong economy doesn't trickle down from the top. It grows from a thriving middle class and folks who are working hard to get into the middle class.

I believe it's time our tax code stopped rewarding companies that ship jobs overseas. Let's reward small businesses and manufacturers who are making products right here in Ohio, products stamped with three proud words: "Made In America." That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

I believe we can create more jobs by controlling more of our own energy. And after 30 years of inaction, we raised fuel standards so that by the middle of the next decade, your cars and trucks will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.) And today, the United States of America is less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in two decades.

So now it's time to move forward. My plan would cut our oil imports in half, and invest in the clean energy that's creating thousands of jobs all across Ohio and America right now -- not just oil and natural gas, but solar and wind and clean coal technology and fuel-efficient batteries and fuel-efficient cars. (Applause.)

And I'm not going to let oil companies continue to collect another $4 billion in taxpayer-funded corporate welfare every single year. I'm not going to let China win the race for clean energy technology. I want to see that technology developed by students and scientists here in Columbus, by workers and farmers all across Ohio, by patriots here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

And my plan will continue to reduce the carbon pollution that is heating our planet, because climate change is not a hoax. More draught and floods and wildfires are not a joke. They're a threat to your future. And we've got to make sure that we meet the moment. That's why I'm running.

I believe that we should have the best education system in the world, bar none. (Applause.) I would not be here if it were not for the education I was able to receive. I didn't come from wealth or fame, but I got a great education because that's what this country does. It was the gateway of opportunity for Michelle. It's the gateway of opportunity for so many of you.

And now you've got a choice. We can gut education to pay for Governor Romney's tax cuts -- that's exactly what his running mate, Paul Ryan, proposes.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. (Laughter.)

Or we can do what I've proposed -- recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers. (Applause.) Focus on early childhood education. Provide job training for 2 million workers at our community colleges. Cut the growth of tuition costs in half so that you guys are not loaded up with debt when you graduate. That is something we can do. (Applause.)

And by the way, I don't just talk the talk on this; I walk the walk. We took $60 billion that was going to banks and lenders under the student loan program, and we said let's cut out the middleman, let's give the money directly to students. And as a consequence, millions of young people all across the country are getting better deals on Pell grants. We're able to keep our student loan rates low. We have focused on this, and you need to focus on this in this next election because this is part of the choice that you're going to face. (Applause.)

And we can meet these goals together. You can choose a better future for America. I want to use the money we're saving from ending the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, and I want to use that to pay down our deficit, but also to put people back to work rebuilding our roads and our bridges and our schools all across America. (Applause.)

And Governor Romney said it was "tragic" to end the war in Iraq. I disagree. I think bringing our troops home to their families was the right thing to do. (Applause.) If he'd gotten his way, those troops would still be there. In a speech yesterday, he doubled down on that belief. He said ending that war was a mistake. After nine years of war, more than $1 trillion in spending, extraordinary sacrifices by our men and women in uniform and their families, he said we should still have troops on the ground in Iraq.

Ohio, you can't turn a page on the failed policies of the past if you're promising to repeat them. We cannot afford to go back to a foreign policy that gets us into wars with no plan to end them. We're moving forward, not going back. (Applause.)

And every brave American who wears the uniform of this country should know as long as I'm your Commander-in-Chief, we will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. (Applause.) And when our troops take off the uniform, we will serve them as well as they've served us because nobody who fights for this country should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. (Applause.)

And finally, I'll cut the deficit by $4 trillion over the next 10 years. I've already worked with the Republicans and Democrats to cut a trillion dollars in spending, and I'm ready to do more. But we can't just cut our way to prosperity. We're not going to get this done unless we also ask the wealthiest households to pay higher taxes on their incomes over $250,000. And that rate is the one that was in place when Bill Clinton was President -- our economy created 23 million new jobs, the biggest surplus in history, a whole lot of millionaires to boot.

Governor Romney said it's fair that he pays a lower tax rate than a teacher or autoworker who makes $50,000. He is wrong. I refuse to ask middle-class families to give up their deductions for owning a home or raising their kids just to pay for another millionaire's tax cut. (Applause.)

I refuse to pay for that tax cut by asking you, students, to pay more for college, or kicking kids out of Head Start programs, or eliminating health care for millions of Americans who are poor or disabled or elderly. And that's the choice that we face in this election. That's what the election comes down to.

Over and over, we've been told by Governor Romney and Congressman Ryan and their allies in Congress that since government can't do everything, it should do almost nothing. If you can't afford health insurance, hope you don't get sick. If a company releases pollution into the air that your kids breathe, that's just the price of progress. If you can't afford to start a business or go to college, just borrow money from your parents.

You know what, that's not who we are. That's not what this country is about. Here in America, we believe that we're all in this together. We understand that America is not about what can be done for us -- it's about what can be done by us, together, as one nation and as one people. (Applause.)

And that's what we understood in 2008. That was an amazing experience for me, obviously, that election. But I said then and I still believe now that wasn't about me; it was about you.

You're the reason a mother in Cincinnati doesn't have to worry about an insurance company denying her son coverage just because he got sick. You made that happen. You're the reason a factory worker who lost his job in Toledo or Lordstown is back on the assembly line building the best cars in the world. You did that. (Applause.)

You're the reason a young man in Columbus whose mother worked three jobs to raise him can afford to go to The Ohio State University. That happened because of you. (Applause.)

You're the reason a young immigrant who grew up here, and went to school here, and pledged allegiance to our flag will no longer be deported from the only country she's ever called home -- (applause) -- why soldiers won't be kicked out of the military because of who they are or who they love. (Applause.) Why thousands of families have finally been able to say to loved ones who served us so bravely: "Welcome home." (Applause.)

You did that. And so if you buy into the cynicism that says change isn't possible, that the best we can do is more tax cuts for folks at the top and the rest of folks have to figure it out, if you give up on the idea that your voice can make a difference, then other voices fill the void -- the lobbyists and the special interests, the people who write the $10 million checks to try to buy this election, or those who are trying to make it harder for people to vote, the Washington politicians who want to tell women what they're doing when it comes to health care choices when women are perfectly capable of making those choices themselves. (Applause.)

That's what's at stake. And only you can make sure that we move forward. Only you have that power to move us forward. We've always said that change -- real change -- takes time, more than one year, more than one term, even more than one President. It takes more than one party.

It can't happen if you're somebody who writes off half the nation before you even took office. (Applause.) And in -- you know, it's interesting, in 2008, 47 percent of the country didn't vote for me. But on the night of the election, I said to those Americans, I may not have won your vote, but I hear your voices. I need your help. I'll be your President, too.

And, Columbus, I don't know how many folks will be around voting for me this time, but I can tell you I will be there no matter what. (Applause.) I'll be fighting for you no matter what -- because I'm not fighting to create Democratic jobs or Republican jobs, I'm fighting to create American jobs. (Applause.) I'm not fighting to improve schools in red states or blue state, I'm fighting to improve schools in the United States. (Applause.)

The values that we are fighting for don't belong to one party or one group. They're not black or white, or Hispanic or Asian or Native America, or gay or straight, or disabled and not disabled -- they are American values. They belong to all of us. (Applause.)

And I am absolutely positive that we are not as divided as our politics suggest. I still believe we've got more in common than our pundits tell us. I still believe in you. And I'm asking you to keep believing in me. (Applause.)

Ohio, I'm asking you for your vote. And if you're willing to stand with me and work with me, knock on some doors and make some phone calls for me, we'll win Franklin County again. We'll win Ohio again. We'll win this election again. We'll finish what we started, and we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

Thank you, Ohio. Let's go vote. Let's go win this election! (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

B.R. Miller Middle School
Marshalltown, Iowa

4:00 P.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Marshalltown! (Applause.) Hello, Bobcats! (Applause.) Now, I was just told that school, at least for the teachers, starts tomorrow. (Laughter.) Teachers in the house? (Applause.)

So I want to start off by saying thank you to our teachers for the outstanding job that they do each and every day. (Applause.) Your principal, your superintendent, your assistant principal, they're all doing a great job -- which means, students, you're going to have to hit the books, all right? (Laughter.) Going to have to hit the books.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Well, they'll have to hit the books maybe for longer than four more years. (Laughter.) We'll be talking about that.

A couple of other people I want to acknowledge. First of all, thank Kirk for the wonderful introduction. Please give him a big round of applause. (Applause.) I want to acknowledge Mayor Pro-Tem Bethany Wirin is here. Where's Bethany? There she is, right here. (Applause.)

And I want to offer my condolences to the family of the Mayor who just passed -- Mayor Gene Beach. (Applause.)

I've got to tell you, it's good to be back in Iowa, and it's good to be back in Marshalltown. (Applause.) I started in Council Bluffs, and we are driving to the Quads, and we are stopping off a whole bunch of different places. Yesterday I got to the State Fair and had a pork chop and a beer. (Applause.) It was good. I might have another beer today. (Laughter.) Just one. Just one.

But the reason it's so good to be back is because this is really where our movement began -- here in Iowa. (Applause.) In people's backyards, on family farms and school gyms, on people's porches all across this state, we had a conversation about how we move our country in a direction where everybody has opportunity, where everybody has got a shot. And we know that journey is not done yet. We've still got a lot of work to do. So we are now spending another three days driving through the state.

And the reason it's so important is because in some ways this election may be more consequential than the last election. You've got a choice not just between two candidates or two political parties, but between two fundamentally different visions for where we should take our country.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: You're preaching to the choir.

THE PRESIDENT: It's true, I am. (Laughter.) But you're going to have to go then preach to the folks who aren't converted yet. More than any other election, when you go into the voting booth in November, you're going to be making a decision about the kind of America that we have not just for yourselves but for your children and your grandchildren for decades to come.

Four years ago, we came together -- and it wasn't just Democrats, we had independents, we had some Republicans -- because we understood that the basic bargain that built this country was at stake. We had gone through a decade where jobs were being shipped overseas, where incomes were going down even while the costs of health care and a college education and groceries were going up, and it all culminated in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression. And what we understood then was we had to work hard to get back to that basic bargain, that basic deal that built this country.

And it's a very simple promise. It's a promise that says if you work hard in this country, you'll get ahead. If you are responsible, then you can meet your obligations -- to yourself, to your family, to your community. You can find a job that pays the bills. You can have a home that you can call your own. You can be assured that you won't go bankrupt if you get sick. You can retire with some dignity and some respect. And most importantly, you can make sure that your kids get the kind of education and opportunities so they can dream even bigger and do even better than you did. That is what the American promise is all about. (Applause.) That's what we've been fighting for. That's what we've been fighting for.

And we knew it wasn't going to happen overnight. We knew it was going to take more than one term, maybe even one President, to get this country back to the place where everybody has got a fair shot. But we started. And three and a half years ago, we saved ourselves from going into a Great Depression. And 4.5 million jobs have been created, and half a million manufacturing jobs. And the auto industry got saved. (Applause.) We're now at a point where a lot of folks are still struggling. And so we've got to move forward and not backwards. We've got to move forward.

Now, the good news is we've got everything we need to succeed. We've still got the best workers in the world. (Applause.) We've still got the best universities and colleges in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best researchers and scientists in the world. We've got the best entrepreneurs, small businessmen and women, and large businesses that are the best in the world, making some of the best products. We've got everything that we need.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Best President. (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: And we're a young nation. We're a young nation, in part because we've got this incredible diversity -- people are willing to come here from all corners of the globe because they understand there's something special about this place.

And so, for all the naysayers out there and the folks who try to paint things as dark as they can, especially during election time, the fact of the matter is there's no nation on Earth that wouldn't trade places with us. (Applause.) So we've got the tools to make sure that we are living up to this country's promise -- a country where you can make it if you try, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter what faith you are, no matter what race you are, no matter what your last name is, here in America you can make it. That's what we have the opportunity to make sure continues for the next generation. (Applause.)

That's what we're fighting for. That's the choice in this election. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Now, there is one thing holding back, though, and that is the politics in Washington. We've got -- the other side has decided that "compromise" is a dirty word. And they spend a lot of time trying to beat me instead of moving the country forward. (Applause.) But part of it is just an honest disagreement about how we move the country forward.

Governor Romney chose a running mate this weekend, and I know Congressman Ryan. He's a good man -- he's a good family man. But he's got a fundamentally different view about how we move this country forward. He's an articulate spokesperson for Governor Romney's views. He's the ideological leader of the Republicans in Congress. But that vision is wrong.

Look, let me tell you, you can sum up Governor Romney's plans pretty simply. He wants to eliminate --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Everything. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: He wants to eliminate regulations on big banks and corporations, some of which we put in place in the wake of the disaster on Wall Street. And he wants to institute even more tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: The centerpiece of his plan is a new $5 trillion tax cut, a lot of it which would go to folks like me who don't need it. And here's the kicker. He expects all of you to pick up the tab.

AUDIENCE: Boooo --

THE PRESIDENT: No, no, don't take my word for it. Independent analysis shows that if his plan was instituted, the only way you could pay for it would be to have the average middle-class family with children pay an extra $2,000 in taxes. How many people think that's a good idea?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: How many people think that would actually grow the economy?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: But that's his theory. The theory is, is that if folks up here are doing really well, then all the benefits are going to trickle down. The extra $2,000 you'd be paying wouldn't be used to pay down the deficit or the debt that we've already got. It wouldn't be to invest in more teachers or a better school system, or making college more affordable, or rebuilding our roads and bridges, and finding new ways to create cheap energy. No, this $2,000 would be to help finance an average $250,000 tax break for folks making $3 million a year or more.

AUDIENCE: Boooo --

THE PRESIDENT: I got to tell you, we have heard this sales pitch from these folks before. We've heard this trickle-down fairy dust before. It didn't work then; it will not work now. (Applause.) We don't think it's a plan to reduce the deficit. It's certainly not a plan to create jobs and to help families right now.

See, I believe in a different theory. When it comes to taxes, I said in 2008 I was going to lower middle-class taxes. And guess what -- I did. (Applause.) So the average family -- the typical family is paying $3,600 less in taxes than they were when I came into office. (Applause.) So what I believe now is I want to keep your income taxes right where they are for everybody making $250,000 or less -- which is 98 percent of Americans, 97 percent of small businesses. And folks who are in the other 2 percent, who are fortunate enough to be in the top 2 percent, they still get a tax cut for the first $250,000. But after that, we're asking them to pay a little bit more so we can finance things like education and reduce our deficit in a balanced, responsible way. (Applause.)

Now, I still want to make sure that government does its part by being good stewards of taxpayer dollars. So we've cut a trillion dollars out of federal spending -- a trillion dollars that I've already signed into law. We've got an additional trillion that's slated. So we're prepared to make some tough choices on things we can't afford. But we're not going to reduce the deficit by gutting education investments, gutting investments that we make in our infrastructure, gutting our investments in basic science and research that can lead to discoveries in clean energy or lead to discoveries in curing cancer. That's not how we're going to grow this economy and make sure that the middle class is strong.

And, by the way, when I say asking folks like me to do a little bit more -- we've tried that before, too, under Bill Clinton. And we created 23 million new jobs, went from a deficit to a surplus. (Applause.) And guess what, Marshalltown, here's the thing -- it actually was good for rich people, too. Because what happens is, look, when a teacher or a construction worker or a receptionist or a nurse, when they've got a little more money in their pocket, what do they do?

AUDIENCE: Spend it.

THE PRESIDENT: They spend it on necessities. And so, maybe you've got a 10-year-old car and you go out and buy a new one. Or maybe you need a new appliance and you go out and you get a new appliance. Or maybe you buy a computer for your kid as they're going off to college. And suddenly, business has more customers, and those businesses get more profits and they hire more workers.

We don't believe in top-down economics. The history of this country has been a middle class-out economics, a bottom-up economics. When everybody is doing well, when everybody has opportunity, then we all succeed and the country moves forward. That's what's at stake in this election. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

You see the difference in philosophies on almost every issue. When the automakers were on the brink of collapse, a million jobs at stake, Governor Romney said let's "let Detroit go bankrupt." I said let's bet on American workers. And three and a half years later, the American auto industry has come roaring back. (Applause.)

So we know American manufacturing can succeed in this country -- high-tech manufacturing, advanced manufacturing -- but we've got to make sure we've got a tax code that encourages it. I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Let's give tax breaks to companies that are investing here in the United States of America, hiring American workers, making American products. (Applause.)

Governor Romney has got a different view. He talks about how he has been in the private sector, so he knows how to put folks back to work. But it turns out most of his business was investing on behalf of folks like him and investing in some cases in what has been called "pioneers" of outsourcing. We don't need pioneers of outsourcing. We need folks who are interested in insourcing and bringing some jobs back to Marshalltown, back to Iowa, and back to the United States of America. (Applause.)

Let me give you another example. Kirk was just talking about wind power. I was just visiting a wind farm close by. It's a working farm. It has about five windmills on one property, 52 in this area -- 52 wind farms generating incredible amounts of energy and, by the way, helping family farmers with a little bit of extra income.

Now, Governor Romney has decided that we should end the tax credit that we provide for wind power once and for all. That's his idea. He wants to get rid of it. At a moment when homegrown energy is creating new jobs here in states like Iowa, he wants to bring an end to it. He said -- and I'm quoting here -- he said new sources of energy like these are "imaginary."

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: His running mate, Congressman Ryan, calls them a "fad." Then during a speech a few months ago, Governor Romney explained his energy policy this way -- "You can't drive a car with a windmill on it." That's what he said about wind power. Now, I know he's tried some other things on top of a car. (Laughter and applause.) I didn't know he had tried windmills on top of a car. (Applause.) But maybe he tried it. I would have liked to have seen that. (Laughter.)

But maybe he needs to come to Iowa to learn something about wind power. He'd know if he came here that 7,000 jobs have been created here in Iowa by the wind industry -- more than any other state in America. These jobs aren't a "fad," they're the future, and we've got to be investing in them. (Applause.)

If he came to Iowa, he might know that not only are we putting out these windmills, but, increasingly, they're made right here in Iowa, made here in America. That's not "imaginary" -- that's real. (Applause.)

If he came here to Iowa, he might know that 20 percent of Iowa's electricity now comes from wind energy. (Applause.) Over the past 4 years, America has doubled its -- the amount of electricity that is produced from wind, and this is enough to power 13 million homes with clean and renewable energy. Think about that. It's the equivalent of 12 Hoover Dams' worth of electricity is being generated by wind power in this country. (Applause.) That's something that's worth investing in. That's something we're doing for the next generation. And so are the 37,000 American jobs that are on the line if we let this wind tax credit expire.

So this is a difference between me and Governor Romney. I want to stop giving $4 billion in taxpayer subsidies every single year to the oil companies that are doing just great, and let's take some of that money and continue to invest in homegrown, renewable energy right here in Iowa and all across America that can put people back to work. (Applause.)

I'll give you another example of a difference. I said in 2008 I'd end the war in Iraq -- and I did. (Applause.) I said we'd refocus and go after al Qaeda and bin Laden -- we did. (Applause.) We're bringing our troops home from Afghanistan. All this is possible because of the extraordinary service and sacrifice of our men and women in uniform. (Applause.) So we've made some historic investments in the VA. My attitude is anybody who has fought for America, they shouldn't have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. (Applause.) We've got to serve them as well as they serve us.

But we also need to make sure that folks coming home, they're coming back to a vibrant economy. So what I've said is let's take half of the money that we're saving after a decade of war and let's put people back to work. Let's create a Veterans Jobs Corps that can hire police officers and firefighters in communities that need them. (Applause.) Let's get a whole bunch of construction workers to rebuild our roads and our bridges, our ports and our airports. (Applause.) Let's rebuild our schools. Let's lay broadband lines into rural communities. Those investments are good now because they put people back to work, and that means folks have got more money in their pockets. And what do they do when they've got more money in their pockets?

AUDIENCE: Spend it!

THE PRESIDENT: They spend it. And suddenly, businesses have more customers. But it's also good for the long run, because if we've got the best roads, the best bridges, the best airports, the fastest broadband lines, the best wireless networks, the best transmission lines -- all that makes us more productive, and it means our economy is going to grow in the future. So why wouldn't we start now? That's what we need to be investing in.

So, look -- one more difference. When it comes to education, I believe that nothing is more important than making our kids competitive in the 21st century economy. Our young people, they're not just competing against folks in North Carolina or New Hampshire; they're now competing against folks in India and China.

So I want to make sure that we're helping school districts hire and retain the best teachers -- especially in math and science. I want to make sure that we're creating 2 million more slots in community colleges so folks can get trained in the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. And I want to make college more affordable for young people. We have already made progress on this front. (Applause.) And I'm not just talking about four-year colleges, I'm talking about two-year community colleges, getting advanced training.

But the point is that some form of higher education, it is no longer a luxury, it is an economic necessity in the 21st century. And I want to make sure every young person in America and every young person in Marshalltown can take advantage of those opportunities. That's part of what this election is all about. (Applause.)

Governor Romney wants to repeal Obamacare.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: First of all, I don't mind the term Obamacare. I like it, because I do care. That's why we passed the bill.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: And because of it, 6.5 million young people can stay on their parent's plan. (Applause.) Because of it, we've got millions of seniors out there who are seeing more discounts on their prescription drugs, and we're closing the doughnut hole. Because of what we're doing, more people are getting preventive care. Because of what we're doing, insurance companies can't drop you right when you need insurance most just because of some fine print. (Applause.)

So maybe Governor Romney wants to spend the next three years rearguing what we've been arguing about for the last three years, but the Supreme Court has spoken -- we are implementing this law. We are moving forward. We are not going backwards. That is a choice in this election. That's why I'm running for a second term as President. (Applause.)

We're not going to undo the reforms we've put into place to make sure Wall Street doesn't ask for another taxpayer-funded bailout. We're not going to go back to the days when folks, to serve this country, it depended on who they loved. If they love this country, they should be able to serve this country -- period. (Applause.)

We're going to make sure that young people who are brought to this country when they were very young and have grown up as Americans, that they have an opportunity to contribute here in America, the country that they love. (Applause.) We're not going backwards. We're going forward. (Applause.)

Now, I have to tell you that over the course of the next three months, though, you will see more money spent by the other side than we've ever seen in history. And I don't want to lie. I mean, we're raising money -- but these folks are writing $10 million checks. I mean, they've got some friends in -- with a lot of money. And we are seeing all these ads -- and you notice they don't really have a plan? I mean, you don't see these ads saying what they're going to do, because they know that their plan would not sell.

So instead, what they're going to do is just repeat over and over again the same things that they've been saying for the last three and a half years, and that is, the economy is not doing as well as it should and it's Obama's fault. I mean, that's their -- basically, they'll do different ads, but it's the same theme.

And you know, I might be a little worried about it except -- what you taught me, Iowa, in 2008. We have been outspent before; we have been counted out before. But what I've learned is that when the American people cut through the nonsense, when they're paying attention and they're focused, and they think back to their own families and their parents and their grandparents and everything that's made this country great, when they decide we're going to make sure that we've got a government that is not just representing the powerful and the wealthy but just looking after ordinary folks, and recognizing government can't solve every problem, and nobody expects a bailout or a bailout, but we do expect to make sure that together we are doing things that help the next generation -- when the American people start focusing on those core values that have made this country great, I tell you what, you can't be stopped. You can't be stopped. (Applause.) You're the most powerful force in this democracy.

So, Marshalltown, I'm going to need your help. I'm going to need you fired up again. I'm going to need you ready to go. We're going to have to make sure everybody is registered. If you're not registered, by the way, you can get forms online, going to gottaregister.com. (Laughter.) That's g-o-t-t-a. I'm sorry, teachers, but it's "gotta." (Laughter.) It's not "got to," it's "gotta." Gottaregister.com.

But if you guys are ready to work, we'll get this done. Because we've got more work to do. We've got more schools to build. We've got more teachers to hire. We've got more troops to bring home. We've got more roads to build. We've got more opportunity to create for our young people to make college more affordable. We've got a lot of unfinished business.

And I tell you what, back in 2008, I used to say to folks, look, I'm not a perfect man -- you can ask Michelle. (Laughter.) And I tell folks, I'm not -- I won't be a perfect President. Nobody is. But what I did say is I'll wake up every single day fighting as hard as I know how for you; that I will think about you, and I will represent you, and I will fight for you. (Applause.) And I have kept that promise, Iowa. I have kept that promise. (Applause.)

So if you're willing to stand with me and work with me and organize with me, and knock on some doors and make some phone calls with me, we will finish what we started. We will get folks back to work. We will revive the middle-class dream of America. And we will remind the world why this is the greatest nation on Earth.

Thank you, everybody. God bless you. God bless America. Thank you.

For Immediate Release

August 28,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Colorado State University
Fort Collins, Colorado

4:40 P.M. MDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Colorado State! (Applause.) How's it going, Rams? (Applause.) Ah, it is good to be back in Fort Collins. (Applause.) The last time I was here, back in 2008, it was a spectacular day. (Applause.) It was a little later; it was in the fall, and the leaves were turning, and had a little nip in the air -- and I wanted to stay. (Applause.) But, as usual, they had something else scheduled. (Laughter.) So it is wonderful to be here.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. I'm thrilled to be here. (Applause.)

I've got a couple of people I want to acknowledge. First of all, give Haley a big round of applause for the great introduction. (Applause.) One of the finest Governors in the country -- John Hickenlooper. (Applause.) His outstanding Lieutenant Governor -- Joe Garcia. (Applause.) Congressman Jared Polis is here. (Applause.) And the outstanding Secretary of the Interior and your hometown guy, Ken Salazar, is in the house. (Applause.)

So class is back in session. The Rocky Mountain Showdown is this Saturday. (Applause.) And like Haley said in her introduction, we are giving the Rams and the Buffs a second chance to go at it this fall. We've set up a Rocky Mountain rumble to see which school can register more voters. (Applause.) And you guys can get a head start by registering right here, right now.

We've got volunteers all throughout the audience. Volunteers, raise your hands -- there. (Applause.) They've got their clipboards ready. They are ready to go. If you are not registered, get registered. If for some reason these outstanding volunteers miss you somehow, then you can also register online at GottaRegister.com. Now, I understand this - - excuse me, English professors, but this is "GottaRegister"; this is g-o-t-t-a-register. This is not "gottoregister" -- "GottaRegister".

And we need you guys to get your friends and your classmates and your neighbors to do it as well because this is important. (Applause.)

Look, just over two months from now -- 70 days -- for the first time in many of your lives, you'll get to pick a President. (Applause.) Now, the truth is you guys have more at stake in this election than anybody. When you step into that voting booth, the choice you make in that instant will shape this country, the world, your lives for decades to come. And I know that's kind of a heavy idea to lay on you on a Tuesday afternoon. (Laughter.) But it's true. The decisions that we make as a country on the economy, and jobs, and taxes, and education, and energy, and war, and climate change, and the Supreme Court -- these are all decisions that will affect you directly in very personal ways.

And I feel that same sense of urgency because the decisions I make are ones that are going to affect Malia and Sasha, my daughters, for generations to come. (Applause.) And this is the way it's always been. One generation may make decisions, but they're making them not just on behalf of that generation; they're making them on behalf of future generations. And the thing is, Colorado State, your generation can choose the path we take this country on. Your vote will decide where we go from here.

And so as you prepare for November, you've got to ask yourself some questions: Are we going to make sure that good jobs and opportunities take root not in China or India or Germany, but here in Colorado and all across America so you don't have to leave home to find a good job? (Applause.) Will we reward an honest day's work, so that people have a chance to buy a home of their own, and you'll have health care that will be there for you when you get sick, and you'll have the chance to put a little bit of money away for retirement and take a vacation once in a while, and most importantly, be able to give your children a life that's even bigger and better than yours? (Applause.)

Will this country make it easier for future generations to afford a degree, pay off student loans? (Applause.) Are we going to build more good schools and hire more good teachers, so that more kids are prepared to attend colleges like Colorado State? (Applause.) Will this country be one that keeps moving away from foreign oil and towards renewable sources like wind and solar and biofuels that make our economy and planet more secure? (Applause.) Are we going to be a country that leads not just with the strength of our military, but also the power of our diplomacy and the power of our example? (Applause.)

Will this be an America where, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter who you love, no matter what your last name is, you can pursue your own happiness; you can make it if you try? (Applause.)

That's what the last four years have been about, Fort Collins. That's what this campaign is all about, and that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

I know that it's sometimes easy to get a little cynical about politics. (Laughter.) Campaigns seem meaner and smaller, and Washington seems more gridlocked than ever. Every day there's this steady stream of ads, and it's a diet of cynicism -- telling you change is impossible; you can't make a difference; you won't be able to close the gap between life as it is and the life that we imagined for each other.

And, frankly, some on the other side, they make this a political strategy. They tell you over and over again how bad things are and, of course, how it's Obama's fault. (Laughter.) And they tell you that if you believed in change four years ago, your faith was misplaced, you're naive. Last week, my opponent's campaign called you the "lost generation."

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: And they hope that by telling you these things that you'll get discouraged, and that you'll stay home this time, because they know that young people came out in record numbers four years ago. (Applause.)

Well, I'm here to tell you, don't listen to the cynics. Don't listen to the naysayers. Four years ago, we understood that solving our biggest challenges was going to take longer than one year or one term or even one President. But we went ahead and we got started anyway. And we may have a lot of work to do, but we know the path we're traveling. We know where we need to get going, and we know we're going to get there. (Applause.)

We understand that this country is moving forward, and I'm confident we're going to get there because I believe in you. I believe in the American people. (Applause.) I believe that as tough as times are, the American people are tougher. (Applause.)

I believe this generation is full of passion and full of service. (Applause.) I've seen your generation eager to make a difference, whether it's in a homeless shelter or working on an environmental project. And you've already proved that you can do it. You've proved it -- you proved it four years ago.

Four years ago, you believed that we could put a college education within the reach of everybody who was willing to work for it. (Applause.) And because of that faith, we were able to create a college tax credit that's saving families up to $10,000 for college tuition over the course of four years. (Applause.) We fixed the student loan system that was giving billions of dollars of taxpayer money to banks. We said let's give it directly to students. And we were able to double grant aid for millions of students. (Applause.)

When some on Capitol Hill were ready to let federal student loan rates double for 7 million students, we said no. And you helped us, and we beat that back. (Applause.) That would not have happened in Washington without you. That's what your vote accomplished. You helped millions of young people, maybe including yourself, earn a college education. You made that happen. (Applause.)

You believed we could use less foreign oil and reduce the carbon pollution that threatens our planet. And in just four years, we have doubled the generation of clean, renewable energy like wind and solar. We developed new fuel standards for our cars so that cars are going to get 55 miles a gallon next decade. (Applause.) That will save you money at the pump. It will reduce greenhouse gas emissions by a level roughly equivalent to a year's worth of carbon emissions from all the cars in the world put together. (Applause.)

Today, America is less dependent on foreign oil than any time in the last 20 years. (Applause.) We're on track to emit fewer greenhouse gases this year than we have in nearly 20 years. You can keep those trends going. That all happened because of you.

You believed that in America, nobody should go broke just because they get sick. (Applause.) And today, because of Obamacare -- and, yes, I do care. (Applause.) That's why we passed the law. Nearly 7 million young people have health insurance because they're able to stay on their parent's plans. (Applause.) Your grandparents are saving money on their prescription drugs. Women have gained access to free preventive care like mammograms and contraception. (Applause.) Your vote made that happen. You made that change. (Applause.)

It was young people like you who said we can end this war in Iraq. And today the war is over. (Applause.) More troops are at home with their families. They're earning their education through the Post-9/11 GI Bill. They're out there starting new businesses. And nobody will ever again have to hide who they love in order to serve the country that they love, because we ended "don't ask, don't tell" once and for all. (Applause.) You made that change. You made that happen. Your voice made a difference.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: You did!

AUDIENCE MEMBER: With your help!

THE PRESIDENT: I helped a little bit. (Applause.) But this change was because you put in the effort. You put in the time. You had confidence in America's future.

So now we've got more work to do -- to grow this economy, to create more good jobs, to strengthen the middle class. And in November, your voice is going to matter more than ever before. Because this week in Tampa, my opponents will offer you their agenda.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo; vote. (Applause.) That's the best response. Vote. And get some of your friends to vote. (Applause.)

Now, look, the show in Tampa I'm sure will be very entertaining. And I'm sure they'll have wonderful things to say about me. (Laughter.) It will be well-produced; they've hired all kinds of fancy TV producers. The only problem is it won't offer a path forward.

They've got an economic plan that says if you just give big tax cuts -- $5 trillion worth -- mostly to wealthy folks -- so that $3 million -- somebody who makes $3 million a year would get another $250,000 in additional tax cuts --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: -- that somehow prosperity will rain down on everybody else. And some of you are a little young to remember this, but we tried this for a decade; it didn't work. It didn't work then, it won't work now. (Applause.) I don't want to pay for another millionaire's tax cut by raising taxes on middle-class families, and I sure don't want to pay for a tax cut for folks like me who don't need it -- or folks like Governor Romney who needs it even less -- (laughter) -- by cutting financial aid for 10 million students. Our economic strength doesn't come from the top down; it comes from students and workers. It comes from small business people and middle-class families who are out there striving and hustling. Because when they do well, everybody does well. When they've got money to spend, businesses have customers. And then they hire more workers. And then those workers have more money to spend. And everybody does well.

That's how you grow an economy -- from the middle out, from the bottom up. That's what I'm fighting for. That's why I'm running for a second term for President. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: So in just two months, you're going to choose the path we take. And I want everybody -- when you're talking to friends and neighbors, just explain to them what's at stake. Tell them you can choose whether we give massive new tax cuts to folks who've already made it, or do we keep taxes low for Americans who are still trying to make it. I've cut taxes for middle-class families, and for small businesses, and for students -- and I want to make sure that taxes are not raised a single dime on the first $250,000 a year income -- which, by the way, means 98 percent of families and 97 percent of small businesses would not see a tax increase. (Applause.)

That's a choice in this election. Because we're going to have to close the deficit, and the question is are we going to do it Mr. Romney's way, or are we going to do it in a balanced way that says, yes, we cut spending we don't need, but we also ask everybody to do their fair share. (Applause.)

We can choose whether we give up new jobs and new industries to other countries, or whether we fight for those jobs in states like Colorado and Iowa and Ohio -- by investing in the research of our scientists, investing in the skills of our workers and our students, in the innovation that harnesses new sources of energy, that brings about the next generation of manufacturing in places like Fort Collins. (Applause.) That's what's at stake.

You can make a decision as to whether we're going to keep college affordable. You know, Governor Romney has a suggestion in terms of you affording college -- he says, borrow money from your parents. (Laughter.) Now, my suspicion is if your parents got it, they've already given it to you. (Laughter.)

But I don't think that's the path we should be taking. I think we've got to make sure that we help every single American earn the kind of education you're earning right here at Colorado State. Let's help more Americans go to community colleges to get the skills and training that employers are looking for right now. (Applause.)

See, maybe my opponent doesn't understand, but I do. Because Michelle and I, we just finished paying off our student loans about eight years ago. We know what it's like. (Applause.) We shouldn't be making it harder. We should be making it easier. We shouldn't end the college tax credit that we created; we should be expanding it. In America, a higher education cannot be a luxury -- it's an economic necessity that every family and every young person in America should be able to afford. That's what's at stake in this election. (Applause.)

If your friends or neighbors are concerned about energy, you tell them, do we want an energy plan written by and for big oil companies?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Or do we want an all-of-the-above energy strategy for America -- (applause) -- renewable sources of energy. Governor Romney calls them "imaginary." Congressman Ryan calls them a "fad." I think they're the future. I think they're worth fighting for. (Applause.)

This university gets 10 percent of its power -- soon to be 30 percent -- from solar energy. (Applause.) About 10,000 good Colorado jobs depend on wind and solar industries. It is time to stop giving $4 billion a year in taxpayer corporate welfare to oil companies that are making money every time you fill up with a tank of gas. And let's invest that money in homegrown energy that has never been more promising. That's the future, and in America we seize the future. (Applause.) It's good for jobs, it's good for our economy, and it's good for the planet, too. That's what's at stake in this election. (Applause.)

Ask your friends, ask your neighbors: Should we go back to a health insurance system that lets insurance companies decide who and when they want to cover?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: So if you've got a preexisting condition you're out of luck. Or should we keep moving forward with the new health care law that's already cutting costs and covering more people and saving lives? (Applause.) (Sneezes.)

AUDIENCE: Bless you!

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you. See, it gives me a cold just thinking about what they might do. (Laughter.)

Governor Romney, he's promised that somewhere in between his first day and, I don't know, the next day, he's going to sit down and grab a pen, and he's going to eliminate Obamacare.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: This is what's called the "Romney Doesn't Care" plan. (Laughter.) Kick 7 million young people off their parent's plan. Raise prescription drug costs for seniors. Tell folks with prescription -- or with preexisting conditions, you're out of luck again. I

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: I do care. And I think that all of us care, because all of us at some point in our lives might need to get health care and we might not always be able to afford it, no matter how well we've planned, no matter how well we think we've insured ourselves. And when that happens, I want to make sure we live in a country where every single person knows that they can get the care they need and they're not going to have to lose their home or lose their savings because of it.

We don't need to refight the battles of the past. The Supreme Court has spoken. We're moving forward. If somebody wants to help to improve our health care system I'll work with them, but I'm not going to leave millions of Americans out in the cold. That's what we're fighting for. That's what's at stake in this election. (Applause.)

On issue after issue, these guys seem to just want to go backwards. Sometimes they want to go back 10 years, sometimes 20, sometimes 50, sometimes 100. This isn't the time to refight battles that we've already settled. In November you can say that in this century, women should be trusted to make their own health care decisions. (Applause.)

At a time when one of the biggest assets we have is the diversity of our talent and our ingenuity, it doesn't make sense for us to tell young people who have grown up in America, who have pledged allegiance to the flag, who have understood themselves to be Americans, who want to serve in our military or attend our universities, that somehow because their parents were undocumented, they should be sent back to countries they've never even heard of. That's not who we are as a people. (Applause.)

We're not going to go back and reinstate "don't ask, don't tell" like these other folks are talking about. (Applause.) We're moving forward. We don't need to rewrite our Constitution to somehow say that people who love each other and aren't bothering anybody else, that somehow they cannot get married. (Applause.)

That's not who we are. We go forward. We don't go backwards. We don't -- the history of this country has not been to see if we can exclude more people. The history of our country has been to gather everyone together. If you're willing to work hard, if you're willing to act responsibly, if you believe in that American creed, then you're welcome. We're part of a family. (Applause.) And we don't believe in sending people to the sidelines. We believe that the strength of our country, the character of this nation comes from hearing every voice, from harnessing every talent, from realizing that in America we are greater together than we are on our own. And this November, you get to decide whether that remains true.

And it's not just about this country. When we think about internationally, America remains the one indispensable nation. Issues of war and peace are ones where we've always got to be at the forefront. And so you get to decide the future of the war in Afghanistan. Governor Romney says that me ending the war was "tragic."

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: He's criticized me for bring 33,000 troops home from Afghanistan next month. (Applause.) Now, look, I take a backseat to no one when it comes to our national security, but I believe in making sure that we act smartly in how we deal with our national security. I said we'd end the war in Iraq -- we did. (Applause.) I said we'd go after al Qaeda and bin Laden, and we did. (Applause.)

By bringing our troops home from Iraq, by bringing our troops home from Afghanistan, we're going to be able to start doing some nation-building here at home, and that's part of our national security. And by the way, as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, those veterans who served us, we're going to have to serve them just as well as they served us -- (applause) -- because nobody who fought for America should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. (Applause.)

That's what we're fighting for. That's the choice in this election.

I want to thank Colorado State for being so good to our troops, so good to our veterans, helping them earn the opportunity that they have helped defend.

And here's the bottom line, Colorado, if the other side has its way, and they pass this $5 trillion tax cut that's targeted towards the wealthiest Americans, it won't create jobs. It won't cut the deficit. Ignoring inequality doesn't make it go away. Denying climate change doesn't make it stop. These things don't make our future brighter. They won't make your future stronger. And so the ultimate question is, will you choose the path that actually leads to a better future?

You have a chance to prove the cynics wrong one more time. And over the next two months, the other side is going to spend more money than we've ever seen before. They will throw everything they've got, and the kitchen sink. They'll just make stuff up if they have to -- they're doing it already. (Laughter.)

And they will send an avalanche of attack ads and insults. They will try to distract you, and sometimes -- how do I put this nicely -- they will just fib. (Laughter.) And it's backed by $10 million checks. I mean, they've got wealthy donors who like things just the way they are. They're counting on young people to accept their version of the status quo, to accept their version of the way things ought to be, to leave the questions that affect your lives up to big oil and insurance companies, and a bunch of men in Congress.

That's what they're counting on, and so -- so I just want all of you to understand your power. Don't give it away, not when you're young. If you're going to get cynical, wait till you get older. (Laughter.) Wait till you have a few bumps and bruises. But right now, America is counting on you. And I'm counting on you.

Those who oppose change -- those who benefit from an unjust status quo, they've always bet on your cynicism and complacency. But throughout American history, they have lost that bet. They're going to lose that bet this time because of you. (Applause.)

Because we've got a lot more work to do. You're going to have to register to vote. You're going to have to get your friends registered to vote. You're going to have to drag your friends to the polls. You're going to have to refuse to wait for the next person to do it, because somebody is waiting on you. They're waiting on you to bring about this change. They're waiting for you to lead.

Sometimes your parents may be waiting you. Back in 2008, part of the way we ended up winning was because we had a whole bunch of young people telling their parents, you got to get on board. It's time for change. (Applause.)

Yes, we can. Fired up. Ready to go. And I'm still fired up, and I'm still ready to go because we've got more work to do. We've got more jobs to create. We've got more schools to build. We've got more teachers to hire. We've got more young people to send to college. We've got more troops to bring home. We've got more renewable energy to generate. (Applause.) We've got more doors of opportunity to open to everybody who is willing to work hard and walk through them. (Applause.)

That's what's at stake in this election. And that's what's at stake right here in Colorado because if we win Colorado, we will win this election. (Applause.) If we win Fort Collins, we will win this election. (Applause.) We win Fort Collins, and we'll finish what we started, and we will remind the world just why it is that the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Auraria Events Center
University of Denver
Denver, Colorado

1:06 P.M. MDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Denver! (Applause.) Oh, it is good to be back in Denver. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you. Well, I tell you what, we win Colorado, I'll get four more years. (Applause.)

A couple of people I just want to acknowledge. First of all, I just want to say thank you to Sandra for that wonderful introduction. (Applause.) She is one tough and poised young lady. (Applause.) She was generous to stand up for her friend. She was brave to stand up for herself, and an eloquent advocate for women's health. And I suspect she's going to be doing some even greater things as time goes on. So give her a big round of applause. (Applause.)

A couple other people I want to acknowledge -- your own Mayor Michael Hancock is in the house. (Applause.) One of the best Senators in the country, Michael Bennet is in the house. (Applause.) A passionate advocate for working families, Ed Perlmutter is here. (Applause.) My dear friend, campaign co-chair, former mayor, former secretary of transportation and energy -- I'm getting tired just listing his resumé -- Federico Peña is in the house. (Applause.) He's here somewhere. Where did Federico go? (Applause.)

And finally, I also want to acknowledge another campaign co-chair, John Register -- a veteran and Paralympian. We are very proud of him -- John Register. (Applause.)

It's been two and a half weeks since I was last here in Colorado. And, well, many of you know, I was in Aurora to meet those who lost loved ones during that terrible shooting. And I just had a chance to see some of the first responders who helped to save lives and comfort families during that terrible, terrible day. (Applause.) Unfortunately, since that time, we've had another tragedy in Oak Creek, Wisconsin, where six members of our community were killed as they entered into a house of worship.

And so I think we can all acknowledge, we've got to put an end to this kind of senseless violence -- (applause) -- whether it's in Aurora, whether it's in Oak Creek, whether it's in Tucson, whether it's in cities all across America where too many lives are cut short because of senseless violence. This is going to have to stop. And as an American family -- as one American family -- we're going to have to come together and look at all the approaches that we can take to try to bring an end to it.

And I want you to all know that the thoughts and prayers of the entire nation remain with those in Aurora. And even though the perpetrators of these acts have received a lot of attention, attention on them will fade and what will be replaced are the stories of heroism and hope that we've seen here in Colorado, and in Wisconsin, and across the nation. That's what we'll remember. That's what's going to matter. (Applause.) That's what we will value -- the strength and the resilience and the care and the love of the American people. (Applause.)

Now, unless you've managed to completely avoid your television set -- (laughter) -- or your cable is broken, you are aware that there is a pretty intense campaign going on right now. (Applause.) And the reason it's intense is because the choice that we face in November could not be bigger. It's not just a choice between two candidates. It's not even just a choice between two parties. More than any election in recent memory, this is a choice between two fundamentally different paths for our country's future.

And the direction that you choose -- the direction you choose when you walk into that voting booth three months from now will have a direct impact not just on your lives, but on the lives of your children and the lives of your grandchildren. (Applause.)

And that's true for everybody. But it's especially true for the women in this country -- (applause) -- from working moms to college students to seniors. Because when it comes to the economy, it's bad enough that our opponents want to take us back to the same policies of the last decade, the same policies that got us into this mess in the first place, the same policies that saw jobs going overseas and ended up seeing people's wages and incomes going down even as the costs of everything from health care to college were going up -- policies that culminated in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression, and that we've spent, now, three and a half years trying to recover from. That's bad enough. (Applause.) But when it comes to a woman's right to make her own health care choices, they want to take us back to the policies more suited to the 1950s than the 21st century. (Applause.)

And, Colorado, you've got to make sure it does not happen. (Applause.) The decisions that affect a woman's health, they're not up to politicians, they're not up to insurance companies --

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: They're up to you. (Applause.) And you deserve a President who will fight to keep it that way. (Applause.) That's the President I've been. That's the President I will be if I get a second term as President of the United States, to keep moving this country forward. (Applause.)

On the issues that matter, you don't have to take my word for it -- you can take me at my record. Four years ago, I delivered on my promise to pass health reform before the end of my first term. That's what we did. (Applause.) The Affordable Care Act -- also known as Obamacare -- (applause) -- I actually like the name -- (laughter) -- because I do care. (Applause.) That's why we fought so hard to make it happen.

The Affordable Care Act helps make sure you don't have to worry about going broke just because one of your loved ones gets sick. Insurance companies can no longer place lifetime limits on your care. They can no longer jack up your premiums without reason. They can no longer drop your coverage when you need it most. They can no longer discriminate against children with preexisting conditions. (Applause.) And pretty soon, they'll no longer be able to deny you coverage based on a preexisting condition, like breast cancer, or cervical cancer, or charge you more for care just because you're a woman. They can't do that anymore. Those days are over. (Applause.)

This is a law that allows young adults under the age of 26 to stay on their parent's health care plans -- (applause) -- and that's already helped 6.6 million young Americans. (Applause.)

If you're a little bit over 26, it gives seniors a discount on their prescription drugs -- a discount that's already saved millions of seniors on Medicare hundreds of dollars each. (Applause.)

Right now, nearly 13 million Americans are getting a rebate from insurance companies -- that's right, they're sending you a check -- (applause) -- because under the law, we've capped the amount of money that they can spend on administrative costs and CEO bonuses instead of your health care. And when they violate that rule, they've got to send you a check. (Applause.)

Last year, Obamacare secured new access to preventive care like mammograms and cancer screenings -- with no co-pay, no deductible, no out-of-pocket cost for more than 20 million women. (Applause.) Last week, insurance companies began covering even more services. And now most health plans are going to begin covering the cost of contraceptive care. (Applause.)

Now, understand this is crucial for women's health. Doctors prescribe contraception not just for family planning but as a way to reduce the risk of ovarian and other cancers. And it's good for our health care system in general, because we know the overall cost of care is lower when women have access to contraceptive services.

And listen, we recognize that many people have strongly held religious views on contraception, which is why we made sure churches and other houses of worship, they don't have to provide it, they don't have to pay for it. We worked with the Catholic hospitals and universities to find a solution that protects both religious liberty and a woman's health. (Applause.)

The fact is nearly 99 percent of women have relied on contraception at some point -- and more than half of all women between the ages of 18 and 34 have struggled to afford it.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Thank you!

THE PRESIDENT: And we're changing that. (Applause.) Before health care reform, many health care plans charged high deductibles or co-pays for all these preventive services, or they just didn't cover them at all. And according to one study, more than half of all women put off the care they needed because of that. How many of you have gone without care that you needed or a checkup because you knew that you might not be able to afford the insurance co-pays -- and you had to choose between gas, or groceries, or your kid's new soccer uniform?

I don't think a working mom in Denver should have to wait to get a mammogram just because money is tight. (Applause.) I don't think a college student in Colorado Springs should have to choose between textbooks or the preventive care that she needs. That's why we passed this law. (Applause.) It was the right thing to do.

Now, my opponent has a different view. As Sandra said, he said he would take the Affordable Care Act and "kill it dead" on the first day of his presidency -- "kill it dead."

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Which -- I mean, just understand what this means. This means 26-year-olds -- 6.5 million young people don't have health insurance. The preventative care gone. Seniors paying more for prescription drugs. Preexisting conditions -- you're out of luck. Then he said he'd "get rid of" Planned Parenthood.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Then he said he would have supported an extreme measure in Mississippi that could have outlawed some forms of contraception.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Then he joined the far right of his party to support a bill that would allow any employer to deny contraceptive coverage to their employees. So it would be up to the employer to decide --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: -- your boss telling you what's best for your health and your safety.

Now, let me tell you something, Denver -- I don't think your boss should get to control the health care that you get. (Applause.) I don't think insurance companies should control the care that you get. I don't think politicians should control the care that you get. I think there's one person to make these decisions on health care, and that is you. You should make that decision. (Applause.)

Mr. Romney is running as the candidate of conservative values. There's nothing conservative about a government that prevents a woman from making her own health care decisions. He says he's the candidate of freedom. But freedom is the chance, the opportunity to determine for yourself the care that you need, when you need it. (Applause.) It's the ability to change jobs or start your own business without fear of losing your health insurance. (Applause.)

We're not going back to the days when it was acceptable to charge women more than men for health care. And we're not going back to the days when women with preexisting conditions, like being a cancer survivor, were denied affordable care. (Applause.) We're not going to kick more than a million young women off their parent's plan. We are not going backwards, Denver. We're moving forward. That's why I'm running for President again. (Applause.)

And understand this: At a time when women make up nearly half the workforce, an increasing share of family breadwinners, these aren't just health issues and they're not just women's issues. These are economic issues. They affect every family in America. (Applause.) Think about it. Think about what it means when a woman is the main breadwinner for her family, but she's taking less pay home, doing the same work as a man, just because she's a woman. That's not right.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: When my opponent's campaign was asked if he'd fight to guarantee an equal day's pay for an equal day's work, you know what the campaign said? They said, "We'll get back to you on that."

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: That's not a good answer. "We'll get back to you on that"? He won't say what he'd do about it. You've got my answer -- upholding the principle of equal pay for equal work was the first bill I signed into law. (Applause.) The Lilly Ledbetter Act -- first bill I signed.

And one other thing. Today is the three-year anniversary of Sonia Sotomayor taking her seat on the Supreme Court. (Applause.) Yesterday was the two-year anniversary of Elena Kagan taking her seat on the Supreme Court. (Applause.) So let's be very clear -- the next President could tip the balance of the Court in a way that turns back the clock for women and families for decades to come. The choice between going backward and moving forward has never been so clear. (Applause.)

And let me say this. When I talk about women's issues, I'm talking about the experiences that I've seen in my own life. Everybody knows Michelle. (Applause.) The fact that we are partners in this process, this journey of life, has been my source of strength. And I want to make sure that she has control over her health care choices. I want to make sure that when she's working, she is getting paid the same as men. I've got to say, First Ladies right now don't -- (laughter) -- even though that's a tough job.

You know, my own mom would have been 70 years old this year. And my sister and I lost her to cancer when she was just 52 years old. And she got to meet Michelle, but she never got a chance to meet her granddaughters or watch them grow up. And I often think about what might have happened if a doctor had caught her cancer sooner, or if she had been able to spend less time focusing on how she was going to pay her bills and more time on getting well.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: She is still with us!

THE PRESIDENT: She is still with us. She is in a better place. (Applause.)

I think about Malia and Sasha, and I think to myself, well, we're not going to have an America where they have fewer opportunities than somebody's sons.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: I don't want them having fewer choices than anybody's boys do.

And then, four years ago, as I had the privilege to travel all across this country and meet Americans from all walks of life, I heard so many stories like mine. And I decided nobody else should have to endure the heartbreak of a broken health care system. No one in the wealthiest nation on Earth should go broke because they get sick. Nobody should be able to tell their daughters or sons that the decisions they can and cannot make for themselves are constrained because of some politicians in Washington.

And thanks to you, we've made a difference in people's lives. (Applause.) Thanks to you, there are folks that I meet today who have gotten care and their cancer has been caught, and they've got treatment, and they are living full lives. And it happened because of you, because of your efforts four years ago. (Applause.)

And, Denver, we've come too far to turn back now.
(Applause.) We've got too much work to do to implement health care. We've got too much work to do to create good jobs.
(Applause.) We've got too many teachers that we've got to hire. We've got too many schools we've got to rebuild. We've got too many students who still need affordable higher education. (Applause.) There's more homegrown energy to generate. (Applause.) There are more troops that we've got to bring home. (Applause.) There are more doors of opportunity that we've got to open to anybody who's willing to work hard and walk through those doors.

We've got to keep building an economy where no matter what you look like or where you come from, you can make it here if you try. (Applause.) And you can leave something behind for the next generation. That's what's at stake right now, Colorado. That's why I'm running for President of the United States of America. (Applause.) That's why I'm asking for your vote. (Applause.)

I still believe in you. And if you still believe in me, and if you're willing to stand with me, and knock on some doors with me, and make some phone calls with me, and talk to your neighbors and friends about what's at stake, we will win Colorado. And if we win Colorado, we will win this election. (Applause.) We will finish what we started, and we'll remind the world why America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. And God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

University of Virginia
Charlottesville, Virginia

3:31 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Virginia! (Applause.) Go, Hoos! (Applause.) Wahoowah! (Applause.) I still don't know what a Wahoo is. (Laughter.) But I know we've got some here today. (Applause.)

I want to thank Mathias for the great introduction. Give him a big round of applause. (Applause.) I want to thank my great friends, Tom Perriello -- (applause) -- and your next United States senator, Tim Kaine. (Applause.)

It is good to be back in Charlottesville.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you, Obama!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.)

Before I get started, let me just say that on the flight over here I was on the phone with our FEMA Director, Craig Fugate, and Janet Napolitano, who does our homeland security, as well as some of the governors and mayors who are now being affected and are having to deal with Hurricane Isaac. And I think it's important for all of us -- because we know we've got some prayerful people here -- to just let people on the coast know our thoughts are with you, our prayers are with you.

We are going to make sure that we are doing every single thing that we need to do to ensure that the folks down there are taken care of and have the support and the love of the rest of this country. Because when things like this happen, there are no Democrats or Republicans. (Applause.) There are just Americans. And we stand by Americans in their hour of need. (Applause.)

Now, I know for me, it's great to be back in Charlottesville. And this is an exciting time of year. Class is back in session. Come on, we need a little more enthusiasm, students. (Applause.) The football team has got a home game on Saturday. (Applause.) And in just over two months -- just over two months from now, for the first time in many of your lives, you're going to get to pick the next President of the United States. (Applause.)

Now, I know that there's some young at heart here who are not so young, like me. (Laughter.) But let me just take a moment to speak to the young people here. You guys have more at stake in this election than anybody. When you step into that voting booth, the choice that you make in that one instant is going to shape your country, it's going to shape the world for decades to come.

I know that's a pretty heavy idea to lay on you on just the second day of class, but -- (laughter) -- but it's true. The decisions that we make as a country right now on everything from the economy and jobs and taxes, to education and energy, and war and climate change -- all these decisions -- (audience interruption) -- all these decisions are going to be affecting your lives in very personal way.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years! Four more years! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you. Listen, I couldn't really hear what those young people were saying, but that's good that they're getting involved. (Applause.) But what I'm trying to tell you here is, don't just chant. You've got to vote. (Applause.) You've got to vote.

The decisions we make -- war, peace, the economy, the environment -- all those things are going to be decided. And they're not just going to affect you; they're going to affect Malia and Sasha, too, my daughters. (Applause.)

This is how our democracy works. Your generation is going to have to push the generations in front of you to make sure that they're making the right decisions. Your generation will choose not just between two candidates or two political parties, but will choose the path that we take as a country. And it will affect your lives in very personal, profound ways.

So you think about the questions that are at stake here. Are we going to make sure that good jobs and opportunities take root in China or Germany, or are we going to make sure they take root in Charlottesville and Richmond -- (applause) -- right here in Virginia, and all across America? (Applause.)

Are we going to make sure that an honest day's work is rewarded, so that somebody who really works hard, they can afford to have their own home, and they'll have health care when they get sick -- (applause) -- and they'll be able to retire with dignity and respect. And most of all, they'll be able to make sure their kids are doing better and dreaming bigger than they did. (Applause.)

Are we going to make sure that not just you but folks who follow you can afford to get a college degree and are able to pay off their student loan debt? (Applause.) Are we going to build more good schools and hire more good teachers, and make sure that our young people are prepared to attend colleges like UVA? (Applause.)

Will this be a country that keeps moving away from foreign oil and invests in renewable sources of energy like wind and solar and biofuels -- (applause) -- that help our economy and make our planet more secure? (Applause.)

Will this be a nation that leads not just with the strength of our military, but with the power of our example and fidelity to our values? Is that the kind of country we will continue to be? (Applause.)

And most of all, will this continue to be an America where no matter who you are, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter what your last name is, no matter who you love, you can pursue your own happiness and make it if you try? (Applause.)

That's what my presidency has been about. That's what this campaign is about. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

That's what Tim Kaine stands for. That's what Tom Perriello stands for. (Applause.)

And I know that right around this time, before football season has started, there are some folks who get sick of politics. I understand that. Sometimes the campaigns seem meaner and smaller, and Washington seems more gridlocked all the time. And you've got a steady stream of cynics who are telling you change isn't possible; you can't make a difference; you won't be able to close that gap between how things are and how they should be; you were naïve last time when you had all the hope and change stuff. (Laughter.)

And frankly, the other side, they've made this a strategy. They will tell you how bad things are over and over again, and they'll helpfully add that it's all Obama's fault. (Laughter.)

And what they're hoping is that even if you don't vote for them because you know that what they're peddling doesn't work, what they do hope is, is that you get so discouraged that you just stay home.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: That's what they're banking on. But I don't believe that. I don't think you believe that. We knew that solving our biggest challenges would take more than one year, or one term, or one President. We know we've still got a lot of work to do, but we are determined to get it done. We are determined to finish the job. (Applause.) We're determined to finish the race, and that's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

And you know what makes me -- what makes me confident is you. (Applause.) The American people have gone through some tough times, but the American people are always tougher. And this generation of young Americans, I've seen your passion. I have seen your service. I've seen you eager to make a difference. You're already proved that you can make a difference.

Think about it. Some of you did vote four years ago, and some of you, even if you were too young to vote, worked on the campaign. And you believed four years ago that we could put a college education within reach of everybody who is willing to work for it. That's what you believed. (Applause.)

So we created a college tax credit that's saving middle-class families up to $10,000 on college tuition. We fixed the student loan system that was giving billions of dollars to banks as middlemen. We said let's use that money to double grant aid for millions of students. (Applause.) We won the fight to prevent student loan rates from doubling for more than 7 million students.

None of this would have happened if it hadn't been for you, if it hadn't been for the work that you did, if it hadn't been the faith that you had in your ability to make a difference. You helped millions of young people, maybe including yourself, to earn a college education. You made that happen. And that makes me believe, that gives me confidence. It gives me confidence about the future. (Applause.)

Four years ago, we talked about how we could use less foreign oil, reduce the carbon footprint that threatens our planet. And in just four years, we have doubled the generation of clean, renewable energy like wind and solar. (Applause.) We've created thousands of good American jobs because of it. Today, we're less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in nearly 20 years. We're on track to emit fewer greenhouse gases this year than we have in nearly 20 years. We can keep those trends going. And that is all happening because of you. (Applause.)

Four years ago, you believed that nobody in America should go broke because they get sick. Today, because of the new health care law, affectionately known as Obamacare -- (applause) -- because of that law, nearly 7 million young people are able to stay on their parent's health insurance plans. (Applause.) Your grandparents are saving money on their prescription drugs. Women have gained access to free preventive care like mammograms and contraception. (Applause.) Thirty million Americans will be able to finally have the security of health care coverage. (Applause.) You can't be barred because of a preexisting condition. You made that happen. That's because of you. (Applause.)

Four years ago, we said we'd end the war in Iraq -- we did. (Applause.) More troops are home with their families. They're earning their education, in some cases, with the Post-9/11 GI Bill. They're out there starting new businesses. But that's not the only change we made -- because no one ever again will have to hide who they love in order to serve the country they love. We ended "don't ask, don't tell." You made that happen. (Applause.)

The point is, Virginia, your vote mattered. Your voice made a difference. Change was possible because you made it possible. So you can't get tired now. (Laughter.) Because we've got more work to do. (Applause.) We've got more work to do to grow this economy. We've got more work to do to create more good jobs and strengthen the middle class. And in November, your voice will matter more than ever. (Applause.)

And listen, if you doubt that, then pay a little attention to what's happening in Tampa this week.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. Vote. (Applause.)

I mean, my opponents are down there, they're offering their agenda. And it's a pretty entertaining show. (Laughter.) They've got wonderful things to say about me. (Laughter.) But you know what's interesting is you can listen very carefully, very hard, and you won't hear them offer a clear, serious path forward. You won't. I mean, they've got an economic plan that can be summed up very simply. They say that if we give a $5 trillion tax cut -- which includes giving an extra $250,000 tax cut to people making $3 million a year or more -- then somehow, prosperity is going to rain down on the rest of us. (Laughter.)

Now, many of you were too young to remember, but we tried this for about a decade before I came into office. It didn't work then; it's not going to work now. (Applause.)

I don't want to pay for another millionaire's tax cut by raising taxes on the middle class. I don't want to pay for that by cutting financial aid for tens of millions of students. Our economic strength does not come from the top down. It comes from students and workers and small business owners and a growing, thriving middle class. (Applause.)

That's who we're fighting for. (Applause.) And in just over two months, you can make a decision about which path we take. (Applause.) You can decide whether we give a massive new tax cut to folks like me and Mr. Romney, who don't need it -- he doesn't even need -- he needs it even less than I do -- (laughter) -- or whether we work to keep taxes low for Americans who are still trying to make it.

I've cut taxes for middle-class families. And I want to make sure that taxes aren't raised a dime on your income tax for families' first $250,000 worth of income. That means, by the way, 98 percent of Americans would not see any increase in their income taxes. (Applause.) But that depends on how you vote in November.

You can choose whether we cede new jobs and new industries to countries like China, or whether we fight for those jobs here in Virginia, here in the United States -- by investing in the research of our scientists, investing in the drive of our students, and investing in the innovation that harnesses new sources of energy and brings new generations of manufacturing to places like Charlottesville and Richmond. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: USA! USA!

THE PRESIDENT: USA! That's what we need -- but, again, you can't just chant, you got to vote. (Laughter.)

You will decide whether we can keep making college more affordable, or whether we take my opponent's advice and just have your parents lend you money. (Laughter.) See, I think that we should help more Americans earn the kind of education you receive here at UVA. We've also got to help more Americans go to community colleges to get the skills and the training that employers are looking for right now. (Applause.)

And I'll say this again, just so you know I mean it. Michelle and I, we've been there. We know what it's like. We just finished paying off our student loans eight years ago. Think about that. We shouldn't be making it harder for young people. We should be making it easier for young people. (Applause.) We shouldn't end the college tax credit we created. We should be expanding it. Higher education isn't a luxury. It is an economic necessity for every single American. (Applause.)

You can decide that an energy plan written by and for the big oil companies will be best for America -- that's an option. But I think that the kind of all-of-the-above strategy that we're talking about -- a strategy that includes more American oil and gas, but also more wind and solar, and sets new goals for efficiency and makes sure that we're getting energy and using energy in smarter ways -- that's the key to the future.

One of the things that we've done is develop new fuel standards so that by the middle of the next decade, your cars will get nearly 55 miles per gallon. (Applause.) That's double what they are now. That means you've only got to dig into your pocket to fill up your tank half as often. But not only does it save you money at the pump, it moves us closer to energy independence. It reduces greenhouse gas emissions by as much as all the cars in the world emit each year combined. This is a smart thing to do. It's the right thing to do. (Applause.)

And by the way, my opponent is against that. So you're going to have to make a decision. Just yesterday, my opponent called my position on fuel-efficiency standards "extreme." (Laughter.) I don't know. (Laughter.) It doesn't seem extreme to me to want to have more fuel-efficient cars. Maybe the steam engine is more his speed. (Laughter.) But I think that we set goals and we meet them -- that's what we do as Americans. (Applause.)

Listen, what's extreme about the idea that instead of giving $4 billion a year in tax subsidies to oil companies that are making a profit every time you pump gas -- it makes more sense to keep investing, using that money to invest in homegrown energy sources that have never been more promising. That's not extreme. That's good for jobs. That's good for our economy. It's good for our planet. It's good for our future. (Applause.)

That's what's at stake. That's what you'll decide. That's why I'm running for President. (Applause.)

We could go back to a health care system that lets insurance companies decide who and when and what to cover. But I think we've got to move forward with Obamacare. (Applause.) It's already cutting costs. It's covering more people. It's saving lives.

Governor Romney has promised that sometime on his first day, he is going to kill Obamacare. He's going to sit down, grab a pen -- now, this would mean that he -- by a stroke of a pen, apparently he thinks that he can kick 7 million young people off their parent's plan. He can make prescription drugs higher for seniors.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Suddenly folks with preexisting conditions are out of luck.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: He calls my health care law Obamacare; I call his plan "Romney Doesn't Care." (Applause.) He's running on the "Romney Doesn't Care" platform. (Applause.)

This law is here to stay. The Supreme Court has spoken. We're not going to refight the battles of the last four years. We're moving forward. That's what's at stake in this election. (Applause.)

I'm telling you, on almost every issue he wants to go backwards, sometimes all the way to the last century. (Laughter.) In November, you can say that in this century, women should be trusted to make their own health care choices. (Applause.) You can say that in this century we don't think young immigrants who were brought here when they were children and understand themselves as Americans and have pledged allegiance to the flag should suddenly be deported to countries where they've never been. (Applause.)

You can say we shouldn't rewrite the Constitution to prevent gay Americans who love each other from being able to marry the people they love. (Applause.)

You can reaffirm the strength of the American character. It doesn't come from shoving anybody to the sidelines. It doesn't come from kicking folks to the curb. It comes from hearing everybody's voices, harnessing everybody's talents, realizing that here in the United States of America we are greater together than we are on our own. (Applause.) That's what I believe. That's what I believe. That's what you believe. That's what's at stake in this election. (Applause.)

This November, you get to decide about the future of the war in Afghanistan. Governor Romney said that me ending the war in Iraq was "tragic." He doesn't have a plan to bring home the 33,000 troops who will be coming home from Afghanistan next month. (Applause.) He likes to talk tough, but he doesn't have a lot of details when it comes to these critical issues.

And so what I have said not just to you but, most importantly, to those young men and women in uniform who are serving us every single day is that -- (applause) -- you will know where I stand. When I say I will end the war in Iraq, I will end it. When I say that we will go after bin Laden, we'll go after him. (Applause.) And when I said that as we bring our troops home, first from Iraq, now from Afghanistan, that as long as I am Commander-in-Chief, we will serve our veterans as well as they've served us -- I mean it. (Applause.) Because nobody should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home after they've been fighting for our freedom. (Applause.)

So here's the bottom line. Passing a new $5 trillion tax cut targeted at wealthiest Americans, it won't create jobs. It sure won't bring down the debt -- it will increase it. Ignoring inequalities don't make them go away. Denying climate change doesn't make it stop. (Applause.) Looking backwards doesn't make our future brighter. It doesn't make your future stronger.

In the next two months, you get to choose. And we've got a plan that will actually lead to a better future. And you can prove the cynics wrong one more time.

But the other side will spend the next two months, spending more money than we have ever seen in our lives -- an avalanche of attack ads and insults and distractions and sometimes they just make things up. But they've got a bunch of folks who can write $10 million checks, and they'll just keep on running them.

I mean, somebody was challenging one of their ads -- they made it up -- about work and welfare. And every outlet said, this is just not true. And they were asked about it and they said -- one of their campaign people said, we won't have the fact-checkers dictate our campaign. (Laughter.) We will not let the truth get in the way. (Laughter.)

Think about that. They're counting on young people to just accept their version of the way things ought to be. They expect that you will not be paying attention enough, or you will be distracted enough, or you will be discouraged enough that you walk away, and that means big oil writes the energy bills, and the insurance companies write the health care bills, and politicians in Washington decide what a woman can or can't do when it comes to her own health.

And you know what, I think they're wrong. I am counting on you. (Applause.) I'm counting on you because those who oppose change have always bet on your cynicism; they've always bet on a lack of hope -- and throughout American history, they have lost that bet. And they're going to lose that bet this time too, as long as you register to vote -- (applause) -- as long as you're going out there to vote, as long as you're getting your friends to go out there and vote. (Applause.)

I need you. America needs you to close the gap between what is and what might be. We've got more jobs to create and more good schools to build. We've got more homegrown energy to generate. We've got more troops to bring home. We've got more young people to send to college. We've got more doors of opportunity to open to everybody who is willing to work hard and walk through them. And it all depends on you. (Applause.)

So don't worry about letting me down -- don't let America down. Don't let yourselves down. (Applause.) Go out there. Register. Stand up. And if you do, we will win Virginia. (Applause.) And if we win Virginia, we will win this election. And we will finish what we started. (Applause.) And you and I together, we'll remind the world just why it is the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. And God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

August 9,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Colorado College
Colorado Springs, Colorado

1:58 P.M. MDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Colorado! (Applause.) Oh, what a beautiful day! (Applause.)

Can everybody please give Christy a big round of applause for the great introduction? (Applause.) And then, I want everybody to acknowledge one of the outstanding alums of Colorado College -- (applause) -- an outstanding senator for this great state of Colorado, an unbelievable Secretary of the Interior, looking after our natural resources -- Ken Salazar. (Applause.)

Now --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. I really do. (Applause.)

Now, I have to say, first of all, this looks like a very smart crowd -- (applause) -- which means that you've been spending a lot of time watching our Olympic Games -- (applause) -- and the unbelievable athletes and all the great training -- right here, we've got -- do we have one of our outstanding athletes? (Applause.) Thank you, Colorado, because Colorado Springs has been a training site for all our outstanding athletes. And we're so proud of them. Thank you so much. (Applause.)

And for those of you who are curious, the women are doing pretty good right now in soccer. (Applause.) I know some of you may be -- the game is not over, and some of you may have DVR'd it, so I'm not going to say anything more. (Laughter.) But we're making progress.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Moving forward!

THE PRESIDENT: Moving forward. (Applause.)

Now, even though we've been spending most of our time, sensibly, watching the Olympics, unless your cable is broken, you probably also noticed there's this pretty intense campaign going on right now. And the reason it is an intense campaign is because the choice that we face in November could not be bigger. It's not just a choice between two candidates or two political parties. It is a choice between two fundamentally different visions about how we move this country forward. And the direction that we choose -- the direction you choose when you walk into that voting booth -- is going to have a direct impact not just on us, it will have an impact on our kids and our grandkids for decades to come.

Now, four years ago, we came together -- and it wasn't just Democrats, we had independents and even some Republicans come together because we wanted to restore the basic bargain that made this country great, that built the greatest middle class and the most prosperous economy in the history of the world. And it's a bargain that says very simply, if you work hard, your work will be rewarded. If you work hard, you can get ahead. It's a deal that says if you put in enough effort, if you act responsibly, you can find a job that pays the bills, have a home you call your own. You can count on health care when you get sick. You can retire with dignity and respect. (Applause.) And most importantly, you can provide your kids with the education and opportunity so that they can dream bigger than you ever dreamed and they can achieve things you couldn't even imagine.

That's the American promise. That's the core of who we are as a people. And unfortunately, we had gone through a decade where that dream felt like it was slipping away. Jobs had gotten shifted overseas. Incomes had gone down, when you account inflation, even though the cost of everything from health care to college had gone up. And it all culminated in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression.

So we knew restoring this dream, reinstating this basic bargain was not going to be easy. And we understood it would take more than one year, or one term, or maybe even one President. And that was before the middle class got clobbered by this financial crisis. And a lot of our friends and neighbors lost their jobs, lost their homes, lost their savings -- and it made that dream seem even further out of reach.

But here's the good news. The American people are tougher than tough times. (Applause.) Not only is there a fundamental goodness and decency to the American people, but there's also grit and resilience. And when we get knocked down, we get back up. (Applause.)

And so, for the last three and a half years, we've worked to make sure that we didn't slip into a Great Depression. And we created 4.5 million new jobs. (Applause.) We saved an auto industry on the brink of collapse. And although we are far away from where we need to be -- okay, we'll be okay. I hear you. What will happen is that the medical services -- we've just got somebody who fainted. Which reminds me, everybody, if you've been standing for a long time, bend your knees a little bit. Because this happens every time we have a rally. They'll be okay, just give them some space. And make sure that you drink some water if you've got some.

Now, we know that we've still got a long ways to go -- and the medical folks are coming right here. They're on their way. But, you know, what hasn't changed as a result of this crisis is our character. (Applause.) What's made us great in the past is going to make us great in the future. (Applause.)

We came together in 2008, understanding that we had an urgent mission to make sure that here in America everybody gets a fair shot, everybody does their fair share, and everybody plays by the same set of rules. (Applause.) We're here to build an economy where hard work pays off, so that no matter who you are or where you come from, you can make it if you try. That's what this campaign is about, Colorado. That's what the choice is in November. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, here's the good news. Even though there are no quick fixes, there are no easy solutions -- some of these problems built up over decades and they're not going to be solved overnight -- we've got everything we need to meet the challenges we face. We've got the best workers in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best entrepreneurs in the world. We've got the best scientists and researchers in the world. We've got the best colleges and we've got the best universities in the world. (Applause.) We're a young nation. We've got this incredible diversity of talent and ingenuity. People come here from every corner of the globe, because they believe in our creed. They believe in our ideas.

And so, no matter what the naysayers say, no matter how bad folks try to paint the picture just to sell newspapers or sound sophisticated -- (laughter) -- the truth of the matter is that there's not a country on Earth that wouldn't trade places with the United States of America. (Applause.)

We've got what we need to succeed. What is standing in our way right now is our politics in Washington. (Applause.) It's a bunch of folks who think compromise is a dirty word; who think that the right way forward is to go backwards to the same top-down economic policies that got us into this mess in the first place.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: And, look, Mr. Romney, his friends in Congress, their basic economic plan is really simple to describe. It's not complicated. What they say is, on the one hand, they want to eliminate regulations on Wall Street banks, even after this crisis, or regulations on insurance companies, or regulations on unscrupulous lenders, or regulations that keep our air and water clean. So that's part number one. And then part number two -- big part of their plan -- is to cut taxes a lot more for the wealthiest Americans.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: And the idea is that somehow if you combine these two concepts that this is going to lead to jobs and prosperity for everybody.

That's what they're proposing. I'm not making this stuff up. (Laughter.) Go to their websites. Look at what the House of Republicans voted on, their budget. That's where they're going to take us if they win. That's their idea. And, look, if you believe in that idea, then you're probably not going to be voting for me.

Mr. Romney's -- the centerpiece of his entire economic plan is a new $5 trillion tax cut on top of the Bush tax cuts, a big chunk of it going to the wealthiest Americans. And last week, we found out that he expects you, middle-class families, to pay for it.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Governor Romney's tax plan -- this is not according to me, this is according to independent analysts -- assuming he kept his promise that it wasn't going to add to the deficit, would mean raising taxes on middle-class families with children by an average of $2,000. And keep in mind this would not be to pay down our deficit. It wouldn't be to grow jobs or invest in education or make college more affordable, or invest in science and research or clean energy -- because he wants to gut all those things. He wants to cut away that stuff. Your tax increase would be to pay for another $250,000 tax cut for people making more than $3 million a year.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: How many people think that's a good idea?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: How many people honestly believe that that's going to unleash incredible job growth in this country?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Look, we have tried this before. They tried to sell us this trickle-down tax cut fairy dust before. (Laughter.) And guess what -- it didn't work. It didn't work then; it won't work now. It's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to cut the deficit. It's not a plan to move our economy forward.

We don't need more tax cuts for folks like me. We need tax relief for working families. (Applause.) We need tax cuts for folks who are trying to make sure their kids get a good education, trying to keep their kids healthy, trying to keep a roof over their heads, trying to send them to college.

That's the choice in this election. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States -- because our work is not yet done. (Applause.)

I've got a different idea. Four years ago, I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families. I did that.

(Applause.) The average typical family, their income taxes -- their tax burden is about $3,600 lower than it is now [sic]. I want to keep taxes exactly where they are for the first $250,000 of everybody's income. I've already told Congress let's get it done. We should do it before the election. Now, if your family makes under $250,000 -- which, by the way, is 98 percent of American families and 97 percent of small businesses -- under my plan, your income taxes would not increase a single dime next year. (Applause.) That's my plan.

But if you're fortunate enough to be in the other 2 percent, if this country has blessed you the way it's blessed me, you still get a tax cut on the first $250,000 of income. It's just that after that, we're going to ask you to contribute a little bit more so we can pay down our deficit responsibly and invest in things like helping young people go to college -- (applause) -- invest in basic science and research, rebuild our roads -- all the things that help us grow and make the middle class strong. (Applause.)

And, by the way, this doesn't mean that we don't still have more work to do to make government more efficient. I'm not somebody who believes government can solve every problem. Government has to do its part by cutting out spending that we don't need. We've already cut a trillion dollars -- a trillion -- that's with a "T" -- out of our budget. And we can do more to make government more efficient, more customer-friendly. But that doesn't do enough to bring down the deficit.

So all I'm asking is that folks like me go back to the rates that we paid under Bill Clinton -- which, by the way, you may remember, we created 23 million new jobs, the biggest budget surplus in history -- (applause) -- and we created a whole bunch of millionaires to boot. Because what happens is when a construction worker or a police officer, they've got a little more money to spend, you know what, maybe they go out and buy that new car. And suddenly the car company has more profits, which means that hire more workers -- and everybody does better. (Applause.)

When a teacher or a receptionist has a little bit more money to spend, maybe they go to that local restaurant. Maybe they buy a computer for their kid for school. And now, suddenly, all businesses are doing better.

That's the history of America. When we grow from the middle class out, when we provide ladders of opportunity for those who want to get into the middle class and are willing to work hard to do it, everybody does well -- top, middle, bottom. (Applause.)

We are in this thing together. That's the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

This difference in vision, it shows up on all sorts of issues. When the American auto industry was on the brink of collapse, 1 million jobs at stake, Mr. Romney said, "let Detroit go bankrupt." I said, let's bet on America's workers. (Applause.) And we got management and workers to come together, making better cars than ever, and now GM is number one again and the American auto industry has come roaring back. (Applause.)

So now I want to say what we did with the auto industry, we can do it in manufacturing across America. Let's make sure advanced, high-tech manufacturing jobs take root here, not in China. Let's have them here in Colorado. (Applause.) And that means supporting investment here.

Governor Romney talks about his private sector experience. But he invested in companies that were called "pioneers" of outsourcing. I don't want to outsource. I want to insource. (Applause.) Let's reform our tax code and let's make it simpler. And let's make sure that we're providing tax breaks to companies that are investing here in Colorado Springs, here in Colorado -- not overseas. (Applause.) They're the ones who need tax breaks. Let's give tax breaks to companies that are investing here. It's the right thing to do.

At a moment when homegrown energy is creating new jobs in states like Colorado and Iowa, my opponent wants to end tax credits for wind producers.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: The wind industry supports about 5,000 jobs across this state. Without those tax credits, jobs would be at risk -- 37,000 jobs across this country would be at risk. Why would we want to stop promoting clean, renewable energy that can make our environment better, put people back to work, free our dependence from foreign oil? We should stop spending billions of taxpayer subsidies on the oil industry that is very profitable. Let's keep investing in a clean energy industry that's never been more promising. (Applause.) That's the choice in this election.

Here's another choice. I promised in 2008 I'd end the war in Iraq. We ended it. (Applause.) I said we'd go after bin Laden and al Qaeda. We did. (Applause.) We're transitioning in Afghanistan and starting to bring our troops home. (Applause.)

And so none of this could have been accomplished had it not been for our outstanding men and women in uniform. (Applause.) We are safer and more respected because of them.

But now we've got to make sure that the country they come back to is going on all cylinders. So what I said is let's set up a Veterans Jobs Corps that helps returning veterans get jobs as firefighters and police officers in communities that need them. (Applause.) Let's make sure that they are getting the training that they need. And let's make sure that we take some of those savings that we are spending after a decade of war, let's do some nation-building here at home. (Applause.) Let's put people back to work rebuilding our roads and our bridges, laying broadband lines, rebuilding our schools, putting in new science labs.

I was just down in Pueblo, and we were talking about a water project that John F. Kennedy had signed, authorizing 60 years ago -- 50 years ago. It has never been funded. You know what, under my administration it's getting funded. (Applause.)

There are projects like that all across America. And we can put people back to work right now. That's good for the economy right now -- lower unemployment right now -- but it also lays the foundation for economic growth for decades to come. That's a choice in this election.

I believe that we, once again, should be leading the world in educating our kids. (Applause.) So I've said let's make sure that we're helping local school districts hire the best teachers, especially in math and science. (Applause.) Let's help to provide millions of new slots at community colleges, so people can train for the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. (Applause.) And I want to make college and university tuitions lower so young people aren't burdened with tens of thousands of dollars' worth of debt. (Applause.) We can do it -- because higher education is not a luxury; it's an economic necessity in the 21st century. (Applause.)

My opponent doesn't have a plan for higher education. He doesn't have a plan for homeownership. He was asked, what should we do about the housing crisis. He says, well, we'll just let foreclosures bottom out. That's not a plan. What I've said is let's help all families take advantage of historically low rates, refinance your homes, get an extra $3,000 a year, which you will then spend and will make the economy stronger and the housing market stronger. (Applause.) That's a choice in this election -- doing nothing, or putting $3,000 in your pocket.

I'm running because I believe nobody in America should go broke because they get sick. (Applause.) Mr. Romney says he wants to repeal Obamacare.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Let me tell you, I'll work with anybody to keep improving our health care system. But the Supreme Court has spoken -- (applause) -- 6.5 million young people are able to stay on their parent's plans now. (Applause.) Seniors are getting discounts on their prescription drugs. Insurance companies can't prevent you from getting health insurance if you've got a preexisting condition. (Applause.) Folks are getting free preventive care.

I think it was the right thing to do. We're not going backwards, we're going forwards. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

We're not going back to "don't ask, don't tell". Everybody should be able to serve the country they love. (Applause.) That's a choice in this election. Helping out the DREAM Act kids -- that was the right thing to do. We're not going backwards, we're going forwards. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

All these things tie together. Because my vision is one in which -- whether we're talking about housing or education or rebuilding America -- the idea is you've got to show individual initiative. Government can't solve all your problems. Government can't help folks who won't help themselves. But there are things we can do to make sure that everybody has got a chance, everybody has got opportunity. (Applause.) If everybody is willing to work hard, they've got those rungs on the ladder to have a secure middle-class life. (Applause.)

That's the promise our parents passed down to us. That's why I'm standing here today -- because somebody helped me along the way. That's the promise I want to pass on to the next generation. That's why I'm running for another term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, over the next three months, the other side will spend more money than we've ever seen on ads that tell you the same thing we've been hearing for four years now, which is the economy is not good enough and it's Obama's fault. Basically, they should just have one commercial and they can just run it over and over again, because they don't say anything new. (Laughter.)

And the reason that's their argument is because they don't have a plan, and the plan they've got they can't sell. (Applause.) So they will do their best, like they've been trying to do for the last three years, to just run me down. The problem is they don't have a plan to create jobs. They don't have a plan to strengthen the economy. And they don't have a plan to revive the middle class. And I do. (Applause.) But in order to implement that plan, I'm going to have to have your help.

This election is going to be close. Colorado is going to be close. So I've got to make sure your friends are registered. I've got to make sure you're registered. In Colorado, you can register online. So you got to go to gottaregister.com -- that's "gotta," G-O-T-T-A. (Laughter.)

But we're going to have to work hard. Here is the good news. Here is the good news. I've been outspent before. I've been counted out before. But you know what we learned in 2008 -- when the American people decide that they want to see change, they make it happen. (Applause.) When the American people come together and focus on those values that have made us strong, they cut through all the nonsense. It doesn't matter how much the other side spends -- change happens.

Colorado, we've come too far to turn back now. (Applause.) We've got too many good jobs we still have to create. We've got too many teachers we've got to hire. (Applause.) We've got too many schools we've got to rebuild, too many students we want to send to college. We've got too much homegrown energy we still have to generate, too many troops we've still got to bring home. We've got too many doors of opportunity we still have to open up for everybody who is willing to work hard and walk through those doors. (Applause.)

That's what's at stake right now. That's why I'm running. That's why I need your help. In 2008, I said to you I am not a perfect man and I won't be a perfect President. But I promised you that I would spend every single day fighting as hard as I knew how for you. And I have kept that promise. Because I still believe in you. (Applause.) And, Colorado, if you still believe in me -- if you're willing to work with me and stand with me, and knock on doors with me, and make phone calls with me, we will win Colorado -- (applause) -- and we will win this election. And we will finish what we started. And we will remind the world why America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you. And God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

August 13,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Bayliss Park
Council Bluffs, IA

11:32 A.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Iowa! (Applause.) It's good to be back! (Applause.) Well, it is good to be back in Iowa! (Applause.) I miss you guys.

AUDIENCE: Obama! Obama! Obama!

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you!

First of all, can everybody please give Patricia a big round of applause for the great introduction? (Applause.) A couple other people I want to acknowledge -- your outstanding former governor, now I think the best Secretary of Agriculture we've ever had -- Tom Vilsack. (Applause.) Congressman Leonard Boswell. (Applause.) And Mayor Tom Hanafan. (Applause.)

See, the sun is coming out -- (applause.) I love being back in Iowa. Now, we're starting here in Council Bluffs, but we're going to be heading east and I think I'm going to end at the State Fair. (Applause.) Michelle has told me I cannot have a fried Twinkie. (Laughter.) But I will be checking out the butter cow and I understand this year there's a chocolate moose. (Laughter.) So I'm going to have to take a look at that if I can.

The last time I went to the State Fair, Secret Service let me do the bumper cars, but they said this year -- I wasn't President yet, so I could do that. (Laughter.) But not this time.

Now, before I get started, I just want to say a few words about the drought, because it's had such an impact on this state and all across the country. Right now folks here in Iowa and across the heartland, we're suffering from one of the worst droughts in 50 years. Farmers, ranchers depend on a good crop season to pay the bills and put a roof over their heads. And I know things are tough right now.

The best way to help these states is for the folks in Congress to pass a farm bill that not only helps farmers and ranchers respond to natural disasters, but also makes some necessary reforms and gives farmers and ranchers some long-term certainty.

Unfortunately, right now, too many members of Congress are blocking the farm bill from becoming law.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: I am told that Governor Romney's new running mate, Paul Ryan, might be around Iowa the next few days -- he is one of the leaders of Congress standing in the way.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: So if you happen to see Congressman Ryan, tell him how important this farm bill is to Iowa and our rural communities. We've got to put politics aside when it comes to doing the right thing for rural America and for Iowa. (Applause.)

Now, it's always a problem waiting for Congress. So in the meantime, I've made sure my administration, led by Tom Vilsack, is doing everything we can to provide relief to those who need it. So last week, we announced $30 million to help ranchers and farmers get more water to livestock and rehabilitate land affected by drought.

And today, we're announcing that the federal government will help livestock producers by purchasing over $150 million worth of meat and fish right now, while prices are low -- we'll freeze it for later, but -- we've got a lot of freezers. (Laughter.) And that way, that will help ranchers who are going through tough times right now, and also, over the long term, obviously that food is going to be spent by folks at the Pentagon and other places.

America depends on farmers and ranchers to put food on the table; depends on farmers and ranchers to feed our families. So we've got to be there for them -- not just today, but tomorrow, and every day until this drought passes -- because we are Americans, that's what we do. We take care of each other. And when tough times strike our neighbors, we give them a hand. (Applause.)

Now, that speaks to the larger idea of why I'm here, the notion that I'm my brother's keeper, I'm my sister's keeper, the idea that we're in this together, that was at the heart of the journey that began here in Iowa five years ago. (Applause.) We spent a lot of time on bus tours like this one -- at school gyms and family farms and small businesses across this state - although, I have to say the bus we had wasn't as nice as this one. (Laughter.) We used to get some buses. (Laughter.)

And that campaign back in 2007-2008, it had plenty of ups and downs, but no matter what, you, the people of Iowa, had my back. (Applause.) You had my back. When the pundits had written us off, when we were down in the polls, you believed in me, and I believed in you. And it was on your front porches and in your backyards where the movement for change in this country began.

But our journey is not finished. Not yet. I'm going to spend the next three days driving all across this state just like I did in 2007 -- from Council Bluffs to the Quad Cities -- because once more, you face a choice in November. And that choice could not be bigger. It is not just a choice between two candidates or two political parties. More than any other election in recent memory, this is a choice between two fundamentally different visions of this country and the path that we have to take.

And the direction that you choose when you walk into that voting booth in November is going to have an impact not just on your lives but on your children's lives, your grandchildren's lives for decades to come. This one counts. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Think about this, Council Bluffs. Four years ago, we came together -- and it wasn't just Democrats, it was independents and some Republicans -- because we understood that we needed to restore the basic bargain that made this country great, the basic deal that created the greatest middle class and the most prosperous economy the world has ever known.

And it's a simple bargain. It says if you work hard, your work should be rewarded. If you act responsibly, and you put in enough effort, you should be able to find a job that pays the bills, have a home you can call your own, count on health care when you get sick -- (applause) -- put away enough to retire with dignity and respect -- (applause) -- and most of all, give your kids an education that allows them to dream even bigger than you did, and do even better than you did. That's the American promise. (Applause.) That's the American Dream.

And the reason we came together was because we had seen a decade in which that dream was being betrayed. We had gone through a decade where jobs were being shipped overseas, where you were working harder but making less while the cost of everything from health care to a college education kept on going up. And it all culminated in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression.

And so we knew that restoring the basic bargain that made this country was not going to be easy. We knew it would take more than one year, or one term, or even one President. And that was before the crisis hit and we saw friends and neighbors lose their job, or lose their home, lose their savings, pushing the American Dream even further out of reach for too many working people.

But over the last three and a half years, we've seen America's grit. You folks are tougher than any tough time.

(Applause.) Some workers lost their jobs -- they went back to community college, got retrained and now have got a new job. Small businesses kept their doors open by hook or by crook. And so, slowly, we've seen 4.5 million new jobs created, half a million new manufacturing jobs -- the most since the great -- most since the 1990s.

And what we realized was that no matter how bad the crisis was, one thing did not change, and that is the character of the American people and the resilience of the American people.
(Applause.) And what hasn't changed is our determination to do what we came together in 2008 to do -- and that is to make sure that in America hard work pays off -- so that no matter who you are, or where you come from, or what you look like, you can make it here in America if you try. (Applause.)

That's what this campaign is about, Iowa. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

I told you -- four years ago I said there aren't going to be quick fixes, there won't be easy solutions. The challenges we face had been building up for decades. And that's still true today. But I want everybody to know that we have the capacity to meet every challenge. We've got the best workers in the world. We've got the best entrepreneurs in the world. We've got the best colleges, the best universities, the best researchers in the world, the best scientists in the world. We're still a young nation. We've got the greatest diversity of talent and ingenuity -- people come here from every corner of the globe. They want to be here. So whatever the naysayers may say, or folks who try to make things look dark, listen, there is not another country on Earth that wouldn't trade places with the United States of America. (Applause.)

What's holding us back right now is Washington politics.

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: You've got folks on the other side who think "compromise" is a dirty word, and whose main idea is to go back to the same old top-down economics that got us into this mess in the first place.

This weekend, my opponent, Mr. Romney, chose as his running mate the ideological leader of the Republicans in Congress. And I've got to tell you, I know Congressman Ryan. He's a good man, he's a family man. He is an articulate spokesman for Governor Romney's vision. But the problem is that vision is one that I fundamentally disagree with.
(Applause.)

Governor Romney and his allies in Congress, they think that if we just get rid of more regulations on big corporations and give more tax breaks to the wealthiest Americans, if we end Medicare as we know it, make it a voucher system, then somehow this is all going to lead to jobs and prosperity for everybody.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: The centerpiece of Mr. Romney's entire economic plan is a new $5 trillion tax cut, a lot of it going to the very wealthiest Americans.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Last week, an independent study -- not by me, but by independent economists -- said that Governor Romney's plan would actually raise taxes on middle-class families with children by an average of $2,000 apiece.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, this wouldn't be done -- not to reduce the deficit. It's not going to be done to create jobs or put folks back to work rebuilding our roads or bridges or schools. This is you guys paying an extra $2,000 to give another $250,000 tax cut to folks who are making more than $3 million a year.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Does this sound familiar to you? They have tried to sell us this trickle-down theory before. And guess what -- every time it's been tried it has not worked. It did not work then; it won't work now. It won't create jobs. It won't lower our deficit. It is not a plan to move our economy forward. We do not need more tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans -- we need tax relief for working families. (Applause.)

You need tax relief -- folks who are trying to raise kids and keep them healthy and put a roof over their heads and send them to college. And that's the choice in this election. That's the reason I'm running again.

Four years ago, I promised to cut middle-class taxes -- and by the way, that's exactly what I've done. (Applause.) The average working family here in Iowa and across the country has seen their tax rates go down about $3,600. So when you see -- when you hear the other side talking about Democrats raising your taxes -- your taxes are lower since I've been President. (Applause.) That's the truth.

Now, I want to keep your taxes right where they are for the first $250,000 of everybody's income. So if your family makes under $250,000 -- which, by the way, is 98 percent of Americans -- you won't see your income taxes go up by a single dime next year. (Applause.) Ninety-seven percent of small businesses will not see their taxes go up. (Applause.)

But here's the thing, Council Bluffs. This is important. If -- AUDIENCE MEMBER: And Omaha!

THE PRESIDENT: And Omaha. We love you. (Applause.) Didn't want to leave our Nebraska folks left out here. (Applause.)

But here's the thing. If you're lucky enough and fortunate enough and been blessed enough to be in the other 2 percent, the top 2 percent, you still get a tax cut for your first $250,000 of income. All we're saying is, after that, maybe you can do a little bit more to help pay down this deficit and invest in things like education that help our economy grow. (Applause.)

And listen, government is going to do its part. We've already cut a trillion dollars of savings -- of spending. We're going to cut more. We've got to streamline government and make it work efficiently and effectively. But what we also can do is just ask folks like me to do a little bit more. And all we're asking is for folks like me to go back to the rates that we paid under Bill Clinton -- and by the way, that was a time when we created nearly 23 million new jobs, and we created the biggest budget surplus in history. (Applause.) And here's the kicker -- folks at the top actually did well because, guess what, when a factory worker or a construction worker or a receptionist or a teacher or a firefighter or a cop -- when they've got a little more money in their pockets, what do they do?

AUDIENCE: Spend it!

THE PRESIDENT: Maybe they go out and buy a new car, after having been driving that old beater around for the last 15 years. Maybe they finally get the new dishwasher because the old one has been broke for a long time. Maybe they go buy a computer for their kid for the new school year, or they go to a restaurant, or heaven forbid, they take a vacation. And that means businesses suddenly have more customers. And then businesses start hiring more workers because they're making more profit. And everybody does better. That's how we grow the economy -- not from the top down, but from the middle out, and from the bottom out. (Applause.)

That's the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

You know, across the board, there is a sharp contrast between me and Mr. Romney. When the auto industry was on the brink of collapse, more than a million jobs at stake, Governor Romney said, "let Detroit go bankrupt." I bet on American workers. I bet on American manufacturing. And three years later, the American auto industry has come roaring back. (Applause.) So now I want to make sure that high-tech manufacturing jobs are taking root here, not in China. I want them to take root here in Council Bluffs.

Governor Romney, he likes to brag about his private sector experience. A bunch of that private sector experience was investing in companies that have been called "pioneers" of outsourcing. Let me tell you something -- I want insourcing, not outsourcing. (Applause.) I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Let's give tax breaks to companies that are investing here in the United States of America -- (applause) -- hiring American workers to make American products to sell around the world, stamped with those words: Made in America. That's what I believe in.

Here's another difference. Right now, homegrown energy, things like wind energy -- creating new jobs all across the states like Iowa -- and Governor Romney wants to end tax credits for wind energy producers. America now produces twice as much electricity from wind as we did before I took office. (Applause.) We've doubled the amount of electricity we're producing with wind. The wind industry supports about 7,000 jobs in Iowa. Without these wind energy tax credits, a whole lot of these jobs would be at risk -- 37,000 jobs across this country would be at risk.

So I think we should stop spending billions on taxpayer subsidies for an oil industry that is making all kinds of profit, and let's keep investing in the clean energy that's never been more promising. (Applause.) That's a disagreement I've got with Governor Romney. That's a choice in this election.

Back in 2008, I said it was time to end the war in Iraq -- we ended it. (Applause.) I said it was time for us to go after bin Laden and al Qaeda -- and we did. (Applause.) We've set a timeline to start bringing our troops out of Afghanistan, and so after a decade of war, I think it's time to do some nation-building here at home. (Applause.)

Now, we could not have accomplished any of this without the extraordinary service of our men and women in uniform. (Applause.) And I promise you this -- as long as I am Commander-in-Chief, this country will care for our veterans and serve our veterans as well as they've served us. (Applause.) Nobody who has fought for this country should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. That's why we've invested so heavily in making sure that the VA is working the way it's supposed to. That's why we've put more money into treatment of PTSD and traumatic brain injury; ending homelessness* among veterans. But those are investments that we've got to make.

And my plan says let's take half the money that we're no longer spending on war and let's also use it to put people back to work building our roads and our runways and our ports and our wireless networks -- (applause) -- and creating a Veterans Job Corps so local communities can hire our veterans to be firefighters and police officers in communities that need it. That's the America that we want to build. That's the choice in this election. That's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

I want to make sure that America once again leads the world in educating our kids and training our workers. I want to help our schools hire and reward the best teachers, especially in math and science. I want to give two million more Americans the chance to go to community college and learn the skills that businesses are hiring for right now. (Applause.) And I want to get colleges and universities to bring down the cost of tuition once and for all -- (applause) -- because higher education is not a luxury; it's an economic necessity in the 21st century. Everybody should be able to afford it. (Applause.)

I've got a plan to help homeowners refinance their homes at historically low rates -- save an average of $3,000. My opponent's solution is to let the market bottom out. That's what he said. That's not a solution -- that's part of the problem. That's the difference in this election.

My opponent says one of the first things he'd do is repeal Obamacare.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: I think that part of being middle class in America is making sure you don't go bankrupt when you get sick. (Applause.) That's why, because of this law, if you've got a preexisting condition, you'll be able to get health insurance. (Applause.) That's why 6.5 million young people can now stay on their parent's plan. That's why seniors are now getting discounts on their prescription drugs. That's why insurance companies can't drop your coverage or impose lifetime limits when you need it most. (Applause.)

It's true -- Obama does care. That's why we passed this bill. (Applause.) The Supreme Court has spoken. We're not going backward, we are going forward. (Applause.)

All these things, whether it's bringing back manufacturing, creating more construction jobs, protecting people's health care, making sure your kids get the best education, making sure our veterans have the same kind of opportunity my grandfather had when he came back from World War II and was able to go to college on the GI Bill. All these things are part of what makes up a middle-class life. And they're all bound together in that idea that made this country great -- that basic promise that if you work hard, you can get ahead.

It's not always going to be smooth. There are going to be times where times are tough. But the basic idea that if you work hard and look after your family, that work is going to be rewarded. That's the promise that our parents and grandparents passed down to us. And now it's the promise we've got to pass on to our kids and our grandkids. That's what's at stake in this election.

And so, over the next three months, you are going to see the other side spend more money on negative ads than we've ever seen in history; and these folks, they've got some really rich people writing $10 million checks. And basically, they're going to say the same thing over and over again. They know their economic theories aren't going to sell, because folks remember when we tried them. So all they're going to say is the economy is not as good as it should and it's Obama's fault. And they expect you to have amnesia and not remember who it is that got us into this mess. (Applause.) But they figure, if we run these ads often enough, maybe folks will start kind of thinking about it. That is true. (Laughter.)

So they may have a plan to win the election, but they can't hide the fact that they don't have a plan to create jobs or revive the middle class or grow the economy. And I do have that plan. (Applause.) I've got a plan that puts you first. (Applause.) I've got a plan that puts middle-class families and folks striving to get into the middle class first. (Applause.)

But I'm going to need your help. I'm going to need your help. I've got to make sure you're registered. I've got to make sure your friends are registered to vote. In Iowa, you can get registered online. All you have to do is go GottaRegister.com. That's g-o-t-t-a -- gotta. (Laughter.) GottaRegister.com.

The thing is, we've been outspent before and we've been counted out before. But what you taught me in 2007, 2008 was that when the American people cut through all the nonsense, when you focus your attention and you remember the story of your own families and all the struggles your parents and grandparents went through, and how maybe because you got a student loan somewhere, or maybe because your dad was able to get that job at the factory, you guys were able to build a good life together -- just like Michelle and I were able to get opportunities that our parents could have never imagined. When you focus on that thing that is best in America, the way we pull together and give everybody a fair shot, and everybody is doing their fair share, and everybody is playing by the same set of rules, and everybody is taking responsibility -- when you come together and reaffirm those core values that make this the greatest country on Earth, you can't be stopped. All the money those folks are spending doesn't matter. You are our democracy. You make decisions about the direction of this country.

And, Iowa, I've got to tell you, we've come too far to go back now. (Applause.) We've got too many good jobs we still have to create. We've got too many teachers we've still got to hire. We've got too many schools we still have to rebuild. We've got too many students who still need help getting an affordable education. We've got more homegrown energy we've got to generate. We've got more troops we've got to bring home. Most of all, we've got more doors of opportunity that we've got to open for everybody who's willing to work hard enough to walk through those doors.

That is what is at stake in this election. That is why I am running for President of the United States. (Applause.) That is why I'm asking for your vote -- not just for me, but for this country that we believe in. (Applause.) And if you're willing to work with me and stand with me, and knock on doors with me, and make phone calls with me -- if you vote for me in November, we will win Iowa, we will win this election. We'll finish what we started in 2008. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you, and God bless the United States of America.

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Herman Park
Boone, Iowa

6:10 P.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, everybody! (Applause.) Thank you! It's good to be back! Thank you so much. (Applause.) It is good to be back in Iowa, and it's good to be back in Boone County! (Applause.)

A couple of folks I want to acknowledge -- first of all, your outstanding former governor and now I think the best Secretary of Agriculture we've ever had -- Tom Vilsack. (Applause.) A great friend of mine, my co-chair for my campaign when I was just getting started in 2007-2008 -- he took a risk on me when nobody could pronounce my name -- Tom Miller is in the house, Attorney General of the great state of Iowa. (Applause.) And please give Dave a big round of applause for the great introduction. (Applause.)

Dave may have mentioned he is a music teacher. And I told him that Malia and Sasha have been practicing their piano. (Laughter.) And Malia plays a little flute. But he mentioned that he thought -- he had heard me sing, and he thought that I had really good pitch. (Applause.) So Dave says he's got a band and maybe after I'm finished with the presidency, he said maybe I could be front man for the band. (Applause.) He said maybe I could be lead singer. That would be all right. (Applause.)

But, listen, it is wonderful to be back in Iowa. It is wonderful to see some familiar faces and some good friends on a beautiful summer day. It was on your front porches and in some of your backyards where our movement for change started. (Applause.) We spent a lot of time in Iowa, and I felt like an adopted son of Iowa. (Applause.) We took bus tours all throughout the state -- although I've got to admit the bus wasn't as nice as the one I've got now. (Laughter.) And we went to school gyms and family farms and small businesses all across the state.

But here's the thing -- our journey is not done. It's not done. So I'm going to spend the next three days driving all the way across the state, just like we did in 2007 -- from Council Bluffs all the way to the Quad Cities -- (applause) -- and I'm going to work just as hard, maybe harder, in this campaign as I did in the last one because the choice that you in November couldn't be bigger.

It is not just a choice between two candidates or two political parties. But more than any election in recent memory, this is a choice between two fundamentally different visions about how we move this country forward. (Applause.) And the direction that we choose -- the direction that you choose when you walk into that voting booth in November is going to have an impact not just on your lives, but on the lives of these young people here, the lives of your children, the lives of your grandchildren for decades to come.

Think about it. When we came together four years ago -- and it wasn't just Democrats, we had independents and some Republicans get involved -- the idea was to restore the basic bargain that made this country great, the basic idea that says if work hard in this country then you can get ahead; that if you put in the effort and you are responsible, then you can find a job that pays the bills. You can have a home that you call your own. You won't go bankrupt when you get sick. You can retire with some dignity and some respect. And maybe most importantly, you know that your kids can get a great education and they can dream bigger and do even better than you did. (Applause.)

That is the core of the American Dream. That's the American promise. (Applause.) Now, the problem is, is that we had gone through a decade where that promise wasn't being met, it wasn't being kept. So we had gone through a decade where jobs were being shipped overseas, where you were working harder but you were bringing in less. Costs of college, costs of health care were all going up -- cost of food, cost of gas all were going up. We ran two wars on a credit card. Tax cuts we didn't need and that didn't create jobs. And it all culminated in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression.

So we knew that meeting these challenges that had been building up for over a decade, that it wasn't going to be easy. We knew it was going to take more than one year, or one term, or even one President. But what we also knew was that Americans are tougher than tough times. And so, even though this crisis that hit us in 2008 and 2009 was bad -- even though a lot of folks lost their jobs and a lot of folks lost homes and a lot of folks lost savings, so that the middle class felt even more under the gun than they were before -- what we knew was that the American people are resilient and we are tough. (Applause.)

And so, for the last three and a half years we've rolled up our sleeves and we've worked hard. And small businesses have kept their doors open. And folks, even if they got laid off, they've retrained to find new jobs. And we created 4.5 million new jobs, half a million more in manufacturing. The auto industry is back on top. (Applause.)

And so, we've made progress but we've got a lot more work to do. We've got a lot more work to do.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We can do it!

THE PRESIDENT: We can do it. I agree. (Applause.) We can.

Now, here's the thing. Some people, they're naysayers and they say, oh, America is declining. And they try to paint things as dark as possible, especially during election time. But here's what I want everybody to know. We've got so many things going for us compared to the rest of the world. We've still got the best workers in the world. We've got the best entrepreneurs in the world. We've got the best scientists and the best researchers in the world. We've got the best colleges and the best universities in the world. (Applause.) We know how to work hard. And we're a young country and we're a country that draws on the diversity of folks who want to come here from all around the world to be part of this American Dream. And most importantly, the crisis has not changed our character. It hasn't changed who we are. It hasn't changed our sense of determination and our sense of neighborliness and our understanding that we're in this thing together.

And so we've come together, just like we did in 2008, because our mission is not yet finished. We are here to build an economy where hard work pays off. And so, no matter who you are or what you look like or where you come from, you can make it if you try here in America. (Applause.)

That's what this campaign is about and that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Just as I said that we've got a lot of things going for us, there aren't any quick fixes or easy solutions to some of our challenges. We're going to have to keep working. We're going to meet these challenges. But the main problem we've got is not a lack of good ideas. It's not that we don't have good solutions to our problems. The big problem we've got right now is politics in Washington. (Applause.) The big problem we've got is one party just thinks that compromise is a dirty word. And they've got an economic theory that basically wants to go back to the old top-down economics that got us into this mess in the first place.

Now, look, over the weekend my opponent chose as his running mate the ideological leader of the Republicans in Congress. And I've gotten to know Congressman Ryan. He's a good man. He's a family man. He's a very articulate spokesperson for Governor Romney's vision. The problem is it's the wrong vision for America. It's a vision that I fundamentally disagree with. (Applause.)

Their main recipe for solving America's problems is getting rid of regulations on big corporations and big banks, and then giving more tax breaks to the wealthiest Americans. And their theory is that somehow that's going to lead to jobs and prosperity for everybody. In fact, the centerpiece of Governor Romney's entire economic plan is a new -- you heard this from Dave -- is a new $5 trillion tax cut, a lot of it going to the wealthiest Americans.

Now, keep in mind, these are the folks who say the deficit and the debt are the biggest problem we've got. And yet, they now want to give a $5 trillion tax cut. I know the numbers get so big, but I just want you to get a sense -- our entire defense budget annually is $500 billion. So what this means is, a $5 trillion tax break over 10 years, that's the equivalent of the entire defense budget going out as a tax cut every single year.

Now, keep in mind that this is going disproportionately to the wealthiest Americans. Last week, we found out that Governor Romney expects you, middle-class families, to pick up the tab for this big tax cut.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: And please don't take my word for it. You can go to their website and look at their plan. And then independent economists have looked at this thing and they said that Governor Romney's tax plan would actually raise taxes on middle-class families with children by an average of $2,000.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, keep in mind, this is not $2,000 to reduce the deficit, or to grow jobs, or to invest in education, or make college more affordable, or to rebuild our roads. This is $2,000 to give another $250,000 tax cut to people making more than $3 million a year.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, let me just see a show of hands. How many folks are making more than $3 million a year? (Laughter.) Okay, this guy back here. (Laughter.) I'm looking for a campaign contribution. (Laughter and applause.) Let me tell you something -- they have tried to sell us this trickle-down fairy dust before. And it did not work then; it won't work now. It's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to cut the deficit. And it's not a plan to move our economy forward.

We don't need more tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans. We don't need a tax cut for Mr. Romney. We don't need a tax cut for me. We need tax relief for middle-class families who are out there working, to make sure that their kids are healthy and their kids can go to college.

(Applause.)

That's the choice in this election. That's why I'm running for President -- because I've got a different idea. I've got a different idea than Mr. Romney.

When I came into office, I promised that I would cut middle-class taxes. And you know what, I've kept that promise. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: You did!

THE PRESIDENT: When you hear these Republicans saying that, oh, Obama is all about spending and raising taxes -- let me tell you, the typical family is paying $3,600 less in taxes than when I came into office. (Applause.) That's the truth. That's a fact.

So now I want to keep taxes right where they are on the first $250,000 of everybody's income. So if your family makes $250,000 a year or less -- like 98 percent of Americans -- you won't see your income taxes increase by a single dime next year under my plan. Not one dime. (Applause.)

Now, if you're fortunate enough to be in the other 2 percent, you'll still get a tax cut for your first $250,000 worth of income. But after that, we're asking you to contribute a little bit more so we can pay down our deficit and invest in things like education that help our economy grow. (Applause.)

I'll make sure the government does its part by cutting away spending we don't need. We've already cut a trillion dollars of spending we didn't need and we can do more. I want to do another trillion, trillion and a half of cuts.

But we've also got to match that with folks like me and Governor Romney doing our fair share. And all we're asking is that we go back to the same rates that we paid under Bill Clinton. (Applause.) And you know what, that was a time when our economy created nearly 23 million new jobs, the biggest budget surplus in history, and millionaires did pretty good too.

See, what happens is that when a teacher or a construction worker or a family farm or a receptionist or a nurse, when they've got a little extra money, what do you do? You end up spending it on things you need. So maybe you haven't got a new car in 10, 15 years -- you go out and buy a car. Or maybe the washing machine is broke and you decide to buy a new washing machine. Maybe you go out to a restaurant on a special occasion. Maybe you take a vacation once in a while. That money goes into the economy; businesses have more customers; they hire more workers and everybody is better off from top to bottom.

I don't believe in top-down economics. I believe in middle class-out economics. I believe in bottom-up economics. That's how you grow an economy. That's the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

There's a difference between me and Mr. Romney on almost every issue. When the American auto industry was on the brink of collapse, more than 1 million jobs were on the line, Governor Romney said let's "let Detroit go bankrupt." I said let's bet on the American worker. And three years later, the American auto industry is back on top. GM is number one again. (Applause.)

Now, so I want to make sure that hi-tech manufacturing jobs are taking root right here in Boone -- not in China, not in Germany.

Governor Romney, he likes to tout his private sector experience. But a lot of that experience is investing in companies that were called "pioneers" of outsourcing. We don't need more outsourcing. We need some insourcing. (Applause.)

I want to take away tax breaks. Let's stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Let's give those tax breaks to companies that are investing right here in Iowa, right here in the United States of America. (Applause.) That's the choice in this election.

My opponent and I disagree when it comes to homegrown energy like wind. Wind power is creating new jobs all across Iowa. But Governor Romney says he wants to end the tax credit for wind energy producers. Now, America generates more than twice as much electricity from wind than when I took office. (Applause.) That's right. The wind industry supports about 7,000 jobs right here in Iowa. Without these wind energy tax credits, those jobs are at risk -- 37,000 jobs across the country would be at risk.

So my attitude is let's stop giving taxpayer subsidies to oil companies that don't need them, and let's invest in clean energy that will put people back to work right here in Iowa. That's a choice in this election. (Applause.)

I'm running because in 2008, I promised to end the war in Iraq -- and I did. (Applause.) I promised to go after al Qaeda and bin Laden -- and we did. (Applause.) We're putting a timeline to get our troops out of Afghanistan and put Afghans in charge of their own security. So all of this is possible only because of the extraordinary sacrifice and service of our men and women in uniform. And we are so proud of them. (Applause.)

Now, we've got to do right by them. We've got to make sure we're serving our veterans as well as they've served us. (Applause.) That's why we've put more money into the VA, making sure that folks are getting the benefits that they have earned, whether it's the wounds that are seen or the wounds that are unseen.

But it also means that after a decade of war, we need to do some nation-building here at home, so that all our men and women in uniform are coming home to good-paying jobs.

(Applause.)

That's why I've said let's take half the money that we were spending on war and let's put folks back to work right here in the United States of America. (Applause.) Let's put them back to work rebuilding schools and rebuilding roads and rebuilding bridges. (Applause.) And let's create a Veterans Jobs Corp to help hire veterans to become cops and firefighters in communities that need them the most.

(Applause.)

That's the America we want to build. That's the choice in this election. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

I'm running because I want to make sure that once again, America has the best education system in the world.

(Applause.) So I want to help our schools hire and reward the best teachers, especially in math and science. I want to give 2 million more Americans a chance to go to community colleges to get trained for the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. (Applause.)

And we have a plan to push colleges and universities to bring down their cost of tuition, because young people, they can't be burdened with tens of thousands of dollars' worth of debt when they go to school. A higher education isn't a luxury anymore. It is an economic necessity in the 21st century. And we are going to help them get the education that they need. (Applause.)

Across the board, Governor Romney and I just see the world differently. When it comes to housing, I want to make sure that everybody who hasn't yet taken advantage of these historically low interest rates has a chance to refinance their homes. It can save folks up to $3,000. Governor Romney's plan, he said just let the housing market bottom out. That's not a solution. That's part of the problem.

He has got a different view than I do in terms of how we move this country forward. When it comes to health care, I guess he used to agree with me because he had the same health care plan that I do in Massachusetts. (Applause.) And, by the way, that plan is working pretty good. (Applause.)

Now, he says he wants to kill Obamacare. Well, first of all, I don't mind it being called Obamacare because, it's true, I do care. That's why I passed the bill. I do care. (Applause.) I care about folks who have preexisting conditions and couldn't get insurance. That's why we passed the bill. (Applause.) I care about the 6.5 million young people who can now stay on their parent's plan because of this bill. (Applause.) I care about the seniors who were paying too much for their prescription drugs. We're closing the doughnut hole because of this bill and lowering their prescription drug costs. (Applause.)

So I don't believe that you should go broke when you get sick in this country. And I'll work with anybody who wants to continue to improve our health care system. But the Supreme Court has spoken -- the law is here to stay. We're not spending the next four years refighting that battle. (Applause.) We're moving forward. We're not going backwards. That's a choice in this election. (Applause.)

So, Boone, all these things -- whether it's bringing manufacturing jobs back, putting folks back to work in construction, protecting your health care, making sure our kids are getting the best education possible and they can afford to go to college -- all these things that make up that American Dream, that make up a middle-class life, they all tie together. They're central to that idea that made this country great, the promise that if you work hard you get ahead; that everybody has a fair shot and everybody is doing their fair share and everybody is playing by the same set of rules.

It's the promise that our parents and our grandparents passed down to us. That's the promise that allowed me as the child of a single mom to become President of the United States. (Applause.) It's the promise that allowed Michelle, whose dad was a blue-collar worker and her mom was a secretary, to become the First Lady. (Applause.) It's the promise that all of you have seen in your own lives. And now, it's time for us to pass that down to our kids and our grandkids.

So over the next three months, the other side will spend more money than you have ever seen running the same ad over and over again, basically, which says, the economy is not where it should be and it's Obama's fault. They just repeat it over and over again. They've got different variations, but it's all the same theme. And --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: They're not right!

THE PRESIDENT: Well, they're not constrained by the facts, in terms of these ads that they run. (Applause.) They'll just make stuff up. And that may be a plan to win the election, but the reason they've got to do that is because they know they don't have a plan to create jobs. They don't have a plan to grow the economy. They don't have a plan to revive the middle class. What they're selling, you're not buying. That's why they don't talk about it.

I've got that plan. And we can make it work, but I'm going to need your help. I've got to make sure everybody here is registered to vote. I've got to make sure everybody is getting their friends and their neighbors, their family members to register to vote. (Applause.) You can get a voter registration form online. You go to GottaRegister.com. That's gotta -- g-o-t-t-a -- GottaRegister.com.

But if you guys get involved, we can't lose. I've been outspent before and I've been counted out before. But the reason I love this state is because all of you gave me a chance. (Applause.) I had a chance to talk to you and meet you, and share stories with you.

And I used to say back in 2008 that I'm not a perfect man and I won't be a perfect President. But I told you I'd always tell you what I thought, always tell you where I stood, and I'd fight every single day as hard as I knew how for you. And the reason is because I see myself in you. (Applause.) When I see your grandparents, I see my grandparents. And when I see your kids, I see Malia and Sasha.

And we know what it's like to work and to fight hard to get ahead. And I want everybody in America to have that same chance that I had. Because we have come too far to turn back now, Iowa. (Applause.) We've got too many good jobs to create. We've got too many great teachers to hire. We've got too many schools to rebuild. We've got too many students who need to get a college education. (Applause.) We've got too many wind farms to build. We've got more troops we've got to bring back home. We've got to open up more doors to opportunity. (Applause.)

And if you'll stand with me and work with me, and organize with me and knock on doors with me, Boone, I promise you, we will win Iowa and we will win this election. (Applause.) And we'll remind the world why this is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you, and God bless America. (Applause.)

August 28,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Iowa State University
Ames, Iowa

1:11 P.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Cyclones! Thank you. (Applause.) It is good to be back in Iowa. Please give Mischa a big round of applause for the great introduction. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back, and I'm glad to be here. (Applause.) You guys look pretty cheerful being back at school. That's good to know. (Applause.) Yes, sort of? (Laughter.)

Well, listen, before I begin, I think it's important to say that our thoughts are with our fellow Americans down on the Gulf. They're preparing for -- the New Orleans guy right here. (Laughter.) They're obviously preparing for a big storm, Hurricane Isaac.

And we've been getting ready for this storm for days. We've got response teams and supplies in place. America will be there to help folks recover no matter what this storm brings, because when disaster strikes we're not Democrats or Republicans first, we are Americans first. (Applause.) We are one family. We're one family and we help our neighbors in need.

It is great to be back in Ames. (Applause.) Class is in session. (Laughter.) I didn't hear as many cheers -- come on. (Laughter.) Whew! (Laughter.) Cyclones football kicks off at home this Saturday. (Applause.)

I won't pretend I can give a speech like Coach Rhoads can, but I'm going to try -- (applause) -- because just over two months from now, for the first time in most of your lives, you will get a chance to pick a President. (Applause.) And the truth is you've got more at stake in this election than just about anybody. When you step into that voting booth, the choice you make in that one instant is going to shape your country and your world for decades to come.

And I know that's a pretty heavy idea to lay on you on a

Tuesday. (Laughter.) But it's true. The decisions we make as a country on big issues like the economy and jobs and taxes and education and energy and war and climate change -- all these decisions will directly affect your life in very personal ways. And I've got to say, this is something I'm acutely aware of when I make these decisions, because they're decisions that are going to affect Malia and Sasha, my daughters, as well.

It's the way it's always been -- one generation makes decisions on behalf of the next. But here's the thing, Cyclones -- your generation chooses which path we take as a country. Your vote decides where we go from here. (Applause.) Will we make sure that more good jobs and opportunity take root not in China or India or Germany, but right here in Iowa and all across America, so you don't have to leave home to get those good-paying jobs? (Applause.)

Are we going to reward an honest day's work with the chance to buy a home of your own, with health care that's there for you when you get sick, with the ability to put a little away for your retirement?

Are we going to make it easier for you to afford your degree and pay off your student loan debt? (Applause.) Are we going to build more good schools and hire more good teachers, so that our kids are prepared to attend colleges like Iowa State, and prepared for the 21st century workforce? (Applause.)

Will this be a country that keeps moving away from foreign oil and towards renewable sources of energy like wind and solar and biofuels -- (applause) -- energy that makes our economy more secure, but also makes our planet more secure? (Applause.)

Will this be a country that leads not just by the strength of our military, but the power of our diplomacy and the power of our example? (Applause.)

Will this be an America where no matter who you are, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter who you love, you can pursue your own happiness and you can make it here in America if you try? (Applause.)

That's the question. (Applause.) That's what the last four years have been about. That's what this campaign is about. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, listen, I know it's easy to get fed up with campaigns and politics. Sometimes it seems it's meaner and smaller and more gridlocked than ever. And every day, there's a steady stream of cynics who will tell you nothing really changes; you can't make a difference; you won't be able to close the gap between life as it is and life as you want it to be. Old folks will always tell you that -- and I'm in that category now. (Laughter.)

And, frankly, some folks, they make it their political strategy to try to make you feel discouraged. They'll tell you over and over again how bad everything is, and then, of course, they'll add that it's all Obama's fault. (Laughter.) And they'll tell you that if you believed in change four years ago, your faith was foolish and you were being naïve. Last week, my opponent's campaign went so far as to write you off as a "lost generation" -- that's you according to them.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: And what they hope is that by telling you these things, you'll get discouraged and you'll just stay home this time.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: But you can't believe it. I don't believe it. We knew that solving our biggest problems were going to take more than one year, or one term, or even one President. But we went ahead and we got started. (Applause.) We know we've still got a lot of work to do to get to where we need to be. But we are going to get there. (Applause.)

I believe that because I believe in you. (Applause.) As tough as times have been, you're tougher. I've seen your passion. I've seen your service. I've seen your generation eager and impatient to make a difference. And already, you've proved that you can.

Think about it, four years ago, you believed we could put a college education within the reach of all who were willing to work for it. So we created a college tax credit that's saving families up to $10,000 for college tuition over four years. (Applause.) We took on a student loan system that was giving billions of taxpayer dollars to big banks, and we said let's give the money directly to students, and we doubled grant aid for millions of students. (Applause.)

We just won the fight to keep federal student loans from doubling for more than 7 million students. That would not have happened in Washington except for you. Your vote did that. You made that change. You helped millions of young people and maybe yourself get the kind of college education you deserve. (Applause.) Don't believe them when they tell you, you can't make a difference.

You believed four years ago that we could use less foreign oil and reduce the carbon pollution that threatens our planet. And in just four years, we've doubled -- doubled -- the generation of clean, renewable energy like wind and solar. (Applause.)

We developed new fuel standards so that your car will get nearly 55 miles per gallon by the middle of the next decade. (Applause.) That's going to save you money at the pump. That will reduce greenhouse gas emissions by a level roughly equivalent to a year's worth of emissions from all the cars in the world. (Applause.)

any time in nearly 20 years. We're on track to emit fewer greenhouse gases this year than we have in nearly 20 years. You can keep those trends going. You believed in America, and that's what's brought about change.

You believed that nobody should go broke in America just because they get sick. I believe that, too. (Applause.) What the other side calls Obamacare -- I've kind of grown to like the term Obamacare. (Laughter.) I do care. I care about folks with preexisting conditions. (Applause.) I care about kids who don't have insurance. And so today, because of the new health care law, nearly 7 million young people, including some of you in this audience, have been able to stay on your parent's plan. (Applause.)

Your grandparents are saving money on their medicine. Women have gained access to free preventive care like mammograms and contraception. (Applause.) Your vote made that happen. You made that change. (Applause.)

It was young people like you that said we could end the war in Iraq. Today that war is over -- as promised. (Applause.) More troops are home with their families, earning their educations through the Post-9/11 GI Bill, starting new businesses. And no one will ever again have to hide who they love in order to serve the country they love, because your vote ended "don't ask, don't tell" once and for all. You made that change. (Applause.)

So the point is, Ames, your vote matters. Your vote made a difference. Change was possible because of you. And now we've more work to do -- to grow this economy, create good jobs, to strengthen the middle class. And in November, your voice will matter more than it ever has before.

This week in Tampa, my opponents will offer you their agenda. It should be a pretty entertaining show. (Laughter.) It will be. And I'm sure they'll have some wonderful things to say about me. (Laughter.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We do. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: But what you won't hear from them is a path forward that meets the challenges of our time. Instead, it will be an economic plan that says if you just give folks making $3 million or more a year another $250,000 tax cut, then jobs and prosperity will magically rain down on everybody else.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Some of you guys are a little young, so you may not remember it, but we tried this for 10 years before I was elected. It didn't work out so well. It didn't work out then; it won't work now.

I don't want to pay for another millionaire's tax cut by raising taxes on the middle class. I don't want to pay for that tax cut by cutting financial aid on 10 million students. Our economic strength doesn't come from the top down; it comes from students and workers, and a growing, thriving middle class. That's how we grow an economy. (Applause.)

So in just over two months, you will make a choice about which path we take, and it's going to be a stark choice. You can choose whether we give massive new tax cuts to folks who've already made it, or whether we're going to keep taxes low for every American who's still trying to make it. (Applause.)

I've cut taxes for the middle class, and for families, and for students. And I want to make sure that taxes aren't raised a dime on your family's first $250,000 of income. That means that 98 percent of Americans and 97 percent of small businesses wouldn't see an income tax increase. (Applause.) You can choose.

You can choose whether we're going to give up new jobs and new industries to China and India, or whether we're going to fight for those jobs by investing in the research of our scientists and the drive of our students and the innovation that harnesses new sources of energy, and brings the next generation of manufacturing to places like Ames and Milwaukee and Detroit and Pittsburgh. That's your choice. (Applause.)

You can decide whether the best way to make college affordable is to -- as my opponent put it -- hope your parents can just lend you the money. (Laughter.) Or you can say, let's help more Americans earn the kind of education you receive here at Iowa State. Let's help more Americans go to community colleges to get the skills and trainings that employers are looking for right now. (Applause.)

Let's help more Iowans learn to be leaders at the Harkin Public Policy Institute that a Cyclone alum and your great Senator, Tom Harkin, is setting up. (Applause.) He's working along with your new president, Steven Leath -- doing a great job. (Applause.)

And as Mischa mentioned, although I am getting gray, I still remember what it was like for you guys -- because Michelle and I finished paying off our loans just eight years ago. We know what it's like. We shouldn't make it harder. We should make it easier. We shouldn't end the college tax credit we created; we should extend it. Because in America, higher education isn't a luxury -- it's an economic necessity that every family should be able to afford. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

You can choose an energy plan written by and for big oil companies.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: No!

THE PRESIDENT: That's what my opponent is offering. Or you can choose an all-of-the-above energy strategy for America -- renewable sources of energy. (Applause.) Governor Romney called those "imaginary." Congressman Ryan said they're a "fad."

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Let me tell you something -- they need to come to Iowa because they're the future. They're worth fighting for. (Applause.)

Nearly 7,000 good Iowa jobs depend on the wind industry. It's time to stop giving $4 billion of taxpayer subsidies to oil companies that are making a profit every time you pump gas. Let's give it to homegrown energy sources that have never been more promising. (Applause.) That's good for jobs. It's good for the economy. It's good for the environment. That's the direction we need to go in. (Applause.)

But it's all up to you. It's up to you whether we go back to a health care system that let insurance companies decide who to cover and when. I think it might make sense for you to choose to keep moving forward with the new health care law that's already cutting costs and covering more people and saving lives.

Governor Romney promised that sometime between taking the Oval Office and going to the Inaugural Ball, he'd sit right down, grab a pen, and kick 7 million young people off their parent's plan by repealing health reform. Day one, that's what he says he's going to do.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Maybe we should call his plan "Romney Doesn't Care" -- (laughter) -- because I do care. (Applause.) I do care. And this law is here to stay. Now is not the time to refight the battles of the last four years. Now is the time for us to go ahead and move forward.

And I'll work with anybody who wants to make our health care system better, but I'm not going to stand by and let folks talk about how we should go back to the days when ordinary folks who are working really hard suddenly find themselves losing their home, losing their savings just because they get sick.

They can choose to refight the battles that were settled 10 years ago or 20 years ago or sometimes in the last century. I think women should be trusted to make their own health care decisions. (Applause.) That's a choice that you've got to make.

I think that students who are brought here by their parents as babies shouldn't be kicked out of the only country they know just because their parents were undocumented workers. That's my view. It's your choice. (Applause.)

I don't think we should write -- rewrite the Constitution to prevent gay Americans from being able to marry the person they love. That's my view. It's your choice. (Applause.)

The strength of our character doesn't come from shoving anybody to the sidelines. It comes from hearing every voice, harnessing every talent, realizing that here in America we are greater together than we are on our own.

And this November, you get to decide -- you get to decide the future of this war in Afghanistan. Governor Romney said ending the war was "tragic." He doesn't have a plan to bring home the 33,000 troops who will come home from Afghanistan next month. (Applause.)

I said we'd end the Iraq war. We did. I said we'd get bin Laden. We did. (Applause.) Today all of our troops are out of Iraq. We're bringing them home from Afghanistan. And as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we're going to make sure that we serve our veterans as well as they've served us -- because nobody who fights for America should have to fight for a job when they come home. (Applause.) But these are your choices.

Governor Romney wants to pass a new $5 trillion tax cut targeted towards the wealthiest Americans. That's not going to cut our debt. Ignoring inequality doesn't make it go away. Denying climate change won't make it stop. These things won't make for a brighter future. They won't make your future stronger.

And so, in two months, you get to choose the path that will actually lead to a better future. You have the chance to prove the cynics wrong one more time.

And the other side is going to spend these next two months -- they are going to spend more money than you've ever seen in your life. They will have an avalanche of attack ads and insults and distractions. And sometimes, they'll just -- how do I put it -- they will fib. (Laughter.)

And they've got $10-million checks from wealthy donors who like things just the way they are. They're counting on you young people to just accept their version of the way things ought to be, to just kind of leave the questions that affect your lives up to big oil and insurance companies; up to politicians that decide what a woman can or can't do when it comes to her own health. That's what they're counting on. That's their strategy.

I'm counting on something different. I'm counting on you. (Applause.) I'm counting on you. Those who oppose change, those who benefit from the status quo, they've always bet on cynicism. They always bet on complacency. But throughout America's history, they have lost that bet, and they're going to lose it this time, too. And that's because of you.

It depends on you registering to vote. It depends on you showing up to vote. It depends on you refusing to wait for the next person, or the person next to you in class, or the person in the next town, or the person in another state. It's going to depend on you to close that gap between what America is and what we know it can be. (Applause.)

Because let me tell you, everybody else is waiting on you. (Applause.) When they see you register, they'll register. When they see you vote, they'll vote. (Applause.)

And I'm asking you one more time to do what we did -- what young people all across the state of Iowa did four years ago. I'm asking you to believe. I'm asking you to believe. (Applause.) Not in my ability to bring about the changes you want to see; I'm asking you to believe in your abilities. I'm asking you to believe in what you can accomplish.

We've come too far to turn back now. We've got more work to do. We've got more young people to send to college. We've got more good jobs to create. We've got more homegrown energy to generate. We've got more good teachers to hire and more good schools to build. We've got more troops we've got to bring home. We've got more veterans we've got to take care of. We've got more doors of opportunity that we have to open up to every single person who's willing to work hard and walk through those doors. (Applause.)

That's why I'm asking you for a second term. And if you're willing to stand with me and work with me, and knock on some doors with me -- (applause) -- and make some phone calls with me -- and if you're willing to vote for me in November, we will win Iowa. We will win this election. We will finish what we started. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

Thank you, everybody. God bless you. God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Tyler Perry Studios
Atlanta, Georgia

8:05 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, hello, hello! (Applause.) Hello, Georgia! (Applause.) It is good to be in Atlanta, Georgia. (Applause.) Thank you. Thank you.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. I do. (Applause.)

So, let me, first of all, acknowledge a few people who are here -- the outstanding young mayor of Atlanta, Georgia -- (applause) -- Kasim Reed is in the house. (Applause.) One of the finest men I know, somebody upon whose shoulders I stand -- the great Congressman John Lewis is in the house. (Applause.) Other outstanding members of the congressional delegation here in Georgia -- Sanford Bishop, David Scott, Hank Johnson. (Applause.)

Somebody who -- I was just reminiscing -- when I first started to run for office a lot of people weren't sure whether a guy named Barack Obama could win. And so we went down to the Selma commemoration, Edmund Pettus Bridge -- and we're in church. And a lot of folks at that point are still wondering whether this is a good idea, this young guy who is running for President. And this man gets up onstage and he explains how people call him a little crazy, but "there is good crazy -- (applause) -- and there's bad crazy." (Applause.) He tells me now that he came up with the idea when his doctor explained to him there was good cholesterol and bad cholesterol. (Laughter.) But he decided that supporting Barack Obama was a "good kind of crazy," he said.

We have been dear friends ever since -- the Reverend Dr. Joseph Lowery is in the house. (Applause.)

And finally, let me just say something about the man who introduced us -- Tyler Perry -- hosting us all at his incredible facility. He and I were talking, and there's something about America where somebody from my background can do what I'm doing, and somebody from Tyler's background can do what he's doing. And as tough as things get sometimes, and as frustrated and cynical people can get about politics, when you look at a Tyler Perry and all that he's achieved, and the humility and graciousness with which he's achieved it -- (applause) -- you can't help but be proud of him and to be proud of our country. (Applause.) So give it up for Mr. Tyler Perry. (Applause.)

Now, I'm here today not only because I need your help. I'm here because the country needs your help. There was a lot of reasons why so many of you decided to get involved and then just work your hearts out in the campaign in 2008. It was not because you thought it would be easy. The odds of me becoming President were long. You didn't need a poll to know it was going to be tough. You didn't join the campaign because of me. You joined it because of your commitment to each other and the vision that we share about America.

It wasn't a vision where just a few people do well and everybody else is on their own, and the most powerful are able to make their own rules. It wasn't a cramped vision, or a selfish vision of America. It wasn't a limited vision about our future. It was a vision of America where everybody who works hard has a chance to get ahead -- not just those who were born into it, but a Tyler Perry, or a Barack Obama, or a child in Georgia, or a child in a barrio in Texas, or a poor child in some rural community in the Midwest -- it didn't matter, they would have a chance if they were willing to work hard.

That's the vision we shared. That's the change we believed in. We knew it wouldn't come easy. We knew it wouldn't come quickly. But we believed. And in just three years, because of what you did in 2008, we've begun to see what change looks like.

Change is the first bill I signed into law -- a law that says women deserve an equal day's pay for an equal day's work -- (applause) -- because I don't want my daughters treated any differently than your sons. I want them to have the same opportunities. That's what change is. (Applause.)

Change is the decision we made to rescue the American auto industry at a time when it was on the verge of collapse, and some folks were saying let Detroit go bankrupt. We had one million jobs on the line, and I wasn't going to let them go. Today, GM is back on top, the number-one automaker in the world. (Applause.) Just reported the highest profits in a hundred-year history, with more than 200,000 new jobs added. The United States auto industry is back. That's what change is. That's what you did. (Applause.)

Change is the decision we made to stop waiting for Congress to do something about energy. We've been listening to politicians for three decades, four decades, saying they were going to do something about energy. We went ahead and did it -- raised fuel-efficiency standards on cars. By the next decade, we'll be driving American-made cars getting 55 miles a gallon. (Applause.) That will save the average family $8,000 at the pump. That's what change is. And it happened because of you. (Applause.)

Change is us deciding, you know what, why are we giving $60 billion to manage the student loan program -- let's give it directly to the students -- (applause) -- so that millions of more young people are either getting higher Pell grants or finally eligible, being able to invest in things like early education and community colleges and HBCUs. (Applause.)

Change is attacking the cycle of poverty not by just pouring money into a broken system, but by building on what works -- Promise Neighborhoods -- the idea of pulling all our resources together to make sure that everybody has a chance; rebuilding our public services, public housing; making sure that our education system is working; making sure that we've got partnerships with local leaders like Kasim Reed. (Applause. All across the country, rebuilding cities, one block, one neighborhood at a time. That's what change is.

Change is, yes, health care reform. (Applause.) You want to call it Obamacare -- that's okay, because I do care. (Applause.) That's why we passed it. That is why we passed it -- because I care about folks who were going bankrupt because they were getting sick. And I care about children who have preexisting conditions and their families couldn't get them any kind of insurance. (Applause.) And so now we've got reforms that will ensure that in this great country of ours you won't have to mortgage your house just because you get sick. (Applause.)

Right now, 2.5 million young people already have health insurance who didn't have it before because of this law. It let them stay on their parent's policies. (Applause.) Insurance companies can't just deny you coverage or drop your coverage at a time when you need it most. Seniors are seeing more help when it comes to their prescription drugs and preventive care. That's what change is.

Change is the fact that for the first time in history, you don't have to hide who you love in order to serve the country you love. We ended "don't ask, don't tell." (Applause.)

Change is keeping the promise I made in 2008 -- for the first time in nine years, there are no Americans fighting in Iraq. (Applause.) We decided to refocus on the folks who actually attacked us on 9/11. And thanks to the brave men and women in uniform, al Qaeda is weaker than it's ever been, and Osama bin Laden is not walking the face of this Earth. (Applause.)

None of this has been easy. And we still have a lot of work to do, because there are a lot of folks who are still hurting out there -- a lot of folks still pounding the pavement looking for work; a lot of people whose homes -- values have dropped; a lot of people who are still struggling to make the rent. There are still too many families who can barely pay their bills, too many young people still living in poverty.

I was reading a statistic the other day -- fewer than half of African Americans believe we'll reach the dream Dr. King left for us. So we've still got so much work to do.

And I know when we look at what is, it can be heartbreaking and frustrating. But I ran for President -- and you joined this cause -- because we don't settle just for what is, we strive for what might be. We want to help more Americans reach that dream. I ran for President to give every child a chance, whether he's born in Atlanta or comes from a rural town in the Delta. I ran for President not just to get us back to where we were, but to take us forward to where we need to be. (Applause.)

And I'm telling you, Atlanta, we are going to get there. Step by step, we are going to get there. (Applause.) Already over the past two years, our businesses have added almost 4 million new jobs. (Applause.) Manufacturers are creating jobs for the first time since the 1990s. The recovery is accelerating. Our economy is getting stronger. We're moving on the right track. What we can't do is go back to the same policies that got us into this mess in the first place. (Applause.)

Of course, that's exactly what the other folks want to do. The folks who are running for President. (Applause.) And they make no secret about it. They want to roll back the laws that we put in place so that now Wall Street can play by its own rules again. They want to go back to the day when insurance companies could deny you coverage or jack up your premiums any time they wanted without reason. They want to spend trillions more on tax breaks for the very wealthiest of individuals, even if it means adding to the deficit, even if it means gutting things like education or our investment in clean energy or making sure Medicare is stable.

Their philosophy is simple: Everybody is just left to fend for themselves, if those in power could make their own rules, and somehow it's all going to trickle down to you. And they're wrong. They're wrong. They were wrong when they tried it and they're wrong now.

In the United States of America, we are always greater together than we are on our own. We're always better off when we keep that basic American promise that if you work hard, you can do well enough to raise a family and own a home and send your kids to college and put a little away for retirement. And that's the choice in this election.

We've got different visions being presented. This is not just another political debate. This is the defining issue of our time. What are we going to do to make sure that middle-class families are secure and that we continue to build ladders for people who are trying to get into the middle class? We don't need an economy that's built on outsourcing and bad debt and phony financial profits. We need an economy that's built to last. An economy that's built on American manufacturing, American energy and giving skills to American workers, and holding up those values that we cherish -- hard work, fair play, shared responsibility.

When we think about the next generation of manufacturing, I don't want it taking root in Asia. I want it taking root in Atlanta. (Applause.) I don't want this nation just to be known for buying and consuming things from other countries. I want to build and sell to other countries products made in the United States of America. (Applause.) I want to stop rewarding businesses that are shipping jobs overseas. I want to reward companies, like this one, that are creating jobs right here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

I want to make sure that our schools are the envy of the world. And that means investing in the men and women who stand in front of the classroom. (Applause.) A good teacher increases the income of a classroom by over $2,500. A great teacher can help a child move beyond their immediate circumstances and reach out for their dreams. I don't want Washington to defend the status quo, but I don't want them to be just bashing teachers. I want to give schools the resources they need to keep good teachers on the job and reward the best teachers, and grant schools flexibility to teach with creativity and passion, stop teaching to the test, replace teachers that aren't helping kids learn. (Applause.) I want us to create in this country the kind of passion and reverence for education that's not just, by the way, a job of government, but a job of each of us -- as parents, as community leaders.

And when kids do graduate, I want them to be able to afford to go to college. (Applause.) We've got more tuition debt than credit card debt today. And by the way, right now, interest rates are scheduled to go up on student loans in July if Congress does not act, so you need to get on Congress about that.

And I've said to colleges and universities, you've got to stop tuition from just going up and up and up and up. Higher education cannot be a luxury; it is an economic imperative that every family should be able to afford. (Applause.)

I want an economy that's supporting the scientists and researchers that will make sure we discover the next breakthrough in biotechnology, in clean energy. We have subsidized oil companies for 100 years, giving them $4 billion worth of tax breaks when they are making near-record profits. It is time to stop giving tax giveaways to an industry that's never been more profitable and start investing in clean energy that can create jobs here in the United States in solar power and wind power, biofuels. (Applause.)

We need to give our businesses the best infrastructure in the world -- newer roads and airports and faster railroads and Internet access. You take half the money that we've been spending on the wars in Iraq, as we phase down the war in Afghanistan -- let's pay down -- use half of it to pay down our debt. Let's use the other half to do some nation-building here at home. (Applause.) Let's put people to work rebuilding schools, rebuilding our bridges, rebuilding our ports.

And to pay for this, we've got to have a tax system that is fair. (Applause.) I was with Warren Buffet a couple days ago. He says, "Thanks for naming a rule after me." (Laughter.) It's a very simple principle, the Buffett Rule. It says if you make more than a million dollars a year, you should not pay a lower tax rate than your secretary.

(Applause.) We've said if you make less than $250,000 a year, which is 98 percent of Americans, your taxes shouldn't go up. But folks like me -- we can afford to do a little more. Tyler can afford to do a little more. Tyler? (Laughter.) He knows he -- (laughter) -- he knows that.

When we say that, this is not class warfare, this is not envy. This is just basic math. Because if Tyler or I or others get tax breaks we don't need, weren't asking for, that the country can't afford, then one of two things are going to happen. Either the deficit goes up -- all these other folks they say they want to do something about the deficit -- every single one of their plans actually increases the deficit. Or, alternatively, they've got to make up for it by taking it away from somebody who really needs it. The student, who suddenly sees their interest on their loans going up; the senior who suddenly has to pay more for Medicare; the veteran who's not getting help after having protected us; the family that's trying to get by. It's not right. It's not who we are.

I hear a lot of politicians talk about values during election year. You know what, I'm happy to have a values debate. (Applause.) I'm happy to have a debate about values. I think about the values my mother and my grandparents taught me. Hard work, that's a value. Looking out for one another -- that's a value. I am my brother's keeper, I am my sister's keeper -- that is a value. (Applause.) Each of us is only here because somebody somewhere was looking out for us. (Applause.) It started in the family, but it wasn't just the immediate family. There was somebody in church. There was somebody in the neighborhood. There was the coach of the Little League. There was somebody who made an investment in our country's future.

Our story has never been about what we can do alone. It's what we do together. We don't win the race for new jobs and middle-class security and new businesses with the same old you-are-on-your-own economics. I am telling you, it does not work. It did not work in the decade before the Great Depression. It did not work in the decade before I took office. It won't work now. (Applause.)

This is about who we are as a country. The opportunities we've always, always passed on to future generations. When I think about Michelle and me and where we come from -- (applause) -- I know you all love Michelle, I know. (Applause.) I know. I love her, too. (Laughter.) But I think about -- sometimes we'll be in the White House and we think about my mother-in-law who lives upstairs and was a secretary. Michelle's dad had multiple sclerosis and still went to work every day, blue-collar job. My mom raising me, a single mom. I think about what they did for us and the sacrifices they made.

And so then I think, well, the sacrifices that I have to make, given all the blessings that I've received -- they can't just extend to Malia and Sasha. I've got to be thinking about somebody else's kids. I've got to be making sure that somebody else gets a student loan who's maybe a single mom going back to school just like my mom, who was able to get a student loan to get an education. (Applause.)

I'm thinking, we've got to make sure that jobs are out there for folks who are willing to work and overcoming barriers. And I'm willing to make some sacrifices for that. And that makes my life better. Right?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: And most of you understand that. You understand if you invest in a teacher, and then she teaches somebody who is the next Steve Jobs or invents some cure for a major disease, that makes us all better. (Applause.) If we invest in Internet services for rural Georgians, there is a little store out there that suddenly business starts booming because they now have a worldwide market through the Internet, and that creates economic opportunity for everybody.

This idea is not a Democratic idea, it is not a Republican idea. That is an American idea. (Applause.) Abraham Lincoln understood it. The first Republican President during a war invested in the transcontinental railroad, the National Academy of Sciences, land grant colleges.

Dwight Eisenhower, Republican, built the Interstate Highway System. Teddy Roosevelt, Republican, called for a progressive income tax. This is not just a Democratic idea. This is an American idea that we invest in our future, and that we are stronger together than we are on our own.

And you know, sometimes that spirit may seem to have vanished in Washington. Sometimes it may seem like our politics is just a bad reality show. (Laughter.) People arguing and fussing and trying to score points. (Laughter.) But you know, out in the country, when I go to town halls, when I go to a VFW hall, that spirit it still there.

People still understand, this country that gave us so much, we want to pass that on to the next generation. They understand that it's not just about us; it's about what we can do for each other. It's not just about the next election; it's about the next generation. You talk to our men and women in uniform -- they understand it. You talk to folks in our places of worship -- they recognize it. And all of you recognize it. And that's what we tapped into in 2008 -- that spirit. That spirit.

So let me just say this: I'm a little grayer now. (Laughter and applause.) I'm a little -- got some bumps and bruises. I know that over the last three years there have been times where we've suffered setbacks and change hasn't come as fast as we would have liked. And people still got their old 'Hope' posters. It's like fading a little bit. (Laughter.) And I know that there are times where you might start feeling cynical about what's possible.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: But I just want to remind you of what I said back in 2008 -- I said change is hard. I said this may not happen in one year, it may not happen in one term, it may not happen with one President. But if we stick with it, if we're determined, if we understand the rightness of our cause, if we continue to think not in terms of just what's good for me but what's good for us, we will get there. (Applause.)

And I also told you -- I told you I'm not a perfect man, and I won't be a perfect President. But I said I'd always tell you what I thought, I would always tell you where I stood, and I would wake up every single day thinking about you, and working as hard as I know how to make your lives a little bit better.

AUDIENCE: Thank you!

THE PRESIDENT: And I have kept that promise. (Applause.) I have kept that promise these last three years. And so if you're willing to get back to organizing, if you're willing to get on the phone and email and tweet and knock on doors, and do what needs to be done, if you feel the same passion and same energy and same determination as I do -- and I feel it more now than I have ever felt it in my life -- (applause) -- then I promise you we will finish what we started. (Applause.) 2008 was the beginning. We're still on that journey. We've got five more years of work before us. (Applause.)

I promise you change will come. The change you believe in will come. And we will remind the world once again just why it is the United States of America is the greatest country on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Bridgeport Art Center
Chicago, Illinois

3:25 P.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Chicago! Thank you! How's everybody doing? (Applause.) It is good to be back home. Chicago looks good. And all of you look good. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: (Sings Happy Birthday.)

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you! Thank you very much. (Applause.) It is true, I am now 51. (Applause.) Michelle -

AUDIENCE MEMBER: So am I!

THE PRESIDENT: You are, too? You look better than I do. (Laughter.) Michelle says I do not look a day over 50. (Laughter.)

There are a couple of people I want to acknowledge. First of all, DJ Vince Adams, thank you so much. (Applause.) DJ Cassidy, thank you so much. My great friend, Kal Penn, thank you for all that you do. And everybody on the Gen 44 host committee, thank you for the great job you guys did. (Applause.)

Now, we just had the Olympics Closing Ceremony. We could not be prouder of our U.S. athletes -- (applause) -- bringing home the gold, conducting themselves as we would hope that somebody would conduct themselves representing the United States. They just did an outstanding job.

And I know that all of you look like pretty smart folks, so you were spending most of your time watching the Olympics, if you were watching TV. But unless your cable is broken, you probably also know we've got a pretty intense campaign going on right now. (Applause.) And the reason that this is such an intense campaign is because we could not have a bigger choice in front of us than the one that we face in November.

It's not just a choice between two candidates or two political parties. More than any other election, this is a choice about two different visions for the country, for two different directions of where America should go. And the direction that we choose, the direction that you choose when you walk into that voting booth in November, is going to make a difference not just in your life, but in the lives of your children and in the lives of your grandchildren. It will make a difference for decades to come.

Now, four years ago, we came together, not just Democrats -- we had Republicans, we had independents -- we came together because we felt as if the basic bargain that built this country was in danger. It was a bargain that said here in America, if you work hard, you can get ahead. The basic idea that if you act responsibly, if you are putting in all your effort, then you can find a job that pays the bills. You can find a home you can call your own. You can send your kids to college. You won't go bankrupt when you get sick. You can retire with dignity and respect. And most importantly, the next generation can dream even bigger and do even better than we ever imagined. That's the core of the American Dream. That's the basic American promise that made us the envy of the world; that made us the most powerful economy in the world; that built the largest middle class in the world -- that idea that here in America, you can make it if you try.

Now, we had gone through a decade in which that basic compact seemed as if it wasn't true for too many people. Folks at the top were doing very well, but for ordinary families all across America, it felt as if people were working harder, making less while the costs of everything from health care to college were going up. Jobs were being shipped overseas. We ran two wars on a credit card. We turned surpluses into deficit. And it all culminated in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression.

Now, we've spent the last three and half years trying to get us back on track. We saved an auto industry on the brink of collapse. (Applause.) We worked with the financial sector to start doing things the old-fashioned way -- lending to businesses and families, instead of engaging in reckless speculation. Four and a half million new jobs have been created; half a million manufacturing jobs -- the most since the 1990s. (Applause.)

But, Chicago, we've got a long way to go. All of us know friends, neighbors, family members who are still out of work or whose homes are still underwater. Too many folks are still burdened by enormous college debt. Too many folks still don't have a sense that tomorrow will be better than today.

And so the question in this election is, which way do we go? Do we go forward towards a new vision of an America in which prosperity is shared, or do we go backward to the same policies that got us into this mess in the first place?

AUDIENCE: Forward!

THE PRESIDENT: I believe we have to go forward. I believe we've got to keep working to create an America where no matter who you are, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter what your last name is, no matter who you love, you can make it here if you try.

(Applause.) That's what's at stake in November. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Now, the good news is even though there are no quick fixes to our challenges, we've got everything we need to make things work here in America. We still have the best workers in the world. (Applause.) We've still got the best entrepreneurs in the world. We've got the best colleges, the best universities, the best scientists, the best researchers. We're a young nation, and we've got the greatest diversity of talent and ingenuity from every corner of the globe. Witness this room. Chicago is an example of what makes this country great. (Applause.) Right?

So what's holding us back is not the lack of big ideas or good plans. What's holding us back is a brand of Washington politics that says we are not going to compromise, no matter what. It's gridlock and stalemates and dysfunction. And it's an idea propagated by the other side that somehow we're going to grow this economy from the top down, and that if people at the top are doing really, really well, then everybody else is automatically going to benefit.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, this kind of top-down economics is central to Governor Romney, and it is central to his running mate. Just yesterday morning, my opponent chose his running mate, the ideological leader of the Republicans in Congress -- Mr. Paul Ryan. And I want to congratulate --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: No, no, no, no. Look, I want to congratulate Congressman Ryan. I know him. I welcome him to the race. Congressman Ryan is a decent man. He is a family man. He's an articulate spokesman for Governor Romney's vision. But it's a vision that I fundamentally disagree with. (Applause.) My opponent and Congressman Ryan and their allies in Congress, they all believe that if we just get rid of more regulations on big corporations and we give more tax breaks to the wealthiest Americans, it will lead to jobs and prosperity for everybody else. That's what they're proposing. That's where they'll take us if they win.

And this is not speculation. It's on their websites. It's embodied in the budget that the House Republicans voted for repeatedly. The centerpiece of Governor Romney's entire economic plan is a new $5 trillion tax cut, a lot of it going to the wealthiest Americans. This is on top of the Bush tax cuts. Last week we found out that to pay for this $5 trillion tax cut, not only would we see them gut education investments --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: -- gut investments in science and research, gut investments in things like rebuilding our roads and our bridges, but it turns out that Governor Romney's tax plan would also raise taxes on middle-class families by an average of $2,000 each.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Not to reduce the deficit, mind you. Not to create more jobs. Independent economists have looked at it -- they said there's nothing in Governor Romney's plan that would create jobs right now. This would all be in order to give another $250,000 tax cut to people who are making $3 million a year or more.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Let me tell you something. They have tried this before. They have tried to sell us this trickle-down fairy dust before. (Laughter.) And guess what -- it did not work. (Applause.) It did not work. It's not a plan to cut the deficit. It's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to revive the middle class. It's not a plan to move our economy forward. We don't need more tax cuts for folks like me. We need to give tax relief to working Americans. (Applause.) To middle-class families. For folks who are trying to raise their kids and keep them healthy, and send them to college, and keep a roof over their heads.

That's the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I promised the American people I was going to cut taxes on middle-class families -- and that's what I did. (Applause.) The typical middle-class family is actually paying $3,600 less in their taxes than when I came into office. And I want to keep income taxes exactly where they are for everybody who's making $250,000 a year or more [sic] -- which is about 98 percent of the American people, and 97 percent of small businesses. So if your income is $250,000 or less, your income taxes will not go up a dime. (Applause.)

On the other hand, if you're lucky enough, like I am, to be in the top 2 percent, what we've said is you can afford to do a little bit more so that we can pay down our deficit and still help young people go to college -- (applause) -- and still make sure that we're investing in basic research to cure things like Alzheimer's and cancer. We're asking you to contribute a little bit more.

And, look, government is still going to have to do its part. We've already cut a trillion dollars of spending; an additional $1.2 trillion is slated to be made. We can cut out programs that don't work to make sure we can invest in the things that do. We can make government more streamlined, more efficient. But if we're really going to be serious about reducing the deficit and growing the economy, then for folks like me to go back and pay at the rates that existed when Bill Clinton was President, when we created 23 million new jobs, went from deficit to surplus, and created a whole bunch of millionaires to boot -- that is the right plan for America.

And by the way, the reason that it's the right plan is because when a construction worker or a teacher or a receptionist -- when they've got a little money in their pocket, what do they do?

AUDIENCE: Spend it!

THE PRESIDENT: They maybe go out and buy that new car, or buy that new appliance, or go to a restaurant, or, heaven forbid, they take a vacation once in a while. (Laughter.) And so that means business has more customers, and they hire more workers. Historically, that is how our economy has grown. Not from the top down, but from the middle out, from the bottom up. When we create opportunity for everybody who works hard to get ahead, this economy grows.

That's the choice in this election. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

Now, that choice -- you can see it in every issue between myself and Mr. Romney. When the auto industry was on the brink of collapse, Governor Romney said, let's "let Detroit go bankrupt." I said, with a million workers and an iconic American industry on the line, I'm going to bet on the American worker. (Applause.) And you know what, three years later, GM is number one again and the American auto has come roaring back. (Applause.) That's the choice in this election.

So now I want to make sure that high-tech manufacturing takes root not in China, not in Germany, but here in the United States. I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Let's give those tax breaks to companies that are investing here in Chicago, investing in Cleveland, investing in Pittsburgh. (Applause.) Let's create jobs here in the United States -- hiring American workers, making American products, selling them around the world, stamped with three proud words: Made in America. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

I'm running to make sure that after a decade of war, we start doing some nation-building here at home. (Applause.) In 2008, I promised we'd end the war in Iraq -- we've ended it. (Applause.) I said we'd go after al Qaeda and bin Laden -- we did. (Applause.) Now we're beginning a transition in Afghanistan, making Afghans more responsible for their own security, and bringing our troops home. All of this is possible only because of the extraordinary men and women in uniform who protect our freedom every single day at great sacrifice to themselves. (Applause.)

But the question now is what country are they coming back to? We want to give them a country full of opportunity.

Now, part of that means making sure that we're doing right by them. And as long as I am Commander-in-Chief, they are going to get the benefits that they have earned -- (applause) -- because if you fought for America, you shouldn't have to fight for a job or a roof over your head when you come home.

But it also means making sure the economy is absorbing all these folks who are coming home -- which means I want to take about half of the money that we were spending on war and let's start investing it here in rebuilding our schools and roads and bridges. (Applause.) Let's make sure that we're putting teachers back to work. (Applause.)

There is so much that we can do with the savings that we had and it will make America stronger, it will make America safer not just for the next five years or the next 10 years, but for decades to come. That's the America we want to build. That's the choice in this election.

I'm running because I want to make sure we've got the best education system in the world. (Applause.) So I want to help local school districts hire and retain the best teachers, especially in math and science. I want to give 2 million more people the opportunity to go to community colleges and get trained for the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. And I want to make sure, building on the work that we've already done, that we make college affordable -- not only by making sure that we continue to expand our efforts in Pell grants and student loans, but also that we're making sure that colleges and universities are keeping their cost down. Because higher education is no longer a luxury; it is an economic necessity in the 21st century, and we've got to fight for it. (Applause.) That's the choice in this election.

On every issue, there is a stark contrast. When it comes to homeownership, my opponent says, just let the foreclosures bottom out. That's not a solution. I want to make sure that homeowners across American can refinance at historically low rates, save $3,000. How many people here can use an extra $3,000? (Applause.) That would strengthen the housing market and put money in people's pockets that will make the economy stronger.

My opponent says that we should go back to the days when folks went broke because they got sick. He wants to kill the Affordable Care Act -- also known affectionately as Obamacare. (Applause.) I believe that it was the right thing to do for young people to be able to stay on their parent's plan -- 6.5 million young people have insurance that didn't have it before. (Applause.) I think it was the right thing to do to make sure that folks without [sic] preexisting conditions are able to get health insurance. (Applause.) I think it is the right thing to do for seniors to get discounts on their prescription drugs. I think it's the right thing to do for everybody to be able to get preventive care, including women who can have some control over their own health care decisions. (Applause.)

We're not going backwards, we're going forwards. That's a choice in this election. (Applause.)

We did the right thing to end "don't ask, don't tell." We're not going back, we're going forward. (Applause.) We did the right thing helping out DREAM Act kids. We're not going to go backwards, we're going forward. (Applause.)

Across the board, on these issues -- all of these things -- whether we're talking about manufacturing, a fair tax code, a strong housing market, affordable college, a K-12 system that works -- all these things stitch together. It has to do with how do we create security for middle-class folks and how do we create ladders of opportunity for everybody. That's how we've always grown this economy. That is at the heart of what we believe -- that everybody who works hard has a shot; that everybody gets a fair shot, everybody does their fair share, everybody plays by the same set of rules -- a belief that we are in this together, that we are not all on our own. (Applause.)

That's the vision that we put forward in 2008. That is the vision that we are fighting for in 2012. That's the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for President. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, let me just close by saying this. We've got less than three months -- less than three months. That goes by quick. And as you get older, as you get to be like 51 -- (laughter) -- you will find out it goes by even quicker. And during this time we will see the other side spend more money through these super PACs than we've ever seen -- ever. I mean, they are writing $10 million checks, just -- they are just cranking it out. If you live in a battleground state, you cannot get away from their advertising.

Now, the reason they have to advertise like this is because they know their economic theories don't sell. They know -- we didn't get amnesia. We remember trying what they're selling, and it didn't work. (Laughter.) So they're basically just going to repeat over and over again: The economy is not good and it's Obama's fault. They'll have variations on the theme, but it's the same thing over and over again. (Laughter.)

Now, that may be a plan to try to win an election, but it's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to strengthen the economy. It's not a plan to revive the middle class. It's not a plan to make America stronger. It feeds into fear and the cynicism that so many Americans feel about Washington, but it's not a plan for hope. It's not -- it doesn't capture America at its best -- a big, bold, generous, optimistic America. (Applause.)

And so the good news is we've been outspent before, I've been counted out before, but what has always given me faith, what's given me hope, what's given me confidence is you. It's all of you. It's the fact that when the American people come together, they cannot be stopped. (Applause.) When people power is harnessed, when you guys are out there knocking on doors, making things happen, you can't be stopped.

So I'm going to need your help. We've come too far to go back now. We got too many good jobs to create. We got too many teachers we need to hire. We've got too many schools we've got to rebuild. We've got too many students who need help affording college. We've got too much homegrown energy that we've got to generate. We've got more troops we've got to bring home. We've got more doors of opportunity that we have to open. And that's what's at stake.

And so I am not just asking for your vote, I am asking for your work. I need your help over the next three months. (Applause.) I don't need you just knocking on doors; I need you to make phone calls, I need you to talk to your friends, I need you to talk to your neighbors. I need you guys to load up and go over into Iowa, a battleground state, and knock on some doors and make some phone calls over there. (Applause.) We've got to get help. You've got to get involved in the election. You've got to get on our website. You've got to make sure that you are signing up.

If you are as passionate and as energized and as determined as you were before, then we won't lose. (Applause.) And it is true that I am older and a little grayer, but I made a promise to you in 2008. I said I'd always tell you what I thought, I'd always tell you where I stood. And most importantly, I told you I would always, every single day, every minute of every day, think about you, and fight as hard as I knew how for you. I have kept that promise. (Applause.)

I still believe in you. And if you still believe in me, and are willing to get out there and work over the next 86 days, we will not just win this election, but we will finish what we started and remind the world just why it is the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you, Chicago. (Applause.) God bless you. God bless the United States of America.

October 25,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Centennial Park
Tampa, Florida

9:02 A.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: How's it going, Tampa? (Applause.) Are you fired up? (Applause.) Are you ready to go? (Applause.)

Well, thank you so -- can everybody please give Laura a big round of applause for that great introduction? (Applause.) We've also got with us here Congresswoman Kathy Castor in the house. (Applause.) Mayor Bob Buckhorn. (Applause.) My friend and your former governor, Charlie Crist. (Applause.)

So good morning, Tampa.

AUDIENCE: Good morning!

THE PRESIDENT: Thanks for waking up early. (Applause.)

You know, we are right in the middle of our 48-hour fly-around campaign extravaganza. (Applause.) We are pulling -- we pulled an all-nighter last night. We just came from Iowa, Nevada, Colorado. We're going to Virginia and Ohio. (Applause.) I'm going to stop in Chicago. I'm going to do some early voting in Chicago. (Applause.)

I can't tell you who I'm voting for -- it's a secret ballot. (Laughter.) But Michelle says she voted for me. (Applause.) We can vote early in Illinois, just like you can vote right now in Florida. So I've come to Florida today to ask you for your vote. (Applause.) I've come to ask you to help me keep moving America forward. (Applause.)

And you notice, my voice is getting a little hoarse. But I'm just going to keep on -- just going to keep on keeping on -- (applause) -- until every single person out there who needs to vote is going to go vote. (Applause.) Because the stakes are just so high, Florida.

You've heard now three debates; you've seen months of campaigning, way too many TV ads. I know you guys are sick of the TV ads.

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Except the ones that I'm in. (Applause.) Maybe even those, too. (Laughter.) But you've also had a chance to see the two candidates and the two perspectives. You've heard Governor Romney's sales pitch.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. (Applause.)

He's been running around saying he's got a five-point plan for the economy -- except it turns out that it's just a one-point plan -- a sketchy deal that says folks at the very top get to play by a different set of rules than you do. They get to pay a lower tax rate. They outsource jobs. They want to roll back Wall Street reform. That was his philosophy in the boardroom; that was his philosophy as a governor. And if it sounds familiar, it's because that's the philosophy that created a Great Recession.

We tried that in the last decade, and it didn't work. It led to falling incomes and the slowest job growth in half a century, and the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression. And we've been working hard for four years to clean it up, to clean up the mess that got left behind. (Applause.)

And Governor Romney I think knows this -- he knows his plan isn't any different than the policies that got us into the mess. So in the final weeks of this election, he's counting on you forgetting that his policies aren't going to work. He's hoping that you won't remember and you'll come down with a case of what we call --

AUDIENCE: Romnesia!

THE PRESIDENT: -- Romnesia. (Applause.) He's hoping you won't remember that his economic plan is likely to create jobs in China, not America -- because it rewards companies that ship jobs overseas. He's hoping you won't remember he wants to give millionaires and billionaires a $250,000 tax cut, because the only way he can pay for it is by either blowing up the deficit or making middle-class families pay more in taxes. He's hoping you're going to come down with a severe case of Romnesia just before you cast your ballot. (Applause.)

But, Tampa, I want you to know this. If you're starting to get a temperature -- your ears are ringing, your eyes are blurry -- you're showing symptoms, you can't remember what you just said last week -- (laughter) -- if you start thinking that maybe Governor Romney wanted to save the auto industry even though he wrote an op-ed saying "let Detroit go bankrupt" -- if there's a sudden fuzziness when it comes to the policies on your website, don't worry, because this is a curable condition -- (laughter) -- and Obamacare covers preexisting condition. (Applause.) We can make you well. There's a cure. You just have to vote. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, Tampa, we joke about Romnesia, but all of this speaks to something that's really important in this election and that is the issue of trust. When you elect a President, you're counting on somebody you can trust to fight for you, who you can trust to do what they say they're going to do, who can trust -- that you can trust to make sure that when something unexpected happens, he or she is going to be thinking about your families, your future. Trust matters. And, Florida, you know me. You know I say what I mean and I mean what I say. (Applause.)

We haven't finished all the work that we set out to do in 2008. But every single day when I set foot in that Oval Office, I'm thinking about you. I'm fighting for your families. And with your help, I've kept the commitments that I made. I told you I'd end the war in Iraq -- I did. (Applause.) I said we'd transition out of Afghanistan -- and we are. (Applause.) I said we'd go after those who actually attacked us on 9/11 -- al Qaeda is on the path to defeat; Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.) A new tower is rising over the New York skyline. Our heroes are coming home. I've kept those promises. (Applause.)

I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families -- and we have. (Applause.) I promised to cut taxes for small businesses -- and we have. (Applause.) I promised to end Wall Street taxpayer-funded bailouts -- we have. (Applause.) I promised to repeal "don't ask, don't tell," so anybody can serve in our military regardless of who they love -- I have. (Applause.) I promised that we would pass health care reform, so nobody goes bankrupt when they get sick -- we have. (Applause.) I promised to preserve Medicare -- we have. (Applause.) I bet on American workers and American ingenuity, and we saved an auto industry that is resurgent. (Applause.)

On issue after issue, we're moving forward. We lost 9 million jobs in the Great Recession, but over the last 31 months our businesses have added more than 5 million new jobs. Unemployment is falling. Manufacturing is coming back. Our assembly lines are humming again. We've got a long way to go but, Florida, we've come too far to turn back now. (Applause.) We can't afford to go back to the same policies that got us into the mess. We've got to stick with the policies that are getting us out of the mess. (Applause.) And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, I've got a plan that will actually create jobs, a plan that will actually create middle-class security. And unlike Mitt Romney, I'm proud to talk about that plan -- (applause) -- because the math actually adds up. (Laughter.)

I want you all to take a look at it. You can go to BarackObama.com/plans. And I want you to share those plans with your friends and neighbors and coworkers. There are still people out there who are trying to make up their minds. There might even be some here who are trying to make up their minds, maybe. No, no, maybe your girlfriend said you've got to come. (Laughter.) She's smart enough, she's already voting for Obama, but you need some persuading. (Applause.)

So I ask you to compare my plan to Governor Romney's plan. See which plan -- where's my plan -- oh, it dropped -- (laughter) -- I couldn't find my plan. There it is. (Applause.) Now, this is the same plan that's on the website. And you should look and see which plan is better for you. It's got details in here about how we can move the country forward.

First, I want to end tax breaks for companies that are shipping jobs overseas, give them to companies that are investing and creating jobs right here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

Number two, I want to cut our oil imports in half by 2020 so we control more of our own energy. Right here in Florida, we are seeing solar and other new sources of energy. We've doubled clean energy in addition to increasing oil and natural gas production. Today, we are less dependent on oil from foreign sources than any time in the last two decades. (Applause.)

And by the way, we're also increasing fuel standards on cars and trucks so you'll go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.) I want to build on that progress. I don't want fuel-efficient cars and long-lasting batteries and wind turbines and solar panels made in China. I want them made right here in Florida. (Applause.) I want them made right here in the United States with U.S. workers. (Applause.)

Third, I want to make it a national mission to educate our kids and train our workers better than anybody else on Earth. (Applause.) I want to recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers. I want to train 2 million workers at community colleges for the skills that businesses are hiring for right now. I want to work with our colleges to keep tuition low -- (applause) -- so that our young people aren't burdened with debt. We can do that.

Number four, I want to reduce our deficit by $4 trillion, but I want to do it in a balanced way. We'll cut out spending we don't need, but I'm going to ask the wealthiest Americans to pay a little bit more so we can invest in the research and technology and infrastructure that keeps new jobs and businesses coming to America. And I will never, under the guise of reducing the deficit, turn Medicare into a voucher -- (applause) -- because Americans shouldn't have to spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies. (Applause.)

And by the way, while we're at it, as we saw again this week, I don't think any politician in Washington -- most of whom are male -- should be making health care decisions for women. (Applause.) Women can make those decisions themselves. I don't think your boss or your insurance company should be making those decisions. Women should be making their own health care decisions. That's why the health care law we passed put those choices in your hands -- that's where it belongs and that's where it will stay as long as I am President of the United States. (Applause.)

And finally, I'll use the savings from ending the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan to put people back to work doing some nation-building here at home -- (applause) -- rebuilding our roads and our bridges, our broadband lines in the rural areas, fixing our schools up. When our veterans come home, I want to make sure they've got jobs waiting for them. (Applause.) We're going to serve them as well as they've served us, because nobody who's fought for this country should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. (Applause.)

That's the plan we need, Florida. That's how you build a strong, sustainable economy that has good, middle-class jobs. That's how you encourage businesses to start here and to stay here. That's how you're going to actually increase take-home pay. That's how you build an economy where everybody who works hard has a chance. That's what we can do together.

And now it's up to you. Now it's up to you, right here in Florida, today. You can choose the path that we go from here. It's up to the young people here to choose the future that you want to see. (Applause.) It's up to the not-so-young people to choose the kind of country we leave for the future generations. You can choose the top-down policies that got us into this mess -- or you can choose the policies that are getting us out of this mess. (Applause.)

You can choose a foreign policy that's reckless and wrong -- or you can choose one that's steady and strong. (Applause.)

You can choose to turn back the clock 50 years for women, and for immigrants, and for gays -- or in this election, you can stand up for that basic principle that makes our country the envy of the world -- that we're all created equal; that everybody has a place. (Applause.) Black, white, Hispanic, Asian, Native American, young, old -- black, white -- (applause) -- gay, straight -- it doesn't matter, no matter who you are, no matter you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter who you love -- in America, you've got to be able to make it if you try. (Applause.) That's what we believe. That's what we're fighting for. (Applause.)

Florida, we have been through tough times these past four years. I meet folks all the time who tell me how tough times have been. And there are a lot of folks where times are still tough. But the good news is -- Americans, we're always tougher. We always bounce back. We always come out on top. (Applause.) Because we pull together. Because we look after one another. Because we leave no one behind. We don't close the door behind us if we succeed. We make sure that we're bringing more folks through that door. Because we don't turn back. We go forward. Adelante. (Applause.) We look forward to a future that is brighter. We look at the distant horizon and we say, that's where we're headed. (Applause.)

In America, our destiny is not written for us, it's written by us -- and we can write that next chapter together.

So, Florida, that's why I'm asking for your vote in this election. (Applause.) That's why I'm asking for your vote. And if I have the privilege of serving as your President for another four years, I promise you will always have a President who hears your voices. You'll always have a President who fights for your families. You'll have a President who spends every waking hour thinking about how I can make your lives just a little bit better, make the future of your children and grandchildren a little bit brighter.

Florida, I believe in you. I'm asking you to keep believing in me. (Applause.) And if you're willing to work with me, and knock on some doors with me, make some phone calls with me, vote for me -- (applause) -- we'll win Hillsborough County again. We'll win Florida again. (Applause.) We'll win this election again. (Applause.) We'll finish what we started in 2008. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you, and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Cleveland Burke Lakefront Airport Tarmac
Cleveland, Ohio

8:24 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Ohio! (Applause.) Are you fired up? (Applause.) Are you ready to go? (Applause.) I can't hear you. Are you fired up?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Are you ready to go?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: I am glad to be back in Cleveland, Ohio! (Applause.) We've got two extraordinary representatives who are here -- Betty Sutton and Marcy Kaptur -- give them a big round of applause. (Applause.)

It's great to see all of you who are here.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.)

This is the final stop on our 48-hour fly-around all across America. We've been going for two days straight. (Applause.) We've been from the East Coast to the West Coast, and now we're going back East again. (Applause.) We just made a quick stop in Chicago so I could vote. (Applause.) I can't tell you who I voted for because it's a secret ballot. (Laughter.) But Michelle told me she voted for me. (Applause.)

So, Ohio, I've got to tell you, even though I've been going for about 38 hours straight, even though my voice is getting kind of hoarse, I've still got a spring in my step. (Applause.) Because our cause is right. (Applause.) Because we're fighting for the future. (Applause.) I've come to Ohio today to ask you for your vote. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: And the good news is I'm asking for your vote and I'm asking you to vote early. (Applause.) Here in Ohio, you can vote now. You don't have to vote later. I need you to vote early, and I need your help to keep moving America forward. (Applause.)

Look, we've already now had three debates. We've had a year of campaigning. We have had way too many TV commercials. I feel bad for the state of Ohio -- you've had a lot of commercials. (Laughter.) You've now heard Governor Romney's sales pitch.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: No, no, no, don't boo --

AUDIENCE: Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: -- vote. (Applause.)

But Governor Romney has been running around saying he's got a five-point plan to fix the economy. Turns out it's only a one-point plan -- folks at the very top get to play by a different set of rules than you do. They get to pay a lower tax rate, outsource more jobs, let Wall Street run wild again. It was the philosophy he had when he was in the private sector. It was the philosophy he had as a governor in Massachusetts. And if it sounds familiar, it's because we just tried that philosophy in the decade before I took office. And we know what happened. It didn't work.

Jobs were being shipped overseas at a record pace. Incomes were falling. Record deficits, the slowest job growth in half a century. Incomes were not going up -- they were going down. The worst economic crisis since the Great Depression. That's what those ideas produced. And we've been working for four years now, Ohio, to clean up the mess that those policies left behind.

Now, Governor Romney understands this. He knows his plan is no different than what we tried under the previous President. So in the final weeks of this election, since he knows that it's probably not going to be real popular, he's trying to kind of fuzz things up a little bit. He's counting on you to forget. He's hoping that you come down with what we call a case of --

AUDIENCE: Romnesia! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: -- Romnesia. (Laughter.) He's hoping you won't remember that his economic plan is more likely to create jobs in China than here in Ohio, because it rewards companies that ship jobs overseas instead of companies that are creating jobs right here in Ohio, right here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

He's hoping you won't remember that he wants to give millionaires and billionaires a $250,000 tax cut. And the reason he can't explain it is because the only way to pay for it is either by blowing a hole in the deficit, making it even bigger, or making your taxes higher.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote.

He's hoping that if he just keeps on saying how much he loves cars over and over again -- (laughter) -- that you won't remember he wrote an article that was titled, "Let Detroit Go Bankrupt."

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: I mean, I don't know how a guy sits on a stage, talking to tens of millions of fellow Americans, and you are saying somehow that you were all for the auto industry when everybody remembers you weren't. (Applause.) The people of Detroit remember. The people of Ohio remember. (Applause.)

If Mitt Romney had been President when the auto industry was on the verge of collapse, we might not have an American auto industry today. We'd be buying cars from China, instead of selling cars to China.

The auto industry supports one in eight Ohio jobs. It's a source of pride to this state. It's a source of pride for generations of workers. I refused to walk away from those workers. I refused to walk away from those jobs. (Applause.) I wasn't going to let Detroit go bankrupt, or Toledo go bankrupt, or Lordstown go bankrupt. (Applause.) I bet on American workers. I bet on American manufacturing. And I'd do it again, because that bet always pays off. (Applause.)

So now, in the closing moments of the election, Governor Romney is hoping you, too, will come down with a severe case of Romnesia.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: So I'm here to tell you, Cleveland, if you start feeling a temperature, if you're eyes are getting a little blurry and your hearing is getting a little muffled, if you're feeling a little weak, you need to know that whatever the symptoms are, don't worry, Obamacare covers preexisting conditions. (Applause.) We can fix you up. We can make you well. There's a cure, Ohio, you just have to make sure to vote. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Look, we joke about Romnesia, but it's not funny because it speaks to something serious. It has to do with trust. There's no more serious issue in a presidential campaign than trust. Trust matters. You know what, Ohio, after all these years you now know me. You know that I mean what I say and I say what I mean. (Applause.) You know that I've been willing to take some tough positions even when they're not popular. And, by the way, saving the auto industry wasn't popular when we were doing it even in Ohio, even in Michigan. But it was the right thing to do.

You know that every single day when I get up in the morning, I'm thinking about you. When I walk into that Oval Office, I'm fighting for your families. And we may not have gotten every single thing done that we need to get done, but I have kept the commitments and the promises that I made. (Applause.)

I told you I'd end the war in Iraq -- and we did. (Applause.) I said we'd transition out of Afghanistan -- and we are. (Applause.) I said we'd refocus on the terrorists who actually carried out the 9/11 attacks -- and al Qaeda is decimated and Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.) We kept those promises. (Applause.) A new tower is rising above the New York skyline. Our heroes are starting to come home. I've kept those promises.

I was proud and humbled to learn today that we have Colin Powell's support in this campaign. (Applause.) And I'm grateful to him because of his lifetime of service for his country, as a soldier and as a diplomat. But I'm also grateful to every brave American who serves in uniform. And they should know this: As long as I'm your Commander-in-Chief, I will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. (Applause.) That's a promise I've kept.

Four years ago, I promised to cut taxes for families like yours, for middle-class families -- we kept that promise. I promised to cut taxes for small businesses -- we've cut taxes for small businesses 18 times. I kept that promise. (Applause.) I promised to end taxpayer-funded bailouts for Wall Street -- I've kept that promise, and we got every dime back that we used to rescue the financial system. (Applause.)

I promised that we would make sure that nobody in this great country of ours goes bankrupt if somebody in their family gets sick -- we've kept that promise. (Applause.)

I promised to repeal "don't ask, don't tell," because anybody who is willing to serve our country should be able to with honor and dignity regardless of who they love. I kept that promise. (Applause.)

I said that we would keep the American auto industry going, and today its engines are roaring at full throttle. Nearly 250,000 new jobs -- not just something the Midwest can be proud of, something America can be proud of. (Applause.)

We're moving forward, Ohio. After losing 9 million jobs in the Great Recession, using the policies that Mitt Romney now wants to bring back that caused all those jobs to be lost, we've now added, using my policies, more than 5 million new jobs in the past two and a half years. (Applause.) The unemployment rate has fallen. Manufacturing is coming back to our shores. Assembly lines are humming again. (Applause.)

We've got a long way to go, but, Ohio, we've come too far to turn back now. (Applause.) We can't go backwards to the policies that caused us so much trouble, that hurt so many families. We've got to stick to the policies that are getting us -- getting us out of this mess.

I need you, Ohio. America needs you, Ohio. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, Ohio, I don't want your vote just because of what I have done; I want your vote because of what I'm going to do. (Applause.) I've got a plan that will actually create jobs, a plan that will actually create middle-class security. And unlike Mr. Romney, I'm proud to talk about what is actually in my plan because my plan adds up. The math works. If you want to take a look, go to BarackObama.com/plans. I want you to share it with your neighbors. Share it with your friends. Share it with your co-workers. There are still people out there who are trying to make up their minds. Some of you may be still trying to make up your mind.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Oh, no, maybe your girlfriend brought you here and she said, I'm going to convince you tonight you need to vote for Obama -- but you haven't made up your mind yet. Maybe your Grandma said, you need to vote for Obama. And you said, okay, Grandma, I'll come. But you're not yet sure. So I want you to look at this plan. Compare my plan to Governor Romney's. I'm not scared of the comparison. I want you to know what's in my plan and what's in his, and see what's better for you and your family and for America. (Applause.)

Look, here's what's in my plan: I want to end tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas. I want to reward small businesses and manufacturers who create jobs right here in Ohio, right here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

Number two, I want to cut our oil imports in half by 2020 so we control more of our own energy. We're less dependent on foreign oil than any time in the last two decades, and we're producing jobs doing it. And one reason, by the way, is because we increased fuel-efficiency standards on cars and trucks made right here in America, so your cars and trucks will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.)

I don't want fuel-efficient cars, or long-lasting batteries, or wind turbines, or solar panels built in China. I want them built here. (Applause.) I want them manufactured in Cleveland. I want them made in Ohio. I want them stamped with: Made in America. We can do that. (Applause.)

Now, I also want to make sure that our kids and our workers are better trained than everybody else. We've got to make this a national mission. I want to recruit 100,000 math and science teachers to make sure our kids are at the cutting edge. (Applause.) I want to train 2 million workers at community colleges so they have the skills for the jobs that are there right now and the jobs of the future. I want to work to make sure that colleges and universities keep tuition down so our young people aren't burdened with debt. (Applause.) We can do that.

Number four, my plan will cut the deficit by $4 trillion over the next 10 years. We need to do that, but we need to do it in a balanced way. We can do it without sticking it to the middle class. I'm going to cut out spending that we don't need -- we've already cut a trillion dollars -- but I'm also going to ask the wealthiest among us to pay a little bit more -- (applause) -- so that we can invest in the research and technology to keep new jobs and businesses coming to America.

And by the way, I'm not going to use deficit reduction as an excuse to turn Medicare into a voucher system. (Applause.) Because Americans should not be spending their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies. (Applause.)

And by the way, while we're on the topic of health care, we saw again this week, you don't want a bunch of politicians in Washington, most of whom are male, making health care decisions for women. Women can make those decisions themselves. (Applause.) That's what I stand for. That's what I'll continue to stand for as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Number five, as we are ending the war in Iraq and Afghanistan, I want to take some of the money that we save and put it to work doing some nation-building here at home. We've got construction workers and folks in the trades who are at home right now. They're dying to get back to work. Let's put them back to work rebuilding our roads and our bridges, our schools all across America. Let's train our veterans as they're coming home to get some of those jobs. (Applause.)

Let's make sure that we're giving them a chance to be police officers and firefighters and first responders. Let's make sure our veterans when they come home are being served as well as they've served us -- because nobody should have to fight for a job when you've fought for your country. You shouldn't have to fight for a roof over your heads when you've fought for your country. (Applause.)

Look, Ohio, that's the plan we need. That's how you build a strong, sustainable economy. That's how you create good middle-class jobs. That's how you encourage new businesses to start here and stay here. That's how you increase take-home pay. That's how you give workers a chance, if they're willing to work hard, to build a better life for themselves. (Applause.) That's how you make sure that everybody has got a chance to get ahead.

That's what we can do. But we can only do it together. And Ohio, I'm going to need you to do it. It's now up to you to choose the path that we take. It's up to the young people who are here -- (applause) -- to choose the future that you want. It's up to the not-so-young people like me and you -- you know who you are -- (laughter) -- to choose the future you want for the next generation.

We can go back to the top-down policies that we know in our gut won't work, or you can choose the policies that we know give us the prospect of broad-based prosperity. You can choose a foreign policy like Governor Romney is offering that's reckless and wrong, or you can choose the kind of policy that I've implemented that is steady and strong. (Applause.)

You can choose to turn back the clock 50 years for women and immigrants and gays, or in this election, you can stand up for that basic principle enshrined in our founding documents that all of us are created equal, all of us endowed with certain inalienable rights by our Creator; that it doesn't matter whether you're black or white, Hispanic, Asian, Native American, young or old, rich or poor, gay or straight, abled or disabled -- we all have a place in America if you're willing to work hard, if you're willing to stand up, you can make it here in America if you try. That's what we're fighting for. That's who we are. (Applause.)

Listen, Ohio, I know we've been through tough times. Every day I think about everybody out there all across the country who wants to work and is still looking for a job, whose homes may be still underwater or at risk of foreclosure. The folks out there who, at the end of the month, are sitting around the kitchen table, trying to figure out, how am I going to make all these bills.

Michelle and I understand it because we know what it's been like to have a tough time sometimes. But what I also know and all of you remind me of this every day when I'm talking to the American people -- we're tougher than tough times. We always bounce back. We always come out on top because we pull together, because we look out for one another, because we leave nobody behind, because we don't forget where we come from, because if we're successful then we keep the door open for folks who are coming up from behind, because we don't look backwards -- we look forward. We look at that distant horizon. We look at that new frontier. We are not afraid of the future. (Applause.)

America, our destiny is not written for us -- it's written by us. And we can write that next chapter together. And that's why I'm asking you for your vote in this election. (Applause.) And if you give me your vote, I promise you, you will continue to have a President who hears your voices; a President who fights for your families; a President who spends every waking hour trying to figure out how I can make sure that your lives are a little bit better, and more importantly, that all of our children's lives are a whole lot brighter.

Ohio, I believe in you.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We believe in you!

THE PRESIDENT: And I need you to keep believing in me. And if you're willing to roll up your sleeves and work with me, knock on some doors with me, make some phone calls with me, we're going to win Cuyahoga County. We're going to win Ohio. We're going to win this election. We're going to finish what we started. We'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you, and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

July 16,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Cincinnati Music Hall
Cincinnati, Ohio

2:00 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Cincinnati! It is good to be back! Everybody, please have a seat if you've got a seat. (Laughter.) I think most people have a seat here. It is great to see all of you.

I want to acknowledge -- first of all, I want to make sure that I acknowledge your outstanding mayor, Mark Mallory is in the house! (Applause.) Where is he? He was around here somewhere. There he is right there. Good to see you.

Now, I know that some of you think that I came to this music hall to sing. (Laughter and applause.) But I have to tell you, there's no concert tonight -- (laughter) -- or at least not this afternoon. There may be a concert tonight. Michelle has told me I should not be singing in public all the time. (Laughter.) Well, it's -- happy birthday. What's your name?

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Adam.

THE PRESIDENT: Adam? How old are you, Adam?

AUDIENCE: I'm 18 today.

THE PRESIDENT: All right. Let's sing "Happy Birthday" to Adam then. We can sing. (Sings "Happy Birthday"). Yay! All right. (Applause.) So there was a concert after all. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I'm 101 years old!

THE PRESIDENT: There you go. Let's give a round of applause -- what's your name, sir?

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Dr. Harvey.

THE PRESIDENT: Okay. (Laughter.) Dr. Harvey, happy -- it's not your birthday, but just congratulations on being 101. (Applause.) Dr. Harvey looks good. I've got to follow him around and see what he eats. (Laughter.) Because I'm going to eat what he eats.

Okay, you guys -- 105 right here! (Applause.) 105? (Laughter.) What's that sweet lady's name?

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Margaret Harris.

THE PRESIDENT: Margaret Harris is 105 years old. (Applause.) God bless her -- 106 next month. She's beautiful.

Well, it's so nice to -- I guess folks do pretty good down here in Cincinnati. (Laughter.) You've got 105, 101 --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I'm 93.

THE PRESIDENT: -- 93 -- okay. (Laughter.) God bless you. We love you, too. (Laughter.) Anybody else over 100? (Laughter.) You're not over 100. All right. No more birthdays, that's it. (Laughter.)

Now, today --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Are you going to sing?

THE PRESIDENT: No, I'm not going to sing. (Laughter.) No Al Green.

Today, we are turning this beautiful music hall into a town hall. (Applause.) So I'm not going to take too much time up front. I want to spend as much time as possible answering some of your questions and getting your comments. But I do want to just say a few things about what's at stake here.

Four years ago, we came together -- Democrats, but also independents and Republicans -- who were interested in restoring the basic bargain that made America the greatest nation on Earth. We've got so much to be thankful for -- incredible land and an incredible military, our men and women in uniform, they do so much for us all the time, and there's obviously great wealth in this nation. But what really sets us apart has always been that we've got the greatest middle class -- (applause) -- and a basic idea that's at the heart of this country that says if you work hard, then you can get ahead. If you're responsible, then you can live out your dreams, you're not confined to the circumstances of your birth.

A basic belief that if you're doing what you need to do -- because we're not a country that believes in handouts, we believe in working for what we get -- that you're able to find a job that supports a family, get a home that you can call your own, that you're able to send your kids to get a good education and hopefully allow them to go to college and they can achieve and succeed in ways you might not have even imagined; that you won't go bankrupt when you get sick -- (applause) -- that you'll be able to retire with dignity and respect. (Applause.) That's the idea that built this country. That's the idea that turned us into an economic powerhouse.

And what we saw for about a decade before I took office was the sense that that dream was slipping away from too many people, because people were working harder but they were getting less. Incomes and wages were flat-lining while the cost of everything from college to health care to groceries to gas were all going up.

So our goal was to turn this around -- and we knew it wouldn't be easy. We knew that it might take more than one term, maybe more than one President. But we knew that we had to get started to reclaim this dream.

And then what we discovered was that because of irresponsibility, because of economic policies that had failed and a lack of oversight when it came to regulations, we inherited the worst financial crisis and the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression. And millions of people were hurt -- lost their jobs, lost their homes, lost their savings. And a lot of folks are still struggling.

But here's the thing. Americans are always tougher than tough times. And this crisis has not changed our character. It hasn't changed what we believe in. It hasn't changed that basic notion that everybody should get a fair shot, and everybody should do their fair share, and everybody should play by the same set of rules. (Applause.)

And so even though over the last three and a half years, our central focus has been how do we recover from this crisis, and get people back to work, and make sure that small businesses are doing well again, and that they're getting financing -- despite all those things, our goal has not just been to get back to where we were before the crisis struck, but rather to build an economy that lasts -- (applause) -- to build an economy that says no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter what your last name is, you can make it if you try here in America. (Applause.)

Everything I've done since I've been President has been focused on this central issue. That's the reason I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: And you know, part of the reason -- part of the reason I'm here today --

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: -- part of the reason that I'm here today is I want to remind everybody that the challenges we face are solvable. The problem is not a lack of big ideas. It's not a lack of technical solutions to our policy issues. The problem is we've got a stalemate right now in Washington --

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: -- between two fundamentally different ideas about how we move the country forward.

This election is about more than just two candidates or two political parties. It's about two different visions about how do we build a strong economy. (Applause.) And the good news is you're the tiebreaker. The choice is up to you. The choice is up to you. (Applause.)

Governor Romney and his allies in Congress, they believe in an economic theory that says if folks at the very top are doing really well, then that spreads to everybody else. It's what we call top-down economics.

So right now their main prescription for growing the economy faster is an additional $5 trillion in tax cuts, most of which would go to the wealthiest Americans, even if to pay for it you'd have to gut education programs, or turn Medicare into a voucher program, or eliminate our investments in basic research and science. That's their vision about how you grow an economy.

They've actually got a two-part vision. One is tax cuts for the wealthy, and then the second is eliminate regulations that we've put in place to make sure, for example, that Wall Street doesn't engage in the same reckless behavior that got us into this mess in the first place. (Applause.)

Now, I've got to tell you, it would be one thing if they had this theory and we hadn't tried it before. But the truth is we tried it for almost a decade, and it didn't work. The track record of their vision resulted in turning surpluses into deficits. We ran two wars on a credit card. Job growth was the most sluggish it had been in decades. The average wages and income of working families actually went down during this period, and it culminated in this massive crisis.

So I don't know about you, but in my life, what I found -- sometimes I do bone-headed things, I make mistakes. What I find is when I don't -- when I try something and it doesn't work, then I don't try it again. (Applause.) Right? You don't go back to doing something that didn't work.

Now, I've got a different idea. So, for example, Governor Romney said he would extend the tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans indefinitely.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: He says that until he puts a tax plan in place. But his tax plan is not just to keep all the Bush tax cuts. As I said, he wants to put another $5 trillion -- this is estimated that it's almost impossible for you to bring down the deficit and deal with the debt with that kind of tax plan. Nearly 40 percent of these new taxes would go to the top 1 percent of all households.

We have not found any serious economic study that says Governor Romney's economic plan would actually create jobs -- until today. I've got to be honest. Today we found out there's a new study out by non-partisan economists that says Governor Romney's economic plan would, in fact, create 800,000 jobs. There's only one problem: The jobs wouldn't be in America. (Laughter and applause.) They would not be in America. They'd be in other countries. By eliminating taxes on corporations' foreign income, Governor Romney's plan would actually encourage companies to shift more of their operations to foreign tax havens, creating 800,000 jobs in those other countries.

Now, this shouldn't be a surprise, because Governor Romney's experience has been investing in what were called "pioneers" of the business of outsourcing. Now he wants to give more tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas.

So I want everybody to understand, Ohio, I've got a different theory. We don't need a President who plans to ship more jobs overseas, or wants to give more tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. I want to give tax breaks to companies that are investing right here in Ohio -- (applause) -- that are investing in Cincinnati, that are investing in Hamilton County. (Applause.) I want to give incentives to companies that are investing in you, the American people, to create American jobs, making American goods that we're selling around the world, stamped with three proud words: Made in America. (Applause.)

That's why I'm running for President of the United States.

Now, the difference extends not just to the difference in corporate taxes, it's also individual taxes. We don't need a President who is going to give himself a big tax break. (Laughter.) We need a President who is going to cut your taxes.

Now, four years ago I promised to cut taxes for the middle class -- and I kept that promise.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Yes, you did! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: The typical family's tax burden is $3,600 lower than it was when I came into office. I want all the press to notice that. (Applause.) Because sometimes, you'll hear all these crazy accusations -- oh, Obama, is raising taxes and burdening -- no, here are the facts. Typical middle-class family, your taxes have gone down $3,600 since I've been in office. (Applause.)

A couple weeks ago, I called on Congress to immediately extend these tax cuts to 98 percent of the American people. Folks making $250,000 a year or less would not see their taxes go up one single dime -- their income taxes go up one single dime. (Applause.) Now, I should point out, by the way, that 97 percent of small businesses also would not see their taxes go up, because typically they don't earn more than $250,000. (Applause.)

Now, if you're fortunate enough to be the other 2 percent -- and I am -- I mean, Michelle and I didn't use to be, now we are. We've been blessed. That's great. (Applause.) What we're saying is for those folks, we can afford to pay a little bit more in taxes by going back to the rates that were paid under Bill Clinton. That will help us reduce our deficit by about a trillion dollars. And everybody says the deficit and the debt are important, and I agree. (Applause.)

And I just want to point out, the last time we did that, when Bill Clinton was President, we had surpluses, not deficits, created 23 million new jobs, and by the way, we created a lot of millionaires and billionaires to boot. Because when an economy is growing from the middle out and from the bottom up, everybody does well, including people at the very top. That's how you grow an economy. (Applause.)

When teachers and firefighters and police officers and construction workers -- when folks who are putting in a hard day's work, when they do well, then everybody does well. That's how America has always succeeded. We believe in individual initiative and self-reliance. But there's some things we do together, and growing an economy is one of them.

My grandfather, he went to college on the GI Bill. That generation helped to expand the middle class, and everybody did better. When we invested in the Hoover Dam or the Golden Gate Bridge, or the Internet, sending a man to the moon -- all those things benefited everybody. And so that's the vision that I want to carry forward.

That's why when the auto industry was on the brink of collapse and Governor Romney said let's "let Detroit go bankrupt," I said no. One out of eight jobs in Ohio depend on the auto industry -- (applause) -- a million jobs across the Midwest are at stake. (Applause.) I'm going to bet on American workers and American ingenuity. And now, GM is back on top and Chrysler and Ford are on the move, and the American auto industry has come roaring back. (Applause.)

So let me just close by saying this, and then we can get to some questions. My vision says we're going to invest in education and we're going to hire new teachers, especially in math and science; open up 2 million more slots for folks to go to community colleges to get trained in the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. (Applause.) We already helped to make sure that student loan rates didn't double, but now we've got to work more to lower tuition costs so young people aren't burdened with debt. (Applause.)

So we're going to invest in education. We're going to invest in American energy. Yes, we want to continue to expand our production of oil and natural gas, but I also want to make sure that we are the leaders in solar and wind and biodiesel, the energy of the future that can help reduce our dependence on foreign oil. (Applause.)

American manufacturing, change our tax code, provide incentives for companies to invest here, invest in basic research and science so that we are at the cutting-edge -- because whoever has got the best technology, will ultimately have the best economy. (Applause.) We've got to make those investments.

Rebuilding our infrastructure -- I know you've got some bridges around here that need repair. (Applause.) You've got some roads that need a repair. Let's put construction workers back to work. (Applause.)

I ended the war in Iraq as I promised. We're winding down the war in Afghanistan. We decimated al Qaeda. (Applause.) Let's now take half the money we were spending on war and do some nation-building right here at home. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: And finally, let's reduce our deficit, reduce our debt. Let's do it in a responsible way that allows us to continue to make these investments we need to grow, and make sure that everybody is doing a little bit to help not just themselves but help the country.

So that's my vision. And it contrasts with the other side, and you are going to be the tiebreaker. This is going to be your choice. That's how our democracy works. And some of you noticed, there's going to be a lot of paid advertising and a lot of money -- we're seeing folks write $10 million checks --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: That's not us!

THE PRESIDENT: -- to try to get me out of office. So it's not you, I know. (Laughter.)

But even though my hair is a little grayer -- (laughter) -- even though I'm a little older, let me tell you, I still have as much confidence as I ever had in the American people. (Applause.) Because one of the great privileges of being President is you get a chance to travel all across the country. You meet people from every walk of life. And wherever I go, what I'm always struck by is the core decency and goodness and hard work and responsibility and faith that the American people have.

So I'll always bet on the American people. And I'm confident that if we work hard, we get our message out, we have an honest debate about what needs to happen in this country and what future is best for our children and our grandchildren, then we're going to finish what we started in 2008. (Applause.) And we'll remind the world why the United States is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

Thank you very much, everybody. Thank you. (Applause.)

Okay. So everybody take a seat so I can see who wants to ask a question. And there are no -- there are only a couple of rules here. Rule number one is you've got to raise your hand if you have a question. I'm going to call girl-boy, girl-boy -- (laughter) -- just to make sure that it's fair. If you have a chance, stand up and introduce yourself. And there are folks in the audience with microphones, so wait until we've got a microphone so everybody can hear your question.

And my only other request, because I want to try to get in as many questions as I can -- at least six or seven -- so if people can keep their questions short, I'll try to keep my answers short. (Laughter.) But, now, if you ask me how do you bring about world peace, that's a big question. (Laughter.) So try to keep the question to one that we can be succinct about, all right?

And I'm going to start with this young lady right here in the sort of the pink, white blouse. Yes, right there. All right, and wait till the microphone comes up. Introduce yourself.

Q Can you stand with me?

THE PRESIDENT: Oh, is that the birthday boy?

Q Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Okay, I didn't -- he's getting a lot of attention today. (Laughter.) All right, go ahead.

Q Okay. My name is Anna, and my son is openly gay. And he is grassroots, and he speaks for a lot of the LGBT community. And we'd like to know, since you are for the LGBT, what's your next steps? What are you going to do for us? (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Well, look, let me say this. First of all, I think what the American people have seen and made such progress on is recognizing the idea of equal rights, equal dignity, equal respect for everybody. That applies to everybody. (Applause.) That is a bedrock principle of America.

And that's -- when I came into office, everything from making sure that same-sex couples could have visitation in hospitals just like everybody else, making sure that we ended "don't ask, don't tell" because fighting for the country you love should not depend on who you love -- (applause) -- being clear that DOMA is something that we should repeal -- across the board I've tried to constantly align myself with what is best in our tradition, and that is you treat everybody fairly.

Americans are about fairness. And that doesn't mean that folks have to agree with everybody on everything. We don't. But we want to treat everybody fairly.

Now, I think it's important to recognize, though, that our gay and lesbian brothers and sisters are still subject to discrimination. That's why we passed hate-crime legislation, and we've still got to fight for that. I think it is important for us to respect decisions that states make with respect to expanding treatment of same-sex couples and marriage. But also what I want to say is that gay and lesbian families are like everybody else -- what they're really also worried about right now is making sure they can pay the bills. (Applause.)

So my strong belief is that it is important for us to focus on individual issues of fairness, but also recognize that we all have common interests as well. Your son is 18; I'm assuming he's going to get some more education, and I'm assuming you guys are worrying right now about making sure he doesn't come out with a whole bunch of debt, and how --

Q Miami.

THE PRESIDENT: Miami?

Q Miami.

THE PRESIDENT: Miami of Ohio?

Q Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Outstanding -- congratulations. (Applause.) We've got some folks from the alma mater here.

So we want to treat everybody fairly, and we also want to make sure that the economy treats everybody fairly. And I'm going to be fighting for that as long as I'm President of the United States. (Applause.)

All right. This gentleman right here. Does anybody have a mic over there? Okay, right behind -- very good. I'm impressed. There you go.

Q Mr. President, I'm Jim O'Reilly. Ten years as an elected city official has shown me a real change in what the Republican Party has been doing to us. They've taken away our power to protect our natural resources -- water and air -- from the strength of the oil and gas drillers that are doing fracking here in Ohio. I support what Lisa Jackson and the EPA are doing. Is there more the administration can do to protect us from the adverse effects of drilling for natural gas? Thank you.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, this is a great question, and it's an important question. (Applause.) A couple of things I just want everybody to know. First of all, if you hear anybody say that somehow we are impeding the development of our energy resources here in this nation, I want you to know these facts: oil production -- higher than it's been in eight years; natural gas production -- higher than it's been probably in our lifetimes; oil imports -- actually lower than they've been in 16 years. In fact, our oil imports are less than 50 percent now for the first time in a very long time. And so we're moving in the right direction in terms of energy independence. (Applause.)

Now, part of that is this boom in natural gas. And this is something we should welcome, because not only are we blessed with incredible natural gas resources that are now accessible because of new technologies, but natural gas actually burns cleaner than some other fossil fuels, and is an ideal fuel -- energy source that we potentially can use for the next 100 years. So I want to encourage natural gas production. The key is to make sure that we do it safely and in a way that is environmentally sound.

Now, you always hear these arguments that somehow there's this huge contradiction between the environment and economic development, or the environment and energy production. And the fact of the matter is that there are a lot of folks right now that are engaging in hydraulic fracking who are doing it safely. The problem is, is that we haven't established clear guidelines for how to do it safely, and informed the public so that neighbors know what's going on, and your family, you can make sure that any industry that's operating in your area, that they're being responsible.

So what we've said is, look, we are going to work with industry to establish best practices. We are going to invest in the basic research and science required to make sure this is done safely and in a way that protects the public health. And for responsible companies, they should be able to operate, make a profit, and we can all benefit and put people back to work. But if you're an irresponsible company that's not doing the right thing, we're going to hold you to account. And that's how we should develop this incredible resource -- which, by the way, if we do it properly, could end up changing the economics and politics globally of energy in a way that's actually very good for us, because we'll be less dependent on what happens in the Middle East and our economy will be less subject to the kinds of spikes that we saw earlier in the spring in terms of gas prices.

Thank you for the question. (Applause.)

All right, it's a woman's turn. That young lady in the white t-shirt right there -- hold on, hold on, wait for the mic.

Q My name is Delisha White (ph) and I and my husband, we're small business owners. And he actually has a question that he needs to answer. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: Well, wait. No, no, you can't do that now. (Laughter.) I called on the young lady and that's what's called a bait and switch. (Laughter.) That is what's called a bait and switch. No, the rule is that I'm going to make sure that women get equal time with men. (Applause.)

Q Well, we would like --

THE PRESIDENT: Oh, no, no, no, no. (Laughter.)

Q Okay, his question was, he is a small business owner and he wanted to know what can you do for the self-employed -- for self-employed businesses with less than 10 employees working with him.

THE PRESIDENT: Okay, here's what I'm going to do. I'm going to let him go ahead and ask his question. (Laughter.) And then, I'm going to call on two women in a row. (Applause.) Because this is -- we got cheated here. (Laughter.)

Go ahead. Next time, you stand up. Don't send your wife out first. (Laughter and applause.)

Q Okay, I'm Tony White and hello, Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: Good to see you, Tony. What kind of business do you have?

Q A barbershop and beauty salon.

THE PRESIDENT: There you go.

Q I've been in business for over 10 years now.

THE PRESIDENT: That's great.

Q And what I'm trying to find out is what will you be doing, or if there's anything you'll be doing, for the self-employed and businesses with employees -- with less than 10 employees.

THE PRESIDENT: Absolutely.

Q And also, when can I cut your hair? (Laughter and applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Well, first of all, let me answer the second question first. You know that you would not want a President who is disloyal to his barber. (Laughter and applause.) I mean, a man and his barber, that's a strong connection. (Laughter.)

Q I know, I know.

THE PRESIDENT: So I am not going to let you cut my hair because my barber would be hurt. (Laughter.)

Q Just one time, just once. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: Maybe I'll let you give me a line -- a little bit.

Q Yeah, yeah, we can do that. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: All right, in terms of small business -- look, small businesses are the lifeblood of our economy. They account for most of the new job growth. We've got obviously great big businesses. In this area, Proctor & Gamble is an example of an outstanding large business. But a lot of the job growth happens with small businesses who then become medium-sized businesses and then maybe at some point become large businesses.

So ever since I came into office, one of my biggest priorities was how do we support small businesses -- which is why we've actually provided 18 different tax breaks just targeted at small business since I've been in office. It's the reason why we have pushed the Small Business Administration, especially when the recession had just hit, to extend additional financing and to waive fees for small business, because one of the biggest challenges for small businesses is getting credit lines.

Q Yes, it is.

THE PRESIDENT: And we've actually been pushing the banks to say, look, taxpayers pulled your backside out of the fire -- (applause) -- it's now important for you to step up and make sure that small businesses aren't finding their credit restricted, especially if they've been in business for a while.

The other thing we've done is to say, what are the critical needs of small business? A lot of time, one of the biggest challenges is to make sure that you, as a sole proprietor, that you can get health insurance for you and your family. So when you hear about the Affordable Care Act -- Obamacare -- (applause) -- and I don't mind the name because I really do care. That's why we passed it. (Applause.) You should know that once we have fully implemented, you're going to be able to buy insurance through a pool so that you can get the same good rates as a group that if you're an employee at a big company you can get right now -- which means your premiums will go down. (Applause.)

We will also give you additional tax credits if you are providing health insurance for your employees -- we'll give you tax credits for that. Right now, one of the things we're pushing Congress to do is to give you a tax credit if you hire additional workers, or you give folks who are a working for you a raise. We want to give you incentive to do that. (Applause.)

But this is an example of where there's a contrast between myself and my opponent. As I said before, his basic tax plan is to give folks at the top a tax break. Now, we can have that debate, but what I've said is, in the meantime, let's give 98 percent of individuals and 97 percent of small businesses some certainty right now by going ahead and passing a law that says your taxes won't go up. Because if Congress doesn't act, by the way, by January 1st, everybody's taxes here are going to go up, by an average of about $1,600 -- if Congress doesn't do anything. And so what I've said is if you really want to help small business right now, give 97 percent of them the certainty that their costs will not go up. (Applause.) And then we can have a debate about the other 2, 3 percent.

Now, one last point I'm going to make on this small business and taxes argument -- you'll hear Republicans say, you know what, if you tax, let's say, somebody with a million dollars of income, you're going to be crushing the small business jobs creators. Now, first of all, I've just explained 97 percent of small businesses make less than $250,000 a year. But setting aside that, the way they describe small businesses, half of the Fortune 400 richest Americans in the country would qualify as a "small business." Hedge fund managers would qualify as small business, even if they were pulling in a billion dollars a year. And this is an example of what I mean when I say we just want everybody to be treated fairly.

AUDIENCE: Right!

THE PRESIDENT: Michelle and I were talking the other day, and Michelle's dad worked as a blue-collar worker. He was at the water filtration plant in Chicago, worked there all his life -- all his adult life. And he had MS, so by the time I met him, he could barely walk. But he never missed a day of work. He had to use two canes. He had to wake up an hour earlier than everybody else just to get dressed. But he never missed a day of work. And he took pride in being at the job, even if he didn't feel well. And he used to tease folks who were lazy -- he'd say, these people are so lazy they won't even go to work to pick up their paycheck. (Laughter.) They want it mailed to them.

And Michelle's mom, she stayed at home when the kids were young and then she went to work as a secretary. And she worked as a secretary most of her adult life.

So the point is, they didn't have a lot. But Michelle and I were talking about how they didn't envy people who had a lot more. There was no sense that somehow our lives are less because we're not millionaires, we're not making huge amounts of money. God bless folks who are doing successful -- who are successful and doing well. The only thing that Michelle's parents, my mom, my grandparents, the only thing they didn't like is when you felt like folks at the top were taking advantage of their position and not following the same rules as everybody else and keeping other folks down. (Applause.)

And we don't want an economy in which some are being treated differently than others. That's all. And that's especially true when it comes for our small business folks. I want them to have some of the same advantages, because you probably can't afford the same number of lawyers and accountants and all that stuff that are working all these loopholes. And I want to make sure that you're getting the same good deal as everybody else.

All right? Okay. (Applause.)

I'm going to call on this young lady right here. She seems like she has an urgent question. Hold on, wait for your mic. Wait for your microphone. We're getting the next generation involved in this. (Applause.) Right here, right there. Yes.

Q What's your favorite Girl Scout cookie? (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Oh, oh. I've got to say this is one of the toughest questions. (Laughter.) What's your name?

Q Julie.

THE PRESIDENT: And you're a member of a Girl Scout troupe? Are you?

Q Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: How long have you been a Girl Scout?

Q I think for only -- I think only this year.

THE PRESIDENT: This year? Have you --

Q Two years.

THE PRESIDENT: Two years. Have you been having fun?

Q Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes? You know, I've got to say that I'm pretty partial to those mint -- (applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: I'm just saying -- that's just me. I didn't mean to create controversy here. There was someone -- (laughter) -- did you hear there was somebody booing. What do you -- how do you -- what's was your choice? Who was booing up there? (Laughter.) You had a different opinion. What are you, oatmeal, or --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Peanut butter.

THE PRESIDENT: Peanut butter is quite good, too, but I'm going with the mint. I'm going with the mint.

All right? Thank you for the question. Thank you. (Applause.)

All right. Remember I said I was going to go two ladies right now. So here, right here. Right here. Here we go. Whoops, don't fall, now. Go ahead.

Q My name is Susan. Welcome to Cincinnati.

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you.

Q Given how divided the country is, if elected, how do you plan to try to unite everyone?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, I'll be honest, sometimes people ask me what's my disappointment since I've come into office. And obviously, we're always trying to grow the economy faster, put people back to work faster. But one of the disappointments I've had is that we have not changed the tone in Washington the way I wanted to. (Applause.)

Now, part of this just has to do with the fact that the other side had a basic economic -- or a basic political theory after I got elected -- and this is not my opinion. I mean, this has been said by the leader of the Senate minority in Washington. And the basic theory was, you know what, we kind of screwed things up; Obama is really popular right now; if we cooperate with him, then he'll get credit, so we're better off just saying no. And if we do that, then over time folks will forget the mess he inherited and we can go after him, and hopefully that will help our politics. Again, this is not my theory. This is explicitly their strategy.

What's true is also we've got, as I said, two different visions about how to move the country forward. But my hope is that this election allows us to, once and for all, resolve some of the bigger questions about how we move the country forward -- because right now we've got as stark a choice as you could imagine. I believe in investing in education and transportation and science and research, and bringing down our deficits in a balanced way, and changing our tax code to make sure that companies that are investing here are doing better.

Mr. Romney has the opposite view on almost all those positions. On things like "don't ask, don't tell", Mr. Romney wants to reverse my position. On issues like immigration -- I believe in comprehensive immigration reform; he does not. On issues related to women, I believe that Planned Parenthood does a lot of good, and that women's health -- (applause) -- women should be able to control their own health care decisions. (Applause.) He does not.

On Iraq, he said ending the war was "tragic." I said I think it was the right thing to do. (Applause.) On Afghanistan, I imposed a deadline, a timetable for when we're going to bring our troops home. He wants to extend their stay indefinitely. So on all these issues, we've got just profound differences.

Now, you guys ultimately are the arbiters of this disagreement. And in this election, if the American people decide you know what, we want to try what Mr. Romney is offering --

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: No, I mean, that's the great thing about democracy, is people can vote and make up their minds. And so, if that's the case, then you can count on Mr. Romney implementing the plan that he and the Republicans in Congress have put forward. So $5 trillion in tax cuts, massive cuts in a lot of the programs that are so important, from my perspective, to growing the economy -- those will be eliminated. Medicare will be voucherized. They will implement what they say they're going to implement.

But if I'm elected, not only do I think that we'll be able to continue the progress that we've made over the last three and a half years, I actually think that a lot of Republicans, since this will be my last election, they will not be as interested in just beating me, and maybe they'll be more interested in moving the country forward. That's my hope. (Applause.)

And I have to say the truth is on most of these issues, there shouldn't be so much partisan rancor because most of the positions I've taken are positions that used to be supported by Republicans. (Applause.)

And if you want just one good example -- health care. (Applause.) The bill I passed is in all respects similar to what Mr. Romney passed in Massachusetts. It's working really well there. He should be proud of it instead of running away from it. And the original idea of using the private sector to make sure that everybody had health care -- that originated as a Republican idea. And I said, fine, I'm willing to work with your ideas to make progress.

So I actually think that there are a number of Republican members of Congress who right now feel as if they've got to toe the party line. But if the objective is no longer just beating me, my hope is that they'll be more open to finding common-sense solutions to the problems that our country faces. And I know that is absolutely a goal of mine because in the end, we are not Democrats or Republicans first, we are Americans first. That's what I believe. (Applause.)

All right. I've got time for two more questions. This gentleman in the blue shirt right there. All right, I'll end over here. (Laughter.) Go ahead.

Q Mr. President, my name is Jeff Weitzel (ph) and I have been teaching more 21 years.

THE PRESIDENT: Congratulations. (Applause.)

Q Thank you. I teach at a vocational school, career-tech school. And my question to you is -- we've been talking about jobs, we've been talking about kids, we've been talking about -- I know you want every kid to go to college, but not every kid is going to go to college. We need people to work. We need people to be plumbers and build bridges and those kinds of things. And what I want to -- (applause) -- I believe it, I really do.

We do miracles at our school. We take kids who have had really rough lives and we make them productive. But the problem is, is that they are not getting enough chances to get to go to work right away. We have advisory boards, but they advisory boards are free, and these people are not getting paid. What we need -- and I was hoping that you could tell if this is something in your agenda -- can we have people come in, give tax breaks to these companies to come and help schools to teach the schools what they really need for these kids? And that's what we're looking for. (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Well, first of all, thank you for teaching. Most important job there is. (Applause.) We appreciate that. Second of all, I want to be very clear. When I say everybody needs a higher education, I don't mean everybody has got to take a four-year college education. The point is that, these days, if you want to be a plumber, if you want to be an electrician, you want to be working in a factory, you are generally going to need a little bit more training than high school provides -- which is why our community college system is so important.

But you are absolutely right that one of the, I believe, mistakes we made 20, 30 years ago was to start deemphasizing vocational education -- (applause) -- because not everybody wants to sit in a classroom with a book. A lot of folks want to do stuff. And right now, we've got shortages of folks in fields that need technical training but don't necessarily require a four-year college degree.

And so part of what I'm talking to Secretary of Education Arne Duncan about is how do we work with high schools so that young people who've got an aptitude -- whether it's in graphic design or in electronics, or you name it -- that they can start getting on a pathway so that they are being trained for the jobs that actually exist now; they're being matched up with companies that are hiring now. They maybe start apprenticing junior, senior year in high school; maybe it extends to another year or two in community college. And by the time they're 21, 22, 23, they are expert in fields where we know there is hiring taking place right now.

So it's very important. We're going to be working with states, local governments, schools districts, and community colleges to try to figure out how we can expand what is already a proven idea in a lot of places around the country.

And so, you and I, we're right there. We're thinking the same way. And I'm looking forward to seeing if we can make progress on this. (Applause.)

All right, last question. I promised -- no, I'm going to call on this young lady right here. This is the last question, and we got to get a mic to her. But it's nice to see you, young man. (Laughter.) That's a good-looking young man, isn't he? He's a handsome young guy. (Laughter.) All right, go ahead.

Q Hi. My father, he's an unemployed construction worker and he's on unemployment. So as your job as President, will he have a job before his unemployment runs out?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, this is an important question. What's your name?

Q Taylor.

THE PRESIDENT: Taylor. How old are you, Taylor?

Q I will be 13 in two months.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, so nice to meet you, and I'm glad you're thinking about your dad, because I know he wants to work.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: That's my granddaughter.

THE PRESIDENT: My hope is, is that we can put him to work.

Housing took the biggest hit in our economy because you had this big housing bubble that collapsed, so the construction industry, the industry where your dad works, was the hardest hit of any industry and it's the one that's been the slowest to come back -- which is why, since September of last year, I have urged Congress to expand our efforts to rebuild roads, bridges, schools, laying broadband lines going into rural communities -- making sure that all these folks, like your father, who want to work -- these aren't folks who are looking for a handout, they want to be on the job -- so that they have an opportunity to do work that we're going to have to do anyway.

And this is important. How many folks here have a house and you know that you've got a leaky roof? Do you -- you can put off patching up that leaky roof, but sooner or later, you're going to have to patch it up. Sooner or later. And if you don't, what happens?

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Falls in.

THE PRESIDENT: It falls in. And then what happens? It's more expensive. Same is true if you got a busted boiler. So we all have what's called deferred maintenance. We can't always do it right away, but a lot of times, if we have an opportunity to do it, we should go ahead and do it, especially if it's cheap.

It is cheaper now to do it than it will be later. Interest rates are low. Construction workers are out of work. Contractors are begging for work. They'll come in on time, under budget. And so we could knock out a whole bunch of work that needs to get done for this country anyway, and put people back to work, which would grow the economy right now.

Now, so far, I have not gotten a positive response from members of Congress on the other side of the aisle. They did just pass -- and this was a sign of some modest cooperation, so it makes me feel a little bit encouraged -- they did just pass a transportation bill that at least wouldn't lay off more construction workers.

But the first thing I want to do was put your dad back on the job rebuilding America. Now, if your father still doesn't get a job, though, part of what I'm also looking for is making sure that unemployment insurance is there for folks who want to work but are having trouble finding work. (Applause.)

And I want folks to be clear: Unemployment insurance -- unemployment benefits, they're paid for. Your employer paid for them. Directly and indirectly, you paid for them. The idea is to have that safety net because everybody once in a while can have some bad luck.

Now, we tried to extend unemployment insurance beyond normal right after the recession hit. We were able to extend it again in 2010. It's been harder now to get Congress to extend it further. And I don't know exactly what category your father falls in, but my bottom line is, my general view is that as long as the economy is weak and somebody is willing and able to work, and looking for work actively -- which is what's required if you want to get unemployment insurance -- then we should be there for them to make sure that they can pay the rent and look after their families.

And so we'll continue to negotiate with Congress to make sure that unemployment is there. But the most important thing I want to do is make sure your dad can get a job. (Applause.)

Let me just say, everybody, I am going to be back in Cincinnati. I'm going to be back in Ohio. (Applause.) I want to thank you for your attention. And I want to explicitly ask you for your support. (Applause.)

This is going to be a close election. This is going to be a close election and it is going to be an important debate. And I want everybody to understand that what I've tried to do over the last three and a half years is to keep my promises. So I promised I'd end the war in Iraq -- I ended it. (Applause.) I promised that we would keep taxes low for middle-class families -- I did that. (Applause.)

But the most important promise I made -- some of you remember me saying this in 2008 -- I said, you know I'm not a perfect man; I said, I wasn't going to be a perfect President -- no President is. But what I promised you was that I would always tell you what I thought, I'd always tell you what I believed, and I would wake up every single day fighting as hard as I knew how for you. (Applause.) And you know what, I have kept that promise.

Because when I look around this room, if I see an elderly couple I think about my grandparents and everything they did for me. And when I see this young lady asking about her dad, I think about my daughters. I see myself in you. And my most important job is fighting for you and that basic American idea that if you work hard in this country, you can succeed, you can get ahead. (Applause.)

And I'm going to do everything I can, as long as I have the honor of being President, to fight for you and working families and middle-class families all across this country. (Applause.) So I hope you'll stand with me. I hope you'll work with me. Let's finish what we started, and remind the world why the United States is the great nation that it is.

God bless you and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Grand Junction High School
Grand Junction, Colorado

4:20 P.M. MDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Colorado! It is good to be back in Grand Junction. Love Grand Junction. (Applause.) It was about four years ago, around this time, that I was first in Grand Junction. (Applause.) We had a bunch of bales of hay. (Laughter.) You remember that? Everybody was nice. Weather was a little warm. (Laughter.) And it is great to be back.

I've got a couple of people I want to acknowledge. First of all, please give Deanne a big round of applause for the great introduction. (Applause.) And I'm a little sweet on Deanne, not just because of a great introduction, but also because she's a nurse, and I just love nurses because they -- (applause) -- they do such a great job every day.

Also, we've got one of your outstanding U.S. senators, Michael Bennet, in the house. (Applause.) There he is. And one of your former senators, who is now doing an outstanding job looking after the natural resources of this great country of ours -- Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar. (Applause.)

Now, those of you who have a seat, feel free to take a seat. (Laughter.) Those of you who don't, just remember to bend your knees because -- (laughter) -- sometimes I have people drop off in the middle of -- (laughter) -- even when I'm not talking too long, just because they've been standing too long. So especially when it's warm like this.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. Who was that? (Applause.)

Now, obviously, this is a smart crowd and so I know that most of the last couple of weeks you've been watching the Olympics, cheering on our U.S. athletes over in London. You've been spending time with family, trying to get outdoors, at least when it cools off. But unless you've been able to hide the television completely or your cable is broke, then you may be aware there's a pretty intense campaign going on right now. (Applause.) And the reason it's such an intense campaign is because the choice that we face in November could not be bigger.

This is not just a choice between two candidates or two political parties. It's a choice about two fundamentally different visions for the country, two fundamentally different paths. And the direction that we choose -- the direction that you choose when you walk into that voting booth in less than three months -- is going to have a direct impact not just on our lives, but on the lives of our children and our grandchildren for decades to come.

Now, four years ago, we came together -- Democrats, but also independents and some Republicans -- to restore the basic bargain that had built this country, that had made us the most prosperous nation on Earth. And it's a very simple bargain. It says, if you work hard, your work will be rewarded. (Applause.) It says that if you put in enough effort, you can find a job that pays a decent wage, pays the bills; that you can afford to have a home that you call your own; that you have health care you can count on when you get sick. (Applause.) That after a lifetime of labor, you can put away enough to retire with dignity and respect. And, most importantly, that you can give your kids the kind of education and opportunity that allows them to dream even bigger and do even better than you could ever imagine. That's the promise of America. That's the promise of America. (Applause.)

Now, when we came together, we knew restoring that bargain -- that deal, that compact -- was not going to be easy. We knew it would take more than one year or one term or maybe even one President, because --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Four more years! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: -- because we had seen what had happened in the previous decade. Jobs had moved overseas. Folks were working harder and harder, but their wages or incomes, they were staying flat, sometimes even going down. The cost of everything from health care to college was going up. And then, it all culminated in the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression -- a crisis that robbed too many of our friends and our neighbors of jobs, the value of their homes, their savings. And all that pushed the American Dream even further out of reach for too many working people.

But, you know what, we've spent the last three and a half years digging ourselves out of that hole. (Applause.) We averted a depression; created 4.5 million new jobs -- 500,000 in manufacturing. We saved an auto industry. (Applause.) We made sure that we worked to make college more affordable. We worked to make sure that health care was secure for families.

And what we discovered during the course of these difficult times is that a crisis doesn't change our character. It doesn't change who we are as a people. It doesn't change what makes us great -- our toughness, our grit, our resilience, and our ability to come together and work together on behalf of this country. And when we came together in 2008, we understood that there is a core decency, that there is a goodness to the American people, and we need to make sure that that's reflected in what happens in Washington. And our mission has never been more urgent. (Applause.)

So after three and a half tough years, we're still going. We're here to build an economy where hard work pays off -- so that no matter who you are, or what you look like, or where you come from, here in America, you can make it if you try. (Applause.)

That's what this campaign is about, Colorado! (Applause.) And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Now, understand, there are no quick fixes or easy solutions to some of these challenges. But here's the thing that I constantly am reminded of whenever I travel across the country: We have the capacity to meet any challenge, because we've still got the best workers in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best entrepreneurs in the world. We've got the best scientists and researchers in the world, and the best colleges and the best universities in the world. (Applause.) We're still a young nation, and we've got the greatest diversity of talent and ingenuity and people who want to come here from every corner of the globe.

And so no matter what the naysayers tell us, no matter how dark the other side tries to make things look, the fact is there is not another country on Earth that would not gladly trade places with the United States of America. (Applause.)

So we can solve our problems. What's standing in our way is not that we don't have good ideas or we don't have solutions to problems like energy independence or improving our schools. What is standing in our way is our politics. You've got a bunch of folks in Washington who think the only way is their way, and who think that the only way to go forward is to go right back to the same policies that got us into this mess in the first place.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: They believe in the old top-down economics that we spent an entire decade trying and that did not work.

And look, I'm not exaggerating here. My opponent, Mr. Romney, and his friends in Congress, when you look at their economic ideas, when you look at -- you know, they've spent a lot of time on commercials, saying how there aren't enough jobs, and the economy is not growing fast enough. And then you ask them, okay, well, what is it that you're thinking about doing? And you know, I am not exaggerating, it boils down to two things. First of all, they want to give more tax cuts to folks at the very top --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: -- $5 trillion worth of tax cuts on top of the Bush tax cuts. And then -- so that's idea number one. Idea number two is let's get rid of regulations that we put into place to make sure that Wall Street does not misbehave again and we don't have another meltdown, or getting rid of regulations that help protect our air and our water, or getting rid of regulations that protect consumers from unscrupulous lenders. That's their basic idea. You get rid of regulations and you cut taxes for wealthy Americans, and somehow jobs and prosperity will all rain down on all of us.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: This is the path they're proposing. If you think I'm exaggerating, you go to their websites, you look at the bills that have been passed by this House of Representatives. That is where they will take us if they win. In fact, the centerpiece of Mr. Romney's entire economic plan is this new $5 trillion tax cut. And now, I want you to pay attention here -- we're going to do a little math. I know it's not everybody's favorite subject, but math is important.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love math!

THE PRESIDENT: I like that -- somebody said they love math. There you go. (Applause.)

All right, so we've known for a while that a lot of this new $5 trillion tax cut would go to the wealthiest 1 percent of all households. But, last week, an independent nonpartisan organization crunched the numbers. They look -- what does this mean, $5 trillion? Keep in mind, by the way, the defense budget is about $500 billion. So a $5 trillion tax cut is -- over 10 years is like a tax cut that's as big as our entire defense budget every single year. So these guys were trying to analyze what does this mean. They found that Governor Romney's plan would raise taxes on middle-class families with children by an average of $2,000.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, the reason is -- as he says -- that this $5 trillion tax cut he'll pay for by doing other things, by slashing education or making Medicare into a voucher.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: But even after he makes all the cuts to education and training and science and research and transportation and environmental protection -- you name it -- it turns out he is still short. So the only way that you could actually pay for it is to have you pick up the bill.

So you would then pay $2,000 extra every year not to reduce the deficit, not to help our kids get an education, not to rebuild our roads and our bridges or lay broadband lines into rural communities. He would ask the middle class to pay more in taxes so he could give another $250,000 to people making more than $3 million a year.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, he was asked about this, his campaign was asked about it, and if this sounds like an idea that would be difficult to explain to the American people, you're right. (Laughter.) Let's just say there was a whole different kind of gymnastics being performed by Mr. Romney than what's been happening in the Olympics. (Laughter and applause.)

So they were twisting and they were turning and doing backflips, and trying to say, well, this is a biased report -- despite the fact that the head of this nonpartisan center used to work for President Bush. But it's not surprising that he was trying to scramble a little bit, because they've tried to sell this old, trickle-down tax cut fairy dust before. (Laughter.)

And, you know what, it did not work then. It won't work now. It's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to lower the deficit. It's not a plan to move our economy forward. It's not a plan to build the middle class. We don't need more tax cuts for folks like me. We need tax cuts for working Americans who are trying to raise a family -- (applause) -- and keep our families healthy, and send our kids to college and keep a roof over their heads. That's who needs some help. (Applause.) That's the choice in this election and that's why I'm running for President -- to fight for you. (Applause.)

Are you guys still bending your knees? (Laughter.) You got some water, get hydrated.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Sing for us!

THE PRESIDENT: Michelle made me promise that I can't sing to others anymore --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: -- because she wants me to just sing to her, you know? (Laughter and applause.)

But look, Grand Junction, I've got a different plan for America. Their ideas aren't going to work.

Four years ago, I promised to cut middle-class taxes. That's exactly what I've done. (Applause.) The typical family has seen their taxes go down by about $3,600. So when you talk to your friends or neighbors and they say, he's a big, spending, tax-raising Democrat -- (laughter) -- you've got to tell them, no, actually, if you're in the middle class, your taxes have gone down. (Applause.)

So now, I want to keep taxes exactly where they are for the first $250,000 of everybody's income. So if your family makes under $250,000 -- which, by the way, 98 percent of Americans do -- (applause) -- 97 percent of small businesses do, you will not see your income taxes increase by a single dime next year. That's my plan. (Applause.) And, by the way, I've told Congress -- I told the Republicans in Congress, I said, let's do it now. You guys say you don't want to see anybody's taxes go up; I don't want to see anybody who's making $250,000 or less see their taxes go up -- let's go ahead and sign a bill. (Applause.) But, shockingly enough -- (laughter) -- they haven't agreed so far because they're holding you guys hostage to try to get tax cuts for the top 2 percent.

Now, look, if you're fortunate enough to be in the other 2 percent of Americans, you're still going to get a tax cut on the first $250,000 of your income. So if you make $260,000, the first $250,000, you're still keeping all that tax cut. It's just that little bit over $250,000. Now, if you're making $5 million, you can afford it. Right? (Applause.)

All we're asking for folks who have been blessed -- like me -- I mean, I'm not being self-interested here. It's not like I love paying taxes, but I understand I've got certain obligations because this country has been so good to me. (Applause.) So what I've -- all we're saying is for folks in the top 2 percent, let's go back to what we were paying under Bill Clinton. Let's contribute a little bit more so we pay down our deficit, and we can still invest in things like education to help our kids succeed. (Applause.)

Now, keep in mind, just in case you're talking to your friends or neighbors again and they say, well, that just -- a little bit of tax increase on the top 2 percent, that won't cut the deficit -- they're right. We got to do more. So we've already cut a trillion dollars. Federal spending is growing at a slower rate than any time since Dwight Eisenhower. (Applause.) I'll make sure government continues to do its part, and we'll cut out spending we don't need. But I'm not going to pay for a massive new tax cut for millionaires and billionaires by gutting investments that have always made us strong as a country. (Applause.)

And, by the way, just like we tested their plan under the previous administration and it didn't work, we've tested my plan because, as you'll recall, under Bill Clinton, when those taxes were a little bit higher on folks like me, the economy grew faster than it has in years -- 23 million new jobs. (Applause.) We went from a deficit to a surplus. (Applause.) And folks at the top did well. We created a lot of millionaires to boot. And the reason is that -- look, when a construction worker has a got a little money in his pocket, now he starts thinking about buying a new car. When a teacher has security in her job, now she might go to a restaurant once in a while. (Applause.)

And so what happens is, when the middle class is strong, suddenly businesses have more customers, businesses have more profits, businesses decide to hire more workers. Everybody does well. That's how we build a strong economy -- not from the top down, from the middle out, from the bottom up. That's the choice in this election. That's why I'm running for a second term for President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Obama! Obama! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, let me say, you can see how this plays out on a whole bunch of issues -- not just taxes and the deficit. When the American auto industry was on the brink of collapse, more than one million jobs at stake, Governor Romney says, let's "let Detroit go bankrupt."

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: I said let's bet on American workers. (Applause.) And the American auto industry has come roaring back. (Applause.)

So now, I want to make sure that the jobs of tomorrow, including advanced manufacturing jobs, that they're not taking root in China or Germany. I want them to take root in Colorado, in Ohio, in Michigan. (Applause.)

Governor Romney and I have a different theory. He spent his private sector experience investing in companies that were called "pioneers" of outsourcing. I want to insource. I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Let's give those tax breaks to companies that are investing in Colorado, investing in Grand Junction, hiring American workers, selling American products, stamping those goods with three proud words: Made in America. That's what I believe. (Applause.)

Mr. Romney says it was "tragic" for me to end the war in Iraq, like I promised. I think after a decade of war it's time to do some nation-building here at home. (Applause.) Thanks to the incredible service of our men and women in uniform -- (applause) -- Iraq is in charge of its own destiny. We are bringing troops home from Afghanistan. We went after bin Laden and al Qaeda and we got them. (Applause.)

So now, let's take half of the savings that we were spending on war and let's use it to put people back to work rebuilding schools, rebuilding bridges, rebuilding roads, improving our airport systems, improving our ports so that we can move goods and services that will make our economy strong not just now, but in the future. And, by the way, that also helps us pay for providing services that our men and women in uniform have earned. Our veterans fought too hard for us for them to have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. (Applause.) That is a sacred trust we've got to keep. (Applause.)

I'm running to make sure America once again leads the world in educating our kids. (Applause.) I want to hire new teachers, especially in math and science. (Applause.) Help 2 million people go to community colleges to train for the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. (Applause.) And I want to make sure that every young person can afford to go to college. We have already expanded student aid; now we need to bring tuitions down. (Applause.) That's why I'm running for President -- to give our young people a chance. (Applause.)

On every issue, there's a difference. On housing and foreclosures, Mr. Romney says let the market just bottom out. I say let's let every American refinance their homes at historically low rates, save $3,000 per family, per homeowner. That could actually boost the economy and strengthen the housing market. (Applause.)

When it comes to health care, he wants to kill Obamacare. I'm implementing Obamacare because it was the right thing to do. (Applause.) Already, as we speak, 6.5 million young people under the age of 26 can stay on their parent's plan. (Applause.) Millions of seniors have saved hundreds of dollars on their prescription drugs, and we're closing the doughnut hole. (Applause.) Individuals and businesses are getting rebates from their insurance companies because insurance companies have to use most of the money they get in premiums to provide care, not for CEO bonuses and administrative costs. (Applause.) If your child has a preexisting condition, insurance companies can't turn them down. (Applause.) Soon, adults who have preexisting conditions cannot be turned down. (Applause.)

So if that's what Mr. Romney wants to get rid of -- despite the fact that he did the same thing in Massachusetts and it worked pretty well -- (laughter) -- then that's a different --that's a choice in this election.

You know, I don't think we should be refighting some of the battles he wants to refight. I think it was the right thing to do to end "don't ask, don't tell." (Applause.) I think you should be able to serve your country no matter who you are. (Applause.) I don't think it makes sense for us to take away control that women have over their own health care decisions. (Applause.)

But most of all, most of all, I want to make sure that that original bargain that made this country great, that basic idea that if you work hard you can make it, that that is restored. And everything we do -- from health care to education, to manufacturing, to our infrastructure, to our investment in science and research -- all of this is designed to make sure that we've got a strong middle class going forward; that no matter what you look like, where you come from, that everybody has got a fair shot, and everybody is doing their fair share, and everybody is playing by the same set of rules. (Applause.)

That's the same promise our parents and our grandparents and our great-grandparents believed in. And now we've got to pass on that same promise to the next generation.

Now, over the last -- over the next three months -- 89 days, to be precise -- (laughter) -- the other side will be spending more money than we've ever seen. You've got these guys writing $10 million checks. You've got these super PACs that are just going crazy.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: And now, here's the thing. I don't know why they're running all these ads, because basically they only have one ad. It's just a variation on the same ad, which is the economy is not where it should be and it's Obama's fault. That's their basic argument. Because they know they can't sell their actual plans -- they don't have plans. (Applause.) Their message is designed to try to win an election, but it's not a plan to create jobs. They don't have a plan to grow the economy. They don't have a plan to revive the middle class. But I do. (Applause.)

And so when you're talking to your friends and your neighbors, and they say, well, I don't know, Mr. Romney, he ran a business and I think maybe that might work -- look, if you believe that trying what we already tried and it didn't work is worth trying again; if you believe it's okay to cut taxes for folks who are doing really well and ask folks who are struggling to do more; if you think it's okay for us to cut back on our investments in education and science and set our sights lower -- then that's your choice. That's how our democracy works. Try it out.

But, you know what, if you believe that we're on the right track -- (applause) -- if you think like I do that we've come too far to turn back now, then I'm going to need you, Colorado. (Applause.) We've got too many good jobs to create. We've got too many good teachers to hire. We've got too many great schools to build. We've got too many students we need to help go to college. We've got too much homegrown clean energy to generate. We've got more troops to bring home. We've got more doors of opportunity to open to everybody who is willing to work hard, to walk through that door. We've got to leave something behind for the next generation, so they can do even better, so they can do even bigger than we ever imagined. (Applause.)

That's what's at stake. That's why I'm running. And if you're willing to stand with me and if you still believe in me just like I believe in you, we will win, Colorado. We will win this election. (Applause.) We'll finish what we started. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you. God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

November 4,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

5th/3rd Arena
Cincinnati, Ohio

8:25 P.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Ohio! (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: How's it going, Bearcats? (Applause.) Got some Bearcats in the house. Are you fired up?

AUDIENCE: Ready to go!

THE PRESIDENT: Fired up?

AUDIENCE: Ready to go!

THE PRESIDENT: Fired up?

AUDIENCE: Ready to go!

THE PRESIDENT: Oh, you sound pretty fired up. (Applause.)

Can everybody please give Julie a big round of applause for the great introduction. (Applause.) Give it up for your Mayor, Mark Mallory, who's here. (Applause.)

This is a nice crowd here. Thank you so much. Now, those of you who have seats, if you want to get comfortable, feel free. Those of you who don't have seats, you're stuck. (Laughter.)

You know, for the past several days, all of us have been focused on what's happening on the East Coast, one of the worst storms of our lifetimes. And the images have been heartbreaking. We've seen those who -- (audience interruption) -- we're okay.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: I guess you all are still fired up.
(Applause.)

But on the East Coast what we've seen are folks who are going through some incredible difficulties. There are those who have lost loved ones. And I had a chance to visit New Jersey and talk to some of the families who have been affected -- (audience interruption) -- it's okay. It's okay, guys. We're okay. (Applause.)

All right, let me try this again. No, no, no, listen up because this is important. First of all, Cincinnati, Ohio knows what it's like sometimes to get hit by terrible storms. And we've seen families lose loved ones, and we've seen people's lives upended. And so I hope that all of you are understanding that this rebuilding is going to take a long time.

Those of you who can help through the Red Cross, we need you to help. And when I went to New Jersey, what I told them was -- (applause) -- what I told them was I come not just as a President, but as a fellow citizen, and I'm confident I speak for all Americans when I say that no matter how long the road, no matter how difficult, we are going to be with them every step of the way in helping them to rebuild their lives. (Applause.) And we're going to do it together.

During tragedies like this, obviously our hearts are broken. But we're also inspired -- (audience interruption.) It's okay, folks. Everybody, it's okay. We're good. (Applause.) These might have been some Tennessee Titans fans who were mad about the Bears beating them really badly today. (Applause.) My Chicago Bears did pretty good. (Applause.)

But we've also been inspired these past few days by the images of police officers and firefighters and EMS folks running through water, and pulling folks out of buildings; neighbors helping neighbors cope with tragedy; leaders of different parties working together to fix what's broken. (Applause.) What we've seen is a spirit that says no matter how bad a storm is, no matter how tough times may get, we're all in this together. (Applause.) We rise or fall as one nation, as one people.

And that spirit has guided this country along its improbable journey for two centuries now.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.)

That spirit has also carried us through the trials and tribulations of the last four years. These have been a tough four years. In 2008, we were in the middle of two wars and the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression. Today, our businesses have created nearly 5.5 million new jobs. (Applause.) The American auto industry is back on top. (Applause.) Home values are on the rise. We're less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in 20 years. Because of the service and sacrifice of our brave men and women in uniform, the war in Iraq is over. (Applause.) The war in Afghanistan is coming to a close. (Applause.) Al Qaeda has been decimated. Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.) We've made progress.

We've made real progress these past four years. But here's the thing, Ohio. We know we've got more work to do. That's why we're here today, because we've got more work to do.

As long as there's a single American who wants a job but can't find one, our work is not yet done. As long as there are families working harder and harder but still falling behind, our work is not done. As long as there's a child anyplace in Cincinnati, anyplace in Ohio, anyplace in the United States of America who's languishing in poverty, who's barred from opportunity, the fight goes on. (Applause.)

Our fight goes on, because this nation cannot succeed without a growing, thriving middle class, and sturdy ladders for all who are willing to work hard to get into the middle class. Our fight goes on because we know America always does its best when everybody gets a fair shot, and everybody is doing their fair share, and everybody is playing by the same rules. That's what we believe. That's why you elected me in 2008. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

Now, in two days, America has got a choice to make. You in Ohio, you've already been making the choice because you've got early vote. (Applause.) And those of you who have not yet voted, you can still vote tomorrow and Tuesday. So don't wait.

But there may be some folks who are still undecided, just decided you wanted to hear Stevie. (Laughter.) I can't argue with that. But for those of you -- or your friends or your neighbors -- who are still trying to make up their minds, this is not just a choice between two candidates or two parties. It's a choice between two different visions of America. (Applause.) It's a choice between a return to the top-down policies that crashed our economy, or the strong, growing middle-class-based policies that are getting us out of a crisis. (Applause.)

Now, understand, look, as Americans, we believe in the free market. We believe in free enterprise. We believe in the strivers, the dreamers, the risk-takers. We know they've always been the driving force behind our economy, the greatest engine of growth and prosperity the world has ever known. That's what we believe. But we also believe that in this country, the free market and free enterprise work best when everybody has got a chance to participate -- (applause) -- when everybody is getting a good education and the skills they need to compete; when, together, we're investing in research for medical breakthroughs and new technologies.

We believe America works best, is stronger, when everybody can count on affordable health insurance -- just like Julie and Nathan. (Applause.) When they can count on Medicare and Social Security in their golden years; when there are rules to protect our kids from pollution; rules to protect consumers from being taken advantage of by unscrupulous credit card companies or mortgage lenders.

And then, we believe there are some things that Washington should just stay out of -- like we believe no politician -- especially a whole bunch of male politicians in Washington -- should control the health care choices women can make for themselves. (Applause.)

Now, for eight years, we had a President who shared these beliefs -- his name was Bill Clinton. (Applause.) And so we were able to put our ideas to the test. His economic plan when he came in asked the wealthiest Americans to pay a little more so we could reduce our deficit and invest in the skills and ideas of our people.

And at the time, the Republican Congress -- and a Senate candidate by the name of Mitt Romney -- said that Bill Clinton's plan would hurt the economy and kill jobs. Turns out his math was just as bad back then as it is now. (Applause.) Because by the end of President Clinton's second term, America had created 23 million new jobs. And incomes were up, and poverty was down, and our deficit became the biggest surplus in history. So our ideas have been put to the test, we know they work.

Now, the other guy's ideas have been put to the test also -- because after President Clinton, we had eight years in which we tried giving big tax cuts to the wealthiest Americans. We tried giving insurance companies and oil companies and Wall Street a free license to do whatever they pleased. And what we got was falling incomes, and record deficits, and the slowest job growth in 50 years, and an economic crisis that we're still cleaning our way out of.

So -- stay with me here -- we've got ideas that work, and we've got ideas that don't work. And so the choice should be pretty clear. But Governor Romney is a very talented salesman, and so in this campaign he has tried as hard as he can to repackage the old ideas that didn't work as new ideas. In fact, he's offered them up as change -- says he's the candidate of change. (Laughter.)

Now, here's the thing, Cincinnati. It turns out we know what change looks like. (Applause.) And what Governor Romney is selling is not change. Giving more power back to the biggest banks -- that's not change. Another $5 trillion tax cut that favors the wealthy -- not change. Refusing to answer questions about the details of your policy until after the election -- definitely not change. That's the oldest trick in the book. Ruling out compromise by pledging to rubber-stamp the tea party's agenda in Congress -- not change. Changing the facts when they're inconvenient to your campaign -- not change. (Applause.)

Governor Romney has been having a tough time here in Ohio because everybody knows he was against saving the auto industry in a state where one in eight jobs is connected to the American auto industry. So he decided to solve that problem by running ads that say the Jeep plant here in Ohio is shipping jobs to China -- even though everyone knows the Jeep plant isn't shipping jobs to China. That's not a good closing argument to the people of Ohio.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: And the problem is this isn't a game. You don't scare people just to scare up some votes. (Applause.) You don't have workers in the Jeep plant calling up their boss saying, am I about to lose my job, because they've seen an ad on TV that's not true. That's not what being President is all about. (Applause.)

And so when you're thinking about this choice, or your talking to your friends and neighbors about this choice, you've got to remind them it's not just about policy, it's also about trust, who do you trust.

AUDIENCE: You!

THE PRESIDENT: Look, Ohio, you know me by now. (Applause.) You may not agree with every decision I've made -- Michelle doesn't agree with me on everything -- (laughter) -- you may sometimes be frustrated at the pace of change. I get frustrated at the pace of change sometimes. But you know I say what I mean and I mean what I say. (Applause.)

I said I'd end the war in Iraq -- I ended the war in Iraq. (Applause.) I said I'd pass health care reform -- I passed it. (Applause.) I said I'd repeal "don't ask, don't tell" -- I repealed it. (Applause.) I said I'd help young people afford a college education -- we expanded Pell grants, lowered student loans. (Applause.) I do what I say.

You know where I stand and you know what I believe. You know I tell the truth. And you know I'll fight for you and your families every single day as hard as I know how. (Applause.)

So when I tell you I know what real change looks like, it's because I've fought for it; because I delivered it; because I've got the scars to prove it -- because that's why my hair went gray. (Applause.) And, Ohio, after all we've been together, we can't give up on it now. We've got to keep on going and bring some more change to America. (Applause.) We've got more work to do.

So let me tell you, over the next four years here's what change is. Change is a country where every American has a shot at a great education. Now, government can't do this alone; parents have to parent, students have to study. Bearcats, I want you to hit the books now. Don't just have fun here. (Applause.) But don't tell me that hiring more teachers won't help this economy grow -- of course it will. (Applause.) Don't tell me that students who can't afford college should just borrow money from their parents. (Applause.) That wasn't an option for me, and I'll bet it's not an option for a lot of you.

That's why I want to cut the growth of tuition in half over the next 10 years. (Applause.) That's why I want to recruit 100,000 math and science teachers, so our kids don't fall behind the rest of the world. (Applause.) That's why I want to train 2 million Americans at our community colleges with the skills that businesses are hiring for right now. That's my plan. That's what change is. That's what we're fighting for in this election. (Applause.)

Change is when we live up to this country's legacy of innovation. I'm very proud that I bet on American workers, American ingenuity and the American auto industry. But I'm especially proud because we're not just building cars, we're building better cars here in Ohio, here in the Midwest, here in America -- (applause) -- cars that by the middle of the next decade will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.) That helps our environment. That helps our economy. That helps our national security.

But we don't want to just stop at cars. We want advanced manufacturing all across this country. There are thousands of workers building long-lasting batteries, building wind turbines, building solar panels. (Applause.) I don't want a tax code that simply subsidizes oil company profits when they're making money hand over fist. I want to support the energy jobs of tomorrow. I want to support the new technology that will cut our oil imports in half. (Applause.) I don't want a tax code that rewards companies shipping jobs overseas. I want to reward companies investing here in Ohio, manufacturing with American workers. That's my plan for jobs and growth. That's the future I see. (Applause.)

Change is turning the page on a decade of war so we can do some nation-building here at home. As long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we will pursue our enemies with the strongest military the world has ever known. But it's time for us to use some of the savings from ending the wars in Iraq and winding down, transitioning in Afghanistan to pay down our debt, to rebuild America. (Applause.) Let's put some folks back to work right now repairing roads and bridges. And there's a bridge right here in Cincinnati that needs some work. (Applause.) Let's make sure we've got schools that are state-of-the-art all across this country. And let's, especially, hire our veterans, because if you fought for this country and its freedom, you shouldn't have to fight for a job when you come home. (Applause.)

That's what will keep us strong. That's my commitment to you. And that's what's at stake in this election.

Change is a future where we reduce our deficit and our debt, but we do it in a balanced, responsible way. I've signed a trillion dollars' worth of spending cuts; I intend to do more. But if we're serious about our deficit, we can't just cut our way to prosperity. We've also got to ask the wealthiest Americans to go back to the same tax rates they paid when Bill Clinton was in office. (Applause.) And the reason, Cincinnati, is because a budget is about choices. It's about values. It's about priorities. We can't do everything. We've got to make some decisions in terms of what's important.

And as long as I'm President, I won't turn Medicare into a voucher just to pay for another millionaire's tax cut. (Applause.) I won't throw kids off of Head Start just to pay for another tax cut for me. I don't need it. (Applause.)

Those kids need it; I don't need it.

So we know what change is. We know what the future requires. And we also know it's not easy. It's not easy bringing about change. Back in 2008, when we talked about change we believe in, I warned people -- look, I wasn't just talking about changing presidents; I wasn't just talking about changing political parties; I was talking about changing how our system of politics works.

I ran because the voices of the American people -- your voices -- had been shut out of our democracy for way too long by lobbyists and special interests and politicians who will say and do whatever it takes just to keep things the way they are. (Applause.) The protectors of the status quo -- they're powerful. And they've fought us every step of the way in Washington. They spent millions to try to stop us from reforming health care; spent millions to try to stop us from reforming Wall Street. And when we got all those things through, they engineered a strategy of gridlock in Congress, refusing to compromise even on ideas that both Democrats and Republicans used to support -- like Obamacare, which started out in Massachusetts under Governor Romney. (Applause.) It worked fine when a Republican was sponsoring it, and suddenly it was terrible when a Democrat put it forward. (Laughter.)

And the reason they've done this -- look, it's a strategy. They made a calculation. What they're counting on is that you will be so worn down by all the squabbling, you'll be tired of all the dysfunction, you'll just be fed up and you'll ultimately give up on the idea of change -- you'll walk away, you'll leave them in power, you'll decide things can't change.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: In other words, their bet is on cynicism. But, Ohio, my bet is on you. (Applause.) My bet is on you. My bet is on the common sense and decency of the American people.

And, by the way, this is not a partisan idea. When the other party has been willing to work with me to advance the cause of middle-class and working-class families, I've been right there with them. We worked with Republicans and Democrats to cut middle-class taxes, to cut taxes for small businesses. We came together to repeal "don't ask, don't tell" -- we had some courageous Republican senators get involved. (Applause.)

I will work with anybody of any party to move this country forward. And if you want to break the gridlock in Congress, you vote for leaders -- whether they're Democrats, Republicans, independents -- who feel the same way, who put you first, who don't put politics or the next election first. (Applause.)

But if we want meaningful change that actually helps families, then we also have some principles. There have to be some things that we're willing to fight for. If the price of peace in Washington is cutting deals that kick students off of financial aid, or get rid of funding for Planned Parenthood, or let insurance companies discriminate against people with preexisting conditions, or eliminate health care for millions on Medicaid who are poor or elderly or disabled, then that's a price I'm not willing to pay. (Applause.)

That's not bipartisanship. That's not change. That's surrender to the same status quo that has hurt too many families for too long. And I am not ready to give up on the fight just yet. (Applause.) I am not ready to give up on that fight. (Applause.) And I hope you aren't either, Ohio. I hope you aren't either.

See, the folks at the very top in this country, they don't need another champion in Washington. They will always have a seat at the table. They will always have access and influence. The people who need a champion are the Americans whose letters I read late at night when I get up from the Oval Office; the men and women I meet on the campaign trail every day.

The laid-off worker who has to go back at the age of 55 to retrain at a community college -- she needs a champion. The restaurant owner who has some really good food but not a lot of money, and needs a loan to expand after the bank turned him down -- he needs a champion. (Applause.)

The cooks and the waiters and the cleaning staff working overtime at a Cincinnati hotel, trying to save enough to buy a first home or send their kid to college -- they need a champion. (Applause.) The autoworker back on a job, feeling proud because he's building a great car -- he needs a champion. (Applause.) That teacher in a classroom, overcrowded classroom -- (applause) -- digging into her own pocket to buy school supplies, not getting the support she needs, but knowing maybe this day that one child will learn something, and that makes it all worthwhile -- she needs a champion. (Applause.)

All those kids in inner cities and small farm town, in the valleys of Ohio, the rolling Virginia hills -- kids dreaming of becoming scientists or doctors or engineers or entrepreneurs, businessmen, diplomats, maybe even a President -- they need a champion in Washington. They don't have a lobbyist. (Applause.) The future doesn't have the same kind of lobbyists as the status quo, but it's the dreams of those children that will be our saving grace.

And that's why I need you, Ohio -- to make sure their voices are heard, to make sure your voices are heard. (Applause.) We've come too far to turn back now. We've come too far to let our hearts grow faint. We've got to keep pushing forward -- (applause) -- to educate all our kids, and train all our workers, to create new jobs, to bring our troops home, to care for our veterans, to broaden opportunity, to grow a middle class, to restore our democracy -- to make sure that no matter who you are, or where you come from, or how you started out, or what you look like, you can make it in America. (Applause.) You can make it if you try.

And, Ohio, that's why I'm asking you for your vote. I need you, Ohio. (Applause.) And if you're willing to work with me, and knock on some doors with me, if you're willing to early vote for me, make some phone calls for me, turn out for me, we'll win Ohio. (Applause.) We will win this election. We'll renew the bonds and reaffirm the spirit that makes the United States of America the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. And God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Nokia Theater
Los Angeles, California

6:20 P.M. PDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, L.A.! (Applause.) Are you fired up?

AUDIENCE: Fired up!

THE PRESIDENT: Are you ready to go?

AUDIENCE: Ready to go!

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you! Thank you, L.A.! (Applause.) Thank you so much, everybody. Everybody, thank you. (Applause.) Thank you. Thank you so much. Thank you. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you so much. Thank you, everybody. Everybody, have a seat. Have a seat. Now, first of all, I've got some thank-yous to make. I am so grateful to George Clooney. Give it up for George. (Applause.) Jennifer Hudson. (Applause.) Old school -- Earth, Wind and Fire. (Applause.) Jon Bon Jovi. (Applause.) New school -- Katy Perry. (Applause.) Stevie Wonder. (Applause.) And I understand Katy had some choirs out, so give it up for the choirs. (Applause.)

I want to thank the members of Congress who came today, and I also want to thank two of our country's outstanding mayors -- Julian Castro, and your very own Antonio Villaraigosa. (Applause.)

Now, I've got to admit that even though my staff all came over early to get the show, I got left behind. (Laughter.) But my understanding is it was an incredible show. (Applause.) These guys -- and everybody here are just incredible professionals. They're such great friends, and they just perform flawlessly night after night. I can't always say the same. (Laughter and applause.) But here's the good news, is we've got a better vision for our country. We have a better plan for the next four years. (Applause.) And that's why we're here tonight.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Love you!

THE PRESIDENT: Love you back. (Applause.)

We've got some work to do. We've got an election to win. Everything we fought for in 2008 is on the line here in 2012. And I need your help to finish what we started. I need your help. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I told you I'd end the war in Iraq, and we did. (Applause.) I said I'd end the war in Afghanistan -- we are. (Applause.) I said we'd focus on the people who actually attacked us on 9/11, and today Osama bin Laden is no more. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families, and we have, by $3,600. (Applause.) I promised to cut taxes for small business owners, and we have, 18 times. (Applause.)

We got every dime back that was used to rescue the banks. We passed a law to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts for good. We passed health care reform -- also known as Obamacare -- because I do care about the American people. (Applause.) So your insurance companies can't jerk you around anymore, or tell you that being a woman is somehow a preexisting condition. (Applause.)

We repealed "don't ask, don't tell" so no outstanding soldier is ever kicked out of the military because of who they love. (Applause.)

When Governor Romney tried to give us his business advice about the economy and said that we should "let Detroit go bankrupt," we said, no, thanks, we're not going to take that advice. We reinvented a dying auto industry that's back on top of the world. (Applause.)

So three years ago, four years after that campaign that you were watching on that video, after the worst economic crisis of our lifetimes, our businesses have now created more than 5 million jobs.

(Applause.) On Friday, we found out the unemployment rate has fallen from the height of 10 percent down to 7.8 percent -- (applause) -- the lowest since I took office. Manufacturing is coming back to America. Home values are on the rise.

Now, we're not there yet. We've still got too many Americans looking for work, too many families who can't pay the bills, too many homes underwater, too many young people graduating with too much debt. (Applause.) But if there's one thing I know, we've come a long way and we've come too far to turn back now. (Applause.)

The last thing we can afford right now is four years of the very same policies that led us to this crisis in the first place. I cannot allow that to happen. I will not let it happen. That's why I am running for a second term for President of the United States, and that's why I need your help. (Applause.)

I have seen too much pain and too much struggle to let this country go through another round of top-down economics. One of the main reasons we had this crisis in the first place is because we had big banks on Wall Street that were allowed to make big bets with other people's money on the line. And now, Governor Romney wants to roll back the rules so we go back to that behavior? Not if I have anything to say about it.

One of the main reasons we went from record surpluses under Bill Clinton to record deficits under George Bush is because we put two wars and two tax cuts on a credit card. And now, Governor Romney wants another $5 trillion in tax cuts that he can't pay for? Not if I've got anything to say about it. (Applause.)

Obviously, the Governor knows his $5 trillion isn't too popular, so a few weeks before this election he's trying to pretend it doesn't exist, because that's a lot easier than trying to explain how he'd pay for it without asking middle-class families to pick up the tab. The other night he ruled out asking millionaires and billionaires to pay even a dime more in taxes to help us bring down our deficit. Not a dime. When he was asked what he'd actually do to cut spending, he said he'd go after public television. So for all you moms and kids out there, don't worry, somebody is finally cracking down on Big Bird -- cracking down on him. (Laughter.) Elmo has made a run for the border. Governor Romney plans to let Wall Street run wild again, but he's bringing the hammer down on Sesame Street. (Laughter.)

L.A., we can't afford another round of tax cuts for folks who don't need them. We can't afford to gut our investments in education or clean energy or research and technology. We can't afford to roll back regulations not just on Wall Street, but on oil companies and insurance companies. That's not a jobs plan. That's not a plan to grow our economy. That's not change. It's a relapse. We've been there. We have tried that. We're not going back. (Applause.) We are moving forward. That's why I'm running again. That's why I need your help. (Applause.)

See, we've got a different view about how we create jobs and prosperity in America. This country doesn't succeed when only the top are doing well. We succeed when the middle class is getting bigger, and people have ladders of opportunity to live out their dreams. Our economy doesn't grow from the top down. It grows from the middle out and the bottom up. We don't believe that anybody is entitled to success in this country. But we do believe in something called opportunity. (Applause.)

We believe in a country where hard work pays off and responsibility is rewarded, and everybody is getting a fair shot and everybody is doing their fair share and everybody is playing by the same rules. That's the country that I believe in. That's the country you believe in. (Applause.) That's what I've been fighting for, for the last four years. That's why I'm running for a second term. We've got a lot more work to do to make sure that everybody is taking part. (Applause.)

So here's what we need to do. We've got a lot more to do. I think it's time to change our tax code so we're not rewarding jobs -- companies that are shipping jobs overseas. (Applause.)

I want to reward small businesses and manufacturers who make products that are stamped with three proud words: Made in America. (Applause.)

I want us to control our own energy here in America. After 30 years of inaction, we raised fuel standards so by the middle of the next decade, your cars and trucks will go twice as far on a gallon of gas -- and that means something here in Los Angeles. (Applause.)

Today, the United States of America is less dependent on foreign oil than any time in the last two decades. (Applause.) So now it's time to move forward. My plan would cut our oil import in half, by investing in the clean energy that's creating thousands of jobs all across America right now -- not just oil and natural gas, but wind power and solar and fuel-efficient cars and long-lasting batteries. And unlike my opponent, I'm not going to allow oil companies to collect another $4 billion in taxpayer-funded corporate welfare. (Applause.) We're not going to let China win the race for clean energy technology. I want that technology developed right here in the United States, creating jobs right here in the United States, helping our environment right here in the United States. That's what we're fighting for. (Applause.)

I want us to have the best education system in the world, make sure that Americans from every walk of life are getting the chance they need to get the skills they need to succeed. I would not be standing here if it weren't for an education that I couldn't necessarily afford on my own. (Applause.) It was the gateway of opportunity for me, for Michelle, for so many of you. And now you've got a choice. We could gut education to pay for Governor Romney's $5 trillion tax break.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. (Applause.)

Or we can recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers; improve our early-childhood education system; provide job training for 2 million workers at our community colleges; work with colleges and universities to cut the growth of tuition costs. We can meet those goals. We can make sure that every young person here in Los Angeles, here in California, here in the United States of America, no matter what they look like, no matter where they come from, if they're willing to work hard, they can succeed, too. That's our goal. That's what we're fighting for. (Applause.)

We'd use the money we're saving from ending the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan to pay down our deficit, but also to put people back to work -- rebuilding roads and bridges and schools all across America. And every brave American who wears the uniform of this country should know that as long as I am Commander-in-Chief, we will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. And when our troops take off their uniform, we will serve them as well as they've served us -- because nobody who has fought for this country should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. Let's not just talk about honoring our veterans; let's put our money where our mouth is. That's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

Fifth, we need to cut the deficit, but we've got to do it in an intelligent way. I've proposed cutting it by $4 trillion over the next 10 years, and I've already worked with Republicans to cut a trillion dollars of spending. But we can't get this done unless we also look at the other side of the ledger. We don't cut our way to prosperity. We've got to ask the wealthiest among us to pay higher taxes on incomes over $250,000, which is the same rate we had when Bill Clinton was President -- our economy created nearly 23 million new jobs, the biggest surplus in history, and a lot of millionaires did well, too -- because when we give tax breaks to middle-income folks, to lower-income folks, they spend it. They need to, to pay the bills, which means businesses end up with more customers, they make more profits, and that means they hire more workers.

Governor Romney said it's fair that he pays a lower tax rate than a teacher or an auto worker that makes $50,000. I think he's wrong.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. (Applause.)

I refuse to ask middle-class families to give up their deductions for owning a home or raising their kids just to pay for another millionaire's tax cut. (Applause.) I refuse to ask students to pay more for college, or kick children out of Head Start programs, or eliminate health insurance for millions of Americans who are poor or elderly or disabled just to pay for tax cuts we can't afford. And that's the choice that we face in this election. That's what this election comes down to.

Over and over again, we're told that since government can't do everything, it should do almost nothing. If you can't afford health insurance, hope you don't get sick. If a company releases pollution into the air your children breathe, well, that's the price of progress. If you can't afford to start a business or go to college, just borrow money from your parents. (Laughter.)

That's not who we are. That's not what this country is about. Here in America, we believe in individual initiative and self-reliance, but we also believe there are some things we do together. We understand America is not just about what can be done for us. It's about what can be done by us, together, as one nation, as one people. (Applause.) You understood that in 2008. It's true even more so now in 2012.

Because of you, we've made progress. You're the reason there's a little girl with a heart disorder in Phoenix who gets the surgery she needs because insurance companies can't limit her coverage. (Applause.) You're the reason a factory worker who lost his job in Toledo is back on the line building the best cars in the world. You're the reason a student here in L.A. has help paying for her college. (Applause.) The reason a veteran can go to college on the New G.I. bill.

You're the reason a young immigrant who grew up here and went to school here and pledged allegiance to our flag will no longer be deported from the only country she's ever called home. (Applause.) You're the reason that an outstanding soldier won't be kicked out of the military because of who they are or who they love. You're the reason why thousands of families have finally been able to say to loved ones who served us so bravely: "Welcome home." (Applause.) You're the reason.

And if you turn back now, if you buy into the cynicism that everything that we fought for somehow isn't possible, then of course change won't happen. If you give up on the idea that your voice can make a difference, then other voices will fill the void -- the lobbyists and the special interests, and the folks who are writing $10 million checks to beat me, and folks who are trying to keep making it harder for you to vote, the politicians in Washington who want to control the health care choices that women are perfectly capable of making themselves. (Applause.)

You've got to make sure that your voice is heard. Only you can make sure that those things don't happen. Only you've got the power to move us forward.

I've always said -- I said this back in 2008 -- that change, real change, takes time. It takes more than one term or one President. It takes more than one party. (Applause.) It can't happen if you write off half the nation before you even take office. (Applause.)

Back in 2008 -- everybody always remembers the victory, but they don't always remember the bumps in the road. Things always look good in retrospect. But in the middle of it, we were -- we made all kinds of mistakes. We goofed up. I goofed up. But the American people carried us forward. (Applause.) And even with all the things we had going for us -- all the way that things just kind of converged, 47 percent of the country still didn't vote for me. (Laughter.) I just want to point that out. (Laughter.)

But on the night of the election, I said to all those Americans, I may not have your vote, but I hear your voices. I need your help. I'll be your President, too. (Applause.) And I don't know how many will vote for me this time, but I want you to know I'll be there for you no matter what. (Applause.) I'll be fighting just as hard for you as I am for somebody who did vote for me -- because I'm not fighting to create Republican jobs or Democratic jobs; I'm fighting to create American jobs. (Applause.) I'm not fighting to improve schools in red states or blue states; I'm fighting to improve schools in the United States.

The values we believe in don't belong to any one group or one party -- they're not black or white, or Asian or Latino or Native American, gay, straight, abled, disabled -- they are American values; they belong to all of us. (Applause.)

And I still believe we're not as divided as our politics suggest. (Applause.) I still believe we've got more in common than the pundits tell us. And most of all, I still believe in you. (Applause.) I still believe in you, and I am asking you to keep on believing in me. (Applause.) I am asking you for your vote. I am asking you to get out there and work.

If you are willing to stand with me, if you're willing to work with me, if you're willing to knock on some doors with me and make some phone calls with me -- (applause) -- if you're willing to email and tweet, and call your friends and call your neighbors, talk to your cousins, talk to grandma and grandpa -- if you will do that, we will finish what we started in 2008. (Applause.) We will win this election. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

Thank you, California. God bless you and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

October 11,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

JW Marriott Marquis
Miami, Florida

7:17 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you, everybody. (Applause.) Thank you. Everybody, please have a seat. (Applause.) Thank you. It's good to be in Florida. (Applause.) It's good to be in Miami. Thank you so much, everybody. Thank you.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.) I do.

Can everybody please give Lidia a big round of applause for the wonderful introduction. (Applause.) Give it up for Sheila E. (Applause.) I was backstage. I want to thank an extraordinary Congresswoman and somebody who is just fighting on behalf of families not just here in Florida but all across the country every single day -- my friend, Debbie Wasserman Schultz -- give her a big round of applause. (Applause.)

To one of my campaign co-chairs who is -- she's putting in a lot of miles, and could not be a more passionate advocate on behalf of the things that we work for -- Eva Longoria. (Applause.) We're thrilled to have her here.

I want to thank Kirk Wagar for all the great work here in Florida -- Kirk. (Applause.) And finally, I want to thank your former governor, somebody who's been a great friend, Charlie Crist in the house. (Applause.) Charlie reminds all of us that the values we're fighting for, they're not Democratic values or Republican values -- they are American values. And that's why we're here.

I want to thank everybody for the incredible support. It is going to make a difference. But I want everybody to understand we've got some work to do. We've got an election to win. In just over two weeks, on October 27th, Florida gets to start voting early. And I assume everybody is registered here. (Applause.) If you're not, we'll sign you up right now. (Laughter.) Or actually, I think the registration deadline was yesterday, so you better have gotten it done.

(Laughter.) But I'm assuming they wouldn't have let you in if you hadn't registered. (Laughter.)

Everything that we fought for in 2008 is on the line in 2012. So we are going to have to be fired up, and we're going to have to be ready to go. And I'm going to need your help to finish what we started. (Applause.)

And it's useful to remember what we've done. Four years ago, I told you we'd end the war in Iraq -- and we did. (Applause.) I said that we'd end the war in Afghanistan -- and we are. I said that we'd refocus on the people who actually attacked us on 9/11 -- and today, al Qaeda is on its heels and Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families -- and we have, by $3,600. I promised to cut taxes for small business owners -- and we have, 18 times. We got back every dime we used to rescue the financial system, but we also passed a historic law to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts for good.

We passed health care reform so that your insurance companies can't jerk you around anymore, or tell you that being a woman is somehow a preexisting condition. (Applause.)

We repealed "don't ask, don't tell," so that nobody is ever kicked out of the military because of who they are or who they love. (Applause.)

And when Governor Romney said let's "let Detroit go bankrupt," we declined his business advice and we reinvented a dying auto industry that is now back on top of the world. (Applause.) And that's not just critical to economies in the Midwest, it's vital to our economy -- something every American should be proud of.

Today, four years after the worst economic crisis of our lifetimes, we're moving forward again. People don't remember the month I was sworn into office, we lost 800,000 jobs. Our businesses have now added more than 5 million new jobs over the last two and a half years. (Applause.) Unemployment has fallen from a peak of 10 percent down to 7.8 percent -- the lowest level since I took office. More Americans are getting jobs. Manufacturing is coming back to America. We signed three trade deals that's helping to open up markets all over the world, including the Latin American market, which is absolutely vital to the economy and Florida and southern Florida.

Even in the most hard-pressed states like Florida, we're starting to see home values finally start picking up again. (Applause.) So, look, we are not yet where we need to be. We've got a lot more work to do. And obviously, in a state like Florida that was so hard hit when the housing bubble burst, we've got too many friends and neighbors who are looking for work. We've got too many families who are still struggling to pay the bills. Too many homes are still underwater. Too many young people are burdened by debt after they graduate from college.

But if there's one thing I know, it is this -- and that is we have come too far to turn back now. (Applause.) The American people have worked too hard to get to this point. And after all that we have been through together, after all that we have fought for together, why would we go backwards? Why would we go back to the very same policies that led us to this mess in the first place?

That is not an option. I won't allow that to happen. You can't allow it to happen. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States -- because we will not let it happen. We're moving forward. We're not going backwards. (Applause.)

I have seen too much pain and too much struggle to let this country go back to the economic policies that don't work, and that are at the heart of what Governor Romney is offering. The centerpiece of his economic plan -- a $5 trillion tax cut that favors those of us who've been extraordinarily successful in this country. And he's been pitching this plan for a whole year now; stood up on stage in primary debates and proudly promised that his new tax cut would reduce the tax burden for everybody, including the top 1 percent.

Now, of course, you wouldn't know that from listening to the latest version of Mitt Romney. (Laughter.) I was telling folks -- I spoke at Miami University, and I was saying that after a year in which he was calling himself "severely conservative," he's now trying to convince us that he was severely kidding about everything. (Laughter and applause.) These days, whatever you're for, he's for. (Laughter.) Loves the middle class; loves Medicare; loves teachers. (Laughter.) He even said that he loves the most important parts of Obamacare -- loves them. (Laughter and applause.)

And when it comes to all the things that he's actually promised to do as President, suddenly he's got a case of amnesia. (Laughter.) Tax breaks for outsourcers? I've never heard of it. Saying we should cut back on teachers? Doesn't ring your bell. (Laughter.) Kicking 200,000 young Floridians off their parent's insurance plan? Who, me? (Laughter.)

When he's asked about the cost of his tax plan, he pretends just it doesn't exist. What $5 trillion? I don't know anything about a $5 trillion tax cut. Don't pay any attention to the $5 trillion tax cut on my website. (Laughter.) It's still there. (Laughter and applause.)

But this has been -- this is not unique to him. This has been the strategy of the other side for the entire four years that I've been in office. They expect that you've forgotten what happened -- that we lost 9 million jobs in the worst economic crisis of our lifetimes as a consequence of misguided policies. And they think that we haven't been paying attention now to Governor Romney for the last year and a half. And he will say whatever it takes to try to close the deal. He's counting on the fact that you won't remember that what he's selling is exactly what led us to this crisis in the first place.

And so, Florida, part of our task over the next four weeks is to let him know we remember. We know full well that if he gets a chance, Governor Romney will rubber-stamp the top-down economic policies that have been promoted by his congressional allies, including his running mate -- who will be debating tonight. And we can't afford that kind of future. His plan will not create jobs. It will not help the middle class. It will not speed up the recovery -- in fact, it will slow down the recovery.

And we can't afford that. We cannot go back to what we were doing. Not now. Not when we've come so far. We've got to keep moving forward. And that's why I'm running for a second term -- because I see a vision for the future in which everybody gets a fair shot, and everybody is doing their fair share, and everybody is playing by the same rules.

I know that jobs and prosperity don't trickle down from the top. They grow from a strong, thriving middle class and creating ladders of opportunity into that middle class for everybody who is willing to work hard.

I know that more tax breaks for people who are shipping jobs overseas won't create jobs. What does is supporting small businesses, manufacturers who are making products right here in Florida, products stamped with those proud words: "Made in America." Instead of providing tax breaks for outsourcing, we have to reward those companies that are investing in creating jobs right here. And we can do it. That's the choice that you face in this election.

We can create more jobs by controlling our own energy. There are thousands of Floridians right now who are making a great living promoting solar energy and wind energy and clean energy, all across this state. (Applause.) We doubled our investment in clean energy, which is creating jobs and is good for our environment. And we also raised fuel standards so that by the next -- middle of the next decade, your cars and trucks will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.)

And today, the United States of America is less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in the past two decades. (Applause.) So we need to build on that progress, not go backwards. My plan would continue to cut our oil imports in half by investing in the clean energy that's creating jobs right here -- wind and solar, fuel-efficient cars, long-lasting batteries.

And we can do so by -- and we can pay for it by no longer giving $4 billion a year in taxpayer subsidies to oil companies that are doing just fine. We'll help produce more oil, but we don't need to give them $4 billion to do it. Let's make sure that we don't lose the race for clean energy to China or other countries. We need to develop that technology right here in the United States. (Applause.)

And it will be good for our environment. It will do something about carbon in our atmosphere -- and that is not a joke. That is not a hoax. That's our children's future. And folks here in Miami understand that better than anybody, because the impact of climate change will be significant on our kids and our grandkids unless we take those steps. We can't just deny our way out of these things. It's a threat to our children's future.

I believe that we've got to have the best education system in the world. That is economic development. That's not something separate and apart. (Applause.) If our kids have the skills they need to compete, then our economy will grow. And I'm only here because of the education that I got. I wasn't born into wealth or fame. You hadn't heard of the Obama name before I ran. (Laughter.) Had you? No. (Laughter.) Let's face it. First time you heard it, you probably thought the guy might be Japanese -- I don't know. (Laughter.) Italian? Who knows?

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Latino.

THE PRESIDENT: Latino. (Laughter and applause.) Right. The Obama family from Jalisco. (Laughter.)

But education is what gave me opportunity. It's what gave so many of you opportunity. It's the gateway into a middle-class life. (Applause.) So when I hear Governor Romney say hiring more teachers won't grow the economy over the next four years, I have to say, no, actually it will. But more importantly, what about our kids over the next 40 years? What about our economy over the next 40 years?

We can get education to pay for tax breaks we don't need, or we can recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers. We can provide better early childhood education. We can train 2 million more workers at community colleges. (Applause.) We can lower the cost of tuition for our young people. That's an agenda for growth. That's what creates opportunity. That's what we can do together. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.) Four more.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: I mentioned that we ended the war in Iraq, that we're ending the war in Afghanistan. I want to use that money to pay down our deficit, put our people back to work rebuilding roads and bridges and schools all across America. Right here in Florida, we've got huge projects that are going up all over the state that will build the infrastructure to facilitate more trade, move more goods more efficiently, help businesses grow. And we have the resources to do it if we make good decisions.

But Governor Romney said it was "tragic" to end the war in Iraq. He repeated this last week, said we should still have troops on the ground in Iraq. And I fundamentally disagree with that. I think bringing troops home was the right thing to do. (Applause.)

And every brave American who wears our country's uniform should know we will make sure as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief we've got the strongest military in the world. And when our troops come home and take off their uniform, we will serve them as well as they've served us -- because if you fought for this country, you shouldn't have to fight for a job or a roof over your heard when you come home. (Applause.)

And finally, we'll cut the deficit by $4 trillion, but we're going to do it in a sensible way. We've already cut a trillion, working with Democrats and Republicans. So we can cut more spending. But we're not going to be able to reduce our deficit in a serious way unless the wealthiest households are willing to go back, for incomes over $250,000, to the same rate that we were paying under Bill Clinton -- when the economy created nearly 23 million new jobs, we went from deficit to surplus, and businesses and investors did very well -- because the economy grows best that way, when it's broad-based and everybody has a stake in how the economy grows.

And I understand Governor Romney disagrees with this. He did an interview and he says he thinks it's fair that he pays a lower tax rate making $20 million a year than the teacher who's makes $50,000. I just think that's wrong. And if we're going to be serious -- (applause) -- if we're going to be serious about reducing the deficit then we've got to make choices.

And the choice I make is not asking middle-class families to give up their home mortgage deduction or tax credits they get for raising their kids just to pay for a tax cut for me. I'm not going to ask students to pay more for college, or kick kids off of Head Start programs, or eliminate health insurance for millions of Americans who are poor or elderly or disabled just so I can get a tax break.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Thank you. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: You're welcome. (Applause.)

And by the way, the math still doesn't add up in terms of their plan, because when Governor Romney says he can cut taxes, increase military spending, close the deficit -- all by getting rid of Planned Parenthood and Big Bird -- (laughter) -- he needs a calculator because there's something wrong with his math. He says, don't worry, new tax cuts will pay for themselves. That is what we heard exactly from President Bush back in 2000, 2001. And it didn't work. And we know our plan does.

So this is the choice that we face. This is what the election comes down to. And I said at the convention, over and over again, we're told by our opponents that since government can't do everything, it should do almost nothing. It's sort of a "you're on your own" philosophy. If you don't have health insurance, hope you don't get sick. (Laughter.) If you can't afford to start a business or go to college, borrow money from your parents. (Laughter.)

That is not who we are. That's not how America became great. We believe in individual initiative and we don't believe in helping people who aren't willing to help themselves, but we also understand there are some things we do better together. We understand that in America it's not just about what can be done for us, but what is done by us, together as one nation, as one people.

And that's what 2008 was about. We fought some fierce battles over the last four years, but everything we've gotten done, it happened, ultimately, because the American people came together -- black, white, Hispanic, Asian, Native American, gay, straight, able, disabled -- people came together. (Applause.)

You're the reason Florida seniors are paying $600 less on their prescription drugs because of Obamacare. You did that. You're the reason that a working family in this state was able to save their home from foreclosure.

There was somebody in the audience today, while we were taking a picture, who talked about their mom -- 90 years old, because of the mortgage modification program we put into place, saved her home, lives with her sister -- 90 and 95. You did that, though. You did that. (Applause.)

That's what's at stake. You made that happen. The kids at Gainesville, or Tallahassee, or here in Miami who are getting an education -- maybe the first in their family, the veterans who are going to college on the New GI Bill -- that's what we were fighting for. (Applause.)

You're the reason that there are young immigrants all across this state who grew up here and went to school here and pledged allegiance to our flag, and they don't have to fear now that they're going to be deported from the only country they call home. (Applause.) You made that happen.

You ended "don't ask, don't tell." You allowed us to bring our troops home so their families could greet them and say "Welcome home." (Applause.) You did that.

And so you can't afford to turn away now. You can't. I know that sometimes in politics folks are excited and they have fun, you have nice events like this and everybody gets dressed up -- and you guys are looking very good. (Laughter.) But then sometimes when it gets tougher, people get discouraged and they're wondering, well, I don't know, is change really possible? And we get cynical and we get doubtful. It happens to everybody; there's nothing wrong with that. It happens in our lives; it happens in our politics. It happens in everything that we do. But you can't succumb to that.

And the reason is that when we don't get involved, when we don't insert ourselves into the process, when your voices aren't heard, then somebody else fills the void -- the folks who are writing $10 million checks to try to buy this election; the folks who are trying to make it harder for Floridians to vote; the politicians in Washington who are trying to tell women that they shouldn't make their own decisions when it comes to their health care. (Applause.) So you're the ones who have to make sure that doesn't happen.

That sign there, "Forward," that's a message to me, but it's also a message to you. You've got that power, that capacity. And so when you think about the next 26 days, I would implore you to ask yourselves, is there something else I can do? Is there some little bit of difference that I can make?

Here in Florida, last time in 2008, if you go precinct by precinct, it's a difference of a couple of hundred votes. It may be just that little bit of extra effort is what makes a difference. And you will see me working harder than I've ever worked in my life, because every time I meet somebody who tells me that their mom was on the verge of losing their home, or their mom was on the verge of not being able to get treatment for a potentially deadly disease; every time I meet a young person who says I can go to college now because that change you made in the student loan program made it possible; every time I meet one of these Dreamer kids who explains how they feel like the weight of the world has been lifted off their shoulders; every time I think about all the people who are working so hard in this country and aren't asking for much, just asking for a shot -- every time I think of them and knowing that they've got to have somebody in Washington who's fighting for them and who's thinking about them every single day -- (applause) -- that's going to make me work as hard as I know how over the next 26 days and over the next four years. And I hope you have that same feeling. (Applause.)

We cannot let up now. We cannot let up. I need you focused. I need you ready to fight. And if we do, we're going to win Florida. And when we win Florida, we're going to win this election. We're going to finish what we started, and remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

Thank you, everybody. God bless you. Let's go get this done. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Richard and Norma Small Multi-Sport Center
Mt. Vernon, Iowa

12:12 P.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Iowa! (Applause.) Thank you! Are you fired up? (Applause.) Are you ready to go? (Applause.)

Well, first of all, can everybody please give a big round of applause to Rachel for that great introduction? (Applause.) I want to thank the Rams for hosting us here today. I appreciate you guys. (Applause.) Go, Rams! (Applause.)

We've got your outstanding Senator, Tom Harkin. (Applause.) Congressman Bruce Braley. (Applause.) Another Congressman who has -- I guess it's professor emeritus right here -- Dave Loebsack. (Applause.) Two of my oldest friends in Iowa, my co-chairs back in 2008 -- your Attorney General, Tom Miller -- (applause) -- and your Treasurer, Mike Fitzgerald. (Applause.)

And I'm thrilled to see all of you. And I hope you're enjoying the warm weather. (Laughter.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.)

I just want to know -- look, I'm from Chicago. (Applause.) And I campaigned in Iowa in January. (Laughter.) So this is basically the warmest you will be for the next six months. (Laughter.)

Now, I've come back to Cornell College today -- (applause) -- come back to ask each of you for one big thing. I'm asking for your vote. (Applause.) I'm asking for your vote. In Iowa, you can vote today. Today. As long as you're registered before October 27th, you can vote right up to Election Day. In fact, you can go vote right after this event at the Cole Library. (Applause.) And anyone can find out how to register and where to vote at Vote.BarackObama.com.

So, Iowa, are you going to vote for me today if you haven't already voted? (Applause.) I need you. I need you.

Now, as many of you know, we had our second debate last night. (Applause.) I'm still trying to figure out how to get the hang of this thing -- debating. (Laughter.) But we're working on it. We'll keep on improving as time goes on. I've got one left. (Applause.)

But the interesting thing is that Governor Romney has been running around talking about his five-point plan for the economy for quite some time. And as I pointed out last night, and you guys heard yourselves, it's really a one-point plan. It's really a one-point plan. It says folks at the very top can play by their own set of rules.

That's why they can pay lower taxes than you do, or they can use offshore accounts. Or they can invest in a company, bankrupt it, fire the workers, take away their pensions, ship the jobs overseas, and still make money doing it.

It's the one-point plan that says it's okay for Wall Street to keep engaging in the reckless behavior that got us into the mess we've been fighting back from for the last four years. It's the same philosophy that's been squeezing middle-class families for more than a decade. It's the same philosophy that we saw in the previous administration. And I have seen too much pain and too much struggle to let this country go down that same road again. (Applause.)

So, Iowa, we can't -- I want you to know, folks here in Iowa understand this -- you cannot grow this economy from the top down. You grow this economy from the middle class out. We're not going to go back to what we were doing before. We're moving forward. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

Now, Governor Romney also took another stab at trying to sell us his $5 trillion tax cut that favors the wealthy. Once again, he refused to tell us how he's going to pay for it. He said he'd let you know after the election. (Laughter.) Now, here's a tip: Usually when a politician tells you he's going to wait until after the election to explain a plan to you, they don't have a pleasant surprise in store for you. (Laughter.) And in this case, it's because just about everybody who's looked at Governor Romney's $5 trillion in tax cuts says he can't pay for it without blowing a hole in the deficit or raising taxes on middle-class families. It can't be done.

Governor Romney says he has a plan to create 12 million new jobs in the next four years. But when folks started crunching the numbers, it fell apart even faster than his tax plan. (Laughter.) Turns out his jobs math isn't any better than his tax math. (Applause.) The Washington Post called it a "bait and switch."

So let's recap what we learned last night. His tax plan doesn't add up; his jobs plan doesn't create jobs; his deficit reduction plan adds to the deficit. So, Iowa, everybody here has heard of the New Deal; you've heard of the fair deal; you've heard of the square deal. Mitt Romney is trying to sell you a Sketchy Deal. (Applause.)

We are not buying it. We know better. We've been there. We've tried that. We're not going back. We're moving forward. That's why I need your vote. We've got to finish what we started in 2008. (Applause.) You don't want to invest in that sketchy deal. Let me tell you --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Etch-a-Sketch.

THE PRESIDENT: That, too. (Laughter.)

Four years ago, I told you we'd end the war in Iraq -- and I did. (Applause.) I said we'd end the war in Afghanistan -- and we are. (Applause.) I said we'd focus on the terrorists who actually attacked us on 9/11 -- and we have, and bin Laden is dead. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families -- and we have, by $3,600. I promised to cut taxes for small business owners -- and we have, 18 times. We got back every dime used to rescue the banks, and we passed a law to make sure that taxpayer-funded bailouts are over for good.

We passed health care reform so your insurance company can't jerk you around anymore. (Applause.) We made sure insurance companies have to let parents keep their children on their parents' plan until they're 26 years old if they don't have health insurance. (Applause.) We said to insurance companies, you've got to charge women the same as men because being a woman is not a preexisting condition. (Applause.)

We repealed "don't ask, don't tell" so no one is ever kicked out of the military because of who they love. (Applause.)

When Governor Romney said we should just let Detroit go bankrupt, we said thanks but no thanks, and we reinvented a dying auto industry that's come roaring back to the top of the world. (Applause.)

Last time I was here, I said to students, we've going to help you make sure you can afford a college education -- and we took $60 billion that was going to banks and middlemen in the student loan program, we said let's cut out the middleman, let's give that money directly to students. And as a consequence, millions of students have benefited from lower interest rates and Pell grants. (Applause.)

Today, four years after the worst economic crisis of our lifetimes, we're moving forward again. After losing 800,000 jobs a month when I took office, our businesses have now added more than 5 million new jobs over the past two and a half years. (Applause.)

Unemployment has fallen from a peak of 10 percent to 7.8 percent. The stock market has nearly doubled, which means your 401(k)s have started to recover. Foreclosures are at their lowest point in five years. Home values are back on the rise. Manufacturing is coming home to America. Our assembly lines are starting to hum again. (Applause.)

Look, we've got a lot more work to do, but we've got to build on that progress. And I've got a plan to grow the economy and create jobs and build more security for middle-class families. I talked about it last night. I want to export more products, outsource fewer jobs. We can keep giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas, or we can give those tax breaks to companies that are investing right here in Iowa, right here in the United States of America rebuilding our manufacturing base. (Applause.)

I want to control more of our own energy. You heard last night oil production is up. Natural gas production is up. But what we've also said is we've got to develop new sources of energy, and we've got to be more efficient with our economy. And so we raised fuel-efficiency standards on cars so by the middle of the next decade, your car will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.)

We have doubled the amount of renewable energy that we generate from wind and solar and biofuels. Today the United States of America is less dependent on foreign oil than any time in the last two decades. (Applause.)

And so the question -- so the choice you have, you heard last night, it's not a choice between oil versus solar, or natural gas versus wind. Look, we all agree we got to increase oil production. We all agree we got to increase natural gas production. But the question is whether we build on the progress for the new energy sources of the future. I'm not going to keep on giving corporate taxpayer-funded welfare to oil companies, $4 billion a year, when we could be using that money to continue to promote wind and solar and long-lasting batteries, and put Americans back to work right now -- (applause) -- seeing that technology develop here in the United States instead of China or Germany, or some other country. (Applause.)

And I've got to tell you, Iowa, this is not a pipedream; there are nearly 7,000 jobs in Iowa right now depending on wind energy. Last night, Governor Romney claimed he didn't have a plan to end wind jobs in Iowa, but he called these jobs "imaginary." His plan would end tax credits for wind energy producers. That is a fact. My plan will keep these investments, and we'll keep reducing the carbon pollution that's also heating the planet -- (applause) -- because climate change isn't a hoax. The droughts we've seen, the floods, the wildfires -- those aren't a joke. They're a threat to our children's future. And we can do something about it. That's part of what's at stake in this election.

I want to give more Americans the chance to get a great education and get the skills they need to compete in the 21st century. (Applause.) I tried to talk about education last night. We kept on getting waylaid. But if you're talking about jobs and economic growth, what's more important than making sure everybody has got the skills they need?

I'm only here because of a great education. All the young people who are making an investment in their college education right now, you guys understand you've got to be equipped. Michelle, her gateway into opportunity was her education system. Her dad was a blue-collar worker, her mom was a secretary. And right now, as I said, because of the actions we already took, millions of young people are paying less for college because we finally took on that system that was wasting taxpayer dollars, gave it directly to students.

Rachel, by the way -- I took a photo with her parents backstage, and she talked about how -- the fact that we put in place a tax credit for middle-income families to send their kids to college is helping her attend school right now. (Applause.)

But what you saw last night, even though we weren't able to talk about it as much as I would have liked, is a fundamental difference. Governor Romney says hiring more teachers won't grow our economy over the next four years. Well, you know what, yes, it will. But more importantly, what about our kids over the next 40 years? What about our economy for the next 40 years?

We could gut education, pay for Governor Romney's $5 trillion tax cut -- or we can recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers over the next decade -- (applause) -- helping our young people refocus on science and technology, engineering, math. We should make sure all our young people -- our daughters as well as our sons -- are thriving in these fields. (Applause.) This should be a national mission.

I've got to tell you, we don't have to collect a bunch of binders to find qualified, talented -- (applause) -- driven young women ready to learn and teach in these fields right now. (Applause.)

And when young women graduate, they should get equal pay for equal work. (Applause.) That should be a simple question to answer. When Governor Romney was asked about it, his campaign said, "We'll get back to you." That shouldn't be a complicated question: equal pay for equal work. I want my daughters paid just like somebody else's sons are paid for the same job. That's straightforward. (Applause.)

Now, I've got to say, last night, Governor Romney's top advisor finally admitted, no, the Governor didn't really support that bill. You don't have to wait for an answer from me. The Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act was the first bill I signed into law as President -- the first bill. (Applause.)

Governor Romney didn't want to talk much last night about how he wants to end funding for Planned Parenthood, how he supports legislation that would turn certain decisions about a woman's health care over to their employers. He didn't want to talk about it because he knows he can't sell it. I don't think your boss should control the health care you get. (Applause.) I don't think insurers should control the health care you get. (Applause.) I certainly don't think politicians should control the health care that you get. (Applause.)

We passed Obamacare -- yes, I like the term -- we passed it -- (laughter) -- because I do care, and I want to put these choices in your hands where they belong. (Applause.)

Fourth plan -- fourth part of the plan to create jobs right here is use some of the money we're saving from ending those wars in Iraq, winding down the war in Afghanistan, to pay down our deficit, put our people back to work, including our veterans, rebuilding roads and bridges and schools all across America. (Applause.)

Governor Romney and I just have a different theory on this. He said it was "tragic" the way we ended the war in Iraq; doubled down on the belief in a speech just last week, said we should have kept troops on the ground in Iraq. I disagree. I know these troops. I know their families. I know how dedicated they are and the sacrifices they and their families make. And it was time to bring those troops home to their families. It was the right thing to do. (Applause.)

And every brave American who wears the uniform of this country, they need to know as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we're going to maintain the strongest military in the world. And when those troops take off the uniform, we're going to serve them as well as they served us -- because nobody should have to fight for a job after they fought for our country. Nobody should have to fight for a roof over their heads or the health care they need after they fought for America. (Applause.)

And finally, I want to cut the deficit by $4 trillion over the next 10 years, and I've worked with Republicans and Democrats already to cut a trillion dollars' worth of spending. I'm ready to cut more spending that is not contributing to our growth. But we can't just cut our way to prosperity.

We've got to make investments in science and research and infrastructure. And we can't do all that and reduce our deficit unless we ask the wealthiest households to pay a little bit more -- pay higher taxes on incomes over $250,000. So keep in mind, somebody making $500,000, they're still keeping the tax break for the first $250,000, but after that, let's go back to the same rate we had when Bill Clinton was President -- (applause) -- our economy created 23 million new jobs, we went from deficit to surplus. (Applause.)

Governor Romney was asked, is it fair that he pays a lower tax rate than a teacher who makes $50,000. He said, yes, I think it's fair; I think that's how you grow an economy. He's wrong. You look at our economic history -- that's not how we grew an economy, by just having a few folks at the top paying even less than folks in the middle. I'm not going to ask middle-class families to give up their deductions for owning a home, or raising their kids, or sending their kids to college just to pay for another millionaire's tax cut. (Applause.)

I'm not going to ask the students here to pay more for college so I have a little more money in my pocket. I don't need it. (Applause.) I'm not going to kick children out of Head Start programs, or eliminate health insurance for millions of Americans who are poor, or elderly, or disabled.

And Governor Romney again last night, over and over again, he says, I can cut taxes for everybody; I can increase military spending by $2 trillion; I will lower taxes for middle-class families and I'm going to close the deficit. He keeps on saying it. And when people ask, well, what are you going to cut -- because I don't know about you guys, but if I'm looking at my budget and I'm trying to shrink my debt, I've got to cut something out. So, so far, what he's offered is eliminating funding for Planned Parenthood and getting rid of Big Bird --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: -- and ending wind tax credits.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: It adds up to less than 1/100th of 1 percent of the federal budget. So he claims his -- now, that was an estimate, by the way. I was doing that off the top of my head. (Laughter.)

He claims his $5 trillion tax cut will create millions of new jobs and pay for themselves. We have heard this pitch before. You know where we heard it? In the previous administration. We know it doesn't work. We know what we're talking about does create jobs.

And now the choice is up to you. The election now is up to you. It comes down to this. Over and over again, our opponents tell us that because government can't do everything, it should do almost nothing. If you can't afford health insurance, hope you don't get sick. If you can't afford to start a business or go to college, borrow money from your parents. If a company releases harmful pollution into the air, you know what, that's the price of progress. That's not who we are. That's not what America is about.

We are in this thing together. (Applause.) That's what this country is about. Here in America, we believe that we're all in this together -- everybody. We understand America is not just about what can be done for us, but what can be done by us, as one people, as one nation.

Iowa, you're the reason that we've got shuttered factories in places like Newton that are now humming again with workers manufacturing components for amazing wind turbines. You made that happen because you believed we could do this together. You're the reason a mother in Cedar Rapids -- actually, a mother right here in this audience -- doesn't have to worry about surgery for her daughter because the insurance company can't limit her coverage.

You're the reason a student in Ames, or Iowa City, or Cornell College can get help paying for a college education, and we've got a New GI Bill for our returning veterans to get the education they need. (Applause.) That all happened because of you. And we've got to do it again.

You're the reason a young immigrant is not going to be sent away from the only country she's ever called home. (Applause.) You're the reason that we were able to bring our troops home, and those families are reunited with their loved ones. You made that happen.

So if we don't fight as hard as we can over the next three weeks, all that could be set aside. That's what we're fighting for. That's what we're fighting for. That's what we're fighting for. You cannot turn away. And if your voices aren't heard, then the lobbyists and the special interests, they'll fill the void -- the folks who are writing the $10 million checks to try to buy this election; the folks who are trying to make it harder for people to vote in this election. And you can't let that happen. I'm not going to let that happen. (Applause.) We've worked too hard together over the last four years to let that happen. (Applause.)

Back in 2008, it started here in Iowa. (Applause.) You're the ones who first showed America that change was possible. And everything we fought for is now at stake. And we can choose to go back to the same top-down policies that got us into this mess, or you can choose to move us forward with the policies that have been getting us out of this mess.

You can choose to go back to a foreign policy that gets us into wars with no plan for getting out, or you can help move us forward and end the Afghan war responsibly and bring our troops home, and focus on the terrorists who were going to attack us. (Applause.)

You can choose to turn back the clock 50 years for women and for immigrants and for gays and for lesbians -- or you can stand up and say, we want to move forward. We believe in the country where no matter who you are, or what you look like, or where you come from, or who you love, you can make it if you try. (Applause.)

That's what's at stake in this election. That's what I still believe in. And if that's what you still believe in, then we've got to fight as hard as we can for the next three weeks. And I promise you, if you are willing to stand with me, and knock on doors with me, and work as hard as you can, and talk to your friends and your neighbors and your classmates, and if you will vote for me, we will win Linn County again. We will win Iowa again. (Applause.) We will win this election again. We'll finish what we started, and we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you and God bless America. (Applause.)

October 18,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Veterans Memorial Park
Manchester, New Hampshire

12:02 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, New Hampshire! (Applause.) Are you fired up?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Are you ready to go?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: I'm fired up. (Applause.) First of all, I'm fired up about this weather. (Applause.) I mean, I've got to say that generally when I look at a trip to New Hampshire in October, I'm not thinking it's going to look like this. (Applause.) But this is spectacular. (Applause.)

It's good to be back. And it's good to be with a great friend and an outstanding governor -- Governor Lynch. Please give him a big round of applause. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.)

And I love your outstanding Senator, Jeanne Shaheen. (Applause.) Jeanne was especially happy because it was her granddaughter, Ellie, who sang the National Anthem today. Give Ellie a big round of applause. (Applause.)

Nineteen days, New Hampshire. Nineteen days. (Applause.) In nineteen days, you're going to step into a voting booth, and you've got a big choice to make. It's not just a choice between two candidates or parties -- it's about two different visions for this country that we love.

Governor Romney's got his sales pitch. He's been running around talking about his five-point PowerPoint plan for the economy. (Laughter.) But as we saw the other night -- (applause) -- what he's selling is not a five-point plan.

It's really just a one-point plan: Folks at the top get to play with a different set of rules than you do.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo, now -- vote. (Applause.)

They can pay lower taxes; they can keep their money offshore; they can buy companies, load it up with debt, lay off workers, strip their pensions, send their jobs overseas -- they can still make money doing it, turning a big profit. It's the same philosophy that's been squeezing middle-class families for more than a decade. It's the same philosophy that got us into this mess.

For the last four years, I've watched the American people, with their resilience and resolve, overcoming the pain and struggle and dealing with the consequences of the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression. We've worked too hard to let this country go down that path again. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: New Hampshire, we cannot grow this economy from the top down. This economy grows from the middle out, when everybody has ladders of opportunity; if they work hard they can succeed, they can get ahead. That's how we move ahead. When workers have a decent living, have a little money in their pockets -- that means they're out there as customers buying goods, and that means businesses do better, and that means businesses make more profits, then they hire more workers. That's how you grow an economy. (Applause.)

That's why we can't go backward. That's why we've got to move forward. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

On Tuesday, Governor Romney took another stab at trying to sell us this $5 trillion tax cut that favors the wealthy. He took another swing at it, and he whiffed. (Applause.) Instead of telling us how he'd pay for it, he said, I'll let you know after the election.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: And then when I asked him about it, he said, I'm a businessman, I know the numbers will work -- take my word for it.

Now, I'm going to let you in on a little tip: When a politician tells you he's going to wait until after the election, it's not because their plan is so good that they don't want to spoil the secret. (Laughter.) That's usually not what's going on. (Applause.) And in this case, just about everybody who's looked at his tax plan says he can't pay for it without blowing a hole in the deficit, or raising your taxes -- raising taxes on the middle class.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo --

AUDIENCE: Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: -- vote.

So then Governor Romney says he's got another plan to create 12 million jobs in the next four years. But when folks started crunching the numbers, his jobs plan fell apart even faster than his tax plan. The Washington Post called it a "bait and switch." A bait and switch.

So let's recap. He's got a tax plan that doesn't add up. He's got a jobs plan that doesn't create jobs. He's got a deficit plan that doesn't reduce the deficit. Listen, New Hampshire, you've heard of the New Deal; you've heard of the Square Deal and the Fair Deal. Mitt Romney is trying to sell you a Sketchy Deal. (Applause.)

We don't need a sketchy deal. We know better, because the last time this sketchy deal was tried was in the previous administration -- made the same sales pitch; told you the same stuff: Look, if we cut these taxes, the economy is going to grow so much, the deficit is going to come down, don't worry about it. Just like they said we didn't have to pay for two wars. It didn't work, and that's why you're not buying. We have been there. We've tried it. We're not going back. We're moving forward. I need your help to finish what we started in 2008. (Applause.)

Now, I made some commitments four years ago. I told you I'd end the war in Iraq -- and we did. (Applause.) I said we'd end the war in Afghanistan -- we are. (Applause.) I said we'd refocus on the terrorists who actually attacked us on 9/11 -- and we have. (Applause.) And today, a new tower rises above the New York skyline, and al Qaeda is on the path to defeat, and Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I promised to cut middle-class taxes -- and we have, by $3,600. (Applause.) I promised to cut taxes for small business owners -- and we have, 18 times. (Applause.) And by the way, you'll hear Governor Romney talk about small businesses. What he doesn't tell you is his definition of small businesses includes Donald Trump -- (laughter) -- includes hedge fund managers.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo --

AUDIENCE: Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: -- vote.

We got back every dime used to rescue the banks. And then we passed a law to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts for good. We put that in place. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I said in this great country of ours, nobody should go bankrupt when they get sick, and so we passed health reform -- yes, I like the name "Obamacare" -- (applause)

-- so your insurance companies can't jerk you around anymore. (Applause.) So young people can stay on their parent's plans till they're 26. (Applause.) So women can't be charged more than men for their insurance -- being a woman is not a preexisting condition. (Applause.)

We repealed "don't ask, don't tell" -- (applause) -- because anybody who is willing to sacrifice and serve this country we love shouldn't be prevented because of who they love. (Applause.)

When Governor Romney said we should let Detroit go bankrupt, we said, no, thanks; we're not going to take that business advice. (Laughter.) We reinvented a dying auto industry that's come roaring back to the top of the world. (Applause.)

And you may have heard, by the way, Governor Romney trying to claim that I did what he advised. Did you hear that?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Unbelievable. (Laughter.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Malarkey!

THE PRESIDENT: Everybody in the auto industry knows that's not what he said. He just went ahead and said it.

Today, four years after the worst economic crisis of our lifetimes, we're moving forward again. (Applause.) After losing 800,000 jobs a month when I took office, our businesses have now added more than 5 million new jobs over the past two and a half years. Unemployment has fallen from 10 percent to 7.8 percent. Home values are back on the rise. The stock market has nearly doubled. Manufacturing is coming home. Our assembly lines are getting back to work. (Applause.)

We need to keep moving forward. (Applause.) We've got more work to do. That's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Look, we have more work to do, though. I will not be satisfied until everybody who wants to work hard can find a job. (Applause.) And that means we've got to have a plan to grow not just the economy and create jobs, but create good jobs, and provide security for the middle class.

So, number one, I want to send fewer jobs overseas, sell more products overseas. (Applause.) Governor Romney has no problem giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas, or outsourcing. I want to reward companies that are investing right here -- investing in New Hampshire, investing in Manchester, insourcing, opening new plants, hiring new workers -- creating new jobs right here in America. (Applause.) That's what we need to do.

I want to control more of our own energy and how we use energy. After 30 years of doing nothing, we raised fuel standards, so by the middle of the next decade your cars and trucks will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.) We've doubled the amount of renewable energy we generate from sources like wind and solar, even as we've increased the production of oil and natural gas. So today, America is less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in the last two decades. (Applause.) Think about that. Our oil imports are going down.

So now you've got a choice between a plan that reverses this progress, or one that builds on it. Governor Romney feels comfortable with taxpayers providing oil companies $4 billion a year in taxpayer-funded corporate welfare.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't --

AUDIENCE: Vote! Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: We're not going to boo! We're going to vote! (Applause.)

But you know what, I understand why you wouldn't be happy with that idea, because we should be taking that $4 billion and investing it in the energy sources of tomorrow. (Applause.) We don't want China to win the race for clean energy technology. We want that technology developed here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

And, by the way, those investments not only create good jobs here at home, create new industries here at home, but it also reduces the carbon pollution that's heating our planet. Climate change is not a hoax. Droughts and floods and fires, they're not a joke. They are a threat to our children's future and we've got to deal with it in a serious way that also grows our economy. We can do that. (Applause.)

Number three, I want the best education system in the world right in the United States. (Applause.) Michelle and I are only where we are because of the chance an education gave us. And today, because of the actions my administration took, millions of students all across the country are paying less for college. (Applause.) We took a system that was wasting tens of billions of dollars on banks and lenders -- we said let's cut out the middleman, give money directly to the students. And as a consequence, young people are getting a better deal. (Applause.)

Now, Governor Romney wants to reverse some of these choices. He wants to gut some of our investment in education to help pay for this $5 trillion tax cut. I think we should make sure that we are doing more in education: Hiring new math and science teachers so that they can get the lead in the technology that's going to shape our economy in the future. (Applause.) Provide job training for 2 million workers at our community colleges. Work with colleges and universities to keep tuition low. (Applause.)

That's my agenda for change. That's what we need to do.

We can have that future, but you've got to vote. That's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

I suspect we've got some teachers in the audience. Governor Romney said hiring more teachers won't grow our economy. Then he said class size doesn't matter. He said class size doesn't matter. There's not a teacher or a parent who doesn't believe this. Making sure that our kids are thriving in math and science -- where we know there are going to be more jobs -- that will grow our economy. Having them be able to get a job as an engineer -- maybe start the next Apple or the next Intel -- that will create jobs. That should be a national mission. That's what we're fighting for. (Applause.)

And, by the way, we want our sons to thrive in math and science and engineering, but we also want our daughters to thrive in those fields, too. (Applause.) See, we don't have to order up some binders to find qualified, talented, driven young women who can learn and excel in these fields right now. (Applause.) And when these young women graduate, I want them to receive equal pay for equal work. (Applause.)

I don't know why this is so complicated. (Laughter.) Governor Romney still won't say whether or not he supported a law to protect that right, no matter how many times he's asked. This is not -- this is not that hard. I've got two daughters. I want to make sure they get paid the same as somebody's sons for doing the same job. (Applause.) Pretty straightforward. Any confusion there?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: You know where I stand. Look, the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act, this was the first bill I signed into law. (Applause.) And I know you want the same thing for your daughters, or sisters, or moms, or grandmas as I do. (Applause.) And this is not -- as I said in the debate, this is not just a women's issue, this is a family issue, this is an economic issue.

I also believe women should make their own health care decisions. (Applause.) I know you've got -- and it's not just Washington that sometimes deals with this issue. You've got a state legislature up here that sometimes acts like it knows better than women when it comes to women's own health care decisions. My opponent has got the same approach. Governor Romney said he'd end funding for Planned Parenthood, despite all the work it does to provide women with mammograms and breast cancer screenings.

AUDIENCE: Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: Vote!

AUDIENCE: Vote! Vote! Vote! Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: All right, you guys are getting it. You guys are getting it. (Laughter.)

We made sure that insurance companies are providing women with contraception. He supported legislation that would turn those decisions over to a woman's employer. Think about that.

Do you think, like, your boss, or your insurance company, or some politician in Concord or Washington should get control of your health care choices?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: The health care law we passed puts those choices in your hands where they belong. That's where they're going to stay as long as I'm President of the United States, as long -- (applause) -- as long as you vote.

AUDIENCE: Vote! Vote! Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: All right. Now, we also have to make sure that we're using the money we're saving from ending the war in Iraq, winding down the war in Afghanistan, to put our people back to work here doing some nation-building here at home. (Applause.)

We've got a debate on Monday on foreign policy, and I'm very interested in seeing what Governor Romney has to say about that. (Laughter.) You know, he said that it was "tragic" the way I ended the war in Iraq. Last week he said we should still have troops in Iraq.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Vote. Vote. (Laughter.)

AUDIENCE: Vote! Vote! Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: Look, one of the great honors of my job is serving as Commander-In-Chief, and meeting the amazing men and women in our Armed Services who serve us every single day. I think bringing our troops home after doing the job they did in Iraq was the right thing to do. (Applause.) Reuniting them with their families was the right thing to do. (Applause.) The 33,000 troops that we've brought home this year from Afghanistan -- that was the right thing to do. (Applause.)

And every brave American who wears this country's uniform should know this: As long as I'm your Commander-In-Chief, I will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. And when you take off that uniform, we're going to serve you as well as you've served us -- because nobody who has fought for us should ever have to fight for a job when they come home, or a roof over their heads when they come home, or the benefits they've earned when they come home. (Applause.)

And finally, we've got to cut the deficit by $4 trillion over the next 10 years. I've put forward a plan to do it, and I've worked with Republicans and Democrats already to cut spending that we didn't need or we could afford, and I'm ready to do more. But I'm not going to cut things like education. (Applause.) I'm not going to cut research that helps grow our economy.

We can't get this done unless we also ask the wealthiest households to pay higher taxes on their incomes above $250,000 -- pay the same rate we had when Bill Clinton was President. We created 23 million new jobs, and we went from a deficit to surplus. That's how you do it. (Applause.)

Governor Romney said he thinks it's fair that he pays a lower tax rate than a teacher who makes $50,000.

AUDIENCE: Boo -- vote! Vote! Vote! Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: Vote!

He is wrong. I'm not going to ask middle-class families to give up your deductions on a home mortgage, or your deductions for raising a kid, just to pay for another millionaire's tax cut. I'm not going to ask students who are here to pay more for college, or kick kids out of Head Start, or eliminate health insurance for millions of Americans just to pay for a tax cut we don't need -- tax cut we don't need. That's not who we are. That's not what we're about. (Applause.)

Governor Romney and, frankly, his allies in Congress, they have banked on this idea that somehow in America everybody is on their own. If you get -- if you don't have health insurance, hope you don't get sick. If you can't afford to start a business or go to college, he says, borrow money from your parents. You know what, that's not who we are. That's not what we're about.

We believe in self-reliance, we believe in individual initiative -- but we also believe we're all in this together. We understand America is not just what can be done for us, but what can be done by us, together, as one nation, as one people -- (applause) -- black, white, Hispanic, Asian, Native American, gay, straight, abled, disabled, everybody coming together. That's what we're fighting for. That's our vision of America. (Applause.)

That's the vision we fought for in 2008. And because of you we were able to make amazing things happen. You're the reason there's a little girl with a heart disorder who needs surgery but now has the security of knowing she's going to get that surgery because there aren't any lifetime limits on her insurance coverage. You made that happen. (Applause.)

You're the reason a young man who'll never -- who thought he'd never be able to afford his dream to go to medical school now is going to have that chance. You made that possible. (Applause.)

You're the reason a young immigrant who grew up here and went to school here and pledged allegiance to our flag will no longer be deported from the only country she's ever called home. (Applause.)

You're the reason folks who served us so bravely are now embracing their family again and hearing those words: "Welcome home." Welcome home. Welcome home. That happened because of you. (Applause.)

So in 19 days, New Hampshire, you can keep moving this country forward. In 19 days, you get to choose between the top-down policies that got us into this mess, or the policies that are getting us out of this mess. In 19 days, you can choose a foreign policy that takes us into wars without a plan to get us out, or turning the page and ending wars responsibly, and bringing our troops home and focusing on building America. (Applause.)

In 19 days, you can choose to turn back the clock 50 years for immigrants, or gays, or women -- or you can stand up and say we are going to move forward -- (applause) -- that we're a country that will continue to be one that treats everybody with dignity and fairness; a country where no matter what you look like, or where you come from, or who you love, you can make it if you try. (Applause.)

That's what's at stake, New Hampshire. That's why I'm asking for your vote. I believe in you. I need you to keep believing in me.

I'm asking for your help to finish the job. And if you'll stand with me, and work with me, and knock on some doors for me, make some phone calls with me, if you'll vote for me in New Hampshire, we'll win New Hampshire again. (Applause.) We'll win this election. We'll finish what we started, and remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you, and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

October 23,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Delray Tennis Center
Delray Beach, Florida

10:27 A.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Florida! (Applause.) Are you fired up? (Applause.) Are you ready to go? (Applause.) I fired up right now! (Applause.) It is good to be in Florida.

Give it up for Congressman Ted Deutch, who's here. (Applause.) Your Mayor, Nelson McDuffie, is here. (Applause.) State Senator Maria Sachs. (Applause.) A great candidate for Congress, Lois Frankel. (Applause.) And my friend and your former governor, Charlie Crist, is here. (Applause.)

And I want everybody to give a huge round of applause to Scott for that introduction. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you. You guys really are fired up! (Applause.)

Now, I was mentioning Scott. Every time I need a pick-me-up I try to see Scott. (Laughter.) In addition to some outstanding pizza. And Scott and Charlie Crist, they remind us that the values we're fighting for, they're not Democratic values, they're not Republican values, they are American values. And that's what this election is all about. (Applause.)

Now, two weeks from today, Americans in all 50 states will step into the voting booth. But here in Florida, you get to start voting on Saturday. (Applause.) And as Scott just told you, if you need to know where to vote, you go to Vote.BarackObama.com. But I need you to vote because you've got a very big choice to make. It's not just a choice between two candidates or two parties. It is a choice between two very different visions for this country that we love. (Applause.)

Now, last night we had our third and last debate. (Applause.) And I hope that during the debate I made those differences very clear. (Applause.) Because the greatest responsibility I have as President is to keep the American people safe. That's why I ended the war in Iraq, so we could go after the terrorists who actually attacked us on 9/11. (Applause.) That's why we decimated al Qaeda's core leadership and brought Osama bin Laden the justice he deserved. (Applause.) That's why we're ending the war in Afghanistan, because after a decade of war, it's time to do some nation-building here at home. (Applause.)

In a world of new threats and profound challenges, America needs leadership that is strong and is steady. Governor Romney's foreign policy has been wrong and reckless. Last night he was all over the map. Did you notice that? During the debate he said he didn't want more troops in Iraq, but he was caught on video saying it was unthinkable not to leave 20,000 troops in Iraq, troops that would still be there today.

Last night he claimed to support my plan to end the war in Afghanistan. I'm glad he supports it. But he's opposed a timeline that would actually bring our troops home. Early in this campaign he said he'd do the opposite of whatever I did in Israel, but last night I reminded him that cooperation with Israel has never been stronger. (Applause.)

Last night he said he always supported taking out Osama bin Laden, but in 2007, he said it wasn't worth moving heaven and earth to catch one man.

Now, we've come up with a name for this condition. It's called Romnesia. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Romnesia! Romnesia! Romnesia!

THE PRESIDENT: We had a severe outbreak last night. (Applause.) It was at least stage three Romnesia. (Laughter and applause.) And I just want to go over with you some of the symptoms, Delray, because I want to make sure nobody in the surrounding area catches it. (Laughter.) If you say that you love American cars during a debate, but you wrote an article titled, "Let Detroit Go Bankrupt," you might have Romnesia. (Applause.)

If you talk about how much you love teachers during a debate -- (applause) -- but said just a few weeks ago that we shouldn't hire any more because they won't grow the economy, what do you have?

AUDIENCE: Romnesia!

THE PRESIDENT: I'll bet you've got some Romnesia. (Applause.) If you say you love Medicare -- and by the way, there's a theme here -- he keeps on loving stuff and then wants to end it or cut it or not help it. But if you say that you love Medicare, but your plan turns it into a voucher that ends the guaranteed benefit of Medicare, you definitely have Romnesia. (Laughter and applause.)

So, I mean, we're breaking down the symptoms here. If you've come down with a case of Romnesia, if you can't seem to remember the policies on your website, or the promises that you've been making over the six years that you've been running for President, if you can't even remember what you said last week -- (applause) -- don't worry, Obamacare covers preexisting conditions. (Applause.) We can fix you up. We can cure this disease. (Applause.) There's a cure!

Listen, let me just say this. In all seriousness, I mean, we're accustomed to seeing politicians change their positions from four years ago. We are not accustomed to seeing politicians change their position from four days ago. (Laughter.)

And we joke about Romnesia, but you know what -- this is actually something important -- this is about trust. There's no more serious issue in a presidential campaign than trust. (Applause.) The person who leads this country, you've got to have some confidence that he or she means what he or she says -- (applause) -- that if they tell you they're going to do something or that this is what they believe, that they're going to actually try to do it.

It doesn't mean that every candidate is going to get everything done all at once perfectly, but you want somebody to be able to look you in the eye and say, here's what I believe. Here's what I stand for. Here's what I'll fight for. (Applause.) Here's what I care about. Here's who I'm going to be looking out for in the debates in Washington.

But part of the reason I think this is hard for Governor Romney to do is his job plan doesn't really create jobs. His deficit plan doesn't reduce the deficit; it adds to it. His foreign policy is from the 1980s. His social policy is from the 1950s. His economic policies are from the 1920s. So everything he's doing right now is to hide his real positions and try to win this election.

He wants to just spend all his time and focus on telling people what he thinks is wrong with America. I mean, if you notice, in his debates, in his speeches, he is really excellent at listing all the things that are wrong. He can just go over it verbatim, just boom, boom, boom -- PowerPoint presentation. (Laughter.) But you know what -- that's not leadership you can trust.

And, Florida, you know me. (Applause.) You can trust that I say what I mean, and I mean what I say. (Applause.) And, yes, we've been through tough times. But you've never seen me quit.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: And there's no quit in America.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: So for over the last four years, we've been making real progress, fighting our way back from these policies that failed America. Our businesses have now added more than 5 million new jobs over the past two and a half years. (Applause.) Unemployment has fallen to its lowest level since I took office. Home values are rising. The stock market has nearly doubled. Our assembly lines are getting back to work. And our heroes are coming home. (Applause.)

I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families -- (applause) -- and I did, by $3,600. I promised to cut taxes for small business owners like Scott -- and we have, 18 times. (Applause.) I promised we would fix the financial situation that was broken when I came into office, but we got back every single dime, with interest, that we used to rescue the banks. (Applause.) We passed a law to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts for good.

We repealed "don't ask, don't tell" -- (applause) -- so that nobody is ever kicked out of the military because of who they love.

When the heartbeat of American manufacturing was flat-lining, we said thanks, Governor, I know you've got all this private sector experience, but your advice isn't going to work this time. And today, the American auto industry's engines are roaring at full throttle again. (Applause.)

I said that I would make sure that nobody in America goes bankrupt when they get sick -- and we delivered on that promise. (Applause.) I said I'd make college more affordable for our young people -- and we delivered on that promise. (Applause.) I do what I say. You've seen me. (Applause.)

We're not yet where we need to be, but we've made real progress. And now we need to build on that progress. And, Florida, that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.) That's why I'm running.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, in this campaign, I've laid out a plan for jobs and middle-class security. And unlike Mitt Romney, I'm actually proud to talk about what's in it -- (laughter) -- because my plan actually will move America forward. And, by the way, the math in my plan adds up. (Laughter.) If we've got any math teachers out there, you can go ahead and look in this plan -- (applause) -- and you'll see that the numbers work. I won't be running the okeydoke on you. (Laughter.)

If you want to take a look at it, you check it out at BarackObama.com/plans. Share it with your friends. Share it with your neighbors. Share it with your coworkers. Folks who are still not convinced, they can look right here and find out what it is I intend to do in a second term. There are still people out there who are trying to make up their minds. Some of you here may still be trying to make up your minds. Maybe you just thought --

AUDIENCE: No! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: No? Some people here might have thought it was a concert going on or something and wandered in by mistake. (Laughter.) Thought Scott was giving away free pizza. (Applause.) So for those of you who are still making up your minds -- or your friends, or your family -- I ask folks, compare my plan to Governor Romney's. See which plan is better for you and for America's future.

Now, let me just summarize it real quick. First, my plan builds on our manufacturing growth by ending tax breaks for companies that are shipping jobs overseas. I want to reward small businesses and manufacturers who are creating jobs right here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

Second, my plan will cut our oil imports in half by 2020 so we control more of our own energy here in America. (Applause.) And by the way, today we are less dependent on foreign oil than any time in 20 years. And one reason is because we increased fuel-efficiency standards on cars and trucks so that they will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. And we need to build on that progress -- not just by producing more oil and gas, but by investing in clean energy technology that's creating jobs here in Florida and all across America. (Applause.)

Number three --

AUDIENCE MEMBERS: We love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. But I got this plan I want to talk about, so -- (applause) -- I do.

Number three, my plan will make it a national mission to educate our kids and train our workers so that they can compete better than anybody in the world. I want to recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers over the next decade. (Applause.) I want to train 2 million workers at our community colleges with the skills that businesses are looking for right now. I want to work with colleges and universities to keep down the growth in tuition costs because I want every young person to be able to get the higher education that they're willing to work for. (Applause.)

Number four, my plan is going to cut the deficit by $4 trillion -- remember I said the numbers actually add up. (Laughter.) We're going to do it in a balanced way by cutting spending we don't need, but by also asking the wealthiest Americans to pay a little bit more -- (applause) -- so we can invest in research, invest in technology, those things that keep new jobs and businesses coming to America. (Applause.)

And I will not, in our pursuit of reducing the deficit, turn Medicare into a voucher because no American should spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies. That's not what Medicare is about. (Applause.)

And finally, my plan will use the savings from ending the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan to put our people back to work doing some nation-building here at home, repairing roads, fixing bridges, building schools all across America. And when our veterans come home, we will serve them as well as they've served us and make sure that they are out there getting the jobs that are going to help build America. (Applause.)

By the way, I just want to point out, in the same way that Governor Romney didn't mention the Afghan war or our troops in his convention speech, Governor Romney didn't even mention our veterans last night.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote.

He didn't say a word about it. Now, he may write off half the country as victims behind closed doors, but the men and women and their families who have served this country so bravely, they deserve better from somebody who's applying to be Commander-in-Chief. (Applause.) It is my greatest honor serving as their Commander-in-Chief, and I will fight for our troops and our veterans every single day. (Applause.)

So that's the plan we need, Florida. That's how you build a strong, sustainable economy that has good middle-class jobs to offer. That's how you make sure that you've got increased take-home pay. That's how you make sure that businesses are taking root all across Florida and all across America.

And now it's up to you to choose the path we take from here. Starting on Saturday, Florida, you can choose the top-down policies that got us into this mess, or you can choose the policies we're using to get us out of this mess. (Applause.) You can choose a foreign policy that's reckless and wrong, or you can choose one that is steady and strong. (Applause.) You can choose to turn back the clock 50 years for immigrants and gays and women or, in this election, you can decide we will remain an inclusive, generous country where no matter who you are, or what you look like, or where you come from, or who you love, you can make it if you try. You've got a place in the American family. That's what's at stake right now. (Applause.)

We can go back, or we can choose to move forward, to focus on the challenges and opportunities of the 21st century; to work together as one nation, as one people, to make it another American Century.

That's the kind of President I've been, Florida. That's the kind of President I intend to be. I'm asking for your vote. I'm asking for your help. I believe in you, and I'm asking you to believe in me. And if you stand with me, and work with me, and knock on some doors with me, and make some phone calls with me, if you do that, we will win Palm Beach County again. We'll win Florida again. (Applause.) We'll finish what we started. We will win this election. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you, and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

October 24,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Davenport, Iowa

10:01 A.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Iowa! (Applause.) Hello Quads! It's good to be back. This is about as close as I get to home these days, so it is good to be back. Are you fired up? (Applause.) Are you ready to go? (Applause.)

At the outset, let's give Cassandra a huge round of applause for her service to our country and a great introduction. (Applause.) We've got your congressman here, Dave Loebsack; your mayor, Bill Gluba. (Applause.) And we've got all of you, and I'm really excited to see you. (Applause.)

Now, this is the first stop on our 48-hour fly-around-campaign marathon extravaganza. (Applause.) We're going to pull an all-nighter. No sleep. We're starting here in Iowa, we're going to Colorado, then we're going to go to Nevada, then we're going to Florida, Virginia, Ohio. (Applause.) I am going to stop in Chicago to vote. (Applause.) We've got early vote in Illinois just like we've got early vote here in Iowa.

But I had to start in Iowa to ask you for your vote, to ask you for your support so we can finish what we started. (Applause.) Because this is where it all began 4 years ago -- on your front porches, in your backyards. This is where the movement for change began. And Iowa, you will once again choose the path that we take from here.

I know at this point -- because you guys have seen a lot of TV commercials -- you've heard Governor Romney's sales pitch.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: No, no, don't boo -- vote. (Applause.) He has been running around saying he's got a five-point plan for the economy. Let me tell you, it turns out it's only a one-point plan. (Laughter.) Folks at the very top get to play by a very different set of rules than you do. They can keep paying lower tax rates than you do, keep their money in off-shore accounts. They can buy up a company, load it up with debt, lay off the workers, strip away their pensions, send the jobs overseas -- and they still make a big profit while the middle class gets stuck with the bill.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. That was his philosophy in the private sector, that was his philosophy as governor, that's his philosophy now. It's not a very inspiring vision for our country.

So two weeks from the election -- because he knows that if he actually told everybody what he wants to do he probably wouldn't get any votes, so he's doing everything he can to make sure that you don't notice what he's been saying. And we've come up with a name for this condition -- it's called Romnesia. (Laughter.) Romnesia. I want to go over the symptoms with you, then, for it, because I don't want you to catch it. I don't want it to spread.

If you say you won't give a big tax cut to the wealthy, but you're caught on video promising your tax cut would include the top 1 percent, then you might have Romnesia. (Laughter.)

If you talk about how much you love teachers during a debate, but just a few weeks ago you said we shouldn't hire any more teachers because they won't grow the economy, you probably have Romnesia. (Laughter.)

If you sit on stage in a nationally televised debate saying how much you love cars -- you're a car guy -- except you wrote an article titled "Let Detroit Go Bankrupt," then you almost certainly have Romnesia.

If you can't seem to remember the policies on your own website, or the promises you made over the last six years that you've been running for President, or the promises you made six days ago, you probably have Romnesia -- but don't worry, Obamacare covers preexisting conditions. We can pick you up. There's a cure. We can make you well. (Applause.) As long as you vote, Iowa, we can cure folks of this malady, of this disease. (Applause.)

Listen, smart people who don't have a dog in this fight -- independent analysts, economists -- they took out their pencils, they had their green eyeshades, they crunched the numbers. Turns out Governor Romney's economic plan is a sketchy deal. The results are not what you'd want to write home about. The Washington Post calls his jobs plan a "bait and switch." The bait is the promise that his plan creates 12 million jobs; the switch is the fact that his plan doesn't create 12 million jobs. (Laughter.) That's the bait and the switch. In fact, it won't even create jobs right now.

And then Governor Romney wants to spend $5 trillion on tax cuts that favor the wealthy, $2 trillion on defense spending that our military isn't asking for, and he wants you to believe that he can do that without adding to the deficit or raising middle-class taxes. The problem is you'd need to invent a new kind of math to actually make this true.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Arithmetic!

THE PRESIDENT: The arithmetic does not work.

So we know Governor Romney's jobs plan doesn't create jobs. His deficit plan doesn't reduce the deficit. And we joke about Romnesia, but all of this speaks to something that's really important, and that is the issue of trust. There's no more serious issue on a presidential campaign than trust. Trust matters. (Applause.)

And here's the thing: Iowa, you know me. You know that I say what I mean, and I mean what I say. There are some folks in this crowd who have probably been following me since I was running for the United States Senate. (Applause.) And you know what? You can -- like this guy right here, who I served with in the United States Senate [sic], George Shadid. And you could take a videotape of things I said 10 years ago, 12 years ago, and you'd say, man, this is the same guy -- has the same values, cares about the same people, doesn't forget where he came from, knows who he's fighting for. (Applause.)

And you know what? I haven't finished all the work that we set out to do in 2008, but I have fought for you every single day that I've held this office. (Applause.) And with your help, I've kept the commitments that I've made.

I told you we'd end the war in Iraq -- we did. (Applause.) I said we'd begin the process of ending the war in Afghanistan -- we are. (Applause.) I said we'd refocus on the terrorists who actually attacked us on 9/11 -- and we have. And a new tower rises over the New York skyline, al Qaeda is on the path to defeat, and Osama bin Laden is dead. I kept that promise. (Applause.) I kept that promise.

I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families and small businesses -- and we've done that. I promised to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts for good -- and we have. (Applause.) I promised to repeal "don't ask, don't tell" -- and today you can't be kicked out of the military because of who you are or who you love. (Applause.)

I said I'd bet on American workers and American ingenuity, and while the other guy was saying "let Detroit go bankrupt," I went in there and worked with the workers and the management, and we've saved a dying auto industry that's back on top of the world. (Applause.)

On issue after issue, we are moving forward. After losing 9 million jobs in the Great Recession, our businesses have now added more than 5 million new jobs over the past two and a half years. Manufacturing is at its highest level since the '90s. Unemployment has fallen to its lowest level since I took office. Home values and home sales are rising. Our assembly lines are humming again. We've got a long way to go, Iowa, but we've come too far to turn back now. We can't afford to go back to what got us into this mess. We've got to stick with policies that are getting out of this mess. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of

America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, the good news is I've got a plan that will actually create jobs, that will actually reduce the deficit, that will actually create middle-class security. And unlike Mitt Romney, I'm proud to talk about what's actually in my plan -- (applause) -- because my math actually adds up.

If you want to take a look at it, check it out at barackobama.com/plans. I want you to share it with your friends, share it with your neighbors, share it with your co-workers. There are still people out there who may be trying to make up their minds. Maybe somebody here thought they were visiting the haunted house over there and just kind of wandered over, trying to figure out what's going on -- (laughter) -- and they haven't made up their mind yet. I want them to know.

I want everybody out there to compare my plans to Governor Romney's, have the information you need, see which plan is better for you and for America's future.

First of all, I want to end tax breaks for companies that are shipping jobs overseas. (Applause.) I want to reward small businesses and manufacturers who are creating jobs right here in the United States of America. That's what I want to do. (Applause.)

Second, I want to cut our oil imports in half by 2020 so we control more of our own energy. Some of you may know we are today less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in the last two decades because of the steps we've taken -- because we increased fuel standards on cars and trucks, so they're going to go twice as far on a gallon of gas; because we've been producing clean energy, including right here in Iowa.

Today, there are factories in Iowa where once laid-off workers are back on the job building wind towers, building wind blades. I want to build on that progress. I don't want fuel-efficient cars and long-lasting batteries and wind turbines manufactured in China -- I want them manufactured here in Iowa. I want them made in the United States of America, and we can do that. (Applause.)

Number three, we are going to make it a national mission to educate our kids and train our workers better than anybody else in the world. (Applause.) I want to recruit a hundred thousand new math and science teachers, train 2 million workers at community colleges with the skills that businesses are looking for right now. I want to work with colleges and universities to cut the growth of tuition so our young people can afford a higher education without getting loaded up with debt. (Applause.) We can do that.

Number four, my plan will cut the deficit by $4 trillion over the next 10 years, but we're going to do it in a balanced way. We're going to cut out spending we don't need, but we're also going to ask the wealthiest Americans to pay a little bit more. And we're going to do that so we can invest in research and technology that keeps new jobs and businesses coming to America. And I'll never turn Medicare into a voucher. (Applause.) No American should spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies.

And finally, I'm going to use the savings from ending the war in Iraq and ending the war in Afghanistan to put our people back to work right here at home, do some nation-building here repairing roads, bridges, schools all across America. (Applause.) And when our veterans like Cassandra come home, we're going to serve them as well as they've served us. We're going to make sure that they've got the support that they need -- (applause) -- because nobody who has fought for America should have to fight for a job when they come home. (Applause.)

So, Iowa, that's the plan that we need. That's how you build a strong, sustainable economy that creates good middle-class jobs; that makes sure that folks have the sense that not only are they doing well now but their future prospects are going to be bright. That's how you're going to encourage new businesses to start here and stay here. That's how you actually increase take-home pay -- not by talking about it and then wanting to cut taxes for folks at the very top. This is how you build an economy where everyone who works hard has a chance to get ahead. That's what America is about. That's the basic bargain that we believe in.

And now it's up to you, Iowa -- right here, right now, today. You've got a chance to choose the path that we're going to take from here. It's up to the young people who are here today to choose the future that you want to see. (Applause.) You can choose the top-down policies that got us into this mess, or you can choose the policies that are helping us to get out of this mess. You can choose a foreign policy that is reckless and wrong, or you can choose the kind of leadership that I've shown that's steady and strong and clear -- sends clear messages to our allies and to our enemies. You can choose to turn back the clock 50 years on women and immigrants and gays.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Or in this election, you can stand up for the kind of America that says, we embrace everybody. We believe in giving everybody a fair shot, and everybody doing their fair share, everybody playing by the same rules. It doesn't matter whether you're black or white or Hispanic or Asian or Native American; whether you're young or old, able, disabled, gay straight -- it doesn't matter. (Applause.) No matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter who you are -- you can make it here if you try. That's the America we believe in. (Applause.)

So listen, Iowa, we've been through tough times over these last four years, but we've been through tougher times before. The good news is we always bounce back. We always come out on top. Because the American people are tougher than any tough times because we pull together, because we look after one another, because we leave nobody behind, because we don't turn back, because we're always look at the horizon in front of us, because we're always moving forward -- and that's why I'm asking for your vote today. (Applause.) That's why I'm asking for your vote in this election.

And if you give me that vote, I promise you I will always listen to your voices, I will always fight for your families, I'll spend every waking day continuing to make sure that your lives are a little bit better. (Applause.) This is where it got started, Iowa. I believe in you, and I'm asking you to keep believing in me.

And if you'll roll up your sleeves, and if you'll work with me and knock on some doors with me and make some calls with me, we'll win Scott County again. We'll win Iowa again. We'll win this election again. And we'll finish what we started and remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you. And God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

October 25,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

The Carillon at Byrd Park
Richmond, Virginia

1:11 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Virginia! (Applause.) Are you fired up?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Are you ready to go?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: I'm sorry -- are you fired up?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Are you ready to go?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Let's begin by giving it up for your outstanding United States Senator, Mark Warner. (Applause.) And the man who's going to join him in the United States Senate, Tim Kaine. (Applause.) These guys are great friends of mine. They were great governors of this great commonwealth, and they will be an extraordinary team fighting for you in Washington. (Applause.)

You also have a great Congressman coming out of Virginia, Bobby Scott, in the house. (Applause.) Your Mayor, Dwight Jones, is here. (Applause.) And all of you are here. (Applause.) Can I just say this is a nice-looking crowd here. (Applause.)

Now, you may have noticed that my voice sounds just a little hoarse. (Laughter.) We are right in the middle of our 48-hour fly-around campaign extravaganza. (Applause.) We pulled an all-nighter last night. We just came from Florida. We were in Iowa and Colorado and Nevada before that. We're heading up to Ohio later today. And I'm going to stop in my hometown of Chicago to vote. (Applause.)

I can't tell you who I'm voting for because it's a secret ballot. (Laughter.) But the good news is Michelle said she voted for me. (Applause.) She did. And I've come to Virginia today to ask you for your vote just 12 days from now. (Applause.) I need your vote! (Applause.) I've come to ask for your help in keeping America moving forward. (Applause.)

You've now seen three debates, months of campaign events, and way too many TV commercials.

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: So you've heard what the argument is about here. You understand what the choice is. You've heard Governor Romney's sales pitch. He's been running around --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: No, no, don't boo -- vote! (Applause.)

He's been running around saying he's got a five-point plan for the economy -- turns out it's a one-point plan. (Laughter.) Folks at the very top get to play by a different set of rules than you do. They get to pay a lower tax rate. They get to outsource jobs. They want to roll back Wall Street reforms that we put in place to make sure we don't have taxpayer-funded bailouts.

That was his philosophy in the boardroom; that was his philosophy as governor. And if it sounds familiar, it's because that's exactly what we tried in the last decade, before I came into office. It led to falling incomes and record deficits and the slowest job growth in half a century, and the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression.

We have now been working for four years to clean up the mess those policies left behind. (Applause.) And now Governor Romney wants to take us back to those policies, but he knows that they're probably not very popular. He knows his plan isn't any different than the policies that got us into trouble. So in the final weeks of this election, he's counting on you forgetting. He's hoping that you come down with a case of what we call Romnesia. (Applause.)

He's hoping you won't remember that his economic plan is more likely to create jobs in China than it is in America -- because it actually rewards companies that ship jobs and profits overseas. He's hoping you won't remember that he wants to give millionaires and billionaires a $250,000 tax cut -- because the only way he can pay for that tax cut is by raising your taxes or blowing a hole in the deficit.

He's hoping that you'll come down with a severe case of -

AUDIENCE: Romnesia!

THE PRESIDENT: -- Romnesia before you cast your ballot. But, Richmond, I want you all to know this. This is a curable disease. If you feel any symptoms coming on, if you're starting to get a little woozy -- (laughter) -- your eyes are getting a little blurry, some ringing in your ears, if you can't remember what you said just a week ago -- (applause) -- if you can't remember the plans on your own website, and you're worried you might be coming down with a case of Romnesia, I want you to know -- Obamacare covers preexisting conditions. (Applause.) We can make you well. We can fix you up. All you've got to do is vote. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Richmond, I want to explain something. We joke about this, but this goes to a pretty serious issue, the most serious issue of any presidential contest, and that is the issue of trust. Trust matters. You want to know that whoever is in the Oval Office is going to fight for you. You want to know that they're not just going to take the politically expedient path, that they're guided by a compass in terms of how are we going to make sure the American people have a chance to succeed if they're working hard, and more importantly, that the next generation is going to have the kind of America we want them to have. (Applause.) And you know what, you know me.

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: You know I say what I mean, and I mean what I say. (Applause.) We haven't finished all the work we set out to do in 2008 just yet, but every single day I set foot in the Oval Office, you know I'm thinking about you. I'm fighting for your families. (Applause.) And with your help, we have met major commitments that I made four years ago.

I told you we'd end the war in Iraq -- we did. (Applause.) I said we'd end the war in Afghanistan -- we are. I said we'd refocus on the terrorists who actually attacked us on 9/11 -- al Qaeda is on the path to defeat and Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.) There's a new tower rising above the New York skyline. Our heroes are coming home. I've kept those promises. (Applause.)

I was proud and humbled to learn that we have Colin Powell's support in this campaign. (Applause.) I'm grateful to him for his lifetime of service to his country, both as a soldier and as a diplomat. And every brave American who wears this uniform of this country should know that as long as I'm your Commander-in-Chief, we will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. (Applause.) We will be relentless in pursuit of our enemies.

Those are promises I've kept. Four years ago, I promised to cut middle-class taxes for families and small businesses -- and we have. I promised not only to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts, but I said we'd get every dime of money that was used to rescue the financial system -- we have, with interest. (Applause.)

I promised we'd repeal "don't ask, don't tell."
(Applause.) Today, you can't be kicked out of our military because of who you love.

I said I'd make sure that Americans don't go bankrupt when they get sick -- and we passed Obamacare, and it was the right thing to do. (Applause.)

I promised that we'd get help to young people so they could afford college -- and we have. (Applause.) I bet on American workers and American ingenuity, and saved a dying auto industry that's back on top of the world. (Applause.) On issue after issue, we are moving forward.

After losing 9 million jobs in the Great Recession, our businesses have now added more than 5 million new jobs in the last two and a half years. The unemployment rate is falling. Manufacturing is coming back. Our assembly lines are humming. Housing prices are beginning to rise.

We've got a long way to go, Virginia, but we've come too far to come back now. (Applause.) We can't afford to go backwards to the same policies that got us into this mess; we've got to go forward with the policies that are getting us out of this mess. And that's why I'm running for a second term. And that's why I need your help. (Applause.)

I've got a plan that will actually create jobs, not just talk about creating jobs; a plan that will actually create middle-class security, not just use the words but not deliver on the promise. Unlike my opponent, I'm actually proud to talk about what's in my plan, because the arithmetic works. (Applause.)

If you want to take a careful look at it, go to BarackObama.com/plans. I want you to share it with your friends and your neighbors and your co-workers. There's still people out there who are undecided, trying to make up their minds. Maybe somebody in this crowd got dragged by your girlfriend or your boyfriend. Your grandma said you got to go to the Obama rally and you said, all right, grandma. (Laughter.) But you're not yet convinced. Take a look at this plan. Compare it to what Governor Romney's plans are. See which plan you think is better for you. I want you to have the information you need to make an educated choice about this issue, about America's future and your own. (Applause.)

The first thing in my plan -- I want to end tax breaks for companies that are shipping jobs overseas. I want to give those tax breaks to companies that are investing in Richmond, investing in Virginia, helping small businesses and manufacturers create jobs right here at home. That's a priority. (Applause.)

Number two, I want to cut our oil imports in half by 2020, so we control more of our own energy. (Applause.) Because of what we've done to increase oil production and natural gas production, to invest in clean coal technology, to make sure that we're also investing in the clean energy source of the future like wind and solar and biofuels -- (applause) -- we today are less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in the last two decades. (Applause.)

We passed regulations to make sure that fuel standards on cars and trucks are doubled, so that you'll go twice as far on a gallon of gas. And that will save you money. That's good for our national security. It's good for our environment. I want to build on that progress. I don't want the cars of the future, long-lasting batteries, wind turbines, solar panels -- I don't want them made in China. I want them made right here in Virginia. (Applause.) I want to put people back to work here in the United States. (Applause.) We can do that.

Number three, I want to make it a national mission to educate our young people, to train our workers. (Applause.) I want to recruit 100,000 math and science teachers. (Applause.) We've got to step it up when it comes to math and science and technology. I want to train 2 million workers in our outstanding community colleges so they've got the skills to get the jobs that are out there right now. (Applause.) And I want to work with colleges and universities to cut the growth of tuition in half. (Applause.) I want to make sure that young people are not burdened with debt when they're pursuing the education they need to compete. We can do that.

Number four, my plan will cut the deficit by $4 trillion over the next 10 years in a balanced way. Yes, we're going to cut spending we don't need -- we've already cut a trillion dollars. But I'm going to ask the wealthiest to pay a little bit more so we can invest in the research and technology that will keep new jobs and businesses coming to America. (Applause.) And in the process of making sure that we're reducing our deficit, I'm not going to turn Medicare into a voucher program. No American should spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies. (Applause.)

And you know what -- I think we've seen again this week -- I don't think any male politician should be making health care decisions for women. (Applause.) I don't think your boss or your insurance company should be making those decisions for you either. I believe women are capable and should make their own health care decisions for themselves. (Applause.)

That's why the health care law we passed puts those choices in your hands, where they belong. That's where they are to stay as long as I'm President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Finally, I'll use the savings from ending the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan to put our people back to work to do some nation-building here at home -- fixing our roads and our bridges, repairing our schools, laying out broadband lines into rural communities so they can compete in the global economy. And when our veterans come home, we are going to make sure we've got the resources to serve them as well as they've served us -- because nobody who fights for this country should have to fight for a job, or a roof over their heads, or the care they need when they come home. (Applause.)

This is the plan we need, Virginia. This is how you build a strong, sustainable economy. This is how you create good, middle-class jobs. This is how you encourage new businesses to start here and to stay here. This is how you increase take-home pay. This is how you build an economy where everybody who works hard has a chance to get ahead. That's what we can do together. (Applause.)

But it's up to you, Virginia. You're going to have to make a choice. It's up to the young people here to decide what kind of future you want for yourselves. It's up to the not-so-young people, like me -- and some of you -- (laughter) -- to make sure we make the right choice for future generations.

Sure, we can choose the top-down policies that got us into this mess -- but I think we have to choose the policies that are getting us out of this mess. (Applause.) You can choose a foreign policy that's wrong and reckless -- or you can choose one that's steady and strong. (Applause.)

You can choose to turn back the clock 50 years for women, and immigrants, and gays -- or in this election, you can stand up for that basic principle, enshrined in our founding documents, that we're all created equal. (Applause.) That everybody has a voice in America. That it doesn't matter who you are, or what you look like, or where you come from, or who you love -- (applause) -- black or white, Hispanic, Asian, Native American, young, old, rich, poor, gay, straight, abled or disabled -- (applause) -- it doesn't matter, you have a place in America. You can make it if you try. That's what's best in our country. That's what we're fighting for. (Applause.)

Virginia, we've been through some tough times, but we always bounce back -- because the American people are always tougher than any tough times. We always come out on top because we pull together, because we look after one another, because we don't leave people behind. We don't close the door behind us if we're successful -- we open it up a little wider so folks can walk through. We don't turn back. We look forward at that distant horizon, at the next destination. (Applause.) Our destiny is not written for us, it's written by us -- and we're going to write that next chapter together. (Applause.)

That's why I'm asking for your vote in this election. (Applause.) That's why I'm asking for your vote. And I promise you, if you give me four more years, you'll have a President who always hear your voice; a President who will always fight for you and your family; a President who spends every waking hour trying to make your lives just a little bit better. (Applause.)

Virginia, I believe in you. I'm asking you to keep believing in me. (Applause.) And if you're willing to roll up your sleeves with me, and work with me, knock on some doors with me, make some phone calls with me, we'll win Richmond. (Applause.) We'll win the Commonwealth of Virginia again. We'll win this election. (Applause.) We'll finish what we started. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. Thank you, Virginia. God bless America. (Applause.)

Release For Immediate August 9,
2012

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Colorado State Fairgrounds
Pueblo, Colorado

10:35 A.M. MDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Pueblo! (Applause.) Hello, Colorado! (Applause.) It's good to be back! (Applause.) It is good to be back. And thank you so much for being here. This is a good-looking crowd.

Can everybody please give Crystal a big round of applause for that great introduction. (Applause.) There are a couple other people I want to acknowledge. First of all, one of our campaign co-chairs, former Secretary of Transportation, former Secretary of Energy, former mayor, good friend -- please give a big round of applause to Federico Peña. (Applause.) And we've got one of the finest senators that the state of Colorado ever had, who is now doing a great job looking after the natural resources of this beautiful country of ours -- your own, Secretary of Interior Ken Salazar. (Applause.)

It is great to be with all of you. We spent the night here last night, and everybody has been so hospitable. And then, this morning, before we came here we stopped by Romero's for some green chili. (Applause.) I got to admit that we're saving some to take back to the White House. (Laughter and applause.) So I'm going to work with the White House chefs to see if we can figure out some of the secrets here. (Laughter.)

But, listen, unless you've been able to hide from your TV set or your cable is broke, you're probably aware right now that we've got a pretty intense campaign going on. (Applause.) And the reason it's so intense is because the choice that we face this November could not be bigger. It's not just a choice between two candidates. It's not just a choice between two parties. More than any election in recent memory, this is a choice between two fundamentally different paths for our country -- two fundamentally different visions of where this country needs to go.

And the direction that we choose -- the direction that you choose when you walk into that voting booth in November, it won't make a difference just in our lives; it will make a difference in our kids' lives and our grandkids' lives for decades to come. (Applause.)

Now remember that four years ago we came together as Democrats, but also independents and Republicans, to restore the basic bargain that built the greatest middle class and the most prosperous economy the world has ever known. And it's a bargain that says -- it's very simple -- it says, if you work hard, hard work should be rewarded. (Applause.) It's an idea that says if you put in the effort, if you take responsibility for yourself and your community, you should be able to find a job that pays the bills. (Applause.) You should be able to afford a home that you can call your own. You should be able to count on health care if you get sick. You should be able to retire with dignity and respect. And most importantly, you should be able to give your kids the kinds of education and opportunity that lets them dream even bigger than you dreamed and do even better than you did. (Applause.)

That idea is at the heart of America. That's the American promise. Now, we understood that restoring that promise wouldn't be easy. It would take more than one year or one term or even one President. After all, we had been coming off a decade in which the middle class had been getting hammered, jobs had been getting shipped overseas, wages and incomes were going down, the cost of everything from health care to groceries was going up. And it all culminated in the worst economic crisis of our lifetimes -- a crisis that robbed too many of our friends and neighbors of their jobs and their homes and their savings, and put the American Dream even further out of reach.

So we knew that we had a lot of work to do. And over the last three and a half years, we have focused on righting the ship, making sure that we didn't slip into a depression, saving an auto industry, creating 4.5 million new jobs, half a million new manufacturing jobs -- (applause) -- getting health care done, helping young people go to college. We have been working to get us moving forward.

And as tough as things have been -- and we know our job is not done yet -- what we've learned over these last three and a half years is that the crisis didn't change who we are. It hasn't changed our character. It hasn't changed what has made us great. It hasn't changed why we came together, what we believe in, why we feel such an urgency to get to work. Because we understand that we need to build an economy where hard work pays off, so that no matter who you are, what you look like, where you come from, what your last name is -- here in America, you can make it if you try. (Applause.) That's what this campaign is about, Colorado. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Now, look, there are no quick fixes. There are no easy solutions to the challenges we face. But I know in my bones that we have the capacity to meet those challenges. Think about what we've got going for us. We've still got the best workers in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best business people in the world. We've got the best scientists, the best researchers, the best colleges, the best universities. We are a young nation and we've got a diversity of talent and ingenuity that comes from every corner of the globe. (Applause.)

So when you hear people saying, America is in decline, or you hear folks for political reasons trying to paint things as dark as they can, let me tell you something -- there isn't a country on Earth that wouldn't trade places with the United States of America. (Applause.) What is standing in our way right now isn't the lack of technical solutions or good plans. What's standing in our way is the politics in Washington -- folks who think compromise is a dirty word, folks who think the only thing we can do to grow the economy is to go back to the same top-down economics that got us into this mess in the first place.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: And I promise you, that's their only idea -- to go back to the things that didn't work. Mr. Romney, his friends in Congress, they believe -- they've got two ideas. One, tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans. Two, they want to get rid of regulations that help keep our air and water clean -- regulations that protect our consumers, regulations that make sure that Wall Street doesn't do the same kinds of things that created the financial crisis.

And their idea is, is that if we give these big tax cuts to folks who don't need them and are doing really well, and we let corporations run roughshod, even if they're not doing the right thing, that somehow that's going to lead to jobs and prosperity for everybody. That's what they're proposing. That's what they will do if they win this election.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, Crystal mentioned this -- the centerpiece of Mr. Romney's entire economic plan is a new $5 trillion tax cut -- a lot of it is going to the wealthiest Americans. But last week, we found out he expects the middle class to pick up the tab to pay for it.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: So you've got a $5 trillion tax plan and to pay for it you raise taxes on middle-class families with children by an average of $2,000 -- not to reduce the deficit, not to grow jobs, not to invest in education, but just to give another $250,000 tax cut to people making more than $3 million a year.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, you know what, they have tried to sell us this trickle-down tax cut fairy dust before. It did not work. It did not work then. It is not going to work now. It is not a plan to create jobs. It is not a plan to cut the deficit. It's not a plan to move our economy forward. We do not need -- I do not need a tax cut. We don't need tax cuts for folks who are doing really, really, really well. We need to keep taxes low for working Americans like you. (Applause.)

We need to keep tax cuts in place for families who are trying to raise kids, and keep them healthy and send them to college, and keep a roof over their heads. And that's the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I promised that I would cut middle-class taxes. I kept that promise. (Applause.) And the average middle-class family, their taxes are about $3,600 lower than when I came into office. So if you talk to your friends and they say, oh, he's some big taxing Democrat, you tell them, actually, he's cut your taxes. Now I want to keep taxes exactly where they are on the first $250,000 of everybody's income. So if you're a family making under $250,000 -- which is 98 percent of American families -- you won't see your income taxes go up by one single dime. (Applause.)

Now, if you're fortunate enough to be in the other 2 percent, if you make more than $250,000 a year, you still get a tax cut on your first $250,000. But if you make $3 million, then we're going to go take the rest of it and tax that a little bit more at the rate we taxed it under Bill Clinton. (Applause.)

And listen, the reason we do that is not because we love taxes. I would end up having to pay more under my plan. And it's not like I love paying taxes, but I understand that I've got to do a little bit more. I've been so blessed. And it will help us bring down our deficit and invest in things like education that will help us grow as an economy. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, understand also -- we're going to make sure that government does its part. We've already cut a trillion dollars of spending that we didn't need, and we'll keep streamlining government to make it more effective. But we're just asking folks like me to go back to the rates we paid under Bill Clinton, and that was a time when the economy created nearly 23 million new jobs -- the biggest budget surplus in history. (Applause.)

And it actually was good for businesses and good for folks at the top, too. Because you know what happens? If a steel worker or a construction worker, they've got a job and they've got a little more money in their pockets, maybe they buy that new car. And that means that now that business has more profits, maybe they hire more workers. If a teacher or a receptionist has a little bit more money in their pockets, maybe they go over to another restaurant. Maybe they go to Romero's and they eat out. And now the restaurant hires a couple more workers -- everybody does better. That's how the economy grows best -- from the middle out, from the bottom up, not from the top down.

When all of us share in prosperity, we all do better. (Applause.) That's the choice in this election. That's why I'm running for President -- because I believe we're all in this together. (Applause.)

We've got a bunch of examples of the differences, the choice in this election. When the American auto industry was on the brink of collapse, more than 1 million jobs at stake, Governor Romney said, let's "let Detroit go bankrupt."

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: I said I believe in American workers, I believe in this American industry, and now the American auto industry has come roaring back and GM is number one again. (Applause.) So now I want to do the same thing with manufacturing jobs not just in the auto industry, but in every industry. I don't want those jobs taking root in places like China. I want them taking root in places like Pueblo. (Applause.)

Governor Romney brags about his private sector experience, but it was mostly investing in companies, some of which were called "pioneers" of outsourcing. I don't want to be a pioneer of outsourcing. I want to insource. I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas; let's give those tax breaks to companies that are investing here in the United States of America, making American products with American workers and selling them around the world. That's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

Here's another difference. At a moment when homegrown energy, renewable energy is creating new jobs in states like Colorado and Iowa, my opponent wants to end tax credits for wind energy producers.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Think about what that would mean for a community like Pueblo. The wind industry supports about 5,000 jobs across this state. Without those tax credits, 37,000 American jobs, including potentially hundreds of jobs right here, would be at risk. Colorado, it's time to stop spending billions in taxpayer subsidies on an oil industry that's already making a lot of profit -- (applause) -- and let's keep investing in new energy sources that have never been more promising. That's the choice in this election. That's why I'm running for President. (Applause.)

I'm running because in 2008 I promised to end the war in Iraq, and I ended it. (Applause.) I promised to go after al Qaeda and go after bin Laden, and we did it. (Applause.) We've set a timeline to end the war in Afghanistan, to make Afghans responsible for their own security. And we could not have done all this if it had not been for our outstanding men and women in uniform. (Applause.) Here in Pueblo, the Home of Heroes, you know what it means to care for our veterans. (Applause.) I want to thank you for everything you've done and are doing to look after our men and women who have worn the uniform. And I promise you that as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, this country will care for our veterans and serve them as well as they've served us. Nobody who has fought for our country should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. (Applause.)

So my plan will create a Veterans Job Corps, so we can put returning heroes back to work as cops and firefighters in communities that need them. And I want to take about half the money that we're no longer spending on war, and let's put people back to work -- do some nation-building right here at home. (Applause.) Let's renew our roads and our runways and our wireless networks. And let's work on our water infrastructure.

Here in the Southwest, water is the lifeblood of our communities. It was 50 years ago, this month, that President Kennedy came to Pueblo and he signed the Fry-Ark bill. Today, my administration is making sure, 50 years later, that you've got the resources to finish the job so that we are leaving your kids and your grandkids clean water, clean drinking water that is long overdue. That's the kind of investment in America that creates jobs now and makes life better for the future. That's what this election is about. That's the America we want to build. (Applause.)

Colorado, I'm running to make sure that we're once again the country that leads the world in education. (Applause.) I want to help our schools reward and hire the best teachers, especially in math and science. I want to give 2 million more Americans the chance to study at community colleges and get the skills they need for the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. (Applause.) I want to get colleges and universities to bring tuition down once and for all. (Applause.) Because in the 21st century, higher education is not a luxury, it's an economic necessity. And I want to make sure none of our young people who are willing to put in the effort are locked out of opportunity. (Applause.)

So the stakes are big in this election on every issue. On homeownership, my opponent says, let's just let foreclosures bottom out. That's his answer. What I've said is, let's let every homeowner refinance at historically low rates, save you $3,000 that you can then spend to restore equity in your home or help your kids go to college. (Applause.) That is good for the economy. It'll be good for the housing market.

Mr. Romney wants to reverse the Affordable Care Act -- Obamacare. Let me tell you something. Right now, 6.5 million young people can stay on their parent's plan because of the health care law I passed. (Applause.) Millions of seniors are seeing lower prescription drug costs. (Applause.) We are going to make sure that if you've got a preexisting condition, you can now get health insurance. (Applause.) We're not going backwards. We're not going to take that away. And we're certainly not going to follow Mr. Romney's lead and go back to the days when women didn't have control of their own health care choices. Women can make their own decisions. We don't need politicians doing it. (Applause.)

Mr. Romney thinks "don't ask, don't tell" was a good idea. I think anybody who loves this country should be able to serve this country. That was the right thing to do. (Applause.)

Mr. Romney believes in something called self-deportation, thinks Arizona is a model for immigration laws across the country.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: I think we did the right thing to say that a young person who comes to America -- is brought here, is raised here, is friends with our kids, is going to school with our kids, is American in every single way except for a piece of paper should have the chance to be a part of the American family. That was the right thing to do. (Applause.) We're going forward, not backwards. (Applause.)

On every single one of these issues, there is a choice. And it's about whether we go back to the failed policies of the past or whether we actually finally start once again working around that core idea that built this country -- the idea that if you work hard here you can make it. The idea that in America, everybody gets a fair shot and everybody does their fair share, and everybody plays by the same set of rules. (Applause.) The idea that in America, we rise or fall together, and government can't solve every problem and it shouldn't try, and it certainly can't help folks who are aren't willing to help themselves. But there are some things that we can do together as a people that makes us all better off, that makes our country strong, and that our economy works best when the middle class is growing and feels secure. (Applause.)

Now, I've got to tell you, we've got less than three months left in this election -- less than three months. Time is flying. And over the next three months, you will see more negative ads, more money spent than you've ever seen in your life. I mean, these super PACs, these guys are writing $10 million checks and giving them to Mr. Romney's supporters.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: And, basically, they all have just the same argument. They all say the same thing. They say the economy is bad and it's Obama's fault -- every ad is the same argument.

Now, let me tell you something. That may be a strategy to try to win an election, but they can't hide the fact that they don't have a plan to grow the economy. (Applause.) They don't have a plan to create more jobs. They don't have a plan to revive the middle class. I've got that plan. That's why I'm running. (Applause.)

So when you talk to your friends and your neighbors, some of them may think we'll be better off if we cut taxes for the wealthy and get rid of every regulation, set our sights lower and stop providing the kind of assistance we need to kids to go to college. And you've got to tell them, look, if you think that's going to work better -- that's how democracy works -- you should vote for those other folks. Feel free to try to send them to Washington.

But I believe -- and you believe -- we've come too far to turn back now. (Applause.) We've got too much more work to do. We've got too many good jobs we've got to create. We've got too many teachers we still need to hire. We've got too many schools we need to rebuild. We've got too many students we need to help go to college. We've got too much homegrown energy we need to generate right here in Colorado. (Applause.) We've got more troops we need to come home. We've got more doors of opportunity that we need to open for every young person here in Pueblo, here in Colorado, all across the country. (Applause.)

That's what's at stake right now. That's why I'm running for President. That's why I'm asking for your vote -- (applause) -- not just for me, but for the country that you believe in. You've got to be registered to vote. We've got folks here who are ready to help you do that. Here in Colorado, you can register online. You go to GottaRegister.com. But don't wait until the last minute. Grab some friends, get online -- let's get this done. (Applause.)

Back in 2008, I made a promise to you. I said, I'm not a perfect man and I won't be a perfect President. But what I did say is I'd always tell you what I thought, I'd always tell you where I stood, and most importantly, I would spend every waking minute fighting as hard as I knew how for you. (Applause.)

I have kept that promise, Colorado. I kept that promise because I believe in you. (Applause.) I believe in this country. And if you still believe in me and you're willing to stand with me, and knock on some doors with me, and make some phone calls with me and take your friends to the polls for me, I promise you we will win Colorado. We will win this election. We will finish what we started. And we will remind the world why the United States is the greatest nation on Earth.

Thank you very much, everybody. God bless you. God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

August 13,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Private Residence
Chicago, Illinois

August 12, 2012

8:22 P.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, everybody. (Applause.) It is good to be back home!

Let me, first of all, just say something about Barbara. I think so many of you know the incredible contributions she had made to the city. She was a leader in early childhood education. She has helped to reshape and redesign how we think about teaching our young people so that they get a great education. And she has just been an extraordinary friend to me and so many people all across this city and all across the country.

And her and Jim Bowman were folks who took me under their wing, and Michelle under their wing, when we were young and still trying to find our way. They have been great friends ever since. And I could not be prouder to be with her today -- especially since she let all of you tear up her backyard. (Laughter.) So please give Barbara Bowman a big round of applause. (Applause.)

I've got so many good friends here, so many familiar faces, people who were with me when I ran my first state senate campaign. (Applause.) That's when we were -- I had these little flyers we made at Kinko's. (Laughter.) We were very proud of them. The Internet didn't really exist at that point. You remember that? And we had to walk around knocking on doors and folks were -- "Barama?" (Laughter.) "Yo momma." (Laughter.) No, no -- it's Obama. (Laughter.)

So when I look at friends who were there and helped me get my start when raising $5,000 was a big deal. And you guys scratched and clawed and helped me get that first seat in the state Senate.

I know that a couple of friends of mine from my service in the state senate are here. First of all, former senate president, Emil Jones, is in the house somewhere -- (applause)

-- and was one of my strongest supporters. And the new senate president, who at the time we were just on the judiciary committee together -- and he was probably the smartest guy there, so it's not a surprise that he is now the state senate president -- John Cullerton is here. So give them a big round of applause. (Applause.)

Now, we have gone through as difficult and challenging four years as we've seen in not just a generation, but several generations. We had already seen a decade in which job growth had stagnated, jobs were being shipped overseas. The average wages and incomes of middle-class families had actually gone down when you take inflation into account, even though the costs of everything from health care to a college education were going up. All of it culminated in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression.

And so, we've spent the last three and a half years trying to get things back on track, trying to right the ship -- saving an auto industry that was on the brink of collapse, creating 4.5 million new jobs, half a million jobs in manufacturing, which is the highest rate that we've seen since the 1990s. Slowly, we've been trying to help the housing market recover.

But the fact is we've still got millions of people around the country who are struggling. We've still got folks who are out of work, folks who have lost their homes or their homes are underwater, young people who still are trying to figure out how they can afford college, or if they've gone to college, a

And what I try to remind people is that when we ran in 2008, our task was not simply to get back to where we were in 2007. Our job was to rebuild an economy where here in America, if you were willing to work hard and take responsibility for your own life, you could make it -- where you could find a job that pays a living wage so you could pay the bills and support a family, where you could have a home that you would call your own, that you weren't bankrupt when you got sick and you could retire with dignity and respect -- and most importantly, an economy in which you knew that you could get your kid a good education and your grandchild a good education, and that they could dream bigger and do better than you ever imagined.

That's what we've been fighting for. That's why we came together in 2008 -- not just Democrats, but independents and even some Republicans -- understanding that that basic bargain was at risk, the notion that here in America, everybody gets a fair shot and everybody does their fair share and everybody plays by the same set of rules. That's what we've been fighting for.

And that's why, in addition to dealing with that immediate aftermath of this economic crisis, we also said let's do something about health care, and let's make sure that everybody who is out there working hard and doing the right thing, that they're not going to go bankrupt because they get sick, that they're going to have health care they can count on. And we got that done. (Applause.)

That's why we set out to reform Wall Street, because we believe that we've got to have a dynamic, vibrant financial sector, but we want the financial sector to do what it's supposed to be doing, which is financing businesses and families and growing an economy, not just making reckless bets. And we got that done with Wall Street reform. (Applause.)

That's why we took on the student loan system and said that instead of having $60 billion going to banks as middlemen on the student loan programs, let's have that money go directly to students so that millions more young people could benefit from Pell grants and lower student loan rates -- because we've got to make sure that they've got those ladders of opportunity. And we got that done. (Applause.)

That's why we said we need to end the war in Iraq, because it was time to do some nation-building here at home and it would allow us to refocus our attention on going after al Qaeda and bin Laden. And we got that done. (Applause.)

So our goal has never been just to get back to the pre-crisis situation. Our goal has been to build an economy that lasts for the long haul, for our kids and for our grandkids. That work is not yet finished. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Now, we have as stark a choice in this election as we've seen in my lifetime. In some ways, it's starker than it was in 2008. The Republican nominee, Mr. Romney, and his new running mate, Congressman Ryan, their basic idea is that what's holding us back is not banks that take reckless risks, or insurance companies that are taking advantage of consumers, or the fact that we've still got a global economic crisis that we're digging our way out of. Their view is that if we give tax cuts to the wealthiest Americans and we get rid of all kinds of regulations -- regulations that help make sure that our air is clean and our water is clean, regulations that we've put in place to protect consumers from unscrupulous lenders, regulations that we've put in place to make sure that women are getting equal pay for equal work -- (applause) -- regulations to protect workers and consumers -- that somehow if we get rid of that stuff, then somehow the economy is going to thrive and prosperity will trickle down on everybody.

Now, the problem is we tried it for a decade and it did not work. They have tried to sell this top-down tax cut fairy dust before. (Laughter.) And it did not work. But that's their theory, and you see it most prominently in how they would tackle the debt and the deficit.

We've got a real problem with our debt and our deficit. It is a medium- and long-term problem. And what I've said is let's go forward with a balanced approach to reduce our deficit, getting rid of spending that we don't need but still making investments in education, still making investments in basic research, still making investments in rebuilding our roads and our bridges. Let's make sure that we still have a strong Medicare and Social Security system, and make sure that the most vulnerable among us are cared for.

But their idea is let's have another $5 trillion tax cut on top of the Bush tax cuts, even if it means gutting education investment, even if it means we're not rebuilding America, even if it means voucherizing our Medicare system, even if it means that we are weakening the safety net. And this $5 trillion tax cut is not to lower our deficit. It's not to help invest in America. This $5 trillion tax cut would be used basically to give folks like me or Mr. Romney an additional $100,000, $200,000, million dollars that we don't need and would probably be hard-pressed to spend. (Laughter.)

So what makes it worse is the analysis that's already been done by not my office, by independent economists and folks who evaluate tax plans for a living -- the only way to actually cut taxes $5 trillion more on top of the Bush tax cuts would be to ask middle-class families to pay an average of $2,000 more to play for my tax cut, or Mr. Romney's tax cut.

Now, that can't be a theory that is designed to promote an economy that lasts. That's not something that is going to help young people who are struggling to pay for college get to where they want to go. That's not the kind of approach that historically made America an economic powerhouse, made us the envy of the world.

I've got a different theory. I believe that we grow best not from the top down but from the middle out; that we grow best when we create ladders of opportunity so that everybody can succeed, no matter what they look like, no matter where they come from, no matter what their last name is.

And we've got evidence that my approach of deficit reduction -- a balanced approach of spending cuts and asking folks who can afford it to pay a little bit more and go back to the Clinton tax rates -- the last time we did this we created 23 million new jobs, went from deficit to surplus, and by the way, folks at the top did very well also. (Applause.)

What happens is when teachers and construction workers and receptionists and ordinary folks, when they've got a little extra money to spend, they spend it. (Laughter.) They maybe get rid of the old beater and buy a new car. They go out and buy a new appliance. Maybe they go to a restaurant. Heaven forbid they take a vacation once in a while. And that means businesses have more customers and they hire more workers. And we get a virtuous cycle.

That's how we have built our economy, historically. And that's an example of what is at stake in this election. That's the choice, and it couldn't be starker. This is not an election between two candidates or two parties. This is a choice between two fundamentally different visions about America and how we move forward. (Applause.)

Now, how we deal with our fiscal challenges, that's just one example. But across the board, there's a stark choice. I believe we should give tax breaks to companies that are investing here in the United States. (Applause.) Mr. Romney wants to continue to give tax breaks to companies that ship jobs overseas. I think that's the wrong way to go.

And when we saved the auto industry, Mr. Romney said let's "let Detroit go bankrupt." I said let's bet on American workers. And now the American auto industry has come roaring back. And I believe that manufacturing can come roaring back here in America if we make good choices.

Mr. Romney says, "my top priority -- the first thing I'll do is kill Obamacare." Well, let me say this. We've got 6.5 million young people already who have got health insurance on their parent's plan because of Obamacare. (Applause.) Seniors are paying lower prescription drug costs now because of Obamacare. Children with preexisting conditions can't be refused insurance because of Obamacare. (Applause.) And soon, all adults will be able to get health insurance even if they've got a preexisting condition, because of Obamacare. (Applause.)

We've got preventive care for everybody. Insurances can't drop you. And women are having more control over their health care choices. That was the right thing to do. We're not going backwards. We're going forward. (Applause.)

Mr. Romney, his plan for strengthening our housing market is just let the thing bottom out, let foreclosures bottom out. That's not a solution. What we've said is let's let families whose homes are underwater, let's let them refinance at historically low rates, and put an extra $3,000 in their pocket. And that can help them build up equity, strengthen the housing market, circulate in the economy. That's a choice in this election.

I said "don't ask, don't tell" was the wrong thing to do. And we ended "don't ask, don't tell." (Applause.) Mr. Romney disagrees. That's a choice in this election. (Applause.)

Mr. Romney says that it was a mistake to set a timetable to get our troops out of Afghanistan. I think after a decade of war, it's time to help Afghans take responsibility for security in their own nation. That's a choice in this election. (Applause.)

Helping the children of immigrants who have grown up in this country, lived in this country, are Americans in everything except having some papers -- not sending them to countries they, in many cases, they've never even been, but embracing them and giving an opportunity to put a stake down here in the country that they loved -- that was the right thing to do. Mr. Romney has got another idea. That's a choice in this election. (Applause.)

So on almost every issue -- whether it's clean energy where we've doubled fuel-efficiency standards on cars, doubled clean energy, created jobs around the country, we can create more -- Mr. Romney has got a different view. On student loans, Mr. Romney says kids, they should just borrow money from their parents -- not realizing perhaps that some kids might not have parents whom they can borrow money from. That's a different point of view. It is a different vision about how America should work.

And in all these choices, what's at stake is whether or not we're going to continue to be a country where everybody has got a shot -- where we're building a strong middle class, where the story of someone like me, raised by a single mom who can become the President of the United States, and a young girl who grew up just a couple of miles from here, down in South Shore, whose dad had a blue-collar and mom worked as a secretary, can end up as the First Lady of the United States -- I want to keep that story alive for America. (Applause.) I don't want that story to stop now. That's what's at stake in this election. (Applause.)

Now, this is going to be a close election. It's going to be close because there are a lot of folks still hurting out there and a lot of folks still feeling anxious. And as President of the United States, these things happen on my watch and I've got responsibilities, and the other side will spend more money than ever just trying to deliver the message over and over again that the economy is still not where it needs to be and it's Obama's fault. That's going to be their message. And they're spending more money than we've ever seen in our history, trying to deliver that message. It's not a plan to create jobs or revive the middle class, but it's a plan to win the election. And it oftentimes feeds into the fear people have, but also the cynicism that folks have.

But here's the good news. You guys taught me that no matter how bad we may be outspent, no matter how much we may sometimes be counted out, when the American people focus in on the values that we hold most dear, when we focus on what's best in us, when we remember the story of our own families -- our parents and our grandparents, great-grandparents, some who came here as immigrants, some who came here in chains, folks who went through hardships we can't even imagine but somehow said to themselves, you know what, I may just have a low-paying job right now but I can imagine if I work hard maybe my child will own a business some day; I may not be able to go to college, but I can imagine some day my child going to college -- that persistence and resilience and grit and hopefulness and optimism that says we are not bound by the circumstances of our birth, we can shape our own destiny -- when the American people focus on that, then amazing things happen.

That's what we saw in 2008 -- that spirit coming to the fore. And as tough as things have been, that spirit is still out there all across America. I see it every single day. We just have to make sure that we're fighting for it.

I used to say back in 2008 -- and I didn't have to tell you guys because a lot of you all have known me for a long time -- I'm not a perfect man, and I said I wouldn't be a perfect President. But I promised you that I'd always tell you what I thought, I'd always tell you where I stood, and I would wake up every single day thinking about you and fighting as hard as I knew how to make your lives a little bit better. Because in your stories, I saw my own. In your grandparents, I saw my grandparents, and in your kids, I saw Malia and Sasha. And I've kept that promise -- every single day I've been thinking about you. (Applause.)

And I still believe in you. (Applause.) And if you still believe in me, and are willing to fight with me -- (applause) -- and knock on doors with me, and make phone calls with me -- if you are as determined as I am to keep bringing about hope and keep bringing about change -- if you're ready to finish what we started in 2008, we will not lose this election. We will keep going forward. We won't go backwards. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

Thank you, everybody. God bless you. God bless America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Nelson Pioneer Farm & Museum
Oskaloosa, Iowa

11:33 A.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Iowa! (Applause.) It is good to be back in Oskaloosa. (Applause.) It is good to see all of you. If you've got a chair, please feel free to take a seat. I want everybody to feel relaxed out here. It's a beautiful summer day.

I've been talking to some kids; I guess school starts up in a couple of days, so they were looking a little depressed. (Laughter.) But it's okay. School is going to be great. I know you guys have had a great summer.

Before I start, I just want to acknowledge an outstanding member of Congress who is fighting every day on behalf of the people of his district -- Dave Loebsack is here. Give Dave a big round of applause. (Applause.) There he is. Thank you, Dave.

It has been great to be back in Iowa. Back in 2007-2008, I was on your farms and in your backyards and on your porches. And that's where our movement for change really began, right here in Iowa. (Applause.) And we spent a lot of time on bus tours like this one all across the state.

And it was good also to be back at the Iowa State Fair, although when I was just a candidate, they let me go on the bumper cars. (Laughter.) And I went up on the Big Bend -- you guys ever been on that, where they just shoot you up about 500 feet in the air? I was with Malia and I started screaming, and she looked at me, saying, come on, Dad, get it under control. (Laughter.) But it was terrifying. Anyway, Secret Service does not let me do that anymore. But I was still able to get a beer and a pork chop -- (applause) -- so I was pretty happy about that. I was pretty happy about that.

Here's the thing -- I'm back because our journey is not done. We're spending three days driving all the way across the state, just like we did in 2007 and 2008; we're going from Council Bluffs all the way to the Quads, Quad Cities, because once again you face a critical choice in November. In some ways, this is even more important an election than 2008, because this choice could not be bigger.

It's not just a choice between two candidates. It's not just a choice between two political parties. It is a choice between two fundamentally different visions of how America became great and how it's going to stay great, two fundamentally different visions of the path we need to take for the future of our kids and our grandkids. (Applause.)

And the direction that you choose when you walk into the voting booth in November, it's going to determine not our lives next year or five years from now. It's going to determine the future for decades to come for our kids and our grandchildren.

Four years ago when we came together -- and it wasn't just Democrats, by the way; we had independents and we had some Republicans. We came together because a lot of us realized that the core idea, the basic bargain that made this country, was under threat. And it's a basic bargain that says if you work hard in this country, you can get ahead; that if you take responsibility, than you can make it, and you can get into the middle class. You can feel a sense of security. That you can find a job that pays the bills and have a home you call your own. That you won't go bankrupt when you get sick. That you can retire with dignity and respect. And most importantly, that you can give your kids a great education and they can do even better and dream even bigger than you ever imagined. That's the American Promise. That's the American Dream. That's what we've been fighting for. (Applause.)

Now, we knew restoring that basic idea wouldn't be easy because we had just gone through a decade in which that bargain, that promise wasn't being kept. Jobs had gotten shipped overseas. People were working harder, but making less, while the cost of everything from health care to college was going up. We fought two wars on a credit card, adding enormously to our debt. And all this culminated then in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression.

And so, we knew this wasn't going to be easy. And when the crisis hit in 2008 and 2009, millions of people all across this country -- some of our friends and neighbors and family members -- lost their jobs, lost their homes, lost their savings. And that made the American Dream even a little bit further out of reach.

Now, I told you when I ran the first time that this was not going to be easy, restoring that bargain; that there weren't any quick fixes to our solutions. But what I also insisted, and what I still believe, is we've got everything we need to solve these challenges. (Applause.) We have everything we need right here in America to make the middle class strong again.

We've got the best workers in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best entrepreneurs in the world. (Applause.) Everybody knows we've got the best farms in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best scientists, the best researchers. We've got the best universities. We've got the best colleges. We are a young nation still, partly because we're still a magnet for talent from all around the world. We've got the greatest diversity of talent and ingenuity of any other country.

And so even though there are some people who like to talk about America in decline, or they try to paint things as dark as possible -- especially during election season -- there is no doubt in my mind that there's not another country on Earth that wouldn't gladly trade places with us. We've got everything we need to succeed. (Applause.)

And most of all, what we've got is the American character. I've seen it over the last three and a half years. I see it in folks who lose their jobs at the age of 50 or 55 and they go back to a community college, studying hard, sitting next to 20-year-olds, and retrain, and suddenly they go back and they get a job in a new industry. Or the small business owner who could barely keep their doors open but decided, you know what, I'm not going to take a salary, I'm not going to take any pay, because I want to make sure my workers are taken care of because they've got families to support.

All across America, it turns out Americans are tougher than any tough times. We are resilient, and we work hard, and we may get knocked down but we always get back up. That has been the character of America, and that character has not changed. (Applause.)

And it's because of that character that over the last three and a half years we've made some progress. We're not all the way back to where we need to be, but we've created four and a half million new jobs -- half a million new jobs in manufacturing. (Applause.) We have seen small businesses start to open back up. We've seen workers getting retrained and getting rehired. And so we've made progress.

But our goal in 2007-2008 wasn't just getting back to where we were before the crisis. Our goal was to make sure that we built an economy that lasts; where we built an economy where middle-class folks and folks aspiring to the middle class can succeed. That has been our goal. That's what we're still fighting for. We are not yet done, and that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America -- because we've got more work to do. (Applause.)

Now, I said we've got everything we need to solve our problems. The main impediment we've got, the main roadblock we've got is politics in Washington. (Applause.) You've got another party that thinks compromise is a dirty word, and that believes the only way we can move forward is to go back to the same top-down economics that got us into this mess in the first place.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Yes. You're right!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, you may have heard that Governor Romney just chose his running mate, Congressman Ryan.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: He's a good man, he's a family man. He's the ideological leader of the Republicans in Congress, and he's an articulate spokesperson for Governor Romney's views. The problem is those views are wrong. I fundamentally disagree with their vision for America. (Applause.) Their basic prescription for America is to get rid of more regulations on big banks and big corporations, give more tax breaks to the very wealthiest Americans, and their belief is somehow that prosperity then will trickle down on everybody else. That's their view.

Look, the centerpiece of Governor Romney's entire economic plan -- the centerpiece of it, his main idea -- his one big idea is to give another $5 trillion tax cut on top of the Bush tax cuts that he's keeping -- he wants to keep in place -- $5 trillion. To give you some sense of perspective, our entire defense budget is about half a trillion dollars a year. So this tax cut would be the equivalent of what we spend on the national defense every single year for the next 10 years -- $5 trillion. Last week we found out that he expects you to pay the tab. Governor Romney's tax plan would actually raise taxes on middle-class families with children by an average of $2,000 to pay for this big tax break that's going mostly to the wealthiest folks.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Understand, this is not asking you to pay more taxes to reduce our deficit or to help kids get an education or to rebuild some roads and bridges and ports around the country. This is asking you to pay more to give an average $250,000 tax break to folks making $3 million a year or more. That is his big idea.

Now, they have tried to sell this kind of trickle-down fairy dust before. (Laughter.) And frankly, they tried it as recently as 2001, 2002, 2003. And what did we get? The most sluggish job growth in generations, incomes and wages going down, jobs going overseas, and a huge economic crisis -- and, by the way, the deficits kept on going up so by the time I walked into office we had a trillion-dollar deficit.

Why would we want to try that again? I don't know about you, but my general rule is if I do something and it doesn't work, and then I do it again and it doesn't work again, I stop doing it. (Laughter.) I stop doing it. I try something else. (Applause.)

So they don't have a plan to cut the deficit. They don't have a plan to create jobs. They sure don't have a plan to revive the middle class. We don't need more tax cuts for folks like me -- folks who are doing fine. We need tax relief for working Americans. (Applause.)

So when I came into office, I had promised you that I would cut taxes for middle-class Americans. And guess what? I kept that promise. (Applause.) The Republicans like to call Democrats the big tax-and-spend folks, but it turns out that your tax rates are lower by about $3,600 for the typical family than they were when I came into office because I kept my promise. (Applause.)

So now what I want to do is to keep your income tax rates exactly where they are. I don't want your taxes going up for the first $250,000 of income that you make -- which, by the way, covers about 98 percent of all Americans and 97 percent of all small businesses. Your taxes -- your income taxes would not go up one single dime next year if Congress does what I've asked them to do. (Applause.)

What I have said is, for those who are fortunate enough to be in the other 2 percent, you'd still get a tax cut for the first $250,000 you make, but after that we're asking you to pay a little bit more to help pay down the deficit, and help to invest in making college affordable for young people, and making sure that we've got teachers on the job, and making sure that we're investing in science to help cure cancer and Alzheimer's. (Applause.) That's how our economy can grow. That's how our economy will grow.

We're going to make sure government does its part. A lot of people don't realize we've already cut a trillion dollars of government spending to lower our deficit -- a trillion dollars. And we can do more. I think government has to make sure that it's good stewards for your taxpayer dollars, that it's not being wasted -- and there's still more waste that we can get out of there. But we can't close the deficit and invest in our future just by cutting taxes for the wealthiest Americans, cutting education, cutting the things that help us grow. And by the way, the proposal that I'm putting forward that says folks like me and Governor Romney have to pay a little bit more -- we actually have tried that, too. We tried it under Bill Clinton, when we created 23 million new jobs, the biggest budget surplus in history. (Applause.)

And guess what -- folks at the top, they did good, too. And the reason is, when you give a family farmer, or you give a construction worker, or you give a receptionist, or you give a nurse or a teacher a little bit more money in their pockets, what do they do?

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Spend it.

THE PRESIDENT: They spend it. Maybe they can finally trade in that 10-year-old car and get a new car. Maybe they get a new appliance because the dishwasher or the washing machine is broken. Maybe they buy a new computer for their kids who are about to go to college. Maybe they go to a restaurant or, heaven forbid, take a vacation once in a while.

And what that means is then businesses have more customers, and businesses hire more workers, and everybody does better. You get what's called a virtuous cycle of everybody feeling more confident about the economy because everybody has got a stake in the economy.

See, I don't believe in an economy from the top down; I believe that the economy grows from the middle class out and from the bottom up. (Applause.) And when everybody is doing well and everybody has got a fair shot, everybody ends up doing better. That's how we grow this economy. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

So there are differences in this election on almost every issue. When the automakers were on the brink of collapse, Governor Romney said "let Detroit go bankrupt." I said, let's bet on American workers. (Applause.) And three and a half years later, the auto industry has come roaring back.

So now, I want to make sure that American manufacturing, advanced hi-tech manufacturing, is taking root right here in America -- not in China, not in Germany -- right here in Iowa, right here in Oskaloosa, right here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Oskaloosa!

THE PRESIDENT: You know, Governor Romney, he likes to brag about his private sector experience. His main private sector experience -- he did make a lot of money -- was investing in companies, some of which were called "pioneers" of outsourcing. I don't want a pioneer of outsourcing. I want somebody who is fighting for insourcing. I want to bring business back to America. (Applause.)

I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Let's give them to companies that are investing right here in Iowa and right here in the United States of America, hiring American workers, making American products that we're selling around the world stamped with three proud words: Made in America. That's what I believe in. That's why I'm running. (Applause.)

Let me give you another example. We're at a moment right now when homegrown energy, like wind energy, is creating new jobs all across Iowa and all across the country. And guess what, Governor Romney said let's end the tax credits for wind energy production. Let's get rid of them.

He said that new sources of energy like wind are "imaginary". His running mate calls them a "fad." During a speech a few months ago, Governor Romney even explained his energy policy this way -- I'm quoting here -- "You can't drive a car with a windmill on it." (Laughter.) That's what he said about wind power. "You can't drive a car with a windmill on it." Now, I don't know if he has actually tried that. I know he has had other things on his car. (Laughter and applause.)

But if he wants to learn something about wind, all he has got to do is pay attention to what you've been doing here in Iowa. (Applause.) If he saw what you've been doing, he'd see that there are places like Newton, where a few years ago the Maytag plant closed down, jobs dried up. Folks are now back to work manufacturing these enormous new towers and blades for some of the most sophisticated, high-tech wind turbines on the planet. The wind industry now supports 7,000 jobs here in Iowa -- 75,000 jobs across the country. (Applause.) These jobs aren't a "fad". These are good jobs, and they're a source of pride that we need to fight for.

And if Governor Romney understood what you've been doing, he'd know that we used to have to import most of the parts were used for wind turbines -- they're now being made here in America, by American workers in American factories. That's not "imaginary" -- that's real. (Applause.) That's part of what we're fighting for in this election.

If he knew what you've been doing, he'd know that 20 percent of Iowa's electricity now comes from wind, powering our homes and our factories and our businesses in a way that is clean and renewable. In fact, over the past 4 years, we've doubled the amount of electricity America generates for wind. Across America, we've built the equivalent of 12 new Hoover Dams' worth of wind energy. Think about that. Think about that. (Applause.)

So Governor Romney may have figured out that you can't drive a car with a windmill on it, but he doesn't seem to know that America now has enough wind turbines installed to generate enough electricity from wind to power nearly 13 million homes with clean energy. That's how we leave something better for the next generation. That's worth fighting for. That's what's at stake right now. (Applause.)

So I want to stop giving $4 billion in taxpayer subsidies that are going to oil companies that are making huge profits and have been subsidized for a hundred years, and let's keep on investing in the new homegrown energy that's creating jobs right here in Iowa. That's a difference in this election. That's why I'm running for President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

We've got a whole lot of differences between me and Governor Romney.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: You're better! You are better! You are better!

THE PRESIDENT: You know, I've got to say I agree with that. (Laughter.) My ideas are, at least.

Look, in 2008, I said we'd end the war in Iraq -- we did. (Applause.) We said that we'd go after al Qaeda and bin Laden -- we did. (Applause.) We are now bringing troops home from Afghanistan. (Applause.) America is safer and more secure than when I came into office, because of the extraordinary sacrifices of our men and women in uniform. (Applause.)

That's why we've invested so much in making sure that the

VA is doing its job, making sure that our veterans get the benefits that they have earned. Because they shouldn't have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads after they've fought for us. We've got to serve them as well as they've served us. (Applause.)

But as they're now coming home, I want to take about half the money that we're saving after a decade of war and let's help put veterans and Americans back to work rebuilding America, doing some nation-building here at home. (Applause.) Let's rebuild our ports and our roads and our bridges and our airports. We can put folks back to work right now. It's good for the economy now. It will be good for the economy 10 years from now and 20 years from now.

I want to set up a Veterans Jobs Corps that helps local communities hire veterans for firefighters and cops in communities that need them most. (Applause.) Those are smart investments in the future. Governor Romney may have a different idea. I want to put folks back to work rebuilding America. And now is the time to do it.

His other idea is, let's get rid of Obamacare; he says, I'm going to "kill it." Well, let me tell you something, it's true I do care. So I don't mind folks calling it Obamacare. (Applause.) And what I've said is that in a country as rich as ours, we should not see anybody going bankrupt when they get sick. (Applause.)

The Supreme Court has now spoken. We are moving forward with this law. Six and a half million young people can now stay on their parent's plan. (Applause.) Insurance companies can't deny you coverage because of a preexisting condition. (Applause.) Insurance companies can't drop your coverage when you need it the most. (Applause.) For a lot of rural communities, a lot of farmers, it's hard buying health insurance on your own -- you're now going to be able to pool with other folks so you can get discounted rates just like people who work for big companies. That will help a lot of communities all across Iowa. (Applause.)

So we're not going to go backwards and refight the same fights we had over the last three years. We're going forward. We're not going backwards. We don't need to have those same arguments in Washington. What we need to do is go ahead and implement this law, and make sure it works. And if anybody has got good ideas to help further lower health care costs, I'm happy to work with them. But we're not going backwards. We're going forwards. That's what America needs right now. (Applause.)

I'm running to make sure that we've got the best education system in the world. I want to help local communities hire the best teachers -- especially in math and science -- give 2 million more slots available in community colleges so people can get trained for the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. And I want to make college more affordable for every single young person in America. (Applause.) We've already done a lot of work making sure that they're getting help, but I'm also going to work with the colleges and universities to lower tuition once and for all. Because a higher education is not a luxury in this economy, it is an economic necessity and I want to make sure opportunities are open for everybody, not just for the few. (Applause.)

All these issues -- bringing manufacturing back, helping young people go to school, giving you more health care security -- all these issues tie together. It goes back to what made this country great. And when I think about my own life, when I think about Michelle's life -- we didn't come from wealth. We didn't come from fame. But we were lucky enough to be born in a country where here, everybody gets a fair shot, everybody does their fair share, everybody plays by the same set of rules -- no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter what your last name is, you can make it here if you try. That's the story of America. That's your story.

Your parents, your grandparents, your great-grandparents - they went through struggles. They went through hardship. Nothing was given to them. But they did live in a country where you had a shot. And we now have an obligation to pass that on to the next generation. That's what we have to fight for.

And over the next three months, you're going to see more TV advertising than you've ever seen in your life. And these folks are spending more money -- they've got people writing $10 million checks. And almost all the ads are the same; they basically say, the economy is not where it needs to be and it's Obama's fault. They just kind of repeat that over and over and over again.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: And it's not!

THE PRESIDENT: Well, you know what, let me tell you something. That may be a plan to win an election, but it's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to make our future better. It's not a plan to revive the middle class. They don't have that plan. I do have that plan. (Applause.)

But I'm going to need your help. I'm going to need everybody here registering to vote. I'm going to need you to get your friends and neighbors to register to vote. You can get forms online. You can go to gottaregister.com -- that's gotta, g-o-t-t-a. (Laughter.)

But what I learned from you here in Iowa in 2008 is other folks may outspend me, folks may write me off, but when you've got ordinary folks pulling together, cutting through the nonsense and focuses on what's important -- when you guys get involved -- you can't be stopped. Nothing can stop you. (Applause.)

You will decide the future of this country. And I'm asking for your help. Because we've got more schools to build, we've got more teachers to hire. We've got more troops who have got to come home. We've got more manufacturing plants that we've got to build. We've got more Americans we need to put back to work, and we've got more doors of opportunity that we have to open for all Americans.

And if you're willing to stand with me and work with me and make phone calls with me and knock on some doors with me, then we can finish what we started in 2008. (Applause.) We can make this middle class strong again. We can make sure that the future is bright for our kids again. And we can remind the world just why it is the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth

God bless you, and God bless the United States of America. Thank you. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

RiverLoop Amphitheatre
Waterloo Center for the Arts
Waterloo, Iowa

8:05 P.M. CDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Waterloo! (Applause.) What a beautiful evening here in Iowa! (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.) This is spectacular! It feels good to be back. (Applause.)

A couple of acknowledgments I want to make -- first of all, Mike is a pretty humble guy, but this is the Iowa Firefighter of the Year. Give him a big round of applause for that great introduction. (Applause.) We are proud of him, and every single firefighter that puts their life at risk for us. We are grateful to them.

A couple other outstanding folks here -- you've got your own Attorney General, Tom Miller, in the house. (Applause.) Congressman Bruce Braley is here. (Applause.) And Mayor Buck Clark is here. (Applause.) And all of you are here. (Applause.)

Now, listen, if you've got a seat, feel free to sit down, because I've got some things to say. I've got some things to say. First of all, it is good to be back. Some of you may remember that one of my first stops after I announced for the presidency was right here in Waterloo. (Applause.) Back -- way back when in 2007. I had no gray hair. (Laughter.) Maybe I had a little bit, but you couldn't see it. (Laughter.) Now you can see it.

But the reason that's important, it's worth reminding people, is because it was on your front, it was in your backyards, where our movement for change began. We spent a lot of time on bus tours like the one I'm taking right now -- although the bus wasn't as nice as it is now. (Laughter.) And we went to school gyms and family farms and small businesses across the state. And so it was pretty good being back here -- yesterday I went to the State Fair and I had a pork chop and a beer. (Applause.) And it was good. (Laughter.) Today I just had a beer. (Laughter.) I didn't get the pork chop. But the beer was good, too.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I'll fry you a pork chop!

THE PRESIDENT: You say you'll fry me a pork chop, huh? (Laughter.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Four more beers?

THE PRESIDENT: Somebody just said -- it's true, at the State Fair, instead of saying "four more years," they were saying, "four more beers." (Laughter.) So I bought him four more beers. (Laughter.) Told him he had to register to vote, though, to get one of the beers. (Laughter.)

Now, here's the thing. The reason I'm back -- other than I just love being in Iowa -- (applause) -- the reason I'm back is because that journey we started in 2008, we're not finished yet. (Applause.) So just like we did in 2007, we started over in Council Bluffs, and we are driving all the way to the Quads. And we want to make sure that everybody understands the choice that you face in November.

And this choice could not be bigger, because it's not just a choice between two candidates; it's not just a choice between two parties. More than any recent election, more than 2008, this is a choice between two fundamentally different visions of where we need to go as a country.

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: And the direction that you choose when you walk into that voting booth in November, that's going to have an impact not just on your lives, it will have an impact on your children and your grandchildren for decades to come.

Now, remember why we came together in 2008. And it was Democrats and independents, but it was also some Republicans. It was because we saw that the basic bargain that built this country, that created the most prosperous economy the world has ever known, that basic bargain wasn't being met. And let me tell you what that bargain is. It says that if you work hard, your work should be rewarded. (Applause.) It says that if you act responsibly and you put in enough effort, you can find a job that pays the bills. (Applause.) You can have a home that you call your own. You won't go broke just because somebody in your family gets sick. You can retire with dignity and respect. (Applause.) And most importantly, you can give your kids a great education so they can dream even bigger and do even better than you did. (Applause.)

That is the American promise. That is what made this country great. But the problem was, for a decade we had seen that bargain wasn't being met. The promise wasn't being kept. So we had seen a decade in which jobs were being shipped overseas, and wages and incomes for working people were going down -- even though folks at the very top were doing very well -- and the costs of everything from health care to college were going up. We ran two wars on a credit card. We went from surplus to deficit. So when I walked into office we already had a $1 trillion deficit. And it all culminated in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression.

That's the track record of the other party the last time they were in charge. And we knew that restoring the bargain that made this country great would not be easy. It was going to take more than one year, or one term, or even more than one President, but we knew we had to get started. And obviously it became that much harder when the middle class was hammered by this crisis, because a lot of folks lost jobs, lost homes, lost savings, and that American Dream seemed even further out of reach.

But I told you there wouldn't be any quick fixes, there wouldn't be any easy solutions, but what I also promised you -- and I absolutely believe this -- is we've got everything we need to meet our challenges. (Applause.) Waterloo, we've still got the best workers in the world. (Applause.) And the best entrepreneurs in the world. We've got the best scientists, and the best researchers in the world. We've got the best farmers in the world. We've got the best colleges and universities in the world. (Applause.) We are still a young nation, full of promise, and we've got the greatest diversity of talent and ingenuity from every corner of the globe.

So no matter what the naysayers say, no matter how dark they try to paint things when they're running against me in an election, there is not another country on Earth that wouldn't trade places with the United States of America. (Applause.) Because people around the world still believe that America is the place where, if you work hard, no matter who you are, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, you can still make it. (Applause.)

That's the idea that we are running to rebuild. That is the campaign. That is what my presidency is about. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, Waterloo, there is one thing standing in our way, though. It is strange politics in Washington. You've got a party that says "compromise" is a dirty word. Folks who want to go back to the same top-down economics that got us into this mess in the first place.

You may have heard my opponent chose as his running mate Congressman Ryan this weekend and --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: No, no, no, listen, I know Congressman Ryan. He is a decent man. He is a family man. He is the ideological leader of the Republicans in Congress. And he's an articulate spokesperson for Governor Romney's vision. The problem his vision is wrong. (Applause.) See, my opponent, Governor Romney, and his friends in Congress, they believe -- this is their whole platform, this is their basic plan, as much detail as you get, this is what you get. Their plan to grow the economy is to eliminate regulations, including on big banks and insurance companies -- some of the regulations we put in place to make sure, for example, that we don't have another taxpayer-funded bailout, so he wants to get rid of regulations, and then what he wants to do is give more tax breaks to the wealthiest Americans. And the idea, then, is that jobs and prosperity will trickle down on everybody. That's the centerpiece of his plan. You can go on his website.

His economic plan is a new $5 trillion tax cut, a lot of it going to the wealthiest Americans. Now, keep in mind, these are the same folks who say the deficit is our biggest problem, but they want to pass a new $5 trillion tax cut -- $5 trillion, that's with a "t" -- (laughter.) So just to give you some perspective, our annual defense budget, everything we spend on national security, is just a little over $500 billion. So this would be, every year for 10 years, a tax cut as big as our defense spending.

And here's the kicker, though -- he says he's going to pay for it. So people asked, well, how are you going to pay for it? It turns out that he expects you to pay for it.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: He expects middle-class families to pick up the tab. Governor Romney's plan, according to independent analysts, would actually raise taxes on middle-class families with children by an average of $2,000.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, keep in mind this is not $2,000 to reduce the deficit, or create jobs, or build new schools, or help kids go to college, or send a man to the moon. This is $2,000 each that you'd have to pay to give another $250,000 tax cut to folks who are making $3 million a year or more.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: That's crazy! (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: Now, I'm not making this stuff up. You can look on their website.

Now, here's the thing -- we've tried this before. We tried this trickle-down fairy dust before. And guess what -- it didn't work then, it won't work now. It's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to lower the deficit. It's not a plan to move our economy forward. It's not a plan to revive the middle class.

We do not need more tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans. We need to give tax relief to working families who are trying to raise their kids, keep them healthy, send them to college, keep a roof over their heads. That's the choice in this election. That's one of the reasons I'm running for a second term as President. (Applause.)

So, Waterloo, I've got a different idea. Four years ago,

I came into office -- I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families. That's exactly what I've done -- by a total of about $3,600 for the typical family. So if you talk to somebody who is feeling not convinced and undecided in the election, you tell them your taxes are lower -- your federal taxes are lower now than when I came into office. (Applause.)

Now, what I want to do is I want to keep everybody's taxes right there where they are for the first $250,000 of everybody's income. (Applause.) So if your family makes under $250,000 -- like 98 percent of families do, and 97 percent of small businesses do -- then you won't see your income taxes go up by a single dime next year. Not one dime. (Applause.)

But if you're fortunate enough to be in the other 2 percent -- like I am -- you'll still get a tax break on your first $250,000. But for the amount that you make over that, we're asking you to contribute a little bit more so we can pay down our deficit without gutting education, without getting rid of transportation projects, without gutting all the things that help make America grow.

Now, government -- I'll make sure government still does its part to reduce our debt and our deficits. We've cut out already a trillion dollars' worth of spending we don't need. And we can do more. I want to make government efficient. We've got to make sure that your tax dollars are being well spent. But we can't bring down our deficit and our debt just by asking us to get rid of the things that help open up opportunity to Americans. (Applause.)

So instead, we're asking folks like me to go back to the rates we paid under Bill Clinton -- which, by the way, was a time when we created 23 million new jobs, went from deficit to surplus, and we created a whole lot of millionaires to boot. (Applause.)

See, Waterloo, this comes down to your basic philosophy, but also, when you look at the evidence of our economic history -- when teachers and nurses and firefighters and receptionists and construction workers, when you've got a little more money in your pocket, what do you do? You spend it. Because times are tight, right? So if you've got a little extra money, now maybe you finally trade in that 10-year-old car you've been driving. Maybe you buy a computer for your kid who is about to go to college. So suddenly businesses have more customers, which means they're making more profits, which means they're hiring more workers, who then spend more money, and suddenly the economy gets better for everybody -- including folks at the top.

I don't believe in top-down economics. I believe in middle-class-out economics. I believe in bottom-up economics. I believe in making sure everybody has got a fair shot. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: But you know what? That's not the only difference between me and Mr. Romney. When the auto industry was on the brink of collapse -- you remember that -- more than a million jobs at stake, Governor Romney said, let's "let Detroit go bankrupt." I said, let's bet on American workers. (Applause.) And management and workers got together in a great, iconic American industry, and you know what? Three years later, the American auto industry is roaring back. (Applause.)

I want to see high-tech, advanced manufacturing come back all across America in other industries. I don't want those jobs in China or Germany. I want them here in Iowa. (Applause.) Governor Romney says, well, no, look, I understand the economy because I've been in the private sector. Well, a lot of that experience was investing in companies, including those that were called "pioneers" in the business of outsourcing. He wants to keep giving tax breaks to companies that ship jobs overseas. I want to end those tax breaks once and for all and start rewarding companies that are investing right here in the United States of America, hiring American workers, making American products. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

That's not the only difference. Right now, we're seeing homegrown energy, new sources of energy creating jobs right here in Iowa. So what does Governor Romney want to do? He wants to end the tax credit for wind energy producers. He said these new sources of energy are "imaginary." Congressman Ryan, his running mate, calls them a "fad." During a speech a few months ago, Governor Romney even explained his energy policy. This is what he said -- he said, "You can't drive a car with a windmill on it." (Laughter.) That's what he said about wind power -- you can't drive a car with a windmill on it. (Laughter.) I mean, maybe he's tried it; he's put other things on the roof. (Laughter and applause.)

But if he really wants to learn something about wind energy, he should come to Iowa. (Applause.) Then he'd know that 7,000 Iowa jobs depend on the wind industry -- more than any other state in America. (Applause.) These jobs aren't a "fad." They're our future. He'd know that the parts for making these high-tech wind turbines, they're now made in Iowa. They're made in America. That's not "imaginary." (Applause.) I've been to the places in Newton, Iowa where some of this stuff is being made. (Applause.)

I understand he may not have figured out how to drive a car with a windmill on it, but if he came to Iowa, he'd know that 20 percent of Iowa's electricity now comes from wind energy. America has doubled the amount of electricity we get from wind over the last four years, enough power for nearly 13 million homes -- clean, renewable energy. That's something you leave behind for the next generation. That is worth fighting for. There are 37,000 American jobs at stake in this wind energy tax credit. We should support it. I support it. (Applause.)

And instead of giving $4 billion in taxpayer subsidies to oil companies that are making plenty of money every time you go to the pump, we should be investing in homegrown energy that's never been more promising. That's the choice in this election. That's why I'm running for a second term.

I'm not done yet. In 2008, I promised to end the war in Iraq -- I ended it. (Applause.) Governor Romney said the way I ended it was "tragic". I said I'd go after al Qaeda and bin Laden -- I went after them. (Applause.) We're now beginning a transition out of Afghanistan. And so all of this is possible only because of the extraordinary service of our men and women in uniform. And that's why I've made sure to make historic investments in the VA -- because somebody who has fought for us shouldn't have to fight for a job when they come home. (Applause.)

But if we're serious about them coming home to a strong economy, then we've got to do some building here at home, some nation-building -- take half of the money that we've been spending over a decade of war and let's start doing some rebuilding here in America. (Applause.) Let's put Americans back to work rebuilding roads and bridges and ports and airports, laying broadband lines in rural communities. (Applause.) Let's create a Veterans Jobs Corp so returning heroes can get jobs as firefighters and cops in communities that need them.

There's a lot of work to be done right here in America, and I'm running to rebuild America. That's a choice in this election. (Applause.)

And I'm running make sure America once again has the best education system in the world and the best training system for workers in the world. (Applause.) I want to help our schools hire and reward the best teachers, especially in math and science. I want to give 2 million more Americans the chance to go to community colleges to train for the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. (Applause.) I want to get colleges and universities to bring down the cost of tuition, so that every young person can get the kind of education that they need to succeed in the 21st century. (Applause.)

I want to help homeowners refinance their homes, save $3,000 at these historically low rates. Governor Romney thinks we should just let the housing market bottom out. That's a difference in this election.

I believe that you should have some health care security. That's why I passed Obamacare. And I like Obamacare. (Applause.) I like the phrase "Obamacare", because you know what, I do care. (Applause.) I care about all those folks with preexisting conditions who now are going to be able to get coverage. (Applause.) I care about folks who already have insurance, making sure insurance companies don't jerk them around right when they need that insurance the most. (Applause.)

I care about the 6.5 million young people who are now able to stay on their parent's plan and don't have to go without insurance. (Applause.) I care about the seniors who now have more discounts on their prescriptions drugs -- and we're closing the doughnut hole. (Applause.)

So, Waterloo, we don't need another two years of arguing about health care. The Supreme Court has spoken. We are implementing this law. We are moving forward. We're not moving backwards. (Applause.)

All these things -- health care security, American manufacturing, rebuilding America and putting construction workers back to work, making sure our kids are getting a great education and can afford college -- all these things that make up a middle-class life, they all tie together. It goes back to that central idea of America, that here in this country everybody gets a fair shot, everybody does their fair share, everybody plays by the same set of rules. It's the same promise our parents and grandparents passed on to us. And now, our job is to pass it on to our kids. (Applause.)

Now, over the next three months, the other side will spend more money than we have ever seen. Now, you noticed their ads generally don't tell you what it is that they're going to do, because they know their plans won't sell. You haven't forgotten. You didn't get amnesia. (Laughter.) You didn't forget the last time they tried what they're selling.

So basically, the argument that they're going to make over and over again is just the same one, which is the economy is still not where it needs to be and it's Obama's fault.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: And you know what? Listen, the economy is not where it needs to be. We've still got too many folks out of work and too many homes underwater. And we haven't brought back all the jobs that need to be brought back. But you know what, what they're offering -- it's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to reduce the deficit. They don't have a plan to grow the economy. They don't have a plan to revive the middle class.

The plan I've put forward can do that. But I need your help. I need your help. (Applause.) Your friends have to be registered. Your family has to be registered. You can get a voter registration form online. Just go to GottaRegister.com. This is not GotToRegister.com -- this is g-o-t-t-a register, GottaRegister.com -- (applause) -- because we've come too far to turn back now.

We've been outspent before. I've been counted out before. But here's what I know. When all of you decide to mobilize and organize, and when you focus on those values that are best in America, when you remember the stories of your family and your parents, your grandparents -- the hard work, the sacrifice -- recognizing sometimes times are tough and sometimes we get knocked down but we get back up, we are determined, we are tougher than any tough times -- and most importantly, that reminder that when we do things together, when we're focused on how we build this country together, we can't be stopped -- that's more powerful than any money. (Applause.) That's more powerful than any TV commercials.

So we've got to keep on going, because we've got too many schools we still need to build; too many teachers we still need to hire; too many kids we still need to send to college. We've got too many roads we still need to build; too much energy we've still got to generate right here at home; too many troops we've got to bring home; too many doors of opportunity that we've got to open up for every young person who's willing to make the effort. That's what's at stake right now.

(Applause.)

And if you're willing to stand with me, and work with me, and vote for me, we will win Iowa. (Applause.) We will win in November. (Applause.) And we will finish what we started and remind the world why America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you. And God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Windham High School
Windham, New Hampshire

1:06 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you! (Applause.) It's good to be back! (Applause.) It is good to be back in New Hampshire. (Applause.)

Well, first all, thank you guys all for being here. I know it's a little bit warm.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Laughter.) So for those of you, everybody who is standing, I want you to kind of bend your knees a little bit. (Laughter.) We usually see a few folks kind of dropping out a little bit when it's this warm. If you've got a seat, feel free to sit down and relax.

I want everybody to give a big round of applause to Beth Talbot -- (applause) -- not only for the great introduction, but for being an outstanding teacher. I love teachers. (Applause.) Love them.

Two other people I want to acknowledge -- first of all, congressional candidate, Annie Kuster is here. Give Annie a big round of applause. (Applause.) And my national co-chair back in 2008, one of my earliest supporters in New Hampshire, great guy -- Paul Hodes is here. Give Paul a big round of applause. (Applause.) And all of you are here, and I'm very happy about that. (Applause.)

Let me also say, by the way, thank you for returning Malia and Sasha safe and sound. They were up here for camp for a month. They had a wonderful time, but their parents missed them a lot. (Laughter.) So we were glad to get them back. But you guys took good care of them while they were up here, so I appreciate that. (Applause.)

Now, while they were at camp -- there are no TVs at camp -- but unless you've been able to hide your TV set or your cable is broke, you may be aware that there is a campaign going on right now. (Laughter and applause.) And part of the reason the campaign is so intense is because the choice we face in November could not be bigger. It's not just a choice between two candidates or two political parties, it is a choice between two fundamentally different visions about where to take the country; two fundamentally paths for America.

And the decisions that you make, the direction you choose for us to walk in when you walk into that voting booth in November, it's going to have an impact not just on your lives but it's going to have an impact on your kids and your grandkids and generations to come.

Some of you were involved in 2008 when we came together. (Applause.) And it wasn't just Democrats -- we had independents, we had even some Republicans.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: There you go. (Laughter.) And the idea was that we needed to restore the basic bargain that made this country great; the basic bargain that created the most prosperous economy that the world has even known.

And it's a simple bargain. It says, if you work hard, that work should be rewarded. It says that if you put in enough effort and you take seriously your responsibilities, you should be able to find a job that pays the bills, you should be able to afford a home you can call your own, you should count on health care if you get sick -- (applause) -- you should be able to retire with some dignity and some respect after a lifetime of labor -- (applause) -- and most important, you should be able to give your kids the kind of education and opportunity that allows them to dream bigger and do better than you ever did. (Applause.)

That's the American promise. That's the American Dream. And we knew restoring it wouldn't be easy; that it would take more than one year or one term or even one President, because we had gone through a decade in which that promise was not being kept. We had seen a decade in which incomes and wages were going down even as the cost of everything from health care to college were going up.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Say it again, Mr. President, so we can hear it again!

THE PRESIDENT: We had seen a decade -- (laughter and applause) -- in which jobs were being shipped overseas, in which we took a surplus and turned it into a deficit, ran two wars on a credit card -- all culminating in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression. And middle-class families who were already getting hammered lost their jobs, lost their savings, some lost their homes. And the American Dream seemed even further out of reach.

So when I ran for office, I told you there are no quick fixes, there are no easy solutions. But what I also insisted was that if we pull together, we have everything we need to meet our challenges. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Yes, we can!

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, we can. We still have the best workers in the world, the best entrepreneurs and small businesspeople in the world, the best scientists, the best researchers, the best universities, the best colleges in the world. (Applause.)

We're still a young nation, and we've got the greatest diversity of talent and ingenuity. There's a reason why people still want to come here -- because no matter what the naysayers say and no matter how stark the other side tries to paint the situation during election time, there is not another country on Earth that wouldn't gladly change places with the United States of America. (Applause.)

Most of all, the American character has not changed. In fact, we saw during this crisis how people may have gotten knocked down, but they got right back up. (Applause.) Folks -- people in their 50s, 60s losing their jobs, go back to school, they get retrained and find a new one. Small business people keeping their doors open even if it meant them not taking a salary, because they understood their workers had families that were depending on them.

We may have gone through tough times, but it turns out we're tougher than tough times. (Applause.) And that's how we saved an auto industry on the brink of collapse. That's how we created 4.5 million new jobs, half a million in manufacturing.

We are not there yet. We've still got a long way to go, because we've got to make sure that here in America, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter what your last name is, here in America, you can make it if you try. That's what this campaign is about. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, I've got to say -- remember, I said this is a choice in this election. We've got a particular vision about how to move the country forward. My opponent and his running mate have a very different view. They believe the best way forward is to go right back to the old top-down economics that got us into this mess in the first place.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Their ideas are pretty simple; they're not hard to explain. They think that if we get rid of more regulations on big corporations and big banks -- some of which we put in place to prevent another taxpayer-funded bailout -- and if we do more tax cuts for the very wealthiest Americans, then somehow prosperity is going to rain down on all of you. (Laughter.)

That's their theory. In fact, the centerpiece of my opponent's entire economic plan is a new $5 trillion tax cut, a lot of it going to the wealthiest Americans. His new running mate, Congressman Ryan --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: -- he put forward a plan that would let Governor Romney pay less than 1 percent in taxes each year.

And here's the kicker -- he expects you to pick up the tab.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Governor Romney's tax plan -- this is not my analysis now; this is the analysis of independent folks who analyze tax plans for a living -- (laughter) -- that's what they do -- (laughter.) Their analysis showed that Governor Romney's tax plan would actually raise taxes on middle-class families with children by an average of $2,000 --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: -- not to reduce the deficit, not to grow jobs, not to invest in education, but to give another tax cut to folks like him.

Now, ask Governor Romney and his running mate when they're here in New Hampshire on Monday -- they're going to be coming here on Monday -- ask them if that's fair. Ask them how it will grow the economy. Ask them how it will strengthen the middle class.

They have been trying to sell this trickle-down snake oil before. (Laughter.) It did not work then. It will not work now. It's not a plan to create jobs. It will not reduce the deficit. It will not move the economy forward. It's the wrong direction for America. (Applause.)

Now, the truth is I think they know it's not a very popular idea. You can tell that because now they're being dishonest about my plans, since they can't sell their plans. (Laughter.) I mean, they are trying to throw everything at the wall just to see what will stick.

The latest thing they've been trying is to talk about Medicare. Now, you would think they would avoid talking about Medicare, given the fact that both of them have proposed to voucherize the Medicare system.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: But I guess they figure the best defense is to try to go on offense. So, New Hampshire, here is what you need to know: Since I have been in office, I have strengthened Medicare. (Applause.) I have made reforms that have extended the life of the program, that have saved millions of seniors with Medicare hundreds of dollars on their prescription drugs. (Applause.) The only changes to your benefits that I've made on Medicare is that Medicare now covers new preventive services like cancer screenings and wellness visits for free. (Applause.)

Governor Romney and Congressman Ryan have a very different plan. What they want to do is they want seniors to get a voucher to buy their own insurance, which could force seniors to pay an extra $6,400 a year for their health care.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Again, this is not my estimate. Remember those guys who analyze these things for a living? That's their assessment. That doesn't strengthen Medicare. That undoes the very guarantee of Medicare. That's the core of the plan written by Congressman Ryan and endorsed by Governor Romney.

So here is the bottom line: My plan saves money in Medicare by cracking down on fraud and waste and insurance company subsidies. (Applause.) And their plan makes seniors pay more so they can give another tax cut to millionaires and billionaires.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: My plan has already extended the life of Medicare by nearly a decade. (Applause.) Their plan would put Medicare on track to be ended as we know it. It would be an entirely different plan -- a plan in which you could not count on health care because it would have to be coming out of your pocket. That's the real difference between our plans on Medicare.

That's the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. And I need your help. (Applause.)

Now, four years ago I promised to cut middle-class taxes. That's exactly what I've done -- by a total of about $3,600 for the typical family. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Thank you, Mr. President!

THE PRESIDENT: So just like we've got a difference on Medicare, we've got a difference on taxes. Right now, what I want to do is keep taxes right where they are for the first $250,000 of everybody's income. So if your family makes under $250,000 -- which -- that includes 98 percent of Americans --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: That's me!

THE PRESIDENT: -- that's you -- (laughter) -- 97 percent of small businesses -- you won't see your income taxes increase by a single dime next year. (Applause.)

Now, if you're fortunate enough to be in the other 2 percent, you'll still keep your tax cut on the first $250,000 you make. That's a pretty good deal. But all we're asking is for folks like me who make more than $250,000, we're asking that you contribute a little bit more above $250,000 so we can pay down this deficit and invest in things like making college more affordable -- (applause) -- making sure our teachers aren't laid off, making sure our firefighters are there to respond to emergencies, making sure our economy grows.

And, keep in mind, asking the wealthy to pay a little bit more, that doesn't eliminate our deficit. We're still going to have to make sure that government does its part by cutting away all the spending we don't need. And I've already cut a trillion dollars in spending, and we've slated another trillion more.

But we can't just reduce our deficit and our debt by gutting education, and gutting research and development, and gutting infrastructure. And all we're asking folks like me to do is go back to the rates we paid under Bill Clinton -- which, by the way, was a time when we created nearly 23 million new jobs, the biggest budget surplus in history, and a bunch of millionaires to boot. (Applause.)

See, I'm getting all fired up. (Applause.) And I want to explain that this is not just good for middle-class families and working families, it's good for everybody. Because what happens when a police officer or a firefighter or a teacher or a construction worker or a receptionist -- what happens when they've got a little more money in their pocket?

AUDIENCE: Spend it!

THE PRESIDENT: They spend it on basic necessities. So maybe they go out and finally, after 10 years, buy a new car. Or maybe they buy a new computer for their kid who's going off to college. And that means business suddenly has more customers. And that means businesses are making more profits. And that means businesses are hiring more workers, who in turn have more money to spend, which makes businesses do even better. That's how you grow an economy -- not from the top down, but from the middle out and from the bottom up. (Applause.) That's the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President. (Applause.)

On issue after issue, the choice could not be clearer. When the auto industry was on the verge of collapse, Governor Romney said let's "let Detroit go bankrupt." I said, a million jobs are at stake -- let's bet on American workers and American manufacturing. (Applause.) And three and a half years later, the American auto industry has come roaring back. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

Governor Romney likes to tout his private sector experience, even though a lot of that experience was investing in companies that were called "pioneers" in the business of outsourcing manufacturing jobs.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: He wants to keep on giving tax breaks to companies that ship jobs overseas. I want to give tax breaks to companies that are investing here in New Hampshire -- (applause) -- here in the United States, hiring American workers to make American products to sell around the world. That's the difference in this election. (Applause.)

Governor Romney thinks new sources of clean energy are "imaginary." Since I took office, we have in fact doubled the use of renewable energy like wind and solar. Thousands of Americans have good jobs because of it. It's not imaginary, it's real.

New Hampshire, we've got to stop giving $4 billion a year in taxpayer subsidies to big oil companies that are making plenty of profits, and use that money to help American homegrown energy that has never been more promising. (Applause.) That's a choice in this election. (Applause.)

In 2008 I promised I would end the war in Iraq -- we did. (Applause.) I said we'd go after al Qaeda and bin Laden -- we did. (Applause.) We now are transitioning so that Afghans take more responsibility for their security and we can start bringing our troops home from there. (Applause.) All of these things we did only because of the incredible courage and dedication and patriotism of our men and women in uniform. (Applause.) And that's why we've made historic investments in the VA -- because I believe that anybody who has fought for America in uniform should not have to fight for a job when they come home -- (applause) -- shouldn't have to fight for the benefits they've earned.

AUDIENCE: USA! USA! USA!

THE PRESIDENT: So we could not be prouder of them. But we want them to return to a strong economy, which means that after a decade of war, it's time to do some nation-building here at home. (Applause.)

Let's create a Veterans Jobs Corps that can help returning heroes get jobs as firefighters and cops in communities that need them the most. (Applause.) Let's take some of the savings from war to rebuild our roads and our bridges and our schools all across America -- (applause) -- to lay broadband lines and wireless networks that can make us more competitive. Let's put some construction workers back to work. That helps everybody, and that will help America be strong for decades to come. That's the choice in this election. That's what's at stake. (Applause.)

I want to make sure that we've got the best education in the world. I want to help school districts like this one hire and reward the best teachers, especially in math and science. (Applause.) I want to give 2 million more Americans the chance to go to community colleges and learn the skills that businesses are hiring for right now. And I want college and universities to bring their tuitions down, because in the 21st century, our young people have to be able to get a college education, a higher education. (Applause.) It's not a luxury, it is a necessity. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

And, yes, New Hampshire, I'm running again because I still believe, in America, nobody should go broke because they get sick. (Applause.) I'm kind of fond of the term "Obamacare," because I do care. That's why we passed the law. That's why 6.5 million young people can stay on their parent's plan now. That's why seniors are seeing discounts on their prescription drugs. (Applause.) That's why families who have got somebody with a preexisting condition can now get health care. (Applause.) It was the right thing to do. The Supreme Court has spoken. We are not going backwards, we are going forward. (Applause.)

We're not going back to the day when serving the country you love depended on who you love. We ended "don't ask, don't tell." It was the right thing to do. (Applause.) We're not going back. We're not going back to the day when women didn't have control of their own health care choices. We're going forward, we're not going back. (Applause.)

On issue after issue, there is a choice. And all these issues -- manufacturing and health care and education -- all these things tie together because it's part of what not only makes up a middle-class life, but also creates rungs of opportunity for people to get into the middle class. That's what we believe in. That's what we're fighting for. That's how the economy grows. And that's what we learned from our parents and our grandparents and our great-grandparents -- some who came here as immigrants -- folks working hard, overcoming obstacles, understanding that in America, not only could you do better but your future generations could do better. That's what's at stake in this election, and that's why I'm running for a second term as President. (Applause.)

Now, let me say this -- let me close up by saying this. Over the next three months, you will see more negative ads than you have ever seen in your life. These folks on the other side, they're writing $10 million checks. And basically, their argument is going to be the same one over and over again: The economy is not where it should be, and it's Obama's fault. They'll just keep on repeating it because they know their own plans don't sell.

So all they'll try to do is just hope that if they can tap into people's frustration and anxiety, that somehow they're going to win, even though what they're selling won't work. It's not -- what they're selling is not a plan to create jobs, it's not a plan to reduce the deficit, it certainly is not a plan to revive the middle class. But they are counting on just outspending us to win.

But here is the good news. Here is the good news, New Hampshire -- I've been counted out before and I've been outspent before. But what I've learned -- and you guys helped teach this to me -- is that when the American people, when they cut through the nonsense, when you focus on what's important, when you're reminded of what values built this country, when you remember that we are all in this together, and you affirm the basic American notion that everybody in this country gets a fair shot and everybody should do their fair share, and everybody should play by the same set of rules -- when you are focused on the things that make us a great country, we don't lose. (Applause.) You will help get us there.

We've got too many more jobs we've got to create, too many more teachers we've got to hire, too many young people who need to go to college, too many troops we've got to come home -- (applause) -- more energy we've got to generate, more opportunity that we've got to open up to everybody. (Applause.)

So if you're willing to stand with me and fight with me, and make phone calls with me, and knock on doors with me -- (applause) -- if you're willing to vote for me, we will win New Hampshire. We will win this election. And we will finish what we started and remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. God bless the United States of America.

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT

AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Rochester Commons
Rochester, New Hampshire

3:55 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, New Hampshire! (Applause.) Thank you!

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you! (Applause.) Thank you so much. What a beautiful day in New Hampshire. (Applause.)

A couple people I want to acknowledge. First of all, thanks to your outstanding young mayor, T.J. Jean -- (applause) -- and his folks, who are standing right next to him. They're pretty proud of him. He's doing a great job.

Please give Amy a great big round of applause for the wonderful introduction. (Applause.) One of the national co-chairs of our campaign and your outstanding senator, Jeanne Shaheen, is here. (Applause.) And congressional candidate Carol Shea-Porter is here. (Applause.) And all of you are here -- (applause) -- on a beautiful Saturday.

Now, first of all, I've got to just say thanks to all of you for looking after Malia and Sasha while they were up here. They were here for a month at camp, and they did a great -- they just had a great time, and enjoyed all the water sports, playing basketball and tennis, and arts and crafts. And, most importantly, there was some ice cream involved in the thing. (Laughter.) They were quite pleased about that. So we missed them, though. Parents, it's tough when your kids are away, isn't it? (Laughter.) We've missed them so much. And they promised they'd write -- and they did -- and they'd just say, "We're doing fine. Bye." (Laughter.) It's tough.

But, anyway, I can see why they enjoyed themselves because New Hampshire is one of the most beautiful states in the country and we are just so pleased to be here. (Applause.)

Now, they didn't -- Malia and Sasha didn't get any TV when they were at camp, but --

AUDIENCE: Awww --

THE PRESIDENT: -- no, there's nothing wrong with that. That's good. (Laughter.) But unless you've been able to hide your television set, you may be aware that there's a pretty intense campaign going on right now.

Now, the reason it is so hotly contested is because the choice that we face this November couldn't be bigger. It's not just a choice between two candidates or two political parties. This is a choice between two fundamentally different visions for our country; two fundamentally different ideas about the direction that we should be going in. And the direction that we choose, the direction you choose when you walk into that voting booth in November is going to have an impact not just on your lives, it's going to have an impact on your children, your grandchildren, and generations to come.

Now, four years ago, we came together as Democrats, but also independents and some Republicans, because we knew we had to restore the basic bargain that built America -- what made us an economic superpower, what created the greatest middle class we've ever seen. And it's a pretty simple bargain. It's the idea that if you work hard, you should be able to get ahead. It's a deal that says if you put in enough effort and you act responsibly, that you can find a job that pays the bills; you can afford a home that you call your own; you can count on health care when you get sick; you can retire with dignity and respect; and, most importantly, you can give your kids the kind of education and opportunity that allows them to dream even bigger and do even better than you ever did. (Applause.) That's the American idea. That's what we came together to fight for in 2008.

It's a simple American promise. And we knew it wouldn't be easy restoring that promise. We knew it would take more than one year or one term, or even one President, because we had gone through a decade in which that promise wasn't being kept.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you, Mr. President!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you, too, sweetie. (Applause.) We had seen a decade, before I came into office, in which jobs were being shipped overseas. We had run two wars on a credit card, gone from surplus to deficits. Wages and incomes actually went down during this period, even as the costs of everything from health care and college were going up. A few folks at the top were doing really, really well, but for a lot of middle-class families, folks were working harder and harder, and seems like if you were lucky you were just treading water. And that was before the economic crisis, which hammered so many families all across this state and all across this country -- people losing their jobs, their homes, their savings -- making the American Dream even further out of reach.

So when I ran four years ago, when we talked about how we were going to restore that basic bargain four years ago, I told you there were no quick fixes, there were no simple solutions. But what I said was, if we were willing to work hard, and we were willing to come together, I had no doubt we could meet every single challenge, because we've got so many things going for us. We've got the best workers in the world. We've got the best entrepreneurs and small businesspeople in the world. We've got the best scientists and researchers, the best colleges and universities in the world. (Applause.)

Compared to other developed countries, we're a young nation. And part of it is because we've got the greatest diversity of talent and ingenuity. People still want to come here from every corner of the globe because they understand what America means. And so no matter what the naysayers say, no matter how dark the other side tries to paint things around election time, there is not another country on Earth that would not gladly trade places with the United States of America. (Applause.)

They understand, we understand that here in America, if you're willing to work hard, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, you can make it if you try. That's what the last four years has been about -- whether it's been saving the auto industry, or getting health care passed, or creating 4.5 million new jobs, or making sure that young people have an easier time affording college. It's all about that idea of making sure hard work is rewarded. That's what my presidency has been about. That is what this campaign is about. That is why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

Now, my opponent and his new running mate, they just have a different view of things. They've got wonderful families, they're good people, but they believe in a different vision. They think the best way forward is the kind of top-down economics that got us into this mess in the first place. They truly believe that if you roll back regulations that we put in place to control Wall Street, or if you get rid of regulations we put in place to avoid our air getting dirtier and our water getting dirtier, and then if you combine that with more tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans, then somehow prosperity will come raining down on all of you. (Laughter.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: That's why we're in a drought!
(Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: I'm not exaggerating here. You can go on their website, look at Congressman Ryan's budget. The centerpiece of Governor Romney's entire economic plan is a new $5 trillion tax cut, a lot of it going to folks like me, a lot of it going to the wealthiest Americans. His new running mate, Congressman Ryan, put forward a plan that would let Governor Romney pay less than 1 percent in taxes each year.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: That's a pretty good deal, just paying 1 percent in taxes. You're making millions of dollars.

Now, here's the kicker -- they expect you to pick up the tab. Governor Romney's tax plan would actually raise taxes on middle-class families with children by an average of $2,000. Now, this is not my analysis. This is the analysis of independent economists whose job it is to analyze these plans. Every media outlet has checked on the numbers here, and their estimate is that it would cost you an extra $2,000 -- not to grow the economy, not to reduce the deficit, not to make sure that our schools are working well or we're building roads or we're strengthening the middle class. All this would be just to give another tax cut to folks like Governor Romney. It would give the average person who is making more than $3 million a year another $250,000 in tax cuts.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, Governor Romney and Congressman Ryan will be here in New Hampshire on Monday, so you can tell them if you think this is fair. (Laughter.) And you should ask them, how do you think that's going to grow the economy again? How is that going to strengthen the middle class?

Look, we have tried this kind of trickle-down snake oil before. (Laughter.) It didn't work then. It won't work now. It's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to reduce our deficit. It's not a plan to strengthen our economy. It's not a plan to strengthen the middle class. (Applause.)

It won't work. We're moving forward. They want to take us backwards. That's the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, the truth is, if you ask them or you ask their consultants, I think they know their economic plan isn't really popular. (Laughter.) And that's why they've got to be dishonest about my plan. They are just throwing everything they can at the wall to see if it sticks.

Their latest approach is to try to challenge me on Medicare. Now, let's just think about this for a second -- Governor Romney wants to turn Medicare into a voucher system. Congressman Ryan wants to turn Medicare into a voucher system.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: I, on the other hand, have strengthened Medicare. (Applause.) We made reforms that extended the life of the program, saved millions of seniors with Medicare hundreds of dollars on their prescription drugs; we're closing the doughnut hole. (Applause.) The only changes to benefits that we made was to make the benefits better by making sure that Medicare now covers new preventive services like cancer screenings and wellness visits for free. (Applause.)

Meanwhile, Governor Romney and Congressman Ryan want to give seniors a voucher to buy insurance on their own, which -- again, somebody did the analysis; not us, somebody else -- and they estimate that this could force seniors to pay as much as an extra $6,400 a year for their health care.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: How many people think that's a good deal?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: That doesn't strengthen Medicare. It undoes the very guarantee of Medicare. But that's the core of the plan that was written by Congressman Ryan and endorsed by Governor Romney.

And if they want to talk about benefits, they should be straight with you. Those new cancer screenings and prescription drug discounts, all those things we put into place with the Affordable Care Act, those things would be eliminated if Governor Romney had his way. So it would take something away from seniors and it wouldn't replace it with something better.

So here's the bottom line, New Hampshire -- my plan saves money in Medicare by cracking down on fraud and waste, and making sure insurance companies aren't getting unfair subsidies. (Applause.) Their plan makes seniors pay more so they can give another tax cut to rich folks who don't need a tax cut.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: My plan has extended the life of Medicare by nearly a decade. Their plan would shorten the life of Medicare and end Medicare as we know it, because they'd turn it into a voucher system.

So those are the differences between our plans on Medicare. But that's just one example of the choice in this election. That's what's at stake. That's why I'm running. And you can see it on every issue.

When it comes to taxes, four years ago, I came before you and I said middle-class families need relief, especially during this crisis; I'm going to lower taxes on middle-class families. Guess what? I kept that promise. (Applause.) So if you start getting into an argument with your Republican cousin or friend or what have you -- (laughter) -- you just tell them, look, the typical family is paying $3,600 less in federal taxes since President Obama came into office. (Applause.) And right now, what I want to do is I want to keep taxes right where they are for your first $250,000 of income. Now, that means -- 98 percent of Americans make less than $250,000; 97 percent of small businesses make less than $250,000. So under my plan, you wouldn't see your taxes -- your income taxes go up a single dime next year. (Applause.) That's a contrast with Governor Romney's plan.

But in the interest of full disclosure here, if you're fortunate enough to be in the other 2 percent, you're still going to get a tax cut on the first $250,000 of income. You get to keep that. All we're asking is that you contribute a little bit more so that we can pay down our deficit in a responsible way and invest in things like education that help us grow. (Applause.) And you'll hear some people say, well, just taxing the top 2 percent, that won't eliminate the deficit. It's true. Government is still going to have to do its part in cutting away spending we don't need. And we've already cut a trillion dollars' worth of spending, and we're slated to do another trillion and a half under my budget plan.

But we're not going to do it all on the backs of middle-class families, and gutting education, and gutting science and research, and no longer investing in our infrastructure. All we're asking is that folks like me go back to the rates we paid under Bill Clinton -- which, by the way, worked out pretty good. (Applause.) We created 23 million new jobs, we had a surplus instead of a deficit, and we created a whole bunch of new millionaires to boot. (Applause.)

And part of the reason it worked out pretty well -- when a teacher or a construction worker or a nurse or a receptionist, when they've got a little extra money in their pockets, what do they do?

AUDIENCE: They spend it!

THE PRESIDENT: They spend it on basic necessities. And that means maybe that old beat up car you've been hanging on to for the last 12 years, you decide, all right, it's time to get a new one. Or maybe you decide, you know what, our kids are going to college, let's make sure they've got a new computer. And that means, then, business has more customers, which means business gets more profit, which means they then hire more workers, which means those workers then have a little more money in their pockets. Everybody does better.

That's how you grow an economy -- not from the top down, but from the middle out and the bottom up. When everybody is doing well, we all prosper. (Applause.) That's the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

On issue after issue, the choice could not be clearer. When the auto industry was on the brink of collapse, Governor Romney said, let's "let Detroit go bankrupt." I said, let's bet on American workers. And three and a half years later, the American auto industry is back. (Applause.)

Governor Romney likes to tout his private sector experience, except a lot of that experience is investing in companies that have been called "pioneers" of outsourcing. We don't need more outsourcing, we need some insourcing. (Applause.) I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that ship jobs overseas, like Governor Romney is promoting. I want to give those tax breaks to companies that are investing right here in Rochester, right here in New Hampshire, right here in the United States of America, with American workers making American products, selling them around the world, stamped with three proud words: Made in America. That's what I'm fighting for. (Applause.)

My opponent thinks new sources of clean, homegrown energy like wind energy are "imaginary." That's what he called them. (Laughter.) Congressman Ryan said they were a "fad." Listen, since I took office, America has doubled the use of renewable energy. (Applause.) Thousands of good American jobs have been created. It's helping us to reduce our dependence on foreign oil. That's not imaginary, that's real.

We need to stop giving $4 billion of taxpayer subsidies to oil companies that are making money every time you go to the pump. (Applause.) Let's give those tax breaks to producers of clean, renewable energy right here in the United States of America. That's a choice in this election. (Applause.)

I'm running because I made a promise to you in 2008, we'd end the war in Iraq -- and we did. (Applause.) I said we'd go after al Qaeda and bin Laden -- and we did. (Applause.) We're transitioning in Afghanistan so we can begin to bring our troops home. (Applause.) All of this was accomplished only because of the incredible service and sacrifice of our men and women in uniform -- (applause) -- which is why we've already passed tax breaks for companies that hire veterans, and we've made historic investments in the VA -- because my attitude is anybody who has fought for our country shouldn't have to fight for a job when they come home. (Applause.)

So now, New Hampshire, after a decade of war, I want to take some of those savings and let's do some nation-building here at home. (Applause.) Let's take about half the money we're no longer spending on war and let's put it to use putting people back to work rebuilding roads and runways and ports, and wireless networks and broadband lines into rural communities, and creating a Veterans Jobs Corps that can help returning heroes get back to work as cops and firefighters in communities that need them. That's the America we want to build. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

I want to make sure we've got the best education system in the world. (Applause.) So I want to help local school districts hire and retain the very best teachers -- especially in math and science -- (applause) -- create 2 million more slots for Americans to go to community colleges to learn the skills that businesses are looking for right now. And I want to keep working to reduce the cost of tuition for colleges and universities -- (applause) -- because a higher education is not a luxury, it's an economic necessity in the 21st century. That's a choice we've got to make in this election. (Applause.)

And yes, New Hampshire, I'm running because I believe in this nation. I still believe you shouldn't go bankrupt when you get sick. (Applause.) I'm actually kind of fond of the term "Obamacare." (Applause.) I fought for that bill because I cared, because I cared about the 6.5 million young people who can now get insurance by staying on their parent's plan.

(Applause.)

I care about the millions of seniors who are now getting discounts on their prescription drugs and free preventive care because of what we did. (Applause.) I care about all those folks here in New Hampshire and around the country with preexisting conditions who can now get health insurance because of what we did. (Applause.) The Supreme Court has spoken. This law is here to stay. We don't need to refight this battle for another three and a half years. We're not going backwards, we're moving forward. (Applause.)

We're not going to put -- we're not going to go back to the days when serving the country you love depended on who you love. We ended "don't ask, don't tell." It was the right thing to do. (Applause.) We're not going backwards, we're going forward.

I believe women should be in charge of their own health care decisions. (Applause.) We're not going backward, we're going forward. (Applause.)

On issue after issue, there is a clear choice. Now, over the next three months, the other side is going to spend more money than we have ever seen. I mean, they are writing $10 million checks -- individuals -- just to run the same ad over and over again. It's variations on the same theme, which is, the economy is not where it needs to be and it's Obama's fault. They'll just say that over and over again. (Laughter.) And the reason they've got to say that -- that's their only message -- is because they know their economic plan won't sell.

They may have a plan to win the election, but they don't have a plan to create jobs. They don't have a plan to grow the economy. They don't have a plan to help the middle class. I do. (Applause.)

But here's the thing -- I've been outspent before. I've been counted out before. But what gives me hope, what gives me confidence is you. (Applause.) Because I know when the American people start paying attention after all the ads have been done and they cut through all the nonsense, and they start remembering the story of their families -- their parents, their grandparents -- all the struggles they went through, what it means to work hard and get ahead, and overcome obstacles -- the same kind of story I've got in my life as a son of a single mom; the same kind of story that Michelle has in her life -- her parents, dad a blue-collar worker, mom a secretary -- we know what it's been like to go through hard times. But we also know what it's like to have hope and determination and resilience, and to watch the next generation do better. And when you guys are focused on that idea, which is the essence of who we are, then all that other money, all that other stuff doesn't matter. (Applause.)

So, New Hampshire, I'm going to need your help. We've come too far to turn back now. (Applause.) We've still got more good jobs to create, more good teachers to hire, more students to help to go to college, more troops to bring home, more homegrown energy to generate, more doors of opportunity to open for everybody who is willing to walk through them and work hard and put in the effort. (Applause.)

And if you're willing to stand with me one more time -- (applause) -- if you're willing to knock on some doors and make some phone calls, talk to your friends and talk to your neighbors -- we will finish what we started, we will win New Hampshire, we will win this election. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. God bless the United States of America.
Thank you.

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

September 2, 2012

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

University of Colorado-Boulder
Boulder, Colorado

1:44 P.M. MDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Colorado! (Applause.) Go Buffs!
(Applause.)

Can everybody please give Ryan a huge round of applause for that beautiful introduction? (Applause.) Americans like Ryan are why I ran for this office in the first place and why I am running for it again.

It's great to see your outstanding Governor, John Hickenlooper. (Applause.) One of the finest senators that we've got in the country, Michael Bennet. (Applause.) Outstanding Congressman, Jared Polis. (Applause.) And it is good to be back in Boulder, Colorado! (Applause.)

Now, the last time I was here, I stopped by The Sink for some pizza. I signed my name on the ceiling. I hope it's still there. I hope nobody vandalized it. (Laughter.) And a girl I met there was so surprised that she spilled her frozen yogurt on my pants. (Laughter.) But it was worth it because I've been told that The Sink renamed one of their pizzas after me. (Applause.) I'm deeply moved by this. (Laughter.) So the next time you go there, just ask for "The POTUS." It's got pepperoni, sausage, green pepper, black olives, and onion. We put the olives and the onion on there for Michelle so you can say that you had some vegetables on your pizza. (Laughter.)

Now, I've got to address a sensitive subject. I know you guys are a little bummed out about the game yesterday. I know the "Rocky Mountain Showdown" did not go down the way you wanted. So I'll tell you what, we are going to give you a chance to get even. We are giving the Buffs and the Rams a second chance to go at it this fall. We've set up a "Rocky Mountain Rumble" to see which school can register more voters, CU or Colorado State. (Applause.)

Now, I was at Colorado State last week, and because we had volunteers in the crowd to help, they got a little bit of a head start. So they are up by just 41 votes. But today, we are in Boulder, so let's get it done. There are volunteers throughout the audience; they can help you register today.

When you go home, you can register your classmates, your friends. You go online to something called GottaRegister.com. I apologize in advance to English teachers, but this is not "Got To Register" this is gotta -- G-o-t-t-a-register.com. And this is important because just over two months from now, for the first time in many of your lives, you will get a chance to pick a President. And by doing so, you will get to a chance to choose the path that we take from here.

Now, last week, the other party gave their pitch at their convention down in Florida.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo, vote. (Laughter and applause.)

I will say, though, that it was something to behold. (Laughter.) Despite all the challenges that we face in this new century, what they offered over those three days was an agenda that was better suited for the last century. It was a rerun. It could have been on "Nick at Nite." (Laughter.) We've seen it before. You might as well have watched it on a black-and-white TV, with some rabbit ears. (Laughter.)

And if you didn't DVR it, the basic recap goes something like this: The economy is not doing what it should be; it's all Obama's fault -- that was a key theme -- (laughter) -- and Governor Romney knows the secret to creating jobs and growing the economy.

And then, there was a lot of talk about "hard truths" and "bold choices," but the interesting thing was nobody ever bothered to tell us what they were. And when Governor Romney finally had a chance to reveal the secret sauce, he did not offer a single new idea. It was just retreads of the same old policies we've been hearing for decades, the same policies that have been sticking it to the middle class for years.

They talked a lot about me, and they talked a lot about Governor Romney, but they didn't spend a lot of time talking about you. They didn't talk about families like Ryan's, and what it might mean to go back to a time when folks with preexisting conditions couldn't get health care. You didn't hear them spend a lot of time talking about young people and the debt that they're incurring when they go to college.

They spent even less time talking about what plans they had to actually meet these challenges and solve these problems. And you know why they didn't talk about it, it's not just because they know you won't like it -- and you won't like it -- (laughter) -- because you've already seen what happens when we try what they're offering, and you've lived through it, and you know we can't afford to repeat it, but it's also that they are exhausted of ideas.

See, it turns out we know that making the middle class pay for another budget-busting $250,000 tax cut for folks making $3 million a year or more won't magically translate into jobs and prosperity for everybody else. (Applause.)

We know families aren't going to be better off if we undo Wall Street reform that we fought so hard to pass, and that can prevent another financial crisis. We know we're not going to be better off if we strip away regulations that protect our air and our water. (Applause.) We know we're not going to be better off if we strip away protections to make sure you've got health care when you get sick.

Seniors are pretty certain that the best way to strengthen Medicare isn't to give them vouchers that leaves them to pay off any additional costs out of their own pockets.

The point is everything you heard from them -- what little you did hear -- we've heard before. They have tried to sell us this tired, trickle-down, you're-on-your-own snake oil before. (Applause.) Those ideas don't work. They didn't work then, they won't work now. They did not create jobs. They did not cut the deficit. They did not strengthen the middle class. They are not a plan to move this country forward.

And we believe in something better. (Applause.) We believe in an America that says our economic strength has never come from the top down. It comes from the middle out. It comes from the bottom up. It comes from students and workers and small business owners, and a growing, thriving middle class. (Applause.) It comes from teachers and receptionists and firefighters and construction workers who are helping to build this country each and every day. That's the backbone of this country. (Applause.)

We believe in an America that doesn't let how much money you've got determine whether or not you've got good health care, whether or not you can get a good college education.

We believe in an America that doesn't just lead by the force of our amazing military -- and we are so grateful for their service -- but we also know that we've got to combine that with the strength of our ideals and the power of our example. (Applause.)

We believe in an America where no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter who you love, you can pursue your own version of happiness, and you can make it here if you try. (Applause.) And that's what we've been working for four years now, Colorado. That's what this campaign is about, and that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Now, on Thursday night, I'm going to offer you what I believe is a better path forward -- a path that will grow this economy and create more jobs and strengthen the middle class.

And the good news is you get to choose the path we take.

Now, you can go with their plan to give massive new tax cuts to folks who have already made it, or we can go forward with my plan to keep taxes low for every American who is still trying to make it. (Applause.) If you talk to a Republican out there who says, oh, Obama and Democrats, they're all about tax and spend and all this -- remind them I promised four years ago to cut taxes for middle-class families. And the typical middle-class family is paying a total of about $3,600 less in taxes now than when I came into office. (Applause.) I kept my promise. I kept that promise.

And now I'm running to make sure taxes aren't raised a single dime for the first $250,000 of income, which means 98 percent of Americans and 97 percent of small businesses will see their taxes remain low, because they're the ones who need relief, not folks like me, not folks like Mr. Romney. He needs it even less than I do. (Laughter and applause.)

But this is ultimately going to be your choice. Now, you can choose whether we cede new jobs and new industries to countries like China, or whether we fight for those jobs in states like Colorado. (Applause.) My opponent likes to tout his private-sector experience. And he was incredibly successful, and clearly disciplined and hardworking. But keep in mind that his experience was investing in companies that were called "pioneers" in the business of outsourcing jobs.

When the auto industry was on the verge of collapse, he said, let's "let Detroit go bankrupt." And I've got a different vision for America. I bet on American workers and I bet on American manufacturing. And today, the U.S. auto industry has come roaring back. (Applause.) And, by the way, the cars they're making are better and more fuel efficient than ever. That's how we move forward. That's how we move forward. (Applause.)

I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that ship jobs overseas. I want to give tax breaks to companies that are starting businesses right here in Boulder, creating jobs right here in Colorado, making sure that here in the United States of America we're making stuff again stamped with three proud words: Made In America. That's the path forward that I'm offering in this election. (Applause.)

You can decide whether Governor Romney's advice -- "just borrow more money from your parents" -- is an acceptable answer to young people who are trying to go to college. Or you can take the path that we've already started on, making sure America once again leads the world in educating our kids and training our workers for the jobs of tomorrow. (Applause.)

I want to make sure that we are helping more young people afford the kind of education that you can get right here at CU Boulder. Let's make more people be able to go to community colleges to be trained for the jobs that employers are hiring for right now. Governor Romney wants to end the tax credit that we created to help families save up to $10,000 over four years on their college tuition. I want to extend it, I don't want to end it -- because in America today, a higher education cannot be a luxury, it is an economic necessity that every family should be able to afford.

And you know that in your own lives. That's why you're here. (Applause.) That's why you're making an investment in yourself. And I want to make sure that America is standing by you every step of the way, because if you succeed, then we succeed. (Applause.) If we're producing more engineers, then America is producing more jobs. If we've got great teachers - - (applause) -- then we're going to see the next generation be able to compete all over the world. That's what's at stake in this election.

Now, Colorado, you look out at this amazing vista and you say to yourself, part of what's at stake is energy and how we deal with this planet. You can choose an energy plan written by and for the oil companies. Or you can choose what I've offered, an all-of-the above strategy for American energy.

Governor Romney called renewable energy "imaginary." He said the jobs that -- actually it was Congressman Ryan who said that the jobs they create are "fads." Let me tell you, there are 10,000 good Colorado jobs right now that depend on wind and solar power. (Applause.) These jobs are worth fighting for.

And so I think it's time to stop giving $4 billion a year in taxpayer subsidies to big oil companies that are making money every time you fill up a tank of gas. Let's keep investing in homegrown energy sources that have never been more promising, that are good for our economy, that are good for our national security, that will create jobs and are good for our planet as well. That's the path we're offering. That's the choice we're going to have in this election. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you, Obama!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back, but we got to vote. It's up to you whether we go back to a health care system that let insurance companies decide who to cover and when. Or we can keep moving forward with the new health care law that's already cut costs and covered more people and saved more lives. (Applause.)

Governor Romney promised that on his first day of office, he's going to sit right down and grab a pen, and end Obamacare.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, what that means is right away he'd kick nearly 7 million young people off their parent's plan. He'd take hope away from tens of millions of Americans with preexisting conditions by repealing reform. He calls it Obamacare and I like the name. I do care. (Applause.)

We fought to pass that law for families like Ryan's. We know the heartbreak of a broken health care system. So I don't mind if folks think I care. I do care. (Applause.) And I don't know exactly what the other side is proposing. I guess you could call it "Romney Doesn't Care." (Laughter.) But this law is here to stay. (Applause.) We're not going to refight the battles of the last four years. We're going to implement this law, make the health care system work for families all across America. It is time to move forward. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

Of course, this isn't the only battle that they want to refight. They want to refight some battles we thought were settled in the last century. So in November, you will have some say as to whether women should be trusted to make their own health care decisions. I think they are. (Applause.)

You will have some say as to whether students who were brought here by their parents as infants and have gone to school here, and understand themselves to be Americans and have pledged allegiance, that suddenly they should be kicked out of the only country they've ever known.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: I don't think so. I've got a different view. (Applause.)

You will have some say as to whether we should rewrite the Constitution the way the other side is proposing, to prevent gay Americans from being able to marry the person they love.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: You can reaffirm that the strength of our character doesn't come from shoving people to the sidelines. It comes from hearing every voice, harnessing every talent -- realizing that in America, we are greater together than we are on our own. That's who we are. (Applause.) That's who we are and that's what's at stake in this election.

This November, you get to decide the future of the Afghanistan war. Governor Romney had nothing to say about Afghanistan last week. Yes, he hasn't offered a plan for the 33,000 troops who will have come home from this war by the end of this month. (Applause.)

He said that ending the war in Iraq was "tragic." I think it was the right thing to do. And I said I would do it, and we did. (Applause.) I said we'd take out bin Laden, and we did. (Applause.)

We are bringing our troops home from Afghanistan. And I've set a timetable. We will have them all out of there by 2014. Governor Romney doesn't have a timetable. I think he's wrong. That's what's at stake in this election. And as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we will serve our veterans as well as they've served us, because nobody who fights for us should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

So, Boulder, on issue after issue, Governor Romney and Congressman Ryan want to go backwards. But the story of America is about going forwards. Nobody understands that better than folks in the West, because this is a region that was settled by people who understand we're not looking back, we're going forward. (Applause.) We're going forward to the next frontier, to new horizons. And in two months, you get to choose the path that will lead us to that better future.

But understand, over the next two months the other side is going to spend more money than we've ever seen in our lives, with an avalanche of attack ads and insults and making stuff up, just making stuff up. (Laughter.) And they'll be supported by $10 million checks that are being written by wealthy donors who are trying to protect things just as they are.

And what they're counting on is that you get so discouraged by this, that at a certain point you just say, you know what, I'm going to leave it up to somebody else. I'm going to let big oil write the energy bills, and I'm going to let insurance companies decide when to cover somebody, and we're going to let politicians dictate what a woman can or can't do when it comes to her own health.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: They're counting on you to accept their version of the things the way they ought to be. And I'm counting on something different. I'm counting on you. (Applause.)

You've always had powerful forces in this country who benefit from the status quo, and they bet against the American people. And I've always bet on you. I don't believe you're cynical. I don't believe in your complacency. Those other guys, they always lose the bet over the long term. And they're going to lose the bet this time as well. (Applause.)

But that's going to depend on you. It's going to depend on you registering to vote. It's going to depend on you showing up to vote. I was over at the The Buff before I came here and the food looked really good. (Laughter.) People were having mimosas and Bloody Mary's. (Laughter.) And I was thinking to myself, I could see folks, like, forgetting to vote. (Laughter.) They're having too much fun.

But that's why you're so important, because you're going to have to set an example for the person next to you in class. You're going to have to remind them, have you voted yet? You're going to have to call up your family or your cousins in the other states. You're going to have to reach up and close that gap between what America is and what it should be -- because you know what, you can't wait on somebody else. It turns out other folks are waiting on you. They're waiting to see if you'll register. They're waiting to see if you'll vote. They're waiting to see if you'll lead.

Colorado, we have come too far to turn back now. We've got more good jobs to create. We've got more homegrown energy to generate. We've got more young people to send to college. We've got more good teachers to hire. (Applause.) We've got more good schools to build. We've got one more war to end. We've got more troops we've got to bring home. We've got more veterans we've got to take care of. (Applause.) We've got more doors of opportunity that we have to open for every single person who's willing to work hard and walk through them. (Applause.) That's why I'm asking you for a second term.

And if you're willing to work with me and knock on some doors with me, make some phone calls with me; if you're willing to vote for me in November, we will win Boulder and we will win Colorado. We will win this election. (Applause.) We will finish what we started. And we will remind the world why it is that the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you. And God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Scott High School
Toledo, Ohio

12:30 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Toledo! (Applause.) Thank you, thank you. It is good to be in Toledo, Ohio. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Obama! Obama! Obama!

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you so much. Now, first of all, I've got to say thank you for Kenyatta, for that outstanding introduction. Give Kenyatta a big round of applause. (Applause.) I was listening backstage and I thought I heard a little preaching going on there. (Laughter.) Folks in the crowd were going "yeah", "wow." (Laughter.) So Kenyatta can talk -- no doubt about it.

It is great to see so many good friends --

AUDIENCE: We love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.) It's great to see so many good friends who work so hard on behalf of working families every day. We've got Sherrod Brown -- (applause) -- one of the best senators in the country. Marcy Kaptur, one of the best congresswomen in the country. (Applause.) We've got my friend and your friend, daughter of a Teamster, our Secretary of Labor Hilda Solis in the house. (Applause.) We've got your outstanding UAW President Bob King in the house. (Applause.) President of the AFL-CIO, Rich Trumka, is here. (Applause.) And the President of the National Education Association, Dennis van Roekel. (Applause.)

So we've got some working people in the house here. (Applause.) And to everybody who is working hard each and every day, Happy Labor Day. (Applause.) Happy Labor Day.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We got your back, Obama.

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you. (Applause.) Now, for those of you who have got a seat, feel free to take a seat. I've got some things to say. I've got some things to say here. For those of you who don't have a seat, make sure to bend your knees a little bit. We don't want you fainting. Sometimes, folks are standing too long -- they drop off. (Laughter.)

Now, we're on our way to our convention in Charlotte this week. (Applause.) But I wanted to stop here in Toledo to spend this day with you -- (applause) -- a day that belongs to the working men and women of America -- teachers and factory workers, construction workers and students and families and small business owners. And I know we've got some proud autoworkers in the house helping to bring Toledo back. (Applause.)

After all, it's working folks like you who fought for jobs and opportunity for generations of American workers. It's working people like you who helped to lay the cornerstones of middle-class security, things that people now sometimes take for granted, but weren't always there -- the 40-hour workweek, weekends, paid leave, pensions, the minimum wage, health care, Social Security, Medicare. Those things happened because working people organized and mobilized.

It is unions like yours that helped to forge the basic bargain of this country -- the bargain that built the greatest middle class and the most prosperous country and the most prosperous economy that the world has ever known. (Applause.)

And you know what that bargain is, because it's a simple one. It's a bargain that says if you work hard, if you're responsible, then your work should be rewarded. (Applause.) That if you put in enough effort, you should be able to find a job that pays the bills. You should afford a home to call your own. That you'll have health care you can count on if you get sick. That you can put away enough to retire, maybe take a vacation once in a while -- nothing fancy, but you can enjoy your friends and your family. And, most importantly, that you can provide your children with an education to make sure that they do even better than you did. (Applause.)

It's an American promise that says no matter who you are, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter what your last name is, no matter who you love, you can make it here if you try. (Applause.) And that's what we're fighting for, Toledo. That's what's at stake in this election. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Now, last week, the other party gave their sales pitch at their convention down in Florida.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo, vote. (Laughter and applause.) Vote. And I have to say, it was something to see. Despite all the challenges that we face in this new century, we saw three straight days of an agenda out of the last century. It was a rerun. You might as well have watched it on black-and-white TV, with some rabbit ears on there. (Laughter and applause.) It should have been on "Nick at Nite." (Laughter.)

Now, if you didn't DVR it, let me give you a basic recap of what they said. The economy is bad. It's all Obama's fault. And Governor Romney has the secret to creating jobs and growing the economy. That's a basic summary. They spent the most time on me. (Laughter.) They were talking about me. (Laughter.)

And there was a lot of "hard truths" and "bold choices," they said, but nobody ever bothered to tell you what they really were. And when Governor Romney had his chance to let you in on the secret sauce of job creation -- (laughter) -- he did not offer you a single new idea. It was just a retread of the same old policies that have been sticking it to the middle class for years. (Applause.)

And then, after the convention, Governor Romney came here to Ohio, and he said he's going to be the coach that leads America to a "winning season." The problem is everybody has already seen his economic playbook. We know what's in it.

On 1st down, he hikes taxes by nearly $2,000 on the average family with kids in order to pay for a massive tax cut for multi-millionaires. That's on 1st down. It sounds like unnecessary roughness to me. (Laughter and applause.)

On 2nd down, he calls an audible, and undoes reforms that are there to prevent another financial crisis and bank bailout. He wants to get rid of rules that are there to protect our air and our water, and workers' rights, and protections to make sure health care is there for you when you get sick.

And then, on 3rd down, he calls for a Hail Mary -- ending Medicare as we know it by giving seniors a voucher that leaves them to pay any additional cost out of their pocket. There's a flag on the play -- loss of up to an additional $6,400 a year for the same benefits you get now.

That's their playbook. That's their economic plan. And I've got one piece of advice for you about the Romney/Ryan game plan, Ohio: Punt it away! (Applause.) It won't work. It won't win the game. You don't need that coach. That's a losing season.

Now, there was one person at Governor Romney's convention last week who wasn't entirely on script. (Laughter.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: No, no -- because while they were busy telling folks how bad everything is, your Governor, John Kasich --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo --

AUDIENCE: Vote! (Laughter and applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: John Kasich stood up there and told everybody that Ohio is now number one in the Midwest in job creation, fourth best in America -- which got folks kind of confused, because if it's all Obama's fault and nothing is going right, what's going on in Ohio? (Applause.)

Now, I guess the theory was that it's all the Governor's doing. But I think we need to refresh his memory -- because a lot of those jobs are autoworker jobs like yours. (Applause.) The American auto industry supports one in eight jobs in this state. And just a few years ago, when the auto industry was flat-lining, what was in his and Governor Romney's playbook? "Let Detroit go bankrupt." You remember that?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, think about what that would have meant not just for Ohio but for America. If we had turned our backs on you, if America had thrown in the towel like that, GM and Chrysler wouldn't exist today. The suppliers and the distributors that get their business from these companies would have died off, too. Then even Ford could have gone down as well. Production: shut down. Factories: shuttered. Once proud companies chopped up and sold off in scraps. And all of you -- the men and women who built these companies with your own hands -- you would have been benched for good. That's not a good play. We didn't run that play.

More than one million Americans across the country would have lost their jobs in the middle of the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression. In communities across the Midwest, it would have been another Great Depression. And it's not just the workers themselves; think about everybody who depends on you -- schoolteachers, small business owners, the server in the diner who knows your order before you walk in, the bartender who knows your order before you walk in. (Applause.) Their livelihoods were at stake as well, and so was something else.

How many autoworkers here worked the assembly line, but your dads and your granddads, maybe your mom, grandmas worked on that same line? How many people are second or third or fourth generation? How many of you have sons and daughters who hope to work on those same assembly lines? (Applause.)

These jobs are worth more than just a paycheck. They're a source of pride. They're a ticket into a middle-class life. These companies are worth more than just the cars that they build. They're a symbol of America's innovation. They're a source of our manufacturing might. If that is not worth fighting for, then what is?

Ohio, we're not about to take a knee and do nothing. We weren't going to give up on your jobs and your families and your communities. We weren't going to let Detroit go bankrupt, or Lordstown go bankrupt, or Toledo go bankrupt. I stood with American workers. I stood with American manufacturing. I believed in you. I bet on you. (Applause.) I'll make that bet any day of the week. And because of that bet, three years later, that bet is paying off for America. (Applause.) Three years later, the American auto industry has come roaring back -- nearly 250,000 new jobs.

So it's a little funny watching Governor Romney and Governor Kasich and others just try to rewrite history now that you're back on your feet. These are the folks who said if we went forward with our plan, then -- I'm quoting here -- "you can kiss the American automotive industry goodbye." Now they're saying it was their idea all along. (Laughter.) Seriously. Or what they're saying is, well, the problem is that you, the workers, made out like bandits in this whole thing; that we did what we did because it was all about paying back unions. Really? I mean, even by the standards of political campaigns, that's a lot of you know what.

Workers made some of the biggest sacrifices. About 700,000 retirees saw a reduction in the health benefits they had earned. Hours were reduced, pay and wages scaled back. You gave up promises made to you over the years for the sake and the survival of your fellow workers and their families and the company. You made sacrifices. (Applause.) Which is why I don't understand why these folks have the nerve to talk about you like you're some greedy special interest that needs to be beaten down.

After all that unions have done to build and protect the middle class, they were standing up there at their convention saying you're responsible for the problems we face. Their plan says the best way to help workers is to roll back workers' rights; to overturn laws that make sure construction workers get a fair wage; to blame teachers and firefighters and police officers and other public servants for our economic challenges -- instead of what happened on Wall Street and a historic financial collapse.

So, Toledo, what you need to know is this: When they're trying to take your collective bargaining rights away, when they're trying to pass so-called "right to work" laws that really mean right to work for less and less, you should know this isn't about economics. This is about politics.

This notion that we should have let the auto industry die and that we should pursue anti-worker policies in the hopes that unions like yours will unravel -- it's part of the same old you're-on-your-own, top-down philosophy that says we should just leave everybody to fend for themselves.

Now, on Thursday night, I'm going to offer you what I believe is a better path forward -- (applause) -- a path that's going to grow this economy and create more good jobs, and strengthen the middle class. (Applause.) And the good news is, starting on October 2nd, Ohio gets its say because you get to vote early. (Applause.) You can choose which path we take. You could choose their plan.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo.

AUDIENCE: Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: You can choose to give massive new tax cuts to folks who have already made it. Or you can choose my plan -- to keep taxes low for every American who is in the middle class and every American who is striving to get into that middle class. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I promised to cut taxes by a total -- for middle-class families, and I have cut taxes by a total of about $3,600 for the typical family. (Applause.) And now I'm running to make sure that taxes aren't raised a single dime on the first $250,000 of any family's income. Now, that's 98 percent of Americans. It may be 99.9 percent of this auditorium. (Applause.) Your taxes won't go up, because my belief is you need relief. I don't need relief. Mitt Romney doesn't need relief. He needs it less than me. (Laughter.)

But that's a choice in this election. You can choose whether we give up new jobs and new industries to countries like China, or whether we fight to keep those jobs in states like Ohio. (Applause.) Unlike my opponent, I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. I want to give those tax breaks to companies that are investing right here in Toledo, right here in the United States -- all across Ohio, all across the Midwest. (Applause.)

You can decide whether borrowing money from your parents is an answer when a young person asks how they're going to go to college. You heard about that, right? This young college student says, how can I get some help going to college? He says, well, you need to borrow money from your parents. (Laughter.) Now, I guess that's one path. That's one approach.

I've got a different approach that says let's make sure Americans once again lead the world in educating our kids and training our workers for the jobs of tomorrow. (Applause.) And that means let's hire more great teachers, especially in math and science. Let's help more folks go to community colleges to get trained in the skills that employers are hiring for right now. (Applause.) Because the truth is, some sort of higher education, whether it's four-year or a two-year technical school -- some form of higher education -- that's not a luxury anymore. That is an economic necessity that every family should be able to afford. And that's what I'm going to be fighting for. (Applause.) That's what I'm going to be fighting for. (Applause.)

Now, Ohio, you can choose an energy plan like the other guy is offering that's written by and for the oil companies. Or you can choose an all-of-the-above strategy for American energy, which means we drill for more oil, we mine for more coal. But it also means that we're going after the new energy sources of the future.

Now, my opponent said renewable energy sources are "imaginary." The folks here in Toledo manufacturing solar panels might disagree with that. (Applause.) These jobs aren't a "fad" -- they're not imaginary. They're our future. And unlike my opponent, I want to stop giving a $4 billion-a-year taxpayer subsidy to big oil companies that are making money every time you go to the pump, and I want to use that money to invest in homegrown energy sources that have never been more promising and are creating jobs right here in Ohio. (Applause.)

It's up to you whether we go back to the old health care system that let insurance companies decide when to cover you and when to drop you, and drop you when you needed it most. But I think we should keep moving forward with the new health care law that's already cutting costs and covering more people and saving lives. They call it Obamacare. It's true, I care. It's true. (Applause.)

I guess the other side's plan is the "Romney Doesn't Care" plan. (Laughter.) But now is not the time to refight the battles of the last four years. We need to move forward.

You get to decide what the future of the war in Afghanistan is. Last week, did you notice Governor Romney did not say a word about our troops who are in harm's way over there? And because of my plan, 33,000 of them will have come home by the end of this month. (Applause.)

He said ending the war in Iraq was "tragic." I think it was the right thing to do. I said we'd end that war -- and we did. (Applause.) I said we'd go after al Qaeda -- we did. (Applause.) I said we'd take out bin Laden -- we did. (Applause.)

Our troops are out of Iraq. We're bringing them home from Afghanistan. And as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we will serve our veterans as well as they've served us, because nobody who fights for this country should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. That's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

So we've got some big choices we've got to make. And the other side is going to spend the next two months -- they're fighting back with everything they've got. They're going to give you an avalanche of attack ads and insults and distraction. And they may massage the truth a little bit. And it will be supported with $10 million checks from wealthy donors. And they know that even if you don't buy into their plan, even if you don't vote for them, they're thinking, well, maybe we'll discourage people. We'll get folks so disillusioned by all these negative ads, all this negativity, that you'll just decide to sit this one out.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: But you know what, I'm counting on something different. I'm counting on you. (Applause.) I'm counting on you. If you're not registered to vote, then you've got to go to GottaRegister.com. Now, that's not "GotToRegister.com." This is "gotta" -- G-o-t-t-a-Register.com (Applause.)

If you want to find out how to vote early, starting on October 2nd, then you need to go to GottaVote.com. That's not "GotToVote.com," that's "gotta vote" -- (laughter) -- GottaRegister, GottaVote -- because we've got a whole lot of more work to do. (Applause.)

We've got more good jobs to create. We've got more good cars to build. We've got more schools to upgrade, and more great teachers to hire, and more young people to send to college. (Applause.) And we've got more troops we've got to bring home and more veterans we've got to take care of, and more doors of opportunity that we've got to open up for everybody who is willing to walk through them. That's what's at stake in this election. That's why I'm asking for your vote. (Applause.)

That's why I need you to knock on doors. That's why I need you to get on the phone. (Applause.) I need you to talk to your friends. I need you to talk to your neighbors. I need you to stand with me, Ohio. (Applause.) And if we win Toledo, we will win Ohio. And if we win Ohio, we'll win this election. (Applause.) And if we win this election, we will finish what we started, and we will remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

Thank you. God bless you. And God bless America.
(Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Norfolk State University
Norfolk, Virginia

12:37 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Norfolk State! (Applause.) Go Spartans! (Applause.) Can everybody please give Ed a huge round of applause not just for that introduction, but for his extraordinary service to our country and to our veterans? (Applause.) It's good to see all of you.

We've got Bobby Scott, your great congressman in the house. We've got your next congressman, Paul Hirschbiel is here. (Applause.) We are very proud to have an Olympic gold medalist, Francena McCorory, 4x400 relay winner. (Applause.) I'm not that fast. (Laughter.) I was watching those folks on TV -- I said, those are some fast people.

It is good to be back in Norfolk! (Applause.) And this is our last stop on the way to the convention in Charlotte. (Applause.) I decided to come back here today despite the fact that, back in March, Norfolk State ruined my NCAA bracket. (Applause.) I had Missouri going pretty deep. But I want you to know I've got no hard feelings. (Laughter.) Let's just say you owe me one. (Laughter.)

Now, I know that whatever I say here today, it's going to be, at best, a distant second to the speech you will hear tonight from the star of the Obama family, Michelle Obama. (Applause.) This is just like a relay, and you start off with the fastest person. (Laughter.) So I'm going to be at home and I'm going to be watching it with our girls. And I'm going to try not to let them see their daddy cry, because when Michelle starts talking I start getting all misty.

AUDIENCE: Awww --

THE PRESIDENT: But I'm looking forward to being in Charlotte myself; I'll go down there tomorrow. And last week, our friends in the other party had their convention.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo, vote! (Applause.) Vote!

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, just in case some of you missed it, some of you didn't DVR the Republican Convention, let me give you a basic recap. Basically, they said, first of all, everything is bad and it's Obama's fault, and Governor Romney knows the secret to creating jobs and growing the economy. The only problem was he kept it secret. (Laughter.) There was a lot of talk about "hard truths" and "bold choices," but they never bothered to tell you what they were. And when my opponent had the chance to offer his secret sauce, he did not offer a single new idea. It was just retreads of the same old policies that have been sticking it to the middle class for years.

They spent a lot of time talking about me, but they didn't spend a lot of time talking about you. (Applause.) They didn't talk a lot about how we're going to move forward so that the middle class is strong, so that the economy is growing for everybody. They spent even less time talking about their plans. And that's not just because they know you won't like it, but it's because they know you saw that happened when we tried it. You've lived through it, and you know we can't afford to repeat it. (Applause.)

Think about it, a plan that says we're going to make middle-class families pay for another budget-busting $250,000 tax cut for people making $3 million a year or more -- that's not really persuasive to most people. We don't think that will magically translate into jobs or prosperity for people. We know families won't be better off if we undo all the Wall Street reforms we've put into place to prevent another financial crisis; or that we're going to be better off if we remove rules to protect our air and our water; or if we're going to take away protections we put in place to make sure that health care is there for you when you get sick. (Applause.)

And we are certainly positive that the best way to strengthen Medicare isn't to turn it into a voucher that leaves seniors paying additional costs out of pocket.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: That's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to lower the deficit. It's not a plan to strengthen the middle class. It's not a plan to strengthen this country.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: We believe in something better. (Applause.) We believe in an America that says our economic strength doesn't come from the top down, it comes from the middle out. It comes from the bottom up. It comes from workers and students, and small business owners and a strong, thriving middle class.

We believe in an America where going to school doesn't depend on how much money you have. (Applause.) We believe in an America where getting decent health care doesn't depend on how much money you've got. (Applause.)

We believe in an America that leads with our military, but also takes care of our veterans and stands up for our ideals and shows the power of our example. (Applause.)

We believe in an America where no matter who you are, where you come from, what you look like, what your last name is, you can pursue your own happiness, and you can make it if you try. (Applause.) That's what these last four years have been about. That's what this campaign is about. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Now, the other side may not have been eager to talk about their ideas. But on Thursday night, I'm going to look forward to sharing mine with you. On Thursday night, I will offer what I believe is a better path forward -- a path that will create good jobs and strengthen our middle class and grow our economy. And the good news is, Virginia, that in just two months, you get to choose which path we take. (Applause.)

You can choose their path -- give massive new tax cuts to folks who have already made it, or you can choose my plan. (Applause.) I want to keep taxes low for every American who's out there still trying to make it. I've cut taxes by a total of about $3,600 for the typical family. I kept my promise to cut taxes for middle-class families and for small businesses. (Applause.)

And now I'm running to make sure that taxes aren't raised by a single dime on your family's first $250,000 of income, which, by the way, means 98 percent of Americans wouldn't pay a single dime more in income tax. (Applause.)

But that will be up to you. It will be up to your vote. I mean, you can decide whether we give new jobs and new industries to countries like China, or whether we fight for those jobs in places like Virginia. (Applause.) Unlike my opponent, I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Let's give those tax breaks to companies that are investing right here in American plants and American factories and American jobs so we can go out there and make products stamped with three proud words: Made in America. That's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

When a young person asked Governor Romney what he could do to help folks go to college, he suggested, "borrow money from your parents."

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo --

AUDIENCE: Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: Vote! But maybe he wasn't aware that there are actually some young people whose parents would love to give them the money and don't have it. So that's one path.

My path is to make sure America once again leads the world in educating our kids and training our workers. Let's help more young people afford the kind of education you students get here at Norfolk State. (Applause.) Let's keep investing more in our HBCUs. (Applause.) Let's continue to make sure that Pell grants are there for folks who need it. Let's help more folks go to community college to get the skills and the training that companies are hiring for right now. (Applause.)

Governor Romney wants to end the tax credit we created that is saving families up to $10,000 over four years in tuition costs. I want to expand it. Because higher education, that's not a luxury anymore. It is an economic necessity in the 21st century for every family, and every family should be able to afford it. That's what we're fighting for. That's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

But it's going to be up to you. You'll make the choice. Virginia, you can choose an energy plan written by and for the big oil companies -- that's Governor Romney's plan. Or you can choose a strategy that taps into all of America's resources and ingenuity. Renewable energy isn't "imaginary." Those jobs that we're creating in wind power and solar power, those aren't a "fad." And I think it's time to stop giving $4 billion a year in taxpayer subsidies that are going to big oil companies that are making money every time you go to the pump, and let's invest in homegrown energy sources that will create good jobs here in the United States of America. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

And it's up to you whether we go back to a health care system that says insurance companies can deny you coverage whenever they want. I think we need to keep moving forward with the new health care law -- it's cutting costs, it's covering more people, it's saving lives. They like to call it Obamacare -- well, let me tell you, I do care. (Applause.) I care about all the young people who are able to stay on their parent's plans now. I care about the seniors who are seeing lower prescription drug costs. I care about folks with preexisting conditions who can't be denied care now. (Applause.)

Governor Romney has promised that he would overturn Obamacare on his first day in office, which means he'd kick nearly 7 million young people off their parent's plans. He'd make seniors' prescription drugs more expensive. Maybe we should call his plan "Romney Doesn't Care." (Laughter and applause.) But I do care. And this law is here to stay. And we're not going to refight the battles we've already fought over the last four years. We're not going backwards. We're moving forward. That's why I'm running for reelection. (Applause.)

This November, you get to decide the future of the war in Afghanistan. By the end of this month, I will have brought home 33,000 troops. (Applause.) I've said we will end this war in 2014. Governor Romney last week didn't have a word to say about Afghanistan. He said the way I ended the war in Iraq was "tragic."

Listen, I promised I'd end the war in Iraq, and I did. I said we'd take out bin Laden -- we did. (Applause.) Getting our troops out of Iraq was the right thing to do. Bringing our troops home from Afghanistan in a responsible way is the right thing to do. (Applause.) And as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we will serve our veterans as well as they've served us, because nobody who fights for this country should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. That's a solemn obligation. (Applause.)

That's why I fought to strengthen the Post-9/11 GI Bill. That's why we secured the largest increase in VA funding in decades. (Applause.) That's why I fought to create a new tax cut for business owners who hire veterans. That's why Michelle and Jill Biden challenged CEOs to hire 100,000 of our veterans by the end of the next year. Last month, Michelle and Jill stood with those CEOs and announced they've already hit 125,000 veterans being hired. They are beating their schedule by a year. That's the commitment we've shown. (Applause.)

So, Virginia, Norfolk, on issue after issue, Governor Romney and Congressman Ryan, they want to take us backwards. But the story of America is not about going backwards; it's about going forward. (Applause.) And in two months, you will actually choose whether or not we travel that path.

But I want everybody to understand, over these next two months, over these next 63 days, you will see more ads, more negative ads, more insults and distractions and baloney, than you've ever seen. And it will be supported by $10 million checks from wealthy donors that like things just the way they are. And they're counting on you, maybe not to vote for Romney, but they're counting on you to feel discouraged. And they figure if you don't vote, then big oil will write our energy future, and insurance companies will write our health care plans, and politicians will dictate what a woman can or can't do when it comes to her own health. They're counting on you just to accept their version of things.

But I'm counting on something different. Those who oppose change, those who benefit from an unjust status quo, they're always betting on complacency and cynicism of the American people. But throughout America's history, they've always lost that bet, and I think they're going to lose that bet this time, too. (Applause.)

But, Virginia, that depends on you. It depends on you registering to vote. It depends on you showing up to vote. It depends on you setting an example for the next person in class, or in your workplace, or in the next town, or your cousin in the next state. You've got to call them. You've got to let them know what is at stake; that we can close the gap between what America should be and what it is right now -- because they may be waiting on you. They're waiting to see if you register. They're waiting to see if you vote.

We've come too far to turn back now. (Applause.) We've created a lot of jobs, but we've got more jobs to create. We've created a lot of homegrown energy, but we've got more energy to generate. We've got a lot more young people to send to college. We've got a lot more good teachers we've got to hire, and more good schools we've got to build. (Applause.) We've got more troops we've got to bring home, and we've got more veterans we've got to take care of. We've got more doors of opportunity we've got to open up to everybody who is willing to work hard and walk through those doors. And that's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.)

And if you're willing to stand with me, and you're willing to make some phone calls for me, if you're willing to knock on some doors for me, if you're willing to vote for me, we'll win Norfolk again. (Applause.) We'll win Virginia again. (Applause.) We'll win this election. We will finish what we started. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you, Virginia, and God bless America.
(Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

St. Petersburg College
Seminole, Florida

11:11 A.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, St. Pete! (Applause.) I am fired up! (Applause.) I am ready to go -- forward! (Applause.)

It is good to be back in Florida. (Applause.) It is good -- how's everybody doing today? (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: All right. Now, first thing I want to do is make sure everybody is staying hydrated. (Applause.) And if you've been standing here a while, bend your knees. I don't want anybody falling out.

I want to thank Charlie Crist for his introduction, for his support -- (applause) -- for showing that the values that we're fighting for are not Democratic values or Republican values, they are American values. That's what we're fighting for. (Applause.)

We've got one of the finest senators in the country, your Senator, Bill Nelson, here. (Applause.) One of the best members of Congress that we've got -- Kathy Castor is here. (Applause.) And all of you are here. (Applause.) I'm really excited about that.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. That's why I came. (Applause.)

Now, we just had our convention in Charlotte, North Carolina. Folks there could not have been more welcoming. Michelle -- what can I say? (Applause.) As the other men in the audience know, our main goal when we marry is to improve our gene pool. (Laughter.) That's why my daughters turned out good. (Laughter.) Because you just -- you marry up and you marry somebody superior to yourself. And you just -- you beg them until they marry you. (Laughter.) Persistence is the key.

And then you've got President Clinton who made the case as only he can. (Applause.) After he spoke, somebody sent out a tweet -- they said, you should appoint him secretary of explaining stuff. (Laughter and applause.) I like that -- secretary of explaining stuff. Although, I have to admit, it didn't really say "stuff." I cleaned that up a little bit. (Laughter.)

And then two days ago, I did my best to lay out the stakes in this election, because they are big stakes. Both sides have made their arguments now. And I know you have a lot of national Republicans in the neighborhood, making their argument.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: We've made ours. And so now you've got a big choice to make. And by the way, don't boo -- vote. (Applause.) Vote.

I honestly believe this is the clearest choice of any time in our generation, because it's a choice not just between two candidates or two political parties. This is a choice between two fundamentally different paths for America, two fundamentally different visions for our future.

Now, ours is a fight on behalf of that basic bargain that built the largest middle class and the strongest economy the world has ever known -- the bargain that says if you work hard it will pay off. (Applause.) The bargain that says responsibility will be rewarded, and everybody has got a fair shot, and everybody does their fair share, and everybody plays by the same set of rules -- (applause) -- from Main Street to Wall Street to Washington, D.C. That's what we're fighting for. (Applause.)

That basic bargain is why I ran for President in the first place, because too many jobs were disappearing overseas; too many families were struggling to make the mortgage, to put food on the table. People were having to borrow just for day-to-day expenses -- to fill up the gas tank. And over time, more and more of that debt built up. And then this whole house of cards came tumbling down in the worst economic crisis, the biggest financial crisis since the Great Depression. And millions of innocent Americans lost their jobs and their homes and their life savings. A tragedy that we are still fighting to recover from.

Now, our friends, at their convention, they were more than happy to talk about everything they think is wrong with America, but they didn't say much about how they'd make it right. (Applause.) They want your vote, but they don't want you to know their plan. And that's because --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We want you, President! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: -- that's because all they've got to offer is the same prescriptions that they've had for 30 years: Tax cuts, tax cuts, gut a few regulations, some more tax cuts. Tax cuts when times are good. Tax cuts when times are bad. Tax cuts to help you lose a few extra pounds -- (laughter) -- tax cuts to help your love life. (Laughter.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: It doesn't help! (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: Somebody said it doesn't help. (Laughter.) You tried those tax cuts, huh? (Laughter.)

Now, listen, actually it does help when you give it to folks who need it. That's why I've cut taxes for middle-class families and for small business owners 18 times. (Applause.) But I don't believe, and you don't believe, that another round of tax breaks for millionaires is going to bring good jobs back to our shores, or pay down our deficit.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: I don't believe that firing teachers or kicking students off of financial aid -- students who go right here to this institution -- (applause) -- that somehow that's going to help our economy, or help us compete with scientists and engineers coming out of China.

After all that we have been through, do we really think that it would make sense to roll back regulations on Wall Street?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: That somehow that's going to help small businesswomen expand, or laid-off construction workers keep their homes?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Let me tell you that we have been there. We've tried what they're peddling. It didn't work. We're not going back. (Applause.) We're going forward. We are going forward. We are going forward. (Applause.)

I won't pretend the path I'm offering is quick or that it's going to be easy. I never have. Sometimes I ask people to go back to 2008 and look at what I said. I said this was going to take some time because these problems have been building up for a long time. Bill Clinton reminded us on Wednesday night, it's going to take more than a few years to solve challenges that have been built up for decades.

But let me tell you something. When our opponents say this nation is in decline, they are dead wrong. This is America. (Applause.) We still have the best workers in the world and the best entrepreneurs in the world. We've got the best scientists and the best researchers. (Applause.) We've got the best colleges and the best universities. (Applause.) We are a young nation with the greatest diversity of talent and ingenuity from every corner of the globe. So no matter what the naysayers may say for political reasons, no matter how dark they try to make everything look, there's not a country on Earth that wouldn't gladly trade places with the United States of America. (Applause.)

And I am here to tell you our problems can be solved, and our challenges can be met. (Applause.) The path we offer may be harder, but it leads to a better place. And I'm asking you to choose that future. I am asking you to rally not just behind me but around a set of goals for your country -- goals in manufacturing and energy, in education and national security, in reducing our deficit. Real, achievable goals that will lead to new jobs and more opportunity, and rebuild this economy on a stronger foundation.

That's what we can do in the next four years, and that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: That's why I'm asking for four more years.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, I want you to -- in case you missed it two days ago, I want to repeat in very plain terms what goals I'm talking about.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Go ahead, Mr. President!

THE PRESIDENT: You said I can go ahead? (Applause.) Okay. I'm going to go ahead then. (Laughter.)

Number one, I've got a plan to export more products and outsource fewer jobs. (Applause.) After a decade of decline, this country has now created over half a million jobs in the last two and a half years alone just in manufacturing. (Applause.) That's faster than any time since the '90s. We reinvented a dying auto industry that's back on top of the world. (Applause.) And now you've got a choice -- we can keep giving more tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas, just like the other side is arguing for.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: Or we can start rewarding companies that open new plants and train new workers and create new jobs right here in Florida. (Applause.) We can help big factories and small businesses double their exports, and create a million new manufacturing jobs in the next four years. You can make that happen. That's part one.

Part two: I've got a plan to control more of our own energy. After 30 years of inaction, we raised fuel standards so that by the middle of the next decade, your cars and trucks will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.) That will save you money. It will help the environment.

We've doubled our use of renewable energy, and thousands of Americans now have jobs building wind turbines and long-lasting batteries. (Applause.) Today, the United States of America is less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in nearly two decades. Think about that. (Applause.)

So we're moving to control our own energy. The other side, they don't have a real plan. So you've got a choice between a plan that wants to just reverse the progress we've made, or one that builds on it. And let me tell you, unlike my opponent, I'm not going to let oil companies write this country's energy plan, or endanger our coastline, or collect another $4 billion in corporate welfare from our taxpayers. We're not going to let them do that. (Applause.)

We've got a better path. We're going to invest in wind and solar, clean coal technology. (Applause.) We're going to help farmers and scientists harness new biofuels to power cars and trucks. We're going to put construction workers back to work building homes and factories that waste less energy, and retrofitting old buildings and homes to use less energy. (Applause.)

We're developing a hundred years' supply of natural gas that's right beneath our feet. If you choose this path, we can cut our imports in half by 2020 and support more than 600,000 new jobs in natural gas alone.

That's the second part of the plan. You want to hear the third?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Third, I've got a plan to give more Americans the chance to gain the skills they need to compete. Education was the gateway to opportunity for me and Michelle. (Applause.) It's the gateway to a middle-class life.

For the first time in nearly a generation, every state just about has answered our call to raise their standards for teaching and learning. Some of the worst schools in the country have made real gains in math and reading, including here in Florida. (Applause.) Millions of students are paying less for college today, including students here, because we took on a system that was wasting billions of dollars giving student loan money to banks and lenders instead of directly to students. (Applause.)

So now, you've got a choice. We can gut education like these other folks we're recommending.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Or we can decide that in the United States of America, no child should have her dreams deferred because of a crowded classroom or a crumbling school. (Applause.) No family should have to set aside a college acceptance letter because they don't have the money. No company should have to look for workers in China because they couldn't find ones with the right skills right here at home. (Applause.)

So help me recruit 100,000 math and science teachers in the next 10 years, and improve early childhood education, and give 2 million workers the chance to learn skills in that community college that will lead directly to a job. (Applause.) And let's work with colleges and universities to cut in half the growth of tuition costs over the next 10 years -- because higher education is not a luxury anymore; it is an economic necessity that everybody should be able to afford. (Applause.)

And we can meet that goal together. You can choose that future if you're willing to move forward with me. (Applause.)

Fourth, my plan -- you all get four. (Laughter.) Fourth, my plan would reduce our deficit without sticking it to the middle class. (Applause.) We're all concerned about the deficit. After two wars, two tax cuts that weren't paid for, we have a challenge that we've got to now deal with --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Can't go back.

THE PRESIDENT: Can't go backwards. (Applause.)

Independent analysis shows that the plan I've put forward would cut our deficit by $4 trillion. (Applause.) And I've already worked with Republicans to cut $1 trillion in spending. I'm willing to do more. We've got to make sure government is lean, and programs that don't work, we've got to get rid of them so we can pay for the things that do.

And I want to reform the tax code, so that it is simple and fair, and so that it asks the wealthiest households to pay higher taxes on incomes over $250,000. (Applause.) Keep in mind, that means if you're a millionaire, you'd still get a tax -- you'd keep your tax out for the first $250,000. (Laughter.) But after that, you'd pay the same rate we had when Bill Clinton was President, the same rate when we created 23 million new jobs, the biggest surplus in history and a whole lot of millionaires to boot. (Applause.)

And, by the way, the reason that I want to keep tax cuts for middle-class families, but I don't need one, Mitt Romney doesn't need one, is because what happens when middle-class families, when teachers and construction workers and receptionists -- what happens when folks have a little money in their pocket?

AUDIENCE: They spend it!

THE PRESIDENT: And when they spend it that means business has more customers, and that means business makes more profit, which means business hires more workers, who then spend more money. (Applause.) The whole economy gets stronger. (Applause.) Not from the top down, but from the middle out, from the bottom up. That's how we grow an economy. (Applause.) That's how we grow an economy.

This week, President Clinton pointed out the single biggest thing missing from my opponent's plan -- arithmetic. (Applause.) When Governor Romney and his allies tell us we can somehow cut our deficit by spending $5 trillion more on tax breaks for the wealthy, well, you do the math. How is that going to work?

The fact is Mr. Romney's plan and Congressman Ryan's plan don't add up. And by the way, they don't add to jobs either. They like to talk about how, we're going to create more jobs. But economists who've looked at their plan say this would make the recovery slower, not faster.

I refuse to let that happen. (Applause.) I refuse to ask middle-class families to give up their deductions for owning a home or raising their kids just to pay for another millionaire's tax cut. I refuse to ask all the students here to pay more for college to pay for my tax cut. (Applause.) I'm not going to kick children out of Head Start programs, or eliminate health insurance for millions of Americans who are poor or elderly or disabled, all so those with the most can pay less. (Applause.)

And by the way, Florida, you should know I will never turn Medicare into a voucher system. (Applause.) No American should have to spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies. They should retire with the dignity and the respect and the care that they have earned. So, yes, we will reform and strengthen Medicare for the long haul -- that needs to be done -- but we're going to do it by reducing the cost of health care, not by just dumping the cost on seniors and asking them to pay more -- thousands of dollars more. (Applause.)

And while we're at it, we're going to keep the promise of Social Security by taking the responsible steps to strengthen it, and that's not by turning it over to Wall Street.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, rebuilding the economy is essential, but everybody knows our prosperity at home is linked to what we do abroad. Four years ago, I promised to end the war in Iraq -- I did. (Applause.) I said that we would begin to wind down the war in Afghanistan -- and we are. (Applause.) A new tower rises above the New York skyline; meanwhile al Qaeda is on the path to defeat and Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.)

So we're going to keep moving forward. As long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. And when our troops come home and take off their uniform -- like this veteran right here -- we will serve them as well as they have served us. Because no one who fights for this country should ever have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads or the care that they need when they come home. (Applause.)

My opponent has a different view. He said the way I ended the war in Iraq was "tragic." He won't tell us how he'll end the war in Afghanistan. I have, and I will. (Applause.) And while he wants to spend more money on military programs that the Joint Chiefs don't even want, say it won't make us safer, I'm going to use some of that money that we're no longer spending on war to pay down our debt -- (applause) -- and to put more people back to work rebuilding schools and bridges and runways and roads. (Applause.) Because after a decade at war, I think it's time to some nation-building here at home. (Applause.)

So this is the choice that we face. This is what the election comes down to. Over and over the other side spent all the time they had here in Florida saying that bigger tax cuts and fewer regulations are the only way. They kept on arguing over and over again that since government can't do everything, it should do almost nothing. Their basic theory is: If you can't afford health insurance, hope you don't get sick. If a company releases toxic pollution into the air that your children breathe, well, that's just the price of progress. If you can't afford to go to college, take my opponent's advice and borrow money from your parents. (Applause.)

You know what, that's not who we are. That's not what America is about. America, we believe and insist on personal responsibility. We believe in individual initiative. We know we're not entitled to success, we've got to earn it. We honor the businessmen and the strivers and the dreamers and the risk-takers who've always been the driving force behind our free enterprise system, the greatest engine of growth and prosperity that the world has ever known.

But you know what, we also believe that this country only works when we accept certain obligations to one another, to future generations. (Applause.) We believe in the idea of citizenship -- the idea that America is not just about what can be done for us, but what can be done by us -- (applause) -- together, as one nation, as one people. (Applause.)

That's what you believed four years ago. I told you the election wasn't about me, it was about you. And as I look out on this crowd, I am reminded you were the change. (Applause.) Folks here in Florida from every walk of life -- black, white, Hispanic, Asian, Native American, young, old, gay, straight, abled, not -- disabled -- (applause) -- listen, you're the reason that seniors across Florida are saving an average of $600 every year on prescription drug because of Obamacare -- because of health care reform. You did that. (Applause.)

By the way, I do care. (Applause.) So I like the term Obamacare. Mr. Romney says he's going to repeal it, which means his plan is Romney Don't Care. (Applause.)

You're the reason -- you're the reason that a woman in Doral, who's already working full-time during the day, can now afford to go to school at night because she's getting the financial aid that she needs. (Applause.) That's because of you and what you did. You're the reason there's a working family from Hollywood who was able to save their home from foreclosure, keep their piece of the American Dream. You made that possible.

You're the reason a young immigrant who grew up here and went to school here and pledged allegiance to our flag will no longer be deported from the only country she's ever called home. (Applause.) You're the reason why an outstanding soldier won't be kicked out of the military because of who they are or who they love. (Applause.) You're the reason why thousands of families have been able to say to loved ones who serve so bravely: "Welcome home." (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Thanks for bringing me home! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: You're welcome. Welcome home. (Applause.) Thank you for serving us. (Applause.)

And if you turn away now, if you buy into the cynicism that somehow the change we fought for isn't possible, then of course change won't happen. Change won't happen without you. If you give up on the idea that your voice can make a difference, then other folks are going to fill the void -- the lobbyists, the special interests, the people who are writing $10 million checks, the folks who are trying to keep people from voting --

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: -- the politicians who want to tell you who you can marry, tell women they can't have control over their own health care choices. (Applause.) Only you can make sure that doesn't happen, Florida. Only you have the power to move us forward. But you've got to use that power.

If you're not registered to vote, go to GottaRegister.com. Not "got to" -- "gotta." G-o-t-t-a -- register.com. If you're not sure about how to vote, go to GottaVote.com. (Applause.) Talk to your friends, talk to your neighbors, talk to your co-workers. Don't just talk to people who agree with you; reach out to folks who don't follow politics that closely. Talk to somebody who's undecided. Talk to some of your Republican friends. And talk to them about a vision for the future that moves everybody forward, not just a few.

I'm asking for your help. So, Florida, can you make some phone calls for me? (Applause.) Can you knock on some doors for me? (Applause.) Will you tell your friends and neighbors what's at stake in this election? (Applause.) Will you register? Will you vote? (Applause.) Because if you do, we will finish what we started. We'll create more good jobs. We'll generate more homegrown energy. We'll hire more great teachers. We'll send more young people to college. We'll bring home more troops. We'll take care of more veterans. (Applause.) We will open the doors of opportunity to everybody who's willing to work hard and walk through them. (Applause.)

We'll win this county. We will win Florida. (Applause.) We'll finish what we started, and remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. And God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

September 8,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Kissimmee Civic Center
Kissimmee, Florida

4:40 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Florida! (Applause.) Oh, it is good to be in Kissimmee! (Applause.) This crowd looks fired up. (Applause.) And they definitely look ready to go. (Applause.)

Well, first of all, can everybody give a big round of applause to Vivian for the great introduction? (Applause.) Yay, Vivian! It's good to know that we've got one of the finest senators in the country here -- your Senator Bill Nelson is in the house. (Applause.) And an outstanding member of Congress, Corrine Brown is here. (Applause.) And all of you are here. (Applause.) All the VIPs, right here. (Applause.)

Listen, I'm having such a great time. Anybody who wants to sit down, go ahead and sit down. I'm going to talk for a while. (Laughter.) You guys don't sit down because you don't have chairs. (Laughter.) But you guys all have to bend your knees a little bit so you don't faint. You've been standing a while, it's a little hot. All right?

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Love you! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Let me just say this. I've got to say, Kissimmee, that sometimes when the reception is this good I just want to say thank you, and leave the stage. (Laughter.) I mean, how am I going to top this -- you guys are being so kind. (Applause.)

You're fired up! (Applause.) All right, all right, all right. Everybody settle down for a second here. (Laughter.) Settle down.

Now, we just had our convention in Charlotte, North Carolina. (Applause.) And folks could not have been more welcoming. We were so grateful to North Carolina and Charlotte for throwing a great party. Michelle -- what can I say? She was amazing. (Applause.) For the young men out there who are not yet married, just give you a tip. You're trying to improve your gene pool, so you marry somebody who is superior to you. That's what I did and it works good. (Applause.) That way you end up with some good-looking kids, smart, talented. (Applause.)

President Clinton, he made the case as well as anybody could. (Applause.) Somebody tweeted after he spoke -- they said, somebody needs to appoint him secretary of explaining stuff. (Laughter.) He broke it down. Secretary of explaining stuff -- I love that.

And then on the final night, I laid out my case about what's at stake in this election. Now, both sides have now made their argument. The other guys, they came down to Florida and -- and so now you know what the choice is, and you've got a big choice to make. And I honestly believe this is the clearest choice of any time in a generation. (Applause.) It is not just a choice between two candidates, it's not just a choice between two parties; it's a choice between two different paths for America, two different visions for our future.

Here's our vision. We're fighting to restore that basic bargain that built the largest middle class the world has ever known, that built the greatest economy the world has ever known. And the whole bargain is real simple -- the promise that if you work hard, it will pay off; the promise that if you act responsibly, you'll be rewarded; that everybody in this country gets a fair shot and everybody does their fair share and everybody plays by the same rules, from Main Street to Wall Street to Washington, D.C. (Applause.)

Now, some of you know, I started my career in public service working in the shadow of steel mills that had closed, and working with folks trying to rebuild their neighborhoods. And that process of jobs disappearing overseas, families struggling with the costs that keep on going up even though their paychecks aren't going up, people taking more and more debt just to pay for tuition or gas or food on the table -- that process had been going on for a decade. And then it culminated in the worst financial crisis and depression we've had -- or recession that we've had since the Great Depression. And millions of people lost their jobs, lost their homes, lost their savings. And it's that tragedy that we've been fighting to recover from ever since.

Now, we've made progress. (Applause.) But we know we haven't made enough. We've got more work to do. Nobody is satisfied with the status quo. There are too many folks out there who still need a job, too many folks whose homes are still underwater. We've got a lot of work to do. And the question is not whether we need to make more progress. The question is how do we do it?

Our friends at the Republican Convention were more than happy to talk about everything they think is wrong with America, but they didn't have much to say about how to make it right. (Applause.) They want your vote, but they don't want you to know their plan. That's because they're offering the same worn-out plan that they've had for 30 years -- tax cuts, tax cuts, roll back some regulations, and then let's have some more tax cuts. Tax cuts when times are good. Tax cuts when times are bad. Tax cuts to lose an extra few pounds -- (laughter) -- tax cuts to improve your love life. (Laughter.) Whatever the issue -- tax cuts.

By the way, when I said that at the last stop we had, in St. Petersburg, a guy yelled out in the crowd -- he said, "It didn't work!" (Laughter.)

Now, listen, I've cut taxes for folks who need it. (Applause.) In 2008, I promised that we would lower the tax burden on middle-class families, and the typical family is paying $3,600 less in federal taxes compared to when I came into office. We've cut taxes for small businesses 18 times. (Applause.) But I don't believe that another round of tax breaks for millionaires is going to bring back jobs from overseas or bring down our deficit. I don't think that firing teachers is going to strengthen our economy. I don't believe kicking students off of financial aid will help us compete with engineers coming out of China. (Applause.)

I sure don't believe, after everything we've gone through with the crash on Wall Street, that rolling back regulations on Wall Street somehow is going to help local businesses here in Florida or strengthen our housing market. We have been there. We have tried that. It didn't work. It didn't work then; it won't work now. We're not going back. We are moving forward. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.) We're going forward. We're going forward. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, I will not pretend that the path I'm offering is easy or quick. I didn't promise in 2008 that it was going to be easy or quick, because these problems have been going on for decades. Bill Clinton made that point on Wednesday night. He said you can't expect that we're going to solve these massive challenges that we've been dealing with for years overnight. But let me tell you something -- we will solve these problems. (Applause.)

You've got my opponent and his vice president saying the nation is in decline. Now, I don't know whether they're saying that just because they want to win some votes, or because they actually believe it. But either way, they're wrong. (Applause.) America has got the best workers in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best entrepreneurs in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best scientists, the best researchers, the best universities and the best colleges. (Applause.) We are a young nation. We've got a diversity of talent just like you see in this auditorium.

People are coming here from every corner of the globe. Why do you think they want to come here? (Applause.) Because they know that no matter what the other side says, no matter how dark they try to paint the picture, most folks, they would do anything to have a chance to be right here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

So our problems can be solved. Our challenges can be met. The path we offer is harder, but it leads to a better place. And I'm asking you to choose that future. I'm asking you to rally not around me, but rally around a set of goals for our country in manufacturing, and education, and energy, national security, reducing the deficit. (Applause.) I've got a plan that will lead to new jobs and more opportunity, and rebuild this economy on a stronger foundation.

And we can keep making the kinds of progress that's needed over the next four years -- which is the reason I'm running for a second term, because I'm confident we can get to where we need to go. (Applause.) I'm confident about it.

But in case you missed it, in case you missed what I said -- what day was that, Thursday? (Applause.) What day is it today? Is it Saturday? (Applause.) I'm just on the road all the time. I forget what day it is. All right, so it was Thursday, now it's Saturday. In case you missed it on Thursday, let me say again what our plan is.

First of all, I've got a plan to export more products and outsource fewer jobs. (Applause.) So after a decade of decline, this country created over half a million new manufacturing jobs in the last two and a half years. (Applause.) We reinvented a dying auto industry that's back on top of the world. (Applause.)

So now, you've got a choice. (Applause.) You can go along with the plan you heard in Tampa and give more tax breaks to corporations that are shipping jobs overseas. Or we can start giving tax breaks to companies that are opening new plants and training new workers and creating new jobs here in Florida, in Kissimmee, here in the United States of America. That's my plan. (Applause.)

We can help big factories and small businesses double their exports. And by the way, here in Florida you're the gateway for an entire market in Latin America, which is why when you hear these folks talking about the Recovery Act and he didn't do this and he didn't do that -- listen, we're expanding ports and infrastructure here in Florida precisely because we can export more. We can create a million new manufacturing jobs in the next four years, because we're selling goods around the world stamped with three proud words: Made in the USA. (Applause.) Made in the USA. Made in the USA. (Applause.) That's part one of our plan, making it here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: U-S-A! U-S-A!

THE PRESIDENT: U-S-A!

AUDIENCE: U-S-A! U-S-A! U-S-A!

THE PRESIDENT: So you've got a choice on that issue. Let me give you another choice. We need to control more of our own energy. After 30 years of inaction, we raised fuel standards so that by the middle of the next decade, your cars and trucks will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.) That will save you money.

We've doubled our use of renewable energy, which is not only producing power for businesses and homes here in Florida, but it's also creating thousands of jobs building wind turbines and solar panels and long-lasting batteries. (Applause.) Today, the United States is less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in the last two decades. Think about that. (Applause.)

So we've made progress. And now, the big idea coming out of Tampa was to reverse the progress we've made.

That's option one. Option two is to build on that progress. So unlike my opponent, I'm not going to let oil companies write this country's energy plan. I'm not going to let them continue to collect $4 billion in corporate welfare from our taxpayers. (Applause.) We've got a better path.

We want to keep investing in wind and solar and cleaner coal. And we want farmers and scientists to harness new biofuels to power our cars and our trucks. We want to put construction workers back to work -- (applause) -- rebuilding factories and homes so they're more energy-efficient, so they waste less energy. We can develop a hundred years' supply of natural gas that's beneath our feet here in the United States.

And if you choose the path I'm offering, we can cut our oil imports in half by 2020, and we can support 600,000 new jobs just in natural gas alone. Think about that. (Applause.) That path is open only if you take it through your vote. So that's two.

Number three, I've got a plan to give more Americans the chance to gain the skills they need to compete. Education was the key to opportunity for me. It was the key for Michelle. It was the key for many of you. It's the gateway to a middle-class life. (Applause.)

So what have we already done? For the first time in a generation, nearly every state has answered our call to raise their standards for teaching and learning. Some of the worst schools in the country have made real gains in math and reading. Millions of students are paying less for college because we stopped using banks and lenders as middlemen for student loans, saved billions of dollars and sent that directly to students to help millions get a better education and not have as much debt. (Applause.)

Now, you've got a choice. We can reverse some of those things that we've done.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: Or we can decide that in the United States of America, no child should have their dream deferred because of an over-crowded classroom. (Applause.) No family should be excited about a college acceptance letter and then realize, you know what, honey, we can't afford to send you there. No company should have to look for workers in China because they couldn't find workers here in Florida, or here in the United States that have the skills they need. (Applause.)

So my path is let's recruit and train another 100,000 math and science teachers. (Applause.) Let's improve early childhood education. Let's give 2 million more workers the chance to get better skills at community colleges, skills that will lead directly to a job. (Applause.) And let's work with colleges and universities to cut in half the growth in tuition, so that everybody can afford it. (Applause.) We can meet that goal together. These are achievable goals. That's the path I want you to choose. (Applause.)

Number four, we need to reduce our deficit without sticking it to the middle class. (Applause.) It's important for us to reduce our deficit. It's important for us to reduce our deficit. It's important for us to do it in a responsible way. We don't have to do it all at once, but we've got to get started on it. An independent analysis shows that my plan would cut our deficit by $4 trillion. (Applause.) And I've worked with Republicans in Congress to cut a trillion dollars in spending already, and I'm ready to do more.

I want to reform the tax code so that it is simple and so that it is fair. (Applause.) I want to get rid of programs that don't work. I want to consolidate some agencies so they're more efficient and more customer-friendly. But I also want to ask the wealthiest households to pay a little bit higher taxes on incomes over $250,000 -- over $250,000. (Applause.)

Keep in mind, let's say you make a million dollars --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Right. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: Sounds good to you, right? You'd still keep your tax cut for the first $250,000. So it's not like you're not getting any relief at all. The first $250,000 you still get your tax break. But for every dollar you make after $250,000, we go back to the same rate we had when Bill Clinton was President -- (applause) -- when our economy created 23 million new jobs, when we had all kinds of small businesses succeeding and starting up, when we had the biggest surplus in history and a whole lot of millionaires to boot. (Applause.)

Now, the reason why this works is because -- this whole top-down thing doesn't work. If you give a teacher or a construction worker or a receptionist, just working folks -- if you give them a little more money, what do they do?

AUDIENCE: Spend it!

THE PRESIDENT: And if they spend it then businesses have more customers. And then business makes more profits. And then the businesses say, let's build another plant and let's hire more workers. (Applause.) And now everything gets rolling in a positive direction.

So that's how we build an economy, from the middle out, from the bottom up. It helps everybody when you do it that way. And if you're concerned about the deficit, the first thing you should be concerned about is growing the economy. But let's say even if all you were thinking about is how do we close the deficit gap -- as President Clinton pointed out, the thing that's missing from my opponent's plan is arithmetic. (Applause.) It doesn't add up. He says that we can give a $5 trillion tax cut, mostly to wealthy individuals, and that somehow the deficit is going to get smaller. Now, how do you think that's going to work? That's not going to work.

And the only way it does work is if you are gutting education, you're not investing in basic science and research, where we're not rebuilding our infrastructure, and we are fraying our safety net, and we're voucherizing Medicare --

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: -- and maybe, to top it off, we're increasing taxes on middle-class families.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: That doesn't sound like a good plan.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: It doesn't add up.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: And by the way, it does not add up to jobs either. Some people looked at Romney's plan -- they said, you know what, this actually would make the recovery slower. Slower. I refuse to let that happen. I refuse to let that happen. (Applause.)

I refuse to ask middle-class families to give up their deductions for owning a home or raising their kids just to pay for a tax cut for me. I'm not going to ask students to pay more for college, or kick kids off Head Start programs, or eliminate health insurance for the poor and the elderly and the disabled so those with the most can pay less. (Applause.)

And I want you to know, AARP -- I want you to know I will never turn Medicare into a voucher. (Applause.) These guys are out there running these ads about how somehow we're weakening Medicare. We strengthened Medicare -- extended its life for eight years. Don't take my word for it -- AARP says the same thing. (Applause.)

Because I believe no American should ever have to spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies. After a lifetime of labor, you should retire with dignity and respect. You've earned it. So we do have to reform and we will strengthen Medicare over the long haul, but we're going to do it by reducing the costs of health care -- not by dumping those costs on to seniors. And we're going to keep the promise of Social Security. We'll take responsible steps to strengthen it -- not by turning it over to Wall Street. (Applause.)

Now, there's one last point I want to make and that's about foreign policy because these things are connected. Our prosperity at home is linked to our policies abroad. Four years ago, I promised to end the war in Iraq -- we did. (Applause.) I said we'd wind down the war in Afghanistan -- and we are. (Applause.) While a new tower rises above the New York skyline, -- (applause) -- as we come up on September 11th, we know that al Qaeda is on the path to defeat and Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.)

So I want you to know as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. (Applause.) When our troops take off the uniform, we will serve them as well as they've served America. (Applause.) Nobody who fights for this country should ever have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. (Applause.)

Now, my opponent has got a different view. He said it was "tragic" for me to end the war in Iraq as I did. Well, I did it anyway. (Laughter and applause.) He won't tell us how he'll end the war in Afghanistan, in fact, didn't even mention it in his speech at his convention.

My opponent would spend more money on military programs that our Joint Chiefs don't even want, won't make us safer. I'm going to use that money we're no longer spending on war to pay down our debt, and put more people back to work rebuilding roads and bridges and schools and runways. (Applause.) Let's do some nation-building here at home. That will make us safer. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: So that's what this election comes down to. There's a choice on every issue. Over and over we've been told by the other side that bigger tax cuts, fewer regulations, they're the only way to go; that since government can't do everything, it should do almost nothing. Their basic theory is if you can't afford health insurance, don't get sick.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: A company releases pollution in the air that our children breathe, well, that's the price of progress. If you can't afford college, take their advice and ask your parents if you can borrow the money. (Laughter.)

I've got a different idea -- because I don't think that's what our country is about. We insist on hard work and personal responsibility and individual initiative, and we know we're not entitled to success -- we've got to earn it. We honor the strivers and the dreamers and the entrepreneurs, the risk-takers who have always been the driving force behind our free enterprise system. And we believe that the free enterprise system is the greatest engine of growth and prosperity the world has ever known. That's what attracts people to our shores.

But we also believe that the market doesn't work, this country doesn't work, unless we accept certain obligations to one another; unless we're thinking about future generations; unless we believe in something called citizenship -- that we understand America is not just about what can be done for us, it's about what can be done by us, together, as one nation and one people. (Applause.)

So the election four years ago, it wasn't about me; it was about you. You're the change. The American people rose up, and as a result of what you did, seniors across Florida are saving an average of $600 every year on prescription drugs. (Applause.) That's because of Obamacare. You did that. (Applause.)

You're the reason a woman in Doral, who is already working full-time during the day, now can afford to go to school at night because she's got the financial aid that she needs. You did that. (Applause.)

You're the reason there's a working family over in Hollywood who was able to save their home from foreclosure and keep their piece of the American Dream. You made that possible.

You're the reason that a young immigrant who grew up here and went to school here and pledged allegiance to our flag will no longer be deported from the only country she's ever called home. (Applause.)

You're the reason why we ended "don't ask, don't tell." (Applause.) You're the reason why our troops are coming home. (Applause.)

You made that happen. You made that happen. Don't let anybody tell you, you can't make a difference. Don't let anybody tell you that somehow you have no influence, that you can't change the system.

We may not be able to change everything all at once just the way we want it, because this is a big, complex democracy, and not everybody has got a same opinion. And there's nothing wrong with that. And, yes, sometimes things get tangled up in Washington, and sometimes it's frustrating, and change isn't happening the way it should. But whenever the American people stand up, whenever you get involved, whenever you participate, then amazing things happen -- because the American people have great instincts. You are a good and decent people. (Applause.)

And so if you turn away now, if you turn away now, and you buy into the cynicism that you won't make a difference, well, of course, change won't happen. You know who will fill the void, who will step in where you should have been? Lobbyists, special interests, the folks writing the $10 million checks trying to buy this election, the folks who are trying to make it harder for people to vote.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Washington politicians who want to control who you can marry, want to control health care choices that women are perfectly capable of making themselves. (Applause.)

You can't let that happen. You can't let that happen. I'm talking to you. (Applause.) Only you have the power to move us forward. But that depends on you using that power. I'm asking you for your help. I'm asking for your vote. (Applause.) I'm asking you to make phone calls. I'm asking you to knock on some doors. (Applause.) I'm asking you to talk to your neighbors and talk to your friends and talk to your coworkers. (Applause.) I'm asking you to stand up. I'm asking you to be heard. (Applause.)

And if you do, we will win Florida. And we will win this election. We'll finish what we started, and you and I together will march into that better future. Let's make it happen. (Applause.)

God bless you and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Charles and Ruth Clemente Center
Florida Institute of Technology
Melbourne, Florida

11:55 A.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: How's it going, Florida? (Applause.) Thank you. Thank you. (Applause.) Thank you. (Applause.) Well, look, I am so thrilled to be here! (Applause.) It is good to be back in Florida. And I am so grateful to Mary, not only for her introduction, but for sharing her story, for fighting on behalf of America, for reminding that the values we care about aren't Democratic or Republican values, but are American values. So give Mary a big round of applause. (Applause.)

Now, before I start I have a very important announcement that I've got to make --

Q I love you, President Obama!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you, too. (Applause.)

Actually, there are three things I've got to say before I get started. First of all, if you've got a seat feel free to take a seat, because I'm going to talk for a while. (Applause.) Point number two, if you don't have a seat, bend your knees because sometimes people faint a little bit -- all right -- and you've been standing here a while.

The third thing I want to say, the most important thing I have to say is football starts today. (Applause.) So we intend to be finished to get home in time for kickoff. (Applause.) I don't know -- I know you've got a lot of teams here in Florida, but in Illinois there's just one team -- the Chicago Bears.

AUDIENCE: Boo -- (laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: All right, well, let me move on to another topic then. (Laughter.)

It is so great to be here. We just had our convention in Charlotte, North Carolina. (Applause.) Folks there could not have been more welcoming. Michelle was -- Michelle. (Applause.) She was amazing. So for the young men out there who are thinking about their futures -- the goal is to marry up and improve your gene pool. (Laughter.) And that's what I have done by marrying Michelle.

Then you have President Clinton who made the case the only way that he can. (Applause.) Somebody sent out a tweet after he spoke -- he said, somebody needs to make him secretary of explaining stuff -- (laughter) -- which I like. I liked that.

And then on Thursday night, I spoke about the stakes in this election. Now, you've now heard both sides make their argument, and I hope you know at this point there's a big choice to make. And it is the clearest choice of any time in a generation. (Applause.) It is not just a choice between two candidates; it's not just a choice between two parties. It is a choice between two fundamentally different paths for America, two very different visions for our future.

And our fight is for that basic bargain that built the middle class in this country and the strongest economy the world has ever known. And it was basically a simple idea -- the idea that here in America hard work will pay off. (Applause.) That here in America, responsibility will be rewarded, that everybody gets a fair shot, and everybody does their fair share, and everybody plays by the same rules -- (applause) -- from Wall Street to Main Street to Washington, D.C. (Applause.)

And that basic bargain is why I ran for President, because I saw too many jobs disappearing overseas, too many families struggling with the costs that keep on going up even though paychecks aren't going up; too many people racking up more and more debt just to make the mortgage, or pay tuition, or put gas in the car, or food on the table. And when this house of cards collapsed in this Great Recession we saw millions of innocent Americans lose their jobs, lose their homes, lose their savings. And we're still trying to recover from that tragedy.

Now, our friends at the Republican Convention, they were more than happy to talk about everything that they think is wrong with America, but they didn't have much to say about how to make it right. (Applause.) They want your vote, but they don't have a plan. Or at least they don't want to tell you their plan.

And that's because they've got the same plan they've had for 30 years: Tax cuts, tax cuts, gut a few regulations, and then give some more tax cuts. Tax cuts when times are good. Tax cuts when times are bad. Tax cuts to help you lose a few extra pounds -- (laughter) -- tax cuts to improve your love life. (Laughter.)

I said that at the last event yesterday and somebody yelled out, I tried it and it didn't work. (Laughter.)

Now, listen, I've given tax cuts to folks who need it. (Applause.) Four years ago I promised I would cut taxes for middle-class families --

AUDIENCE: And you did!

THE PRESIDENT: And I did. The typical family is paying $3,600 less in federal taxes since I've been President. We've cut taxes for small businesses 18 times. But I don't believe that another round of tax breaks for millionaires are going to bring good jobs to our shores, or pay down the deficit -- just like I don't think that firing teachers or kicking students off of financial aid is going to help our economy. (Applause.) That's not going to help us compete with China and other countries that are coming up.

After all we've been through, I sure don't believe rolling back regulations we put in place to make sure Wall Street doesn't act recklessly, that rolling those regulations back somehow will help small business women here in Florida, or laid-off construction workers get back to work.

Let me tell you, Florida, what they are selling we are not buying. (Applause.) We've been there, we've tried it. It's not working. We're not going back. We're moving forward. That's why I'm running for a second term for President of the United States. (Applause.)

Now, I will not pretend that the path I'm offering is quick or easy. It's going to take more than a few years to deal with problems that have been building up for decades. But let me tell you something -- when our opponent goes around saying that the nation is in decline, he doesn't know what he's talking about. (Applause.) This is America. We've got the best workers in the world, the best entrepreneurs in the world. We've got the best scientists and researchers in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best colleges and universities in the world. (Applause.)

We are a young nation. We've got the greatest diversity of talent and ingenuity. People want to come here from every corner of the globe. (Applause.) So no matter what the naysayers tell us, no matter how dark they try to make things look for election time, there's not another country on Earth that wouldn't trade places with the United States. (Applause.)

So I promise you our problems can be solved, and our challenges can be met. The path we offer may be harder, but it will lead to a better place. And I'm asking you to choose that future. I'm asking you to rally around some goals -- concrete, achievable goals in manufacturing and energy, and education, in reducing our deficit that will lead to new jobs and more opportunity, and it will rebuild our economy on a stronger foundation.

That's what the next four years are about. That's why I'm running for President. (Applause.) That's why I need your support. (Applause.)

Now, just in case some of you missed me on Thursday, I want to lay out once again what I'm talking about with this plan. First, I've got a plan to export more products and send fewer jobs overseas. (Applause.) After a decade of decline, this country has actually created more than half a million new manufacturing jobs over the last two and a half years. (Applause.) We reinvented a dying auto industry that's back on top of the world. (Applause.)

Here on the Space Coast, we started a new era of American exploration that is creating good jobs right here in this county. (Applause.) We've begun an ambitious new direction for NASA by laying the groundwork for 21st century space flight and innovation. And just last month, we witnessed an incredible achievement that speaks to the nation's sense of wonder and our can-do spirit -- the United States of America landing Curiosity on Mars. (Applause.)

So this is an example of what we do when we combine our science, our research, our ability to commercialize new products, making them here in America.

So this is where we've got a choice. We could, as the House Republican budget proposes, cut back on research and technology.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Or we can continue to be at the cutting-edge -- because that's what we've always been about. We can spark new discoveries, launch new careers, inspire the next generation to reach for something better. You've got that choice. We can make sure that not only are we investing in great research, but the products that come out of that research are made here in the United States. (Applause.)

We can change our tax code so we stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Let's reward them for investing in new plants and equipment here in the U.S., and training new workers here in the U.S., and keeping the research and development here in the U.S., and creating jobs right here in the U.S., making products that we sell around the world stamped with three proud words: Made in the USA. That's what we're fighting for. That's the future we want. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: U-S-A! U-S-A! U-S-A!

THE PRESIDENT: U-S-A!

AUDIENCE: U-S-A! U-S-A! U-S-A! U-S-A!

THE PRESIDENT: We can help big factories and small businesses double their exports. And that creates jobs. And we can create a million new manufacturing jobs in the next four years. And by the way, here in Florida, you are a gateway for this huge Latin American market that's growing. (Applause.) Which is why, during the Recovery Act, we helped local communities revamp their ports and their roads, so that we can move more products onto those container ships that are sending goods down to Brazil and Mexico and other parts -- Argentina, and all across our hemisphere.

And that's also why, by the way, we're attracting more tourists from this region. We made it easier for folks to come visit Florida -- (applause) -- because that creates jobs right here in Florida. So this is all part of the notion that we don't want to just borrow and spend -- we also want to make stuff and sell. (Applause.) That's part one of the plan.

Part two: I've got a plan to control more of our own energy. After 30 years of inaction, we raised fuel standards so that by the middle of the next decade, your cars or trucks will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.) That will save you money, and it will help the environment. (Applause.)

We've doubled our use of renewable energy. Thousands of Americans have jobs today building wind turbines and long-lasting batteries and solar panels that are being used right here in Florida to generate energy. (Applause.)

I want you guys to know this. Today, the United States of America is less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in nearly two decades. (Applause.)

So now you've got a choice between a plan that reverses this progress, or one that builds on it. Unlike my opponent, I'm not going to let oil companies write this country's energy plan, or endanger our coastlines, or collect another $4 billion in corporate welfare from our taxpayers. (Applause.)

We've got a better path, where we keep investing in wind and solar, and clean coal technology, and farmers and scientists harness new biofuels to power our cars and our trucks, and where we put construction workers back to work building factories that waste less energy, retrofitting schools and hospitals and buildings so that they're using less energy. (Applause.) Where we developed a hundred years' supply of natural gas that's right beneath our feet. And if we choose this path, we can cut our oil imports in half by 2020, and that alone will support 600,000 new jobs in natural gas. (Applause.)

We can move forward, but we can't go backwards. (Applause.) That's what the next four years are about. (Applause.)

Part three -- part three: I've got a plan to give more Americans the chance to gain the skills they need to compete. Education was the key to opportunity for me, for Michelle, for many of you. And so we focused on this the minute I came into office. And for the first time in a generation, nearly every state has answered our call to raise their standards for teaching and learning. And some of the worst schools in the country have made real progress and real gains in math and reading. (Applause.)

Millions of students, including some students at this institution, are paying less today for college because we took on a system that was wasting billions of taxpayer dollars sending it to banks; we said let's send it directly to students. (Applause.) And students are paying less for their college education because of it. (Applause.)

So now you've got a choice.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: You're our choice!

THE PRESIDENT: That's a good choice. (Applause.)

We can gut our investment in education, as the budget being proposed by the other side would do. Or we can decide in the United States of America, no child should have their dream deferred because of an overcrowded classroom or outdated textbooks. No family should have to set aside an acceptance letter for college because they realize, you know what, honey, we just can't afford it. No company should have to look for workers in some other country because they couldn't find the workers with the right skills right here in the United States. (Applause.)

So we've got to focus on this. Help me recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers, and improve early childhood education, and give 2 million workers the chance to learn skills at their local community college that will lead directly to a job. (Applause.) And help me work with colleges and universities to cut in half the growth of tuition costs over the next 10 years. (Applause.)

We can meet that goal together. We can help the next generation. (Applause.) We can choose that future for America. But I can only do it with you. (Applause.)

And you know what, let's make sure that we're reducing our deficit without sticking it to the middle class. (Applause.) Now, independent analysis says that my plan for reducing our deficits would lower them by $4 trillion. That's with a "T" -- $4 trillion. And I've worked with Republicans in Congress already to cut a trillion dollars in spending, and I'm willing to do more. I want to work with them.

I want a tax code that's fair and simpler. But I also want to ask folks like me and Mr. Romney, the wealthiest households in America, the top 2 percent, to just pay a little bit more -- higher taxes on incomes over the first $250,000 of their income to help reduce our deficit. (Applause.) That's the same rate we had when Bill Clinton was President, and we created 23 million new jobs, the biggest surplus in history and a whole lot of millionaires to boot. (Applause.) We can do that.

And, by the way, I just want to be clear -- under my plan, first of all, 98 percent of folks who make less than $250,000, you wouldn't see your income taxes go up a single dime. (Applause.) Because you're the ones who need relief. And what happens when you've got a little more money in your pocket -- what happens?

AUDIENCE: We spend it!

THE PRESIDENT: You spend it. Maybe you buy a new computer for your son or daughter. Maybe you buy a new car after 20 years of driving that old beater around. And what happens when you spend, then businesses have more customers, and then they make more profit, and then they hire more workers, who then, in turn, go buy more products. That's how we grow an economy -- not from the top down; from the middle out, from the bottom up. (Applause.) That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

But what we heard in Tampa -- well, they didn't really say much about it, but what you see on their website, what you've seen Republicans in Congress vote on is a different kind of plan. President Clinton pointed out that the single biggest thing missing from my opponent's plan is arithmetic. (Applause.) Math. Governor Romney and his allies tell us we can somehow lower our deficit by spending trillion more dollars on new tax breaks for the wealthy.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: I mean, listen, you've got to do the math, because when my opponents were asked about it today, they couldn't. (Laughter.) It was like two plus one equals five. (Laughter.) They couldn't answer questions about how they'd pay for $5 trillion in new tax cuts and $2 trillion in new defense spending without raising taxes on the middle class. That's not bold leadership -- that's bad math. (Applause.) That gets a failing grade.

I refuse to go along with that plan. I refuse to ask middle-class families to give up their deductions for owning a home or raising their kids just to pay for another tax cut for somebody like me or Mr. Romney. (Applause.) I refuse to ask students to pay more for college, or kick children out of Head Start programs just to give millionaires a tax break. (Applause.) I'm not going to eliminate health insurance for millions of Americans who are poor or elderly or disabled, all so those with the most can pay less. (Applause.) And I want you to know, Florida, I will never turn Medicare into a voucher.

You know, I had a wonderful breakfast with two retired couples over at Cocoa -- Gerry and Jan and John and Shirley -- they're here somewhere. There they are, they're over there. And that was a good breakfast, too, wasn't it? It was outstanding. And they were wise enough to move to Florida after they retired because they were living in very cold weather. And they love it here. But we were talking about how, after a lifetime of work, they've been able to save enough to have a comfortable retirement, but that's only because Medicare is there rock-solid for them; only because we have made that commitment that says if you work hard all your life then you should have some basic security -- not to live lavishly, but to know that it's going to be there for you.

And I have to tell you, that is going to be part of what's at stake in this election. Now, I've already strengthened Medicare. We've already added years to the life of Medicare by getting rid of taxpayer subsidies to insurance companies that weren't making people any healthier, and in fact, were making things more expensive for everybody. (Applause.)

So we used part of those savings to help lower the cost of prescription drugs and offer free preventive care to seniors. I thought that was a good idea. (Applause.) For some reason, my opponents think it's a bad idea. So they want to give the money back to the insurance companies and then put them in charge of Medicare.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: In fact, one report just said that by the end of the next decade, our opponent's plan would mean as much as $16 billion to $26 billion in new profits for insurance companies. So basically, your costs would rise by the thousands so that their profits could rise by the billions.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: So here's the bottom line. Their voucher plan for Medicare would bankrupt Medicare. Our plan strengthens Medicare. No American should have to spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies. They should retire with the dignity and the respect and the care that they have earned. (Applause.)

Yes, we will reform and strengthen Medicare for the long haul -- but we'll do it by reducing the cost of health care, not by dumping those costs on to seniors. We're not going to do that. (Applause.)

And while we're at it, we're going to keep the promise of Social Security by taking responsible steps to strengthen it, not by turning it over to Wall Street. And by the way, if you're wondering who is right on this argument about Medicare -

AUDIENCE: You are!

THE PRESIDENT: No, no, but in case some of your friends are wondering -- let's put it that way. (Laughter.) I mean, keep in mind that the AARP, which knows a little bit about this, they took a look at our plan when we passed Obamacare, and they confirmed that it strengthens Medicare. (Applause.) And when you look at their plan, it's confirmed that over time a voucher system will weaken Medicare as we know it.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: That's why we need a new governor! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: I'm talking about the federal election right now. (Laughter.)

Now, rebuilding this economy is essential, but, as Mary said, our prosperity at home is also linked to our security and our policies abroad. So I just want to remind everybody four years ago, I promised to end the war in Iraq -- I did. (Applause.) We said we'd wind down the war in Afghanistan -- and we are doing that. (Applause.) And a few days before 9/11, a new tower is rising above the New York skyline. (Applause.) We're coming back. Meanwhile al Qaeda is on the path to defeat and Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.)

So I just want you to remember when my opponent and his vice presidential nominee are running around saying somehow we're weakening our military -- let me tell you, as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. (Applause.) When our troops take off their uniforms we will serve them as well as they have served us -- because nobody should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home after serving on behalf of the United States. (Applause.)

But we've got some disagreements. My opponent says it was "tragic" for me to end the Iraq war the way I did. I think he's wrong. He won't tell us how he'll end the war in Afghanistan. I have. My opponent wants to spend more money on military programs that our Joint Chiefs don't even want. I'll use that money that we're no longer spending on war to pay down our debt -- (applause) -- and to put more people back to work rebuilding roads and schools and bridges. (Applause.) After a decade of war, we need to do some nation-building here at home. That's what we're going to do. (Applause.)

So, Florida, that's the choice that we now face. That's the choice that you face. Over and over we have been told by our opponents that the only answer, the only way are bigger tax cuts and fewer regulations, shrink government -- because their basic idea is that since government can't do everything, it should do almost nothing. If you can't afford health insurance, hope you don't get sick. If there's some toxic pollution that's going into the air that our kids breathe, well, that's the price of progress. If you can't afford to go to college, borrow some money from your parents.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: That's what he said. It's amazing that you guys didn't think of that, students. (Laughter.)

But you know what, that's not who we are. As Americans, we insist on personal responsibility and individual initiative. We know you've got to work hard. We know you're not entitled to success, you've got to earn it. And we honor the small businesspeople and the strivers and the dreamers and the risk-takers who've been the driving force between our free enterprise system, the greatest engine of growth and prosperity that the world has ever known.

But we also believe that this country works only because we also accept certain obligations to one another, because we think about future generations. (Applause.) As citizens, we understand it's not about what can be done for us, but what can be done by us, together, as a nation. (Applause.) Together as one people. (Applause.)

And those of you who were with me in '08 -- (applause) -- you understand this because that election was about you. You brought about change. You're the reason seniors across Florida are saving an average of $600 every year on their prescription drug because of Obamacare. You did that. (Applause.)

You're the reason a woman in Doral, who's already working full-time during the day, can now afford to go to school at night because she's getting the financial aid that she needs.

(Applause.) You're the reason there's families in Florida who are able to save their homes from foreclosure, and keep that piece of the American Dream. You made that possible.

You're the reason why young immigrants who grew up here and went to school here and pledged allegiance to our flag are no longer going to be deported from the only home they've ever known. (Applause.) You're the reason we ended "don't ask, don't tell" so anybody who loves this country can serve this country. (Applause.) You're the reason why families are welcoming back our brave soldiers, saying: "Welcome home." (Applause.)

So, Florida, you can't turn back now.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: We can't give into the cynicism that the other side is peddling. Because what happens, if you give up on the idea that your voice matters, then somebody is going to fill that void. Oil companies will write our energy plans. The drug companies and the insurance companies, they'll write our health care plans. The folks who are writing the $10 million check who are buying this election; the people who are trying to make it harder for you to vote; the folks who want to tell you who to marry; the people who are trying to tell women that they can't make up their own minds about their health care choices -- (applause) -- they're the folks who are going to be filling that void if you don't step up. (Applause.)

But if you claim the power that you have, if you are determined to move us forward, the American people cannot be stopped. (Applause.)

And I tell you, we've got a lot more work to do. We've got more good jobs to create. We've got more good schools to build, more great teachers to hire, more troops to bring home -- (applause) -- more veterans to take care of. And if you will make some phone calls for me, and knock on some doors with me, talk to your neighbors and your friends about what's at stake -- if you'll register to vote, and make sure you turn out to vote -- (applause) -- then we will finish what we started. (Applause.) We will open the doors of opportunity to all who are willing to work hard to walk through them. (Applause.) We will win Florida. (Applause.) We will win this election. (Applause.) And you and I together will remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. And God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

West Palm Beach Convention Center
West Palm Beach, Florida

5:15 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, West Palm Beach! (Applause.) Oh, it is good to be back! (Applause.) You know what, you guys sound pretty fired up! (Applause.) You sound like you might be ready to go. (Applause.) I'm telling you.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you. Thank you. It is good to be back. It is good to see some great friends in the house. We've got your outstanding Senator, Bill Nelson, in the house. (Applause.) We've got your Mayor, Jeri Muoio, in the house. (Applause.) We've got Congressman Ted Deutch in the house. (Applause.) And the chairwoman of the Democratic Party, our great friend, Debbie Wasserman Schultz is in the house. (Applause.) And all of you are in the house. (Applause.)

Now, we just had our convention in Charlotte, North Carolina. (Applause.) The people could not have been nicer. Michelle, she was pretty good. (Applause.) So I want to give advice to young men out there -- when you marry, you marry up, you improve the gene pool. (Laughter.)

President Clinton was amazing. (Applause.) Somebody sent out a tweet right after he spoke that said, he needs to be made secretary of explaining stuff. (Laughter.)

And then on Thursday night, I layed out the stakes in this election. Now, I know I may be preaching a little bit to the choir, but -- (laughter) -- but I want you to know I'm going to need you to then go out and preach to the unconverted. (Applause.)

Both sides have now made their arguments. And there's a choice that we've got to make, and it's the clearest choice we've seen in a generation -- not just between two candidates or two parties, but a choice between two fundamentally different visions of our future. (Applause.)

We want to restore the basic bargain that built the largest middle class and the strongest economy the world has ever known. A bargain that says hard work pays off, that responsibility is rewarded, that everybody does their fair share, and everybody gets a fair shot, and everybody is playing by the same rules -- (applause) -- from Main Street to Wall Street to Washington, D.C. (Applause.)

That's the basic bargain that led me to run for President. It's what allowed me and Michelle to have extraordinary opportunities in our lives. And we want to make sure the next generation has those same opportunities. (Applause.)

And we have just gone through a decade in which jobs were being shipped overseas, and families were having trouble making ends meet, and they were having to rack up more debt just to pay tuition or fill up a gas tank. And it all culminated in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression.

We spent the last three and a half years trying to recover from all the damage that was done. And we've made progress, but not enough. We've got more to do. And so now the question is which direction do we go.

AUDIENCE: Forward!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, the Republicans, they disagree with you.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: No, no, don't boo -- vote. (Applause.)
Vote.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you, Obama!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.)

They had their convention here in Florida and they talked a lot about me. (Laughter.) But they didn't talk a lot about you. They talked about everything they think is wrong with America, but they didn't really talk about how to make it right. (Applause.) They want your vote, but they didn't really talk about their plan. And that's because their plan boils down to tax cuts, tax cuts, gut a few regulations, and then some more tax cuts. (Laughter.) Tax cuts when times are good. Tax cuts when times are bad. Tax cuts when we've got a surplus. Tax cuts when we have a deficit. Tax cuts to help you lose a few pounds -- (laughter) -- tax cuts to improve your love life. (Laughter.) Whatever is wrong with you, they think tax cuts, especially for folks at the top, will cure all ills.

Now, I've cut taxes for folks who need it. (Applause.) For middle-class families, for small businesses. (Applause.) But I don't believe another round of tax cuts for millionaires are going to bring jobs back from overseas. I don't think another round of tax cuts for billionaires that involve slashing aid for students to pay for it, or asking middle-class families to pay more, that somehow that's going to reduce the deficit or help grow our economy.

I certainly don't think that it makes a lot of sense for us to be looking at creating a voucher for Medicare to pay for some tax cuts for folks who don't need them and weren't even asking for them. That's not who we are. That's not how we made progress in this country.

I don't think rolling back regulations on Wall Street so that we don't have another taxpayer-funded bailout is a smart idea. (Applause.)

I don't think rolling back health care that is helping Americans all across Florida and all across the country is a good idea. I don't want to go backwards. We have been there. (Applause.) We have done that. It didn't work. We're moving forward. (Applause.) That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, I won't pretend that the path I'm offering is easy. I never have. These problems built up over decades are going to take more than a few years to solve. But we can move forward in the right direction. And I am confident we've got what it takes. (Applause.)

Our opponents, they've been talking about how America is in decline. They're wrong. We've got the best workers in the world, the best businesspeople in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best universities in the world, the best researchers in the world. (Applause.) We're a young nation. We're a diverse nation. We attract talent from every corner of the globe.

So no matter how much the other side, for political reasons, tries to paint things as bleak, don't believe them. There's not another nation on Earth that wouldn't trade places with us. (Applause.) Our problems can be solved. Our challenges can be met. The path I offer is harder, but it leads to a better place. I am asking you to choose that future. I am asking you to go forward with me. (Applause.) I am asking you to go forward with me. (Applause.)

And let me tell you exactly -- let me repeat, for those of you who didn't catch it on Thursday, what I'm talking about when I say "moving forward." We are going to put together a real, achievable plan to build this economy on a stronger foundation. It starts with no longer shipping jobs overseas. (Applause.) Let's export goods made here in America. (Applause.)

After a decade of decline, we've now created half a million jobs over the last two years just in manufacturing. We reinvented a dying auto industry that's back on top. (Applause.) So we can take Mr. Romney's advice and continue to give even more tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas, or we can reward companies that are investing in new jobs and new workers and new factories here in the United States of America. That's what we're fighting for.

(Applause.)

I want to help American factories and small businesses export more. We can create a million new manufacturing jobs the next four years. You can make that happen.

The second part of our plan -- let's control our own energy. (Applause.) After 30 years of inaction, we raised fuel standards so that by the middle of the next decade, your cars and trucks will go twice as far on the same gallon of gas. (Applause.) That's good for your pocketbook. It's good for the environment. (Applause.)

We've doubled our use of renewable energy like wind and solar. Today, thousands of Americans have jobs building wind turbines and long-lasting batteries. And today, the United States is less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in nearly two decades. (Applause.)

So you have a choice. We can build on that progress, or we can reverse it like my opponent recommends.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: I think he's wrong. Don't boo, vote.
(Applause.)

Unlike my opponent, I don't intend to let oil companies write our country's energy plan or endanger our coastlines. And I don't want them to keep collecting $4 billion of corporate welfare from our taxpayers. (Applause.)

We've got a better path. We keep investing in wind and solar, clean coal technology, farmers and scientists harnessing new biofuels to power our cars and trucks, construction workers building homes and factories that are more energy efficient -- developing a hundred years' supply of natural gas. (Applause.) We can cut our oil imports in half by 2020 and support more than 600,000 new jobs in natural gas alone. That's moving forward. We're not going backwards. (Applause.)

Third, we're going to build on the reforms we have initiated and make sure that Americans are getting the chance to get the skills they need to compete in this 21st century economy. Education was the key to opportunity for me, the key to opportunity for Michelle, the key to opportunity for many of you. It's the gateway to a middle-class life. (Applause.)

And that's why, for the first time in a generation, we pushed every state almost, to answer our call to raise standards for teaching and learning. Some of the worst schools in the nation have made real gains in reading and math. (Applause.) Millions of students are saving money, paying less for college, because of the work we did to keep the student loan program on track and improve the Pell Grant program. (Applause.)

So you can take their advice and gut education. Or we can decide in the United States, no child should have her dream deferred because of an overcrowded classroom, or because a family can't afford to send her to college. No company should have to look for a worker someplace else because they couldn't find the right skills for workers here in the United States. (Applause.)

So I need you to help me recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers, improve early childhood education. (Applause.) Let's provide 2 million more workers the chance to learn skills at community colleges for jobs that are out there right now. And let's work with colleges and universities to lower tuition, because it is not a luxury for young people. It is a necessity. That's what I mean when I say we need to move forward, not backwards. (Applause.)

We can meet these goals together. My plan would reduce our deficit without sticking it to the middle class. (Applause.) Independent analysis shows my plan would reduce our deficit by $4 trillion. We've got the math all done. We've laid it out there. People have evaluated it. People have analyzed it. I've already worked with the Republicans in Congress to cut a trillion dollars' worth of spending. And I'm willing to do more with Republicans.

I want to reform our tax code, so that's it's simple and it's fair. But I also think it makes sense for folks like me to pay higher taxes on our incomes over $250,000 -- the same rate Bill Clinton had when he was President, the same rate that created 23 million new jobs, the biggest budget surplus in history, a lot of millionaires to boot. (Applause.)

Now, I guess my opponent has a plan. But there's one thing missing from it --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Arithmetic.

THE PRESIDENT: Arithmetic. (Applause.) Give that young lady an A. (Applause.) She's been doing her homework.

When Governor Romney and his allies in Congress say that the most important thing is to lower our deficit, and then he starts by calling for trillions of dollars more in new tax breaks for wealthy folks -- and they were asked about it today. They couldn't answer. (Laughter.) They couldn't answer the question of how -- you already have deficits, you add $5 trillion of new tax cuts, $2 trillion in new defense spending, and somehow you're going to close the deficit without raising taxes on middle-class families? They did not take their arithmetic course. (Applause.) They need to talk to this young lady and get some tutoring. (Applause.) They need to stay after school. (Applause.) They need to get some extra study hall in there. No recess for you. (Laughter.)

Look, I refuse to go along with a plan that asks middle-class families to give up their deductions for owning a home or raising their kids just to pay for another millionaire's tax cut. I refuse to ask students to pay more for college, or kick children out of Head Start programs, or eliminate health insurance for millions of Americans who are poor and elderly or disabled just so those with the most can pay less. (Applause.)

And I want you to hear me now -- I will never turn

Medicare into a voucher. We won't do that. (Applause.) Here's what you need to know. I have strengthened Medicare. We've added years to the life of Medicare. We did it by getting rid of taxpayer subsidies to insurance companies that weren't making people healthier. The other side knows that. In fact, it was in their budget -- all the savings we achieved. Now they're pretending like somehow it affected beneficiaries when they know it doesn't.

We took that money that was going to the insurance companies, used part of it to help lower prescription drug costs for seniors, to offer preventive care for seniors. We thought that was a good idea. They may think it's a bad idea, but I don't. They want to give the money back to the insurance companies, put them in charge of Medicare.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: There was one report that just said that by the end of the next decade under their plan, you would see as much as $16 billion to $26 billion in new profits for insurance companies, paid for by taxpayers. Why would we do that? The cost to folks who are currently on Medicare could rise by thousands of dollars so that insurance companies are making those billions of dollars in profits. That's not a good plan.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: So here's the bottom line: Their plan bankrupts Medicare over the long term, and actually over the short term means the trust fund runs out of money by 2016. Our plan strengthens Medicare. I believe no American should ever have to spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies. I believe every American who works hard should be able to retire with the dignity that they have earned. (Applause.)

And I want to be honest with you -- I want to be honest with you. We're going to have to strengthen Medicare for the long haul, and that requires some reforms. But we'll do it by reforming the way that health care delivery system works so that we're reducing the costs of health care -- not by asking seniors to pay thousands of dollars more.

And we're going to keep the promise of Social Security by taking the responsible steps to strengthen it, not by turning it over to Wall Street. (Applause.)

Now, our prosperity at home is linked to our policies abroad, and I've got a track record that you can look at. I said I'd end the war in Iraq -- I did. (Applause.) I said we'd begin bringing troops home from Afghanistan -- and we are. (Applause.) And while a new tower rises above the New York skyline, and as we pause to remember those that were lost this coming Tuesday on September 11th, we know that al Qaeda is on the path to defeat and Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.)

So we've got a track record that you can look at. And as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. Our troops when they take off those uniforms, we will serve them as well as they've served us because they shouldn't have to fight for a job when they come home. (Applause.)

But my opponent has a different idea. He said the way we ended the war in Iraq was "tragic" -- doesn't have a plan to end the war in Afghanistan. But you know what, if you don't even mention Afghanistan that's a problem when you accept the nomination. So I'm assuming he doesn't have a plan. (Applause.)

And while my opponent would spend more money on military programs that our Joint Chiefs don't even want, at a time when we're supposed to be reducing our deficit, I'd use the money that we're no longer spending on war to pay down our debt, and put more people back to work rebuilding bridges and roads and schools and runways. We need to do some nation-building here at home. That's what we need to do. (Applause.)

So that's the choice we now face. That's what this election comes down to. The other side says bigger tax cuts and fewer regulations are the only way. They basically argue, you know what, since government can't do everything, it should do almost nothing. If you don't have health care, hope you don't get sick. If you can't afford college, borrow money from your parents.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: That's what he said. I quoted him. I didn't make that up. (Laughter.)

We've got a different idea. That's not what America is about. We believe in individual initiative. We believe you're not entitled to success, you've got to earn it. We believe in hard work. We believe in rewarding the dreamers and the risk-takers and the strivers, the small businesspeople who make this country run. (Applause.) We believe in the free enterprise system. But we also believe we've got obligations to one another. (Applause.) We also believe this country only works when we're thinking about future generations, not just this one. (Applause.)

We understand America is not just about what can be done for us, but what can be done by us, together, as one people, as one nation. (Applause.) That's what we believe. That's what we mean when we say we're going forward. (Applause.)

Four years ago, because you believed, because of your efforts, we were able to bring about change we hadn't seen in decades. (Applause.) You're the reason that seniors here in Florida are paying about $600 less for prescription drugs because of Obamacare. You did that. (Applause.) You're the reason that there are folks all across this state who can now afford to go to college. You're the reason that happened. (Applause.)

You're the reason that all across this state people who were in danger of losing their homes were able to stay in their homes. That's because of you. You made that possible. (Applause.) You're the reason that a young immigrant who grew up here and went to school here and pledges allegiance to our flag will no longer be deported from the country that they love. (Applause.)

You're the reason we ended "don't ask, don't tell."
(Applause.) You're the reason that families are able to say to their loved ones who served so bravely: "Welcome Home." You're the reason. (Applause.)

But we've got a long way to go. Now, you know, sometimes on a journey you get tired, and there will be voices that whisper in your head to be cynical, to think you can't make it. You've got to turn that away. You can't buy into that cynicism, the notion that change isn't possible -- because if you don't believe it, it won't happen. If you give up, then the other voices will fill the vacuum -- the lobbyists and the special interests, the folks who are writing the $10 million checks to run all those negative ads.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: The folks who are trying to make it harder for you to vote; Washington politicians who want to decide who can get married, and control choices that women should be making about their own health care. (Applause.) That's what's going to fill the vacuum.

We can't let that happen, Florida. We've come too far to turn back now. (Applause.) If you're not registered to vote, I need you to register. Go to GottaRegister.com. (Applause.) If you don't know how to vote -- maybe you're 17, turning 18, first time -- go to GottaVote.com. (Applause.) If you're already registered and you're already going to be voting, then you've got to grab your friends, you've got to grab your neighbors, you've got to grab your cousins, your aunts and your uncles -- (applause) -- you've got to corner your -- and your grandparents. (Laughter.) You've got to talk to your co-workers. Don't just talk to each other -- go find some of your Republican friends. (Applause.) They're good people. They're good people. They just need more information from you. (Laughter.)

Go talk to some independents. Make some phone calls. Knock on some doors. (Applause.) Volunteer. (Applause.) We need you to work hard. We've got less than two months left, but let me tell you something -- if you give it your all for these next two months, I'm confident we're going to get there. (Applause.) We can't let up now -- because we've got more good jobs to create, we've got more homegrown energy to generate. (Applause.) We've got more good schools to build and more great teachers to hire. (Applause.) We've got more young people to send to college. (Applause.) We've got more troops to bring home. (Applause.) We've got more vets to take care of. (Applause.) We've got more doors of opportunity we've got to open up to everybody who's willing to fight for it and work for it.

And if you do, we'll win Palm Beach County. (Applause.) And if we win Palm Beach County, we will win Florida. (Applause.) And if we win Florida, we win this election. (Applause.) We'll finish what we started, and remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. God bless America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

George Mason University
Fairfax, Virginia

11:20 A.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, everybody! (Applause.) Hello, George Mason! (Applause.) Hello, Patriots! (Applause.) It's good to see you guys! (Applause.) Thank you. Thank you. (Applause.) Thank you. Thank you so much.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!
(Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you! Everybody, have a seat. Have a seat. Thank you. Well, it is good to be here. (Applause.)

I am so proud to have Katherine's support. Can you give her a big round of applause for that great introduction? (Applause.) It's also good to know that we've got the former governor and next United States senator from the Commonwealth of Virginia -- Tim Kaine. (Applause.) And your Congressman, Jerry Connolly. (Applause.) And it's good to see all of you!

So, one month. (Applause.) Just one month from tomorrow, Virginia, you're going to step into a voting booth, and you are going to have a very big choice to make. I know folks in this crowd may have already made some decisions, but -- (applause) -- but for the undecideds that are here -- (laughter) -- as well as those who are watching today, I've said this before, this is a choice not just between two candidates or two parties, but a choice between two fundamentally different visions for America.

And today I believe that as a nation, we are moving forward again. We're moving forward. (Applause.) Now, after losing about 800,000 jobs a month when I took office, our businesses have now added 5.2 million new jobs over the past two and a half years. (Applause.) This morning, we found out that the unemployment rate has fallen to its lowest level since I took office. (Applause.) More Americans entered the workforce. More people are getting jobs.

Now, every month reminds us that we've still got too many of our friends and neighbors who are looking for work. And there are too many middle-class families that are still struggling to pay the bills -- they were struggling long before the crisis hit. But today's news certainly is not an excuse to try to talk down the economy to score a few political points. It's a reminder that this country has come too far to turn back now. (Applause.)

Because of your strength and resilience, the strength and resilience of the American people, we have made too much progress to return to the policies that led to the crisis in the first place. I can't allow that to happen. I won't allow that to happen. And that is why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

I have seen too much pain, seen too much struggle, to let this country get hit with another round of top-down economics. One of the main reasons we had this crisis is because big banks on Wall Street were allowed to make big bets with other people's money on the line -- and now Governor Romney wants to roll back the rules we put in place to stop that behavior? That's not going to happen. That is not going to happen. (Applause.)

One of the main reasons record surpluses under Bill Clinton were turned into record deficits under George Bush is because we put two wars and two tax cuts on a credit card -- and now Governor Romney wants another $5 trillion in tax cuts that he can't pay for? Not if I have anything to say about it. (Applause.) That's not going to happen. We are not going to let this country fall backward -- not now, not with so much at stake. We've got to move forward. (Applause.)

We need to invest in small business and manufacturers who create jobs here in the United States. We need to recruit 100,000 math and science teachers, train 2 million workers at community college, bring down the cost of college tuition. (Applause.)

We need to cut our oil imports in half and create thousands more jobs in clean energy. We need to use the savings from ending the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan to help pay down our deficit and put people back to work doing some nation-building right here at home. That's the agenda we need. (Applause.) That's how you strengthen the middle class. That's how you keep moving forward. That is the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for a second term. (Applause.) That's what we need.

My opponent has been trying to do a two-step and reposition -- (laughter) -- and got an extreme makeover. (Laughter and applause.) But the bottom line is his underlying philosophy is the top-down economics that we've seen before. He thinks that if we just spend another $5 trillion on tax cuts that, yes, are skewed towards the wealthiest, if we get rid of more regulations on Wall Street then our problems will be solved. Jobs and prosperity will rain down from the sky. The deficits will magically disappear. We will live happily ever after. (Laughter.)

Even though he's been proposing this plan for months now, he's had a little trouble explaining just how it would work without blowing a hole in the deficit or making middle-class families pick up the tab. The other night, he ruled out asking millionaires and billionaires to pay even a dime more in taxes. He said there's no way that he'd close the loophole that gives big oil companies billions each year in corporate welfare. Ending tax breaks for corporations that move jobs and profits overseas? He'd never heard of such a thing. (Laughter.) Who knew? Who knew? (Applause.)

When he was asked what he'd actually do to cut spending and reduce the deficit, his big example is to go after public television. (Laughter.) So for all you moms and kids out there, don't worry -- someone is finally getting tough on Big Bird. (Laughter.) Rounding him up. Elmo has got to watch out, too. (Laughter.) Governor Romney plans to let Wall Street run wild again, but he's going to bring down the hammer on "Sesame Street." It makes perfect sense. (Laughter and applause.)

Virginia, we can't afford to double down on the same old top-down economic policies that caused this mess in the first place. We cannot afford another round of tax cuts for the wealthy. We can't afford to gut our investments in education, or clean energy, or research and technology. We can't afford to roll back regulations on Wall Street banks or oil companies or insurance companies. That is not a jobs plan. It's not a plan to grow our economy. It's sure not a plan to strengthen our middle class.

We have been there. We have tried that. We're not going back. We are moving forward. We've got a different view about how we create jobs and prosperity in this country. (Applause.)

This country doesn't just succeed when just a few are doing well at the top. It succeeds when the middle class gets bigger. Our economy doesn't grow from the top down -- it grows from the middle out. We don't believe that anybody is entitled to success in this country, but we do believe in opportunity. We believe in a country where hard work pays off and responsibility is rewarded, and everybody is getting a fair shot and everybody is doing their fair share and everybody is playing by the same rules. (Applause.)

That's the country we believe in. That's what we've been fighting for over the last four years. That's what we are going to put in place in the next four years if you reelect me as President of the United States of America. That's what we're going to do. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, today, I also want to talk about economic issues that didn't get enough attention in the debate the other night, and that's economic issues that have a direct impact on women, and as a consequence have a direct impact on families. When it comes to the economy, it's bad enough that our opponents want to take us back to the failed policies of the last decade. When it comes to a woman's right to make her own health care choices, they want to take us back to the policies of the 1950s.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: This election is your chance to make sure that doesn't happen, Virginia. The decisions that affect a woman's health aren't up to politicians; they're not up to insurance companies -- they're up to you. (Applause.) They're up to you. You deserve a President who will fight to keep it that way. That's the President I've been. That's the President I'll be if you give me a second term. (Applause.)

You don't have to take me at my word, you can look at my record. Four years ago, I said I'd pass health reform before the end of my first term. Thanks to your help, that's what we did. (Applause.) The new health care law helps make sure you don't have to worry about going broke just because you or a loved one gets sick. Insurance companies can no longer put lifetime limits on your care, or jack up your premiums without reason, or drop your coverage when you need it most. They can no longer discriminate against children with preexisting conditions. (Applause.) And soon, they will no longer be able to deny you coverage based on preexisting conditions like breast cancer, or charge you more for the same care just because you're a woman. (Applause.)

This law has already allowed nearly 7 million young adults under the age of 26 to sign up and stay on their parent's health care plan. (Applause.) It's already saved millions of seniors on Medicare hundreds of dollars on their prescription medicine. And millions of Americans have actually gotten a rebate from their insurance company if that company -- you've got one? -- (applause) -- see? I just want to tell you, she's not a plant. (Laughter.) I mean, she's a supporter, but I didn't know about -- (laughter) -- but you get a rebate if the insurance company spent too much money on administrative costs and CEO bonuses, and not enough on your health care.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Thank you!

THE PRESIDENT: This law has secured new access to preventive care like mammograms and cancer screenings with no copay, no deductible, no out-of-pocket cost for more than 20 million women. (Applause.)

And now most health plans are beginning to cover the cost of contraceptive care, which is vital for women's health. (Applause.) Doctors prescribe contraception not only for family planning, but as a way to reduce the risk of ovarian and other cancers. And it's good for our health care system in general -- because we know the overall cost of care is lower when women have access to contraceptive services.

Now, before this new law, many health care plans charged high deductibles or copays for these preventive services, or they just didn't cover them that all. According to one study, more than half of all women put off the care they needed because of that. How many of you have gone without the care you needed or the checkup you knew just because you were worried that the insurance copay would go too high, and you couldn't afford gas, or groceries, or your kid's new soccer uniform? (Applause.) So you have had to make choices and sacrifices.

I don't think a working mom in Arlington should have to wait to get a mammogram just because money is tight. (Applause.) I don't think a college student in Fairfax or Charlottesville should have to choose between textbooks or the preventive care that she needs. That's why we passed this law, and I am proud of it. It was the right thing to do, and we are going to keep it. (Applause.)

Now, my opponent has a different view. The other night, he said he'd repeal Obamacare as soon as he took office.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. Vote. (Applause.) Vote.

But after he said that, then he backtracked and said, no, wait, at least I'll make sure to cover folks with preexisting conditions. And then I explained, well, actually, your plan doesn't do that. And then his campaign had to come out and say, actually, that's not true, our plan wouldn't do that. (Laughter.) So Governor Romney was fact-checked by his own campaign. (Laughter.) That's rough. That's rough. (Applause.) Even they know his plan would take away coverage for tens of millions of Americans.

Governor Romney said he'd "get rid of" Planned Parenthood funding. Apparently this, along with Big Bird, is driving the deficits. (Laughter.) And he would have supported an extreme measure in Massachusetts that would have outlawed some forms of contraception. He joined the far right of his party to support a bill that would allow any employer to deny contraceptive coverage to their employees. I mean, think about that -- your boss telling you what's best for your health and safety.

Let me tell you something, Virginia -- I don't think your boss should control the care you get. I don't think insurance companies should control the care you get. I definitely don't think politicians on Capitol Hill should control the care you get. We've seen some of their attitudes. We've read about those. I think there's one person who gets to make decisions about your health care -- that's you. (Applause.)

My opponent has called himself "severely conservative," but let me tell you something, there's nothing conservative -- as Catherine made clear -- there's nothing conservative about a government that prevents a woman from making her own health care decisions. Governor Romney talks about freedom, but freedom is the ability to determine the care you need, when you need it.

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Freedom is the ability to change jobs or start your own business without the fear of losing your health insurance. Freedom is the knowledge that you'll no longer be charged more than men for the same health care, or denied affordable coverage just because you've beat cancer.

(Applause.)

And at a time when women make up nearly half the workforce and an increasing share of family breadwinners, these are not just health issues or women's issues -- these are economic issues that are vital and affect every family in America. They matter. (Applause.) When a woman is the main breadwinner for her family, but takes home less pay for the same work as a man does because she's a woman, that is not right. (Applause.)

When my opponent's campaign was asked if he'd support legislation giving women the tools to fight for an equal day's pay for an equal day's work, he said "we'll get back to you on that." And since then, he's refused to explain his position. You've already got my answer: Upholding the principle of equal pay for equal work -- that was one of the first bills that I signed into law. (Applause.)

I've named two extraordinary women who understand these issues on the Supreme Court, the highest court in the land. (Applause.) And remember, the next President, the next Congress could tip the balance of the Court in a way that turns back the clock for women and their families for decades to come. The choice between going backward and moving forward has never been so clear.

Virginia, we don't need a President who's promised to rubber-stamp the top-down agenda of the Republicans in this Congress. We don't want to go backward. We've got to go forward.

From the day we began this campaign, we've always said that real change takes time. It takes more than one year or one term or even one President. It takes more than one party. It certainly can't happen if you're willing to write off half the nation before you even take office. (Applause.)

People forget; back in 2008, 47 percent of the country didn't vote for me. But on the night of the election, I said to all those Americans, I said, I may not have won your vote, but I hear your voices and I need your help, and I will be your President, too. (Applause.)

And, Virginia, I don't know how many of you will vote for me this time around, but I promise you -- (applause) -- no matter how many do, I will be your President, too. No matter what, I'll be fighting for you. Because I'm not just fighting for Democratic jobs or Republican jobs -- I'm fighting for American jobs. (Applause.) I'm not just fighting for good schools in blue states or red states -- I'm fighting for good schools in the United States. (Applause.)

The values that we are fighting for and care about of hard work and looking out for one another, those are not rich values or poor values, or business values or worker values, or red, white, black, Asian -- it doesn't matter -- they are American values. (Applause.) They are American values. And if we rally around a new economic patriotism together, if we reclaim our values, we will rebuild this economy, we'll strengthen the middle class.

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: We'll keep moving forward. (Applause.)

I am confident our politics is not as divided as our politics suggest.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: That's why I love you! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: I believe we've got more in common than the pundits are willing to tell you. I still believe in you, and I hope you still believe in me. (Applause.) And if you are willing to get out there and make some phone calls, and knock on some doors, beat the pavement -- if you'll vote for me in November -- (applause) -- we will win Fairfax County again. (Applause.) We'll win Virginia again. (Applause.) We'll finish what we started. And I'll remind the world, alongside you, why it is that the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you, Virginia. Thank you. (Applause.) God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Bill Graham Civic Auditorium
San Francisco, California

9:29 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, San Francisco! (Applause.) Thank you! (Applause.) Thank you, guys. (Applause.) Thank you. (Applause.) Thank you, everybody. I love you back. Thank you, everybody. (Applause.)

Now, there are a couple of people I want to acknowledge who are here tonight. First of all, give it up for your mayor, Ed Lee, in the house. (Applause.) Your attorney general, Kamala Harris, is here. (Applause.) Got a couple of outstanding members of Congress -- Barbara Lee and Pete Stark.

(Applause.) It appears that John Legend and Michael Franti did a pretty good job of firing you up. (Applause.)

And we've got two San Francisco 49ers, Alex Smith -- your quarterback Alex Smith, that tight-end Vernon Davis. (Applause.) I've had a chance to meet them. They seem like wonderful young men and just so impressive and poised. So I can't help but wish them the best of luck until they play my Bears in Week 11.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: What happened, what happened? Come on. (Laughter.) Now, I know that was quite a show. You guys have been having fun. But now we've got to get down to business. We're here because we've got some work to do. We're here because we've got an election to win. (Applause.) We're here because everything we fought for in 2008 is on the line in 2012. And I'm going to need your help to finish what we started. (Applause.)

Now, four years ago, I made a few commitments to you. I told you I'd end the war in Iraq, and I did. (Applause.) I said I'd end the war in Afghanistan, and we are. (Applause.) I said we'd refocus on the people who actually attacked us on 9/11 -- and today, al Qaeda is on its heels and Osama bin Laden is no more. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families, and we have by $3600. (Applause.) I promised to cut taxes for small business owners, and we have 18 times. We got back every dime used to rescue the banks, and we passed a law to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts for good. (Applause.)

We passed health care reform, also known as, aka Obamacare -- (applause) -- and we did so because I do care. I care that folks with preexisting conditions can still get insurance. I care that your insurance companies don't jerk you around. I care that we make sure that being a woman is not considered a preexisting condition and an excuse to pay people more. (Applause.)

I told you that we would make sure that nobody who serves this country so bravely will ever be kicked out of the military because of who they are or who they love. We ended "don't ask, don't tell." (Applause.)

When Governor Romney said we should let Detroit go bankrupt, we said I don't think we're going to take your business advice. We reinvented a dying auto industry that's now back on top of the world. (Applause.)

Three years -- three years after the worst economic crisis of our lifetimes, our businesses have created more than 5 million new jobs. (Applause.) This past Friday, we found out that the unemployment rate had fallen from a height of 10 percent down to 7.8 [percent], the lowest level since I took office. (Applause.) Manufacturers are coming back to America. Home values are on the rise.

We are not there yet. We're not where we need to be yet. There are still too many Americans looking for work, too many families who are having trouble paying the bills, too many homes underwater, too many young people burdened with debt from going to school. But if there's one thing I know, it is this: We have come too far to turn back now. (Applause.)

The last thing we can afford, California, right now is four years of the very same policies that led us into the mess in the first place. We've spent four years cleaning it up. We don't want another mess. We can't allow that to happen. I won't allow it to happen. And that's why I'm running for a second term for President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

I've seen too much pain and too much struggle to let this country get hit with another round of top-down economics. The centerpiece of my opponent Governor Romney's economic plan is a $5 trillion tax cut skewed towards the wealthy. He's been pitching this plan for almost two years now.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: No, no -- don't boo, vote. (Applause.) He stood up on stage during one of the primary debates, proudly promised that he -- that his tax cuts would include the top 1 percent. He promised this. But most of the economists who crunched the numbers said Governor Romney's plan would either blow up the deficit or raise taxes on the middle class. It's one or the other. That's how arithmetic works. (Laughter and applause.)

So a few weeks ago, you can start seeing he's figuring out, well, this isn't maybe selling that well. (Laughter.) And then, a few nights ago -- (laughter) -- suddenly a guy pretending to be Mitt Romney stood on a stage next to me -- (laughter and applause) -- and said he's changing his plan. He is just going to pretend it doesn't exist. What $5 trillion tax cut? (Laughter.) I don't know anything about a $5 trillion tax cut. Don't pay attention to that tax cut behind the curtain. (Laughter.) During the debate he said, "There is no economist who can say Mitt Romney's tax plan adds $5 trillion to the deficit if I say I will not add to the deficit with my tax plan." (Laughter.)

Thanks for clearing that up. (Laughter.) We'll take your word for it. (Laughter.) This was almost as believable as when he said he'd bring down our deficit by going after what has been the biggest driver of our debt and deficits over the last decade -- public television, PBS. (Laughter.) You didn't know this, but for all you moms and kids out there, you should have confidence that finally somebody is cracking down on Big Bird. (Laughter.) Elmo has been seen in a white Suburban. He's driving for the border. (Laughter.) Oscar is hiding out in his trashcan. (Laughter.) We're cracking down on them. Governor Romney's plan is to let Wall Street run wild again, but he's going to bring the hammer down on "Sesame Street." (Laughter and applause.)

Listen, after the debate, I had a bunch of folks come to me -- "Don't be so polite, don't be so nice." (Laughter and applause.) But I want everybody to understand something -- what was being presented wasn't leadership, that's salesmanship. (Applause.) And we cannot afford another round of tax cuts for the wealthy. We can't afford to gut investments in education or clean energy or research and technology. We can't afford to roll back regulations on Wall Street banks, or major polluters, or insurance companies. That is not a jobs plan. That's not a plan to grow the economy. That's not change we can believe in. That's a relapse. We have been there. We have tried that. We are not going back, we are moving forward. That's why you're here. That's why I'm here. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: We have a different vision about how you create jobs and prosperity in America. We have to change our tax code so it stops rewarding companies that are shipping jobs overseas. I want to reward small businesses and manufacturers who are investing and taking route right here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

We can create more jobs controlling our own energy. After 30 years of inaction, we raised fuel standards so that by the middle of the next decade, your cars and trucks will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.) That's good for our economy. It's good for our national security. It's good for our environment. And today, the United States of America is less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in the last two decades. (Applause.)

So we don't want to reverse that progress. We've got to build on it. My plan would cut our oil imports in half. And we can invest in the clean energy that's creating thousands of jobs all across America right now -- (applause) -- wind power and solar power and clean coal, fuel-efficient cars and long-lasting batteries. We're producing oil and natural gas at record rates. But we have to make sure that we're also grabbing for the future. We can't cede that to somebody else.

And unlike my opponent, I will not allow oil companies to collect another $4 billion every single year in taxpayer-funded corporate welfare. (Applause.) I'm not going to let China win the race for clean energy technologies. I want to see those technologies developed right here in California, right here in the United States of America. (Applause.) And as I said at the convention, yes, my plan will continue to reduce carbon pollution because climate change is not a hoax. (Applause.) Droughts, floods, wildfires -- they're not a joke. They're a threat to our kids' future. That's what we're fighting for.

I believe we've got to have the best education system in the world. (Applause.) That will create jobs. That's good for business -- making sure that everybody has the skills they need to compete and to be good citizens. Education is the reason I'm standing here today. (Applause.) It's why Michelle was able to do everything she's done in her life. It's true for so many of all the folks here.

So now we've got a choice. We can gut education to pay for tax breaks that we don't need, or we can recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers -- (applause) -- focus on early childhood education, provide job training for 2 million more workers in our community colleges, help to lower tuition costs for our students going to college. We can meet those goals. That's what we're fighting for. That's what's at stake in the next 29 days. That's why I'm running for a second term as President. (Applause.)

I want to use some of the money we're saving from ending the wars in Iraq and winding down our efforts in Afghanistan to pay down our deficit; put people back to work all across America rebuilding roads and bridges, airports and schools. Infrastructure -- that's what I'm talking about. (Laughter.) I'm pitching, you're catching.

Governor Romney, he has a different view. He said it was tragic to end the war in Iraq. In a speech today, he doubled down on that belief. He said ending the war was a mistake. I disagree. Bringing our troops home was the right thing to do. (Applause.)

And every brave American who wears the uniform of this country should know that as long as I'm Commander-in-Chief we will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. And when our troops take off their uniforms, we will serve them as well as they've served us -- because nobody who has fought for us should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. (Applause.)

And yes, we need to cut our deficit and reduce our debt.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you.

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Laughter.) But we do have to reduce our debt and our deficits, and I've put forward a $4 trillion plan to get it done over the next 10 years. We've already worked with Democrats and Republicans to cut a trillion dollars in spending. I am ready to do more. But we cannot just cut our way to prosperity. We cannot get this done unless we ask the wealthiest households to pay higher taxes on incomes over $250,000 -- the same rate we had when Bill Clinton was President, we created 23 million new jobs, went from deficit to surplus, created a whole lot of millionaires and successful small businesses, as well. (Applause.)

Governor Romney says it's fair that he pays a lower tax rate than a teacher or an autoworker who makes $50,000.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. You know what, I refuse to ask middle-class families to give up their deductions for owning a home, or raising their kids to pay for a tax cut we don't need. I refuse to pay for a tax cut for millionaires and billionaires by asking those students who are here today to pay more for college, or kicking kids off of Head Start, or eliminating health insurance for millions of Americans who are poor or elderly or disabled. That is not what has built this country. (Applause.) That is not what we believe. That is not what's going to happen. We are going to go forward, not backwards. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

So, San Francisco, California, this is the choice we now face. It's what the election comes down to. Over and over, we are told by opponents that since government can't do everything, it should do almost nothing. Basic philosophy is, you're on your own. If you can't afford health insurance, hope you don't get sick. Companies are releasing pollution that our kids are breathing, well, that's just the price of progress. You can't afford to start a business or go to college, just borrow money from your parents. (Laughter.)

That's not who we are. That's not what this country is about. Here in America, we believe in individual initiative. We believe that we can't help folks who don't want to try to help themselves, but we also believe in opportunity. We also believe we're all in this together. We also understand that America is not about what can be done for us; it's about what can be done by us, together, as one nation, as one people.

(Applause.)

That's what you all understood in 2008. That's what change was about. You -- all of us -- coming together. You're the reason there's a little girl somewhere here in California who is going to get the care she needs because an insurance company can't impose some sort of lifetime limit on her coverage. (Applause.)

You're the reason a factory worker who lost his job in Toledo or Lordstown, Ohio is back on the line building some of the best cars in the world.

You're the reason that a student right here has help paying for a college education, or a veteran can go to school on the New GI Bill.

You're the reason a young immigrant who grew up here and went to school here, pledged allegiance to our flag will no longer be deported from the only country she's ever called home. (Applause.)

You're the reason why a soldier who has served us so bravely will not be kicked out of the military because of who they love. (Applause.) You made that happen. You're the reason that soldier can come home to his loved ones and hear those words, "welcome home." You made that happen. (Applause.)

And so I need you in this election. The next 29 days -- we cannot afford to be complacent, and we cannot afford to be cynical. We've got to look back at the progress we've made, and that should give us confidence. But we have to understand we've got a lot more to do, and if we don't do it, then change won't happen.

Your voice will make a difference. And if you don't make that difference, then other people will fill the void -- lobbyists and special interests, and the folks who write the $10 million checks to try to win this race, and the ones who are trying to make it harder for people to vote; the politicians in Washington who somehow think that they've got a better idea than women about women's health care choices. (Applause.) Those are the folks that are going to be making decisions if you are not making those decisions.

Only you can make sure those things don't happen. Only you've got the power to move us forward. I will be there with you, but this is a team, people.

From the day we began this campaign, I always said that change takes time. We always said that it would take more than one term or even one President. We said it would take more than one party. And, by the way, no, it doesn't just take me. That's not the deal. The deal is it takes all of us.

That's the deal. (Applause.)

It won't happen if you've got somebody who writes off half the nation even before he takes office. But it also won't happen if half the nation writes off itself by not participating, or doesn't vote. (Applause.)

In 2008, 47 percent of the country didn't vote for me. But on the night of the election, I said to all those Americans, I may not have won your vote, but I hear your voices. I need your help. I'll be your President, too. (Applause.)

I don't know how many of you will be with me this time around, but I'll be with you. I'll be there fighting for you because I'm not fighting to create Democratic jobs or Republican jobs -- I'm fighting to create American jobs. I'm not fighting to improve schools in red states or blue states -- I'm fighting to improve schools in the United States. (Applause.) I'm not fighting for red values or white values or black values or Latino values or gay or straight values -- I'm fighting for American values. They belong to all of us. (Applause.)

San Francisco, we are not as divided as our politics would suggest. We've got more in common than our pundits believe. I still believe in you. I'm asking you to keep believing in me. I'm asking for your vote. I'm asking you to knock on doors. I'm asking you to make phone calls. And if you do, we will win this election. We'll finish what we started, and we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you. God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

University of Miami
Miami, Florida

3:26 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Miami! (Applause.) How's it going, Hurricanes! (Applause.) Can everybody please give Lizzie a big round of applause for that great introduction. (Applause.)

It's good to see your Senator, former astronaut, Bill Nelson in the house! (Applause.) Your outstanding local Congresswomen, Debbie Wasserman-Schultz and Frederica Wilson. (Applause.) A good man who's going to join them in Congress, Joe Garcia. (Applause.) Congresswoman Wilson asked me to also acknowledge some outstanding young people, the Miami Northwestern Senior High School 5,000 Role Model of Excellence Project. (Applause.) Proud of you guys.

And it's good to see all of you. All of you! (Applause.) Because we've got some work to do, Miami. We've got an election to win. In just over two weeks, on October 27th, you get to start voting early. And everything that we fought for in 2008 is on the line in 2012. So I'm going to need you fired up. I need you ready to go. (Applause.) I need your help to finish what we started.

Think about where we've been and how far we've come. Four years ago, I told you we'd end the war in Iraq, and I did. (Applause.) I said we'd end the war in Afghanistan, and we are. (Applause.) I said we'd refocus on the people who actually attacked us on 9/11 -- and today, al Qaeda is on the run and Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families, and we have, by $3,600. (Applause.) I promised to cut taxes for small business owners, and we have, 18 times. We stabilized the banking system, but we got back every dime we used to rescue the banks -- with interest. (Applause.) And we passed a historic law to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts for good.

We passed health care reform, a.k.a. Obamacare --

(applause) -- so your insurance company can't jerk you around anymore, and those of you under 26 can stay on your parent's plan. (Applause.) You can't have insurance companies barring you because you've got a preexisting condition, and they can't charge more just because you're a woman. (Applause.)

We repealed "don't ask, don't tell," so nobody is ever kicked out of the military because of who they love. (Applause.)

When Governor Romney said we should let Detroit go bankrupt, we said, no, we're not going to take your business advice. We reinvented a dying auto industry that's come roaring back to the top of the world. (Applause.) And that makes a difference not just to communities across the Midwest; it's vital for our entire economy. It's something every American can be proud of.

Today, four years after the worst economic crisis of our lifetimes, we are moving forward. (Applause.) After losing 800,000 jobs the month I was sworn in, our businesses have now added more than 5 million new jobs over the past two and a half years. (Applause.) The unemployment rate has fallen from a peak of 10 percent down to 7.8 percent -- the lowest level since I took office. (Applause.) So more Americans are getting jobs and manufacturing is coming back. Home values are on the rise.

Now, we know we're not where we need to be -- not yet. That's especially true in places like Florida that were so hard hit. We've still got too many friends and neighbors who are looking for work. We've got too many families who can't pay the bills, too many homes that are still underwater, too many young people still burdened with debt when they graduate from college. (Applause.)

But if there's one thing I know, Florida, it's this: We have come too far to turn back now. (Applause.) The American people have worked too hard to get to this point. After all that we've been through together, after all that we fought through together, why would we go backwards? The last thing we can afford, Florida, right now is four years of the very same policies that got us into this mess in the first place. (Applause.) I won't let that happen. We can't let that happen. That's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Florida, I have seen too much pain and too much struggle because of bad economic policies that happened before we got elected to let this country go through another round of top-down economics.

The centerpiece of Governor Romney's economic plan is a new $5 trillion tax cut that favors the wealthiest Americans.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. (Applause.) Vote!

Vote! (Applause.) Now, Governor Romney has been pitching this plan for almost a year now. He stood up on the stage in one of his primary debates and proudly promised that his new tax cuts, on top of the Bush tax cuts, would include the top 1 percent.

Now, you wouldn't know this from listening to the new, latest version of Mitt Romney. (Laughter.) He's trying to go through an extreme makeover. After running for more than a year in which he called himself "severely conservative," Mitt Romney is trying to convince you that he was severely kidding. (Laughter and applause.)

Look, what he was selling was not working -- because people understood his ideas wouldn't help the middle class. So these days, Mitt Romney is for whatever you're for. (Laughter.) Suddenly, he loves the middle class -- can't stop talking enough about them. He loves Medicare, loves teachers. He even loves the most important parts of Obamacare. What happened? (Laughter and applause.)

Now, what does he have to say, this new version of Mitt Romney, about all the things he's actually promised to do as President: Tax breaks for outsourcers -- never heard of such a thing. Saying we should cut back on teachers -- doesn't ring a bell.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo --

AUDIENCE: Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: Vote!

Kicking 200,000 young Floridians off their parent's insurance plans -- who, me? (Laughter.) And when he's asked about the cost of his tax plan, he just pretends it doesn't exist -- what $5 trillion tax cut? I don't know anything about a $5 trillion tax cut. Pay no attention to the $5 trillion tax cut on my website. (Laughter and applause.)

Look, Governor Romney thinks we have not been paying attention for the last year and a half. He is going to say whatever it takes to try to close the deal, and he's counting on the fact that you don't remember that what he's selling is exactly what got us into this mess in the first place.

So, Florida, you've got to let him know we remember. We know full well that if he gets a chance, Governor Romney will rubber-stamp the top-down agenda of this Republican Congress the second he takes office, and we cannot afford that future. His plan will not create jobs. It will not help the middle class. It will not speed the recovery -- it will slow down the recovery. It will not reduce the deficit. It will not expand opportunity. We can't afford it. We're not going back. We are moving forward. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

Look, America, we know that in this country, jobs and prosperity don't trickle down from the top. They grow from a strong and thriving middle class.

More tax breaks for outsourcers won't create jobs. It didn't over the last decade. You know what does create jobs? Is supporting small businesses and manufacturers who make products right here in America, who hire American workers. That's what we're championing. (Applause.)

That's why we need to stop rewarding companies that ship jobs overseas. Start rewarding companies that create jobs right here in Miami, right here in Florida, right here in the United States. That's the choice you face in this election. (Applause.)

I believe we can create more jobs by controlling more of our own energy. After 30 years of inaction, we raised fuel standards so that by the middle of the next decade, your cars and trucks will go twice as far on a gallon of gas. (Applause.) And today, the United States of America is less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in two decades. (Applause.)

So now you've got a choice. My plan would cut our oil imports in half and invest in the clean energy that's creating thousands of jobs all across America right now -- (applause) -- not just oil and natural gas, but wind and solar and clean coal technologies, fuel-efficient cars and long-lasting batteries. And if you want to know how we're paying for it, one of the things we need to do is not allow oil companies to collect another $4 billion in taxpayer-funded corporate welfare every single year. (Applause.)

I will not let China or anybody else win the race for clean energy technology. I want to see that technology developed right here in Florida, right here in the United States of America, creating jobs right here. (Applause.) And, by the way, yes, my plan will reduce the carbon pollution that's heating our planet, because climate change is not a hoax. (Applause.) More drought and floods and hurricanes and wildfires -- that's not a joke. That's a threat to our children's future. And we can do something about it.

Just like I believe that we can make sure that every young person in America gets the education they need to compete. (Applause.) Education is the only reason that I'm standing here today. (Applause.) Education is the gateway to a middle-class life.

And now you've got a choice. Governor Romney says hiring more teachers won't grow the economy over the next four years; that's not the role of teachers. What about our kids over the next four years? What about our economy over the next 40 years? (Applause.) We cannot gut education to pay for $5 trillion tax cuts. We need to recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers and provide 2 million workers the opportunity to study at community colleges, and lower tuition costs for our young people. (Applause.) That's what we're fighting for. That's what's at stake in this election. That's what grows our economy. That's what we can do together. And that's what you can choose for America.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I love you, Barack!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.)

I want to use the money that we're saving from ending the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan to pay down our deficit, put our people back to work rebuilding roads and bridges and schools all across America. Governor Romney said it was "tragic" to end the war in Iraq. He said this in a speech just this week -- said we should have left troops on the ground in Iraq.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo --

AUDIENCE: Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: Vote. (Applause.)

I think bringing our troops home to their families was the right thing to do. (Applause.)

And every brave American who wears the uniform of this country should know, as long as I'm your Commander-in-Chief, we will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. (Applause.) And when our troops take off their uniforms, we will serve them as well as they've served us -- because nobody who has fought for this country should have to fight for a job or a roof over their heads when they come home. (Applause.)

And finally, yes, we're going to need to cut our deficit by $4 trillion over the next 10 years. And I've already worked with Republicans and Democrats to cut a trillion dollars in spending; I'm ready to do more. But we're not going to be able to get it done unless we also ask the wealthiest households to pay higher taxes on their incomes over $250,000 -- (applause) -- the same rate we had when Bill Clinton was President and our economy created nearly 23 million new jobs. That's what we need to do. (Applause.)

Governor Romney has a different view. He said just a couple of weeks ago that it's fair that he pays a lower tax rate than a teacher who is making $50,000 a year.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo --

AUDIENCE: Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: Vote.

He's wrong. I refuse to ask middle-class families to give up their deductions for owning a home or raising their kids just to pay for another millionaire's tax cut. I refuse to pay for that tax cut by asking students at "The U" to pay more for college -- (applause) -- or kicking children out of Head Start programs, or eliminating health insurance for millions of Americans who are poor or elderly or disabled. That won't help us grow.

My opponent says over and over that he can cut taxes, increase military spending, close the deficit -- but the only thing he's pointed to that he's going to get rid of is Big Bird. (Laughter and applause.) This week he said, don't worry, his new tax cuts will pay for themselves. That may not sound familiar to some of you guys because you're young, but we heard that exact same argument back in 2000, back in 2001, back in 2003. That's how we went from surplus to deficit. We have heard this pitch before. We know it doesn't work. We know our plan does.

This is the choice that we now face. This is what the election comes down to. This is why I'm running for a second term as President. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Over and over, folks like Governor Romney and his allies in Congress tell us that since government can't do everything, it should do almost nothing -- sort of a "you're on your own" philosophy. If you can't afford health insurance, hope you don't get sick. If a company is releasing harmful, toxic pollution into the air that your kids breathe, well, that's the price of progress. If you can't afford to start a business or go to college, borrow money from your parents. (Laughter.)

That's not how we built this country. That's not what made America great. That's not who we are. That's not what we're about. Here in America, we believe we're all in this together. (Applause.) We understand that America is not about what can be done for us. It's about what can be done by us, together, as one nation and one people.

And that's what we came together to restore back in 2008 -- that sense of what we can do together. And the American people all across this country responded. You are the reason that Florida seniors right now are saving an average of $600 every year on prescription drugs -- because we passed Obamacare, because we passed health care reform. You did that. (Applause.)

You're the reason there's a working family from Hollywood that was able to save their home from foreclosure. You did that. It's because of you.

You're the reason that students in Gainesville, or Tallahassee, or here at "The U" have help paying for their college education, why veterans can go to college now on the New GI Bill.

You're the reason a young immigrant who grew up here and went to school here and pledged allegiance to our flag will no longer be deported from the only country she's ever called home. (Applause.)

You're the reason why soldiers won't be kicked out of our military because of who they love. (Applause.) You're the reason why thousands of families have finally been able to say to the loved ones who served us so bravely, "Welcome home." Welcome home. (Applause.)

And so we can't be tired now. We have to keep going. If you turn away now, if you buy into the cynicism that what we fought for isn't possible, well, of course change won't happen. If you give up on the idea that your voice makes a difference, especially the young people here, then other voices will fill the void -- the lobbyists and the special interests, the people with the $10 million checks who are trying to buy this election, the ones who are trying to make it harder to vote; the Washington politicians who want to control health care choices women can make for themselves. (Applause.) They will fill the void. They will set the agenda. And they will take us backward.

And only you can make sure that doesn't happen. Only you have the power to move us forward. On October 27th, you can choose -- you can choose. You can choose whether we go back to the policies that got us into this mess, or you can choose to keep moving forward with policies that have been getting us out of this mess. That's the choice. (Applause.)

On October 27th, you can choose to go back to a foreign policy that takes us into wars with no plan to get out, or we can say let's keep moving forward; let's end the Afghan war realistically; let's bring our troops home in a responsible fashion. (Applause.)

On October 27th, you can agree to turn back the clock 50 years for women, and immigrants, and gays, and lesbians. Or you can stand up and say we want to keep moving forward. (Applause.) I believe that America is a country where you can succeed no matter who you are, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter who you love. (Applause.)

That's what's at stake. That's what's at stake in this election. That's why I'm asking for your vote. (Applause.) Back in 2008, I won, but 47 percent of the country didn't vote for me. But I didn't just dismiss 47 percent of the country. What I said was, you may not have voted for me, but I heard your voices, and I'll fight just as hard for you as I will for everybody else. (Applause.)

And I kept that promise. I have been fighting for every American to make sure they get a fair shot. (Applause.) And I have been willing to do it and able to do it, because every single day the American people have inspired me.

I still believe in you, and I need you to keep believing in me. I need you to help me finish the job. And if you're willing to stand with me, and work with me, and knock on some doors with me, and make some phone calls for me, we'll win Florida again. We'll win this election. We'll finish what we started. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you. God bless the United States of America.
(Applause.)

October 19,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

George Mason University
Fairfax, Virginia

11:55 A.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Virginia! (Applause.) Are you fired up? (Applause.) Are you ready to go? (Applause.) I can't hear you! (Applause.) Well, it's good to be back. Thank you.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Can everybody please give Cecile a big round of applause for the great introduction and the work she does. (Applause.) We've got your Congressman here -- Gerry Connolly in the house. (Applause.)

Eighteen days. Eighteen days, Virginia. Eighteen days and you're going to step into a voting booth. And you're going to have a very big choice to make -- not just a choice between two candidates or two parties, but between two fundamentally different visions for this country that we love.

Governor Romney has got his sales pitch. We heard it the other night at the debate. He's been running around talking about his five-point plan for the economy.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. Vote! (Applause.)

He wants you to believe that somehow he'll create 12 million jobs, cut taxes by $5 trillion, even though it favors the wealthiest Americans. None of this will add to the deficit.

When folks who don't actually work for Governor Romney start crunching the numbers, it turns out the tax plan doesn't add up, jobs plan doesn't create jobs, deficit plan doesn't reduce the deficit. An economist at the New York Times put it this morning, "There's no jobs plan -- there's just a snow job on the American people." (Applause.) A snow job.

Virginia, you've heard of the New Deal, you've heard of the Square Deal, the Fair Deal. Mitt Romney is trying to give you a Sketchy Deal. (Laughter.) A sketchy deal.

And it's really just a one-point plan, not a five-point plan. One point -- folks at the very top play by a different set of rules than all of you.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Listen, don't boo -- vote. (Laughter.)

If he offered you that deal when he was in corporate finance, you wouldn't give him a dime. So why would you give him his vote?

This same philosophy that's been squeezing the middle-class family for more than a decade -- the same philosophy that got us into this mess. We can't go back to that.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: I've met too many good Americans who work so hard, show so much resilience, so much resolve -- we have been fighting our way back from some of the same policies he's advocating. We have been there. We have tried it. We can't go back. (Applause.) We are moving forward. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

Now, I believe that the biggest issue in this election is how do we rebuild a strong middle class and provide ladders for opportunity -- all those who want to get into the middle class, who are willing to work hard, willing to take responsibility. Are we going to make sure that we're a country where everybody gets a fair shot, and everybody is doing their fair share, and everybody is playing by the same rules? (Applause.)

So the economy is the dominant issue. But I want everybody to understand that that's not the only place where Governor Romney is offering you a sketchy deal. It's bad enough that my opponent wants to take us back to the failed economic policies of the past. But when it comes to issues critical to women -- the right to make your own decision about your health -- (applause) -- the right to be treated fairly and equally in the workplace. (Applause.) Governor Romney wants to take us to policies more suited to the 1950s. Even his own running mate said he's "kind of a throwback to the '50s." That's one thing we agree on. (Laughter.)

He may not have noticed, we're in the 21st century. (Applause.) And in the 21st century, a woman deserves equal pay for equal work. (Applause.) This should be a no-brainer. But no matter how many times Governor Romney is asked whether or not he supports a law upholding that idea, he refuses to say. Why should this be hard? Are you for equal pay for equal work? Are you for making sure that laws enforce that basic principle?

He can't tell you. I can. (Applause.) I support that law. In fact, the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act was the first law that I signed into office. (Applause.) And this isn't just a women's issue. No man should want his wife, or his daughters paid less than a man for doing the same job. (Applause.) This is a family issue. This is an economic issue. It's one that we've got to fight for.

When Governor Romney says he's going to get rid of funding for Planned Parenthood --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo --

AUDIENCE: Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: -- vote.

What he apparently doesn't understand is that there are millions of women all across the country who rely on Planned Parenthood not just for contraceptive care, but for preventive care. That's not just a health issue, it's an economic issue.

When Governor Romney said he'd have supported an extreme measure in Massachusetts that could have outlawed some forms of contraception, when he joined the far right of his party to support a bill that would have allowed any employer to deny contraceptive care to their employees --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo --

AUDIENCE: Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: -- vote. (Laughter.)

What he didn't get is that making sure your insurance policy covers contraceptive care is an economic issue also. I don't think your boss should decide what's best for your health and safety.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: I don't think your insurance company gets to decide what care you should get.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: And I sure don't think any politician should decide. (Applause.) The only person who should decide about your health care is you. (Applause.)

And, by the way, that's why we fought so hard to pass health care reform, a.k.a. Obamacare. That's why we pushed for it. (Applause.)

This law has secured new access to preventive care like mammograms and other cancer screenings for more than 20 million women, with no co-pay, no deductible, no out-of-pocket cost, because I do not believe a working mother should have to put off a mammogram just because money is tight. (Applause.)

This law means that most health plans are now beginning to cover the cost of contraceptive care because I don't think a college student in Charlottesville or Blacksburg or Fairfax should have to choose between textbooks or the preventive care that she needs. (Applause.)

And, by the way for all the young people out here, Obamacare has already allowed nearly 7 million young adults under the age of 26 to sign up to stay on their parent's plans. (Applause.)

For all those who are young at heart but not young in years, it's already saved millions of seniors on Medicare hundreds of dollars on their prescription medicine. (Applause.)

Insurance companies can no longer put lifetime limits on your care or discriminate against children with preexisting conditions. (Applause.) And soon, they'll no longer be able to charge women more for the same care just because they're women. That's what change looks like. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you, Obama!

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you. (Applause.)

Now, anybody who thinks that this election doesn't matter, know this: My opponent has promised to repeal all of the things we just talked about as soon as he takes office, says he'd do it on day one. We know full well that if he gets the chance, he'll rubber-stamp the agenda of this Republican Congress the second he takes office. Virginia, we can't give him that chance.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: I know he's called him severely -- he's called himself "severely conservative," but there's nothing conservative about a government that prevents a woman from making her own health care decisions.

He talks about freedom, but freedom is the ability to choose the care you need when you need it. Freedom is the ability to change jobs or start your own business without the fear of losing your health insurance. Freedom is the knowledge that you'll no longer be charged more than men for the same health care, or denied affordable coverage just because you beat cancer.

When the next President and Congress could tip the balance of the highest court in the land in a way that turns back the clock for women and families for decades to come, you don't want someone who needs to ask for binders of women. (Applause.) You don't want that guy. You want a President who has already appointed two unbelievable women to the Supreme Court of the United States. (Applause.)

So, Virginia, the choice --

AUDIENCE: Obama! Obama! Obama!

THE PRESIDENT: The choice between going backward and moving forward has never been so clear. But now that we're 18 days out from the election, Mr. "Severely Conservative" -- (laughter) -- wants you to think he was severely kidding about everything he said over the last year. (Laughter.) He told folks he was "the ideal candidate" for the Tea Party. Now suddenly he's saying, "what, who, me?" (Laughter.) He's forgetting what his own positions are, and he's betting that you will, too.

I mean, he's changing up so much and backtracking and sidestepping -- (laughter) -- we've got to name this condition that he's going through. I think it's called "Romnesia." (Laughter and applause.) That's what it's called. I think that's what he's going through.

Now, I'm not a medical doctor, but I do want to go over some of the symptoms with you -- because I want to make sure nobody else catches it. (Laughter and applause.) If you say you're for equal pay for equal work, but you keep refusing to say whether or not you'd sign a bill that protects equal pay for equal work -- you might have Romnesia. (Laughter and applause.)

If you say women should have access to contraceptive care, but you support legislation that would let your employer deny you contraceptive care -- you might have a case of Romnesia. (Applause.)

If you say you'll protect a woman's right to choose, but you stand up at a primary debate and said that you'd be delighted to sign a law outlying -- outlawing that right to choose in all cases -- man, you've definitely got Romnesia. (Applause.)

Now, this extends to other issues. If you say earlier in the year, I'm going to give a tax cut to the top 1 percent and then in a debate you say, I don't know anything about giving tax cuts to rich folks -- you need to get a thermometer, take your temperature, because you've probably got Romnesia. (Applause.)

If you say that you're a champion of the coal industry when, while you were governor you stood in front of a coal plant and said, this plant will kill you -- (laughter) --

AUDIENCE: Romnesia!

THE PRESIDENT: -- that's some Romnesia. (Applause.)

So I think you're being able -- you're beginning to be able to identify these symptoms. And if you come down with a case of Romnesia, and you can't seem to remember the policies that are still on your website -- (laughter) -- or the promises you've made over the six years you've been running for President, here's the good news: Obamacare covers preexisting conditions. (Laughter and applause.) We can fix you up. We've got a cure. We can make you well, Virginia. (Applause.) This is a curable disease. (Laughter.)

Women, men -- all of you -- these are family issues.

These are economic issues. I want my daughters to have the same opportunities as anybody's sons. I believe America does better -- the economy grows more, we create more jobs -- when everybody participates, when everyone is getting a fair shot, everybody is getting a fair shake, everybody is playing by the same rules, everybody is doing their fair share. That's why I'm running for a second term for President of the United States. (Applause.) I need you to help me finish the job. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Four years ago, I told you we'd end the war in Iraq, and we did. (Applause.) I said we'd end the war in Afghanistan -- we are. I said we'd refocus on the terrorists who actually attacked us on 9/11, and we have. (Applause.) Al Qaeda is on the path to defeat. Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.)

Four years ago, I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families, and I have. (Applause.) I promised to cut taxes for small business owners -- we have, 18 times. (Applause.)

We got every dime back from the banks that we used to rescue those banks. We passed laws to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts for good.

We repealed "don't ask, don't tell," to make sure that nobody who wants to serve our country gets kicked out because of who they love. (Applause.)

When Governor Romney said we'd let -- he'd let Detroit go bankrupt, we said, we're not going to take your advice. We reinvented a dying auto industry that's come roaring back to the top of the world. (Applause.)

Four years after the worst economic crisis of our lifetime, we're moving. After losing 800,000 jobs a month when I took office, businesses have now added over 5 million new jobs. Unemployment has fallen from 10 percent to 7.8 percent. Home values are back on the rise. (Applause.) The stock market has nearly doubled -- 401(k)s are starting to recover. Manufacturing is coming home. Assembly lines are humming again. We've got to keep moving forward. We've got to keep moving forward. (Applause.)

We've got more work to do. I've got a plan -- and it's a real plan, not a sales pitch -- to grow the economy and create jobs and build more security for the middle class.

I want to send fewer jobs overseas and sell more products overseas. (Applause.) I want to invest in manufacturers and small businesses that create jobs right here in Virginia, right here in America.

I want us to control more of our own energy, cut oil imports in half, create thousands of clean energy jobs.

I want every child to have the same chance at a great education that Michelle and I received. (Applause.) I want to hire more teachers in math and science, train 2 million workers at community colleges, bring down the cost of college tuition.

(Applause.)

I want to use the savings from ending the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan to pay down our deficit, put our people back to work right here, doing some nation-building here at home.
(Applause.)

That's the agenda you need. That's the agenda we need. That's how we strengthen the middle class. That's how we'll keep moving forward. And in 18 days, you're going to have a chance to say whether we keep moving forward.

In 18 days, you can choose between top-down economic policies that got us into this mess, or the middle class-out policies that are getting us out of this mess. (Applause.)

In 18 days, you can choose a foreign policy that gets us into wars with no plan to get out, or you can say let's end the Afghan war responsibly; let's bring our troops home. (Applause.) Let's focus on making sure that we're building America.

In 18 days, you can let them turn back the clock 50 years for immigrants, and gays, and women, or we can stand up and say we are a country in which everybody has a place. (Applause.) A country where no matter where you are, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from -- black, white, Hispanic, Asian, Native American, young, old, gay, straight, abled, disabled -- we have a place for everybody. (Applause.) Everybody has got a chance to make it if you try.

That's what's at stake, Virginia. That's why I'm asking for your vote. I believe in you. I need you to keep believing in me. I want to finish the job. And if you're willing to stand with me, and make some phone calls with me, and knock on some doors with, get your friends to vote for me -- we will win Fairfax County again. We will win Virginia again. (Applause.) We'll finish what we started. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you. God bless the United States of America.
(Applause.)

October 24,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

The Meadow at City Park
Denver, Colorado

2:54 P.M. MDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Colorado! (Applause.) Thank you! Are you fired up? Are you ready to go? (Applause.) Are you fired up?

AUDIENCE: Yes! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Are you ready to go?

AUDIENCE: Yes! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Well, I'm fired up. Thank you so much, everybody. Can everybody please give Sidra a great round of applause for that wonderful introduction? (Applause.)

We've got some good friends here today. You've got your outstanding governor, John Hickenlooper -- (applause) -- one of the best senators in the country, Michael Bennet -- (applause) -- outstanding congresswoman, Diana DeGette -- (applause) -- your wonderful mayor, Michael Hancock -- (applause) -- my campaign co-chair and former mayor, Frederico Peña. (Applause.) And all of you are here, which makes me excited. (Applause.)

This is the second stop on our 48-hour, marathon-extravaganza fly-around. We are pulling an all-nighter. No sleep; quite a bit of coffee. (Laughter.)

We've just come from Iowa. After this -- we've got some Iowans here? (Laughter.) We are on our way to visit Nevada. We're going to go to Florida, we're going to go to Virginia, we're going to go to Ohio. And I am going to stop in Chicago to vote before this 48-hour day is done. (Applause.) I can't tell you who I'm voting for. (Laughter.) It's a secret ballot. But Michelle says she voted for me. (Applause.) That's what she said.

So we can vote early in Illinois just like you can vote early in Colorado. And I've come back to Colorado -- and this may not be the last time you'll see me. (Applause.) I've come to ask you for your vote. I've come to ask you to help me keep moving America forward.

We now have gone through three debates, months of campaigning, way too many TV ads.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Amen!

THE PRESIDENT: Oh, yes. Got an amen over here. (Laughter.) You've heard, now, Governor Romney's sales pitch. He has been running around saying he's got a five-point plan for the economy.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Don't boo -- vote. (Applause.) Vote. That's the way to show your opinion, is to vote.

It turns out it's not a five-point plan Governor Romney has got, it's a one-point plan: Folks at the very top get to play by their own rules -- pay lower tax rates than you do, outsource more jobs, let Wall Street run wild. And if this plan sounds familiar, it's because we tried it. We tried it in the decade before I took office and it led to falling incomes, and record deficits, and the slowest job growth in half a century, and the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression. And we've been working for four years to clean up this mess that these policies left behind.

Now, Governor Romney knows this. He knows his plan isn't any different than the policies that led to the Great Recession. So in the final weeks of his election, he's counting on you forgetting what he stands for. He's hoping that you, too, will come down with a case of what we like to call Romnesia. (Laughter.)

He's hoping you won't remember that his economic plan is more likely to create jobs in China than here in the United States, because it rewards companies that move jobs and profits overseas. He's hoping you won't remember that he wants to give millionaires and billionaires a $250,000 tax cut, because the only way he can pay for it is by raising the deficit or by raising your taxes. He's hoping you'll come down with a severe case of Romnesia just before you cast your ballot. (Laughter.)

But, Denver, I want you to know this: If you feel any symptoms coming on -- (laughter) -- you start feeling, oh, I've got a temperature, I got headaches, my eyes are getting blurry, it might be Romnesia -- but don't worry, Obamacare covers preexisting conditions. (Applause.) We can make you well. There's a cure, Colorado, as long as you vote. (Applause.) There's a cure.

Now, we joke about Romnesia, but all this speaks to something that is essential to your choice, and that is trust. When you choose a President, you don't know what is going to come up. I mean, when I was running in 2008, we didn't know necessarily that we would see the financial system completely implode. We didn't know that the auto industry might go under. We didn't understand what might be happening in terms of an Arab Spring.

But what you were voting on is somebody who you felt you could trust to work for you, to keep you in mind every single day. Trust matters. And one thing I think you've seen, Colorado, over the last four years is that I mean what I say. (Applause.) I do what I say I'm going to do. (Applause.)

We haven't finished everything that we want to get done. That's why I'm running for a second term. But every single day that I set foot in the Oval Office, I'm fighting for your families. And with your help, I've kept many of the major commitments that we made.

I told you we'd end the war in Iraq -- we ended it. (Applause.) I said we'd end the war in Afghanistan -- we are. I said we'd refocus on the terrorists who actually attacked us on 9/11 -- and now we've got a new tower rising above the New York skyline, and al Qaeda is on the path to defeat; Osama bin Laden is dead; our heroes are coming home. I've kept those promises. (Applause.)

I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families and small businesses -- and we have. I promised to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts for good -- and we did. I promised to repeal "don't ask, don't tell," and today you can't be kicked out of the military because of who you are and who you love. (Applause.) I bet on American workers and American ingenuity, and we saved a dying auto industry that's back on top of the world.

On issue after issue, we are moving forward. After losing 9 million jobs in the Great Recession, our businesses have now added more than 5 million new jobs over the past two and a half years. (Applause.) Manufacturing is coming back to our shores. The unemployment rate has fallen. Home values and home sales are rising. Our assembly lines are humming.

We've got a long way to go, Colorado, but we've come too far to turn back now. We cannot go back to the same policies that got us into this mess. (Applause.) We've got to keep moving forward with the policies that are getting us out. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

Now, we --

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, the reason I want four more years is because I've got a plan that will actually create jobs, a plan that will actually create middle-class security. And unlike Mitt Romney, I'm actually proud to talk about what's in my plan -- (applause) -- because it actually adds up. And if you want to check it out, go to barackobama.com/plans. Share it with your friends. Share it with neighbors. Share it with co-workers. There are still people out there who are trying to make up their mind. Some of you may be trying to make up your mind. Maybe some --

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: No, no, maybe -- no -- somebody may have dragged you here. (Laughter.) Maybe your grandma said, I'm sorry, you've got to come. (Laughter.) Maybe your girlfriend is trying to knock some sense into you; said, no, no, you've got to come to the rally.

So I want you to compare my plan to Governor Romney's. See which plan you think is better for you. See which plan is better for America's future.

Look, I want to end tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas, but I also want to reward small businesses and manufacturers that are creating jobs right here in the United States. (Applause.) I want to cut our oil imports in half by 2020. And we're going to develop traditional sources of energy. And today we are less dependent on foreign oil than any time in the last two decades. But it's not enough just to produce more oil and natural gas. We've also increased fuel standards on cars and trucks so your car will go farther on a gallon of gas. (Applause.)

I want to build on the progress we've made doubling clean energy. I want fuel-efficient cars and long-lasting batteries and wind turbines manufactured here in China [sic] -- I want them -- I don't want them manufactured in China, I want them manufactured here in the United States. (Applause.) I want them manufactured right here in Colorado, right here in America. (Applause.)

And by the way, it will be good for our environment. It will help conserve the incredible natural beauty of this state. We can do that.

I want to make it a national mission to educate our kids and train our workers better than anyone else in the world. (Applause.) I want to recruit 100,000 math and science teachers; train 2 million workers at community colleges to get the skills that businesses are hiring for right now. (Applause.) I want to work with our colleges and universities to keep tuition growth low -- cut it in half over the next 10 years. We can do that. (Applause.)

My plan will actually cut the deficit, unlike Governor Romney's. It will actually cut the deficit by $4 trillion over the next 10 years, but we're going to do it in a balanced way. We'll cut out programs that don't work, but we also need to make sure that the wealthy are paying a little bit more so we can afford to invest in technology and research that will keep new jobs and businesses coming to America.

And I'll never turn Medicare into a voucher. (Applause.) No American should spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies.

And I'll use the savings that we get from ending the war in Iraq and Afghanistan to put our people back to work doing some nation-building here at home -- repairing our roads and our bridges and our schools; extending broadband lines into rural communities; making sure that when our veterans come home, that we are hiring them and they are getting the same kinds of opportunities that they deserve, because they shouldn't have to fight for a job when they come home after fighting for America. That's my plan. (Applause.)

That's the plan we need for Colorado. That's how you build a strong, sustainable economy that has good, middle-class jobs to offer. That's how you encourage new businesses to start right here. That's how you help small businesses. That's how you increase take-home pay. That's how you build an economy where everybody who works hard has a chance to get ahead. That's what we can do together.

But right now, it's up to you, Colorado -- right here, right now, today. (Applause.) You will choose the path we take. It's up to young people to make sure that they continue to have opportunities in the future to go to college, to get a good job. It's up to the not-so-young people to choose what -- including me -- to choose what we leave behind for future generations.

So you can choose the top-down policies that got us into this mess, or we can choose the policies that are going to keep on getting us out of this mess. You can choose a foreign policy that's wrong and reckless, or you can choose the steady, strong leadership that we need in the world. (Applause.)

You can choose to turn back the clock 50 years for women and immigrants and gays, or in this election, you can stand up for that basic principle that we are all created equal. (Applause.) That no matter who you are, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter who you love, here in America, you can make it if you try. (Applause.)

Colorado, we have been through some tough years. But the American people are always tougher. We always bounce back, because we pull together, because we look after one another. We don't turn back. We go forward. We don't leave anybody behind -- we pull them up with us. In America, our destiny is not written for us, it's written by us and we are going to write the next chapter together. And that's why I am asking you for your vote. (Applause.)

And if you give me that vote, Colorado, you'll have a President who hears your voice, a President who fights for your families, a President who spends every waking hour trying to make your lives a little bit better. (Applause.) I believe in you, Colorado, and I'm asking you to keep believing in me. (Applause.)

And if you're willing to roll up your sleeves with me, if you're willing to work with me and knock some doors with me, make some phone calls with me, we're going to win Colorado again. (Applause.) We're going to win this election. We're going to finish what we started. We'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you. (Applause.) And God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Doolittle Park
Las Vegas, Nevada

9:35 P.M. PDT

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Nevada! (Applause.) Are you fired up? (Applause.) Are you ready to go? (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you. Well, this is an unbelievable crowd. First of all, can everybody please give a huge round of applause to Michael for his service to our country. We are proud of him. (Applause.)

We've got here your Congresswoman and next United States Senator, Shelley Berkley in the house. (Applause.) Some outstanding Nevadans who are running for Congress: Steven Horsford -- (applause) -- John Oceguera -- (applause) -- and Dina Titus. (Applause.)

I am so grateful to Katy Perry for the unbelievable performance. (Applause.) Katy! I'm getting to know Katy. She's just a wonderful young lady, and I can tell that part of it is because of her outstanding grandma, Ann, a 50-year resident of Nevada. So give her a big round of applause. (Applause.) That's right. The only thing I have to say is Ann got some lipstick on me when she kissed me. (Laughter.) So fortunately somebody wiped it off before Michelle saw it. (Laughter.) I'm just telling you, you might get me in trouble. (Laughter.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you, Obama!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back! (Applause.)

Now, it is great to see all of you. This is the third stop on our 24-hour [sic] campaign extravaganza fly-around of America. (Applause.) We are pulling an all-nighter. No sleep. And if you're not going to sleep, you might as well be in Vegas, right? (Applause.) Might as well be in Vegas. We've come from Colorado. We were in Iowa. I stopped by to do Leno in L.A. Right after this, we're going to fly to Florida, Virginia, Ohio. (Applause.) I'm going to stop in Chicago to vote. (Applause.) I can't tell you who I'm voting for because it's a secret ballot. (Laughter.) But Michelle told me she voted for me. (Laughter.)

See, we can vote early in Illinois, just like you can vote early here in Nevada. And I've come to Nevada to ask you for your vote. (Applause.) I've come to ask you to help me keep America moving forward. (Applause.)

Now, you now have seen three debates, months of campaigning, way too many TV commercials. You've heard Governor Romney's sales pitch.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Wait, wait. Wait, don't boo -- vote. Vote. (Applause.) But --

AUDIENCE: Vote! Vote! Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: Vote! Vote! Vote!

AUDIENCE: Vote! Vote! Vote!

THE PRESIDENT: This is a feisty crew behind me here. (Applause.) All right, so you've seen all the commercials. You now have seen Governor Romney's sales pitch. He's been running around saying he's got a five-point plan for the economy, except it turns out it's a one-point plan. Folks at the top play by a different set of rules than you do. They get to pay a lower tax rate. They get to outsource more jobs. They want to see Wall Street run wild again.

That was his philosophy in the boardroom. That was his philosophy as Governor. And if it sounds familiar, it's because that was the philosophy that we tried in the decade before I took office, and it led to falling incomes, and the slowest job growth in half a century, and the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression. And we've been working for four years to clean up the mess they left behind. (Applause.)

Governor Romney knows this. He knows his plan isn't any different than the policies that led to our recession, so in the final weeks of this election, he has been counting on you to forget. He's hoping you come down with -- what?

AUDIENCE: Romnesia!

THE PRESIDENT: He's hoping you come down with what we call "Romnesia." (Laughter.) He's hoping you won't remember that his economic plan is more likely to create jobs in China than here in America, because it rewards companies that move jobs and profits overseas. He's hoping that you won't remember that he wants to give millionaires and billionaires a $250,000 tax cut, because the only way he can pay for it is either blowing up the deficit or asking you to pay higher taxes. He's hoping you will come down with a severe case of Romnesia before you cast your ballot.

But, Las Vegas, I want you all to know this: If you feel any symptoms coming on -- (laughter) -- fever, a ringing in your ears, blurred vision, not being able to remember what you said just last week -- if it's coming on, the good news is we can fix you up. Obamacare covers preexisting conditions. We can make you well. (Applause.) There's a cure, Nevada -- all you've got to do is vote! (Applause.) We could cure this thing.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, listen, I want to get serious for a second. We joke about Romnesia, but the reason I bring this up is because it speaks to something serious and that is the issue of trust. When you elect a President, you don't know exactly what's going to be coming up in the future. You don't know what kind of crisis may arise. You don't know what kind of decisions the President may have to make.

But there's no more serious issue in the presidential campaign than who can you trust. Trust matters. Who's going to look out for you? And here's the thing -- Nevada, you know me by now. (Applause.) You know I say what I mean, and I mean what I say.

We haven't finished everything we set out to do in 2008, but you know that every single day that I set foot in that office, I am thinking about you. (Applause.) I am fighting for your families. And with your help, I've been keeping the commitments that I made. (Applause.)

I told you I'd end the war in Iraq -- and I ended the war in Iraq. I said we'd end the war in Afghanistan -- we are transitioning as we speak. I said we'd refocus on the terrorists who actually attacked us on 9/11 -- and we have, and there's a new tower rising above the New York skyline. Al Qaeda is on the path to defeat. Osama bin Laden is dead. (Applause.) Our heroes, like Michael, are coming home. I have kept those promises.

I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families and small businesses -- and I have. I promised to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts for good -- and we have. I promised to repeal "don't ask, don't tell," because anybody who loves this country should be able to serve in our military regardless of who they love. (Applause.)

I bet on American workers and American ingenuity, and we saved a dying auto industry that's back on top of the world. On issue after issue, we are moving forward.

After losing 9 million jobs in the Great Recession, our businesses have added more than 5 million new jobs in the past two and a half years. The unemployment rate is falling. Home values and home sales are rising. Our assembly lines are humming. We've got a long way to go, Nevada, but we've come too far to go back now. (Applause.) We cannot afford to go backwards to the policies that got us into this mess. We've got to go forward. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.) That's why I need your vote.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now -- hold on. Hold on a second. Hold on.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: All right, hold on, hold on, hold on -- I got a little more on my plate here. (Laughter.) I got a little more to my agenda.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you, Obama!

THE PRESIDENT: I love you back. (Applause.) But this is about the future. And I have a plan that will actually create jobs and create middle-class security. And unlike Mitt Romney, I'm proud to talk about what's in my plan. (Applause.)

I'm not going to pretend what's in my plan is not in my plan. I'm not going to conveniently forget what I said last week about my plan. And the good news is that the math in my plan actually adds up. (Applause.)

If you want to take a look, you can go to BarackObama.com/plans. You can share it with your friends and neighbors and co-workers, because there are still people out there who are trying to make up their minds. Some of you here may have just come to hear Katy Perry and still don't know who to vote for. (Laughter.) I'm just saying it's possible.

Some of you might have been dragged here by your girlfriend or boyfriend. They said, you know what, you have to come to the rally and you didn't feel like coming. But now that you're here, I want you to compare my plans to Governor Romney's plans. See which plan is better for you. See which plan is better for Nevada. See which plan is better for America's future. (Applause.)

Now, the first thing I want to do -- end tax breaks for companies that are shipping jobs overseas, reward small businesses and manufacturers who create jobs right here in the United States. (Applause.)

The second thing I want to do is cut our oil imports in half by 2020 so we control our own energy. And that also means making sure that we are creating cars and trucks that have higher gas mileage; making sure that we're developing solar and wind and biofuels -- the energy sources of the future. We are less dependent on foreign oil than at any time in the last two decades because of the steps we've taken.

But we've got more to do. I want to build on that progress. I don't want fuel-efficient cars or solar panels made in China -- I want them made here in Nevada. (Applause.) I want them made here in America with American workers. And we can do it. And, by the way, it will help our environment as well as our economy and our national security. (Applause.)

Number three, we're going to make it a national mission to educate our kids and train our workers better than anybody else in the world. (Applause.) I want to recruit 100,000 math and science teachers, train 2 million workers at our community colleges to get the skills they need for the jobs that are hiring right now. I want to keep college tuition low so our young people aren't burdened with debt. (Applause.) We can do that.

I want us to reduce our deficit by $4 trillion, but do it in a balanced way. We'll cut out spending we don't need, but I'm also going to ask the wealthiest to pay a little bit more in taxes, including me -- (applause) -- so we can invest in research and technology, and provide young people with the support they need for their college educations. Those things will keep new jobs and businesses coming to America.

And I'm not going to reduce the deficit by turning Medicare into a voucher -- because no American should spend their golden years at the mercy of insurance companies. (Applause.)

And finally, I want to use the savings from ending the war in Iraq and Afghanistan to put our people back to work doing some nation-building here at home -- (applause) -- building roads and bridges and schools, sending broadband lines into rural communities.

When our veterans come home, I want to serve them as well as they've served us. (Applause.) I want to help them find jobs as police officers and firefighters and first responders. No one who fights for this country should have to fight for a job, or a roof over their heads, or the care they need when they come home. (Applause.)

So that's the plan, Nevada. That's how you build a strong, sustainable economy that has good middle-class jobs. That's how you encourage new businesses to stay here. That's how you increase take-home pay -- not by talking about it, but by implementing plans that do it. That's how you build an economy where everybody who works hard has a chance to get ahead.

That's what we can do together. And now it's up to you. Nevada, right here, right now, today, you have the chance to choose the path we go from here. It's up to the young people here to choose the future that you believe in, that you want to see. It's up to you and the not-so-young people here, like me, to choose the future we want to leave for the next generation. You can choose the top-down policies that got us into this mess, or you can choose the policies that are getting us out. (Applause.)

You can choose a foreign policy that's reckless and all over the map, or you can choose one that is steady and strong. You can choose to turn the clock back 50 years for women and immigrants and gays, or in this election you can stand up for the principle that America includes everybody. We're all created equal -- (applause) -- Black, white, Hispanic, Asian, Native American, gay, straight, abled, disabled -- no matter who you are, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from or who you love, in America you can make it if you try. (Applause.) That's what you believe in.

Nevada, we've been through tough times before. We have been through tough times before. But the American people are always tough. We always come out on top because we pull together, because we look after one another, because we leave nobody behind -- we pull folks up. We don't turn backwards. We look forward. (Applause.) We look forward. We look forward to the distant horizon -- (applause) -- to new possibilities, to new frontiers. That's what we believe and that's who we are.

Our destiny is not written for us, it's written by us. And we can write the next chapter, together, right now. That's why I'm asking for your vote. (Applause.) And if you give me your vote, I promise you I will always hear your voices. (Applause.) I will always fight for your families. I will spend every waking hour trying to make your lives a little bit better. (Applause.)

I believe in you. I need you to keep believing in me. (Applause.) And if you'll stand with me, and work with me, and knock on some doors with me, make some calls for me, we'll win Clark County again. (Applause.) We'll win Nevada again. (Applause.) We'll win this election. We'll finish what we started. We'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

Thank you, Nevada. God bless you, and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

October 23,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT AND THE VICE PRESIDENT
AT CAMPAIGN EVENT

Triangle Park
Dayton, Ohio

3:58 P.M. EDT

THE VICE PRESIDENT: Hello, Ohio! (Applause.) Hello, everybody back in the next county over there! What a great crowd! (Applause.)

Before I begin, I want you all to look at those two words: Vote Early. Do it now. (Applause.)

Wasn't the President great last night?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE VICE PRESIDENT: Last night, we saw a Commander-in-Chief who is in command of the issues. You guys got to see what I see every day for the last four years, a President who clearly understands America's interest around the world and has the courage to pursue and protect those interests.

Ladies and gentlemen, this is a man who's not only earned my respect and all those who work with him and all of you, but he's earned the respect of all the world leaders. (Applause.) Ladies and gentlemen, the Commander-in-Chief not only knows how to lead America, but this Commander-in-Chief is leading the world. (Applause.)

As my dad would say, this is a man with a steady hand and a clear vision; a man who leads not only by the example of our power, but by the power of America's example. This is a President who says what he means, means what he says, and does what he says. (Applause.)

This is a man the world relies on, and we rely on. And, boy, was the contrast clear last night. (Applause.) Whoa! Whoa! It wasn't even close, was it?

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: No. (Laughter.) As the President pointed out last night, these debates have exposed that Governor Romney and Paul Ryan have a foreign policy right out of the '80s, a social policy out of the '50s, and an economic policy right out of the '20s. (Applause.) The differences in our policies and, I would submit to you, in our values, are profound, and the American people, after four debates, know it.

Ladies and gentlemen, that's why last night you saw Governor Romney rushing to agree with the President on Iraq, Afghanistan, Syria. He disavowed the foreign policy he's been running on for the past two years just like that. Even this one -- this one amazed me. (Laughter.) This one amazed me. He even tried to rewrite the history of his position on rescuing the automobile industry. Whoa! (Laughter.) If I only knew he was ready to help back then. (Laughter.) If I only knew.

Look, half the time, I didn't know whether Governor Romney was there to debate Barack Obama or endorse Barack Obama. (Applause.) I mean, it's hard to tell.

But I have a message for the good governor. Governor, you can't run from the truth. You can't run from your record. You can't run from your policies.

Look at his policies -- opposition to nuclear arms control agreements; wanting to keep 30,000 troops in Iraq; shredding regulations, which he commits to do, letting Wall Street gamble with our money again and letting banks write their own rules again; proposing over $2 trillion in new tax cuts for the wealthy while raising taxes on the middle class.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE VICE PRESIDENT: Folks, folks, we have seen this movie before and we know how it ends. It ends in a catastrophe for the middle class. It ends in the Great Recession of 2008. And the American people are not prepared to go back -- and we're not either. (Applause.)

Folks, this President is leveling the playing field, getting the middle class back in the game. He knows how to build America, from the middle out. That's how you build America. (Applause.) And thanks to his leadership and the grit of the American people, America is coming back.

There is no quit in America. There never has been any quit in America. (Applause.) The American people know only one way forward -- only one way -- and that is forward. And together -- together, ladies and gentlemen, all of us -- even the 47 percent of us that Romney doesn't think matter -- (applause) -- we're moving forward. (Applause.) Regardless.

I've never met two guys who are more down on America. Every time they turn around, America is in decline; American people won't take responsibility. I don't know where they live. But it's not where we live. It's not who we are. (Applause.)

And, ladies and gentlemen, regardless of what our opponents say, what they try to paint, America is not in decline. Americans are not dependent people. We are strong. We're independent. We take responsibility. And I've got news for Governor Romney and Congressman Ryan - it's never, never, ever been a good bet to bet against the American people. Never. (Applause.)

So, ladies and gentlemen, join me in welcoming my friend, our President, Barack Obama. (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Ohio! (Applause.) Are you fired up? (Applause.) Are you ready to go? (Applause.) I just want to make sure. Are you fired up?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Are you ready to go?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: Before we get started, I want everybody to give a big round of applause to Joe Biden! (Applause.)

Now, first of all, you need to know Joe Biden is a man who is literally in love with a teacher. He doesn't just say, I love teachers -- he's married to a teacher. (Applause.) But more importantly -- I want everybody to understand this -- I could not ask for a better partner than my Vice President, Joe Biden. (Applause.) There's nobody who knows more about foreign policy than my Vice President. There's nobody who gives me better advice than my Vice President. (Applause.) There's nobody who you'd rather have in a foxhole with you when it matters most than my Vice President. (Applause.) There's nobody who cares more about the middle class and fights harder for America than my Vice President. (Applause.)

I could not do what I do without him having my back every single day. So I want you to give him another big round of applause. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Joe! Joe! Joe! Joe!

THE PRESIDENT: Joe! Joe! Joe! Joe!

AUDIENCE: Joe! Joe! Joe! Joe!

THE PRESIDENT: We've also got a great candidate for Congress -- Sharon Neuhardt is here. Give her a big round of applause. (Applause.)

Now, two weeks, Ohio. Two weeks. Two weeks from today, Americans all across the country will step into the voting booth. But here in Ohio, you can vote early. (Applause.) Here in Ohio, you can vote right after this event. (Applause.) If you want to know where to vote, you go to Vote.BarackObama.com.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Is Biden going to be there?

THE PRESIDENT: He already voted -- and he's proud of it. (Applause.) Anybody who is here who has not yet voted, I want you to go vote. Because you've got a very big choice to make. Not just a choice between two candidates or two parties -- but two different visions for this country that we love.

Now, last night, we had our third debate. (Applause.) And I hope I made clear that there's a big difference between me and Mitt Romney. (Applause.) And it's not just that he's got better hair. (Laughter.) Because the greatest responsibility I have as President is to keep the American people safe. That's why I ended the war in Iraq, so we could go after the terrorists who actually attacked us on 9/11. (Applause.) That's why, working with Joe Biden and our national security team, we've been able to decimate al Qaeda. That's why we were able to bring Osama bin Laden to justice. (Applause.) That's why we're now ending the war in Iraq -- because after a decade of war, it's time to do some nation-building right here in Ohio, do some nation-building here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

In a world of new threats and challenges, America needs leadership that is strong and steady. Unfortunately, Governor Romney's foreign policy has been wrong and reckless. You heard him last night -- he was all over the map.

During the debate, he said he didn't want more troops in Iraq. But he was caught on a video just a few months ago saying it was "unthinkable" not to leave 20,000 troops in Iraq. Those troops would still be there today instead of back home.

Last night, he claimed to support my plan to end the war in Afghanistan, but he opposed a timeline that would actually bring the rest of our troops home. Last night, he said taking out bin Laden was the right thing to do. Back in 2007, he said it wasn't worth "moving heaven and Earth" to catch one man.

Now, I recognize that -- we must have some doctors in the house, because I've already heard people identify this condition. It's called Romnesia. (Laughter and applause.) And we had a severe case breaking out last night. (Laughter.) So I want to go over the symptoms with you because, Dayton, I sure don't want anybody to catch it here in Ohio. (Laughter.)

If you talk about how much you love teachers during a debate, but just a few weeks ago you said we shouldn't hire any more because it won't grow our economy -- you might have Romnesia. (Applause.)

If you say you won't give a big tax cut to the wealthy, but you're on a video promising your tax cut would include the top 1 percent -- that sounds like a classic case of Romnesia. (Applause.)

If you say that you love American cars during a debate, you're a car guy, but you wrote an article titled, "Let Detroit Go Bankrupt" -- you definitely have a case of Romnesia. (Applause.)

Last night, Governor Romney looked you right in the eye -- looked me in the eye -- and tried to pretend that he never said "let Detroit go bankrupt." Tried to pretend he meant the same thing I did when we intervened and worked to make sure that management and workers got together to save the U.S. auto industry -- pretended like somehow I had taken his advice. (Laughter.)

The people don't forget. The people of Dayton don't forget.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: The people of Ohio don't forget.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: If Mitt Romney had been President when the auto industry was on the verge of collapse, we might not have an American auto industry today. We'd be buying cars from China instead of selling cars to China.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: And you know how important that is to Ohio. The auto industry supports one in eight Ohio jobs. It's a source of pride to this state. It is a source of pride to our country. It's a source of pride to generations of workers. I refused to walk away from those workers. I bet on those workers. I refused to walk away from those jobs. I understood that Americans can compete. I wasn't about to let Detroit go bankrupt -- or Toledo go bankrupt, or Lordstown go bankrupt. I bet on American workers. I bet on American manufacturing. I would do it again because that bet has paid off for Ohio and for America in a big way. (Applause.)

So here's the good news, Ohio. If you've come down with a case of Romnesia -- (laughter) -- if you can't seem to remember the positions that you've taken not just four years ago but four days ago, if you don't remember the positions that are on your website, if you don't remember the promises you've been making during the six years you've been running for President, you don't have to worry, because Obamacare covers preexisting conditions. (Applause.) We can fix you up! There's a cure! There's a cure! (Applause.) There's a cure, but you've got to vote to make sure that the medicine is there for Romnesia.

Now, we joke about Governor Romney being all over the map, but it speaks to something important -- it speaks of trust. There's no more serious issue in a presidential campaign than trust. Trust matters. You want to know that the person who's applying to be your President and Commander-in-Chief is trustworthy, that he means what he says, that he's not just making stuff up depending on whether it's convenient or not.

So smart people who -- they don't have a dog in this fight, they've crunched the numbers, and we know that Governor Romney's jobs plan doesn't really create jobs. We know his deficit plan doesn't really reduce the deficit. His foreign policy is from the 1980s, before the Cold War was over. His social policy is from the 1950s, and his economic policies are from the 1920s.

He knows he can't sell that even though those are his positions, so in the closing weeks of the campaign, he's doing everything he can to hide his true positions and tell us what he thinks you want to hear, and then spend most of his time telling you what he thinks is wrong with America. Joe Biden just talked about that, talking about America is in decline. He is terrific at making presentations about stuff he thinks is wrong with America. But he sure can't give you an answer about what will make it right. And that's not leadership that you can trust.

You know, Ohio, you know me. (Applause.) You know I mean what I say. (Applause.) You know that I do what I say I'm going to do. (Applause.) You know that I'll make the tough decisions even when they're not popular. Folks don't remember what we did with the auto industry -- it wasn't popular when we did it. It wasn't even popular in Michigan and Ohio. But it was necessary. And because I had folks like Joe Biden with me who can support me when I make tough decisions, we went in and did what we thought was right. And I know people may not agree with every decision we make, but you know that I'm doing it because I am fighting for the American people. I'm doing what I believe. (Applause.)

That's what you need from a President. Yes, we've been through tough times, but there's no quit in America. Our businesses have added more than 5 million new jobs over the past two and a half years. Manufacturing is growing faster than any time since the 1990s. Our unemployment rate has fallen to the lowest level since I took office. Home values are rising. The stock market has rebounded. Our assembly lines are humming again. Our heroes are coming home. (Applause.) We are moving forward.

Four years ago I promised to cut taxes for middle-class families, and I kept that promise. I promised to cut taxes for small businesses. We have, 18 times. We got back every dime we used to rescue the banks, with interest. (Applause.) And then we passed a law to end taxpayer-funded Wall Street bailouts for good. We repealed "don't ask, don't tell," because anybody who wants to serve in our military -- (applause) -- if they're a great soldier or Marine or airman or Coast Guardsman, then they should be able to serve regardless of who they love. (Applause.)

We saved an American auto industry. It's engines are roaring at full throttle with nearly 250,000 new jobs. That's not just something that the Midwest can be proud of, that's something America can be proud of.

Now, we know we're not where we need to be -- not here, not anywhere -- but we've made real progress. We've got to build on that progress. We can't go back to what got us into this mess. We need to move forward with what's getting us out of this mess, and that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, last night and throughout this campaign I've laid out a plan for jobs and middle class security. Unlike, Mitt Romney, I'm proud to talk about what's in my plan -- because, first of all, the math actually adds up. My plan will actually move America forward. It's not just a sales job. It's not a sketchy deal. It's not the okeydoke. (Laughter.) If you want to take a look, check it out at BarackObama.com/plans. Share it with your friends. Share it with your neighbors. Share it with your coworkers.

There are still some people out there trying to make up their minds. Some of you here may still be trying to make up your mind.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: I'm just saying somebody might have just been taking a nice walk on a beautiful day -- (laughter) -- and suddenly found themselves in the middle of an Obama rally. And if that's what happened to you, I want you to look at our plan. Compare it to Governor Romney's plan. See which plan you think is better for you and for America's future.

Well, he says he's got a plan. He's got a one-point plan.

But I want to talk about what's in my plan just so everybody knows exactly what I intend to do over the next four years -- because I do what I say I'm going to do. First, my plan builds on our manufacturing base by extending -- by making sure that we're ending tax breaks for companies that are shipping jobs overseas. I want to give those tax breaks to small business and manufacturers that create jobs right here in Dayton, right here in the United States of America. That's what I want to do. (Applause.)

Number two, my plan cuts our oil imports in half by 2020, so we control more of our own energy. You may have heard me say this -- today we're less dependent on foreign oil than any time in the last two decades. And one of the reasons is because we've increased fuel standards on cars and trucks, so you go twice as far on a gallon of gas. And I want to build on that progress. I don't want fuel-efficient cars and long-lasting batteries and wind turbines all made in China. I want them manufactured right here in the United States of America. And we can do that. (Applause.)

Number three, my plan is going to make it a national mission to educate our kids and train our workers so that we can compete with anybody in the world. I want to recruit 100,000 new math and science teachers over the next decade; train 2 million workers at community colleges with the skills that businesses are looking for right now. There are jobs to be had right now, but the workers have to be able to get the training for them. I want to make sure colleges and universities keep tuition low so our young people can get a college education without being loaded up with debt. We can do that. (Applause.)

Number four, my plan will cut our deficit by $4 trillion -- it actually adds up. We can do the math on the website. And the plan, we'll do it in a balanced way over the next 10 years. I'll cut spending we don't need, but we're also going to have to ask the wealthiest among us to do a little bit more. Because that will allow us to invest in research and technology to keep new jobs coming, to keep new businesses coming here to America. (Applause.)

And I'll never balance the deficit by turning Medicare into a voucher. (Applause.) No American should have to spend their golden years at the mercy of an insurance company.

And finally, my plan says let's take the savings from ending the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, and let's put some people back to work right here at home, doing some nation-building -- repairing roads, fixing bridges, remodeling schools, laying down broadband lines, making our economy more competitive.

And when our veterans come home, let's put them back to work in some of these jobs. Let's make sure we're serving them as well as they've served us. Governor Romney did not even mention our veterans last night.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Not a word. Not a word. He may have already written off half the country behind closed doors, but the men and women and their families who have served our country so bravely, that Joe and I talk to almost every day and we see the sacrifices they're making, they deserve better from somebody who's applying to be Commander-in-Chief. We're fighting for them every single day. (Applause.)

So Ohio, that's the plan we need. That's what will create jobs. That's how you build a strong, sustainable economy that good, middle-class jobs have to offer. That's how you encourage businesses to start here in America. That's how you increase take-home pay, not just by talking about it. That's how you build an economy where everybody who works hard has a chance to get ahead. We don't build the economy from the top down. We build it from the middle up.

And now it's up to you -- right here, right now. You've got to decide which path we're going to take. You can choose the top-down policies that got us into this mess, or you can choose the policies that we are promoting that will get us out of this mess. (Applause.) You can choose a foreign policy that's reckless and wrong -- or you can choose the foreign policy that Joe and I have been applying that's steady and strong.

You can choose to turn back the clock 50 years for women, and immigrants, and gays, or you can say, in this election, we believe that everybody has got a place in America. We want to make sure everybody has got opportunity. No matter who you are, no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter what your last name is, no matter who you love, here in America, you can make it if you try. (Applause.)

So I'm asking for your vote. I'm asking you to help me finish the job. I believe in you, and I need you to keep believing in me. And if you stand with me, and knock on some doors with me, make some phone calls for me, we'll win Montgomery County again. We'll win Ohio again. (Applause.) We'll win this election again. We'll finish what we started. We'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth. (Applause.)

God bless you, Ohio. God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

October 22,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AND GOVERNOR ROMNEY
IN THIRD PRESIDENTIAL DEBATE

Lynn University
Boca Raton, Florida

9:01 P.M. EDT

MR. SCHIEFFER: Good evening from the campus of Lynn University here in Boca Raton, Florida. This is the fourth and last debate of the 2012 campaign, brought to you by the Commission on Presidential Debates. This one is on foreign policy. I'm Bob Schieffer of CBS News.

The questions are mine and I have not shared them with the candidates or their aides. The audience has taken a vow of silence -- no applause, no reaction of any kind -- except right now, when we welcome President Barack Obama and Governor Mitt Romney. (Applause.)

Gentlemen, your campaigns have agreed to certain rules, and they are simple. They've asked me to divide the evening into segments. I'll pose a question at the beginning of each segment. You will each have two minutes to respond, and then we will have a general discussion until we move to the next segment.

Tonight's debate, as both of you know, comes on the 50th anniversary of the night that President Kennedy told the world that the Soviet Union had installed nuclear missiles in Cuba, perhaps the closest we've ever come to nuclear war. And it is a sobering reminder that every President faces at some point an unexpected threat to our national security from abroad.

So let's begin.

The first segment is the challenge of a changing Middle East and the new face of terrorism. I'm going to put this into two segments, so you'll have two topic questions within this one segment on the subject. The first question -- and it concerns Libya.

The controversy over what happened there continues. Four Americans are dead, including an American Ambassador. Questions remain of what happened: What caused it? Was it spontaneous? Was it an intelligence failure? Was it a policy failure? Was there an attempt to mislead people about what really happened?

Governor Romney, you said this was an example of an American policy in the Middle East that is unraveling before our very eyes. I'd like to hear each of you give your thoughts on that. Governor Romney, you won the toss -- you go first.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Thank you, Bob. And thank you for agreeing to moderate this debate this evening. Thank you to Lynn University for welcoming us here. And, Mr. President, it's good to be with you again. We were together at a humorous event a little earlier, and it's nice to maybe be funny this time -- not on purpose. We'll see what happens.

This is obviously an area of great concern to the entire world, and to America in particular, which is to see a complete change in the structure and the environment in the Middle East. With the Arab Spring came a great deal of hope that there would be a change towards more moderation, an opportunity for greater participation on the part of women in public life and in economic life in the Middle East. But instead we've seen in nation after nation a number of disturbing events.

Of course, we see in Syria, 30,000 civilians having been killed by the military there. We see in Libya, an attack, apparently by -- I think we know now -- by terrorists of some kind against our people there, four people dead. Our hearts and minds go to them.

Mali has been taken over -- the northern part of Mali by al Qaeda-type individuals. We have in Egypt a Muslim Brotherhood president. And so what we're seeing is a pretty dramatic reversal of the kind of hopes we had for that region. Of course, the greatest threat of all is Iran, four years closer to a nuclear weapon.

And we're going to have to recognize that we have to do as the President has done -- I congratulate him on taking out Osama bin Laden and going after the leadership in al Qaeda. But we can't kill our way out of this mess. We're going to have to put in place a very comprehensive and robust strategy to help the world of Islam and other parts of the world reject this radical, violent extremism, which is -- it's certainly not on the run. It's certainly not hiding. This is a group that is now involved in 10 or 12 countries. And it presents an enormous threat to our friends, to the world, to America long term, and we must have a comprehensive strategy to help reject this kind of extremism.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, my first job as Commander-in-Chief, Bob, is to keep the American people safe. And that's what we've done over the last four years. We ended the war in Iraq, refocused our attention on those who actually killed us on 9/11. And as a consequence, al Qaeda's core leadership has been decimated.

In addition, we're now able to transition out of Afghanistan in a responsible way, making sure that Afghans take responsibility for their own security. And that allows us also to rebuild alliances and make friends around the world to combat future threats. Now, with respect to Libya, as I indicated in the last debate, when we received that phone call, I immediately made sure that, number one, we did everything we could to secure those Americans who were still in harm's way; number two, that we would investigate exactly what happened; and number three, most importantly, that we would go after those who killed Americans and we would bring them to justice. And that's exactly what we're going to do.

But I think it's important to step back and think about what happened in Libya. Now, keep in mind that I and Americans took leadership in organizing an international coalition that made sure that we were able to -- without putting troops on the ground, at the cost of less than what we spent in two weeks in Iraq -- liberate a country that had been under the yoke of dictatorship for 40 years, got rid of a despot who had killed Americans. And, as a consequence, despite this tragedy, you had tens of thousands of Libyans, after the events in Benghazi, marching and saying, "America is our friend. We stand with them." Now, that represents the opportunity we have to take advantage of.

And, Governor Romney, I'm glad that you agree that we have been successful in going after al Qaeda, but I have to tell you that your strategy previously has been one that has been all over the map, and is not designed to keep Americans safe or to build on the opportunities that exist in the Middle East.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, my strategy is pretty straightforward, which is to go after the bad guys, to make sure we do our very best to interrupt them, to kill them, to take them out of the picture. But my strategy is broader than that. That's important, of course. But the key that we're going to have to pursue is a pathway to get the Muslim world to be able to reject extremism on its own. We don't want another Iraq. We don't want another Afghanistan. That's not the right course for us.

The right course for us is to make sure that we go after the people who are leaders of these various anti-American groups and these jihadists, but also help the Muslim world. And how do we do that? A group of Arab scholars came together, organized by the U.N., to look at how we can help the world reject these terrorists. And the answer they came up with was this: One, more economic development. We should key our foreign aid, our direct foreign investment -- and that of our friends -- we should coordinate it to make sure that we push back and give them more economic development. Number two, better education. Number three, gender equality. Number four, the rule of law. We have to help these nations create civil societies.

But what's been happening over the last couple of years is as we've watched this tumult in the Middle East, this rising tide of chaos occur, you see al Qaeda rushing in. You see other jihadist groups rushing in. And they're throughout many nations in the Middle East.

It's wonderful that Libya seems to be making some progress, despite this terrible tragedy. But next door, of course, we have Egypt -- Libya is 6 million population, Egypt 80 million population. We want to make sure that we're seeing progress throughout the Middle East, with Mali now having North Mali taken over by al Qaeda; with Syria having Assad continuing to kill -- to murder his own people. This is a region in tumult. And of course, Iran on the path to a nuclear weapon -- we've got real problems in the region.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Let's give the President a chance.

THE PRESIDENT: Governor Romney, I'm glad that you recognize that al Qaeda is a threat, because a few months ago, when you were asked what's the biggest geopolitical threat facing America, you said Russia -- not al Qaeda -- you said Russia. And the 1980s are now calling to ask for their foreign policy back because the Cold War has been over for 20 years.

But, Governor, when it comes to our foreign policy, you seem to want to import the foreign policies of the 1980s, just like the social policies of the 1950s, and the economic policies of the 1920s.

You say that you're not interested in duplicating what happened in Iraq, but just a few weeks ago you said you think we should have more troops in Iraq right now. And the challenge we have -- I know you haven't been in a position to actually execute foreign policy, but every time you've offered an opinion, you've been wrong. You said we should have gone into Iraq, despite the fact that there were no weapons of mass destruction. You said that we should still have troops in Iraq to this day.

You indicated that we shouldn't be passing nuclear treaties with Russia, despite the fact that 71 senators -- Democrats and Republicans -- voted for it. You've said that, first, we should not have a timeline in Afghanistan; then you said we should; now you say maybe, or it depends -- which means not only were you wrong, but you were also confusing and sending mixed messages both to our troops and our allies.

So what we need to do with respect to the Middle East is strong, steady leadership, not wrong and reckless leadership that is all over the map. And unfortunately, that's the kinds of opinions that you've offered throughout this campaign, and it is not a recipe for American strength or keeping America safe over the long term.

MR. SCHIEFFER: I'm going to add a couple of minutes here to give you a chance to respond.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, of course, I don't concur with what the President said about my own record and the things that I've said. They don't happen to be accurate.

But I can say this -- that we're talking about the Middle East and how to help the Middle East reject the kind of terrorism we're seeing and the rising tide of tumult and confusion. And attacking me is not an agenda. Attacking me is not talking about how we're going to deal with the challenges that exist in the Middle East and take advantage of the opportunity there and stem the tide of this violence.

But I'll respond to a couple of the things you mentioned. First of all, Russia I indicated is a geopolitical foe, not a -

THE PRESIDENT: Number one geopolitical --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Excuse me. It's a geopolitical foe, and I said in the same -- in the same paragraph I said, and Iran is the greatest national security threat we face. Russia does continue to battle us in the U.N. time and time again. I have clear eyes on this. I'm not going to wear rose-colored glasses when it comes to Russia or Mr. Putin. And I'm certainly not going to say to him, I'll give you more flexibility after the election. After the election, he'll get more backbone.

Number two, with regards to Iraq, you and I agreed, I believe, that there should have been a status of forces agreement. Did you --

THE PRESIDENT: That's not true.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Oh, you didn't -- you didn't want a status of forces agreement?

THE PRESIDENT: No, what I -- what I would not have done is left 10,000 troops in Iraq that would tie us down. That certainly would not help us in the Middle East.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I'm sorry. You actually -- there was an effort on the part of the President --

THE PRESIDENT: You are --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- to have a Status of Forces Agreement --

THE PRESIDENT: He was --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: And I concurred in that and said that we should have some number of troops that stayed on. That was something I concurred with --

THE PRESIDENT: Governor --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- your posture. That was my posture as well. You thought it should have been 5,000 troops.

THE PRESIDENT: Governor --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I thought it should have been more troops. But you know what, the answer was --

THE PRESIDENT: This is just a few weeks ago.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- we got no troops through whatsoever.

THE PRESIDENT: This is just a few weeks ago that you indicated that we should still have troops in Iraq.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: No, I didn't. I'm sorry, that's --

THE PRESIDENT: You made a major speech.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I indicated that you -- I indicated that you failed to put in place a status of forces agreement --

THE PRESIDENT: Governor --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- at the end of the conflict that existed in Iraq.

THE PRESIDENT: Governor, here's one thing --

MR. SCHIEFFER: Let him answer, please.

THE PRESIDENT: Here's one thing I've learned as Commander-in-Chief. You've got to be clear both to our allies and our enemies about where you stand and what you mean. Now, you just gave a speech a few weeks ago in which you said we should still have troops in Iraq. That is not a recipe for making sure that we are taking advantage of the opportunities and meeting the challenges of the Middle East.

Now, it is absolutely true that we cannot just beat these challenges militarily. And so what I've done, throughout my presidency and will continue to do, is, number one, make sure that these countries are supporting our counterterrorism efforts.

Number two, make sure that they are standing by our interests in Israel's security -- because it is a true friend and our greatest ally in the region.

Number three, we do have to make sure that we're protecting religious minorities and women because these countries can't develop unless all the population -- not just half of it -- is developing.

Number four, we do have to develop their economic capabilities. But number five, the other thing that we have to do is recognize that we can't continue to do nation-building in these regions -- part of American leadership is making sure that we're doing nation-building here at home. That will help us maintain the kind of American leadership that we need.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Let me interject the second topic question in this segment about the Middle East and so on. And that is -- you both mentioned -- alluded to this, and that is Syria.

The war in Syria has now spilled over into Lebanon. We have, what, more than a hundred people that were killed there in a bomb. There were demonstrations there, eight people dead. Mr. President, it's been more than a year since you saw -- you told Assad he had to go. Since then, 30,000 Syrians have died. We've had 300,000 refugees. The war goes on; he's still there. Should we reassess our policy and see if we can find a better way to influence events there, or is that even possible? And you go first, sir.

THE PRESIDENT: What we've done is organize the international community, saying Assad has to go. We've mobilized sanctions against that government. We have made sure that they are isolated. We have provided humanitarian assistance, and we are helping the opposition organize. And we're particularly interested in making sure that we're mobilizing the moderate forces inside of Syria.

But ultimately, Syrians are going to have to determine their own future. And so everything we're doing, we're doing in consultation with our partners in the region -- including Israel, which obviously has a huge interest in seeing what happens in Syria; coordinating with Turkey and other countries in the region that have a great interest in this.

Now, what we're seeing taking place in Syria is heartbreaking. And that's why we are going to do everything we can to make sure that we are helping the opposition. But we also have to recognize that for us to get more entangled militarily in Syria is a serious step. And we have to do so making absolutely certain that we know who we are helping, that we're not putting arms in the hands of folks who eventually could turn them against us or our allies in the region.

And I am confident that Assad's days are numbered. But what we can't do is to simply suggest that, as Governor Romney at times has suggested, that giving heavy weapons, for example, to the Syrian opposition is a simple proposition that would lead us to be safer over the long term.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Governor.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, let's step back and talk about what's happening in Syria and how important it is. First of all, 30,000 people being killed by their government is a humanitarian disaster. Secondly, Syria is an opportunity for us because Syria plays an important role in the Middle East, particularly right now, Syria is Iran's only ally in the Arab world. It's their route to the sea. It's the route for them to arm Hezbollah in Lebanon, which threatens, of course, our ally, Israel. And so seeing Syria remove Assad is a very high priority for us. Number two, seeing a replacement government being responsible people is critical for us.

And finally, we don't want to have military involvement there. We don't want to get drawn in to a military conflict. And so the right course for us is working through our partners and with our own resources to identify responsible parties within Syria, organize them, bring them together in a form of, not government, a form of council that can take the lead in Syria, and then make sure they have the arms necessary to defend themselves.

We do need to make sure that they don't have arms that get into the wrong hands, that those arms could be used to hurt us down the road. We need to make sure as well that we coordinate this effort with our allies, and particularly with Israel. But the Saudis and the Qatari and the Turks are all very concerned about this. They're willing to work with us. We need to have a very effective leadership effort in Syria, making sure that the insurgents there are armed and that the insurgents that become armed are people who will be the responsible parties.

Recognize -- I believe that Assad must go. I believe he will go. But I believe we want to make sure that we have the relationships of friendship with the people that take his place, such that in the years to come, we see Syria as a friend and Syria as a responsible party in the Middle East.

This is a critical opportunity for America. And what I'm afraid of is we've watched over the past year or so, first the President saying, well, we'll let the U.N. deal with it and Assad -- excuse me -- Kofi Annan came in and said we're going to try -- have a ceasefire. That didn't work. Then it looked to the Russians and said, let's see if you can do something. We should be playing the leadership role there -- not on the ground with military, but play the leadership role.

MR. SCHIEFFER: All right.

THE PRESIDENT: We are playing the leadership role. We organized the Friends of Syria. We are mobilizing humanitarian support and support for the opposition. And we are making sure that those we help are those who will be friends of ours in the long term and friends of our allies in the region over the long term.

But going back to Libya, because this is an example of how we make choices -- when we went into Libya, and we were able to immediately stop the massacre there because of the unique circumstances and the coalition that we had helped to organize, we also had to make sure that Muammar Qaddafi didn't stay there.

And to the Governor's credit, you supported us going into Libya and the coalition that we organized. But when it came time to making sure that Qaddafi did not stay in power, that he was captured, Governor, your suggestion was that this was mission creep, that this was mission muddle.

Imagine if we had pulled out at that point. Muammar Qaddafi had more American blood on his hands than any individual other than Osama bin Laden, and so we were going to make sure that we finished the job. That's part of the reason why the Libyans stand with us. But we did so in a careful, thoughtful way, making certain that we knew who we were dealing with; that those forces of moderation on the ground were ones that we could work with. And we have to take the same kind of steady, thoughtful leadership when it comes to Syria. That's exactly what we're doing.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Governor, can I just ask you, would you go beyond what the administration would do? Like, for example, would you put in no-fly zones over Syria?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I don't want to have our military involved in Syria. I don't think there's a necessity to put our military in Syria at this stage. I don't anticipate that in the future. As I indicated, our objectives are to replace Assad and to have in place a new government which is friendly to us -- a responsible government, if possible. And I want to make sure they get armed and they have the arms necessary to defend themselves, but also to remove Assad.

But I do not want to see a military involvement on the part of our troops. And this isn't going to be necessary. We have -- with our partners in the region, we have sufficient resources to support those groups.

But, look, this has been going on for a year. This is a time -- this should have been a time for American leadership. We should have taken a leading role -- not militarily, but a leading role organizationally, governmentally -- to bring together the parties there, to find responsible parties.

As you hear from intelligence sources even today, the insurgents are highly disparate; they haven't come together; they haven't formed a unity group, a council of some kind. That needs to happen. America can help that happen. And we need to make sure they have the arms they need to carry out the very important role, which is getting rid of Assad.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Can we get a quick response, Mr. President? Because I want to ask about Egypt.

THE PRESIDENT: I'll be very quick. What you just heard Governor Romney said is he doesn't have different ideas, and that's because we're doing exactly what we should be doing to try to promote a moderate Syrian leadership and an effective transition so that we get Assad out. That's the kind of leadership we've shown. That's the kind of leadership we'll continue to show.

MR. SCHIEFFER: May I ask you, during the Egyptian turmoil, there came a point when you said it was time for President Mubarak to go.

THE PRESIDENT: Right.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Some in your administration thought perhaps we should have waited a while on that. Do you have any regrets about that?

THE PRESIDENT: No, I don't, because I think that America has to stand with democracy. The notion that we would have tanks run over those young people who were in Tahrir Square -- that is not the kind of American leadership that John F. Kennedy talked about 50 years ago.

But what I've also said is that now that you have a democratically elected government in Egypt, they have to make sure that they take responsibility for protecting religious minorities -- and we have put significant pressure on them to make sure they're doing that; to recognize the rights of women, which is critical throughout the region. These countries can't develop if young women are not given the kind of education that they need. They have to abide by their treaty with Israel. That is a red line for us, because not only is Israel's security at stake, but our security is at stake if that unravels.

They have to make sure that they're cooperating with us when it comes to counterterrorism. And we will help them with respect to developing their own economy -- because ultimately, what's going to make the Egyptian revolution successful for the people of Egypt but also for the world is if those young people who gathered there are seeing opportunities. Their aspirations are similar to young people's here. They want jobs. They want to be able to make sure their kids are going to a good school. They want to make sure that they have a roof over their heads and that they have the prospects of a better life in the future.

And so one of the things that we've been doing is, for example, organizing entrepreneurship conferences with these Egyptians to give them a sense of how they can start rebuilding their economy in a way that's non-corrupt, that's transparent.

But what is also important for us to understand is, is that for America to be successful in this region, there are some things that we're going to have to do here at home as well. One of the challenges over the last decade is we've done experiments in nation-building in places like Iraq and Afghanistan, and we've neglected, for example, developing our own economy, our own energy sectors, our own education system. And it's very hard for us to project leadership around the world when we're not doing what we need to do here.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Governor Romney, I'm going to hear your response to that. But I would just ask you, would you have stuck with Mubarak?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: No. I believe, as the President indicated, and said at the time that I supported his action there. I felt that -- I wish we would have had a better vision of the future. I wish that, looking back at the beginning of the President's term and even further back than that, that we would have recognized that there was a growing energy and passion for freedom in that part of the world, and that we would have worked more aggressively with our friend and with other friends in the region to have them make the transition towards a more representative form of government, such that it didn't explode in the way it did.

But once it exploded, I felt the same as the President did, which is these freedom voices in the streets of Egypt were the people who were speaking of our principles. And President Mubarak had done things which were unimaginable, and the idea of him crushing his people was not something that we could possibly support.

Let me step back and talk about what I think our mission has to be in the Middle East and even more broadly -- because our purpose is to make sure the world is more -- is peaceful. We want a peaceful planet. We want people to be able to enjoy their lives and know they're going to have a bright and prosperous future and not be at war. That's our purpose. And the mantle of leadership for promoting the principles of peace has fallen to America. We didn't ask for it, but it's an honor that we have it. But for us to be able to promote those principles of peace requires us to be strong, and that begins with a strong economy here at home. And unfortunately, the economy is not stronger.

When the President of Iraq -- excuse me, of Iran, Ahmadinejad, says that our debt makes us not a great country, that's a frightening thing. The former chief of -- the Joint Chiefs of Staff said that -- Admiral Mullen -- said that our debt is the biggest national security threat we face.

We have weakened our economy. We need a strong economy. We need to have, as well, a strong military. Our military is second to none in the world. We're blessed with terrific soldiers and extraordinary technology and intelligence. But the idea of a trillion dollars in cuts through sequestration and budget cuts to the military would change that.

We need to have strong allies. Our association and connection with our allies is essential to America's strength. We're the great nation that has allies -- 42 allies and friends around the world. And finally we have to stand by our principles.

And if we're strong in each of those things, American influence will grow. But, unfortunately, in nowhere in the world is America's influence greater today than it was four years ago.

MR. SCHIEFFER: All right.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: And that's because we've become weaker -

THE PRESIDENT: Bob, I think --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- on each of those four dimensions.

MR. SCHIEFFER: You're going to get a chance to respond to that because that's a perfect segue into our next segment, and that is what is America's role in the world. And that is the question: What do each of you see as our role in the world? And I believe, Governor Romney, it's your turn to go first.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, I absolutely believe that America has a responsibility and the privilege of helping defend freedom and promote the principles that make the world more peaceful, and those principles include human rights, human dignity, free enterprise, freedom of expression, elections -- because when there are elections, people tend to vote for peace. They don't vote for war. So we want to promote those principles around the world.

We recognize that there are places of conflict in the world. We want to end those conflicts to the extent humanly possible. But in order to be able to fulfill our role in the world, America must be strong. America must lead. And for that to happen, we have to strengthen our economy here at home. You can't have 23 million people struggling to get a job. You can't have an economy that over the last three years keeps slowing down in its growth rate. You can't have kids coming out of college, half of whom can't find a job today, or a job that's commensurate with their college degree. We have to get our economy going.

And our military -- we've got to strengthen our military long term. We don't know what the world is going to throw at us down the road. We make decisions today in a military that will confront challenges we can't imagine. In the 2000 debates, there was no mention of terrorism, for instance. And a year later, 9/11 happened. So we have to make decisions based upon uncertainty, and that means a strong military. I will not cut our military budget.

We have to also stand by our allies. I think the tension that existed between Israel and the United States was very unfortunate. I think also that pulling our missile defense program out of Poland in the way we did was also unfortunate in terms of, if you will, disrupting the relationship in some ways that existed between us.

And then of course, with regards to standing for our principles, when the students took the streets in Tehran, and the people there protested, the Green Revolution occurred. For the President to be silent, I thought was an enormous mistake. We have to stand for our principles, stand for our allies, stand for a strong military and stand for a stronger economy.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: America remains the one indispensable nation, and the world needs a strong America, and it is stronger now than when I came into office. Because we ended the war in Iraq, we were able to refocus our attention on not only the terrorist threat, but also beginning a transition process in Afghanistan.

It also allowed us to refocus on alliances and relationships that had been neglected for a decade. And, Governor Romney, our alliances have never been stronger -- in Asia, in Europe, in Africa, with Israel, where we have unprecedented military and intelligence cooperation, including dealing with the Iranian threat.

But what we also have been able to do is position ourselves so we can start rebuilding America. And that's what my plan does -- making sure that we're bringing manufacturing back to our shores so that we're creating jobs here, as we've done with the auto industry -- not rewarding companies that are shipping jobs overseas; making sure that we've got the best education system in the world, including retraining our workers for the jobs of tomorrow.

Doing everything we can to control our own energy. We've cut our oil imports to the lowest level in two decades because we've developed oil and natural gas, but we also have to develop clean energy technologies that will allow us to cut our exports in half by 2020. That's the kind of leadership that we need to show.

And we've got to make sure that we reduce our deficit. Unfortunately, Governor Romney's plan doesn't do it. We've got to do it in a responsible way by cutting out spending we don't need, but also by asking the wealthiest to pay a little bit more. That way we can invest in the research and technology that's always kept us at the cutting edge.

Now, Governor Romney has taken a different approach throughout this campaign. Both at home and abroad, he has proposed wrong and reckless policies. He's praised George Bush as a good economic steward and Dick Cheney as somebody who shows great wisdom and judgment. And taking us back to those kinds of strategies that got us into this mess are not the way that we are going to maintain leadership in the 21st century.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Governor Romney, wrong and reckless policies?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I've got the policy for a future, an agenda for the future. And when it comes to our economy here at home, I know what it takes to create 12 million new jobs and rising take-home pay. And what we've seen over the last four years is something I don't want to see over the next four years.

The President said by now we'd be at 5.4 percent unemployment. We're 9 million jobs short of that. I will get America working again and see rising take-home pay again, and I'll do it with five simple steps.

Number one, we are going to have North American energy independence. We're going to do it by taking full advantage of oil, coal, gas, nuclear, and our renewables. Number two, we're going to increase our trade. Trade grows about 12 percent per year. It doubles about every five or so years. We can do better than that, particularly in Latin America.

The opportunities for us in Latin America we have just not taken advantage of fully. As a matter of fact, Latin America's economy is almost as big as the economy of China. We're all focused on China. Latin America is a huge opportunity for us - time zone, language opportunities.

Number three, we're going to have to have training programs that work for our workers and schools that finally put the parents and the teachers and the kids first, and the teachers unions are going to have to go behind.

And then we're going to have to get to a balanced budget. We can't expect entrepreneurs and businesses, large and small, to take their life savings or their company's money and invest in America if they think we're headed to the road to Greece. And that's where we're going right now unless we finally get off this spending and borrowing binge. And I'll get us on track to a balanced budget.

And finally, number five, we've got to champion small business. Small businesses are where jobs come from. Two-thirds of our jobs come from small businesses. New business formation is down at the lowest level in 30 years under this administration. I want to bring it back and get back good jobs and rising take-home pay.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, let's talk about what we need to compete. First of all, Governor Romney talks about small businesses, but, Governor, when you were in Massachusetts, small businesses development ranked about 48th, I think, out of 50 states in Massachusetts because the policies that you're promoting actually don't help small businesses. And the way you define small businesses include folks at the very top -- they include you and me. That's not the kind of small business promotion we need.

But let's take an example that we know is going to make a difference in the 21st century, and that's our education policy. We didn't have a lot of chance to talk about this in the last debate. Under my leadership, what we've done is reformed education, working with governors -- 46 states. We've seen progress and gains in schools that were having a terrible time, and they're starting to finally make progress. And what I now want to do is to hire more teachers, especially in math and science, because we know that we've fallen behind when it comes to math and science. And those teachers can make a difference.

Now, Governor Romney, when you were asked by teachers whether or not this would help the economy grow, you said this isn't going to help the economy grow. When you were asked about reduced class sizes, you said class sizes don't make a difference. But I tell you, if you talk to teachers, they will tell you it does make a difference. And if we've got math teachers who are able to provide the kind of support that they need for our kids, that's what's going to determine whether or not the new businesses are created here. Companies are going to locate here depending on whether we've got the most highly skilled workforce.

And the kinds of budget proposals that you've put forward, when we don't ask either you or me to pay a dime more in terms of reducing the deficit, but instead we slash support for education, that's undermining our long-term competitiveness. That is not good for America's position in the world -- and the world notices.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Let me get back to foreign policy.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, look --

MR. SCHIEFFER: Can I just get back to --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, I need to speak a moment if you'll let me, Bob --

MR. SCHIEFFER: Okay.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- just about education, because I'm so proud of the state that I had the chance to be governor of. We have, every two years, tests that look at how well our kids are doing. Fourth-graders and eighth-graders are tested in English and math. While I was governor, I was proud that our fourth-graders came out number one of all 50 states in English and then also in math, and our eighth-graders number one in English and also in math. First time one state had been number one in all four measures.

How did we do that? Well, Republicans and Democrats came together on a bipartisan basis to put in place education principles that focused on having great teachers in the classroom, and that was --

THE PRESIDENT: Ten years earlier, Governor.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- and that was what allowed us to become the number-one state in the nation.

THE PRESIDENT: But that was 10 years before you took office.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: And this is -- and we were --

MR. SCHIEFFER: Gentlemen.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Absolutely --

THE PRESIDENT: And then you cut education spending when you came into office.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: The first -- and we kept our schools number one in the nation. They're still number one today.

MR. SCHIEFFER: All right.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: And the principles that we put in place -- we also gave kids not just a graduation exam that determined whether they were up to the skills needed to be able to compete, but also if they graduated in the top quarter of their class they got a four-year, tuition-free ride at any Massachusetts public institution of higher learning.

THE PRESIDENT: That happened before you came into office, though.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Governor --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: That was actually mine. Actually, Mr. President, you've got that fact wrong.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Let me just -- I want to try to shift it, because we have heard some of this in the other debates. Governor, you say you want a bigger military, you want a bigger Navy. You don't want to cut defense spending. What I want to ask you -- we're talking about financial problems in this country -- where are you going to get the money?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, let's come back and talk about the military, but all the way through. First of all, I'm going through from the very beginning -- we're going to cut about 5 percent of the discretionary budget, excluding military. That's number one, all right? And that's --

MR. SCHIEFFER: But can you do this without driving us deeper into debt?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: The good news is -- I'll be happy to have you take a look. Come on our website; you'll look at how we get to a balanced budget within 8 to 10 years. We do it by getting -- by reducing spending in a whole series of programs. By the way, number one I get rid of is Obamacare.

There are a number of things that sound good, but, frankly, we just can't afford them, and that one doesn't sound good and it's not affordable. So I get rid of that one from day one. To the extent humanly possible, we get that out. We take program after program that we don't absolutely have to have and we get rid of them.

Number two, we take some programs that we are going to keep, like Medicaid, which is a program for the poor -- we take that health care program for the poor and we give it to the states to run because states run these programs more efficiently. As a governor, I thought, please, give me this program. I can run this more efficiently than the federal government.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Can he do that?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: And states, by the way, are proving it. States like Arizona, Rhode Island have taken these Medicaid dollars, have shown they can run these programs more cost-effectively. And so I want to do those two things. It gets us to a balanced budget within 8 to 10 years.

THE PRESIDENT: Bob --

MR. SCHIEFFER: Let --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Let's get back to the military, though.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Well, that's what I'm trying to find out about.

THE PRESIDENT: He should have answered the first question. Look, Governor Romney has called for $5 trillion of tax cuts that he says he's going to pay for by closing deductions. Now, the math doesn't work, but he continues to claim that he's going to do it. He then wants to spend another $2 trillion on military spending that our military is not asking for.

Now, keep in mind that our military spending has gone up every single year that I've been in office. We spend more on our military than the next 10 countries combined -- China, Russia, France, the United Kingdom, you name it -- next 10. And what I did was work with our Joint Chiefs of Staff to think about what are we going to need in the future to make sure that we are safe, and that's the budget that we've put forward.

But what you can't do is spend $2 trillion in additional military spending that the military is not asking for; $5 trillion on tax cuts. You say that you're going to pay for it by closing loopholes and deductions without naming what those loopholes and deductions are, and then somehow you're also going to deal with the deficit that we've already got. The math simply doesn't work.

But when it comes to our military, what we have to think about is not just budgets. We've got think about capabilities. We need to be thinking about cybersecurity. We need to be thinking about space. That's exactly what our budget does, but it's driven by strategy. It's not driven by politics. It's not driven by members of Congress and what they would like to see. It's driven by what are we going to need to keep the American people safe. That's exactly what our budget does.

And it also then allows us to reduce our deficit, which is a significant national security concern, because we've got to make sure that our economy is strong at home so that we can project military power overseas.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Bob, I'm pleased that I've balanced budgets. I was in the world of business for 25 years. You didn't balance your budget, you went out of business. I went to the Olympics that was out of balance, and we got it on balance and made a success there. I had the chance to be governor of our state; four years in a row, Democrats and Republicans came together to balance the budget. We cut taxes 19 times, balanced our budget.

The President hasn't balanced a budget yet. I expect to have the opportunity to do so myself. I'm going to be able to balance the budget.

Let's talk about military spending, and that's this -- our Navy --

MR. SCHIEFFER: Thirty seconds.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Our Navy is old -- excuse me, our Navy is smaller now than any time since 1917. The Navy said they needed 313 ships to carry out their mission; we're now down to 285. We're headed down to the low 200s if we go through with sequestration. That's unacceptable to me. I want to make sure that we have the ships that are required by our Navy.

Our Air Force is older and smaller than any time since it was founded in 1947. We've changed for the first time since FDR -- since FDR, we had the -- we've always had the strategy of saying we could fight in two conflicts at once. Now we're changing to one conflict.

Look, this, in my view, is the highest responsibility of the President of the United States, which is to maintain the safety of the American people. And I will not cut our military budget by a trillion dollars, which is the combination of the budget cuts the President has, as well as the sequestration cuts. That, in my view, is making our future less certain and less secure --

THE PRESIDENT: Bob, I just need to comment on this. First of all, the sequester is not something that I proposed. It's something that Congress has proposed. It will not happen. The budget that we're talking about is not reducing our military spending, it's maintaining it.

But I think Governor Romney maybe hasn't spent enough time looking at how our military works. You mentioned the Navy, for example, and that we have fewer ships than we did in 1916. Well, Governor, we also have fewer horses and bayonets, because the nature of our military has changed. We have these things called aircraft carriers where planes land on them. We have these ships that go underwater, nuclear submarines. And so the question is not a game of Battleship where we're counting ships; it's what are our capabilities.

And so when I sit down with the Secretary of the Navy and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, we determine how are we going to be best able to meet all of our defense needs in a way that also keeps faith with our troops, that also makes sure that our veterans have the kind of support that they need when they come home. And that is not reflected in the kind of budget that you're putting forward, because it just doesn't work. And we visited the website quite a bit and it still doesn't work.

MR. SCHIEFFER: A lot to cover. I'd like to move to the next segment: Red lines -- Israel and Iran. Would either of you -- and you'll have two minutes -- and, President Obama, you have the first go at this one. Would either of you be willing to declare that an attack on Israel is an attack on the United States -- which, of course, is the same promise that we give to our close allies like Japan. And if you made such a declaration, would not that deter Iran? It's certainly deterred the Soviet Union for a long, long time when we made that promise to our allies.

Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: First of all, Israel is a true friend; it is our greatest ally in the region. And if Israel is attacked, America will stand with Israel. I've made that clear throughout my presidency.

MR. SCHIEFFER: So you're saying we've already made that declaration?

THE PRESIDENT: I will stand with Israel if they are attacked. And this is the reason why, working with Israel, we have created the strongest military and intelligence cooperation between our two countries in history. In fact, this week, we'll be carrying out the largest military exercise with Israel in history -- this very week.

But to the issue of Iran, as long as I'm President of the United States, Iran will not get a nuclear weapon. I made that clear when I came into office. We then organized the strongest coalition and the strongest sanctions against Iran in history, and it is crippling their economy. Their currency has dropped 80 percent. Their oil production has plunged to the lowest level since they were fighting a war with Iraq 20 years ago. So their economy is in shambles.

And the reason we did this is because a nuclear Iran is a threat to our national security and it's a threat to Israel's national security. We cannot afford to have a nuclear arms race in the most volatile region in the world. Iran is a state sponsor of terrorism, and for them to be able to provide nuclear technology to non-state actors, that's unacceptable. And they have said that they want to see Israel wiped off the map.

So the work that we've done with respect to sanctions now offers Iran a choice: They can take the diplomatic route and end their nuclear program, or they will have to face a united world and a United States President -- me -- who said we're not going to take any options off the table.

The disagreement I have with Governor Romney is that during the course of this campaign, he's often talked as if we should take premature military action. I think that would be a mistake, because when I've sent young men and women into harm's way, I always understand that that is the last resort, not the first resort.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Two minutes.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, first of all, I want to underscore the same point the President made, which is that if I'm President of the United States -- when I'm President of the United States, we will stand with Israel. And if Israel is attacked, we have their back, not just diplomatically, not just culturally, but militarily. That's number one.

Number two, with regards to Iran and the threat of Iran -- there's no question but that a nuclear Iran, a nuclear-capable Iran is unacceptable to America. It presents a threat not only to our friends, but ultimately a threat to us to have Iran have nuclear material, nuclear weapons that could be used against us or used to be threatening to us.

It's also essential for us to understand what our mission is in Iran, and that is to dissuade Iran from having a nuclear weapon through peaceful and diplomatic means. And crippling sanctions are something I called for five years ago -- when I was in Israel speaking at the Herzliya conference, I laid out seven steps. Crippling sanctions were number one and they do work. You're seeing it right now in the economy. It's absolutely the right thing to do to have crippling sanctions. I'd have put them in place earlier, but it's good that we have them.

Number two, something I would add today is I would tighten those sanctions. I would say that ships that carry Iranian oil can't come into our ports. I imagine the EU would agree with us as well. Not only ships couldn't, I'd say companies that are moving their oil can't; people who are trading in their oil can't. I would tighten those sanctions further.

Secondly, I'd take on diplomatic isolation efforts. I'd make sure that Ahmadinejad is indicted under the genocide convention. His words amount to genocide in citation. I would indict him for it. I would also make sure that their diplomats are treated like the pariah they are around the world -- the same way we treated the apartheid diplomats of South Africa. We need to increase pressure time and time again on Iran because anything other than a solution to this which says -- which stops this nuclear folly of theirs is unacceptable to America.

And of course, a military action is the last resort. It is something one would only -- only consider if all of the other avenues had been tried to their full extent.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Let me ask both of you, there are -- as you know, there are reports that Iran and the United States as part of an international group have agreed in principle to talks about Iran's nuclear program. What is the deal -- if there are such talks, what is the deal that you would accept?

Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, first of all, those are reports in the newspaper. They are not true. But our goal is to get Iran to recognize it needs to give up its nuclear program and abide by the U.N. resolutions that have been in place -- because they have the opportunity to reenter the community of nations. And we would welcome that.

There are people in Iran who have the same aspirations as people all around the world for a better life. And we hope that their leadership takes the right decision. But the deal we'll accept is they end their nuclear program. It's very straightforward.

And I'm glad that Governor Romney agrees with the steps that we're taking. There have been times, Governor, frankly, during the course of this campaign where it sounded like you thought that you'd do the same things we did, but you'd say them louder and somehow that would make a difference. And it turns out that the work involved in setting up these crippling sanctions is painstaking. It's meticulous.

We started from the day we got into office. And the reason it was so important -- and this is a testament to how we've restored American credibility and strength around the world -- is we had to make sure that all the countries participated, even countries like Russia and China, because if it's just us that are imposing sanctions, we've had sanctions in place for a long time. It's because we got everybody to agree that Iran is seeing so much pressure. And we've got to maintain that pressure.

There is a deal to be had, and that is that they abide by the rules that have already been established; they convince the international community they are not pursuing a nuclear program; there are inspections that are very intrusive, but over time what they can do is regain credibility.

In the meantime, though, we're not going to let up the pressure until we have clear evidence that that takes place.

And one last thing, just to make this point -- the clock is ticking. We're not going to allow Iran to perpetually engage in negotiations that lead nowhere. And I've been very clear to them. Because of the intelligence coordination that we do with a range of countries, including Israel, we have a sense of when they would get breakout capacity, which means that we would not be able to intervene in time to stop their nuclear program. And that clock is ticking.

MR. SCHIEFFER: All right.

THE PRESIDENT: And we're going to make sure that if they do not meet the demands of the international community, then we are going to take all options necessary to make sure they don't have a nuclear weapon.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Governor.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I think from the very beginning, one of the challenges we've had with Iran is that they have looked at this administration and felt that the administration was not as strong as it needed to be. I think they saw weakness where they had expected to find American strength.

And I say that because from the very beginning, the President, in his campaign some four years ago, said he'd meet with all the world's worst actors in his first year. He'd sit down with Chavez and Kim Jong-il, with Castro and with President Ahmadinejad of Iran. And I think they looked and thought, well, that's an unusual honor to receive from the President of the United States.

And then the President began what I've called an apology tour of going to various nations in the Middle East and criticizing America. I think they looked at that and saw weakness. Then when there were dissidents in the streets of Tehran, a Green Revolution, holding signs saying, is America with us, the President was silent. I think they noticed that as well. And I think that when the President said he was going to create daylight between ourselves and Israel, that they noticed that as well.

All of these things suggested, I think, to the Iranian mullahs that, hey, we can keep on pushing along here, we can keep talks going on, we're just going to keep on spinning centrifuges. Now there are some 10,000 centrifuges spinning uranium, preparing to create a nuclear threat to the United States and to the world. That's unacceptable for us.

And it's essential for a President to show strength from the very beginning, to make it very clear what is acceptable and not acceptable. And an Iranian nuclear program is not acceptable to us. They must not develop nuclear capability. And the way to make sure they understand that is by having from the very beginning the tightest sanctions possible. They need to be tightened. Our diplomatic isolation needs to be tougher. We need to indict Ahmadinejad. We need to put the pressure on them as hard as we possibly can, because if we do that, we won't have to take the military action.

THE PRESIDENT: Bob, let me just respond. Nothing Governor Romney just said is true, starting with this notion of me apologizing. This has been probably the biggest whopper that's been told during the course of this campaign. And every fact-checker and every reporter who's looked at it, Governor, has said this is not true.

And when it comes to tightening sanctions, look, as I said before, we've put in the toughest, most crippling sanctions ever. And the fact is, while we were coordinating an international coalition to make sure these sanctions were effective, you were still invested in a Chinese state oil company that was doing business with the Iranian oil sector.

So I'll let the American people decide, judge who is going to be more effective and more credible when it comes to imposing crippling sanctions.

And with respect to our attitude about the Iranian Revolution, I was very clear about the murderous activities that had taken place and that was contrary to international law and everything that civilized people stand for. And so the strength that we have shown in Iran is shown by the fact that we've been able to mobilize the world.

When I came into office, the world was divided; Iran was resurgent. Iran is at its weakest point economically, strategically, militarily, than in many years. And we are going to continue to keep the pressure on to make sure that they do not get a nuclear weapon. That's in America's national interest, and that will be the case so long as I'm President.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: We're four years closer to a nuclear Iran. We're four years closer to a nuclear Iran. And we should not have wasted these four years to the extent they've continued to be able to spin these centrifuges and get that much closer. That's number one.

Number two, Mr. President, the reason I call it an apology tour is because you went to the Middle East and you flew to Egypt and to Saudi Arabia and to Turkey and Iraq, and -- and, by the way, you skipped Israel, our closest friend in the region, but you went to the other nations. And, by the way, they noticed that you skipped Israel. And then in those nations, and on Arabic TV, you said that America had been dismissive and derisive. You said that on occasion America has dictated to other nations. Mr. President, America has not dictated to other nations. We have freed other nations from dictator.

THE PRESIDENT: Bob, let me respond. If we're going to talk about trips that we've taken -- when I was a candidate for office, the first trip I took was to visit our troops. And when I went to Israel as a candidate, I didn't take donors, I didn't attend fundraisers. I went to Yad Vashem, the Holocaust museum there, to remind myself the nature of evil and why our bond with Israel will be unbreakable.

And then I went down to the border town of Sderot, which had experienced missiles raining down from Hamas. And I saw families there who showed me where missiles had come down near their children's bedrooms, and I was reminded of what that would mean if those were my kids -- which is why, as President, we funded an Iron Dome program to stop those missiles. So that's how I've used my travels, when I traveled to Israel and when I traveled to the region.

And the central question at this point is going to be who's going to be credible to all parties involved. And they can look at my track record -- whether it's Iran's sanctions, whether it's dealing with counterterrorism, whether it's supporting democracy, whether it's supporting women's rights, whether it's supporting religious minorities -- and they can say that the President of the United States and the United States of America has stood on the right side of history. And that kind of credibility is precisely why we've been able to show leadership on a wide range of issues facing the world right now.

MR. SCHIEFFER: What if the Prime Minister of Israel called you on the phone and said, "Our bombers are on the way. We're going to bomb Iran" -- what do you say?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Bob, let's not go into hypotheticals of that nature. Our relationship with Israel, my relationship with the Prime Minister of Israel is such that we would not get a call saying our bombers are on the way or their fighters are on the way. This is the kind of thing that would have been discussed and thoroughly evaluated well before that kind of last minute --

MR. SCHIEFFER: So you're saying --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I'm just saying that's just not --

MR. SCHIEFFER: Okay, well, let's see what --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Let's come back to what the President was speaking about, which is what's happening in the world, and the President's statement that things are going so well. Look, I look at what's happening around the world and I see Iran four years closer to a bomb. I see the Middle East with a rising tide of violence, chaos, tumult. I see jihadists continuing to spread -- whether they're rising or just about the same level, hard to precisely measure but it's clear they're there. They're very strong. I see Syria with 30,000 civilians dead. Assad is still in power. I see our trade deficit with China larger than it's -- growing larger every year, as a matter of fact. I look around the world and I don't feel that -- you see North Korea continuing to export their nuclear technology. Russia has said they're not going to follow Nunn-Lugar anymore. They're -- back away from a nuclear proliferation treaty that we had with them.

I look around the world -- I don't see our influence growing around the world. I see our influence receding -- in part because of the failure of the President to deal with our economic challenges at home; in part because of our withdrawal from our commitment to our military in the way I think it ought to be; in part because of the turmoil with Israel. I mean, the President received a letter from 38 Democrat senators saying that tensions with Israel were a real problem. They asked him, please repair the tension -- Democrat senators -- please repair the damage in his own party.

THE PRESIDENT: All right, Governor, the problem is, is that on a whole range of issues -- whether it's the Middle East, whether it's Afghanistan, whether it's Iraq, whether it's now Iran -- you've been all over the map. I mean, I'm pleased that you now are endorsing our policy of applying diplomatic pressure and potentially having bilateral discussions with the Iranians to end their nuclear program.

But just a few years ago, you said that's something you'd never do. In the same way that you initially opposed a timetable in Afghanistan; now you're for it, although it depends. In the same way that you say you would have ended the war in Iraq, but recently gave a speech saying that we should have 20,000 more folks in there. The same way that you said that it was mission creep to go after Qaddafi.

When it comes to going after Osama bin Laden, you said, well, any President would make that call. But when you were a candidate in 2008 -- as I was -- and I said if I got bin Laden in our sights, I would take that shot, you said we shouldn't move heaven and earth to get one man. You said we should ask Pakistan for permission. And if we had asked Pakistan for permission, we would not have gotten it. And it was worth moving heaven and earth to get him.

After we killed bin Laden, I was at Ground Zero for a memorial and talked to a young woman who was four years old when 9/11 happened. And the last conversation she had with her father was him calling from the Twin Towers, saying, "Peyton, I love you, and I will always watch over you." And for the next decade she was haunted by that conversation. And she said to me, "By finally getting bin Laden, that brought some closure to me." And when we do things like that, when we bring those who have harmed us to justice, that sends a message to the world, and it tells Peyton that we did not forget her father.

MR. SCHIEFFER: All right.

THE PRESIDENT: And I make that point because that's the kind of clarity of leadership -- and those decisions are not always popular. Those decisions generally are not poll-tested. And even some in my own party, including my current Vice President, had the same critique as you did. But what the American people understand is, is that I look at what we need to get done to keep the American people safe and to move our interests forward, and I make those decisions.

MR. SCHIEFFER: All right, let's go and that leads us -- this takes us right to the next segment, Governor, America's longest war, Afghanistan and Pakistan --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Bob --

MR. SCHIEFFER: Governor, you get to go first here.

MR. SCHIEFFER: You can't -- okay, but you can't have the President just lay out a whole series of items without giving me a chance to respond.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Well, with respect, sir, you had laid out quite a program there.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, that's probably true. (Laughter.)

MR. SCHIEFFER: And we'll give you -- we'll give you --

THE PRESIDENT: We'll agree --

MR. SCHIEFFER: We'll catch up. The United States is scheduled to turn over responsibility for security in Afghanistan to the Afghan government in 2014. At that point we will withdraw our combat troops, leave a smaller force of Americans -- if I understand our policy -- in Afghanistan for training purposes. It seems to me the key question here is what do you do if the deadline arrives and it is obvious the Afghans are unable to handle their security? Do we still leave? And I believe, Governor Romney, you go first.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, we're going to be finished by 2014. And when I'm President, we'll make sure we bring our troops out by the end of 2014. The commanders and the generals there are on track to do so. We've seen progress over the last several years. The surge has been successful, and the training program is proceeding apace. There are a large number of Afghan security forces -- 350,000 -- that are ready to step in to provide security, and we're going to be able to make that transition by the end of 2014. So our troops will come home at that point.

I can tell you at the same time that we will make sure that we look at what's happening in Pakistan and recognize that what's happening in Pakistan is going to have a major impact on the success in Afghanistan. And I say that because I know a lot of people just feel like we should brush our hands and walk away -- and I don't mean you, Mr. President -- but some people in our nation feel that Pakistan isn't being nice to us and that we should just walk away from them.

Pakistan is important to the region, to the world, and to us, because Pakistan has a hundred nuclear warheads, and they're rushing to build a lot more. They'll have more than Great Britain sometime in the relatively near future. They also have the Haqqani Network and the Taliban existent within their country.

And so a Pakistan that falls apart, becomes a failed state, would be of extraordinary danger to Afghanistan and to us. And so we're going to have to remain helpful in encouraging Pakistan to move towards a more stable government and rebuild a relationship with us. And that means that our aid that we provide to Pakistan is going to have to be conditioned upon certain benchmarks being met. So for me, I look at this as both a need to help move Pakistan in the right direction and also to get Afghanistan to be ready, and they will be ready by the end of 2014.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: When I came into office, we were still bogged down in Iraq, and Afghanistan had been drifting for a decade. We ended the war in Iraq, refocused our attention on Afghanistan. And we did deliver a surge of troops. That was facilitated in part because we had ended the war in Iraq. And we are now in a position where we have met many of the objectives that got us there in the first place.

Part of what had happened is we had forgotten why we had gone. We went because there were people who were responsible for 3,000 American deaths. And so we decimated al Qaeda's core leadership in the border regions between Afghanistan and Pakistan. We then started to build up Afghan forces, and we're now in a position where we can transition out, because there's no reason why Americans should die when Afghans are perfectly capable of defending their own country.

That transition has to take place in a responsible fashion. We've been there a long time, but we've got to make sure that we and our coalition partners are pulling out responsibly and giving Afghans the capabilities that they need.

But what I think the American people recognize is after a decade of war, it's time to do some nation-building here at home. And what we can now do is free up some resources to, for example, put Americans back to work -- especially our veterans -- rebuilding our roads, our bridges, our schools; making sure that our veterans are getting the care that they need when it comes to Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder and Traumatic Brain Injury; making sure that the certifications that they need for good jobs of the future are in place.

I was having lunch with some -- a veteran in Minnesota who had been a medic dealing with the most extreme circumstances. When he came home and he wanted to become a nurse, he had to start from scratch. And what we've said is let's change those certifications. The First Lady has done great work with an organization called Joining Forces, putting our veterans back to work. And as a consequence, veterans' unemployment is actually now lower than the general population; it was higher when I came into office.

So those are the kinds of things that we can now do because we're making that transition in Afghanistan.

MR. SCHIEFFER: All right, let me go to Governor Romney, because you talked about Pakistan and what needs to be done there. General Allen, our commander in Afghanistan, says that Americans continue to die at the hands of groups who are supported by Pakistan. We know that Pakistan has arrested the doctor who helped us catch Obama -- bin Laden. It still provides safe haven for terrorists. Yet we continue to give Pakistan billions of dollars. Is it time for us to divorce Pakistan?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: No, it's not time to divorce a nation on Earth that has 100 nuclear weapons and is on the way to double that at some point; a nation that has serious threats from terrorist groups within its nation -- as I indicated before, the Taliban, the Haqqani Network. It's a nation that's not like others and it does not have a civilian leadership that is calling the shots there. You've got the ISI, their intelligence organization, that's probably the most powerful of three branches there. Then you have the military and then you have the civilian government.

This is a nation which, if it falls apart, if it becomes a failed state, there are nuclear weapons there, and you've got terrorists there who could grab their hands onto those nuclear weapons. This is an important part of the world for us. Pakistan is technically an ally, and they're not acting very much like an ally right now, but we have some work to do.

And I don't blame the administration for the fact that the relationship with Pakistan is strained. We had to go into Pakistan. We had to go in there to get Osama bin Laden. That was the right thing to do. And that upset them, but there was obviously a great deal of anger even before that. But we're going to have to work with the people in Pakistan to try and help them move to a more responsible course than the one that they're on.

It's important for them. It's important for the nuclear weapons. It's important for the success of Afghanistan, because inside Pakistan you have a large -- Pashtuns that are Taliban. They're going to come rushing back in to Afghanistan when we go, and that's one of the reasons the Afghan security forces have so much work to do to be able to fight against that.

But it's important for us to recognize that we can't just walk away from Pakistan. But we do need to make sure that as we send support for them, that this is tied to them making progress on matters that would lead them to becoming a civil society.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Let me ask you, Governor -- because we know President Obama's position on this -- what is your position on the use of drones?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, I believe that we should use any and all means necessary to take out people who pose a threat to us and our friends around the world. And it's widely reported that drones are being used in drone strikes, and I support that entirely, and feel the President was right to up the usage of that technology, and believe that we should continue to use it to continue to go after the people who represent a threat to this nation and to our friends.

Let me also note that, as I said earlier, we're going to have to do more than just going after leaders and killing bad guys, important as that is. We're also going to have to have a far more effective and comprehensive strategy to help move the world away from terror and Islamic extremism. We haven't done that yet.

We talk a lot about these things, but you look at the record -- you look at the record of the last four years and say, is Iran closer to a bomb? Yes. Is the Middle East in tumult? Yes. Is al Qaeda on the run, on its heels? No. Are Israel and the Palestinians closer to reaching a peace agreement? No, they haven't had talks in two years. We have not seen the progress we need to have. And I'm convinced that with strong leadership and an effort to build a strategy based upon helping these nations reject extremism, we can see the kind of peace and prosperity the world demands.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, keep in mind, our strategy wasn't just going after bin Laden. We've created partnerships throughout the region to deal with extremism -- in Somalia, in Yemen, in Pakistan. And what we've also done is engage these governments in the kind of reforms that are actually going to make a difference in people's lives day to day -- to make sure that their governments aren't corrupt; to make sure that they are treating women with the kind of respect and dignity that every nation that succeeds has shown; and to make sure that they've got a free market system that works. So across the board, we are engaging them in building capacity in these countries, and we've stood on the side of democracy.

One thing I think Americans should be proud of -- when Tunisians began to protest, this nation -- me, my administration -- stood with them earlier than just about any other country. In Egypt, we stood on the side of democracy. In Libya, we stood on the side of the people. And as a consequence, there's no doubt that attitudes about Americans have changed.

But there are always going to be elements in these countries that potentially threaten the United States, and we want to shrink those groups and those networks, and we can do that. But we're always also going to have to maintain vigilance when it comes to terrorist activities. The truth, though, is that al Qaeda is much weaker than it was when I came into office, and they don't have the same capacities to attack the U.S. homeland and our allies as they did four years ago.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Let's go to the next segment, because it's a very important one. It is the rise of China and future challenges for America. I want to just begin this by asking both of you -- and, Mr. President, you go first this time -- what do you believe is the greatest future threat to the national security of this country?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, I think it will continue to be terrorist networks. We have to remain vigilant, as I just said. But with respect to China, China is both an adversary but also a potential partner in the international community if it's following the rules. So my attitude coming into office was that we are going to insist that China plays by the same rules as everybody else.

Now, I know Americans had seen jobs being shipped overseas, businesses and workers not getting a level playing field when it came to trade. And that's the reason why I set up a trade task force to go after cheaters when it came to international trade. That's the reason why we have brought more cases against China for violating trade rules than the other -- the previous administration had done in two terms. And we've won just about every case that we filed, that has been decided.

In fact, just recently, steel workers in Ohio and throughout the Midwest, Pennsylvania, are in a position now to sell steel to China because we won that case. We had a tire case in which they were flooding us with cheap domestic tires -- or cheap Chinese tires -- and we put a stop to it and, as a consequence, saved jobs throughout America.

I have to say that Governor Romney criticized me for being too tough in that tire case; said this wouldn't be good for American workers and that it would protectionist. But I tell you, those workers don't feel that way. They feel as if they had finally an administration who was going to take this issue seriously.

Over the long term, in order for us to compete with China, we've also got to make sure, though, that we're taking care of business here at home. If we don't have the best education system in the world, if we don't continue to put money into research and technology that will allow us to create great businesses here in the United States, that's how we lose the competition. And unfortunately, Governor Romney's budget and his proposals would not allow us to make those investments.

MR. SCHIEFFER: All right. Governor.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, first of all, it's not government that makes business successful. It's not government investments that make businesses grow and hire people. Let me also note that the greatest threat that the world faces, the greatest national security threat is a nuclear Iran.

Let's talk about China. China has an interest that's very much like ours in one respect, and that is they want a stable world. They don't want war. They don't want to see protectionism. They don't want to see the world break out into various form of chaos, because they have to manufacture goods and put people to work. They have about 20,000 -- 20 million, rather, people coming out of the farms every year, coming into the cities, needing jobs. So they want the economy to work and the world to be free and open. And so we can be a partner with China. We don't have to be an adversary in any way, shape, or form. We can work with them. We can collaborate with them if they're willing to be responsible.

Now, they look at us and say, is it a good idea to be with America? How strong are we going to be? How strong is our economy? They look at the fact that we owe them a trillion dollars and owe other people $16 trillion in total, including them. They look at our decision to cut back on our military capabilities -- a trillion dollars. The Secretary of Defense called these trillion dollars of cuts to our military devastating. It's not my term. It's the President's own Secretary of Defense called them devastating. They look at America's commitments around the world and they see what's happening, and they say, well, okay, is America going to be strong? And the answer is, yes, if I'm President, America will be very strong.

We'll also make sure that we have trade relations with China that work for us. I've watched year in and year out as companies have shut down and people have lost their jobs because China has not played by the same rules, in part by holding down artificially the value of their currency; it holds down the prices of their goods. It means our goods aren't as competitive, and we lose jobs. That's got to end. They're making some progress. They need to make more. That's why on day one I will label them a currency manipulator, which allows us to apply tariffs where they're taking jobs.

They're stealing our intellectual property, our patents, our designs, our technology, hacking into our computers, counterfeiting our goods. They have to understand we want to trade with them, we want a world that's stable, we like free enterprise, but you've got to play by the rules.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Well, Governor, let me just ask you, if you declare them a currency manipulator on day one, some people say you're just going to start a trade war with China on day one. Is that -- isn't there a risk that that could happen?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, they sell us about this much stuff every year, and we sell them about this much stuff every year. So it's pretty clear who doesn't want a trade war. And there's one going on right now which we don't know about -- it's a silent one, and they're winning. We have enormous trade imbalance with China. And it's worse this year than last year. And it's worst last year than the year before.

And so we have to understand that we can't just surrender and lose jobs year in and year out. We have to say to our friends in China, look, you guys are playing aggressively, we understand it, but this can't keep on going. You can't keep on holding down the value of your currency, stealing our intellectual property, counterfeiting our products, selling them around the world -- even into the United States.

I was with one company that makes valves in process industries. And they said, look, we were having some valves coming in that were broken and we had to repair them under warranty. And we looked them up, and they had our serial number on them, and then we noticed that there was more than one with that same serial number. There were counterfeit products being made overseas with the same serial number as a U.S. company, the same packaging. These were being sold into our market and around the world as if they were made by the U.S. competitor. This can't go on. I want a great relationship with China. China can be our partner, but that doesn't mean they can just roll all over us and steal our jobs on an unfair basis.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, Governor Romney is right, you are familiar with jobs being shipped overseas because you invested in companies that were shipping jobs overseas. And that's your right. I mean, that's how our free market works. But I've made a different bet on American workers.

If we had taken your advice, Governor Romney, about our auto industry, we'd be buying cars from China instead of selling cars to China. If we take your advice with respect to how we change our tax code so that companies that are in profits overseas don't pay U.S. taxes compared to companies here that are paying taxes, that's estimated to create 800,000 jobs. The problem is they won't be here; they'll be in places like China.

And if we're not making investments in education and basic research, which is not something that the private sector is doing at a sufficient pace right now and has never done, then we will lose the lead in things like clean energy technology.

Now, with respect to what we've done with China already, U.S. exports have doubled since I came into office to China. And, actually, currencies are at their most advantageous point for U.S. exporters since 1993. We absolutely have to make more progress, and that's why we're going to keep on pressing.

And when it comes to our military and Chinese security, part of the reason that we were able to pivot to the Asia Pacific region after having ended the war in Iraq and transitioning out of Afghanistan is precisely because this is going to be a massive growth area in the future.

And we believe China can be a partner, but we're also sending a very clear signal that America is a Pacific power, that we are going to have a presence there. We are working with countries in the region to make sure, for example, that ships can pass through, that commerce continues. And we're organizing trade relations with countries other than China so that China starts feeling more pressure about meeting basic international standards. That's the kind of leadership we've shown in the region. That's the kind of leadership that we'll continue to show.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I just want to take one of those points. Again, attacking me is not talking about an agenda for getting more trade and opening up more jobs in this country. But the President mentioned the auto industry and that somehow I would be in favor of jobs being elsewhere. Nothing could be further from the truth. I'm a son of Detroit. I was born in Detroit. My dad was head of a car company. I like American cars, and I would do nothing to hurt the U.S. auto industry.

My plan to get the industry on its feet when it was in real trouble was not to start writing checks. It was President Bush that wrote the first checks. I disagreed with that. I said they need -- these companies need to go through a managed bankruptcy. And in that process, they can get government help and government guarantees, but they need to go through bankruptcy to get rid of excess cost and the debt burden that they'd built up. And fortunately, the President --

THE PRESIDENT: Governor Romney, that's not what you said.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Fortunately, the President -- you can take a look at the op-ed. You can take a look at the op-ed.

THE PRESIDENT: Governor Romney, you did not say that you would provide governor help.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: You know, I'm still speaking. I said that we would provide guarantees, and that was what was able to allow these companies to go through bankruptcy, to come out of bankruptcy. Under no circumstances would I do anything other than to help this industry get on its feet. And the idea that has been suggested, that I would liquidate the industry -- of course not, of course not.

THE PRESIDENT: Let's check the record.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: That's the height of silliness. I have never said I would --

THE PRESIDENT: Let's check the record.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- liquidate the industry. I want to keep the industry going and thriving.

THE PRESIDENT: Governor, the people of Detroit don't forget.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: And that's why I have the kind of commitment to make sure that our industries in this country can compete and be successful. We in this country can compete successfully with anyone in the world, and we're going to. We're going to have to have a President, however, that doesn't think that somehow the government investing in car companies like Tessella and Fisker, making electric battery cars -- this is not research, Mr. President. These are the government investing in companies, investing in Solyndra. This is a company -- this isn't basic research. I want to invest in research. Research is great. Providing funding to universities and think tanks -- great. But investing in companies -- absolutely not. That's the wrong way to go.

THE PRESIDENT: Governor, the fact of the matter is --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I'm still speaking. So I want to make sure that we make America more competitive and that we do those things that make America the most attractive place in the world for entrepreneurs, innovators, businesses to grow. But your investing in companies doesn't do that. In fact, it makes it less likely for them to come here, because the private sector is not going to invest in a solar company --

THE PRESIDENT: Governor, I'm happy to respond. You've held the floor for a while.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- if you're investing government money in someone else's.

THE PRESIDENT: Look, I think anybody out there can check the record. Governor Romney, you keep on trying to airbrush history here. You were very clear that you would not provide government assistance to the U.S. auto companies even if they went through bankruptcy. You said that they could get it in the private marketplace. That wasn't true. They would have gone through --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: You're wrong. You're wrong, Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: No, I am not wrong.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: You're wrong.

THE PRESIDENT: I am not wrong.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: People can look it up -- you're right.

THE PRESIDENT: People will look it up.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Good.

THE PRESIDENT: But more importantly, it is true that in order for us to be competitive, we're going to have to make some smart choices right now. Cutting our education budget -- that's not a smart choice. That will not help us compete with China. Cutting our investments in research and technology -- that's not a smart choice. That will not help us compete with China. Bringing down our deficit by adding $7 trillion of tax cuts and military spending that our military is not asking for, before we even get to the debt that we currently have -- that is not going to make us more competitive.

Those are the kinds of choices that the American people face right now. Having a tax code that rewards companies that are shipping jobs overseas instead of companies that are investing here in the United States -- that will not make us more competitive. And the one thing that I'm absolutely clear about is that after a decade in which we saw a drift, jobs being shipped overseas, nobody championing American workers and American businesses, we've now begun to make some real progress. What we can't do is go back to the same policies that got us into such difficulty in the first place. And that's why we have to move forward and not go back.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I couldn't agree more about going forward, but I certainly don't want to go back to the policies of the last four years. The policies of the last four years has seen incomes in America decline every year for middle-income families, now down $4,300 during your term. Twenty-three million Americans still struggling to find a good job.

When you came to office, 32 million people on food stamps; today, 47 million people on food stamps. When you came to office, just over $10 trillion in debt; now $16 trillion in debt. It hasn't worked. You said by now we'd be at 5.4 percent unemployment. We're 9 million jobs short of that. I've met some of those people. I met them in Appleton, Wisconsin. I met a young woman in Philadelphia who's coming out of college, can't find work. Ann was with someone just the other day that was just weeping about not being able to get work. It's just a tragedy in a nation so prosperous as ours that these last four years have been so hard.

And that's why it's so critical that we make America once again the most attractive place in the world to start businesses, to build jobs, to grow the economy. And that's not going to happen by just hiring teachers.

Look, I'd love to -- I love teachers, and I'm happy to have states and communities that want to hire teachers do that. By the way, I don't like to have the federal government start pushing its way deeper and deeper into our schools; let the states and localities do that. I was a governor -- the federal government didn't hire our teachers.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Governor.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: But I love teachers, but I want to get our private sector growing, and I know how to do it.

MR. SCHIEFFER: I think we all love teachers.
(Laughter.)

Gentlemen, thank you so much for a very vigorous debate. We have come to the end. It is time for closing statements. I believe you're first, Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, thank you very much, Bob, Governor

Romney, and to Lynn University.

You've now heard three debates, months of campaigning and way too many TV commercials. (Laughter.) And now you've got a choice. Over the last four years, we've made real progress digging our way out of policies that gave us two prolonged wars, record deficits, and the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression.

And Governor Romney wants to take us back to those policies -- a foreign policy that's wrong and reckless; economic policies that won't create jobs, won't reduce our deficit, but will make sure that folks at the very top don't have to play by the same rules that you do. And I've got a different vision for America.

I want to build on our strengths. And I've put forward a plan to make sure that we're bringing manufacturing jobs back to our shores by rewarding companies and small businesses that are investing here, not overseas. I want to make sure we've got the best education system in the world, and we're retaining our workers for the jobs of tomorrow.

I want to control our own energy by developing oil and natural gas, but also the energy sources of the future. Yes, I want to reduce our deficit by cutting spending that we don't need, but also by asking the wealthy to do a little bit more so that we can invest in things like research and technology that are the key to a 21st-century economy.

As Commander-in-Chief, I will maintain the strongest military in the world, keep faith with our troops, and go after those who would do us harm. But after a decade of war, I think we all recognize we've got to do some nation-building here at home rebuilding our roads, our bridges, and especially caring for our veterans who sacrificed so much for our freedom.

We've been through tough times, but we always bounce back because of our character, because we pull together. And if I have the privilege of being your President for another four years, I promise you I will always listen to your voices, I will fight for your families, and I will work every single day to make sure that America continues to be the greatest nation on Earth. Thank you.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Governor.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Thank you. Bob, Mr. President, folks at Lynn University, good to be with you. I'm optimistic about the future. I'm excited about our prospects as a nation. I want to see peace. I want to see growing peace in this country. It's our objective. We have an opportunity to have real leadership. America is going to have that kind of leadership and continue to promote principles of peace that will make the world a safer place, and make people in this country more confident that their future is secure.

I also to want to make sure that we get this economy going. And there are two very different paths the country can take. One is a path represented by the President, which, at the end of four years, would mean we'd have $20 trillion in debt, heading towards Greece. I'll get us on track to a balanced budget.

The President's path will mean continuing declining in take-home pay. I want to make sure our take-home pay turns around and starts to grow. The President's path means 20 million people out of work, struggling for a good job. I'll get people back to work with 12 million new jobs.

I'm going to make sure that we get people off of food stamps, not by cutting the program, but by getting them good jobs. America is going to come back, and for that to happen, we're going to have to have a President who can work across the aisle.

I was in a state where my legislature was 87 percent Democrat. I learned how to get along on the other side of the aisle. We've got to do that in Washington. Washington is broken. I know what it takes to get this country back, and we'll work with good Democrats and good Republicans to do that.

This nation is the hope of the Earth. We've been blessed by having a nation that's free and prosperous thanks to the contributions of the Greatest Generation. They've held a torch for the world to see, a torch of freedom and hope and opportunity. Now it's our turn to take that torch. I'm convinced we'll do it.

We need strong leadership. I'd like to be that leader with your support. I'll work with you. I'll lead you in an open and honest way. And I ask for your vote. I'd like to be the next President of the United States to support and help this great nation, and to make sure that we all together maintain America as the hope of the Earth. Thank you so much.

MR. SCHIEFFER: Gentlemen, thank you both so much. That brings an end to this year's debates. And we want to thank Lynn University and its students for having us. As I always do at the end of these debates, I leave you with the words of my mom, who said, go vote. (Laughter.) It makes you feel big and strong. Good night.

AND GOVERNOR ROMNEY
IN THE FIRST PRESIDENTIAL DEBATE

Magness Arena
University of Denver
Denver, Colorado

7:00 P.M. MDT

MR. LEHRER: Good evening from the Magness Arena at the University of Denver, in Denver, Colorado. I'm Jim Lehrer of the PBS News Hour, and I welcome you to the first of the 2012 Presidential Debates between President Barack Obama, the Democratic nominee, and former Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney, the Republican nominee.

This debate and the next three -- two presidential, one vice presidential -- are sponsored by the Commission on Presidential Debates. Tonight's 90 minutes will be about domestic issues and will follow a format designed by the Commission. There will be six roughly 15-minute segments, with 2-minute answers for the first question, then open discussion for the remainder of each segment.

Thousands of people offered suggestions on segment subjects or questions via the Internet and other means. But I made the final selections. And for the record, they were not submitted for approval to the Commission or the candidates.

The segments, as I announced in advance, will be three on the economy, and one each on health care, the role of government, and governing, with an emphasis throughout on differences, specifics, and choices. Both candidates will also have 2-minute closing statements.

The audience here in the hall has promised to remain silent. No cheers, applause, boos, hisses, among other noisy, distracting things, so we may all concentrate on what the candidates have to say.

There is a noise exception right now, though, as we welcome President Obama and Governor Romney. (Applause.)

Gentlemen, welcome to you both. Let's start with the economy, segment one, and let's begin with jobs. What are the major differences between the two of you about how you would go about creating new jobs? You have two minutes -- each of you have two minutes to start. A coin toss has determined, Mr. President, you go first.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, thank you very much, Jim, for this opportunity. I want to thank Governor Romney, and the University of Denver for your hospitality.

There are a lot of points I want to make tonight, but the most important one is that 20 years ago I became the luckiest man on Earth because Michelle Obama agreed to marry me. (Laughter.) And so I just want to wish, sweetie, you happy anniversary, and let you know that a year from now we will not be celebrating it in front of 40 million people. (Laughter.)

Four years ago, we went through the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression. Millions of jobs were lost. The auto industry was on the brink of collapse. The financial system had frozen up. And because of the resilience and the determination of the American people, we've begun to fight our way back. Over the last 30 months, we've seen 5 million jobs in the private sector created. The auto industry has come roaring back and housing has begun to rise.

But we all know that we've still got a lot of work to do. And so the question here tonight is not where we've been, but where we're going.

Governor Romney has a perspective that says if we cut taxes skewed towards the wealthy and roll back regulations that we'll be better off. I've got a different view. I think we've got to invest in education and training. I think it's important for us to develop new sources of energy here in America; that we change our tax code to make sure that we're helping small businesses and companies that are investing here in the United States; that we take some of the money that we're saving as we wind down two wars to rebuild America; and that we reduce our deficit in a balanced way that allows us to make these critical investments.

Now, ultimately, it's going to be up to the voters -- to you -- which path we should take. Are we going to double down on the top-down economic policies that helped to get us into this mess? Or do we embrace a new economic patriotism that says America does best when the middle class does best? And I'm looking forward to having that debate.

MR. LEHRER: Governor Romney, two minutes.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Thank you, Jim. It's an honor to be here with you, and I appreciate the chance to be with the President. I'm pleased to be at the University of Denver. I appreciate their welcome, and also the Presidential Commission on these debates.

And congratulations to you, Mr. President, on your anniversary. I'm sure this was the most romantic place you could imagine, here with me. (Laughter.) Congratulations.

This is obviously a very tender topic. I've had the occasion over the last couple of years of meeting people across the country -- I was in Dayton, Ohio, and a woman grabbed my arm and she said, I've been out of work since May, can you help me? Ann yesterday was at a rally in Denver and a woman came up to her with a baby in her arms and said, Ann, my husband has had four jobs in three years, part-time jobs. He's lost his most recent job and we've now just lost our home. Can you help us?

And the answer is, yes, we can help, but it's going to take a different path -- not the one we've been on, not the one the President describes as a top-down, cut taxes for the rich. That's not what I'm going to do. My plan has five basic parts: One, get us energy independent -- North America energy independent. That creates about 4 million jobs. Number two, open up more trade, particularly in Latin America; crack down on China if and when they cheat. Number three, make sure our people have the skills they need to succeed and the best schools in the world -- we are far away from that now. Number four, get us to a balanced budget. Number five, champion small business.

It's small business that creates the jobs in America. And over the last four years, small business people have decided that America may not be the place to open a new business, because new business startups are down to a 30-year low. I know what it takes to get small business growing again, to hire people.

Now, I'm concerned that the path that we're on has just been unsuccessful. The President has a view very similar to the view he had when he ran four years ago, that a bigger government spending more, taxing more, regulating more -- if you will, trickle-down government -- would work. That's not the right answer for America. I'll restore the vitality that gets America working again. Thank you.

MR. LEHRER: Mr. President, please respond directly to what the Governor just said about trickle-down, his trickle-down approach, as he said yours is.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, let me talk specifically about what I think we need to do. First, we've got to improve our education system. And we've made enormous progress drawing on ideas both from Democrats and Republicans that are already starting to show gains in some of the toughest to deal with schools.

We've got a program called Race To The Top that has prompted reforms in 46 states around the country, raising standards, improving how we train teachers. So now, I want to hire another 100,000 new math and science teachers, and create 2 million more slots in our community colleges so that people can get trained for the jobs that are out there right now. And I want to make sure that we keep tuition low for our young people.

When it comes to our tax code, Governor Romney and I both agree that our corporate tax rate is too high. So I want to lower it, particularly for manufacturing, taking it down to 25 percent. But I also want to close those loopholes that are giving incentives for companies that are shipping jobs overseas -- I want to provide tax breaks for companies that are investing here in the United States.

On energy, Governor Romney and I, we both agree that we've got to boost American energy production. And oil and natural gas production are higher than they've been in years. But I also believe that we've got to look at the energy sources of the future like wind and solar and biofuels, and make those investments.

So all of this is possible. Now, in order for us to do it, we do have to close our deficit. And one of the things I'm sure we'll be discussing tonight is how do we deal with our tax code and how do we make sure that we are reducing spending in a responsible way, but also how do we have enough revenue to make those investments.

And this is where there's a difference, because Governor Romney's central economic plan calls for a $5 trillion tax cut on top of the extension of the Bush tax cuts -- that's another trillion dollars -- and $2 trillion in additional military spending that the military hasn't asked for. That's $8 trillion. How we pay for that, reduce the deficit, and make the investments that we need to make without dumping those costs onto middle-class Americans I think is one of the central questions of this campaign.

MR. LEHRER: Both of you have spoken about a lot of different things. And we're going to try to get through them in as specific a way as we possibly can. But first, Governor Romney, do you have a question that you'd like to ask the President directly about something he just said?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, sure, I'd like to clear up the record and go through it piece by piece. First of all, I don't have a $5 trillion tax cut. I don't have a tax cut of the scale that you're talking about. My view is that we ought to provide tax relief to people in the middle class. But I'm not going to reduce the share of taxes paid by high-income people. High-income people are doing just fine in this economy. They'll do fine whether you're President or I am.

The people who are having a hard time right now are middle-income Americans. Under the President's policies, middle-income Americans have been buried. They're just being crushed. Middle-income Americans have seen their income come down by $4,300. This is a tax in and of itself. I'll call it the economy tax. It's been crushing.

At the same time, gasoline prices have doubled under the President, electric rates are up, food prices are up, health care costs have gone up by $2,500 a family. Middle-income families are being crushed. And so the question is how to get them going again? And I've described it. It's energy and trade, the right kind of training programs, balancing our budget and helping small business. Those are the cornerstones of my plan.

But the President mentioned a couple of other ideas I'll just note. First, education. I agree education is key, particularly the future of our economy. But our training programs right now, we've got 47 of them housed in the federal government, reporting to eight different agencies. Overhead is overwhelming. We've got to get those dollars back to the states and go to the workers so they can create their own pathways to get in the training they need for jobs that will really help them.

The second area, taxation: We agree we ought to bring the tax rates down, and I do -- both for corporations and for individuals. But in order for us not to lose revenue and have the government run out of money, I also lower deductions and credits and exemptions so that we keep taking in the same money when you also account for growth.

The third area, energy: Energy is critical, and the President pointed out correctly that production of oil and gas in the U.S. is up -- but not due to his policies, in spite of his policies. Mr. President, all of the increase in natural gas and oil has happened on private land, not on government land. On government land, your administration has cut the number of permits and licenses in half.

If I'm President, I'll double them and also get the oil from offshore in Alaska, and I'll bring that pipeline in from Canada. And by the way, I like coal. I'm going to make sure we can continue to burn clean coal. People in the coal industry feel like it's getting crushed by your policies. I want to get America and North America energy independent so we can create those jobs.

And finally with regards to that tax cut, look, I'm not looking to cut massive taxes and to reduce the revenues going to the government. My number-one principle is there will be no tax cut that adds to the deficit. I want to underline that -- no tax cut that adds to the deficit. But I do want to reduce the burden being paid by middle-income Americans. And to do that, that also means I cannot reduce the burden paid by high-income Americans. So any language to the contrary is simply not accurate.

MR. LEHRER: Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, let's talk about taxes because I think it's instructive. Now, four years ago when I stood on this stage, I said that I would cut taxes for middle-class families, and that's exactly what I did. We cut taxes for middle-class families by about $3,600.

And the reason is because I believe that we do best when the middle class is doing well. And by giving them those tax cuts, they had a little more money in their pocket, and so maybe they can buy a new car. They are certainly in a better position to weather the extraordinary recession that we went through. They can buy a computer for their kid who is going off to college, which means they're spending more money; businesses have more customers; businesses make more profits and then hire more workers.

Now, Governor Romney's proposal that he has been promoting for 18 months calls for a $5 trillion tax cut on top of $2 trillion of additional spending for our military. And he is saying that he is going to pay for it by closing loopholes and deductions. The problem is that he's been asked over a hundred times how you would close those deductions and loopholes, and he hasn't been able to identify them.

But I'm going to make an important point here, Jim. When you add up all the loopholes and deductions that upper-income individuals are currently taking advantage of, you take those all away, you don't come close to paying for $5 trillion in tax cuts and $2 trillion in additional military spending.

And that's why independent studies looking at this said the only way to meet Governor Romney's pledge of not reducing the deficit -- or not adding to the deficit, is by burdening middle-class families; the average middle-class family with children would pay about $2,000 more.

Now, that's not my analysis. That's the analysis of economists who have looked at this. And that kind of top-down economics where folks at the top are doing well, so the average person making 3 million bucks is getting a $250,000 tax break, while middle-class families are burdened further, that's not what I believe is a recipe for economic growth.

MR. LEHRER: All right, what is the difference? Let's just stay on taxes for a --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: But I get -- right, right.

MR. LEHRER: Let's just stay on taxes for a moment here.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Yes. Well, but virtually --

MR. LEHRER: What is the difference?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- virtually everything he just said about my tax plan is inaccurate.

MR. LEHRER: All right.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: So if the tax plan he described were a tax plan I was asked to support, I'd say, absolutely not. I'm not looking for a $5 trillion tax cut. What I've said is, I won't put in place a tax cut that adds to the deficit. That's part one. So there's no economist who can say Mitt Romney's tax plan adds $5 trillion if I say I will not add to the deficit with my tax plan.

Number two, I will not reduce the share paid by high-income individuals. I know that you and your running mate keep saying that, and I know it's a popular thing to say with a lot of people, but it's just not the case. Look, I've got five boys. I'm used to people saying something that's not always true, but just keep on repeating it and ultimately hoping I'll believe it. (Laughter.) But that is not the case, all right? I will not reduce the taxes paid by high-income Americans.

And number three, I will not, under any circumstances, raise taxes on middle-income families. I will lower taxes on middle-income families. Now, you cite a study. There are six other studies that looked at the study you described and say it's completely wrong. I saw a study that came out today that said you're going to raise taxes by $3,000 to $4,000 on middle-income families. There are all these studies out there.

But let's get to the bottom line. That is, I want to bring down rates. I want to bring the rates down, at the same time, lower deductions and exemptions and credits and so forth, so we keep getting the revenue we need. And you think, well, then why lower the rates? And the reason is, because small business pays that individual rate. Fifty-four percent of America's workers work in businesses that are taxed not at the corporate tax rate, but at the individual tax rate. And if we lower that rate, they will be able to hire more people.

For me, this is about jobs. This is about getting jobs for the American people.

MR. LEHRER: All right, that's where we started. Yes.

Do you challenge what the Governor just said about his own plan?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, for 18 months, he's been running on this tax plan. And now, five weeks before the election, he's saying that his big, bold idea is "never mind." And the fact is that if you are lowering the rates the way you described, Governor, then it is not possible to come up with enough deductions and loopholes that only affect high-income individuals to avoid either raising the deficit or burdening the middle class. It's math. It's arithmetic.

Now, Governor Romney and I do share a deep interest in encouraging small business growth. So at the same time that my tax plan has already lowered taxes for 98 percent of families, I also lowered taxes for small business 18 times. And what I want to do is continue the tax rates -- the tax cuts that we put into place for small businesses and families.

But I have said that for incomes over $250,000 a year that we should go back to the rates that we had when Bill Clinton was President, when we created 23 million new jobs, went from deficit to surplus, and created a whole lot of millionaires to boot. And the reason this is important is because by doing that, we can not only reduce the deficit, we can not only encourage job growth through small businesses, but we're also able to make the investments that are necessary in education or in energy.

And we do have a difference, though, when it comes to definitions of small business. Under my plan, 97 percent of small businesses would not see their income taxes go up. Governor Romney says, well, those top 3 percent, they're the job creators, they'd be burdened. But under Governor Romney's definition, there are a whole bunch of millionaires and billionaires who are small businesses. Donald Trump is a small business -- and I know Donald Trump doesn't like to think of himself as small anything. But that's how you define small businesses if you're getting business income.

And that kind of approach, I believe, will not grow our economy because the only way to pay for it without either burdening the middle class or blowing up our deficit is to make drastic cuts in things like education, making sure that we are continuing to invest in basic science and research -- all the things that are helping America grow. And I think that would be a mistake.

MR. LEHRER: All right.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Jim, let me just come back on that point, which is these --

MR. LEHRER: Just for the record --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- small businesses we're talking about --

MR. LEHRER: Excuse me, just so everybody understands, we're way over our first 15 minutes.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: It's fun, isn't it?

MR. LEHRER: It's okay. It's great.

THE PRESIDENT: That's okay.

MR. LEHRER: Great, no problem. As long as you all don't have a problem, I don't have a problem.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: That's good.

MR. LEHRER: Because we're still on the economy. We're going to come back to taxes, and we're going to move on to the deficit and a lot of other things, too. But go ahead, sir.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: You bet. President, you're -- Mr. President, you're absolutely right, which is that with regards to 97 percent of the businesses are not taxed at the 35 percent tax rate, they're taxed at a lower rate. But those businesses that are in the last 3 percent of businesses happen to employ half -- half -- of all the people who work in small business. Those are the businesses that employ one-quarter of all the workers in America. And your plan is to take their tax rate from 35 percent to 40 percent.

Now, I talked to a guy who has a very small business. He's in the electronics business in St. Louis. He has four employees. He said he and his son calculated how much they pay in taxes -- federal income tax, federal payroll tax, state income tax, state sales tax, state property tax, gasoline tax. It added up to well over 50 percent of what they earned. And your plan is to take the tax rate on successful small businesses from 35 percent to 40 percent. The National Federation of Independent Businesses has said that will cost 700,000 jobs.

I don't want to cost jobs. My priority is jobs. And so what I do is I bring down the tax rates, lower deductions and exemptions -- the same idea behind Bowles-Simpson, by the way. Get the rates down, lower deductions and exemptions to create more jobs, because there's nothing better for getting us to a balanced budget than having more people working, earning more money, paying more taxes. That's by far the most effective and efficient way to get this budget balanced.

THE PRESIDENT: Jim, you may want to move on to another topic, but I would just say this to the American people: If you believe that we can cut taxes by $5 trillion and add $2 trillion in additional spending that the military is not asking for -- $7 trillion -- just to give you a sense, over 10 years, that's more than our entire defense budget -- and you think that by closing loopholes and deductions for the well-to-do, somehow you will not end up picking up the tab, then Governor Romney's plan may work for you.

But I think math, common sense, and our history shows us that's not a recipe for job growth. Look, we've tried this -- we've tried both approaches. The approach that Governor Romney is talking about is the same sales pitch that was made in 2001 and 2003. And we ended up with the slowest job growth in 50 years. We ended up moving from surplus to deficits, and it all culminated in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression.

Bill Clinton tried the approach that I'm talking about. We created 23 million new jobs. We went from deficit to surplus. And businesses did very well. So in some ways we've got some data on which approach is more likely to create jobs and opportunity for Americans. And I believe that the economy works best when middle-class families are getting tax breaks so that they've got some money in their pockets, and those of us who have done extraordinarily well because of this magnificent country that we live in, that we can afford to do a little bit more to make sure we're not blowing up the deficit.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: The President began this segment, so I think I get the last word. So I'm going to take it.

MR. LEHRER: You're going to get the first part in the next segment.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: But he gets the first word of that segment. I get the last word of that segment -- well, I hope -- let me just make this comment.

MR. LEHRER: That's not how it works.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Let me repeat what I said. I'm not in favor of a $5 trillion tax cut. That's not my plan. My plan is not to put in place any tax cut that will add to the deficit. That's point one. So you may keep referring to the $5 trillion tax cut, but that's not my plan.

Number two, let's look at history. My plan is not like anything that's been tried before. My plan is to bring down rates but also bring down deductions and exemptions and credits at the same time, so the revenue stays in, but that we bring down rates to get more people working. My priority is putting people back to work in America. They're suffering in this country.

And we talk about evidence. Look at the evidence of the last four years. It's absolutely extraordinary. We've got 23 million people out of work or stopped looking for work in this country. It's just -- we've got -- when the President took office, 32 million people on food stamps; 47 million on food stamps today; economic growth this year slower than last year; and last year slower than the year before. Going forward with the status quo is not going to cut it for the American people who are struggling today.

MR. LEHRER: All right, let's talk -- we're still on the economy. This is theoretically now a second segment, still on the economy, and specifically on what to do about the federal deficit, the federal debt. And the question -- you each have two minutes on this. And Governor Romney, you go first because the President went first on segment one.

And the question is this: What are the differences between the two of you as to how you would go about tackling the deficit problem in this country?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Good, I'm glad you raised that, and it's a critical issue. I think it's not just an economic issue. I think it's a moral issue. I think it's, frankly, not moral for my generation to keep spending massively more than we take in, knowing those burdens are going to be passed on to the next generation, and they're going to be paying the interest and the principal all their lives. And the amount of debt we're adding, at a trillion a year, is simply not moral.

So how do we deal with it? Well, mathematically, there are three ways that you can cut a deficit. One, of course, is to raise taxes. Number two is to cut spending. And number three is to grow the economy, because if more people work in a growing economy, they're paying taxes and you can get the job done that way.

The President would prefer raising taxes. I understand. The problem with raising taxes is that it slows down the rate of growth, and you can never quite get the job done. I want to lower spending and encourage economic growth at the same time.

What things would I cut from spending? Well, first of all, I will eliminate all programs by this test if they don't pass it: Is the program so critical it's worth borrowing money from China to pay for it? And if not, I'll get rid of it. Obamacare is on my list. I apologize, Mr. President. I use that term with all respect.

THE PRESIDENT: I like it.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Okay, good. So I'll get rid of that. I'm sorry, Jim, I'm going to stop the subsidy to PBS. I'm going to stop other things. I like PBS. I love Big Bird. I actually like you, too. But I'm not going to keep on spending money on things to borrow money from China to pay for it. That's number one.

Number two, I'll take programs that are currently good programs but I think could be run more efficiently at the state level and send them to the state.

Number three, I'll make government more efficient and cut back the number of employees, combine some agencies and departments. My cutbacks will be done through attrition, by the way.

This is the approach we have to take to get America to a balanced budget. The President said he'd cut the deficit in half. Unfortunately, he doubled it -- trillion-dollar deficits for the last four years. The President has put in place as much public debt -- almost as much debt held by the public as all prior Presidents combined.

MR. LEHRER: Mr. President, two minutes.

THE PRESIDENT: When I walked into the Oval Office I had more than a trillion-dollar deficit greeting me, and we know where it came from: two wars that were paid for on a credit card, two tax cuts that were not paid for, and a whole bunch of programs that were not paid for, and then a massive economic crisis.

And despite that, what we've said is, yes, we had to take some initial emergency measures to make sure we didn't slip into a Great Depression, but what we've also said is let's make sure that we are cutting out those things that are not helping us grow. So 77 government programs, everything from aircrafts that the Air Force had ordered but weren't working very well, 18 government programs for education that were well intentioned but weren't helping kids learn.

We went after medical fraud in Medicare and Medicaid very aggressively, more aggressively than ever before, and have saved tens of billions of dollars -- $50 billion of waste taken out of the system. And I worked with Democrats and Republicans to cut a trillion dollars out of our discretionary domestic budget. That's the largest cut in the discretionary domestic budget since Dwight Eisenhower.

Now, we all know that we've got to do more, and so I put forward a specific $4 trillion deficit reduction plan. It's on a website, you can look at all the numbers -- what cuts we make and what revenue we raise. And the way we do it is $2.50 for every cut we ask for $1 of additional revenue paid for, as I indicated earlier, by asking those of us who have done very well in this country to contribute a little bit more to reduce the deficit.

Governor Romney earlier mentioned the Bowles-Simpson commission. Well, that's how the commission -- bipartisan commission that talked about how we should move forward, suggested we have to do it -- in a balanced way with some revenue and some spending cuts. And this is a major difference that Governor Romney and I have. Let me just finish this point because you're looking for contrast.

When Governor Romney stood on a stage with other Republican candidates for the nomination, and he was asked, would you take $10 of spending cuts for just $1 of revenue? And he said no. Now, if you take such an unbalanced approach, then that means you are going to be gutting our investments in schools and education. It means that -- Governor Romney talked about Medicaid and how we could send it back to the states, but effectively, this means a 30 percent cut in the primary program we help for seniors who are in nursing homes, for kids who are with disabilities. And that is not a right strategy for us to move forward.

MR. LEHRER: Way over the two minutes.

THE PRESIDENT: Sorry.

MR. LEHRER: Governor, what about Simpson-Bowles? Will you support Simpson-Bowles?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Simpson-Bowles, the President should have grabbed that.

MR. LEHRER: I mean do you support Simpson-Bowles?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I have my own plan. It's not the same as Simpson-Bowles. But in my view, the President should have grabbed it. If you wanted to make some adjustments to it, take it, go to Congress, fight for it.

THE PRESIDENT: That's what we've done, made some adjustments to it, and we're putting it forward before Congress right now -- a $4 trillion plan --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: But you've been -- but you've been President four years --

THE PRESIDENT: -- a balanced --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: You've been President four years. You said you'd cut the deficit in half. It's now four years later; we still have trillion-dollar deficits. The CBO says we'll have a trillion-dollar deficit each of the next four years. If you're reelected we'll get to a trillion-dollar debt. But you have said before you'd cut the deficit in half. And I love this idea of $4 trillion in cuts -- you found $4 trillion of ways to reduce or to get closer to a balanced budget, except we still show trillion-dollar deficits every year. That doesn't get the job done.

Let me come back and say, why is that I don't want to raise taxes? Why don't I want to raise taxes on people? And actually you said it. Back in 2010, you said, look, I'm going to extend the tax policies that we have. Now, I'm not going to raise taxes on anyone because when the economy is growing slow like this, when we're in recession, you shouldn't raise taxes on anyone. Well, the economy is still going slow. As a matter of fact, it's growing much more slowly now than when you made that statement. And so if you believe the same thing, you just don't want to raise taxes on people.

And the reality is, it's not just wealthy people -- you mentioned Donald Trump -- it's not just Donald Trump you're taxing. It's all those businesses that employ one-quarter of the workers in America, these small businesses that are taxed as individuals. You raise taxes and you kill jobs. That's why the National Federation of Independent Businesses said your plan will kill 700,000 jobs. I don't want to kill jobs in this environment.

I'll make one more point.

MR. LEHRER: Let's let him answer the taxes thing for a moment.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Okay.

MR. LEHRER: Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, we've had this discussion before --

MR. LEHRER: No, about the idea that in order to reduce the deficit there has to be revenue in addition to cuts.

THE PRESIDENT: There has to be revenue in addition to cuts. Now, Governor Romney has ruled out revenue. He's ruled out revenue.

MR. LEHRER: Is that --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Absolutely. Look, the revenue I get is by more people working, getting higher pay, paying more taxes. That's how we get growth and how we balance the budget. But the idea of taxing people more, putting more people out of work, you'll never get there. You never balance the budget by raising taxes. Spain -- Spain spends 42 percent of their total economy on government. We're now spending 42 percent of our economy on government. I don't want to go down the path of Spain. I want to go down the path of growth that puts Americans to work with more money coming in because they're working.

MR. LEHRER: But, Mr. President, you're saying in order to get the job done, it's got to be balanced.

THE PRESIDENT: If we're serious, we've got to take a balanced, responsible approach. And by the way, this is not just when it comes to individual taxes. Let's talk about corporate taxes. Now, I've identified areas where we can right away make a change that I believe would actually help the economy. The oil industry gets $4 billion a year in corporate welfare. Basically, they get deductions that those small businesses that Governor Romney refers to, they don't get. Now, does anybody think that Exxon Mobil needs some extra money when they're making money every time you go to the pump?

Why wouldn't we want to eliminate that? Why wouldn't we eliminate tax breaks for corporate jets? My attitude is if you got a corporate jet, you can probably afford to pay full freight, not get a special break for it.

When it comes to corporate taxes, Governor Romney has said he wants to in a revenue-neutral way close loopholes, deductions -- he hasn't identified which ones they are -- but thereby bring down the corporate rate. Well, I want to do the same thing, but I've actually identified how we can do that. And part of the way to do it is to not give tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Right now you can actually take a deduction for moving a plant overseas. I think most Americans would say that doesn't make sense. And all that raises revenue.

And so if we take a balanced approach, what that then allows us to do is also to help young people, the way we already have during my administration, make sure that they can afford to go to college. It means that the teacher that I met in Las Vegas, a wonderful young lady, who describes to me she's got 42 kids in her class. The first two weeks, she's got some of them sitting on the floor until finally they get reassigned. They're using textbooks that are 10 years old. That is not a recipe for growth. That's not how America was built.

And so budgets reflect choices. Ultimately, we're going to have to make some decisions. And if we're asking for no revenue, then that means that we've got to get rid of a whole bunch of stuff. And the magnitude of the tax cuts that you're talking about, Governor, would end up resulting in severe hardship for people, but more importantly, would not help us grow.

As I indicated before, when you talk about shifting Medicaid to states, we're talking about potentially a 30-percent cut in Medicaid over time. Now, that may not seem like a big deal when it just is numbers on a sheet of paper. But if we're talking about a family who's got an autistic kid and is depending on that Medicaid, that's a big problem. And governors are creative, there's no doubt about it. But they're not creative enough to make up for 30 percent of revenue on something like Medicaid. What ends up happening is some people end up not getting help.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Jim, we've gone on a lot of topics there. And so it's going to take a minute to go from Medicaid to schools --

MR. LEHRER: Come back to Medicaid, yes.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- to oil to tax breaks and companies going overseas. So let's go through them one by one.

First of all, the Department of Energy has said the tax break for oil companies is $2.8 billion a year. And it's actually an accounting treatment, as you know, that's been in place for a hundred years.

THE PRESIDENT: It's time to end it.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: And in one year, you provided $90 billion in breaks to the green-energy world. Now, I like green energy as well, but that's about 50 years' worth of what oil and gas receives. And you say Exxon and Mobil, actually those $2.8 billion goes largely to small companies, to drilling operators and so forth.

But you know if we get that tax rate from 35 percent down to 25 percent, why, that $2.8 billion is on the table. Of course it's on the table. That's probably not going to survive if you get that rate down to 25 percent. But don't forget, you put $90 billion -- like 50 years' worth of breaks -- into solar and wind -- to Solyndra and Fisker and Tesla and Ener1. I mean, I had a friend who said you don't just pick the winners and losers, you pick the losers. So this is not the kind of policy you want to have if you want to get America energy secure.

The second topic, which is you said you get a deduction for taking a plant overseas -- look, I've been in business for 25 years. I have no idea what you're talking about. I maybe need to get a new accountant. But the idea that you get a break for shipping jobs overseas is simply not the case. What we do have right now is a setting where I'd like to bring money from overseas back to this country.

And finally, Medicaid to states -- I'm not quite sure where that came in except this, which is I would like to take the Medicaid dollars that go to states and say to a state, you're going to get what you got last year plus inflation, plus 1 percent. And then, you're going to manage your care for your poor in the way you think best.

And I remember as a governor, when this idea was floated by Tommy Thompson, the governors -- Republican and Democrats -- said, please let us do that. We can care for our own poor in so much better and more effective a way than having the federal government tell us how to care for our poor.

One of the magnificent things about this country is the whole idea that states are the laboratories of democracy. Don't have the federal government tell everybody what kind of training programs they have to have and what kind of Medicaid they have to have. Let states do this. And, by the way, if a state gets in trouble, well, we could step in and see if we could find a way to help them.

MR. LEHRER: Let's go.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: But the right approach is one which relies on the brilliance of our people and states, not the federal government.

MR. LEHRER: We're going on -- still on the economy, but another part of it. All right, this is segment three, the economy. Entitlements, first answer goes to you -- two minutes, Mr. President. Do you see a major difference between the two of you on Social Security?

THE PRESIDENT: I suspect that on Social Security we've got a somewhat similar position. Social Security is structurally sound. It's going to have to be tweaked the way it was by Ronald Reagan and Democratic Speaker Tip O'Neill. But the basic structure is sound.

But I want to talk about the values behind Social Security and Medicare, and then talk about Medicare because that's the big driver of our deficits right now.

My grandmother, some of you know, helped to raise me -- my grandparents did. My grandfather died a while back. My grandmother died three days before I was elected President. And she was fiercely independent. She worked her way up -- only had a high school education, started as a secretary, ended up being the vice president of a local bank. And she ended up living alone by choice. And the reason she could be independent was because of Social Security and Medicare.

She had worked all her life, put in this money, and understood that there was a basic guarantee, a floor under which she could not go. And that's the perspective I bring when I think about what's called entitlements. The name itself implies some sense of dependency on the part of these folks. These are folks who've worked hard, like my grandmother, and there are millions of people out there who are counting on this.

So my approach is to say, how do we strengthen the system over the long term. And in Medicare, what we did was we said we are going to have to bring down the costs if we're going to deal with our long-term deficits, but to do that let's look where some of the money is going -- $716 billion we were able to save from the Medicare program by no longer overpaying insurance companies, by making sure that we weren't overpaying providers, and using that money we were actually able to lower prescription drug costs for seniors by an average of $600, and we were also able to make a significant dent in providing them the kind of preventive care that will ultimately save money throughout the system.

So the way for us to deal with Medicare in particular is to lower health care costs. When it comes to Social Security, as I said, you don't need a major structural change in order to make sure that Social Security is there for the future.

MR. LEHRER: We'll follow up on this. First, Governor Romney, you have two minutes on Social Security and entitlements.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, Jim, our seniors depend on these programs, and I know any time we talk about entitlements people become concerned that something is going to happen that's going to change their life for the worse. And the answer is, neither the President, nor I are proposing any changes for any current retirees or near-retirees, either to Social Security or Medicare. So if you're 60 or around 60 or older, you don't need to listen any further.

But for younger people we need to talk about what changes are going to be occurring -- oh, I just thought about one, and that is in fact I was wrong when I said the President isn't proposing any changes for current retirees. In fact, he is on Medicare. On Social Security he's not. But on Medicare, for current retirees, he's cutting $716 billion from the program -- now, he says by not overpaying hospitals and providers, actually, just going to them and saying we're going to reduce the rates you get paid across the board, everybody is going to get a lower rate. That saying we're cutting the rates. Some 15 percent of hospitals and nursing homes say they won't take any more Medicare patients under that scenario. We also have 50 percent of doctors who say they won't take more Medicare patients.

We have 4 million people on Medicare Advantage that will lose Medicare Advantage because of those $716 billion in cuts. I can't understand how you can cut Medicare $716 billion for current recipients in Medicare. Now, you point out, well, we're putting some back, we're going to give a better prescription program. That's $1 for every $15 you've cut. They're smart enough to know that's not a good trade.

I want to take that $716 billion you've cut and put it back into Medicare. By the way, we can include a prescription program if we need to improve it. But the idea of cutting $716 billion from Medicare to be able to balance the additional cost of Obamacare is, in my opinion, a mistake.

With regards to young people coming along, I've got proposals to make sure Medicare and Social Security are there for them without any question.

MR. LEHRER: Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: First of all, I think it's important for Governor Romney to present this plan that he says will only affect folks in the future. And the essence of the plan is that you would turn Medicare into a voucher program. It's called Premium Support, but it's understood to be a voucher program.

MR. LEHRER: And you don't support that?

THE PRESIDENT: I don't. And let me explain why.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Again, that's for future people --

THE PRESIDENT: I understand.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- not for current retirees.

THE PRESIDENT: So if you're 54 or 55, you might want to listen, because this will affect you.

The idea, which was originally presented by Congressman Ryan, your running mate, is that we would give a voucher to seniors and they could go out in the private marketplace and buy their own health insurance. The problem is that because the voucher wouldn't necessarily keep up with health care inflation, it was estimated that this would cost the average senior about $6,000 a year.

Now, in fairness, what Governor Romney has now said is he'll maintain traditional Medicare alongside it. But there's still a problem, because what happens is those insurance companies are pretty clever at figuring out who are the younger and healthier seniors. They recruit them, leaving the older, sicker seniors in Medicare, and every health care economist who looks at it says over time what will happen is the traditional Medicare system will collapse. And then what you've got is folks like my grandmother at the mercy of the private insurance system precisely at the time when they are most in need of decent health care.

So I don't think vouchers are the right way to go. And this is not my -- only my opinion. AARP thinks that the savings that we obtained from Medicare bolstered the system, lengthened the Medicare trust fund by eight years. Benefits were not affected at all.

And ironically, if you repeal Obamacare -- and I have become fond of this term, Obamacare -- (laughter) -- if you repeal it, what happens is those seniors right away are going to be paying $600 more in prescription care. They're now going to have to be paying co-pays for basic checkups that can keep them healthier. And the primary beneficiary of that repeal are insurance companies that are estimated to gain billions of dollars back when they aren't making seniors any healthier. And I don't think that's the right approach when it comes to making sure that Medicare is stronger over the long term.

MR. LEHRER: We'll talk about -- specifically about health care in a moment. But do you support the voucher system, Governor?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: What I support is no change for current retirees and near-retirees to Medicare. And the President supports taking $716 billion out of that program.

MR. LEHRER: What about the voucher --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: So that's number one. Number two is, for people coming along that are young, what I'd do to make sure that we can keep Medicare in place for them is to allow them either to choose the current Medicare program or a private plan -- their choice. They get to -- and they'll have at least two plans that will be entirely at no cost to them. So they don't have to pay additional money, no additional $6,000 -- that's not going to happen. They'll have at least two plans.

And by the way, if the government can be as efficient as the private sector and offer premiums that are as low as the private sector, people will be happy to get traditional Medicare. Or they'll be able to get a private plan. I know my own view is I'd rather have a private plan. I know I'd just as soon not have the government telling me what kind of health care I get. I'd rather be able to have an insurance company. If I don't like them, I can get rid of them and find a different insurance company. Let people make their own choice.

The other thing we have to do to save Medicare, we have to have the benefits high for those that are low-income. But for higher-income people, we're going to have to lower some of the benefits. We have to make sure this program is there for the long term.

That's the plan that I put forward. And by the way, the idea came not even from Paul Ryan or Senator Wyden, who is a co-author of the bill with Paul Ryan in the Senate, but also it came from Bill Clinton's Chief of Staff. This is an idea that's been around a long time, which is saying, hey, let's see if we can't get competition into the Medicare world so that people can get the choice of different plans at lower cost, better quality. I believe in competition.

MR. LEHRER: Okay.

THE PRESIDENT: Jim, if I can just respond very quickly. First of all, every study has shown that Medicare has lower administrative costs than private insurance does, which is why seniors are generally pretty happy with it. And private insurers have to make a profit. Nothing wrong with that, that's what they do. And so you've got higher administrative costs, plus profit on top of that, and if you are going to save any money through what Governor Romney is proposing, what has to happen is, is that the money has to come from somewhere.

And when you move to a voucher system, you are putting seniors at the mercy of those insurance companies. And over time, if traditional Medicare has decayed or fallen apart, then they're stuck. And this is the reason why AARP has said that your plan would weaken Medicare substantially. And that's why they were supportive of the approach that we took.

One last point I want to make: We do have to lower the cost of health care, not just in Medicare, but --

MR. LEHRER: We'll talk about that in a minute.

THE PRESIDENT: -- but overall.

MR. LEHRER: Okay.

THE PRESIDENT: And so --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: That's a big topic. Can we stay on Medicare?

THE PRESIDENT: Is that a separate topic?

MR. LEHRER: Yes, we're going to -- yes, I want to get to it.

THE PRESIDENT: I'm sorry.

MR. LEHRER: But all I want to do is very quickly before we leave the economy --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Let's get back to Medicare. Let's get back to Medicare.

MR. LEHRER: Governor --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: The President said that the government can provide the service at lower cost and without a profit.

MR. LEHRER: All right.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: If that's the case, then it will always be the best product that people can purchase.

MR. LEHRER: Wait a minute, Governor. Wait a minute.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: But my experience -- my experience is the private sector typically is able to provide a better product at a lower cost.

MR. LEHRER: Can we -- can the two of you agree that the voters have a choice, a clear choice between the two of you on Medicare?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Absolutely.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Absolutely.

MR. LEHRER: All right. So, to finish quickly, briefly on the economy, what is your view about the level of federal regulation of the economy right now? Is there too much? And in your case, Mr. President, is there -- should there be more? Beginning with you -- this is not a new two-minute segment. Just start, and we'll go for a few minutes, and then we're going to go to health care, okay?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Regulation is essential. You can't have a free market work if you don't have regulation. As a businessperson, I had to have -- I needed to know the regulations. I needed them there. You could have people opening up banks in their garage and making loans. You have to have regulations so that you can have an economy work. Every free economy has good regulation. At the same time, regulation can become excessive.

MR. LEHRER: Is it excessive now, do you think?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: In some places, yes.

MR. LEHRER: Like where? Let me know.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Other places no. It can become out of date. And what's happened with some of the legislation that's been passed during the President's term, you've seen regulation become excessive and it's hurt the -- it's hurt the economy.

Let me give you an example. Dodd-Frank was passed, and it includes within it a number of provisions that I think has some unintended consequences that are harmful to the economy. One is it designates a number of banks as "too big to fail," and they're effectively guaranteed by the federal government. This is the biggest kiss that's been given to New York banks I've ever seen. This is an enormous boon for them. There have been -- 122 community and small banks have closed since Dodd-Frank. So there's one example.

Here's another. In Dodd-Frank, it says if --

MR. LEHRER: You want to repeal Dodd-Frank?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, I would repeal it and replace it. We're not going to get rid of all regulation. You have to have regulation, and there are some parts of Dodd-Frank that make all the sense in the world. You need transparency. You need to have leverage limits for institutional --

MR. LEHRER: Well, there's a specific --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: But let's -- but let's mention --

MR. LEHRER: Excuse me --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Let me mention the other one. Let's talk the other big one.

MR. LEHRER: No, let's not.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Okay.

MR. LEHRER: Let's let him respond -- let's let him respond to this specific on Dodd-Frank and what the Governor just said.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, I think this is a great example. The reason we have been in such a enormous economic crisis was prompted by reckless behavior across the board. Now, it wasn't just on Wall Street. You had loan officers that were giving loans and mortgages that really shouldn't have been given because the folks didn't qualify. You had people who were borrowing money to buy a house that they couldn't afford. You had credit agencies that were stamping these as A-1, great investments when they weren't. But you also had banks making money hand over fist, churning out products that the bankers themselves didn't even understand, in order to make big profits, but knowing that it made the entire system vulnerable.

So what did we do? We stepped in and had the toughest reforms on Wall Street since the 1930s. We said you've got -- banks, you've got to raise your capital requirements. You can't engage in some of this risky behavior that is putting Main Street at risk. We're going to make sure that you've got to have a living will, so we can know how you're going to wind things down if you make a bad bet so we don't have other taxpayer bailouts.

In the meantime, by the way, we also made sure that all the help that we provided those banks was paid back -- every single dime -- with interest.

Now, Governor Romney has said he wants to repeal Dodd-Frank, and I appreciate and it appears we've got some agreement that a marketplace, to work, has to have some regulation. But in the past, Governor Romney has said he just wants to repeal Dodd-Frank. Roll it back. And so the question is does anybody out there think that the big problem we had is that there was too much oversight and regulation of Wall Street? Because if you do, then Governor Romney is your candidate. But that's not what I believe.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Sorry, Jim, but that's just not the facts. Look, we have to have regulation on Wall Street. That's why I'd have regulation. But I wouldn't designate five banks as too big to fail and give them a blank check. That's one of the unintended consequences of Dodd-Frank. It wasn't thought through properly. We need to get rid of that provision because it's killing regional and small banks. They're getting hurt.

Let me mention another regulation in Dodd-Frank. You say we were giving mortgages to people who weren't qualified. That's exactly right. It's one of the reasons for the great financial calamity we had. And so Dodd-Frank correctly says we need to have qualified mortgages, and if you give a mortgage that's not qualified, there are big penalties -- except they didn't ever go on to define what a qualified mortgage was. It's been two years. We don't know what a qualified mortgage is yet.

So banks are reluctant to make loans, mortgages. Try and get a mortgage these days. It's hurt the housing market, because Dodd-Frank didn't anticipate putting in place the kinds of regulations you have to have. It's not that Dodd-Frank always was wrong with too much regulation. Sometimes they didn't come out with a clear regulation.

I will make sure we don't hurt the functioning of our marketplace and our businesses, because I want to bring back housing and get good jobs.

MR. LEHRER: All right. I think we have another clear difference between the two of you. Now let's move to health care, where I know there is a clear difference, and that has to do with the Affordable Care Act -- Obamacare. And it's a two-minute new segment, and that means two minutes each. And you go first, Governor Romney. You want it repealed. You want the Affordable Care Act repealed. Why?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I sure do. Well, in part it comes, again, from my experience. I was in New Hampshire; a woman came to me and she said, look, I can't afford insurance for myself or my son. I met a couple in Appleton, Wisconsin, and they said, we're thinking of dropping our insurance -- we can't afford it. And the number of small businesses I've gone to that are saying they're dropping insurance because they can't afford it -- the cost of health care is just prohibitive, and we've got to deal with cost.

And unfortunately, when you look at Obamacare, the Congressional Budget Office has said it will cost $2,500 a year more than traditional insurance. So it's adding to cost. And as a matter of fact, when the President ran for office, he said that by this year he would have brought down the cost of insurance for each family by $2,500 a family. Instead, it's gone up by that amount. So it's expensive. Expensive things hurt families. So that's one reason I don't want it.

Second reason, it cuts $716 billion from Medicare to pay for it. I want to put that money back in Medicare for our seniors.

Number three, it puts in place an unelected board that's going to tell people ultimately what kind of treatments they can have. I don't like that idea.

Fourth, there was a survey done of small businesses across the country. It said, what's been the effect of Obamacare on your hiring plans? And three-quarters of them said, it makes us less likely to hire people. I just don't know how the President could have come into office, facing 23 million people out of work, rising unemployment, an economic crisis at the kitchen table, and spend his energy and passion for two years fighting for Obamacare instead of fighting for jobs for the American people. It has killed jobs.

And the best course for health care is to do what we did in my state -- craft a plan at the state level that fits the needs of the state, and then let's focus on getting the cost down for people rather than raising it with a $2,500 additional premium.

MR. LEHRER: Mr. President, the argument against repeal.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, four years ago when I was running for office, I was traveling around and having those same conversations that Governor Romney talks about. And it wasn't just that small businesses were seeing costs skyrocket and they couldn't get affordable coverage even if they wanted to provide it to their employees. It wasn't just that this was the biggest driver of our federal deficit, our overall health care cost. But it was families who were worried about going bankrupt if they got sick -- millions of families all across the country.

If they had a preexisting condition, they might not be able to get coverage at all. If they did have coverage, insurance companies might impose an arbitrary limit. And so, as a consequence, they're paying their premiums; somebody gets really sick, lo and behold, they don't have enough money to pay the bills because the insurance companies say that they've hit the limit.

So we did work on this, alongside working on jobs, because this is part of making sure that middle-class families are secure in this country. And let me tell you exactly what Obamacare did. Number one, if you've got health insurance it doesn't mean a government takeover. You keep your own insurance. You keep your own doctor. But it does say insurance companies can't jerk you around. They can't impose arbitrary lifetime limits. They have to let you keep your kid on your insurance plan until you're 26 years old. And it also says that you're going to have to get rebates if insurance companies are spending more on administrative costs and profits than they are on actual care.

Number two, if you don't have health insurance, we're essentially setting up a group plan that allows you to benefit from group rates that are typically 18 percent lower than if you're out there trying to get insurance on the individual market.

Now, the last point I'd make before --

MR. LEHRER: Two minutes is up, sir.

THE PRESIDENT: No, I think -- I had five seconds before you interrupted me. (Laughter.) The irony is that we've seen this model work really well in Massachusetts, because Governor Romney did a good thing, working with Democrats in the state, to set up what is essentially the identical model. And as consequence, people are covered there. It hasn't destroyed jobs. And as a consequence, we now have a system in which we have the opportunity to start bringing down costs, as opposed to just leaving millions of people out in the cold.

MR. LEHRER: Your five seconds went away a long time ago. (Laughter.)

All right, Governor, tell the President directly why you think what he just said is wrong about Obamacare.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, I did with my first statement --

THE PRESIDENT: You did.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- I'll go on.

THE PRESIDENT: Please elaborate.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I'll elaborate -- exactly right. (Laughter.)

First of all, I like the way we did it in Massachusetts. I like the fact that in my state we had Republicans and Democrats come together and work together. What you did instead was to push through a plan without a single Republican vote. As a matter of fact, when Massachusetts did something quite extraordinary -- elected a Republican senator -- to stop Obamacare, you pushed it through anyway. So entirely on a partisan basis, instead of bringing America together and having a discussion on this important topic, you pushed through something that you and Nancy Pelosi and Harry Reid thought was the best answer, and drove it through.

What we did in a legislature 87 percent Democrat, we worked together. Two hundred legislators in my legislature -- only two voted against the plan by the time we were finished.

What were some differences? We didn't raise taxes. You've raised them by a trillion dollars under Obamacare. We didn't cut Medicare -- of course, we don't have Medicare -- but we didn't cut Medicare by $716 billion. We didn't put in place a board that can tell people ultimately what treatments they're going to receive. We didn't also do something that I think a number of people across this country recognize, which is put people in a position where they're going to lose the insurance they had and they wanted.

Right now the CBO says up to 20 million people will lose their insurance as Obamacare goes into effect next year. And likewise, a study by McKinsey and Company, of American Businesses, said 30 percent of them are anticipating dropping people from coverage.

So for those reasons -- for the tax, for Medicare, for this board, and for people losing their insurance -- this is why the American people don't want Medicare -- don't want Obamacare. It's why Republicans said, do not do this. And the Republicans had a plan. They put a plan out. They put a plan, a bipartisan plan. It was swept aside. I think something this big, this important, has to be done on a bipartisan basis. And we have to have a President who can reach across the aisle and fashion important legislation with the input from both parties.

THE PRESIDENT: Governor Romney said this has to be done on a bipartisan basis. This was a bipartisan idea. In fact, it was a Republican idea. And Governor Romney, at the beginning of this debate, wrote and said, what we did in Massachusetts could be a model for the nation.

And I agree that the Democratic legislators in Massachusetts might have given some advice to Republicans in Congress about how to cooperate, but the fact of the matter is we used the same advisors and they say it's the same plan.

When Governor Romney talks about this board, for example -- unelected board that we've created -- what this is, is a group of health care experts, doctors, et cetera, to figure out how can we reduce the cost of care in the system overall. Because there are two ways of dealing with our health care crisis. One is to simply leave a whole bunch of people uninsured, and let them fend for themselves; to let businesses figure out how long they can continue to pay premiums until finally they just give up and their workers are no longer getting insured -- and that's been the trend line. Or alternatively, we can figure out how do we make the cost of care more effective. And there are ways of doing it.

So at Cleveland Clinic, one of the best health care systems in the world, they actually provide great care, cheaper than average. And the reason they do is because they do some smart things. They say if a patient is coming in, let's get all the doctors together at once, do one test, instead of having the patient run around with 10 tests. Let's make sure that we're providing preventive care, so we're catching the onset of something like diabetes. Let's pay providers on the basis of performance, as opposed to on the basis of how many procedures they've engaged in.

Now, so what this board does is basically identifies best practices and says let's use the purchasing power of Medicare and Medicaid to help to institutionalize all these good things that we do.

And the fact of the matter is that when Obamacare is fully implemented, we're going to be in a position to show that costs are going down. And over the last two years, health care premiums have gone up, it's true, but they've gone up slower than any time in the last 50 years. So we're already beginning to see progress. In the meantime, folks out there with insurance, you're already getting a rebate.

Let me make one last point. Governor Romney says we should replace it -- I'm just going to repeal it, but we can replace it with something. But the problem is he hasn't described what exactly we'd replace it with, other than saying we're going to leave it to the states. But the fact of the matter is that some of the prescriptions that he's offered, like letting you buy insurance across state lines, there's no indication that that somehow is going to help somebody who has got a preexisting condition be able to finally buy insurance. In fact, it's estimated that by repealing Obamacare, you're looking at 50 million people losing health insurance at a time when it's vitally important.

MR. LEHRER: Let's let the Governor explain what you would do if Obamacare is repealed. How would you replace it? What do you have in mind?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, actually, it's a lengthy description, but number one, preexisting conditions are covered under my plan. Number two, young people are able to stay on their family plan. That's already offered in the private marketplace. You don't have the government mandate that for that to occur.

But let's come back to something the President and I agree on, which is the key task we have in health care is to get the cost down so it's more affordable for families. And then he has as a model for doing that a board of people at the government -- an unelected board, appointed board -- who are going to decide what kind of treatments you ought to have.

THE PRESIDENT: No --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: In my opinion, the government is not effective in bringing down the cost of almost anything. As a matter of fact, free people and free enterprises trying to find ways to do things better are able to be more effective in bringing down the costs than the government will ever be.

Your example of the Cleveland Clinic is my case in point, along with several others I could describe. This is the private market. These are small -- these are enterprises competing with each other, learning how to do better and better jobs.

I used to consult to businesses -- excuse me, to hospitals and to health care providers. I was astonished at the creativity and innovation that exists in the American people. In order to bring the cost of health care down, we don't need to have a board of 15 people telling us what kinds of treatments we should have. We instead need to put insurance plans, providers, hospitals, doctors on target such that they have an incentive, as you say, performance pay, for doing an excellent job for keeping costs down. And that's happening -- Intermountain Health Care does it superbly well. Mayo Clinic is doing it superbly well; Cleveland clinic, others.

But the right answer is not to have the federal government take over health care and start mandating to the providers across America, telling a patient and a doctor what kind of treatment they can have. That's the wrong way to go. The private market and individual responsibility always work best.

THE PRESIDENT: Let me point out, first of all, this board that we're talking about can't make decisions about what treatments are given. That's explicitly prohibited in the law.

But let's go back to what Governor Romney indicated -- that under his plan, he would be able to cover people with preexisting conditions. Well actually, Governor, that isn't what your plan does. What your plan does is to duplicate what's already the law, which says if you are out of health insurance for three months, then you can end up getting continuous coverage and an insurance company can't deny you if it's been under 90 days.

But that's already the law. And that doesn't help the millions of people out there with preexisting conditions. There's a reason why Governor Romney set up the plan that he did in Massachusetts. It wasn't a government takeover of health care. It was the largest expansion of private insurance. But what it does say is that, insurers, you've got to take everybody. Now, that also means that you've got more customers.

But when Governor Romney says that he'll replace it with something, but can't detail how it will be, in fact, replaced -- and the reason he set up the system he did in Massachusetts was because there isn't a better way of dealing with the preexisting conditions problem -- it just reminds me of -- he says that he's going to close deductions and loopholes for his tax plan. That's how it's going to be paid for, but we don't know the details. He says that he's going to replace Dodd-Frank, Wall Street reform, but we don't know exactly which ones. He won't tell us. He now says he's going to replace Obamacare and assure that all the good things that are in it are going to be in there and you don't have to worry.

And at some point, I think the American people have to ask themselves, is the reason that Governor Romney is keeping all these plans to replace secret because they're too good? Is it because that somehow middle-class families are going to benefit too much from them? No. The reason is because when we reform Wall Street, when we tackle the problem of preexisting conditions -- these are tough problems and we've got to make choices -- and the choices we've made have been ones that ultimately are benefiting middle-class families all across the country.

MR. LEHRER: We're going to move to --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: No, I have to respond to that -- which is my experience as a governor is if I come in and lay down a piece of legislation and say it's my way or the highway, I don't get a lot done. What I do is the same way that Tip O'Neill and Ronald Reagan worked together some years ago. When Ronald Reagan ran for office, he laid out the principles that he was going to foster. He said he was going to lower tax rates. He said he was going to broaden the base. You've said the same thing -- you're going to simplify the tax code, broaden the base.

Those are my principles. I want to bring down the tax burden on middle-income families, and I'm going to work together with Congress to say, okay, what are the various ways we can bring down deductions, for instance. One way, for instance, would be to have a single number -- make up a number -- $25,000, $50,000 -- anybody could have deductions up to that amount. And then that number disappears for high-income people. That's one way one could do it.

One could follow Bowles-Simpson as a model, and tax deduction by deduction and make differences that way. There are alternatives to accomplish the objective I have, which is to bring down rates, broaden the base, simplify the code, and create incentives for growth.

And with regards to health care, you had remarkable details with regards to my preexisting condition plan. You obviously studied up on my plan. In fact, I do have a plan that deals with people with preexisting conditions; that's part of my health care plan. And what we did in Massachusetts is a model for the nation, state by state. And I said that at that time. The federal government taking over health care for the entire nation and whisking aside the 10th Amendment, which gives states the rights for these kinds of things, is not the course for America to have a stronger, more vibrant economy.

MR. LEHRER: That is a terrific segue to our next segment, and it's the role of government. And let's see, role of government, and it is -- you are first on this, Mr. President.

And the question is this: Do you believe -- both of you, but you have the first two minutes on this, Mr. President -- do you believe there's a fundamental difference between the two of you as to how you view the mission of the federal government?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, I definitely think there are differences. The first role of the federal government is to keep the American people safe. That's its most basic function. And as Commander-in-Chief, that is something that I have worked on and thought about every single day that I've been in the Oval Office.

But I also believe that government has the capacity -- the federal government has the capacity to help open up opportunity and create ladders of opportunity and to create frameworks where the American people can succeed. Look, the genius of America is the free enterprise system and freedom, and the fact that people can go out there and start a business, work on an idea, make their own decisions. But as Abraham Lincoln understood, there are also some things we do better together.

So in the middle of the Civil War, Abraham Lincoln said, let's help to finance the Trans-Continental Railroad. Let's start the National Academy of Sciences. Let's start land grant colleges -- because we want to give these gateways of opportunity for all Americans -- because if all Americans are getting opportunity, we're all going to be better off. That doesn't restrict people's freedom; that enhances it.

And so what I've tried to do as President is to apply those same principles. When it comes to education, what I've said is we've got to reform schools that are not working. We use something called Race to the Top. It wasn't a top-down approach, Governor. What we said is to states, we'll give you more money if you initiate reforms. And as a consequence you have 46 states around the country who have made a real difference.

But what I've also said is let's hire another 100,000 math and science teachers to make sure we maintain our technological lead and our people are skilled and able to succeed. And hard-pressed states right now can't all do that. In fact, we've seen layoffs of hundreds of thousands of teachers over the last several years, and Governor Romney doesn't think we need more teachers.

I do, because I think that that is the kind of investment where the federal government can help. It can't do it all, but it can make a difference. And as a consequence, we'll have a better-trained workforce, and that will create jobs because companies want to locate in places where we've got a skilled workforce.

MR. LEHRER: Two minutes, Governor, on the role of government. Your view?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, first, I love great schools. Massachusetts, our schools are ranked number one of all 50 states. And the key to great schools -- great teachers. So I reject the idea that I don't believe in great teachers or more teachers. Every school district, every state should make that decision on their own.

The role of government: Look behind us -- the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence. The role of government is to promote and protect the principles of those documents. First, life and liberty: We have a responsibility to protect the lives and liberties of our people, and that means a military second to none. I do not believe in cutting our military. I believe in maintaining the strength of America's military.

Second, in that line that says, "We are endowed by our Creator with our rights," I believe we must maintain our commitment to religious tolerance and freedom in this country. That statement also says that we are endowed by our Creator with the right to pursue happiness as we choose. I interpret that as, one, making sure that those people who are less fortunate and can't care for themselves are cared by -- by one another. We're a nation that believes that we are all children of the same God, and we care for those that have difficulties. Those that are elderly and have problems and challenges, those that are disabled, we care for them. And we look for discovery and innovation, all these things desired out of the American heart to provide the pursuit of happiness for our citizens.

But we also believe in maintaining for individuals the right to pursue their dreams and not to have the government substitute itself for the rights of free individuals. And what we're seeing right now is, in my view, a trickle-down government approach which has government thinking it can do a better job than free people pursuing their dreams, and it's not working.

And the proof of that is 23 million people out of work. The proof of that is one out of six people in poverty. The proof of that is we've gone from 32 million on food stamps to 47 million on food stamps. The proof of that is that 50 percent of college graduates this year can't find work. We know that the path we're taking is not working. It's time for a new path.

MR. LEHRER: All right, let's go through some specifics in terms of what -- how each of you views the role of government. Education -- does the federal government have a responsibility to improve the quality of public education in America?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, the primary responsibility for education is, of course, at the state and local level. But the federal government also can play a very important role. And I agree with Secretary Arne Duncan, some ideas he's put forward on Race to the Top -- not all of them, but some of them I agree with, and congratulate him for pursuing that. The federal government can get local and state schools to do a better job.

My own view, by the way, is I've added to that. I happen to believe -- I want the kids that are getting federal dollars from IDEA or Title I -- these are disabled kids or poor kids -- or lower-income kids, rather -- I want them to be able to go to the school of their choice. So all federal funds, instead of going to the state or to the school district, I'd have go, if you will, follow the child and let the parent and the child decide where to send their student.

MR. LEHRER: How do you see the federal government's responsibility to, as I say, to improve the quality of public education in this country?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, as I've indicated, I think that it has a significant role to play. Through our Race to the Top program, we've worked with Republican and Democratic governors to initiate major reforms, and they're having an impact right now.

MR. LEHRER: Do you think you have a difference with your views and those of Governor Romney about education and the federal government?

THE PRESIDENT: This is where budgets matter, because budgets reflect choices. So when Governor Romney indicates that he wants to cut taxes and potentially benefit folks like me and him, and to pay for it we're having to initiate significant cuts in federal support for education, that makes a difference.

His running mate, Congressman Ryan, put forward a budget that reflects many of the principles that Governor Romney has talked about. And it wasn't very detailed -- this seems to be a trend -- but what it did do is to, if you extrapolated how much money we're talking about, you'd look at cutting the education budget by up to 20 percent.

When it comes to community colleges, we are seeing great work done out there all over the country because we have the opportunity to train people for jobs that exist right now. And one of the things I suspect Governor Romney and I probably agree on is getting businesses to work with community colleges so that they're setting up their training programs --

MR. LEHRER: Do you agree, Governor?

THE PRESIDENT: Let me just finish the point.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Oh, sure. Oh, yes. It's, by the way, going very well in my state, by the way. Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: I suspect it will be a small agreement -- where they're partnering so that they're designing training programs and people who are going through them know that there's a job waiting for them if they complete it. That makes a big difference, but that requires some federal support.

Let me just say one final example. When it comes to making college affordable, whether it's two-year or four-year, one of the things that I did as President was we were sending $60 billion to banks and lenders as middlemen for the student loan program, even though the loans were guaranteed so there was no risk for the banks or the lenders. But they were taking billions out of the system. And we said why not cut out the middleman? And as a consequence, what we've been able to do is to provide millions more students assistance, lower or keep low interest rates on student loans.

And this is an example of where our priorities make a difference. Governor Romney, I genuinely believe cares about education, but when he tells a student that you should borrow money from your parents to go to college, that indicates the degree to which there may not be as much of a focus on the fact that folks like myself, folks like Michelle, kids probably who attend the University of Denver just don't have that option. And for us to be able to make sure that they've got that opportunity and they can walk through that door -- that is vitally important -- not just to those kids; it's how we're going to grow this economy over the long term.

MR. LEHRER: We're running out of time, gentlemen, so I think you have a chance to respond to that. Yes, Mr. Governor.

THE PRESIDENT: He has a chance.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Mr. President, you're entitled, as the President, to your own airplane and to your own house, but not to your own facts, all right? I'm not going to cut education funding. I don't have any plan to cut education funding and grants that go to people going to college. I'm planning on continuing to grow, so I'm not planning on making changes there.

But you make a very good point, which is that the place you put your money makes a pretty clear indication of where your heart is. You put $90 billion into green jobs. And, look, I'm all in favor of green energy. Ninety billion -- that would have hired two million teachers. Ninety billion dollars. And these businesses, many of them have gone out of business. I think about half of them -- of the ones that have been invested in have gone out of business. A number of them happen to be owned by people who were contributors to your campaigns.

Look, the right course for America's government -- we're talking about the role of government -- is not to become the economic player picking winners and losers, telling people what kind of health treatment they can receive, taking over the health care system that has existed in this country for a long, long time and has produced the best health records in the world. The right answer for government is to say, how do we make the private sector become more efficient and more effective? How do we get schools to be more competitive?

Let's grade them. I propose we grade our schools, so parents know which schools are succeeding and failing, so they can take their child to a school that's being more successful. I don't want to cut our commitment to education. I want to make it more effective and efficient.

And by the way, I've had that experience. I don't just talk about it. I've been there. Massachusetts schools are ranked number one in the nation. This is not because I didn't have commitment to education. It's because I care about education for all of our kids.

MR. LEHRER: All right, gentlemen --

THE PRESIDENT: Jim, I --

MR. LEHRER: Excuse me, one -- excuse me, sir. We've got -- we barely have three minutes left. I'm not going to grade the two of you and say your answers have been too long or I've done a poor job --

THE PRESIDENT: You've done a great job, Jim.

MR. LEHRER: Oh, well, no. But the fact is government -- the role of government and governing -- we've lost a pod, in other words. So we only have three minutes left in the debate before we go to your closing statements. And so I want to ask, finally here -- and remember, we've got three minutes total time here. And the question is this: Many of the legislative functions of the federal government right now are in a state of paralysis as a result of partisan gridlock. If elected, in your case -- if reelected, in your case -- what would you do about that? Governor?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Jim, I had the great experience -- it didn't seem like it at the time -- of being elected in a state where my legislature was 87 percent Democrat. And that meant I figured out -- from day one I had to get along and I had to work across the aisle to get anything done. We drove our schools to be number one in the nation. We cut taxes 19 times.

MR. LEHRER: Well, what would you do as President?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: As President, I will sit down on day one -- actually, the day after I get elected, I'll sit down with leaders, the Democrat leaders as well as Republican leaders, as we did in my state -- we met every Monday for a couple of hours, talked about the issues and the challenges in our state, in that case. We have to work on a collaborative basis, not because we're going to compromise our principles, but because there's common ground.

And the challenges America faces right now -- look, the reason I'm in this race is there are people that are really hurting today in this country. We face -- this deficit could crush the future generations. What's happening in the Middle East -- there are developments around the world that are of real concern. And Republicans and Democrats both love America, but we need to have leadership -- leadership in Washington that will actually bring people together and get the job done, and could not care less if it's a Republican or a Democrat. I've done it before. I'll do it again.

MR. LEHRER: Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, first of all, I think Governor Romney is going to have a busy first day, because he's also going to repeal Obamacare, which will not be very popular among Democrats as you're sitting down with them.

But, look, my philosophy has been I will take ideas from everybody -- Democrat or Republican -- as long as they're advancing the cause of making middle-class families stronger and giving ladders of opportunity to the middle class. That's how we cut taxes for middle-class families and small businesses. That's how we cut a trillion dollars of spending that wasn't advancing that cause. That's how we signed three trade deals into law that are helping us to double our exports and sell more American products around the world.

That's how we repealed "don't ask, don't tell." That's how we ended the war in Iraq, as I promised. And that's how we're going to wind down the war in Afghanistan. That's how we went after al Qaeda and bin Laden.

So we've seen progress even under Republican control of the House of Representatives. But, ultimately, part of being principled, part of being a leader is, A, being able to describe exactly what it is that you intend to do -- not just saying I'll sit down, you have to have a plan. Number two, what's important is occasionally you've got to say no to folks both in your own party and in the other party.

And, yes, we had some fights between me and the Republicans when they fought back against us reining in the excesses of Wall Street -- absolutely -- because that was a fight that needed to be had. When we were fighting about whether or not we were going to make sure that Americans had more security with their health insurance and they said no -- yes, that was a fight that we needed to have.

And so part of leadership and governing is both saying what it is that you are for, but also being willing to say no to some things. And I've got to tell you, Governor Romney, when it comes to his own party during the course of this campaign, has not displayed that willingness to say no to some of the more extreme parts of his party.

MR. LEHRER: That brings us to closing statements. There was a coin toss. Governor Romney, you won the toss and you elected to go last. So you have a closing two minutes, Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, Jim, I want to thank you. And I want to thank Governor Romney, because I think this was a terrific debate and I very much appreciate it. And I want to thank the University of Denver.

Four years ago, we were going through a major crisis. And, yet, my faith and confidence in the American future is undiminished. And the reason is because of its people. Because of the woman I met in North Carolina who decided at 55 to go back to school because she wanted to inspire her daughter, and now has a job from that new training that she's gotten. Because of a company in Minnesota who was willing to give up salaries and perks for their executives to make sure that they didn't lay off workers during a recession. The auto workers that you meet in Toledo or Detroit take such pride in building the best cars in the world, not just because of a paycheck, but because it gives them that sense of pride that they're helping to build America.

And so the question now is, how do we build on those strengths? And everything that I've tried to do, and everything that I'm now proposing for the next four years in terms of improving our education system or developing American energy, or making sure that we're closing loopholes for companies that are shipping jobs overseas and focusing on small businesses and companies that are creating jobs here in the United States, or closing our deficit in a responsible, balanced way that allow us to invest in our future -- all those things are designed to make sure that the American people -- their genius, their grit, their determination is channeled and they have an opportunity to succeed, and everybody is getting a fair shot and everybody is getting a fair share -- everybody is doing a fair share and everybody is playing by the same rules.

Four years ago, I said that I'm not a perfect man and I wouldn't be a perfect President. And that's probably a promise that Governor Romney thinks I've kept. But I also promised that I'd fight every single day on behalf of the American people and the middle class, and all those who are striving to get into the middle class. I've kept that promise. And if you'll vote for me, then I promise I'll fight just as hard in a second term.

MR. LEHRER: Governor Romney, your two-minute closing.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Thank you, Jim, and Mr. President. And thank you for tuning in this evening.

This is an important election, and I'm concerned about America. I'm concerned about the direction America has been taking over the last four years. I know this is bigger than an election about the two of us as individuals. It's bigger than our respective parties. It's an election about the course of America -- what kind of America do you want to have for yourself and for your children.

And there really are two very different paths that we began speaking about this evening. And over the course of this month we're going to have two more presidential debates and a vice-presidential debate -- we'll talk about those paths. But they lead in very different directions. And it's not just looking to our words that you have to take into evidence of where they go; you can look at the record.

There's no question in my mind that if the President were to be reelected you'll continue to see a middle-class squeeze, with incomes going down and prices going up. I'll get incomes up again. You'll see chronic unemployment. We've had 43 straight months with unemployment above 8 percent. If I'm President, I will create -- help create 12 million new jobs in this country with rising incomes.

If the President is reelected, Obamacare will be fully installed. In my view, that's going to mean a whole different way of life for people who counted on the insurance plan they had in the past. Many will lose it. You're going to see health premiums go up by some $2,500 per family. If I'm elected, we won't have Obamacare. We'll put in place the kind of principles that I put in my place in my own state, and allow each state to craft their own programs to get people insured, and we'll focus on getting the cost of health care down.

If the President were to be reelected, you're going to see a $716 billion cut to Medicare. You'll have 4 million people who will lose Medicare advantage. You'll have hospitals and providers that will no longer accept Medicare patients. I'll restore that $716 billion to Medicare.

And finally, military. If the President is reelected, you'll see dramatic cuts to our military. The Secretary of Defense has said these would be even devastating. I will not cut our commitment to our military. I will keep America strong and get America's middle class working again.

Thank you, Jim.

MR. LEHRER: Thank you, Governor. Thank you, Mr. President.
The next debate will be the vice-presidential event on Thursday, October 11th, at Centre College in Danville, Kentucky. For now, from the University of Denver, I'm Jim Lehrer. Thank you and good night. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AND GOVERNOR ROMNEY
IN SECOND PRESIDENTIAL DEBATE

Hofstra University
Hempstead, New York

9:00 P.M. EDT

MS. CROWLEY: Good evening from Hofstra University in Hempstead, New York. I'm Candy Crowley from CNN State of the Union.

We are here for the second Presidential Debate, a town hall sponsored by the Commission on Presidential Debates. The Gallup organization chose 82 uncommitted voters from the New York area. Their questions will drive the night. My goal is to give the conversation direction and to ensure questions get answered.

The questions are known to me and my team only. Neither the Commission, nor the candidates have seen them. I hope to get to as many questions as possible, and because I am the optimistic sort, I'm sure the candidates will oblige by keeping their answers concise and on point.

Each candidate has as much as two minutes to respond to a common question, and there will be a two-minute follow-up. The audience here in the hall has agreed to be polite and attentive -- no cheering, no booing, or outbursts of any sort.

We will set aside that agreement just this once to welcome President Barack Obama and Governor Mitt Romney. (Applause.)

Gentlemen, thank you both for joining us here tonight. We have a lot of folks who have been waiting all day to talk to you, so I want to get right to it.

Governor Romney, as you know, you won the coin toss, so the first question will go to you. And I want to turn to a first-time voter, Jeremy Epstein, who has a question for you.

Q Mr. President, Governor Romney, as a 20-year-old college student, all I hear from professors, neighbors and others is that when I graduate I'll have little chance to get employment. What can you say to reassure me, but more importantly, my parents, that I will be able to sufficiently support myself after I graduate?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Thank you, Jeremy. I appreciate your question. And thank you for being here this evening. And to all of those from Nassau County here that have come, thank you for your time. Thank you to Hofstra University and to Candy Crowley for organizing and leading this event.

Thank you, Mr. President, also for being part of this debate.

Your question is one that's being asked by college kids all over this country. I was in Pennsylvania with someone who had just graduated. This was in Philadelphia -- and she said I've got my degree, I can't find a job. I've got three part-time jobs; they're just barely enough to pay for my food and pay for an apartment. I can't begin to pay back my student loans.

So what we have to do is two things. We have to make sure that we make it easier for kids to afford college, and also make sure that when they get out of college there's a job. When I was governor of Massachusetts, to get a high school degree you had to pass an exam. If you graduated in the top quarter of your class, we gave you a John and Abigail Adams scholarship -- four years tuition-free to the college of your choice in Massachusetts that's a public institution.

I want to make sure we keep our Pell Grant program growing. We're also going to have our loan program so that people are able to afford school. But the key thing is to make sure you can get a job when you get out of school. And what's happened over the last four years has been very, very hard for America's young people.

I want you to be able to get a job. I know what it takes to get this economy going. With half of college kids graduating this year without a college -- excuse me -- without a job and without a college-level job, that's just unacceptable. And likewise, you got more and more debt on your back. So more debt and less jobs. I'm going to change that. I know what it takes to create good jobs again. I know what it takes to make sure that you have the kind of opportunity you deserve.

And kids across this country are going to recognize we're bringing back an economy. It's not going to be like the last four years. The middle class has been crushed over the last four years. And jobs have been too scarce. I know what it takes to bring them back, and I'm going to do that and make sure when you graduate -- when do you graduate?

Q 2014.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: 2014. When you come out in 2014, I presume I'm going to be president -- I'm going to make sure you get a job. Thanks, Jeremy.

Q Thank you.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Yeah, you bet.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: Jeremy, first of all, your future is bright. And the fact that you're making an investment in higher education is critical not just to you, but to the entire nation. Now, the most important thing we can do is to make sure that we are creating jobs in this country, but not just jobs -- good-paying jobs, ones that can support a family.

And what I want to do is build on the 5 million jobs that we've created over the last 30 months in the private sector alone. And there are a bunch of things that we can do to make sure your future is bright.

Number one: I want to build manufacturing jobs in this country again. When Governor Romney said we should let Detroit go bankrupt, I said, we're going to bet on American workers and the American auto industry, and it's come surging back. I want to do that in industries not just in Detroit but all across the country. And that means we change our tax code so we're giving incentives to companies that are investing here in the United States and creating jobs here. It also means we're helping them and small businesses to export all around the world to new markets.

Number two: We've got to make sure that we have the best education system in the world. And the fact that you're going to college is great, but I want everybody to get a great education. And we've worked hard to make sure that student loans are available for folks like you. But I also want to make sure that community colleges are offering slots for workers to get retrained for the jobs that are there right now, and the jobs of the future.

Number three: We've got to control our own energy. Not only oil and natural gas, which we've been investing in, but also we've got to make sure we're building the energy sources of the future -- not just thinking about next year, but 10 years from now, 20 years from now. That's why we invest in solar and wind and biofuels, energy-efficient cars.

We've got to reduce our deficit, but we've got to do it in a balanced way -- asking the wealthy to pay a little bit more along with cuts so that we can invest in education like yours. And let's take the money that we've been spending on war over the last decade to rebuild America -- roads, bridges, schools. We do those things, not only is your future going to be bright, but America's future is going to be bright as well.

MS. CROWLEY: Let me ask you for a more immediate answer, beginning with Mr. Romney. Just quickly, what can you do? We're looking at a situation where 40 percent of the unemployed have been unemployed for six months or more. They don't have the two years that Jeremy has. What about those long-term unemployed who need a job right now?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, what you're seeing in this country is 23 million people struggling to find a job and a lot of them, as you say, Candy, have been out of work for a long, long, long time. The President's policies have been exercised over the last four years and they haven't put Americans back to work. We have fewer people working today than we had when the President took office. If the -- the unemployment rate was 7.8 percent when he took office; it's 7.8 percent now. But if you calculated that unemployment rate taking back the people who dropped out of the workforce, it would be 10.7 percent.

We have not made the progress we need to make to put people back to work. That's why I put out a five-point plan that gets America 12 million new jobs in four years and rising take-home pay. It's going to help Jeremy get a job when he comes out of school. It's going to help people across the country that are unemployed right now.

And one thing that the President said, which I want to make sure that we understand -- he said that I said we should take Detroit bankrupt. And that's right. My plan was to have the company go through bankruptcy like 7-Eleven did and Macy's and Continental Airlines, and come out stronger. And I know he keeps saying, you wanted to take Detroit bankrupt. Well, the President took Detroit bankrupt. You took General Motors bankrupt. You took Chrysler bankrupt. So when you say that I wanted to take the auto industry bankrupt, you actually did.

And I think it's important to know that was a process that was necessary to get those companies back on their feet so they could start hiring more people. That was precisely what I recommended and ultimately what happened.

MS. CROWLEY: Let me give the President a chance. Go ahead.

THE PRESIDENT: Candy, what Governor Romney said just isn't true. He wanted to take them into bankruptcy without providing them any way to stay open, and we would have lost a million jobs. And don't take my word for it. Take the executives at GM and Chrysler, some of whom are Republicans, may even support Governor Romney, but they'll tell you his prescription wasn't going to work.

And Governor Romney says he's got a five-point plan. Governor Romney doesn't have a five-point plan; he has a one-point plan. And that plan is to make sure that folks at the top play by a different set of rules. That's been his philosophy in the private sector. That's been his philosophy as governor. That's been his philosophy as a presidential candidate. You can make a lot of money and pay lower tax rates than somebody who makes a lot less. You can ship jobs overseas and get tax breaks for it. You can invest in a company, bankrupt it, lay off the workers, strip away their pensions and you still make money.

That's exactly the philosophy that we've seen in place for the last decade. That's what's been squeezing middle-class families. And we have fought back for four years to get out of that mess. The last thing we need to do is to go back to the very same policies that got us there.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, the next question is going to be for you here. And Mr. Romney -- Governor Romney, they'll be plenty of chances here to go on, but I want to --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: That Detroit answer --

MS. CROWLEY: -- we have all these folks -- I will let you absolutely --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- and the rest of the answer, way off the mark.

MS. CROWLEY: Okay. You certainly will have lots of time here coming up, because I want to move you on to something that's sort of connected to cars here and go over -- and we want to get a question from Phillip DiCola (ph).

Q Your Energy Secretary, Steven Chu, has now been on record three times stating it's not policy of his department to help lower gas prices. Do you agree with Secretary Chu that this is not the job of the Energy Department?

THE PRESIDENT: The most important thing we can do is to make sure we control our own energy. So here's what I've done since I've been President. We have increased oil production to the highest levels in 16 years. Natural gas production is the highest it's been in decades. We have seen increases in coal production and coal employment.

But what I've also said is we can't just produce traditional sources of energy. We've also got to look to the future. That's why we doubled fuel-efficiency standards on cars. That means that in the middle of the next decade, any car you buy you're going to end up going twice as far on a gallon of gas. That's why we've doubled clean energy production like wind and solar and biofuels.

And all these things have contributed to us lowering our oil imports to the lowest levels in 16 years. Now, I want to build on that. And that means, yes, we still continue to open up new areas for drilling. We continue to make it a priority for us to go after natural gas. We've got potentially 600,000 jobs and a hundred years' worth of energy right beneath our feet with natural gas. And we can do it in an environmentally sound way.

But we've also got to continue to figure out how we have efficient energy, because ultimately that's how we're going to reduce demand and that's what's going to keep gas prices lower.

Now, Governor Romney will say he's got an all-of-the-above plan. But basically, his plan is to let the oil companies write the energy policies. So he's got the oil and gas part, but he doesn't have the clean energy part.

And if we're only thinking about tomorrow or the next day, and not thinking about 10 years from now, we're not going to control our own economic future. Because China, Germany -- they're making these investments. And I'm not going to cede those jobs of the future to those countries. I expect those new energy sources to be built right here in the United States. That's going to help Jeremy get a job. It's also going to make sure that you're not paying as much for gas.

MS. CROWLEY: Governor, on the subject of gas prices?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, let's look at the President's policies, all right, as opposed to the rhetoric, because we've had four years of policies being played out. And the President is right in terms of the additional oil production, but none of it came on federal land.

As a matter of fact, oil production is down 14 percent this year on federal land, and gas production is down 9 percent. Why? Because the President cut in half the number of licenses and permits for drilling on federal lands and in federal waters. So where did the increase come from? Well, a lot of it came from the Bakken Range in North Dakota. What was his participation there? The America brought a criminal action against the people drilling up there for oil -- this massive new resource we have. And what was the cause? Twenty or 25 birds were killed and they brought out a migratory bird act to go after them on a criminal basis.

Look, I want to make sure we use our oil, our coal, our gas, our nuclear, our renewables. I believe very much in our renewable capabilities -- ethanol, wind, solar -- would be an important part of our energy mix. But what we don't need is to have the President keeping us from taking advantage of oil, coal and gas. This has not been Mr. Oil or Mr. Gas or Mr. Coal. Talk to the people that are working in those industries.

I was in coal country. People grabbed my arms and say, please save my job. The head of the EPA said you can't build a coal plant, it's virtually impossible given our regulations. When the President ran for office, he said, if you build a coal plant you can go ahead, but you'll go bankrupt. That's not the right course for America. Let's take advantage of the energy resources we have as well as the energy sources for the future. And if we do that, if we do what I'm planning on doing, which is getting us energy-independent -- North America energy independence within eight years -- you're going to see manufacturing jobs come back, because our energy is low-cost. They're already beginning to come back, because of our abundant energy.

I'll get America and North America energy independent. I'll do it by more drilling, more permits and licenses. We're going to bring that pipeline in from Canada. How in the world the President said no to that pipeline I will never know. This is about bringing good jobs back for the middle class of America and that's what I'm going to do.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, let me just see if I can move you to the gist of this question, which is are we looking at the new normal? I can tell you that tomorrow morning a lot of people in Hempstead will wake up and fill up and they will find that the price of gas is over $4 a gallon. Is it within the purview of the government to bring those prices down, or are we looking at the new normal?

THE PRESIDENT: Candy, there's no doubt that world demand has gone up. But our production is going up. And we're using oil more efficiently. And very little of what Governor Romney just said is true.

We've opened up public lands. We're actually drilling more on public lands than in the previous administration -- and the previous President was an oil man. And natural gas isn't just appearing magically -- we're encouraging it and working with the industry.

And when I hear Governor Romney say he's a big coal guy -- and keep in mind, when -- Governor, when you were governor of Massachusetts, you stood in front of a coal plant and pointed at it and said, "This plant kills" -- and took great pride in shutting it down. And now suddenly you're a big champion of coal.

So what I've tried to do is be consistent. With respect to something like coal, we made the largest investment in clean-coal technology to make sure that even as we're producing more coal, we're producing it cleaner and smarter. Same thing with oil. Same thing with natural gas.

And the proof is our oil imports are down to the lowest levels in 20 years. Oil production is up; natural gas production is up; and most importantly, we're also starting to build cars that are more efficient. And that's creating jobs. That means those cars can be exported because that's the demand around the world, and it also means that it will save money in your pocketbook. That's the strategy you need, an all-of-the-above strategy, and that's what we're going to do in the next four years.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: But that's not what you've done in the last four years. That's the problem. In the last four years you cut permits and licenses on federal land and federal waters in half.

THE PRESIDENT: Not true, Governor Romney.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: So how much did you cut it by --

THE PRESIDENT: Not true.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: By how much did you cut them by then?

THE PRESIDENT: Governor, we have actually produced more oil --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: No, no, how much did you cut licenses and permits on federal land and federal waters?

THE PRESIDENT: Governor Romney, here's what we did: There were a whole bunch of oil companies --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: No, I had a question, and the question was how much did you cut them by? How much did you cut them by?

THE PRESIDENT: You want me to answer a question, I'm happy to answer the question.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: All right, and it is?

THE PRESIDENT: Here's what happened: You had a whole bunch of oil companies who had leases on public lands that they weren't using. So what we said was, you can't just sit on this for 10, 20, 30 years, decide when you want to drill, when you want to produce, when it's most profitable for you. These are public lands, so if you want to drill on public lands, you use it or you lose it. And so what we did was take away those leases, and we are now re-letting them so that we can actually make a profit.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: And production on private -- on government lands is down.

THE PRESIDENT: And production is up. No it isn't.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Production on government land of oil is down 14 percent --

THE PRESIDENT: Governor --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- and production of gas is down 9 percent.

THE PRESIDENT: -- what you're saying is just not true. It's just not true.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: It's absolutely true. Look, there's no question but that the people recognize that we have not produced more oil and gas --

THE PRESIDENT: I'll give you your time. Go ahead.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- on federal lands and in federal waters. And coal -- coal production is not up; coal jobs are not up. I was just at a coal facility where some 1,200 people lost their jobs.

The right course for America is to have a true all-of-the-above policy. I don't think anyone really believes that you're a person who's going to be pushing for oil and gas and coal. You'll get your chance in a moment. I'm still speaking.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, Governor, if you --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: And the answer is, I don't believe people think that's the case because I --

THE PRESIDENT: -- if you're asking me a question, I'm going to answer it.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: It wasn't a question.

THE PRESIDENT: Okay. All right.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: That was a statement. I don't think the American people believe that. I will fight for oil, coal and natural gas. And the proof of whether a strategy is working or not is what the price is that you're paying at the pump. If you're paying less than you paid a year or two ago, why, then, the strategy is working. But you're paying more.

When the President took office, the price of gasoline here in Nassau County was about a buck-eighty-six a gallon. Now it's four bucks a gallon. The price of electricity is up. If the President's energy policies are working, you're going to see the cost of energy come down.

I will fight to create more energy in this country to get America energy secure, and part of that is bringing in a pipeline of oil from Canada, taking advantage of the oil and coal we have here; drilling offshore in Alaska; drilling offshore in Virginia, where the people want it. Those things will get us the energy we need.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, could you address -- because we did finally get to gas prices here -- could you address what the Governor said, which is if your energy policy was working, the price of gasoline would not be $4 a gallon here. Is that true?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, think about what the Governor just said. He said, when I took office the price of gasoline was $1.80, $1.86. Why is that? Because the economy was on the verge of collapse. Because we were about to go through the worst recession since the Great Depression, as a consequence of some of the same policies that Governor Romney is now promoting.

So it's conceivable that Governor Romney could bring down gas prices, because with his policies we might be back in that same mess.

What I want to do is to create an economy that is strong and at the same time produce energy. And with respect to this pipeline that Governor Romney keeps on talking about -- we've built enough pipeline to wrap around the entire Earth once. So I'm all for pipelines. I'm all for oil production. What I'm not for is us ignoring the other half of the equation.

So, for example, on wind energy, when Governor Romney says these are imaginary jobs, when you've got thousands of people right now in Iowa, right now in Colorado, who are working, creating wind power with good-paying manufacturing jobs, and the Republican Senator in Iowa is all for it, providing tax credits to help this work. And Governor Romney says, I'm opposed; I'd get rid of it.

That's not an energy strategy for the future. And we need to win that future. And I intend to win it as President of the United States.

MS. CROWLEY: I've got to move you along. And the next question is for you.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: No, he got the first -- he actually got the first question, so I get the last question -- last answer on that one.

MS. CROWLEY: Actually in the follow-up it doesn't quite work like that. But I'm going to give you a chance here. I promise you, I'm going to. And the next question is for you, so if you want to continue on. But I don't want to leave all these guys sitting here.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Candy, I don't have a policy of stopping wind jobs in Iowa. And they're not phantom jobs, they're real jobs. I appreciate wind jobs in Iowa and across our country. I appreciate the jobs in coal and oil and gas.

MS. CROWLEY: Okay, thank you --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I'm going to make sure that taking advantage of our energy resources will bring back manufacturing to America. We're going to get through a very aggressive energy policy -- 3.5 million more jobs in this country. It's critical to our future.

THE PRESIDENT: Candy, it's okay, I'm used to being interrupted.

MS. CROWLEY: We're going to move you along to taxes. All right, we're going to move you both along to taxes over here and all these folks that have been waiting. Governor, this question is for you. It comes from Mary Polano (ph).

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Hi, Mary.

Q Governor Romney, you have stated that if you're elected President you would plan to reduce the tax rates for all the tax brackets, and that you would work with the Congress to eliminate some deductions in order to make up for the loss in revenue. Concerning these various deductions -- the mortgage deduction, the charitable deductions, the Child Tax Credit, and also the -- oh, what's that other credit? (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: You're doing great.

Q Oh, I remember -- the education credits, which are important to me because I have children in college. What would be your position on those things, which are important to the middle class?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Thank you very much. And let me tell you, you're absolutely right about part of that, which is I want to bring the rates down. I want to simplify the tax code, and I want to get middle-income taxpayers to have lower taxes. And the reason I want middle-income taxpayers to have lower taxes is because middle-income taxpayers have been buried over the past four years.

You've seen as middle-income people in this country -- incomes go down $4,300 a family, even as gasoline prices have gone up $2,000. Health insurance premiums up $2,500. Food prices up. Utility prices up. The middle-income families in America have been crushed over the last four years, so I want to get some relief to middle-income families. That's part one.

Now, how about deductions? Because I'm going to bring rates down across the board for everybody, but I'm going to limit deductions and exemptions and credits, particularly for people at the high end, because I am not going to have people at the high end pay less than they're paying now.

The top 5 percent of taxpayers will continue to pay 60 percent of the income tax the nation collects. So that will stay the same.

Middle-income people are going to get a tax break. And so in terms of bringing down deductions, one way of doing that would be to say everybody gets -- I'll pick a number -- $25,000 of deductions and credits, and you can decide which ones to use. Your home mortgage interest deduction, charity, child tax credit and so forth, you can use those as part of fill in that bucket, if you will, of deductions. But your rate comes down, and the burden also comes down on you for one more reason, and that is every middle-income taxpayer no longer will pay any tax on interest, dividends, or capital gains; no tax on your savings.

That makes life a lot easier. If you're getting interest from a bank, if you're getting a statement from a mutual fund, or any other kind of investments you have, you don't have to worry about filing taxes on that because there will be no taxes for anybody making $200,000 a year and less on your interest, dividends and capital gains.

Why am I lowering taxes on the middle class? Because under the last four years, they've been buried, and I want to help people in the middle class. And I will not -- I will not under any circumstances reduce the share that's being paid by the highest income taxpayers. And I will not under any circumstances increase taxes on the middle class.

The President's spending, the President's borrowing will cause this nation to have to raise taxes on the American people, not just at the high end. A recent study has shown that people in the middle class will see $4,000 a year higher taxes as a result of the spending and borrowing of this administration. I will not let that happen. I'll get us on track to a balanced budget, and

I'm going to reduce the tax burden on middle-income families. And what's that going to do? It's going to help those families, and it's going to create incentives to start growing jobs again in this country.

MS. CROWLEY: Thanks, Governor.

THE PRESIDENT: My philosophy on taxes has been simple, and that is I want to give middle-class families and folks who are striving to get into the middle class some relief -- because they have been hit hard, over the last decade, over the last 15, over the last 20 years.

So four years ago, I stood on a stage just like this one -- actually, it was a town hall -- and I said, I would cut taxes for middle-class families, and that's what I've done -- by $3,600. I said I would cut taxes for small businesses -- who are the drivers and engines of growth -- and we've cut them 18 times. And I want to continue those tax cuts for middle-class families and for small businesses.

But what I've also said is if we're serious about reducing the deficit, if this is genuinely a moral obligation to the next generation, then in addition to some tough spending cuts, we've also got to make sure that the wealthy do a little bit more.

So what I've said is your first $250,000 worth of income, no change. And that means 98 percent of American families, 97 percent of small businesses, they will not see a tax increase. I'm ready to sign that bill right now. The only reason it's not happening is because Governor Romney's allies in Congress have held the 98 percent hostage, because they want tax breaks for the top 2 percent.

But what I've also said is for above $250,000, we can go back to the tax rates we had when Bill Clinton was President. We created 23 million new jobs. That's part of what took us from deficits to surplus. It will be good for our economy and it will be good for job creation.

Now, Governor Romney has a different philosophy. He was on "60 Minutes" just two weeks ago and he was asked, is it fair for somebody like you making $20 million a year to pay a lower tax rate than a nurse or bus driver, somebody making $50,000 a year. And he said, yes, I think that's fair. Not only that, he said, I think that's what grows the economy.

Well, I fundamentally disagree with that. I think what grows the economy is when you get that tax credit that we put in place for your kids going to college. I think that grows the economy. I think what grows the economy is when we make sure small businesses are getting a tax credit for hiring veterans who fought for our country. That grows our economy.

So we just have a different theory. And when Governor Romney stands here, after a year of campaigning when during a Republican primary, he stood on stage and said, I'm going to give tax cuts -- he didn't say tax rate cuts, he said tax cuts -- to everybody including the top 1 percent, you should believe him, because that's been his history. And that's exactly the kind of top-down economics that is not going to work if we want a strong middle class and an economy that's thriving for everybody.

MS. CROWLEY: Governor Romney, I'm sure you've got a reply there. (Laughter.)

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: You're absolutely right. You heard what I said about my tax plan. The top 5 percent will continue to pay 60 percent, as they do today. I'm not looking to cut taxes for wealthy people. I am looking to cut taxes for middle-income people.

And why do I want to bring rates down and at the same time lower exemptions and deductions, particularly for people at the high end? Because if you bring rates down, it makes it easier for small business to keep more of their capital and hire people. And for me, this is about jobs. I want to get America's economy going again. Fifty-four percent of America's workers work in businesses that are taxed as individuals. So when you bring those rates down, those small businesses are able to keep more money and hire more people.

For me, I look at what's happened in the last four years and say this has been a disappointment. We can do better than this. We don't have to settle for how many months -- 43 months with unemployment above 8 percent, 23 million Americans struggling to find a good job right now. There are 3.5 million more women living in poverty today than when the President took office. We don't have to live like this.

We can get this economy going again. My five-point plan does it. Energy independence for North America in five years; opening up more trade, particularly in Latin America; cracking down on China when they cheat; getting us to a balanced budget; fixing our training programs for our workers; and, finally, championing small business.

I want to help small businesses grow and thrive. I know how to make that happen. I spent my life in the private sector. I know why jobs come and why they go. And they're going now because of the policies of this administration.

MS. CROWLEY: Governor, let me ask the President something about what you just said. The Governor says that he is not going to allow the top 5 percent -- I believe is what he said -- to have a tax cut, that it will all even out, that what he wants to do is give that tax cut to the middle class. Settled?

THE PRESIDENT: No, it's not settled. Look, the cost of lowering rates for everybody across the board 20 percent, along with what he also wants to do in terms of eliminating the estate tax, along with what he wants to do in terms of corporate changes in the tax code, it costs about $5 trillion.

Governor Romney then also wants to spend $2 trillion on additional military programs, even though the military is not asking for them. That's $7 trillion. He also wants to continue the Bush tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans. That's another trillion dollars. That's $8 trillion.

Now, what he says is he's going to make sure that this doesn't add to the deficit and he's going to cut middle-class taxes. But when he's asked how are you going to do it, which deductions, which loopholes are you going to close, he can't tell you. The fact that he only has to pay 14 percent on his taxes when a lot of you are paying much higher, he's already taken that off the board. Capital gains are going to continue to be at a low rate, so we're not going to get money that way.

We haven't heard from the Governor any specifics beyond Big Bird and eliminating funding for Planned Parenthood in terms of how he pays for that.

Now, Governor Romney was a very successful investor. If somebody came to you, Governor, with a plan that said, here, I want to spend $7 or $8 trillion and then we're going to pay for it, but we can't tell you until maybe after the election how we're going to do it, you wouldn't have taken such a sketchy deal.

And neither should you, the American people, because the math doesn't add up. And what's at stake here is one of two things. Either, Candy, this blows up the deficit -- because keep in mind, this is just to pay for the additional spending that he's talking about -- $7-$8 trillion -- that's before we even get to the deficit we already have.

Or, alternatively, it's got to be paid for not only by closing deductions for wealthy individuals -- that will pay for about 4 percent reduction in tax rates -- you're going to be paying for it. You'll lose some deductions. And you can't buy this sales pitch. Nobody who's looked at it that's serious actually believes it adds up.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, let me get the Governor in on this. And, Governor, let's, before we get into a vast array of who says -- what study says what, if it shouldn't add up, if somehow when you get in there, there isn't enough tax revenue coming in, if somehow the numbers don't add up, would you be willing to look again at a 20 percent --

MR. ROMNEY: Well, of course they add up. I was someone who ran businesses for 25 years and balanced the budget. I ran the Olympics and balanced the budget. I ran the state of a Massachusetts as a governor, to the extent any governor does, and balanced the budget all four years.

When we're talking about math that doesn't add up, how about $4 trillion of deficits over the last four years -- $5 trillion? That's math that doesn't add up. We have a President talking about someone's plan in a way that's completely foreign to what my real plan is.

And then we have his own record, which is we have four consecutive years where he said, when he was running for office, he would cut the deficit in half. Instead, he's doubled it. We've gone from $10 trillion of national debt to $16 trillion of national debt. If the President were reelected, we'd go to almost $20 trillion of national debt. This puts us on a road to Greece.

I know what it takes to balance budgets. I've done it my entire life. So for instance, when he says, yours is a $5 trillion cut -- well, no, it's not, because I'm offsetting some of the reductions, withholding down some of the deductions and I --

THE PRESIDENT: Candy --

MS. CROWLEY: Governor, I've got to --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I'm sorry --

MS. CROWLEY: Actually, I need to have you both hang -- I understand the stakes here. I understand both of you, but I will get run out of town if I don't allow --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: And I just described to you, Mr. President, I just described to you precisely how I'd do it --

MS. CROWLEY: You will get --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- which is with a single number that people can put -- and they can put their deductions and credits into that bucket.

THE PRESIDENT: Are we keeping track of --

MS. CROWLEY: Let me -- Mr. President, we're keeping track, I promise you. And, Mr. President, the next question is for you --

THE PRESIDENT: Great, looking forward to it.

MS. CROWLEY: -- so stay standing. And it's Catherine Fenton who has a question for you.

Q In what new ways do you intend to rectify the inequalities in the workplace, specifically regarding females making only 72 percent of what their male counterparts earn?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, Catherine, this is a great question. And I was raised by a single mom who had to put herself through school while looking after two kids. And she worked hard every day and made a lot of sacrifices to make sure we got everything we needed.

My grandmother, she started off as a secretary in a bank. She never got a college education even though she was smart as a whip. And she worked her way up to become a vice president at a local bank, but she hit the glass ceiling. She trained people who would end up becoming her bosses during the course of her career. She didn't complain. That's not what you did in that generation.

And this is one of the reasons why one of the first -- the first bill I signed was something called the Lilly Ledbetter bill, and it was named after this amazing woman who had been doing the same job as a man for years, found out that she was getting paid less, and the Supreme Court said that she couldn't bring suit because she should have found out about it earlier, where she had no way of finding out about it. So we fixed that.

And that's an example of the kind of advocacy that we need, because women are increasingly the breadwinners in the family. This is not just a women's issue. This is a family issue; this is a middle-class issue. And that's why we've got to fight for it.

It also means that we've got to make sure that young people like yourself are able to afford a college education. Earlier, Governor Romney talked about he wants to make Pell grants and other education accessible for young people. Well, the truth of the matter is, is that that's exactly what we've done. We've expanded Pell grants for millions of people, including millions of young women all across the country. We did it by taking $60 billion that was going to banks and lenders as middlemen for the student loan program, and we said let's just cut out the middle man. Let's give the money directly to students. And as a consequence, we've seen millions of young people be able to afford college, and that's going to make sure that young women are going to be able to compete in that marketplace.

But we've got to enforce the laws, which is what we are doing. And we've also got to make sure that in every walk of life, we do not tolerate discrimination. That's been one of the hallmarks of my administration. I'm going to continue to push on this issue for the next four years.

MS. CROWLEY: Governor Romney, pay equity for women.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Thank you, an important topic, and one which I learned a great deal about, particularly as I was serving as governor of my state, because I had the chance to pull together a cabinet, and all the applicants seemed to be men. And I went to my staff and I said, how come all the people for these jobs are all men? They said, well, these are the people that have the qualifications. And I said, well, gosh, can't we find some women that are also qualified? And so we took a concerted effort to go out and find women who had backgrounds that could be qualified to become members of our cabinet. I went to a number of women's groups and said, can you help us find folks? And they brought us whole binders full of women.

I was proud of the fact that after I staffed my cabinet and my senior staff, that the University of New York in Albany did a survey of all 50 states and concluded that mine had more women in senior leadership positions than any other state in America.

Now, one of the reasons I was able to get so many good women to be part of that team was because of our recruiting effort, but number two, because I recognize that if you're going to have women in the workforce that sometimes they need to be more flexible. My chief of staff, for instance, had two kids that were still in school. She said, I can't be here until 7:00 p.m. or 8:00 p.m. at night; I need to be able to get home at 5:00 p.m. so I can be there for making dinner for my kids and being with them when they get home from school. So we said, fine, let's have a flexible schedule so you can have hours that work for you.

We're going to have to have employers in the new economy, in the economy I'm going to bring to play, that are going to be so anxious to get good workers, they're going to be anxious to hire women.

In the last four years, women have lost 580,000 jobs. That's the net of what's happened in the last four years. We're still down 580,000 jobs. I mentioned 3.5 million women more now in poverty than four years ago.

What we can do to help young women and women of all ages is to have a strong economy, so strong that employers are looking to find good employees and bringing them into their workforce, and adapting to a flexible work schedule that gives women the opportunities that they would otherwise not be able to afford.

This is what I've done. It's what I look forward to doing. And I know what it takes to make an economy work. And I know what a working economy looks like. And an economy with 7.8 percent unemployment is not a real strong economy. An economy that has 23 million people looking for work is not a strong economy. An economy with 50 percent of kids graduating from college that can't find a job, or a college-level job -- that's not what we have to have. I'm going to help women in America get good work by getting a stronger economy and by supporting women in the workforce.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, why don't you get in on this quickly, please?

THE PRESIDENT: Catherine, I just want to point out that when Governor Romney's campaign was asked about the Lilly Ledbetter bill, whether he supported it, he said, I'll get back to you. And that's not the kind of advocacy that women need in any economy.

Now, there are some other issues that have a bearing on how women succeed in the workplace -- for example, their health care. A major difference in this campaign is that Governor Romney feels comfortable having politicians in Washington decide the health care choices that women are making. I think that's a mistake.

In my health care bill, I said insurance companies need to provide contraceptive coverage to everybody who's insured, because this is not just a health issue, it's an economic issue for women. It makes a difference. This is money out of that family's pocket.

Governor Romney not only opposed it, he suggested that in fact employers should be able to make the decision as to whether or not a woman gets contraception through her insurance coverage. That's not the kind of advocacy that women need.

When Governor Romney says that we should eliminate funding for Planned Parenthood, there are millions of women all across the country who rely on Planned Parenthood for not just contraceptive care; they rely on it for mammograms, for cervical cancer screenings. That's a pocketbook issue for women and families all across the country, and it makes a difference in terms of how well and effectively women are able to work.

When we talk about child care and the credits that we're providing, that makes a difference in terms of whether they can go out there and earn a living for their family.

These are not just women's issues. These are family issues. These are economic issues. And one of the things that makes us grow as an economy is when everybody participates, and women are getting the same, fair deal as men are. And I've got two daughters and I want to make sure that they have the same opportunities that anybody's sons have. And that's a part of what I'm fighting for as President of the United States.

MS. CROWLEY: I want to move us along here to Susan Katz (ph) who has a question. And, Governor, it's for you.

Q Governor Romney, I am an undecided voter because I'm disappointed with the lack of progress I've seen in the last four years. However, I do attribute much of America's economic and international problems to the failings and missteps of the Bush administration. Since both you and President Bush are Republicans, I fear a return to the policies of those years should you win this election. What is the biggest difference between you and George W. Bush? And how do you differentiate yourself from George W. Bush?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Thank you. And I appreciate that question. I just want to make sure that -

- I think I was supposed to get that last answer, but I want to point out that I don't believe --

THE PRESIDENT: I don't think so, Candy. I want to make sure your timekeepers are working here.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: The time --

MS. CROWLEY: The timekeepers are all working.

THE PRESIDENT: All right.

MS. CROWLEY: And let me tell you that the last part, it's for the two of you to talk to one another, and it isn't quite as ordered as you think. But go ahead and use this two minutes any way you'd like to, the question is on the floor.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I'd just note that I don't believe that bureaucrats in Washington should tell someone whether they can use contraceptives or not, and I don't believe employers should tell someone whether they could have contraceptive care or not. Every woman in America should have access to contraceptives. And the President's statement of my policy is completely and totally wrong.

THE PRESIDENT: Governor, that's not true.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Let me come back and answer your question. President Bush and I are different people, and these are different times. And that's why my five-point plan is so different than what he would have done.

For instance, we can now by virtue of new technology actually get all the energy we need in North America without having to go to the Arabs or the Venezuelans or anyone else. That wasn't true in his time. That's why my policy starts with a very robust policy to get all that energy in North America, become energy secure.

Number two, trade: I'll crack down on China. President Bush didn't. I'm also going to dramatically expand trade in Latin America. It's been growing about 12 percent per year over a long period of time. I want to add more free trade agreements so we'll have more trade.

Number three, I'm going to get us to a balanced budget. President Bush didn't. President Obama was right -- he said that that was outrageous to have deficits as high as half a trillion dollars under the Bush years. He was right. But then he put in place deficits twice that size for every one of his four years, and his forecast for the next four years is more deficits almost that large. So that's the next way I'm different than President Bush.

And then let's take the last one, championing small business. Our party has been focused on big business too long. I came through small business. I understand how hard it is to start a small business. That's why everything I'll do is designed to help small businesses grow and add jobs. I want to keep their taxes down on small business. I want regulators to see their job as encouraging small enterprise, not crushing it.

And the thing I find most troubling about Obamacare -- well, it's a long list -- but one of the things I find most troubling is that when you go out and talk to small businesses and ask them what they think about it, they tell you it keeps them from hiring more people.

My priority is jobs. I know how to make that happen. And President Bush had a very different path for a very different time. My path is designed in getting small businesses to grow and hire people.

MS. CROWLEY: Thanks, Governor.

Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, first of all, I think it's important to tell you that we did come in during some tough times. We were losing 800,000 jobs a month when I started. But we have been digging our way out of policies that were misplaced and focused on the top doing very well and middle-class folks not doing well. And we've seen 30 consecutive -- 31 consecutive months of job growth, 5.2 million new jobs created. And the plans that I talked about will create even more.

But when Governor Romney says that he has a very different economic plan, the centerpiece of his economic plan are tax cuts. That's what took us from surplus to deficit. When he talks about getting tough on China, keep in mind that Governor Romney invested in companies that were pioneers of outsourcing to China, and is currently investing in countries -- in companies that are building surveillance equipment for China to spy on its own folks.

Governor, you're the last person who is going to get tough on China.

And what we've done when it comes to trade is not only sign three trade deals to open up new markets, but we've also set up a task force for trade that goes after anybody who is taking advantage of American workers or businesses, and not creating a level playing field. We've brought twice as many cases against unfair trading practices than the previous administration and we've won every single one that's been decided.

When I said that we had to make sure that China was not flooding our domestic market with cheap tires, Governor Romney said I was being protectionist, that it wouldn't be helpful to American workers. Well, in fact, we saved a thousand jobs. And that's the kind of tough trade actions that are required.

But the last point I want to make is this: There are some things where Governor Romney is different from George Bush. George Bush didn't propose turning Medicare into a voucher. George Bush embraced comprehensive immigration reform; he didn't call for self-deportation. George Bush never suggested that we eliminate funding for Planned Parenthood.

So there are differences between Governor Romney and George Bush, but they're not on economic policy. In some ways, he's gone to a more extreme place when it comes to social policy. And I think that's a mistake. That's not how we're going to move our economy forward.

MS. CROWLEY: I want to move you both along to the next question because it's in the same wheelhouse so you will be able to respond. But the President does get this question. I want to call on Michael Jones.

Q Mr. President, I voted for you in 2008. What have you done or accomplished to earn my vote in 2012? I'm not that optimistic as I was in 2012. Most things I need for everyday living are very expensive.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, we've gone through a tough four years, there's no doubt about it. But four years ago, I told the American people and I told you I would cut taxes for middle-class families, and I did. I told you I'd cut taxes for small businesses, and I have. I said that I'd end the war in Iraq, and I did. I said we'd refocus attention on those who actually attacked us on 9/11, and we have gone after al Qaeda's leadership like never before and Osama bin Laden is dead.

I said that we would put in place health care reform to make sure that insurance companies can't jerk you around, and if you don't have health insurance, that you'd have a chance to get affordable insurance -- and I have.

I committed that I would rein in the excesses of Wall Street, and we passed the toughest Wall Street reforms since the 1930s.

We've created 5 million jobs -- gone from 800,000 jobs a month being lost -- and we are making progress. We saved an auto industry that was on the brink of collapse.

Now, does that mean you're not struggling? Absolutely not. A lot of us are. And that's why the plan that I've put forward for manufacturing, and education, and reducing our deficit in a sensible way, using the savings from ending wars to rebuild America and putting people back to work, making sure that we are controlling our own energy, but not just the energy of today, but also the energy of the future -- all those things will make a difference.

So the point is the commitments I've made I've kept. And those that I haven't been able to keep, it's not for lack of trying and we're going to get it done in a second term. But you should pay attention to this campaign, because Governor Romney has made some commitments as well, and I suspect he'll keep those, too. When members of the Republican Congress say, we're going to sign a no-tax pledge so that we don't ask a dime from millionaires and billionaires to reduce our deficit so we can still invest in education and helping kids go to college, he said, me, too.

When they said, we're going to cut Planned Parenthood funding, he said, me, too. When they said, we're going to repeal Obamacare -- the first thing I'm going to do, despite the fact that it's the same health care plan that he passed in Massachusetts and is working well -- he said, me too.

That is not the kind of leadership that you need, but you should expect that those are promises he's going to keep.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, let me let --

THE PRESIDENT: And the choice in this election is going to be whose promises are going to be more likely to help you in your life, make sure your kids can go to college, make sure that you are getting a good-paying job, making sure that Medicare and Social Security will be there for you.

MS. CROWLEY: Thank you.

Governor.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I think you know better. I think you know that these last four years haven't been so good as the President just described, and that you don't feel like you're confident that the next four years are going to be much better either. I can tell you that if you were to elect President Obama, you know what you're going to get. You're going to get a repeat of the last four years. We just can't afford four more years like the last four years.

He said that by now we'd have unemployment at 5.4 percent. The difference between where it is and 5.4 percent is 9 million Americans without work. I wasn't the one that said 5.4 percent. This was the President's plan -- didn't get there.

He said he would have by now put forward a plan to reform Medicare and Social Security, because he pointed out they're on the road to bankruptcy. He would reform them. He'd get that done. He hasn't even made a proposal on either one. He said in his first year he'd put out an immigration plan that would deal with our immigration challenges -- didn't even file it.

This is a President who has not been able to do what he said he'd do. He said that he'd cut in half the deficit -- he hasn't done that either; in fact, he doubled it. He said that by now, middle-income families would have a reduction in their health insurance premiums by $2,500 a year. It's gone up by $2,500 a year. And if Obamacare is passed -- or implemented -- it's already been passed -- if it's implemented fully, it will be another $2,500 on top.

The middle class is getting crushed under the policies of a President who has not understood what it takes to get the economy working again. He keeps saying, look, I've created 5 million jobs. That's after losing 5 million jobs. The entire record is such that the unemployment has not been reduced in this country. The unemployment, the number of people who are still looking for work, is still 23 million Americans. There are more people in poverty -- one out of six people in poverty.

How about food stamps? When he took office, 32 million people were on food stamps. Today, 47 million people are on food stamps. How about the growth of the economy? It's growing more slowly this year than last year, and more slowly last year than the year before.

The President wants to do well, I understand. But the policies he's put in place, from Obamacare to Dodd-Frank to his tax policies to his regulatory policies -- these policies combined have not let this economy take off and grow like it could have. You might say, well, you got an example of when it worked better? Yes. In the Reagan recession, where unemployment hit 10.8 percent, between that period -- the end of that recession and the equivalent period of time to today, Ronald Reagan's recovery created twice as many jobs as this President's recovery.

Five million jobs doesn't even keep up with our population growth. And the only reason the unemployment rate seems a little lower today is because of all the people that have dropped out of the workforce.

The President has tried, but his policies haven't worked. He's great as a speaker and describing his plans and his vision. That's wonderful, except we have a record to look at. And that record shows he just hasn't been able to cut the deficit, to put in place reforms for Medicare and Social Security to preserve them, to get us the rising incomes we need. Median incomes down $4,300 a family, and 23 million Americans out of work -- that's what this election is about. It's about who can get the middle class in this country a bright and prosperous future and assure our kids the kind of hope and optimism they deserve.

MS. CROWLEY: Governor, I want to move you along. Don't go away, and we'll have plenty of time to respond. We are quite aware of the clock for both of you. But I want to bring in a different subject here. Mr. President, I'll be right back with you. Lorraine Osario (ph) has a question for you about a topic we have not heard.

THE PRESIDENT: This is for Governor Romney?

MS. CROWLEY: Yes, this is for Governor Romney, and we'll be right with you, Mr. President. Thanks.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Is it Lorena?

Q Lorraine.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Lorraine.

Q Yes, Lorraine. How are you doing?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Good, thanks.

Q President. Romney: What do you plan on doing with immigrants without their green card that are currently living here as productive members of society?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Thank you, Lorraine. Did I get that right? Good. Thank you for question. And let me step back and tell you what I'd like to do with our immigration policy broadly, and include an answer to your question.

First of all, this is a nation of immigrants. We welcome people coming to this country as immigrants. My dad was born in Mexico of American parents; Ann's dad was born in Wales and is a first-generation American. We welcome legal immigrants into this country.

I want our legal system to work better. I want it to be streamlined. I want it to be clearer. I don't think you have to -- shouldn't have to hire a lawyer to figure out how to get into this country legally. I also think that we should give visas to people -- green cards, rather, to people who graduate with skills that we need. People around the world with accredited degrees in science and math get a green card stapled to their diploma; come to the U.S. of A. We should make sure that our legal system works.

Number two, we're going to have to stop illegal immigration. There are 4 million people who are waiting in line to get here legally. Those who've come here illegally take their place. So I will not grant amnesty to those who've come here illegally. What I will do is I'll put in place an employment verification system and make sure that employers that hire people who have come here illegally are sanctioned for doing so. I won't put in place magnets for people coming here illegally. So, for instance, I would not give driver's licenses to those that have come here illegally, as the President would.

The kids of those that came here illegally -- those kids I think should have a pathway to become a permanent resident of the United States. And military service, for instance, is one way they would have that kind of pathway to become a permanent resident.

Now, when the President ran for office he said that he'd put in place in his first year a piece of legislation -- he'd file a bill in his first year that would reform our immigration system -- protect legal immigration, stop illegal immigration. He didn't do it. He had a Democrat House, a Democrat Senate, a supermajority in both houses. Why did he fail to even promote legislation that would have provided an answer for those that want to come here legally and for those that are here illegally today? That's a question I think the President will have a chance to answer to answer right now.

THE PRESIDENT: Good, I look forward to it. Was it Lorena? Lorraine. We are a nation of immigrants. We're just a few miles away from Ellis Island. We all understand what this country has become because talent from all around the world wants to come here. People are willing to take risks. People who want to build on their dreams and make sure their kids have even bigger dreams than they have.

But we're also a nation of laws. So what I've said is we need to fix a broken immigration system. And I've done everything I can on my own, and sought cooperation from Congress to make sure that we fixed the system.

First thing we did was to streamline the legal immigration system to reduce the backlog, make it easier, simpler and cheaper for people who are waiting in line, obeying the law, to make sure that they can come here and contribute to our country. And that's good for our economic growth. They'll start new businesses. They'll make things happen that create jobs here in the United States.

Number two, we do have to deal with our border, so we put more Border Patrol on than any time in history, and the flow of undocumented workers across the border is actually lower than it's been in 40 years.

What I've also said is if we're going to go after folks who are here illegally, we should do it smartly and go after folks who are criminals, gangbangers, people who are hurting the community -- not after students. Not after folks who are here just because they're trying to figure out how to feed their families. And that's what we've done.

And what I've also said is for young people who come here, brought here oftentimes by their parents, have gone to school here, pledged allegiance to the flag, think of this as their country, understand themselves as Americans in every way except having papers, then we should make sure that we give them a pathway to citizenship. And that's what I've done administratively.

Now, Governor Romney just said that he wants to help those young people, too. But during the Republican primary he said, I will veto the DREAM Act that would allow these young people to have access. His main strategy during the Republican primary was to say, we're going to encourage self-deportation -- making life so miserable on folks that they'll leave.

He called the Arizona law a model for the nation -- part of the Arizona law said that law enforcement officers could stop folks because they suspected maybe they looked like they might be undocumented workers and check their papers. And you know what, if my daughter or yours looks to somebody like they're not a citizen, I don't want to empower somebody like that.

So we can fix this system in a comprehensive way. And when Governor Romney says the challenge is, well, Obama didn't try -- that's not true. I sat down with Democrats and Republicans at the beginning of my term, and I said, let's fix this system, including senators previously who had supported it on the Republican side. But it's very hard for Republicans in Congress to support comprehensive immigration reform if their standard bearer has said that, this is not something I'm interested in supporting.

MS. CROWLEY: Let me get the Governor in here, Mr. President. Let's speak to, if you could, Governor --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Let's.

MS. CROWLEY: -- the idea of self-deportation.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: No, let me go back and speak to the points that the President made and let's get them correct. I did not say that the Arizona law was a model for the nation in that aspect. I said that the E-Verify portion of the Arizona law, which is -- which is the portion of the law which says that employers could be able to determine whether someone is here illegally or not illegally, that that was a model for the nation. That's number one.

Number two, I asked the President a question I think Hispanics and immigrants all over the nation have asked. He was asked this on Univision the other day. Why, when you said you'd file legislation in your first year, didn't you do it? And he didn't answer. He doesn't answer that question. He said the standard bearer wasn't for it. I'm glad you thought I was a standard bearer four years ago, but I wasn't. Four years ago, you said in your first year, you would file legislation. In his first year, I was just getting -- licking my wounds from having been beaten by John McCain, all right. I was not the standard bearer. My view is that this President should have honored his promise to do as he said.

Now, let me mention one other thing and that is self-deportation says let people make their own choice. What I was saying is we're not going to round up 12 million people, undocumented, illegals, and take them out of the nation. Instead, let people make their own choice. And if they find that they can't get the benefits here that they want and they can't find the job they want, then they'll make a decision to go a place where they have better opportunities.

But I'm not in favor of rounding up people and taking them out of this country. I am in favor, as the President has said and I agree with him, which is that if people have committed crimes we've got to get them out of this country.

Let me mention something else the President said. It was a moment ago and I didn't get a chance to -- when he was describing Chinese investments and so forth --

THE PRESIDENT: Candy, hold on a second. At some point --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Mr. President, I'm still speaking.

MS. CROWLEY: I'm sorry --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Mr. President, why don't you let me finish --

THE PRESIDENT: Governor Romney, I'm used to --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I'm going -- I'm going to continue -- I'm going to continue. If the President made --

MS. CROWLEY: Go ahead and finish, Governor Romney. Governor Romney, if you could make it short. See all these people, they've been waiting for you. Could you make it short and then --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Yes, just going to make a point. Any investments I have over the last eight years have been managed by a blind trust. And I understand they do include investments outside the United States, including in Chinese companies.

Mr. President, have you looked at your pension?

THE PRESIDENT: Candy --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Have you looked at your pension?

THE PRESIDENT: I've got to say -- Candy --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Mr. President, have you looked at your pension?

THE PRESIDENT: You know, I don't look at my pension. It's not as big as yours so it doesn't take as long. (Laughter.)

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Let me give you some advice.

THE PRESIDENT: I don't check it that often.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Look at your pension. You also have investments in Chinese companies. You also have investments outside the United States. You also have investments through a Cayman's trust.

MS. CROWLEY: We are sort of way off topic here, Governor Romney.

THE PRESIDENT: We're a little off topic here.

MS. CROWLEY: We are completely off immigration.

THE PRESIDENT: I know we were talking about immigration.

MS. CROWLEY: And we've -- quickly, Mr. President --

THE PRESIDENT: I do want to make sure --

MS. CROWLEY: If I could have you sit down, Governor Romney. Thank you.

THE PRESIDENT: I do want to make sure that we just understand something. Governor Romney says he wasn't referring to Arizona as a model for the nation. His top advisor on immigration is the guy who designed the Arizona law, the entirety of it. Not E-Verify, the whole thing. That's his policy. And it's a bad policy. And it won't help us grow.

Look, when we think about immigration, we have to understand there are folks all around the world who still see America as the land of promise. And they provide us energy and they provide us innovation, and they start companies like Intel and Google -- and we want to encourage that.

Now, we've got to make sure that we do it in a smart way, in a comprehensive way, and we make the legal system better. But when we make this into a divisive political issue, and when we don't have bipartisan support -- I can deliver, Governor, a whole bunch of Democrats to get comprehensive immigration reform done, and we can't --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I'll get it done. I'll get it done the first year --

THE PRESIDENT: -- we have not seen Republicans serious about this issue at all.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, let me move you on here, please. Mr. President --

THE PRESIDENT: And it's time for them to get serious on this.

MS. CROWLEY: Don't go away, though.

THE PRESIDENT: This used to be a bipartisan issue.

MS. CROWLEY: Right. Don't go away, because --

THE PRESIDENT: I'm here. (Laughter.)

MS. CROWLEY: -- I want you to talk to Carey Ladka (ph), who wants to switch the topic for us.

THE PRESIDENT: Okay. Hi, Carey.

Q Good evening, Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: I'm sorry, what's your name?

Q It's Carey. Carey Ladka (ph).

THE PRESIDENT: Great to see you, Carey.

Q This question actually comes from a brain trust of my friends at Global Telecom Supply in Mineola yesterday. We were sitting around talking about Libya, and we were reading and became aware of reports that the State Department refused extra security for our embassy in Benghazi, Libya, prior to the attacks that killed four Americans. Who was it that denied enhanced security, and why?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, let me, first of all, talk about our diplomats, because they serve all around the world and do an incredible job in a very dangerous situation. And these aren't just representatives of the United States. They're my representatives. I send them there, oftentimes into harm's way. I know these folks, and I know these families. So nobody is more concerned about their safety and security than I am.

So as soon as we found out that the Benghazi consulate was being overrun, I was on the phone with my national security team, and I gave them three instructions. Number one, beef up our security and procedures not just in Libya but in every embassy and consulate in the region. Number two, investigate exactly what happened, regardless of where the facts lead us, to make sure that folks are held accountable and it doesn't happen again. And number three, we are going to find out who did this and we are going to hunt them down, because one of the things that I've said throughout my presidency is when folks mess with Americans, we go after them.

Now, Governor Romney had a very different response. While we were still dealing with our diplomats being threatened, Governor Romney put out a press release, trying to make political points. And that's not how a Commander-in-Chief operates. You don't turn national security into a political issue, certainly not right when it's happening.

And people -- not everybody agrees with some of the decisions I've made, but when it comes to our national security, I mean what I say. I said I'd end the war in Libya -- in Iraq, and I did. I said that we'd go after al Qaeda and bin Laden -- we have. I said we'd transition out of Afghanistan and start making sure that Afghans are responsible for their own security. That's what I'm doing.

And when it comes to this issue, when I say that we are going to find out exactly what happened, everybody will be held accountable -- and I am ultimately responsible for what's taking place there, because these are my folks, and I'm the one who has to greet those coffins when they come home, you know that I mean what I say.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, I've got to move us along.

Governor?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Thank you, Carey, for your question. It's an important one, and I think the President just said correctly that the buck does stop at his desk, and he takes responsibility for that -- for the failure in providing those security resources. And those terrible things may well happen from time to time. I feel very deeply sympathetic for the families of those who lost loved ones. And today there's a memorial service for one of those that was lost in this tragedy. We think of their families and care for them deeply.

There were other issues associated with this tragedy. There were many days that passed before we knew whether this was a spontaneous demonstration or actually whether it was a terrorist attack. And there was no demonstration involved. It was a terrorist attack. And it took a long time for that to be told to the American people.

Whether there was some misleading or instead whether we just didn't know what happened, I think you have to ask yourself, why didn't we know five days later when the Ambassador to the United Nations went on TV to say that this was a demonstration -- how could we have not known?

But I find more troubling than this that on the day following the assassination of the United States ambassador -- the first time that's happened since 1979 -- when we have four Americans killed there, when apparently we didn't know what happened, that the President, the day after that happened, flies to Las Vegas for a political fundraiser, then the next day to Colorado for another event, another political event. I think these actions taken by a President and a leader have symbolic significance, and perhaps even material significance in that you'd hope that during that time we could call in the people who were actually eyewitnesses. We've read their accounts now about what happened. It was very clear this was not a demonstration. This was an attack by terrorists.

And this calls into question the President's whole policy in the Middle East. Look what's happening in Syria, in Egypt, now in Libya. Consider the distance between ourselves and Israel. The President said that he was going to put daylight between us and Israel. We have Iran four years closer to a nuclear bomb.

Syria -- Syria is not just the tragedy of 30,000 civilians being killed by a military, but also a strategically significant player for America. The President's policies throughout the Middle East began with an apology tour, and pursue a strategy of leading from behind. And this strategy is unraveling before our very eyes.

MS. CROWLEY: Because we're closing in, I want to still get a lot of people in. I want to ask you something, Mr. President, and then have the Governor just quickly. Your Secretary of State, as I'm sure you know, has said that she takes full responsibility for the attack on the diplomatic mission in Benghazi. Does the buck stop with your Secretary of State, as far as what went on here?

THE PRESIDENT: Secretary Clinton has done an extraordinary job, but she works for me. I'm the President, and I'm always responsible. And that's why nobody is more interested in finding out exactly what happened than I do.

The day after the attack, Governor, I stood in the Rose Garden and I told the American people and the world that we are going to find out exactly what happened, that this was an act of terror, and I also said that we're going to hunt down those who committed this crime. And then a few days later, I was there greeting the caskets coming into Andrews Air Force Base, and grieving with the families.

And the suggestion that anybody on my team -- whether the Secretary of State, our U.N. Ambassador -- anybody on my team would play politics or mislead when we've lost four of our own, Governor, is offensive. That's not what we do. That's not what I do as President. That's not what I do as Commander-in-Chief.

MS. CROWLEY: Governor, if you want to reply quickly to this please.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Yes, I surely do. I think it's interesting the President just said something, which is that on the day after the attack he went in the Rose Garden and said that this was an attack of terror.

THE PRESIDENT: That's what I said.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: You said in the Rose Garden the day after the attack it was an act of terror? It was not a spontaneous demonstration?

THE PRESIDENT: Please proceed.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Is that what you're saying?

THE PRESIDENT: Please proceed, Governor.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I want to make sure we get that for the record, because it took the President 14 days before he called the attack in Benghazi an act of terror.

THE PRESIDENT: Get the transcript.

MS. CROWLEY: He did, in fact, sir. So let me call it an act of terror in the Rose Garden. He used the word --

THE PRESIDENT: Can you say that a little louder, Candy? (Applause.)

MS. CROWLEY: He did call it an act of terror. It did, as well, take -- it did, as well, take two weeks or so for the whole idea of there being a riot out there about this tape to come out. You are correct about that. (Applause.)

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: The administration indicated that this was a reaction to a video and was a spontaneous reaction.

MS. CROWLEY: They did.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: It took them a long time to say this was a terrorist act by a terrorist group. And to suggest -- am I incorrect in that regard? On Sunday, your Secretary --

THE PRESIDENT: Candy?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- excuse me, the Ambassador to the United Nations went on the Sunday television shows and spoke about how this was a spontaneous reaction.

THE PRESIDENT: Candy, I'm happy to have a longer conversation about foreign policy.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, let me -- I know you -- absolutely. But I want to move you on.

THE PRESIDENT: Okay, I'm happy to do that, too.

MS. CROWLEY: And also, people can go to the transcripts and --

THE PRESIDENT: I just want to make sure that --

MS. CROWLEY: -- figure out what was said and when.

THE PRESIDENT: -- all those wonderful folks are going to have a chance to get some of their questions answered.

MS. CROWLEY: Because what I want to do, Mr. President -- stand there for a second, because I want to introduce you to Nina Gonzalez, who brought up a question that we hear a lot both over the Internet and from this crowd.

Q President Obama, during the Democratic National Convention in 2008, you stated you wanted to keep AK-47s out of the hands of criminals. What has your administration done or plan to do to limit the availability of assault weapons?

THE PRESIDENT: We're a nation that believes in the Second Amendment, and I believe in the Second Amendment. We've got a long tradition of hunting and sportsmen, and people who want to make sure they can protect themselves.

But there have been too many instances during the course of my presidency where I've had to comfort families who have lost somebody -- most recently, out in Aurora. Just a couple of weeks ago -- actually probably about a month, I saw a mother who I had met at the bedside of her son who had been shot in that theater. And her son had been shot through the head. And we spent some time and we said a prayer. And remarkably, about two months later, this young man and his mom showed up, and he looked unbelievable -- good as new. But there were a lot of families who didn't have that good fortune, and whose sons or daughters or husbands didn't survive.

So my belief is that, A, we have to enforce the laws we've already got; make sure that we're keeping guns out of the hands of criminals, those who are mentally ill. We've done a much better job in terms of background checks, but we've got more to do when it comes to enforcement.

But I also share your belief that weapons that were designed for soldiers in war theaters don't belong on our streets. And so what I'm trying to do is to get a broader conversation about how do we reduce the violence generally. Part of it is seeing if we can get an assault weapons ban reintroduced, but part of it is also looking at other sources of the violence -- because, frankly, in my hometown of Chicago there's an awful lot of violence, and they're not using AK-47s, they're using cheap handguns.

And so what can we do to intervene, to make sure that young people have opportunity? That our schools are working? That if there's violence on the streets, that working with faith groups and law enforcement, we can catch it before it gets out of control.

And so what I want is a comprehensive strategy. Part of it is seeing if we can get automatic weapons that kill folks in amazing numbers out of the hands of criminals and the mentally ill. But part of it is also going deeper and seeing if we can get into these communities and making sure we catch violent impulses before they occur.

MS. CROWLEY: Governor Romney, the question is about assault weapons, AK-47s.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Yes, I'm not in favor of new pieces of legislation on guns and taking guns away or making certain guns illegal. We, of course, don't want to have automatic weapons, and that's already illegal in this country to have automatic weapons.

What I believe is we have to do, as the President mentioned towards the end of his remarks there, which is to make enormous efforts to enforce the gun laws that we have and to change the culture of violence we have. And you ask how are we going to do that? And there are a number of things. He mentioned good schools. I totally agree. We were able to drive our schools to be number one in the nation in my state, and I believe if we do a better job in education, we'll give people the hope and opportunity they deserve and perhaps less violence from that.

But let me mention another thing, and that is parents. We need moms and dads helping raise kids. Wherever possible, the benefit of having two parents in the home -- and that's not always possible -- a lot of great single moms, single dads, but, gosh, to tell our kids that before they have babies, they ought to think about getting married to someone, that's a great idea, because if there's a two-parent family, the prospect of living in poverty goes down dramatically. The opportunities that the child will be able to achieve increase dramatically. So we can make changes in the way our culture works to help bring people away from violence and give them opportunity and bring them in the American system.

The greatest failure we've had with regards to gun violence in some respects is what is known as Fast and Furious, which was a program under this administration. And how it worked exactly I think we don't know precisely, but where thousands of automatic and AK-47-type weapons were given to people that ultimately gave them to drug lords that used those weapons against their own citizens and killed Americans with them. And this was a program of the government. For what purpose it was put in place, I can't imagine. But it's one of the great tragedies related to violence in our society which has occurred during this administration, which I think the American people would like to understand fully.

It's been investigated to a degree, but the administration has carried out executive privilege to prevent all the information from coming out. I'd like to understand, who were the ones that did this, what the idea was behind it, why it led to the violence. Thousands of guns going to Mexico -

THE PRESIDENT: Candy.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- drug lords --

MS. CROWLEY: Governor, if I could, the question was about these assault weapons that once were banned and are no longer banned. I know that you signed an assault weapons ban when you were in Massachusetts. Obviously with this question, you no longer do support that. Why is that? Given the kind of violence that we see sometimes with these mass killings, why is that, that you've changed your mind?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Well, Candy, actually, in my state, the pro-gun folks and the anti-gun folks came together and put together a piece of legislation. And it's referred to as an assault weapon ban, but it had, at the signing of the bill, both the pro-gun and the anti-gun people came together because it provided opportunities for both that both wanted. There were hunting opportunities, for instance, that hadn't previously been available and so forth. So it was a mutually agreed upon piece of legislation.

That's what we need more of, Candy. What we have right now in Washington is a place that's gridlocked.

MS. CROWLEY: So if you could get people to agree to it, you'd be for it?

THE PRESIDENT: Candy.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: We haven't had the leadership in Washington to work at a bipartisan basis. I was able to do that in my state and bring these two together.

THE PRESIDENT: Candy.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: First of all, I think Governor Romney was for an assault weapons ban before he was against it. And he said that the reason he changed his mind was, in part, because he was seeking the endorsement of the National Rifle Association. So that's on the record.

But I think that one area we agree on is the importance of parents and the importance of schools -- because I do believe that if our young people have opportunity, then they're less likely to engage in these kind of violent acts. We're not going to eliminate everybody who is mentally disturbed, and we've got to make sure that they don't get weapons, but we can make a difference in terms of ensuring that every young person in America, regardless of where they come from, what they look like, have a chance to succeed.

And, Candy, we haven't had a chance to talk about education much, but I think it is very important to understand that the reforms we've put in place, working with 46 governors around the country, are seeing schools that are some of the ones that are the toughest for kids starting to succeed -- we're starting to see gains in math and science.

When it comes to community colleges, we are setting up programs, including with Nassau Community College, to retrain workers, including young people who may have dropped out of school, but now are getting another chance -- training them for the jobs that exist right now. And in fact, employers are looking for skilled workers, and so we're matching them up, giving them access to higher education. As I said, we have made sure that millions of young people are able to get an education that they weren't able to get before. Now --

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, I have to move you along here. You said you wanted to get this question so we need to do it here.

THE PRESIDENT: Just one second, because this is important. This is part of the choice in this election. When Governor Romney was asked whether teachers -- hiring more teachers was important to growing our economy, Governor Romney said that doesn't grow our economy.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, it was guns here so I need to move us along. The question was guns so let me --

THE PRESIDENT: But this will make a difference in terms of whether or not we can move this economy forward for these young people and reduce our violence.

MS. CROWLEY: Okay. Thank you so much.

I want to ask Carol Goldberg to stand up because she gets to a question that both these men have been passionate about. It's for Governor Romney.

Q The outsourcing of American jobs overseas has taken a toll on our economy. What plans do you have to put back and keep jobs here in the United States?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Boy, great question, an important question because you're absolutely right. The place where we've seen manufacturing go has been China. China is now the largest manufacturer in the world -- used to be the United States of America. A lot of good people have lost jobs. A half a million manufacturing jobs have been lost in the last four years -- that's total over the last four years. One of the reasons for that is that people think it's more attractive in some cases to go offshore than to stay here. We have made it less attractive for enterprises to stay here than to go offshore from time to time.

What I will do as President is make sure it's more attractive to come to America again. This is the way we're going to create jobs in this country. It's not by trickle-down government, saying we're going to take more money from people and hire more government workers, raise more taxes, put in place more regulations. Trickle-down government has never worked here, has never worked anywhere.

I want to make America the most attractive place in the world for entrepreneurs, for small business, for big business to invest and grow in America. Now, we're going to have to make sure that as we trade with other nations that they play by the rules, and China hasn't. One of the reasons -- or one of the ways they don't play by the rules is artificially holding down the value of their currency. Because if they put their currency down low, that means their prices on their goods are low, and that makes them advantageous in the marketplace. We lose sales and manufacturers here in the U.S. making the same products can't compete.

China has been a currency manipulator for years and years and years. And the President has a regular opportunity to label them as a currency manipulator, but refuses to do so. On day one, I will label China a currency manipulator, which will allow me as president to be able to put in place, if necessary, tariffs where I believe that they are taking unfair advantage of our manufacturers.

So we're going to make sure the people we trade with around the world play by the rules. But let me not just stop there. Don't forget what's key to bringing back jobs here is not just finding someone else to punish -- and I'm going to be strict with people who we trade with to make sure they follow the law and play by the rules -- but it's also to make America the most attractive place in the world for businesses of all kinds. That's why I want to bring down the tax rates on small employers, big employers, so they want to be here.

Canada's tax rate on companies is now 15 percent. Ours is 35 percent. So if you're starting a business, where would you rather start it? We have to be competitive if we're going to create more jobs here. Regulations have quadrupled -- the rate of regulations quadrupled under this President. I've talked to small businesses across the country. They say, we feel like we're under attack from our own government. I want to make sure that regulators see their job as encouraging small business, not crushing it. And there's no question but that Obamacare has been an extraordinary deterrent to enterprises of all kinds hiring people.

My priority is making sure that we get more people hired. If we have more people hired, if we get back manufacturing jobs, if we get back all kinds of jobs into this country, then you're going to see rising incomes again. The reason incomes are down is because unemployment is so high. I know what it takes to get this to happen. And my plan will do that. And one part of it is to make sure that we keep China playing by the rules. Thank you.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, two minutes here because we are then going to go to our last question.

THE PRESIDENT: We need to create jobs here. And both Governor Romney and I agree actually that we should lower our corporate tax rate. It's too high. But there's a difference in terms of how we would do it. I want to close loopholes that allow companies to deduct expenses when they move to China that allow them to profit offshore and not have to get taxed, so they have tax advantages offshore. All those changes in our tax code would make a difference.

Now, Governor Romney actually wants to expand those tax breaks. One of his big ideas when it comes to corporate tax reform would be to say if you invest overseas, you make profits overseas, you don't have to pay U.S. taxes. But of course, if you're a small business or a mom-and-pop business or a big business starting up here, you've got to pay even the reduced rate that Governor Romney is talking about. And it's estimated that that will create 800,000 new jobs -- the problem is they'll be in China or India or Germany. That's not the way we're going to create jobs here.

The way we're going to create jobs here is not just to change our tax code, but also to double our exports. And we are on pace to double our exports, one of the commitments I made when I was President. That's creating tens of thousands of jobs all across the country. That's why we've kept on pushing trade deals, but trade deals that make sure that American workers and American businesses are getting a good deal.

Now, Governor Romney talked about China, as I already indicated. In the private sector, Governor Romney's company invested in what were called "pioneers of outsourcing." That's not my phrase. It's what reporters called it. And as far as currency manipulation, the currency has actually gone up 11 percent since I've been President because we have pushed them hard. And we've put unprecedented trade pressure on China. That's why exports have significantly increased under my presidency. That's going to help to create jobs here.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, we have a really short time for a quick discussion here. iPad, the Macs, the iPhones -- they are all manufactured in China. One of the major reasons is labor is so much cheaper here. How do you convince a great American company to bring that manufacturing back here?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: The answer is very straightforward: We can compete with anyone in the world as long as the playing field is level. China has been cheating over the years -- one, by holding down the value of their currency; number two, by stealing our intellectual property -- our designs, our patents, our technology. There's even an Apple store in China that's a counterfeit Apple store selling counterfeit goods. They hack into our computers. We will have to have people play on a fair basis. That's number one.

Number two, we have to make America the most attractive place for entrepreneurs, for people who want to expand a business. That's what brings jobs in. The President's characterization of my tax plan is --

THE PRESIDENT: How much time you got, Candy?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- is completely -- is completely --

MS. CROWLEY: Let me go to the -- GOVERNOR ROMNEY: -- is completely false. Let me tell you.

MS. CROWLEY: Let me go to the President here because we really are --

THE PRESIDENT: All right, I'm --

MS. CROWLEY: -- because we really are running out of time. And the question is, can we ever get -- we can't get wages like that. It can't be sustained here.

THE PRESIDENT: Candy, there are some jobs that are not going to come back because they're low-wage, low-skill jobs. I want high-wage, high-skill jobs. That's why we have to emphasize manufacturing. That's why we have to invest in advanced manufacturing. That's why we've got to make sure that we've got the best science and research in the world.

And when we talk about deficits, if we're adding to our deficit for tax cuts for folks who don't need them, and we're cutting investments in research and science that will create the next Apple, create the next new innovation that will sell products around the world, we will lose that race. If we're not training engineers to make sure that they are equipped here in this country, then companies won't come here. Those investments are what's going to help to make sure that we continue to lead this world economy not just next year, but 10 years from now, 50 years from now, 100 years from now.

MS. CROWLEY: Thanks, Mr. President.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Government does not create jobs.

MS. CROWLEY: Governor Romney.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Government does not create jobs.

MS. CROWLEY: Governor Romney, I want to introduce you to Barry Green because he's going to have the last question to you first.

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Barry? Oh, there's Barry. Hi, Barry.

Q Hi, Governor. I think this is a tough question. Each of you, what do you believe is the biggest misperception that the American people have about you as a man and a candidate? Using specific examples, can you take this opportunity to debunk that misperception and set us straight?

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: Thank you, and that's an opportunity for me, and I appreciate it. In the nature of a campaign, it seems that some campaigns are focused on attacking a person rather than prescribing their own future and the things they'd like to do. In the course of that, I think the President's campaign has tried to characterize me as someone who's very different than who I am. I care about 100 percent of the American people. I want 100 percent of the American people to have a bright and prosperous future. I care about our kids. I understand what it takes to make a bright and prosperous future for America again. I spent my life in the private sector, not in government. I'm a guy who wants to help, with the experience I have, the American people.

My passion probably flows from the fact that I believe in God and I believe we're all children of the same God. I believe we have a responsibility to care for one another. I served as a missionary for my church. I served as a pastor in my congregation for about 10 years. I've sat across the table from people who are out of work, and worked with them to try and find new work, or to help them through tough times.

I went to the Olympics when they were in trouble to try and get them on track. And as governor of my state, I was able to get 100 percent of my people insured, all my kids, about 98 percent of the adults; was able also to get our schools ranked at number one in the nation, so 100 percent of our kids would have a bright opportunity for a future.

I understand that I can get this country on track again. We don't have to settle for what we're going through. We don't have to settle for gasoline at $4. We don't have to settle for unemployment at a chronically high level. We don't have to settle for 47 million people on food stamps. We don't have to settle for 50 percent of kids coming out of college not able to get work. We don't have to settle for 23 million people struggling to find a good job.

If I become President, I'll get America working again. I will get us on track to a balanced budget. The President hasn't. I will. I'll make sure we can reform Medicare and Social Security to preserve them for coming generations. The President said he would. He didn't.

MS. CROWLEY: Governor --

GOVERNOR ROMNEY: I'll get our incomes up. And by the way, I've done these things. I served as governor and showed I could get them done.

MS. CROWLEY: Mr. President, last two minutes belong to you.

THE PRESIDENT: Barry, I think a lot of this campaign, maybe over the last four years, has been devoted to this notion that I think government creates jobs, that that somehow is the answer. That's not what I believe.

I believe that the free enterprise system is the greatest engine of prosperity the world has ever known. I believe in self-reliance and individual initiative, and risk-takers being rewarded. But I also believe that everybody should have a fair shot and everybody should do their fair share, and everybody should play by the same rules, because that's how our economy is grown. That's how we built the world's greatest middle class. And that is part of what's at stake in this election. There's a fundamentally different vision about how we move our country forward.

I believe Governor Romney is a good man, loves his family, cares about his faith. But I also believe that when he said behind closed doors that 47 percent of the country consider themselves victims, who refuse personal responsibility, think about who he was talking about -- folks on Social Security who have worked all their lives; veterans who have sacrificed for this country; students who are out there trying to hopefully advance their own dreams but also this country's dreams; soldiers who are overseas fighting for us right now; people who are working hard every day, paying payroll tax, gas taxes, but don't make enough income.

And I want to fight for them. That's what I've been doing for the last four years, because if they succeed, I believe the country succeeds.

And when my grandfather fought in World War II, and he came back, and he got a GI Bill and that allowed him to go to college, that wasn't a handout. That was something that advanced the entire country. And I want to make sure that the next generation has those same opportunities. That's why I'm asking for your vote, and that's why I'm asking for another four years.

MS. CROWLEY: President Obama, Governor Romney, thank you for being here tonight.

On that note, we have come to an end of this town hall debate. (Applause.) Our thanks to the participants for their time, and to the people of Hofstra University for their hospitality.

The next and final debate takes place Monday night at Lynn University in Boca Raton, Florida. Don't forget to watch. Election Day is three weeks from today. Don't forget to vote. Good night.

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AND FIRST LADY
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Davenport, Iowa

5:47 P.M. CDT

MRS. OBAMA: I decided to bring someone out with me. You may know this guy. (Applause.)

I want to start by thanking Amanda for that very kind introduction. We are so proud of her. And we are so grateful for her service. So let's give Amanda another round of applause. (Applause.) And thank you, Amanda, for getting the President to eat some fruit this morning. That's good. (Laughter.)

Well, you guys, this looks amazing. You all sound really fired up. (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Fired up!

MRS. OBAMA: And you definitely sound ready to go. (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Ready to go!

MRS. OBAMA: And let me tell you, I'm glad to hear it because --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Four more years!

MRS. OBAMA: Yes, indeed, with your help! (Applause.) With your help.

Let me just say this. I shared this with the folks earlier today, but being back in the great state of Iowa -- (applause) -- yes, indeed! (Applause.) Where it all began for us. (Applause.) I have to say I'm feeling pretty fired up and ready to go myself.

Our family has so many great memories of our time here in Iowa. As I mentioned earlier, I remember when we went to Pella, and an entire neighborhood sang "Happy Birthday" to Mallia on the Fourth of July. (Applause.) Yes. It was so sweet. I remember, on the big day at the Jefferson-Jackson Dinner, we danced with about a thousand folks across the street with the Isiserettes. It's a marching band. We've had them back to the White House since. But that was exciting.

And our girls still talk about our visit to the State Fair. That was like I think the first big State Fair we ever went to. (Applause.) And it was so much fun. We did everything. We rode the bumper cars, and we slid down this big slide. I mentioned how Barack almost dropped Sasha -- (laughter) -- off of the slide. (Applause.) She flew up and he barely -- I wasn't very happy about that. (Laughter.)

And, that is where, yes, we experienced our very first fried Twinkie on a stick. (Applause.) It was here. And it was also pretty funny because he was a senator at the time and he had a lot of press, and they were everywhere. And the girls were holding baby chicks, and the cameras were flashing. So when it was time for him to leave -- he left early -- the girls actually turned around to me and said, "Whew. I'm so glad Daddy is gone." (Laughter.) Now we can really have some fun. (laughter.)

We essentially shut the State Fair down. So we had a great time. And I'll have to say that I'm a little bit jealous that Barack got to go to the State Fair this week without me.

AUDIENCE: Awwww --

MRS. OBAMA: Oh, it's so sad.

THE PRESIDENT: It was good. (Laughter.)

MRS. OBAMA: So today I want to start by saying thank you, truly, thank you. I want to thank everybody in the state for the kindness and generosity and love that you all have shown our family. Regardless of what party you're from, regardless of how you felt about us, you have shown us so much love. (Applause.) And you don't understand how important that was for me because Iowa was my very first experience with a national campaign. And because of you all, this state, the people in this state, our girls still think campaigning is fun. (Laughter.) They really do.

More importantly, because of all of you, Barack and I will always remember what this process can be at its very best. Truly, every election, the folks here in Iowa, you all remind us what democracy is all about. And it's really about getting to know the issues and discussing the issue with your neighbors. It's about meeting your candidates and getting to know them and their families really up close and personal in a way that very few states get to do.

And I will never forget my very first visit here back in 2007, and I remember it well because we were in the backyard of someone's home. It was just such a simple gathering. And I have to admit that I was a little nervous because I hadn't done much campaigning. And back then, people barely even knew who Barack was, let alone who I was.

So I didn't know how it would be. But the folks in that backyard welcomed me like I was an old friend. And within minutes I was so comfortable that I kicked off my high heels and I was standing in the lawn, in the grass, with bare feet, talking and laughing and listening to people's stories. And that's when I learned that that's what campaigning is about -- hearing about what's going on in people's lives, about the jobs that they're juggling and the businesses they're trying to keep afloat, the kids they hope to send to college if they can find a way to afford it.

And the more we talked, the more I felt at home -- because in their stories, I saw my story. I saw Barack's story. And you all know my story. My father worked at the city water plant his entire life; that was pretty much the only job he had. And neither of my parents had the chance to get a college degree. But as I tell people everywhere I go, what I appreciate about my parents was that they saved and they sacrificed, and they poured everything they had into me and my brother so that we could have the kind of educational opportunities they could only dream of. (Applause.)

And like Barack, pretty much all of our college tuition came from student loans and grants. Yes, we can relate to how a lot of folks go to college. But my dad still had to pay a small portion of that tuition himself. And let me tell you, every semester, my father was determined to pay his little portion right on time, because he was so proud to play a small part in sending his kids to college that he couldn't bear the thought of us missing a registration deadline because his check was late.

And really, more than anything else, that's what I try to remind people when I go out and campaign -- that's what's at stake in this election. (Applause.) It's that fundamental promise that no matter who you are or how you started out, if you work hard, in America, you can build a decent life for yourself and an even better life for your kids. (Applause.) That's why we're here.

And whether it's equal pay for women or health care for our families, whether it's supporting our veterans or saving our auto industry, that is what this man, my husband, has been fighting for every single day as President. (Applause.)

And let me just share something with you -- because over the last three and a half years, as First Lady, I have had the chance to see up close and personal what being President is like. And I have seen how the issues that come across a President's desk are always the hard ones -- the problems with no clear solutions, the judgment calls where the stakes are so high and there's no margin for error.

And I have seen that as President, you are going to get all kinds of advice and guidance from all kinds of people. But at the end of the day, when it's time to make that decision all you have to guide you are your values and your vision and your life experiences. And what I've learned is that, in the end, it all boils down to who you are and what you stand for.

And we all know who my husband is, don't we? (Applause.) And we all know what he stands for. And I remind people, your President is the son of a single mother who struggled to put herself through school and pay the bills. He's the grandson of a woman who woke up before dawn every day to catch a bus to her job at a bank. And even though Barack's grandmother was good at her job and worked hard to support his family, like so many women, she hit that glass ceiling and watched men no more qualified than she was -- men she'd actually trained -- climb that ladder ahead of her.

So I remind people that Barack knows what it means when a family struggles. And he knows what it means to want something better for your kids and your grandkids. (Applause.) And that's why I love him, and that's why I will have his back forever. (Applause.)

And that is also what I think about when I kiss our girls goodnight. I think about the world I want to leave for them and for all our sons and daughters. I think about how I want to give our kids a foundation for their dreams and opportunities worthy of their promise -- because all of our kids in this country are worthy. (Applause.) We want give them that sense of limitless possibility, the belief that here in America, the greatest country on the planet, there is always something better out there if you're willing to work for it. (Applause.)

So I know that we cannot turn back now -- not now. We have come so far, but we have so much more to do. And if we keep on moving forward, then we need to work our hearts out for this man that I have the pleasure of introducing here today -- my husband and our President, President Barack Obama. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you! (Applause.) Hello, Davenport! (Applause.) It is good to be back in the Quads. (Applause.) I see a lot of familiar faces, a lot of good friends.

First of all, let me just say that I, too, could not be prouder of Amanda Irish -- her service to this country, everything that she's done. She wants to go back to medical school. She is going to be a great doctor, and she's going to help a lot of people. Give her a big round of applause. (Applause.)

Your Mayor and a great friend of mine for a long, long time, Bill Gluba is here. (Applause.)

There is another friend of mine who's here that isn't going to come up on stage, but I want to make a special mention to him. He's from the other side of the river. He's an Illinoisan. (Applause.) But I tell you what, this is a guy who served his country, looked after veterans, was a fighter for working families, and was the first guy outside of Chicago to endorse me and support me when I ran for the United States Senate back in 2004. And if had not been for his support, I wouldn't be standing here today. He has shown even more courage in battling Parkinson's, and is somebody who I will always think of when I think of integrity and public service. So I just want everybody to give a big round of applause to former Congressman Lane Evans -- a great friend of mine. (Applause.) Lane is right there.

And finally, let me say something about my wife. I don't usually like to follow her speaking -- (laughter) -- because, let's face it, on the charisma rankings in my household, you've got her, the girls, Bo -- (laughter) -- and then my mother-in-law and then me. Actually, my mother-in-law is before Bo, obviously. (Laughter.) I love my mother-in-law, too -- that's where Michelle got her looks from. So when other Obamas are participating I tend to kind of shine quite a bit much.

But I've called her the "rock" of our family. That may sell it short. I don't know anybody who is more honest, who is stronger, who knows who she is, knows what's important, remembers where she came from, is the best mom in the world, keeps me in line, keeps me straight, keeps me humble -- and she's cute. (Applause.) So I told people back in 2008, I won't be a perfect President, and I'm not a perfect man, but we do have a perfect First Lady. Please give it up for Michelle Obama. (Applause.)

Now, as Michelle mentioned, this is our third day in Iowa. I started out in Council Bluffs and we drove here, all the way to the Quads -- west to east. And we've stopped all across the state -- everywhere we've gone we have had fun. It is true, I have eaten a lot. (Laughter.) At the State Fair I had a pork chop and a beer. (Applause.) And it was very good.

But we met farmers who have been hurt badly by the drought, and talked to them about the importance of Congress getting its act together and passing a farm bill. (Applause.) That's not an issue that's been partisan in the past, there's no reason it should be now -- especially when farmers and ranchers are hurting.

We met folks who have helped Iowa become a leader in wind energy -- (applause) -- and talked about how we need to keep investing in clean, renewable energy. This morning I had breakfast with Amanda and a number of other veterans, and listened to their stories about not only the pride they took in service to their country, but also they were pretty honest about some of the difficulties when they came home. And I reminded them that as Commander-in-Chief, one promise I guarantee I'll keep -- we are going to make sure we serve our veterans as well as they served us. (Applause.)

And everywhere I went, I was reminded -- because I'd see folks who I hadn't seen in a couple of years: friends, neighbors, hit spots we had gone to in 2007-2008 -- I was reminded of how this movement for changed started in folks' backyards and in school gyms, and in VFW halls and in diners all across this state. And this may be the last stop on our particular trip here this week, but that journey that we started back in 2008, it's not finished.

We've got a lot more work to do. We've got unfinished business to attend to. I've come here to ask you to stand with me and help me finish the job. (Applause.) I'm asking you to help finish what we started, to bring about the change that is going to make America live up to its promise -- not just for this generation but for generations to come. That is why I am running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Three months -- less than three months from now, less than three months -- not that I'm counting -- (laughter) -- you will face a choice. And that choice could not be bigger.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: It's a choice that you face this November that is not just about two candidates or two political parties -- it's a choice between two fundamentally different visions of where to take America. And the direction that you choose when you walk into that voting booth is not going to have a direct -- not just going to have a direct impact on your lives, it's going to have an impact on your kids' lives and your grandchildren's lives.

When we came together in 2007-2008 -- Democrats, independents and, yes, some Republicans -- we came together to restore that basic bargain that built this country -- Michelle talked about it. Simple idea: Here in this country, if you work hard you can get ahead. Here in this country, if you take responsibility and you put in the effort, you should be able to find a job that supports a family, you should be able to find a home you can call your own, you shouldn't go bankrupt when you get sick, you should be able to retire with dignity and respect -- (applause) -- and, most of all, you should be able to give your kids the kind of education and opportunity that allows them to dream even bigger and do even better than we ever did. (Applause.) That is the basic American promise, and that promise was being broken.

We had seen a decade where jobs were being shipped overseas, and where wages and incomes were going down except for a few at the very top, even while the cost of everything from health care to college were skyrocketing. We saw 2 wars fought on a credit card, surplus going into deficit, all culminating in the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression.

So we knew that restoring that basic American idea that if you work hard you can get ahead, that it wouldn't be easy; that it was going to take more than one year or one term or even one President. And that was all before we saw how badly this financial crisis hammered middle-class families -- folks losing their homes and losing their jobs, losing their savings, all pushing that American Dream a little further out of reach.

And I told you in -- four years ago, I said, don't look for quick fixes; we didn't get into this overnight, we're not going to solve it overnight. But what I said, and what is still true is we've got all the things we need, all the ingredients. We've got the capacity to meet our challenges. We've still got the best workers in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best farmers in the world. We've got the best small businesspeople in the world. We've got the best scientists and researchers and colleges and universities in the world. (Applause.)

We're a young nation, and we've got the greatest diversity of talent and ingenuity. People want to come here from every corner of the globe. No matter what the naysayers may say, there is not another country on Earth that would not trade places with the United States of America. (Applause.) People around the world understand this is still a place where no matter what you look like or where you come from or what your last name is, you can make it. And that's the idea we're trying to rebuild. (Applause.) That's why we're -- that's what this campaign is about. That's what the last three and a half years have been about.

Every day, I've woken up thinking about you. That's what we thought about when we put in place the Recovery Act to help make sure that everybody who needed it got a tax cut; to make sure that teachers could stay on the job, and firefighters and cops. (Applause.) That's what I was thinking about when we saved the auto industry that was about to go under. (Applause.) That's how we worked with businesses to help create 4.5 million new jobs -- half a million in manufacturing.

But we've got a long way to go. We've got more work to do. We know that. And the big challenge we have right now is not a lack of big ideas, it's not a lack of solutions. Our problem is politics in Washington. (Applause.) We've got folks on the other side who think "compromise" is a dirty word, and basically have only 2 ideas to grow the economy.

One is to get rid of regulations that we put in place to make sure that we don't have another tax-funded bailout -- taxpayer-funded bailout when the banks make reckless decisions, or make sure that polluters aren't polluting, or make sure insurance companies aren't taking advantage of you. So they want to strip away those regulations. And the other big idea they've got is the same kind of top-down economics that got us into this mess in the first place.

Governor Romney's big idea is a $5 trillion tax cut, on top of the Bush tax cuts -- a lot of which would be going to the wealthiest Americans who've already been doing very well.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Romney Hood!

THE PRESIDENT: And here's the kicker: He's expecting you to pay for it.

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: Because $5 trillion is a lot of money. That's 10 times our defense budget, so that would be the equivalent of our defense budget in tax cuts every single year. And his basic idea is that middle-class families with children would see their tax bill go up an average $2,000. This is not my analysis. This is an analysis that was done by independent economists.

And they're asking you to pay more in your taxes not to reduce the deficit, or grow jobs, or invest in education, but to give another $250,000 tax cut to people making $3 million a year or more.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, his allies in Congress have the same view. You heard that he announced Congressman Ryan as his running mate -- and look, Congressman Ryan, I know him, he's a good man, a family man. But he is the ideological leader of this Republican Congress. And he's a very articulate spokesperson for Governor Romney's vision. The problem is the vision is wrong. (Applause.) We don't agree with it.

They have tried to sell us this top-down, trickle-down economics before. (Laughter.) We just tried it right before I took office. And guess what, it did not work. It didn't work then, and it won't work now. It's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to reduce the deficit. It's not a plan to move our economy forward. Now, secretly, I think they know this. They understand their economic plan isn't very popular -- because they started making all kinds of stuff up about my plan.

I'll give you an example. Lately, they've been talking about Medicare. Now, keep in mind these are -- both Governor Romney and Congressman Ryan in the past have said they want to voucherize the Medicare system.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: Here's what I've done. I've strengthened Medicare. I've made reforms that save millions of seniors with Medicare hundreds of dollars on their prescription drugs. (Applause.) We're closing the doughnut hole. I've proposed reforms that will save Medicare money by getting rid of wasteful spending in the health care system. (Applause.) Reforms that will not touch your Medicare benefits.

And Governor Romney and his running mate have a different plan. They want to turn Medicare into a voucher system. That means seniors would no longer have the guarantee of Medicare -- they'd get a voucher to buy private insurance. And if it doesn't keep up with costs, well, that's the seniors' problem.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: It was estimated that Governor Romney's running mate, his original plan would force seniors to pay an extra $6,400 a year.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: My plan has extended Medicare by nearly a decade. Their plan ends Medicare as we know it. My plan reduces the cost of Medicare by cracking down on fraud and waste and subsidies to insurance companies. Their plan makes seniors pay more to help finance another tax cut for folks who don't need it.

That's an example of the difference between our two philosophies. That's the choice in this election. And that is why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: You know, when it comes to taxes, four years ago I promised to cut middle-class taxes -- I did it. If anybody tells you democrats are all big tax-and-spend, you tell them, well, my taxes are lower than they were before President Obama took office by about $3,600 for a typical family. (Applause.)

So now, I want to keep taxes right where they are for the first $250,000 of everybody's income. (Applause.) If your family makes under $250,000 -- like 98 percent of Americans, and 97 percent of small businesses -- you won't see your income taxes increase by a single dime next year. (Applause.)

Now, if you're fortunate enough to be in the other 2 percent you will still keep the tax cut on the first $250,000 you make. But if you're making more than that, we're going to ask you to contribute just a little bit more to help pay down the deficit and allow us to still invest in things like education that help the economy grow. (Applause.)

That won't solve the whole deficit problem. We've still got to make some smart cuts. I've already cut a trillion dollars of spending -- we can do more. But we can't just balance our budget on the backs of middle-class families --

AUDIENCE: No!

THE PRESIDENT: -- not just on the backs of the poor.

So what I said is, look, I know folks like me are in a position to do a little bit more, go back to the rates we paid under Bill Clinton -- a time when we created 23 million new jobs, we had a budget surplus instead of a deficit. (Applause.) And guess what, you know what, millionaires did good too. (Laughter.) Businesses and corporations did well too. And here's the reason -- when a teacher or a firefighter or a receptionist or a construction worker, when they've got a little more money in their pockets, when you've got a little more money in your pockets, what do you do?

AUDIENCE: Spend it!

THE PRESIDENT: You spend it. Because times are tough. You maybe haven't bought a new car in 10 years. Maybe you've got an old broken appliance that's just been sitting there, doesn't work. Maybe your kid is going to college and you want to make sure they've got a computer to help them with their studies.

So you go out, and now businesses have more customers. And when businesses have more customers, they make more profit. And when they make more profit, they hire more workers. And then those workers have a little more money and they go out and spend some more. (Applause.)

See, when you look at the history of this country, we didn't grow through top-down economics, we grew through middle class-out economics. We grew from bottom-up economics. We grew together, where everybody got a fair shot, and everybody is doing their fair share, and everybody is playing by the same set of rules. That's the choice in this election. And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

So on almost every issue, you're going to have a choice. When the auto industry was on the brink of collapse, Governor Romney said let's "let Detroit go bankrupt." I said that's a million workers at stake, and I believe in American workers. And three years later, the American auto industry has come roaring back.

So now I want to make sure American manufacturing is taking root here. Let's change this tax code once and for all -- stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Let's give them to companies that are investing here in the United States of America. (Applause.)

Governor Romney wants to keep those tax breaks. He likes to talk about his private sector experience, but a lot of it was investing in companies that have been called "pioneers" of outsourcing. We don't need more outsourcing, we need more insourcing. (Applause.) That's a difference in this election. That's a choice in this election.

I want to make sure we've got the best education system in the world. (Applause.) I want to make sure that local school districts can hire more teachers, especially in math and science. I want to make sure that 2 million more people can go to community colleges so they can get trained for the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. And I want to keep pushing on colleges on universities to lower tuition so every young person can afford to get a higher education. That's a choice in this election. (Applause.)

Governor Romney wants to end the tax credits for wind energy.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: Wind energy creates 7,000 jobs in Iowa -- 7,000 jobs. Governor Romney said these new sources of energy are "imaginary." Congressman Ryan said they're a "fad". Those 7,000 jobs aren't a fad, they're our future.

We should stop giving $4 billion a year in taxpayer subsidies to the big oil companies that are already making money, and help create homegrown sources of energy that put Americans back to work and help free ourselves from dependence on foreign oil. That's the choice in this election. (Applause.)

In 2009, I said I'd end the war in Iraq -- and I did. (Applause.) I said we would refocus attention on al Qaeda and bin Laden -- and we did. (Applause.) We've set a timeline to end the war in Afghanistan. All this was possible because of incredible men and women in uniform like Amanda. (Applause.) So now we've got an obligation to make sure that our VA and all our services are doing what we need to do for our veterans now that they're coming home.

But part of that is also taking some of the savings after a decade of war and using them to put folks back to work doing some nation-building here at home. (Applause.) Let's rebuild some roads and some bridges. Let's create a Veteran's Jobs Corps so they can get jobs as firefighters and cops in communities that need them. (Applause.) That's the America I want to build. That's a choice in this election. (Applause.)

And let me just tell you one more choice -- Governor Romney said one of the first things he's going to do on day one is he's going to kill Obamacare.

AUDIENCE: Booo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, I've got to say, I've grown kind of fond of the term Obamacare. (Applause.) Because I do care. (Applause.) I care about all the families in Iowa and Illinois and all across the country that I've met who have preexisting conditions and now they know they're going to be able to get health care coverage. (Applause.) I care about 6.5 million young people who can now stay on their parent's plan because of Obamacare. (Applause.) I care about the seniors who are getting discounts on their prescription drugs because of Obamacare. (Applause.)

So maybe Governor Romney wants to have another three years' worth of argument about health care. I want to move forward. The Supreme Court has spoken. We are implementing it. It is helping families all across this nation. We are moving forward, not backward. That's a difference in this election. (Applause.)

So on all these issues -- whether it's health care security, making sure Medicare is there for future generations, making sure that we're rebuilding America, making sure our kids are getting the best education possible -- these are all ingredients of what we know to be a middle-class life. It's what Michelle talked about. It's what helped Michelle and me have the opportunities to do things that our parents could not have imagined.

And now, we want to make sure the next generation has it. And I know you guys feel the same way because you've got that same story. Your parents, your grandparents, your great-grandparents -- the struggles they went through to give us a shot. We've got an obligation now to make sure our children have that same shot, that same opportunity. That's why this election is so important. That's what we're fighting for. (Applause.)

And you know, over the next three months the other side will spend more money than we have ever seen on ads telling you one thing -- that the economy is not so good and it's Obama's fault. And you know, their economic theory doesn't sell, so that's going to be their message. And it may be a plan to win the election, but it's not a plan to create jobs or reduce the deficit or grow the economy. They don't have a plan to revive the middle class, but I do.

And so I tell you what, we've come too far to turn back now. (Applause.) We've got too many jobs we've got to create. We've got too many teachers we've got to hire. We've got too many students who need to afford to be able to go to college. (Applause.) We've got more energy we've got to generate and more troops we've got to bring home. (Applause.) We've got more doors of opportunity that we've got to open to everybody who is willing to work hard to walk through them. (Applause.)

So if you're willing to work with me one more time, and stand with me one more time, and knock on some doors one more time, and make some phone calls one more time: if you're willing to vote for me this November, we'll win Davenport, we'll win Iowa, we'll win this election. We'll finish what we started. And we'll remind the world why the United States of America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you, and God bless the United States of America.

August 15,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AND FIRST LADY
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Alliant Energy Amphitheater
Dubuque, Iowa

12:34 P.M. CDT

MRS. OBAMA: Oh, my goodness! (Applause.) This is so sweet.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you!

MRS. OBAMA: We love you guys, too. (Applause.) Let me start by --

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

MRS. OBAMA: Four more! (Applause.) But I want to start by thanking Jennifer for -- (applause.) We are so proud of her. And we are so grateful for her sacrifice and her service, and for Andrew's service and sacrifice as well. So I just want to thank her for that wonderful introduction and for all she's doing for our country. (Applause.)

And, yes, it sounds like you all are pretty fired up. (Applause.) And very ready to go. (Applause.) And I'm really glad to hear that. First of all, it's good to see my husband. (Laughter.) Because I haven't seen him in a good week.

THE PRESIDENT: Five days.

MRS. OBAMA: Five days?

THE PRESIDENT: Five days.

MRS. OBAMA: It seemed like a week, it was so long. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: I missed you.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We love you!

MRS. OBAMA: Just take care of him. (Laughter.)

But I am just as happy to be back in the great state of Iowa, where it all began. (Applause.) So you guys are getting me all fired up just being here. It is so beautiful here. (Applause.) It is so beautiful. Good to be back. Our family has so many wonderful memories of our time here in Iowa. In Pella, I remember that an entire neighborhood sang "Happy Birthday" to Malia on the Fourth of July. (Laughter.) That was so sweet. She was a little, bitty something, too.

And on the day of the big Jefferson-Jackson Dinner, I remember how we danced down the street with the Isiserettes. (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: That's what they were called.

MRS. OBAMA: It was the Isiserettes -- and a few thousand folks across the state, as well, were there, too. So that was fun.

THE PRESIDENT: That was fun.

MRS. OBAMA: And our girls, Malia and Sasha, they still talk about our visit to the State Fair. (Applause.) We had a ball. We rode the bumper cars; we slid down that big slide -- where Barack almost lost Sasha. (Laughter.) She flew up --

THE PRESIDENT: I held on.

MRS. OBAMA: It wasn't pretty. Wasn't happy about that. (Laughter.) And, yes, we experienced the magic of our first fried Twinkie. (Applause.) Yes, we did. Even though you say I don't let you eat them, you eat what you want. (Laughter.)

But we were surrounded by the press, so Barack left and the girls looked at me and they said, "Oh, I'm so glad Dad is gone." (Laughter.) Now we can have fun. (Laughter.) So after he left, we stayed. We cut loose. We stayed until the fair shut down. It was a ball. And I have to say that we're all very jealous that Barack got to go back to the fair without us last week. Did you have a fried Twinkie?

THE PRESIDENT: Pork chop and beer. (Laughter and applause.)

MRS. OBAMA: He's so pleased with himself. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: It was good. It was tasty.

MRS. OBAMA: But in all seriousness, though, because of those wonderful memories and so many more, I want to start by saying thank you. Truly. Thank you for the kindness, generosity and love that you have shown our family -- I mean, throughout the state, consistently. (Applause.) Iowa was our very first experience with a national campaign, truly. And it is because of all of you that Malia and Sasha still think campaigning is fun. (Laughter.) They do. Now, they never really want to go, but they're like, that was fun. (Laughter.)

But more importantly, because of you, Barack and I will always remember what this process can be at its very best. Every election, you all remind us what democracy is all about. It's about people getting to know the issues and discussing them with their neighbors. It's about meeting your candidates and getting to know them and their families up close and personal.

I will never forget the very first visit that I made here back in 2007, and I think it was the very first campaign event I did, so of course I was nervous. And it was in the backyard of someone's home, and I have to admit I really didn't know what it would be like. I hadn't done much campaigning, and back then people barely even knew who Barack was, let alone who I was.

But the folks in that backyard welcomed me like an old friend, and within minutes, I was so comfortable that I remember kicking off my heels and I was standing barefoot in the grass, just talking and laughing and listening to people's stories. And I heard about what was going on in folks' lives -- the jobs they were juggling, the businesses they were trying to keep afloat, the kids they hoped to send to college if they could just find a way to afford it.

And the more we talked, the more at home I felt -- because what I learned was that in all of those stories I saw my story; I saw Barack's story. I mean, you all know that story by now. My father worked at the city water plant his entire life. And neither of my parents had a college degree, but they saved and sacrificed so that my brother and I could have the kind of education they only dreamed of.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Whitney Young!

MRS. OBAMA: And while -- Whitney Young? Oh, my goodness, that's my high school. (Laughter.) Go, Dolphins! (Laughter.)

And while pretty much all of our college tuition came from student loans and grants, my dad still had to pay a small portion of that tuition himself. And every semester, my dad was determined to pay his little portion of our tuition bill and to pay it on time -- because he was so proud to be able to play even just a little part in sending his kids to college. So he couldn't bear the thought that me or my brother would miss a registration deadline because his check was late.

And really, more than anything else, what I remind people is that's what's at stake in this election. That's why we're all here. That's what we're working for. It's that fundamental promise that no matter who you are or where you started out, in America, if you work hard you can build a decent life for yourself and an even better life for your kids. (Applause.) That's why we're here.

And whether it's equal pay for women or health care for our families, whether it's supporting our veterans or saving our auto industry, that's what this man, my husband, has been fighting for every single day as President. (Applause.)

And the one thing I share with people is that over the last three and a half years, as First Lady, I have had the chance to see up close and personal what being President really looks like. And I've seen some things. (Laughter.) But seriously, I have seen how the issues that come across the President's desk are always the hard ones -- the problems with no clear solutions, the judgment calls where the stakes are so high and there's absolutely no margin for error.

And as President, I've seen how you're going to get all kinds of advice and opinions from all kinds of people. But the truth is that at the end of the day, as President, all you have to guide you are your values and your vision and your life experiences. In the end, it all boils down to who you are and what you stand for. (Applause.)

And we all know who my husband is, don't we? (Applause.) And we all know what he stands for. (Applause.) He is the son of a single mother who struggled to put herself through school and pay the bills. He's the grandson of a woman who woke up before dawn every day to catch a bus to her job at the bank.

And even though Barack's grandmother worked hard to help support his family and she was good at her job, like so many women, she hit that glass ceiling and watched men no more qualified than she was -- men she'd actually trained -- climb up that ladder ahead of her.

So what I remind people is that your President knows what it means when a family struggles. This is not a hypothetical situation for him. He knows what it means to want something better for your kids and your grandkids. (Applause.) And that's why I love him, that's why I married. And that's what I think about every night when I put Malia and Sasha to bed. Sometimes they put me to bed. (Laughter.) I can't stay up later than them anymore.

But I think about the world that I want to leave for them, for all of our sons and daughters. I think about how I want to give our kids that foundation for their dreams, opportunities worthy of their promise -- because all of our children in this country are worthy. (Applause.) We all want to work to give them that sense of limitless possibility, that belief that here in America, the greatest country on Earth, there's always something better out there if you're willing to work for it. (Applause.)

So we know that we can't turn back now. We have come so far, but we have so much more work to do. And if we keep moving forward, then we need to work our hearts out for the man that I have the pleasure of introducing -- (applause) -- my husband and our President, President Barack Obama. (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Hello, Dubuque! (Applause.) Thank you, Dubuque. How is everybody doing today? (Applause.)

Now, first of all, I, too, just want to thank Jennifer for not just her introduction, but for serving as a military spouse and championing the causes that are so important for so many military families like hers. And so please give her a big -- another round of applause. Thank you for everything that you do. Very proud of you. (Applause.)

I also want to acknowledge, sitting next to Jennifer is Congressman Bruce Braley -- (applause) -- who helped to get the bill that Jennifer had worked on, based on her experience with Andrew, passed, and I had the honor of signing into law -- Congressman Bruce Braley, who is doing a great job on behalf of our veterans and on behalf of working people here in Iowa. (Applause.)

A couple of other friends who are here -- your own Attorney General -- this guy supported me when nobody could pronounce my name. (Laughter.) Folks would say, Tom, why are you doing that? But he is a man of great integrity, a champion on behalf of consumers nationwide as well as here in Iowa -- Tom Miller is here. Give him a big round of applause. (Applause.) Also, your own Mayor -- Mayor Roy Buol is here. Give Roy a big round of applause. (Applause.)

And finally, my wife. (Applause.) Now, it is true, I have not seen her in five days and -- except I caught the end of Leno. (Laughter.) And the only reason that she, I think, is happy to see me is because she knows that after today, she gets to go tomorrow and get our girls from sleep-away camp, and she has been missing them terribly. So we stand in the way of her getting to her babies. (Laughter.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER: We still love you. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: But I have to tell you, when I stand here and listen to her, I am just reminded how lucky I am, because she is a woman of strength and integrity and honor. (Applause.) She keeps me straight every single day. She is the best mom in the world. (Applause.) And she's cute. (Laughter.)

And the problem is, sometimes when I listen to her talk I start choking up a little bit, and I forget what I'm going to say. (Laughter.) But I could not be prouder of her. And I say often -- back in 2008, I said, look, I'm not a perfect man; I won't be a perfect President. I do think she is a perfect First Lady. I just want you to know that. (Applause.)

Now, this is our third day in Iowa. (Applause.) And she's right, we have been traveling all across the state. We did stop at the State Fair. We stopped to get something to eat before she showed up, just so there wasn't any issues --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Smart man.

THE PRESIDENT: Smart man. (Laughter.)

We began the journey in Council Bluffs, and just like four years ago, we've traveled all across this state, west to east, meeting with you and talking about your lives. We've driven through Boone and Des Moines and Oskaloosa and Marshalltown and Waterloo and Cedar Rapids.

We met farmers who've been badly hurt by drought and who now need us to pass a farm bill. (Applause.) We met folks who've helped Iowa become a leader in wind energy. (Applause.) And now they need us to keep investing in clean, renewable energy. (Applause.) This morning I had breakfast with some of our outstanding veterans who fought under our proud flag. (Applause.) And so now we need to serve them just as well as they've served us, and make sure that they've got new jobs and new opportunities and a roof over their heads when they come home. (Applause.)

And every stop, I've got fond memories of the last campaign -- the campaign we had four years ago. Every stop, I've gotten reminders of what makes Iowa so special and how this is where our movement for change happened. (Applause.)

It was because of you. It was because of your stories and your strength and your spirit that I had the strength and the spirit to go through that campaign. And it's because of you that I've had the strength to do the job over the last three and a half years.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Thank you! (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: And I've got to tell you, Iowa, we're not done yet. This journey is not done yet. We've got some unfinished business to do. (Applause.) And I've come here to ask you to stand with me, just like you stood with me in 2008, to finish what we started. (Applause.)

Because less than three months from now, you will face a choice, and that choice could not be bigger. This is a choice not just between two candidates. It's not just between two political parties. More than any election in recent memory, this is a choice about two fundamentally different visions for our country, how we move this country forward. And the direction that you choose when you walk into that voting booth will have an impact not just on your lives, but on the lives of your children and the lives of your grandchildren. It will impact us for decades to come.

When we came together in 2008 -- and it wasn't just Democrats, we had independents and some Republicans, too -- it was to restore the basic bargain that built this country, the basic bargain that made us the most prosperous economy in the world. It's a bargain that says if we work hard, we should be rewarded. It's a deal that says if you put in enough effort, you can find a job that pays the bills. You can afford a home that you call your own. You won't go broke when you get sick. You can retire with dignity and respect. (Applause.) And, most of all, it's a bargain that says your kids will get a great education and they'll grow up safe and healthy. And they will have opportunities that you couldn't even dream of; that they will be able to achieve things that you could have only hoped for.

That's the basic promise of America. That's the American Dream. And we knew that restoring it wouldn't be easy, that it would take more than one year, or one term, or even one President -- because we had just gone through a decade in which the middle class had been taking a lot of hits. (Applause.) Jobs had been getting shipped overseas. Incomes and wages were flat or even going down, while the cost of everything from health care to college were going up. A few folks at the top were doing really well, but the average family was struggling.

And this was before we saw the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression. And so many more of our friends and neighbors and family members lost their jobs and lost their homes, lost their savings and pushed that American Dream even further out of reach.

So when I ran for this office four years ago, I told you there were no quick fixes, there were no easy solutions. That's still true today. But what I also told you and what is also still true today is that we have the capacity to meet every challenge. We've got everything we need to meet our challenges. (Applause.) We've still got the best workers in the world. (Applause.) We've still got the best entrepreneurs, and small businessmen and women in the world. (Applause.) We've got the best scientists and researchers in the world. We've got the best farmers in the world. We've got the best colleges and universities in the world. (Applause.)

We are still a young nation and we've got the greatest diversity of talent and ingenuity -- people want to come here from every corner of the globe. So no matter what the naysayers say, no matter how dark the other side tries to paint things, there is not another country on Earth that wouldn't gladly change places with the United States of America. (Applause.)

Because people understand that even though we go through some tough times, there is a resilience and grit about this country. And this country is the place where if you're willing to work hard -- no matter what you look like, no matter where you come from, no matter what your last name is -- you can make it. (Applause.)

That's the idea that we were trying to rebuild in 2008. That's the idea that we continue to pursue in 2012. That is what this campaign is all about. And that is why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Now, Dubuque, here's the thing -- I told you all the things we've got going for us. We do have one problem -- politics in Washington.

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: You've got the other side, which has decided that "compromise" is a dirty word, and thinks the only way to move forward is to go backwards to the same top-down economics that got us into this mess in the first place.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: You know, Governor Romney chose his running mate this week -- Congressman Ryan.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: No, no, no, Congressman Ryan -- I know him. He's a good man, beautiful family. He is the ideological leader of the Republicans in Congress. He is an articulate spokesman for Governor Romney's vision. I just happen to fundamentally disagree with his vision. (Applause.) Their vision is wrong for working families and it is wrong for the country.

Look, my opponent and his friends in Congress, they believe that if you just get rid of more regulations on big corporations and big banks, and then you give more tax breaks to the wealthiest Americans, that that will automatically lead to jobs and prosperity for ordinary families. And I'm not exaggerating here, that's their basic economic plan.

The centerpiece of Governor Romney's economic plan is a new $5 trillion tax cut -- a lot of it going to the wealthiest Americans.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, keep in mind, $5 trillion is a lot of money, even in Washington. Our entire defense budget is a little over half a trillion dollars a year, so this tax cut would be like giving the equivalent of the entire defense budget in tax cuts -- a lot of it going to very rich people -- every year for 10 years.

Now, these folks say they want to reduce the deficit and the debt. So the question is, well, how do you give away $5 trillion and then reduce the deficit? Well, recently we found out. Governor Romney expects you to pay for it --

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: -- expects middle-class families to pick up the tab. Governor Romney's tax plan would actually raise taxes on middle-class families by an average of $2,000 for families with children.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I don't have $2,000 --

THE PRESIDENT: You don't have $2,000 to spare. I didn't think so.

And, by the way, don't take my word for it. This is based on independent studies that have been done by folks who analyze this stuff for a living. They say, look, this will cost middle-class families with children an average of $2,000. And they're asking you to pay an extra 2,000 bucks not to reduce the deficit, not to help our kids get educated, not to help kids go to college, not to rebuild our roads or our bridges or our ports -- they're doing this to give another $250,000 tax cut to folks who are making $3 million a year or more.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, have you heard this before?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

THE PRESIDENT: They have been trying to sell this trickle-down snake oil before. (Laughter.) And guess what, it didn't work then. It won't work now. It's not a plan to create jobs. It's not a plan to reduce the deficit. It's not a plan to move the economy forward.

And, secretly, I think they know this. I think they know their plan is not very popular. You can tell that because they're being pretty dishonest about my plan -- especially, by the way, when it comes to Medicare. Now, this is something I've got to point out here, because they are just throwing everything at the wall to see if it sticks. (Laughter.)

Here's what you need to know: I have strengthened Medicare. I have made reforms that have saved millions of seniors with Medicare hundreds of dollars on their prescription drugs. (Applause.) I have proposed reforms that will save Medicare money by getting rid of wasteful spending in the health care system -- reforms that will not touch your Medicare benefits -- not by a dime.

Now, Mr. Romney and his running mate have a very different plan. They want to turn Medicare into a voucher program.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: That means seniors would no longer have the guarantee of Medicare -- they'd get a voucher to buy private insurance. And because the voucher wouldn't keep up with costs, the plan authored by Governor Romney's running mate, Congressman Ryan, would force seniors to pay an extra $6,400 a year. And I assume they don't have it.

AUDIENCE: Boo --

THE PRESIDENT: My plan has already extended Medicare by nearly a decade. (Applause.) Their plan ends Medicare as we know it. My plan reduces the cost of Medicare by cracking down on fraud and waste and subsidies to insurance companies. Their plan makes seniors pay more so they can give another tax cut to millionaires and billionaires.

That's the difference between our plans on Medicare. That's an example of the choice in this election. And that is why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.)

Just like we've got a different plan on Medicare, we've got a different economic plan. You just heard, they want to give $5 trillion tax cuts -- tax breaks to wealthy Americans who don't need them. Four years ago, I promised to cut middle-class taxes -- and, Dubuque, that's exactly what I've done. (Applause.) So if you talk to a friend of yours who says, oh, those Democrats, they're all tax-and-spend liberals, you tell them the average middle-class family, their taxes are about $3,600 lower since I've become President. (Applause.)

And right now, what I want to do is to keep taxes right where they are for the first $250,000 of everybody's income. If your family makes under $250,000 -- like 98 percent of American families do and 97 percent of small businesses do -- you won't see your income taxes increase by a single dime next year. (Applause.) Now, if you're fortunate enough to be in the other 2 percent --

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I wish! (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: If you're fortunate enough to be in the other 2 percent, you still get a tax cut on your first $250,000. But all we're asking is for the next little bit that you make you can afford to contribute a little bit more, above $250,000, so that we can pay down our deficit in a responsible, balanced way, and invest in things like education that help America grow. (Applause.)

Now, that alone won't cut our deficit. We're going to have to still make sure government does its part. We've already cut a trillion dollars' worth of spending that we don't need, and we can do more to make government more efficient. We have to do more. But we're not going to reduce the deficit just on the backs of the middle class.

So I think it makes sense to ask folks like me who've been incredibly blessed to go back to the rates that we paid under Bill Clinton -- a time, by the way, when nearly 23 million new jobs were created, we went from deficit to surplus -- (applause) -- and here's the kicker -- we created a lot of millionaires, too. (Laughter.) And the reason is, is because the economy, when you look back on American history, always works best when the middle class is doing well. (Applause.)

Let me ask you something. When a teacher or a construction worker or a receptionist or a firefighter -- when you get a little extra money in your pocket, what do you do?

AUDIENCE: Spend it!

THE PRESIDENT: You spend it. Because times are tight and maybe you've been driving around in that old beater, you had that car for 10 years and you decide it's about time to trade it in. Or maybe you think now is the time I can finally buy a new computer for my kid who is about to go to college. Or maybe I'll go to a restaurant, or, heaven forbid, I take a vacation once in a while. (Laughter.) And what happens is that suddenly businesses have more customers and they make more profits. And so folks at the top are doing very well, but the businesses -- because they're more profitable -- now they're hiring more workers, who then have more money, who then buy more products, who then give businesses more customers. (Applause.)

That's how you grow an economy -- not from the top down, from the middle out, from the bottom up, giving everybody a fair shot. (Applause.) That's the choice in this election, and that's why I'm running for a second term as President, because that's what I believe. That's my vision for the future. (Applause.)

On just about every issue, Governor Romney and I just have a different opinion. When the auto industry was on the brink of collapse, more than a million jobs at stake, Governor Romney said let's "let Detroit go bankrupt." I said let's bet on American workers. And we got workers and management together, and they changed how they were doing business. And three years later, the American auto industry is back on top. (Applause.) That's what I believe. That's the kind of America we need. (Applause.)

So now I want American manufacturing back in America. (Applause.) I want to stop giving tax breaks to companies that are shipping jobs overseas. Let's give those tax breaks to companies that are investing right here in Dubuque, right here in the Quads, right here in Iowa -- in Cleveland and Raleigh. (Applause.) Let's put people back to work. (Applause.)

Governor Romney likes to say, well, you know what, I know how to fix the economy, because I've been in the private sector. Well, it turns out that a lot of that experience was investing in companies that were called "pioneers" in outsourcing. We don't need folks who know how to outsource. We need folks who are working to insource, to create jobs here, and hire American workers so we sell American products around the world stamped with three proud words: Made In America. That's what I believe. (Applause.)

On energy, Governor Romney has said that he wants to get rid of the tax credit for wind energy -- doesn't believe in -- he says these sources of energy are "imaginary." Congressman Ryan calls them a "fad". He needs to come to Iowa. He'll find out that there are 7,000 jobs in this state that depend on the wind industry. These jobs aren't a "fad." They're the future. (Applause.)

We should stop giving $4 billion of taxpayer subsidies to oil companies that are making money every time you go to the pump. Let's start investing in clean energy that will create jobs and secure our future. That's a difference in this election. (Applause.)

I want to make sure that our kids are getting the best education in the world. (Applause.) I was just visiting some teachers before -- Cascade Middle School, right before I came here. Aren't you supposed to be at the in-service over there? (Laughter.) I won't tell. Just don't get photographed.

(Laughter.)

And we had this great meeting -- and folks don't go into teaching for the money. They go into it because they believe in our kids, they believe in our future. (Applause.) But school districts all across Iowa and all across the country are having a tough time -- budget cuts, teacher layoffs. So I've said let's help local school districts to make sure they can hire great teachers, especially in math and science, where we've got to really do better in terms of our performance. (Applause.) Let's make sure that 2 million more people can go to community colleges to train for the jobs that businesses are hiring for right now. And let's bring down college tuitions once and for all for young people -- because higher education is not a luxury. It's an economic necessity for young people. (Applause.)

Back in 2008, I said I would end the war in Iraq -- we ended it. (Applause.) I said we would go after al Qaeda and bin Laden -- we did. (Applause.) We are transitioning and bringing our troops out of Afghanistan. And so after a decade of war -- I say to folks none of this could have been accomplished if it hadn't been for our amazing men and women in uniform. (Applause.) So we've got to make investments to make sure that they're getting the services that they have earned, because they should never have to fight for a job when they have fought for this country. (Applause.)

And let's take half the money that we can save after a decade of war, and let's do some nation-building here at home. Let's hire some hardhats to get on the job rebuilding roads and bridges, schools. That's good for the economy. That's where we need to take America. (Applause.)

Governor Romney says his big economic plan -- in addition to these tax cuts for the wealthy -- he wants to kill Obamacare. Get rid of it.

AUDIENCE: Nooo --

THE PRESIDENT: Now, first of all, I want you to know I kind of like the term "Obamacare." (Laughter.) Because I do care. That's why I passed the bill. I care about folks with preexisting conditions -- which is why, because of this law, they'll be able to get health insurance. (Applause.) I care about the 6.5 million young people who can now stay on their parent's plan because of Obamacare. (Applause.) I care about the seniors who have seen discounts on their prescription drugs. We're closing the doughnut hole because of the law that we passed. (Applause.)

So if Mr. Romney and Congressman Ryan want to spend the next two and a half years having the same argument we had about health care all over again, they can feel free to try to do it. But the Supreme Court has spoken. It is the law of the land. We are moving forward to give every American the health security that they deserve. That is the difference in this election. (Applause.)

On all these issues -- health care, manufacturing, education -- all these things that go into creating a solid, secure middle-class life, all these issues tie together. It goes back to what Michelle was talking about and what I started off with, and that is who we are, our values. You know, we've gone through tough times, but what hasn't changed is our character. Americans are tough and we are resilient and we may get knocked down, but we bounce back up.

And the other thing that we understand is what our parents and our grandparents and our great-grandparents taught us, which is, if you work hard, this is the country to be. (Applause.) That you may meet some barriers some times, there may be some hurdles, but you can't be stopped when you decide on something. And that's what's at stake in this election. Do we affirm those values and pass them on to our kids and our grandkids just like we got them from our parents and our grandparents?

Now, over the next three months you are going to see more negative ads than you've ever seen in your life. You've already seen them. And these folks on the other side, I mean, they're just writing $10 million checks. Governor Romney obviously has got more friends than I do that can write $10 million checks. (Laughter.) And they are just -- they are running these ads, and they're not selling a plan to create jobs or to grow the economy or revive the middle class. Basically, they've got one message, and that is, the economy is not where it should be and it's Obama's fault.

And they're just going to say it over and over again. Over and over again. You're going to get sick of it -- you already are. And you know, I've got to admit, I would be worried, given the amount of money that is being spent, if it weren't for Iowa; if it weren't for what I remember about 2008. See, we've been outspent before. We've been counted out before. But what I know is, when the American people cut through the nonsense and they focus on what's important, and when they remember what it means for us to have a country where everybody gets a fair shot and everybody does their fair share and everybody plays by the same set of rules -- when you guys decide what's important, you can't be stopped. When you pull together, you've got more power than any guy who is writing a $10 million check. (Applause.)

And so, Iowa, I'm going to need your help one more time, here, to finish the job. (Applause.) We've got more schools to build. We've got more folks to put back to work. (Applause.) We've got more roads to build. We've got more young people to send to college. We've got more troops to come home. (Applause.) And if you are willing to stand with me, and work with me, and make some phone calls with me and knock on some doors with me, if you're still fired up, if you are still ready to go like I am, I promise you we will win Iowa. We will win this election. We will finish what we started. And you and I together will remind the world why America is the greatest nation on Earth.

God bless you, and God bless the United States of America. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE FIRST LADY
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

Ocean Center
Daytona Beach, Florida

3:38 P.M. EDT

MRS. OBAMA: Yeah! (Applause.) It is so great to be here to see all of you! I am thrilled -- beyond thrilled! (Applause.) Oh, my goodness, this is good stuff. (Applause.)

Before I begin, because as we've seen the last few days unfold, it's important to take a moment to make sure we send our thoughts and prayers out to everyone affected by Hurricane Sandy. I know, like you, all of you, the President and I, we are heartbroken about the lives that have been lost and the damage that has been done in so many of our communities. And as you know, your President has been working around the clock with governors and mayors and our extraordinary first responders to make sure that they have all the support and resources they need.

And here's the thing. When we face tragedy in this country, we come together. That is the beauty of America. And I know we will continue to come together as one American family to help our fellow citizens recover from this devastating storm. So we cannot do this until we acknowledge what is going on in this country, so I just want to thank you all -- and keep sending your prayers and your support. (Applause.)

I also want to start by thanking Wendy for that very kind introduction and for everything she's doing for this campaign. Let's give Wendy a round of applause. (Applause.) And I'm going to thank one of my dear friends who I miss seeing since I've visited Florida -- Grace Nelson, who is here. Grace, I love you. Thank you -- thank you for your outstanding job in the Senate, for your husband's job, and thank you for your friendship and your kind words. We love you so much. (Applause.)

And of course, I understand you got to hear from Marc Anthony, right? (Applause.) He gave some wonderful remarks and we are thrilled he could be with us today, and we are grateful for his support. He's just been just focused and fired up and ready to go -- just like all of you. And I'm glad you all are here joining us. (Applause.)

Are we fired up and ready to go? (Applause.) I love it! Because I have to tell you I'm feeling pretty fired up and ready to go. Because in just five days -- can you believe, five days -- (applause) -- we have the opportunity to re-elect such a decent, honest man -- (applause) -- a man whose courage and integrity we have seen every day for the last four years, the man I have known and loved for 23 years -- my husband, our President, Barack Obama. (Applause.) That's why we're here.

And I have to tell you that's really what made me fall in love with my husband. It's his character. It's his compassion, his conviction, his commitment to helping others. And that has been the man I have known all of our time together. I love that Barack was also so devoted to his family. I watched for that, ladies. (Laughter.) That was important. When we first met I looked for that in a man -- in this man. (Applause.) Especially his devotion to the women in his life. (Applause.) I saw the respect that he had for his own mother. I saw how proud he was that she was able to put herself through school and still support him and his sister as a single mom.

And I definitely saw the tenderness he felt for his grandmother. I saw how grateful he was that long after she should have retired, she was still waking up every morning, catching that bus to her job at the community bank. And he also watched as she was passed over for promotions year after year simply because she was a woman. But here's something he learned from her -- he saw how she kept on getting up every day, year after year, without complaint or regret.

See, here's the thing -- with Barack, I found a real connection, because in his life story I saw so much of my own. Growing up on the South Side of Chicago, I watched my father make that same uncomplaining journey every day to his job at the city water plant. And I saw how he carried himself with that dignity, with that same pride that comes from being able to provide for your family, that same hope that his kids would one day have opportunities he never dreamed of.

And here's the thing about this country -- see, like so many families in this country, our families weren't asking for much. They didn't want much. And they didn't begrudge anyone else's success; in fact, they admired it. They didn't mind if others had much more than they did. That's why they pushed us to be the very best we could be.

But they simply believed in that fundamental American promise that even if you don't start out with much, if you work hard, if you do what you're supposed to do, then you should be able to build a decent life for yourself and an even better life for your kids and grandkids. (Applause.)

See, and they also believed in something really important as well, that when you've worked hard -- young people, your hear me? When you've worked, when you've done well, when you finally have walked through that doorway of opportunity, here's what you don't do: You don't slam it shut behind you. You reach back and you give other folks the same chances that helped you succeed. (Applause.)

That's how Barack and I and I know so many of you -- that's how we were raised. And more than anything else, that is what this election is all about. It's a choice. It's a choice about our values, about our hopes, our aspirations. It's a choice about the America we want to leave for our kids and our grandkids.

What does that America look like? What do we believe in? We believe in an America where every child has access to good schools -- schools that push them and inspire them, and prepare them for good jobs of the future. We believe in an America where no one goes broke or loses a home because someone gets sick or lost their job. (Applause.)

We believe in an America where we all understand that none of us gets where we are on our own, and where we treat everyone with dignity and respect -- from the teachers who inspire us to the janitors who keep our schools clean. (Applause.) In this America that we are working to build, we believe that the truth matters. And you don't take shortcuts or game the system.

And finally, we believe in keeping our priorities straight. We all know good and well that cutting Sesame Street is no way to balance our budget. (Applause.) We know better than that. Instead, we need to cut wasteful spending, yes -- but we have to make smart investments in things like education and infrastructure for an economy built to last. And that is what my husband stands for. (Applause.) That's the country he's been working to build for four years. (Applause.)

See, and since the day he took office, on issue after issue, crisis after crisis, that is exactly what we have seen in our President.

So think back to when Barack first took office -- our economy was on the brink of collapse. You don't have to take my word for it. Newspapers were using words like "meltdown," "calamity;" declaring "Wall Street implodes," "Economy in Shock." Do you remember that? See, because the auto industry was in crisis. This economy was losing 800,000 jobs a month. And a lot of folks wondered whether we were headed for another Great Depression.

And this is what Barack faced on day one as President. See, but instead of pointing fingers and placing blame, your President got to work, because he was thinking about folks like my dad and like his grandmother. And that's why he cut taxes for small businesses and for working families -- because he understands that teachers and firefighters should not pay higher tax rates than millionaires and billionaires. (Applause.) Not in America. That's not right. We know that's not right.

And that's why, while some folks were willing to let the auto industry go under -- you remember that? You know who I'm talking about? With more than a million jobs -- you hear me -- a million jobs that would have been lost, Barack had the backs of the American workers. And that's why today, the auto industry in America is back on its feet again. (Applause.)

And while we still have a way to go to completely rebuild this economy, let me tell you, there are more and more signs every day that we're headed in the right direction. Exports have grown by 45 percent. Manufacturers have added 500,000 jobs. We have had 31 straight months -- the majority of this presidency -- of private sector job growth -- a total of 5.2 million new jobs that have been created right here in the United States of America under this President. (Applause.)

Now, when it comes to giving our young people the education they deserve, see, Barack knows that like me, and like so many of you, we never could have attended college without financial aid -- never. (Applause.) We would not be standing here if not for financial aid. So when it comes to student debt, trust me, Barack and I, we've been there. This is not a hypothetical for us.

And that's why Barack doubled funding for Pell grants, fought hard to keep interest rates down on student loans. (Applause.) Because you have a President that understands that every young person in this country deserves access to college in an affordable way. (Applause.)

And then finally, when it comes to understanding the lives of women -- (applause) -- my husband you know will always have our backs. Because Barack knows from personal experience what it means for a family when women aren't treated fairly in the workplace. And that's why the very first bill he signed into law as President was the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act, to help women get equal pay for equal work. (Applause.) And that is why he will always, always fight to ensure that we as women can make our own decisions about our bodies and our health care. (Applause.)

And as Wendy mentioned in her introduction, we cannot forget about the health reform that he passed. Because of that reform insurance companies can no longer charge women more than men for the same coverage. (Applause.) Also because of this reform, they won't be able to discriminate against you because you have a preexisting condition like diabetes or asthma. (Applause.)

Our seniors on Medicare are saving [paying] hundreds less for their prescription drugs. (Applause.) And as Wendy said, our young folks can stay on their parent's insurance until they're 26 years old. (Applause.)

And here's the other thing about Obamacare. If you get a life-threatening illness and you need real expensive care, insurance companies can no longer tell you, sorry, you've hit your lifetime limit and we're not paying a penny more. That is now illegal because of health reform. (Applause.)

So here we are, five days out. And when you're out there talking to folks -- and I know you're going to be out there, right?

AUDIENCE: Yes!

MRS. OBAMA: When you're out there talking to folks who are trying to decide who will keep America moving forward for four more years, I want you to tell them a few specific things about Barack Obama.

Tell them what he has done for our economy, our health care and our education. But also remind them that this was the President that ended the war in Iraq, took out Osama bin Laden. (Applause.) This was the President that is fighting every day so that veterans and military families to get the benefits that they have earned. (Applause.)

Remind them about all the young immigrants in this country who will no longer live in fear of being deported from the only country they've ever called home. (Applause.) Tell them about our brave servicemembers who will never again have to lie about who they are to serve the country they love. (Applause.)

If they need to know more, send them to BarackObama.com/plans -- our website. They can learn about all the concrete plans that Barack has for the next four years to create more jobs, to reduce our deficit, and so much more.

But here's what I really want you to tell them about this man. You tell them that Barack Obama knows the American Dream because he's lived it. (Applause.) And he has been fighting every day -- do you hear me, every day -- so that everyone of us in this country can have that same opportunity, no matter who we are, or where we're from, or what we look like, or who we love. (Applause.)

But let's be clear. While I'm so proud of all that we have achieved together, my husband is nowhere near satisfied. Of all the people on the planet, Barack knows all too well that too many folks are still hurting. And as President Clinton said, it is going to take a lot longer than four years to finish rebuilding an economy from the brink of collapse. (Applause.)

But here's what I know I have seen for the past four years. Know this: Together, slowly but surely, we have been pulling ourselves out of that hole we started in. We have been moving forward, and making real, meaningful change. (Applause.)

So over the next five days, we have got to ask ourselves a simple question. Are we going to turn around and go back to the same policies that got us into this hole in the first place? Are we just going to sit back and watch everything we worked for and fought for to just slip away?

AUDIENCE: No!

MRS. OBAMA: Or are we going to keep moving this country forward? What are we going to do? (Applause.) I want to go forward! What are we going to do?

AUDIENCE: Forward!

MRS. OBAMA: We've got to go forward. (Applause.)

But here's the thing. In the end, the answer to these questions is on us now. It's all on us. Because, believe me, all of our hard work, all of the progress we've made -- know this -- it is all on the line. It's no joke. It's all at stake this Tuesday.

And as my husband has said, the only thing guaranteed is that this election will be even closer than the last one. And it is all going to come down to what happens in just a few key battleground states like right here in Florida. (Applause.) And let me help put it in perspective. I do this everywhere I go. Let's take you back to 2008 to understand the power that you have.

Here in Florida, we won by about 236,000 votes. It might sound like a lot, but when you break that number down across precincts, that is just 36 votes per precinct. You hear me? Thirty six! Look around this room. Right, this room alone could make the difference. See, because that could mean just one vote in your neighborhood -- one! Just one more vote in your apartment building or on your college campus. Just one. (Applause.)

So if there is anyone out there -- if there is anyone you know out there who might be thinking that their vote doesn't matter, that their vote and involvement doesn't count, that in this complex political process that ordinary folks can't possibly make a difference, see, I want you to think about those 36 votes. See, because you know 36 people. Everybody knows 36 people. And you know 36 people who didn't vote in 2008. So I want you to think about how with just a few more hours knocking on some doors, or making some phone calls, with just a few more hours getting folks to the polls on Election Day, just a few of you here -- shoot, look at this room; this room here alone could swing an entire precinct for Barack Obama. (Applause.) And when we win enough precincts, we will win this state, and we'll be well on our way to putting Barack back in the White House for four more years. (Applause.)

So we've got a plan, and it involves you. You are at the core of this plan. Before you leave today, sign up to volunteer -- just a couple more days. Weekend -- just give your weekend, just hand it over. (Laughter.) But for the next five days, we need every single one of you to talk to everyone you know. Don't leave any stone unturned -- not a friend, not a neighbor, not a cousin. We don't care if you haven't spoken to him in a year, call him. (Laughter.) Get them out to vote.

And if you can, get them to vote early. I voted early. (Applause.) We've got a lot of early voters. See, because I want to spend Election Day getting other people out to the polls, motivating other people, reminding people. We're going to be on the phone, on the TV, on the radio just reminding people. And I hope you all do the same.

See, because the other thing about early voting is that life happens. Election Day is one day. And when you're talking about a difference of 36 votes, we can't afford anybody to wake up and their car is broken down, they don't feel well, the babysitter is late, the boss made you work overtime -- anything can happen. So vote early.

And here in Florida, you can vote early through Saturday at your county supervisor of elections' office and many of the libraries and the city hall. So, as Wendy said, you can leave here after we're done and go vote. (Applause.)

But whether you vote early or whether you vote on the 6th, you can also go to vote.barackobama.com to learn how and where to vote. You can go on that website and find out anything, anywhere in the country. So use that as a resource to make your voices heard.

Now, that's our plan. You do understand that you are critical to the plan, right? (Applause.) And with less than a week to go until Election Day, make no mistake about it: What we all do for these next five days will absolutely make the difference between us waking up on Election Day and asking ourselves, could I have done more, or feeling the promise of four more years. See, and I only want to feel that promise. I don't know about you.

So from now until November the 6th, we need you to keep working and struggling and pushing forward. See, because here's the thing. That is how change always happens in this country. And I'm really talking to our young people. (Applause.) Because we know from our history that change is hard, and it requires patience and tenacity -- shoot, life is hard. But if we keep showing up, if we keep fighting the good fight and doing what we know in our hearts is right, then eventually we get there. You have to know this. We always do.

That is why we have every reason to be optimistic about what lies ahead, because we know that here in America we always move forward. We never go back. We always make progress. (Applause.) And in the end, that's what this is about. That's what elections are always about. Don't let anybody fool you. Don't let anybody tell you differently. Elections are always about hope.

What kind of hope am I talking about? The hope that I saw on my father's face as I crossed the stage to get my college diploma -- the diploma he took out loans to help me get. (Applause.) The hope Barack's grandmother felt as she cast her ballot for the grandson she loved and raised. That kind of hope. The hope of all those men and women in our lives who worked that extra shift for us, who saved and sacrificed and prayed so that we could stand here. We are here because of them. That kind of hope. (Applause.) The hope that so many of us see when we look into the eyes of our kids and our grandkids.

That is why we are here today. See, because we want all our kids to have that solid foundation for their dreams. We're here for our kids. We want to give all of our children opportunities worthy of their promise, because we all know -- I don't care who you vote for, you all know in this country that all of our children are worthy. They're all worthy. We want to give them that sense of limitless possibility, that belief that here in America, the greatest country on the planet, there is always something better out there if you're willing to work for it. (Applause.)

So here's what I tell myself every day as First Lady: We cannot turn back now. We will not turn back now. (Applause.) We have come so far, but we have so much more work to do.

So here's my last question. Florida, are you in this? (Applause.) Are you fired up? (Applause.) Are you ready to go? (Applause.) You get out there and vote like you've never voter before. (Applause.) Work hard. Five days for four more years! That's what we need from you. Get it done. We're going to be working hard.

We love you, guys. God bless.

REMARKS BY PRESIDENT OBAMA
AND PRESIDENT CLINTON
AT A CAMPAIGN EVENT

New Amsterdam Theatre
New York, New York

9:54 P.M. EDT

PRESIDENT CLINTON: Thank you, ladies and gentlemen. Thank you for being here to ensure the reelection of President Obama and Vice President Biden. I thank you very much. (Applause.)

You know, I was worried about getting half a step slow doing this because my whole life is my foundation now. I'm a little rusty at politics. (Laughter.) But this is my -- wait, wait, wait. This is my third event tonight where I am the warm-up act for the President. (Applause.) So I am about to get my steps down and my rhythm going, you know?

Here's what I want to say. Your presence here tonight is important. Your support is important. And perhaps, most important of all, your willingness to leave here and talk to people about this election not just in New York but all across this country is profoundly important. (Applause.) Because I've found there's a lot of murkiness out there. So let me just be as simple as I can. I don't think it's important to reelect the President; I think it's essential to reelect the President -- if we want this country to go in the right direction. (Applause.) And I want to explain why.

I know things are not perfect now. I know they're a little slow now. But let me just remind you that when the President took office a little over three years ago, in the month he took the oath of office we lost 800,000 jobs. Starting on September the 15th, we entered the deepest crash since the Great Depression. If you look at history, those things take five or 10 years to get over, and if there's a housing collapse along with it, closer to 10 years. He's on schedule to beat that record.

And so we have to go out to people who are still hurting, who are still uncertain, and who hear the airways full of contradictory assertions, and basically give them the facts. And here they are: In the last 27 months, this economy has created 4.3 million private sector jobs. (Applause.) That is -- to give you some perspective on how many that is, that's 60 percent more private sector jobs that were created in the seven years and eight months of the previous administration before the financial meltdown -- (applause) -- and about the same number per month as were created during the time I had the honor of serving.

Now, second thing -- they tell you how terrible his health care bill is. It's hard for them since Governor Romney's finest act as governor was to sign a bill with the individual mandate in it, which he has now renounced. But let me tell you a couple things about it. Number one, for the first time in 50 years we have had two years in a row where health care costs have only gone up 4 percent -- first time in 50 years.

Number two, the American people this year got $1.3 billion in refunds on their health care premiums -- because you've got to spend 85 percent of that premium on health care today, not profits or promotion. (Applause.) Number three, there are 2.6 million young people, 26 and under, who are insured today for the first time because they're on their parent's policy. (Applause.)

So -- and look, this is a huge deal. I talk to people in this business all over America. They would be mortified if this bill were repealed because they say we're finally making progress. We're going to stop paying for procedures, start paying for performance. We're going to have plans that will bring our cost down in line with our competitor and improve the quality of care. People in health care -- the President and I just came from an event and there were two woman doctors who said, we are doctors for health care reform and we are here because we can see it working already, that it's coming. (Applause.)

Now, manufacturing is coming back for the first time since the 1990s. Green tech jobs, in spite of the attacks from Governor Romney and the Republicans, grew at twice the rate of other jobs after the economic downturn, and paid 35 percent more.

The automobile industry was headed for a calamity, and two of the great auto companies in America were saved by a financial agreement that had management, labor and government restructuring the company. There are 80,000 more people making cars today than there were when Barack Obama became President. (Applause.) And 1.5 million people had their jobs saved. (Applause.)

Car mileage standards are going to be doubled because of an agreement between management and labor, and the environmental groups and government. And as we double those car mileage standards, 150,000 high-paying jobs will be created, creating the new technologies to make it possible.

And I could give you 50 more things, but you get the idea. Why aren't things roaring along now? Because Europe is in trouble and because the Republican Congress has adopted the European economic policy. Who would have thought, after years and years, even decades, in which the Republican right attacked "old Europe," that they would embrace the economic policies of the eurozone -- austerity and unemployment now at all costs. (Laughter.) I mean after all, their unemployment rate is 11 percent, and ours is 8 -- we can get right up there if we just adopt their policies. (Laughter and applause.)

You're laughing, but you need to tell people this. That's what they're being asked to vote for. They're being asked to reject a President who has tried to give us a 21st century economic policy, and said, no, no, growth and jobs now -- broad-based growth, fair growth that includes all Americans. Then we'll put the hammer down on the spending to avoid the debt exploding at the time when economic growth occurs so that we won't have high interest rates and we won't kill off the recovery.

The Republican policy is the reverse. Governor Romney says, no, austerity and unemployment now, and then when we -- if we ever get out of this thing, then we're going to cut taxes so much, we'll explode the debt then and see just how high we can drive interest rates, and how we can make the economy -- that is their economic policy. It was their economic policy, and it is. And it doesn't work.

So we're laughing, we're having a good time tonight. The night belongs to the President and to you. But I'm telling you, I spent a lifetime in public service and now with my foundation, desperately trying to figure out how to give people a better chance -- desperately trying to figure out how to create jobs. (Applause.) And he analyzed this situation properly. He did the best he could with a lousy hand. And he will do better if the American people said, no, we don't want to go back to what got us in trouble in the first place. Give us a 21st century economy we can all be a part of. (Applause.)

That's what President Obama will do. Let's bring him on with a big hand! Stand up for the President! (Applause.)

PRESIDENT OBAMA: Thank you. (Applause.) Thank you. Thank you. Thank you. (Applause.) It is good to be back on Broadway! (Applause.) But before I get to this unbelievable opening act -- (laughter) -- let me thank my producer. That's usually what you do when you're on Broadway. (Laughter.) Margo Lion has been such a great friend of mine for so long. (Applause.) Bill, during the campaign, Margo set up I think a couple of these.

And for all those who performed tonight, I could not be more grateful and more appreciative. Many of you have put in a lot of time and effort, not just this time out but last time out. And it is just a great joy to be with all of you. But Margo especially -- I just want to give her a public acknowledgment because she has been a great friend. (Applause.)

Before we get to the some of the more serious items, I do want to just share a quick story about Margo. Shortly after I had been elected -- Bill can relate to this -- the Secret Service bubble shrinks and it starts really clamping down. (Laughter.) And the thing that you miss most when you're President -- extraordinary privilege, and really nice plane and all kinds of stuff -- (laughter) -- but suddenly, not only have you lost your anonymity, but your capacity to just wander around and go into a bookstore, or go to a coffee shop, or walk through Central Park.

So I was saying -- it was a beautiful day and I had just been driving through Manhattan, and I saw Margo. And I said, you know, I just desperately want to take a walk through Central Park again, and just remember what that feels like. But the problem is, obviously, it's hard to do now. And so my idea has been to see if I was -- if I got a disguise -- (laughter) -- could I pull this off. (Laughter.)

And so Margo thought about it, and about a week later I got this fake moustache -- (laughter) -- that I guess she got from one of the makeup artists on Broadway. And I tried it on and I thought it looked pretty good. (Laughter.) But when I tested this scheme with the Secret Service, they said it didn't look good enough. (Laughter.)

But I kept it. I have kept this moustache just in case in the second term I -- (laughter and applause.) So if you -- so if a couple years from now you see a guy with big ears and a moustache -- (laughter) -- just pretend you don't know who it is. Just look away. (Laughter.) Eating a hotdog, you know. (Laughter.) Going through the -- you know.

I want to thank Bill Clinton - (applause) -- not only for the extraordinary support that he's shown tonight and the support he's showing throughout this campaign, not only for the fact that he is as good at breaking down what's at stake at any given moment in our history, his inexhaustible energy and knowledge, the work that he's doing around the world on behalf of folks in need -- but I also want to thank him for his legacy. (Applause.) Because in many ways Bill Clinton helped to guide the Democratic Party out of the wilderness -- (applause) -- and to lay the groundwork for a sensible, thoughtful, common-sense, progressive agenda that is important to remember at this moment.

When many of us came together in 2008, we came together not just because of me. In fact, folks weren't sure whether I was going to win. When you support a guy named Barack Hussein Obama, the odds are always -- (laughter) -- a little long. But we came together because of a shared commitment we made to each other as American citizens, a basic compact that defines this country -- that says if you're willing to work hard, if you're willing to take responsibility, then there's nothing you can't accomplish. It doesn't matter where you come from, what you look like, whether you're black, white, Hispanic, Asian, Native American, gay, straight, able, disabled -- it doesn't matter -- that you've got a stake in this country. You've got a claim on this country. (Applause.) And if you're willing to work hard, you can make it if you try in the United States of America. (Applause.)

And in 2008, we understood that that compact seemed like it was eroded. A few people were doing very well, but more and more people seemed to be struggling to get by. We had squandered a surplus on tax cuts for folks who didn't need them and weren't even asking for them. (Applause.) We had paid for two wars on a credit card. Because we hadn't enforced basic rules of the marketplace, we saw more and more of our economy built on speculation and financial schemes that were inherently unstable. And it all came crashing down in the worst crisis that we've seen in our lifetimes.

But part of the reason why we understood both what was possible and what had been lost was because of our memories of Bill Clinton's tenure as President -- (applause) -- and our recognition that there's no contradiction between growing an economy and making sure that everybody is taking part -- in fact, that's how you grow an economy, is because you're giving everybody a shot and everybody is doing their fair share, and everybody is playing by the same set of rules.

We understood there's no contradiction between economic growth and caring for our environment; that, in fact, if we make smart investments in clean energy, that's an entire industry of the future that can put people back to work.

We understood that there wasn't a contradiction between being fiscally responsible, but also making sure that kids got Head Start, kids could go to college, and we were investing in basic science and basic research. This wasn't some fantasy of ours. This wasn't some pie in the sky, wild imaginings. We'd seen it. We knew it was possible. And that's what we fought for.

Of course, we didn't know at the time that we were going to see this incredible crisis -- 3 million jobs lost in the six months before the election, and 800,000 lost the month I was sworn into office.

But here's one thing we understood. The campaign taught us this -- the incredible resilience and the incredible strength of the American people. (Applause.) And so part of what allowed us to fight our way out of this hole was some tough decisions that we made -- to save the auto industry even when some people said, let's let Detroit go bankrupt -- (applause) -- and getting management and workers together to save over a million jobs. And now GM is back on top. The American auto industry is making better cars than ever. (Applause.)

We made tough decisions to make sure that credit was flowing again to businesses large and small, and they could keep their doors open and start hiring again and make investments again in the future. And we've seen over 4 million jobs created. We've seen more manufacturing jobs created at any time since the 1990s.

And so, in part, the reason that we have been weathering this storm was because of some tough policies, but the right policies. But a lot of it just had to do with the resilience of the American people. They don't give up. They don't quit. So some 55-year-old gets laid off and they decide, you know what, I'm going to back to school. I'm going to get myself retrained to find the job of the future. I'm not giving up. A small business owner, they patch together whatever money they can to keep their doors open and to make sure that they can keep their employees on, even if it means maybe they don't get paid for a while, even if it means that the owner of that business is having to scrimp. That's how much they care about their employees.

Folks decided, you know what, we were going to retire at 65, but maybe we're going to have to work an extra five years because I'm going to make sure my child or my grandchild gets to go to college. All kinds of decisions like that made all across America.

And so after this incredible crisis, America is moving in the right direction. We're not there yet; we're not where we need to be. There are still too many people out there who are looking for work, too many homes that are still underwater, too many kids in poverty who still don't see prospects for the future. But we started to right the ship and we've moving in the direction that we imagined in 2008.

And that is why this election in a lot of ways is even more important than the last one, because as hard as we've worked over the last four years, as much as we've done to start rebuilding a country that's not built on how much we consume or some sort of Ponzi schemes, but built on what we're producing and what we're making, and the skills of our people, and the ingenuity of our scientists, and the risk-taking of our entrepreneurs -- after all that work that we've done, the last thing we're going to do is to go back to the very same policies that got us into this mess in the first place. We're not going backwards. (Applause.) We're not going backwards, New York! We intend to go forwards! And that's why I'm running for a second term as President of the United States of America. (Applause.) We're not going back.

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years! Four more years!

THE PRESIDENT: Not going back to a set of policies that say you're on your own. And that's essentially the theory of the other side. George Romney -- wrong guy. (Laughter.) Governor Romney -- he was a good governor. (Laughter.) Governor Romney is a -- he's a patriotic American. He's had great success in his life, and he's raised a beautiful family. But he has a theory of the economy that basically says, if I'm maximizing returns for my investors, for wealthy individuals like myself, then everybody is going to be better off.

He was in Iowa talking to a woman, and she was describing her financial struggles, and his response was out of an economic textbook. He said, "Productivity equals income." (Laughter.) Now, I guess in the aggregate, technically -- right -- this is a coherent argument. (Laughter.) But the implication was somehow that this woman, or others who are struggling out there, they're not productive enough.

Well, let me tell you, actually, America has become incredibly productive. People are working harder than ever. We've got some of the most productive workers in the world. The problem is not that we aren't productive enough; the problem is that productivity has not translated for far too many people into higher incomes. (Applause.) The problem is that profits haven't translated into jobs and investment in this country.

We believe in the marketplace. We believe in entrepreneurship and rewarding risk-taking. But what we also understand is that our economy works best, America became an economic superpower, because we created a platform where everybody could succeed. And we set up rules of the road that made the market work for everybody, and gave consumers confidence that they weren't going to be bilked, and gave investors confidence that if you're a small investor, you're not some insider, you still have a chance buying a stock.

And we understood that if we're investing in things like a Hoover Dam or DARPA -- the research and development arm of our military that ended up producing things like the Internet or GPS -- that that, in fact, would be good for everybody.

We understand that when my grandfather's generation came back from fighting in World War II and they had a chance to go to college on the GI Bill, that wasn't just good for one individual, it wasn't just good for one group. That was good for everybody. We all became richer together.

And that's the lesson that Mr. Romney and the Republicans in Congress don't seem to understand, they don't seem to get. But look at our history. Ironically, the first Republican President understood it. Abraham Lincoln understood it. That's why in the middle of a Civil War he was still building a Transcontinental Railroad and starting land grant colleges, and starting the National Academy of Sciences -- because he understood that ultimately there are some things we do better on our own -- not every government program works, not everybody can [be] helped who doesn't want to be helping themselves. All of us have responsibilities.

And I learned early on that no matter how much money you pour into the schools, nothing replaces the love and attention and occasional scoldings from a parent. (Applause.) I learned as a community organizer that no government program can substitute for the caring and passion of neighbors and communities. But I also understood, and you understand and Americans understand, that when we've done great things in this country we've done them together. We've done them together. And that's what's at stake in this election.

And we're not going back to this other theory. I'm not going to go back to a time when if you got sick, you had no recourse and you potentially could go bankrupt. I'm not going to go back to a time when 2.5 million young people can't get health insurance or can't stay on their parent's plan -- (applause) -- or 30 million people who are working maybe two jobs can't afford to buy health insurance and end up in an emergency room just because they can't get sick and aren't getting preventive care. We're not going to go back to that.

We're not going to go back to a time when -- we're not going to refight the battles about whether or not we need to make some basic reforms on Wall Street so that taxpayers don't have to bail out folks after they've made irresponsible or reckless bets. (Applause.) That's not good for our financial markets. We're not going to refight that battle.

We're not going to go back to a time when manufacturing is all moving offshore. We want to bring companies onshore. I want to give tax breaks to companies that are investing in jobs investment here in the United States -- (applause) -- not shipping jobs overseas. We don't need to go back to policies like that.

We're not going to go back to a time when our military could expel somebody because of who they loved. We believe in everybody being treated fairly and equally, and respecting everybody's rights. We're not going to go backwards. We're going forwards. (Applause.)

We don't need to go back to a foreign policy that thinks the measure of our security is everything we do we do on our own. We've been able to restore respect and collaboration, and our alliances have never been stronger -- partly because I've got a pretty good Secretary of State. (Applause.)

And that's how we ended the war in Iraq. And that's how we're starting to transition out of Afghanistan. And that's how we brought Osama bin Laden to justice. (Applause.) And we're not going to go backwards on policies that make America stronger.

We're not going to go back to the days when somehow women couldn't get the preventive care that they need. (Applause.) We don't need a situation where women aren't controlling their own health care choices. We don't need to eliminate Planned Parenthood. I want my daughters to have the same opportunities as my sons. That's part of what America is about. We're not turning back the clock. We're not going backwards. (Applause.)

AUDIENCE: Four more years! Four more years!

PRESIDENT OBAMA: And we can afford the investments we need to grow. We can afford to make sure that every kid has a chance to go to college, and they're going to a decent school, and they're graduating. (Applause.)

We can afford to rebuild our roads and our bridges and our airports and our broadband lines and high-speed rail, and putting people back to work. We can afford -- in fact, we can't afford not to invest in the science and research that's going to keep us at the cutting-edge. (Applause.)

We're not going to throw millions of people off the Medicaid rolls, folks who are disabled or poor, seniors who are relying on it. We're not going to voucherize Medicare. We're going to responsibly reduce this deficit. You know -- two Presidents over the last 30 years that have actually reduced the pace of the growth in government spending happen to be on this stage right here. They happen to be the two Democrats. (Applause.)

So we have to get our deficit and debt under control. We've got to do it in a responsible way, cut out programs we don't need. I've already signed a trillion dollars in cuts that have already been made, another trillion that are slated to be made. But we're also going to ask folks who can afford it like the two of us to pay a little bit more -- and some of you, too, so don't chuckle -- (laughter and applause) -- to pay a little bit more so that we can afford the things that will help us grow. That's the right recipe. That's what made us an economic superpower. And that's the policy that we're going to pursue.

Now, here's the good news. The American people, on the issues, when presented with the facts, they actually agree with us. Now, it's hard sometimes getting the facts out. There's a lot of bugs on the windshield. (Laughter.) Sometimes you've got to -- (laughter) -- so you got to get those wipers going pretty hard sometimes. It's not always clear. (Laughter.)

But when folks know the facts, when they're given a choice -- and that's what this election is about, every election is about a choice -- when given a choice between a vision that says we're going to have a balanced approach to deficit reduction, and we're going to continue to make investments in things like clean energy and fuel efficiency and science and innovation and education and rebuilding our infrastructure, versus another $5 trillion worth of tax cuts that would give the average millionaire and billionaire an additional $250,000 a year in tax breaks -- people agree with us.

On issue after issue, if you give them a fair presentation, no spin on the ball, the majority of the country -- not just Manhattan -- (laughter) -- the majority of the country agrees with us. Which is why the other side isn't -- they're not presenting anything new. As Bill said the other day, this is the same old stuff, just on steroids. (Laughter.) Just more of. More tax cuts for the wealthy. We're not just going to reduce regulation, we're going to cripple EPA. And people aren't buying that. They don't really think that that's going to work.

The only reason that this is going to be a close election is because people are still hurting. The situation in Europe is slowing things down. We've been prevented from, for example, the plans that I've put forward repeatedly to Congress to say, let's give states more help so they don't have to lay off more teachers. Now interest rates have never been lower. Literally, the government can -- basically people will pay us to lend us money -- (laughter) -- and there would never be a better time for us to start making investments that could put construction workers back to work all across the country. (Applause.)

But that's not something Congress, so far, has been willing to do. Though we're going to keep on putting pressure on them over these next few months because we don't have time just to wait for an election to do something. (Applause.)

But folks are still hurting. And this has been a long slog for people. And sometimes when things are tough you just say, well, you know what, I'll just keep on trying something until something works. And that's compounded by $500 million in super PAC negative ads that are going to be run over the course of the next five months that will try to feed on those fears and those anxieties and that frustration.

That's basically the argument the other side is making. They're not offering anything new, they're just saying, things are tough right now and it's Obama's fault. You can pretty much sum up their argument. (Laughter.) There's no vision for the future there. There's no imagination. I mean, somebody is going to have to explain to me how repealing Obamacare and throwing 30 million people back to a situation where they don't have health care, somehow that's an economic development agenda. (Laughter.) Nobody has really explained that to me.

So it's going to be -- it's going to be a tough election. But 2008 was tough, too. And what you all taught me was that when Americans are willing to come together and make a commitment to each other, when they have a vision about what's possible and they commit to it, and they join together and they work for it, when they decide -- when you decide -- that change is going to happen, guess what. Change happens. (Applause.) Change happens.

And so I may be a little grayer than I was the last time I was on Broadway. (Laughter.) Going to need to get Margo to send me something to do something -- do something about that. As President Clinton will tell you, you go through some dings and dents in this job. But I tell you what. I'm more determined than I've ever been. (Applause.) I'm more determined than I've ever been to finish what we started.

I used to say back in 2008, I'm not a perfect man, and haven't been and won't be a perfect President. Nobody is. But what I told you was I'd always tell you what I thought, I'd always tell you where I stood, and I'd wake up every single morning fighting as hard as I knew how to make life better for the American people. And I have kept that promise. I have kept that promise, Broadway. (Applause.) I have kept that promise.

I still believe in you. I hope you still believe in me. I hope you still believe! If people ask you what this campaign is about, you tell them it's still about hope and it's still about change. And if you're willing to knock on some doors and make some phone calls, and talk to your friends and neighbors, and work just as hard as you did in 2008, we will finish what we started and remind the world why it is America is the greatest nation on Earth.

Thank you. God bless you. God bless America.

Dear Governor Fallin,

Please join the other Republican governors in renouncing Health Exchanges and Obamacare.

I am an American citizen that has never had health insurance because I only work part-time and have been trying to get my own business up off the ground for some time. I won't pretend to understand how it all works and goes, and I don't know if it's true, but I have heard that it will fine those of us without insurance annually. If I can't afford insurance out of my own pocket, what do they think a fine will do? That can only make it harder on the less fortunate, and if that is your goal, then by all means....

Thank you kindly,

Hi Daryl,

As a board member and a long-time, trusted friend and supporter of mine, I wanted you to be aware of OCPA's latest hit piece (attached) on the National Governors Association (NGA) and other state membership organizations. As you may know, I serve as the current vice-chair and chair-elect of the NGA. Unfortunately, OCPA staff seems intent on continuing to demagogue the NGA and my leadership within the organization as a "big-government lobbying organization" without presenting the real facts that it serves as an effective advocacy group on behalf of our nation's governors and state primacy. This is the first time in history a governor from Oklahoma has been elected to lead this organization and I am proud to join such an impressive list of leaders such as Mike Huckabee, Tim Pawlenty and John Ashcroft. This is an opportunity to bring national exposure to the best practices Oklahoma has to provide and it is embarrassing when an organization like OCPA continues to denigrate such an opportunity for the state.

While I fully support OCPA's notion that jealously safeguarding taxpayer dollars and ensuring that government spending is done effectively and wisely should be one of our number one priorities, I also recognize that organizations such as the NGA provide essential resources and services to states and their top leaders that would not otherwise be available to them. In Oklahoma alone, the NGA has provided significant staff and research support and expertise on a number of initiatives important to the state of Oklahoma and my Administration.

For example and most recently, the NGA provided my office, and the offices of other governors, essential support on my 22 multi-state natural gas vehicle development and procurement initiative by facilitating seminars, multi-state coordination, and staff research that was essential in making this unprecedented initiative the success it has been. I am confident when I say that their support was a key element of our success and that this initiative alone will save the state of Oklahoma hundreds of thousands of taxpayer dollars that far exceed Oklahoma's membership dues to the NGA.

In addition, the NGA has been instrumental in Oklahoma's fight against the Affordable Care Act by providing me with comprehensive and detailed research as it pertains to the impacts of the legislation. This is particularly important given the fact that the state agencies with jurisdiction over PPACA related issues operate independently from the governor's office.

NGA has proven to be an extremely valuable resource with regard to education reform policy as well. Just last month a representative from the NGA came to speak to the annual conference of the Oklahoma State School Board Association, her comments focused on encouraging schools to be more efficient with the tax dollars they receive, the importance of choice and she even addressed the positive effects of consolidation. Furthermore, the NGA has also made government modernization and redesign a top priority of their education and advocacy agenda and will be hosting a national summit in December which will allow state teams to learn about best practices and share their efforts to reform and streamline state government – an effort my office fully supports and will be taking advantage of.

The NGA has also provided my staff with extensive training sessions, from policy seminars to appointment and constituent services workshops and networking opportunities that have allowed my staff to my staff to learn from our nation's leading experts, which has in turn helped me make well and fully informed decisions as they relate to Oklahoma's wellbeing. The NGA employs actual experts in the policy areas they cover and more organizations would benefit from further interaction with them.

Finally, the NGA has and continues to provide an effective voice for Oklahoma at the federal level, and has consistently advocated on our behalf on a wide variety of issues such as preserving my authority and responsibilities as the Commander-in-Chief of Oklahoma's National Guard, the devastating impact of sequestration, improving quality of education and providing states with the essential flexibility it needs to meet its people's needs and goals.

This is just a brief note on some of the many services the NGA provides to Oklahoma and its 40 plus member states. I would think that OCPA would be proud of and promote Oklahoma's leadership in such an important and influential organization and would expect the OCPA to provide your readers with a more honest and robust perspective and dialog surrounding the NGAs true value.

Sincerely,

Mary

For example and most recently, the NGA provided my office, and the offices of other governors, essential support on my 22 multi-state natural gas vehicle development and procurement initiative by facilitating seminars, multi-state coordination, and staff research that was essential in making this unprecedented initiative the success it has been. I am confident when I say that their support was a key element of our success and that this initiative alone will save the state of Oklahoma hundreds of thousands of taxpayer dollars that far exceed Oklahoma's membership dues to the NGA.

In addition, the NGA has been instrumental in Oklahoma's fight against the Affordable Care Act by providing me with comprehensive and detailed research as it pertains to the impacts of the legislation. This is particularly important given the fact that the state agencies with jurisdiction over PPACA related issues operate independently from the governor's office.

NGA has proven to be an extremely valuable resource with regard to education reform policy as well. Just last month a representative from the NGA came to speak to the annual conference of the Oklahoma State School Board Association, her comments focused on encouraging schools to be more efficient with the tax dollars they receive, the importance of choice and she even addressed the positive effects of consolidation. Furthermore, the NGA has also made government modernization and redesign a top priority of their education and advocacy agenda and will be hosting a national summit in December which will allow state teams to learn about best practices and share their efforts to reform and streamline state government – an effort my office fully supports and will be taking advantage of.

The NGA has also provided my staff with extensive training sessions, from policy seminars to appointment and constituent services workshops and networking opportunities that have allowed my staff to my staff to learn from our nation's leading experts, which has in turn helped me make well and fully informed decisions as they relate to Oklahoma's wellbeing. The NGA employs actual experts in the policy areas they cover and more organizations would benefit from further interaction with them.

Finally, the NGA has and continues to provide an effective voice for Oklahoma at the federal level, and has consistently advocated on our behalf on a wide variety of issues such as preserving my authority and responsibilities as the Commander-in-Chief of Oklahoma's National Guard, the devastating impact of sequestration, improving quality of education and providing states with the essential flexibility it needs to meet its people's needs and goals.

This is just a brief note on some of the many services the NGA provides to Oklahoma and its 40 plus member states. I would think that OCPA would be proud of and promote Oklahoma's leadership in such an important and influential organization and would expect the OCPA to provide your readers with a more honest and robust perspective and dialog surrounding the NGAs true value.

Sincerely,

Mary

Hi John,

As a board member and a long-time, trusted friend and supporter of mine, I wanted you to be aware of OCPA's latest hit piece (attached) on the National Governors Association (NGA) and other state membership organizations. As you may know, I serve as the current vice-chair and chair-elect of the NGA. Unfortunately, OCPA staff seems intent on continuing to demagogue the NGA and my leadership within the organization as a "big-government lobbying organization" without presenting the real facts that it serves as an effective advocacy group on behalf of our nation's governors and state primacy. This is the first time in history a governor from Oklahoma has been elected to lead this organization and I am proud to join such an impressive list of leaders such as Mike Huckabee, Tim Pawlenty and John Ashcroft. This is an opportunity to bring national exposure to the best practices Oklahoma has to provide and it is embarrassing when an organization like OCPA continues to denigrate such an opportunity for the state.

While I fully support OCPA's notion that jealously safeguarding taxpayer dollars and ensuring that government spending is done effectively and wisely should be one of our number one priorities, I also recognize that organizations such as the NGA provide essential resources and services to states and their top leaders that would not otherwise be available to them. In Oklahoma alone, the NGA has provided significant staff and research support and expertise on a number of initiatives important to the state of Oklahoma and my Administration.

For example and most recently, the NGA provided my office, and the offices of other governors, essential support on my 22 multi-state natural gas vehicle development and procurement initiative by facilitating seminars, multi-state coordination, and staff research that was essential in making this unprecedented initiative the success it has been. This is the first time in history a governor from Oklahoma has been elected to lead this organization and I am proud to join such an impressive list of leaders such as Mike Huckabee, Tim Pawlenty and John Ashcroft. This is an opportunity to bring national exposure to the best practices Oklahoma has to provide and it is embarrassing when an organization like OCPA continues to denigrate such an opportunity for the state.

While I fully support OCPA's notion that jealously safeguarding taxpayer dollars and ensuring that government spending is done effectively and wisely should be one of our number one priorities, I also recognize that organizations such as the NGA provide essential resources and services to states and their top leaders that would not otherwise be available to them. In Oklahoma alone, the NGA has provided significant staff and research support and expertise on a number of initiatives important to the state of Oklahoma and my Administration.

For example and most recently, the NGA provided my office, and the offices of other governors, essential support on my 22 multi-state natural gas vehicle development and procurement initiative by facilitating seminars, multi-state coordination, and staff research that was essential in making this unprecedented initiative the success it has been. I am confident when I say that their support was a key element of our success and that this initiative alone will save the state of Oklahoma hundreds of thousands of taxpayer dollars that far exceed Oklahoma's membership dues to the NGA.

In addition, the NGA has been instrumental in Oklahoma's fight against the Affordable Care Act by providing me with comprehensive and detailed research as it pertains to the impacts of the legislation. This is particularly important given the fact that the state agencies with jurisdiction over PPACA related issues operate independently from the governor's office.

NGA has proven to be an extremely valuable resource with regard to education reform policy as well. Just last month a representative from the NGA came to speak to the annual conference of the Oklahoma State School Board Association, her comments focused on encouraging schools to be more efficient with the tax dollars they receive, the importance of choice and she even addressed the positive effects of consolidation. Furthermore, the NGA has also made government modernization and redesign a top priority of their education and advocacy agenda and will be hosting a national summit in December which will allow state teams to learn about best practices and share their efforts to reform and streamline state government – an effort my office fully supports and will be taking advantage of.

The NGA has also provided my staff with extensive training sessions, from policy seminars to appointment and constituent services workshops and networking opportunities that have allowed my staff to my staff to learn from our nation's leading experts, which has in turn helped me make well and fully informed decisions as they relate to Oklahoma's wellbeing. The NGA employs actual experts in the policy areas they cover and more organizations would benefit from further interaction with them.

Finally, the NGA has and continues to provide an effective voice for Oklahoma at the federal level, and has consistently advocated on our behalf on a wide variety of issues such as preserving my authority and responsibilities as the Commander-in-Chief of Oklahoma's National Guard, the devastating impact of sequestration, improving quality of education and providing states with the essential flexibility it needs to meet its people's needs and goals.

This is just a brief note on some of the many services the NGA provides to Oklahoma and its 40 plus member states. I would think that OCPA would be proud of and promote Oklahoma's leadership in such an important and influential organization and would expect the OCPA to provide your readers with a more honest and robust perspective and dialog surrounding the NGAs true value.

Sincerely,

Mary

Hi Pat,

As a board member and a long-time, trusted friend and supporter of mine, I wanted you to be aware of OCPA's latest hit piece (attached) on the National Governors Association (NGA) and other state membership organizations. As you may know, I serve as the current vice-chair and chair-elect of the NGA. Unfortunately, OCPA staff seems intent on continuing to demagogue the NGA and my leadership within the organization as a "big-government lobbying organization" without presenting the real facts that it serves as an effective advocacy group on behalf of our nation's governors and state primacy. This is the first time in history a governor from Oklahoma has been elected to lead this organization and I am proud to join such an impressive list of leaders such as Mike Huckabee, Tim Pawlenty and John Ashcroft. Governor;

OK, you decided not to provide health care for the poor in our state. Oh, that is Mitt said the 47% I don't care about, so I now know that is your stand as well. I wonder how many of the people that are against the PPACA have actually read all 2219 pages? I have, and I it needs minor upgrades and any law with this many pages. Now Mitt got this in while he was Gov. of Mass, and President Obama copied that plan for American and all of a sudden the right is all against it.

Now had Mitt had been the GOP nominee in 2008 and requested a plan exactly like the current PPACA, the right would be in love with it, however; President Obama won and everything that he tries to get done to help the nation, the tea party followers are blocking it. I wish that ALL elected officials were be Oklahomans and Americans first and politicians last, however; they all have it reversed.

Finally after serious consideration the difference between you and Sarah, you have had more divorces and affairs.

Educated Voter;

Mike

Exchange Week: A look at the grant requests (Subscriber only – see below)

By Jason Millman, 7/9/12 5:32 AM EDT

Now that the ACA has survived the Supreme Court, expect to see some big money rolling into the states when the next round of establishment grants are awarded next month. Details of which states applied for the most recent establishment grant cycle, which closed at the end of June, are starting to emerge.

Exchange Week has a look at some of the requests:

NEW YORK — The state, which already has received around $90 million in exchange grants, has asked for an additional $95 million for a one-year Level One grant. The funding request outlines a need to hire exchange executive leadership and staff, develop back-end customer support functions, fulfill a current IT contract, conduct consumer outreach and more. The state is projecting that it will have its own exchange ready in time to start enrollment in October 2013.

VERMONT — The state health department issued a $104.4 million Level Two request for a multiyear award. Vermont has already received about $19 million in exchange grants and is part of the New England consortium of Early Innovator states.

MARYLAND — The state requested about $160 million for a Level Two award, according to state health secretary Joshua Sharfstein. Maryland has already received about $28 million in exchange grants, as well as a $6.2 million Early Innovator grant.

NEVADA — The Silver State Health Insurance Exchange submitted a multiyear Level Two funding request worth about $50 million. According to the project narrative, the funding would be used to streamline eligibility rules and IT capabilities for the exchange and all public health coverage programs. Nevada has already received almost $24 million in exchange establishment grants across three funding rounds.

KENTUCKY — Stakeholders in the state are still on alert for an executive order from Democratic Gov. Steve Beshear, who has promised to issue one “soon” to start up Kentucky’s exchange. His office has been meeting with stakeholders over the past two months to plan out the state’s exchange.

ARKANSAS — Insurance Commissioner Jay Bradford issued a proposed rule last week that enables his office to choose the state’s benchmark essential health benefit plan by the end of September. The department is planning a public hearing later this month to get feedback on the benchmark selection process.

HAWAII — A permanent exchange board was seated last week, taking over for a temporary board that had been overseeing implementation since Hawaii authorized exchange about a year ago. The 15-member board includes representation from the governor’s office and cabinet, insurers, providers, businesses and consumers.
